PE-455-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Bringing Dressage Theory to Life
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will explore a series of principles and movements in classical dressage with extensive use of video and text and then work to apply this knowledge in mounted sessions. For advanced dressage riders. Class will meet one time per week mounted and one time per week unmounted.
Unmounted session meeting time TBD by instructor and class at first class meeting. One section offered.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings, 60 minutes. Riding Fee $450
Instructors: P. Pierce
Expected enrollment: 5

(Fall) Jumping for Boarders and Ship Ins
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
For experienced jumping riders with their own mounts to learn and practice over fences weekly. Hunter, jumper, equitation, and event riders welcome. Each week gymnastics and/or full courses will be used to best train the horse and rider to negotiate jumping obstacles in a smooth and harmonious manner with emphasis on track, pace, balance, rhythm, and timing. In the event a personal horse becomes unusable, a pro-rated fee will be incurred.
Prerequisites: By permission.
Notes: 1 meeting, 60 minutes Fee $350

Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit)

PHYED-261-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2013-2014
(Spring) Women in Sport - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 216)
This course is designed to introduce students to the history of women in sport, the status of women in sport since the passage of Title IX in 1972, and current issues impacting women in sport such as race, gender, and sexual orientation. Students will explore the influence of sport on the lives of women and how selected women sport leaders have influenced the growth and development of sport.
Notes: No P.E. credit. Academic credit only.
Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

PHYED-275-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to Sport Pedagogy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
This course is designed to introduce students to the many facets of sport pedagogy and coaching. Our focus is the strategies and styles of coaching youth sports. Topics include coaching philosophy, motor learning, anatomy and physiology, biomechanics, sport psychology and risk management/liability. Other topics include the benefits of playing sports, developing age-appropriate instruction and training, goal setting, effective feedback, special issues in coaching children, and coaches as role models for children. In a local school system, we will apply the concepts and theories learned, by developing and implementing lesson plans to introduce various athletic skills and sports.
Notes: No PE units awarded.
Instructors: D. Allen

Physics

PHYS-100-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.

(Spring) Renewable Energy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Environmental Studies 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.
Instructors: A. Arango
Expected enrollment: 50

PHYS-105-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Force, Motion, and Energy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar
Popular coverage of science ranges in depth and accuracy, and many scientists do not see the importance of communicating their work, or their excitement, to the general public. Scientific breakthroughs contribute to everyone's quality of life, but the process is poorly understood by many, leading to misunderstandings and misgivings that can affect public policy. This course will look at newsworthy results from current scientific research, exploring topics to better understand the science, ideas such as scientific consensus and repeatability, and examining the tension that may exist between the scientists and the public. Topics will be pulled largely from the physical sciences.

(Fall) Force, Motion, and Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Studies the mechanics of material objects. Topics include Newton's laws, projectile motion, circular motion, momentum, kinetic and potential energy, angular momentum, gravitation, and oscillations. This course is appropriate for students intending to major in a physical science.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101
Instructors: S. Smith

PHYS-150-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Phenomena of Physics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course studies a variety of topics in physics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, including thermodynamics, acoustics, wave optics, electricity, magnetism, and nuclear phenomena. As in Physics 103/100, the applicable mathematics is geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis.

Prerequisites: Physics 103/100 or 115/110

Instructors: M. Peterson

Section Instructors: 01 LAB T Herd | 02 LAB T Herd |

Expected enrollment: 32

PHYS-201-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Electromagnetism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Topics include: electromagnetism, emphasizing fields and energy; electrostatics; electric circuits; magnetism; induction; and electromagnetic radiation. Additional topics chosen according to the interests of the class and instructor.

Prerequisites: Physics 115/110; Mathematics 202

Instructors: K. Aidala

PHYS-205-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series. The course includes a brief introduction to Mathematica and Matlab, in addition to a traditional emphasis on analytic solutions.

Prerequisites: Physics 216/190/201 or concurrent enrollment

Instructors: S. Smith

Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department |

Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-210-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Waves and Optics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, and special relativity.

