International Keyboard Layouts for Windows

Arabic

The keyboard has an Arabic AZERTY layout.

Bulgarian

This keyboard follows the standard 105-key "AZERTY" layout used in France.

French
German

This keyboard follows the standard 105-key "QWERTZ" layout used in Germany.

Greek

The usual Greek layout follows the U.S. layout for letters related to Latin letters (ABDEHIKLMNORSTXYZ), substitutes phonetically similar letters (Φ at F; Γ at G) and uses the remaining slots for the remaining Greek letters: Ξ at J; Ψ at C; Ω at V; Θ at U).
Italian

This keyboard follows the standard 105-key layout used in Italy.

Note: braces (right above square brackets and shown in purple) are given with both AltGr and Shift pressed.

Russian

This keyboard uses a standard Russian arrangement. English symbols are marked by gray lettering on the left side of keys, Russian symbols are marked by gray lettering in an outline font on the right side of keys.

United States - International

The United States - International keyboard layout uses the same layout as the USA keyboard. Accented characters can be typed by pressing the appropriate accent key, then the letter on the keyboard in its unaccented form. Accent keys share the same key as ', `, " and ~.

An accent key is activated by pressing it (without holding it), and next pressing the letter that requires an accent. After the two strokes, the single accented character would appear on the screen.

A complete list of accented letters and other characters for the U.S. International keyboard can be downloaded here.