Prerequisites: Electromagnetism (Physics 216/190/201) and Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205) or concurrent enrollment in 205

Instructors: J. Burciaga

Expected enrollment: 30

PHYS-211-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
*(Spring) Gender in Science - Not offered this year/term
This course examines explanations for the underrepresentation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.

Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-222-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - Not offered this year/term

(Biological Sciences 322)

The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.

Prerequisites: Physics 115/110 and permission of the instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours) with 12 per lab
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

PHYS-231-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Techniques of Experimental Physics

Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Provides training in the techniques employed in the construction of scientific equipment.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, major
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) for 3 weeks
Instructors: L. McEachern
Expected enrollment: 4

PHYS-250-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 301/210 and 303/200/205
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-290-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Advanced Laboratory Practicum

Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This course is a hands-on practicum, intended to introduce students to the practice of modern physics research. Depending on student interest, topics include external research seminars by practitioners in the field, training in oral and written scientific communication, presentation and interpretation of research results, scientific modeling, and hands-on experimental skills. Research projects are an integral part of this course; credit will be apportioned in relation to the intensity of the project.
Prerequisites: Permission of department
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-295-01 - Physics - 2013-2014

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190/201
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined)
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 14

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Newton's great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.
Prerequisites: Physics 303/200/205
Instructors: S. Smith
Expected enrollment: 22

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 324)
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green's functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190, 303/200
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.
Prerequisites: Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205)
Instructors: J. Buretta
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solid; the specific heat of solids.
Prerequisite: Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205) and Quantum Mechanical Phenomena (Physics 302/250) or permission from department
Instructors: S. Smith
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-328-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) From Litlput to Brobdingnag: Bridging the Scales Between Science and Engineering - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive; Chemistry 328)
The performance of many engineered devices is dependent on macroscopic factors (pressure, temperature, flow, conductivity). As a result, engineers often model devices macroscopically considering atomistic level details only through fixed parameters. These parameters do not always capture the full atomistic level picture. More accurate multi-scale approaches for modeling macroscopic properties use basic atomistic level chemistry at key points in larger scale simulations. This course is an introduction to such approaches focusing on fuel cells as a concrete example. Basic scientific principles will be developed along side of basic engineering principles through project/case studies.
Prerequisites: Math 202 and Physics 216/190
Instructors: M. Gomez

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Quantum Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; and perturbative methods.
Prerequisites: Physics 302/250
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: N. Abraham
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-390-01 - Physics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Advanced Laboratory Practicum
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is a hands-on practicum, intended to introduce students to the practice of modern physics research. Depending on student interest, topics include external research seminars by practitioners in the field, training in oral and written scientific communication, presentation and interpretation of research results, scientific modeling, and hands-on experimental skills. Research projects are an integral part of this course; credit will be apportioned in relation to the intensity of the project.
Prerequisites: 16 credits in Physics, permission of department
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 16

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2013-2014
First-Year Seminars in Politics: Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others’ presentations.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: V. Ferraro
Expected enrollment: 16

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Politics and Truth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors’ perspectives on these questions.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-100-02 - Politics - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Confessions, Novels, and Notebooks: The Self and Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 100f(01))
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Cocks

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: What in the World is Going On?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
We know the world faces several profound problems that may well threaten the long-term sustainability of life as we know it: environmental degradation and resource limits, deepening global inequality, global corporate capitalism, and ineffective national and international political institutions. To respond wisely, we must understand the complex interlocking systems we loosely name contemporary globalization. Only then will we be able to imagine appropriate responses and solutions.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: The Politics of Food - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
A critical examination of the political and economic forces informing the production, distribution, marketing, and consumption of food in the United States. We will look at the power relations and institutional arrangements that inform what we eat. Topics include the industrialization of food production and its impact on workers, public health, and the environment; animal welfare, veganism, and other ethical issues; the marketing of unhealthy diet choices; and corporate influence over agricultural policy and food regulation. We will also consider various individual, cultural, and policy solutions to the problems surrounding food and diet in America.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. Amy

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Family Ties - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
In this course, students will engage a number of classic works of literature and philosophy, as well as contemporary works, in order to reflect on the ways the family shapes private and public life and is, in return, shaped by them. We will cover such questions as: how does the family create and then influence the individual? What does it mean to be part of a family? What do individuals owe their families and are those obligations fair? How do we form families? Can the family insulate individuals from politics and society—in good ways and bad? Is political order like familial order? Are the state and society a threat or support for the family? How have these understandings changed over time?

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Black Metropolis: From MLK to Obama - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog. etc. requirement
First-year seminar
"Black Metropolis" refers to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King's failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson's urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.

POLIT-106-01 - Politics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Comparative Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides an introduction to comparative political analysis, one of the four subfields of political science. The primary objective is to help students understand how the "modern" world, one characterized by the rise of industrialized nation-states, took form and what shape it might take in the post-Cold War era. We will examine how the challenges of economic development, social transformation, and nation-building sparked the emergence of alternatives to "modernity" characterized by diverse configurations of political institutions and social forces. We will also assess how globalization and the re-emergence of local identities may be redefining our understanding of "modernity."

(Fall) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought
Through the works of the ancient tragedians and comedians, Thucydides, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Augustine, Aquinas, and Pizan, this course explores themes in ancient and medieval political thought. In alternating years, the course will be taught as either a survey of a wide array of authors or as a more thematically focused study of just a few writers. In either format, we will pay particular attention to the ways these writers characterized the relationship between the individual and community; the roles knowledge, reason, emotion, and rhetoric play in political life; the link between gender and citizenship; and the various forms political community can take.

(Gender Studies 250f(02))

The Americas have been characterized by the strictness of their laws in the criminalization of abortion. In some countries abortion is criminalized even when the woman's life is at risk. What role have women's movements played in advancing abortion rights? What has mattered most for a movement's success, its internal characteristics or external forces? Has the way the movement framed its demands mattered? How has the political influence of the Catholic and Evangelical churches influenced policies in this area? We will answer these questions by exploring examples from across the region through primary and secondary sources.

(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 246)

This course will examine the foreign policy of the Russian Federation of the past twenty years. As a successor state Russia has inherited both the Soviet Union's clout (nuclear arms, permanent seat on the U.N. Security Council) and Soviet debts - monetary, psychological, and historical. What are the conceptual foundations of Russian diplomacy? Can we deconstruct Russian nationalism so as to examine its different trends and their impact on foreign policy? Do Russian exports of oil and gas define Russian diplomacy, as it is often claimed? Is there any pattern in the struggle over resources and their export routes in continental Eurasia?

(Fall) Urban Policy
(Community-based learning course; Africana Studies 302)
Gentrification, unemployment, crime, failing schools, disinvestment, mass incarceration--what comes to mind when you think of the inner city? In response to a constrained fiscal environment, cities have increasingly adopted neoliberal policy approaches to address seemingly intractable urban problems. The seminar will study current research to assess the political and economic impact of this neoliberal policy regime on housing, education, and public safety. This is an inter-institutional class, linked with an advanced seminar on the same topic at Holyoke Community College. Both classes will meet together occasionally for films and guest speakers.
Prerequisites: Politics 250 or 252
Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 17

(Spring) Nationalism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 330)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Politics, International Relations, Russian and Eurasian Studies, or History
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 20

POLIT-312-01 - Politics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Politics, International Relations, Russian and Eurasian Studies, or History
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Impacts of War
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 331)
Sometimes the object of aggression, sometimes itself the aggressor, Russia has been party to all the major military conflicts of the 19th and 20th centuries - Napoleonic Wars, Crimean War, World War I, and World War II. Russian army also fought in numerous regional wars, notably in Afghanistan in 1979-1989 and recently in Chechnya and Georgia. We will study perceptions of war in modern Russian society and look at their origins, and for that we will do in-depth study of impacts of past wars. What generated support for the government? How does the notion of "acceptable losses" change over time? How did wars of the past affect social structures and gender roles in Russia?
Prerequisites: Juniors and Seniors only
Instructors: C. Pleshakov

(Spring) Black Migrations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Africana Studies 356)
This seminar is a comparative examination of the migration of African-descended people within and to the United States. It looks at in succession the original African diaspora through the Atlantic slave trade; the Great Migration of African Americans from the South; the immigration to the U.S. of African-descended people from the West Indies; and last, the movement of Africans from the continent to the United States since 1965 when immigration laws became more inclusive. We will evaluate the processes of African Americanization for each new migratory group in all of its cultural and political ramifications. Course material includes articles, books, films, novels, and guest speakers.
Prerequisites: Africana Studies 200 or permission of instructor
Instructors: P. Smith

POLIT-357-01 - Politics - 2013-2014

Multiple forms of conflict and violence fueled by economic inequality, political instability, and rising radicalism mark South Asia—a region of contested histories, ideologies, and territories. We will explore the histories and causes of enduring conflicts, such as Kashmir and the wars in Afghanistan, separatist movements in Pakistan, India, and Sri Lanka, and potential conflicts over scarce water and energy resources. We will conclude with analysis of the role of external powers, such as China, Iran, and the U.S. in South Asia and assess the prospects for peace in the region.

Prerequisites: jr. sr. 8 credits in department
Instructors: K. Khory
Expected enrollment: 18

This course examines the dramatic emergence of democratic institutions and civil society in East Asia. The primary aim of the class is to help students understand and analyze the process of democratic unfolding in Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. We will also evaluate China's recent, albeit limited experiments with democratic practices. We will begin by contrasting Western perspectives of democracy with both traditional and more contemporary Asian understandings of democracy. We will then focus on the actual processes of democratic consolidation in each of the cases, especially the developments that precipitated political crisis and ultimately, political change.

Prerequisites: jr. sr.
Instructors: C. Chen
Expected enrollment: 18

This course examines migration and transnational processes from a comparative perspective. It focuses on the relationship between globalization and international migration, with special attention to transnational networks and diaspora politics. We will explore major theories, forms, and patterns of migration in global politics; the involvement of diaspora organizations in the politics of host and home states; and the implications of migration and refugee flows for state sovereignty, national identity, and citizenship. We will conclude by analyzing the key debates and framing of immigration policies and models of citizenship in Europe and the United States.

Prerequisites: jr. sr. 8 credits in department
Instructors: K. Khory
Expected enrollment: 18

On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?

Prerequisites: Politics 104 AND permission of instructor

(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: Political Violence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Societies pride themselves on being civilized when they transcend rule by violence and implant rule by law. Civilized societies pride themselves on being liberal democracies when they recognize the political equality of all citizens, represent the interest of those citizens in government, and make decisions through peaceful deliberation and compromise. But what exactly is violence, and what is wrong with it? Does it entail physical force, or can violence be present when bloodshed is absent? Is violence a means to power, an expression of powerlessness, or both? Is justice always served by the exit of violence from social life? Are liberal democracy and violence truly antithetical?

This course surveys a range of topics within social psychology. How do other people influence us? How do people perceive one another? How do attitudes develop and change? Under what conditions do people conform to, or deviate from, social norms? We will survey concepts across several areas of social psychology with an emphasis on empirical research evidence.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-212-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Complex Organizations 212f)
Instructors: D. Butterfield

PSYCH-213-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Psychology of Racism: How Race Shapes Child Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course, students will examine issues related to racial identity, stereotypes, prejudice, white privilege, racism and discrimination, from the perspectives of social and developmental psychology. Students will learn about the social and historical context of race and racism, the impact of race and racial disparities on the social, emotional and cognitive development of children and adolescents, and the role that psychological science can play in influencing policies and practices that impact children. The intersections of race with other inequalities such as poverty, gender, and ethnicity, will also be examined.
Prerequisites: A 100 level course in psychology and Soph, jr, or sr
Notes: This course will count in the social AND developmental areas (Areas A and C)
Instructors: E. Blackburn
Expected enrollment: 25

PSYCH-215-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Racism and Inequality in Schools and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive; Education 205(f))
What is race? Who decides? Are we a "postracial" society? This course focuses on historical, social, psychological, and legal underpinnings of the social construction of race and examines how perspectives on race have influenced the lives of students and teachers in schools. Class sessions compare the old vs. "new" racism, contrast the workings of white privilege with calls for white responsibility, explore perspectives on the "achievement" and "opportunity" gaps, and examine how antiracist pedagogies can address inequities in education at the curricular, interpersonal, and institutional levels.
Essays, response papers, field experiences, and a digital media project are required.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: K. Helmer
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-220-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Theories of Personality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
How do theorists’ ideas about personality relate to their own life experiences? Does the gender of a theorist affect the claims they make about women’s and men’s personalities? Autobiographical writings of key theorists (Freud, Jung, Horney, Deutsch) are read in conjunction with their classic works, with an eye toward exploring how people are similar to, and different from, one another and how childhood experiences shape adult behavior.
Prerequisites: soph, jr or sr & Psychology 100,101 or 110
Instructors: A. Douglas
PSYCH-222-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Abnormal Psychology: Clinical Perspectives
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This survey course on abnormal psychology focuses on understanding diagnoses included in the American Psychiatric Association’s Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, Fourth Edition and their implications for the understanding and treatment of psychological disorders. Throughout the course we will question the concept of abnormality and examine its positive and negative effects in the amelioration of human suffering.
Prerequisites: 100-level psychology course
Instructors: R. Goren-watts
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-223-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Abnormal Child Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Are children in crisis? Is there an epidemic of mental health disorders within children and adolescents? This course will consider the prevalence, development, and classification of psychological syndromes of childhood and their impact on children, adolescents, families, schools and communities. Attention will be played to theories and research on the causes of childhood disorders and distress. We will also consider how "abnormality" differs from "normalcy" and how disorders of childhood differ from adult disorders. Topics will include treatment, public health, and public policy as they related to childhood psychiatric disorders.
Prerequisites: 100 level course in Psychology
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-230-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Developmental Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines changes in cognitive, social, and emotional functioning, including theory and research that illuminate some central issues in characterizing these changes: the relative contributions of nature and nurture, the influence of the context on development, continuity versus discontinuity in development, and the concept of stage. Includes observations at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: K. Haydon
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-232-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Behavior Problems during the Preschool Years
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
What role does the preschool classroom play in supporting social and emotional readiness for elementary school, particularly for those children entering preschool with behavior challenges? Early difficulties in peer relationships and with emotional and behavioral self-regulation interfere with learning and can set the stage for additional problems later in development. This course will provide an overview of child development as a foundation for studying behavior problems that present during the preschool years. The course will also focus on characteristics of early childhood classrooms and experiences that promote more adaptive functioning in classroom settings.
Prerequisites: 100-level course in psychology
Notes: this course also counts in the Personality/Abnormal area
Instructors: E. Blackburn
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-233-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Educational Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
What do we learn? How do we learn? Why do we learn? In this course, we will study issues of learning, teaching, and motivation that are central to educational psychology. We will explore the shifting paradigms within educational psychology, multiple subject matter areas, discontinuities between classroom and home cultures, students' prior experiences, teachers as learners, ethnic and gender identity in the classroom, and learning in out-of-school settings. Requires a prepracticum in a community-based setting.

Prerequisites: soph, jr or sr

Notes: Prepracticum required. Many of the available placements for this course are in after-school settings (one afternoon per week)

Instructors: A. Grillo

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-233-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Educational Psychology

PSYCH-240-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Visual and Auditory Perception
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why is it that some people, mostly men, cannot distinguish red socks from green ones? Why does the moon on the horizon appear larger than when it is overhead? How do Magic Eye pictures work? Why does the Mona Lisa's smile seem so elusive? This course addresses such questions by examining biological and psychological studies of the visual and auditory systems. Among the topics we will explore are object recognition; color vision; the perception of depth, size, and movement; the effects of experience on perception; sound localization; and the perception of pitch.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology

Instructors: M. Breen

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-241-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology

Instructors: C. Lee

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-250-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.

Prerequisites: Psychology 100 and Biology 145 or 160

Instructors: W. Millard

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-251-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Animal Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology or neuro 100; soph. jr. sr.
Instructors: K. Hollis
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent study programs are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor. Students must email Prof. Deutsch during advising week to explain why they want to take the course
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 14

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Gender Studies 333Q(01))
This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students must email Prof. Deutsch during advising week to explain why they want to take the course.
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Laboratory in Qualitative Research
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course offers a hands-on introduction to methods of psychological research that focus on the qualitative description and analysis of human experience. Students learn a variety of techniques of data collection (interviewing, intensive observation, archival research) and methods of analyzing textual sources -- from historical accounts to blogs, memoirs, observational narratives, and interview transcripts. Readings focus on specific methodological practices as well as on the history and philosophy of science differentiating qualitative methods from other approaches to psychological research. Students work both collaboratively and individually on projects throughout the course.
Prerequisites: Jr., Sr. and Psychology 200.
Notes: This course also counts in the Social area of psychology.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 12
PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Stress and Coping
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to research methods in abnormal and personality psychology. Students will work as a class to collect data using quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Students will be expected to collect survey- and questionnaire-based data as well as engage in some interviewing projects. We will consider the various stages of research including literature review, design, ethical considerations, data collection, and analysis (qualitative and quantitative), and consider the statistical inference or implications of our findings. The course focuses on the impact of stress and coping on the lives of individuals, identity, their relationships, and psychological adjustment.
Prerequisites: Jr. sr., Psych 200, 201 and one course in the personality/abnormal area
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: First-Person Narratives of Madness
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Psychologists have typically conceptualized "mental illness" in terms of the symptoms and diagnoses proposed by psychiatrists in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). These categories, while perhaps useful for prescribing medication, do little to help us understand the subjective experiences that are considered "mad." In this seminar, we analyze accounts (historical and contemporary) written by people who have experienced extreme states, intense emotions, or unusual perceptions or beliefs, to understand how these "counter-narratives" offer new insights into psychological life.
Prerequisites: Jr.,Sr., and 8 credits in the department. A course in Abnormal Psychology or Literature (any language) preferred.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-329-02 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Body Image and Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
How does the body "shape" who we are and does our identity shape our body? This course will explore the interacting relationship between the image of the body and body image with identity and sense of self. Drawing on personality theories, social constructivist thought, and feminist principles, this course will examine the intersections of self-image with a focus on gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, social class, size, age, and physical ability.
Prerequisites: jr, sr and 8 credits in the department. A course in Gender Studies or Personality Psychology preferred
Instructors: R. Goren-Watts
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Adoption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Adoption has become a common way to create families in the United States and many other countries. The experience of adoptees, birth parents, and adoptive families raise many questions about family relationships, identities, and community membership. In this course we will look how adoption has been studied, with a particular focus on the experiences of adoptees and their adoptive parents. Students will develop research questions, consider different methods and related ethical issues, and analyze survey and interview data.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200; 201; and 230 or 236.
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-02 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Laboratory in Romantic Development: Observational Coding Methodology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Students will work in teams to code videotaped observations of romantic conflict discussions. Students will learn to code emotion expressions, conflict engagement and resolution strategies, attachment behaviors, and relationship quality at both the dyadic and individual levels. Students will also write their own coding scales to apply to these observations. Issues of coding bias, construct validity, and intercoder reliability will be addressed. Emphasis will be on conceptual and methodological aspects of developing, coding, and analyzing observational data for individuals and individuals nested within dyads.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; 230 or 236 and permission of instructor.

Notes: During advising week students must submit a statement to the professor saying why they want to take the course.

Instructors: K. Haydon

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014

(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 labs (3 hours each) required at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook

Instructors: A. Grillo

Expected enrollment: 16

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014

(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: Close Relationships across the Lifespan

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course will cover developmental implications of close relationships from infancy through adulthood with a focus on parents, friendships, and romantic partners. The goal is to examine normative developmental processes through a relational lens.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, and Psychology 230

Instructors: K. Haydon

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014

(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Community-based learning course)

Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with the professor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.

Notes: 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield is required.

Instructors: K. Binder

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014

(Spring) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Speech

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents an overview of laboratory methods in cognitive psychology, including: research design, methodology, data analysis, and statistical inference. We will explore these issues through the lens of human communication; specifically, speech. Students will design and complete a research project in which they record and analyze speech to explore questions about how meaning is expressed through spoken language.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201 and permission of instructor.

Instructors: M. Breen

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-349-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
Fall Seminar in Perception and Cognition: Language and Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Languages differ in the way they describe the world. For example, the noun for bridge is feminine in German, but masculine in French. Russian has two words for blue, while English has only one. The Piraha (an Amazonian hunter-gatherer tribe) arguably have no number words. In this course, we will be asking to what extent these cross-linguistic differences are reflected in thought. That is, do German speakers think bridges are more feminine than French speakers do? Can Russian speakers discriminate different shades of blue better than English speakers? Can the Piraha count? In exploring these questions, we hope to discover how tightly linked language and thought are.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 240 or 241
Instructors: M. Breen

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and one of the following: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333; and permission of instructor
Notes: Interested students must meet with the instructor before or during the advising week to obtain additional information about the course.
Instructors: W. Millard

Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior: Clinical Neuroscience
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Explore how psychology, neuroscience, and medicine come together to study the etiology and treatment of neuropsychiatric disorders. Students will examine the behavioral features and neurobiology behind various clinical disorders such as Autism, ADHD, Substance Use Disorders, Mood Disorders, Schizophrenia, Anxiety, and Neurodegenerative Diseases. The course will rely on primary research to identify how changes in physiology and biology might manifest in the behaviors that define psychopathology. Students will gain a deeper understanding of clinical and preclinical techniques used to study these disorders while bridging their knowledge of molecular, cellular, and systems neuroscience research.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333
Instructors: J. Schwartzer

Expected enrollment: 15

Psychology and Education

EDUC-202-01 - Psychology and Education - 2013-2014
(Fall) Examining Features of Shape and Measuring Space in One, Two, and Three Dimensions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 201)
We will work with 2-D and 3-D shapes, develop mathematical vocabulary regarding features of shapes, and explore definitions and properties of geometric objects. The seminar includes a study of angle, similarity, congruence, and the relationship between 3-D objects and their 2-D representations. The measurement component will provide opportunities to examine different attributes of size, develop facility in composing and decomposing shapes, and apply these skills to make sense of formulas for area and volume. As we explore the conceptual issues of length, area, and volume and their complex interrelationships, we will also examine how children develop these ideas.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor

Instructors: M. Flynn

Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Racism and Inequality in Schools and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive; Psychology 215f)
What is race? Who decides? Are we a "postracial" society? This course focuses on historical, social, psychological, and legal underpinnings of the social construction of race and examines how perspectives on race have influenced the lives of students and teachers in schools. Class sessions compare the old vs. "new" racism, contrast the workings of white privilege with calls for white responsibility, explore perspectives on the "achievement" and "opportunity" gaps, and examine how antiracist pedagogies can address inequities in education at the curricular, interpersonal, and institutional levels. Essays, response papers, field experiences, and a digital media project are required.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor

Notes: Prepracticum required

Instructors: K. Helmer

Expected enrollment: 40

EDUC-220-01 - Psychology and Education - 2013-2014
(Spring) Foundations of Multicultural Education
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course offers a study of the historical, theoretical, and philosophical perspectives that are the underpinnings of multiculturalism in education. Through selected readings, class discussion, and oral presentations, the course will examine the epistemological elements of race, class, culture, and gender in the classroom.

Prerequisites: one 100-level Psychology course

Instructors: C. Banks

RELIG-212-01 - Religion - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.
Instructors: L. Fine

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 215)
Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Spring) Engendering Judaism: Women and Jewish Tradition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 222-01 and Gender Studies 210s(04))
This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies; opportunities to become rabbis; new approaches to God, theology, and social issues; the Jewish lesbian movement; women's writing and documentary filmmaking.

(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 226, Critical Social Thought 250)
This course surveys the classical responses major Western thinkers have had to great religious questions. Ancient Greece, the Enlightenment, the nineteenth and twentieth centuries serve as the primary periods of focus. Works by Plato, Anselm, Aquinas, Hume, Kant, Dostoevsky, Marx, Kierkegaard, and Tillich are just a few of the materials we will read. The classical arguments for G-D's existence, as well as the nature of human freedom, and the place of reason and faith in social life will be addressed.

(Fall) Spirituals and the Blues
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines and analyzes African American music as a primary textual source for understanding philosophical and religious language within that community. It addresses various questions: What are the central philosophical and religious themes expressed within the text? How are these themes reflected in the music? What is the intrinsic character of the spirituals and the blues? Is there such a thing as a "music of oppression"? In what way(s) does the black experience contribute to philosophical and religious understanding, as well as the use of language? What does this material suggest about the connections among art, literature, and experience?

(Spring) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 235)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kind. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Sohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

In the first millennium, Christianity thrived throughout the Middle East. Because Roman Catholic and Protestant churches later declared many of these Christians to be heretics, their stories have often been excluded from the history of Christianity. This course challenges the assumption of Christianity as a "Western" religion and asks how our understanding of global Christianity changes when we include the history and perspective of Eastern Christians. We will read such sources as the tale of a transvestite nun, a letter allegedly written by Jesus, ancient Christian hymns, the story of a demon-possessed monastery, and the first Christian writings on Islam.

(Jewish Studies 256.)
Hundreds of ancient religious texts did not make it into the Hebrew Scripture (aka the Old Testament). This course examines some of these excluded writings. In particular, we will focus on works found among the Apocrypha, the Pseudepigrapha, and the Dead Sea Scrolls. We will read an ancient Harlequin romance, tour heaven and hell, hear of the adventures of fallen angels who sired giants (and taught humans about cosmetics), and learn how the world will end. In critically examining such texts, we will better appreciate the diversity of Judaism, better understand the historical context of early Christianity, and explore the politics behind what did and did not make it into the bible.

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Fall) The Romanovs: Triumph and Tragedy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; History 205)
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia’s tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

(Fall) Topics in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature: The Culture of the Cold War: Atom Bombs, Show Trials, Witch Hunts, and Alien Invasions - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
No other historical event so affected the psyche of the post-WWII world as the standoff between "The Free World" and "The Evil Empire." This course brings two bitter enemies - the Soviet Union and the United States - back together in a final battle. Like the Cold War, this one will be fought through proxies: the literary, cinematic, and cultural texts of the two Super Powers. It addresses the ideologies and paranoia that divided the world into an "us" and a "them," and the terror and lunacy that the bomb, spy mania, and witch-hunts evoked. What was it like to loathe and be drawn to "the enemy"? What are the sources of "Cold War nostalgia"? Are there connections between the Cold War and the current political climate?

(Spring) Topics in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature: Diabolic Carnival: Bulgakov's Master and Margarita and Its Contexts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
(Taught in English) Mephistopheles in Moscow? The Gospel retold? At turns both wildly comic and metaphysically profound, Bulgakov's novel has been a cult classic since its unexpected discovery in 1967. This course will consider Bulgakov's masterpiece together with some of its literary, historical, and social contexts. Additional readings from Goethe, Gogol, E.T.A. Hoffman, Akhmatova, and others.

(Spring) Russia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 212s)
This course examines pivotal archetypes of Russian civilization that reflect Russia's past, demarcate its present, and constrict its future. We will focus on the canonic historical monuments of Russia, such as the Kremlin of Moscow and the downtown of St. Petersburg. Starting with the representation of these landmarks in the media, we will explore them in depth by reading conflicting historical narratives and cultural histories and eventually deconstruct their cultural message and value. By the end of the course, students will be familiar with the Eastern Orthodox Christianity rites and able to identify and discuss the most common artifacts of Russian civilization.

(Spring) Dostoevsky and the Problem of Evil: The Brothers Karamazov - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Perhaps no other novelist has delved as deeply into the psychological and metaphysical dimensions of evil as the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky. This course will be devoted to a close reading of Dostoevsky's landmark novel of murderous passion and parricide, The Brothers Karamazov. Why should crime and transgression be a privileged avenue of access into the human interior? How is psychology tied to the metaphysical aspect of human existence? What are the sources of evil—and redemption?

(Spring) Anna Karenina and Contexts: Tolstoy on Love, Death, and Family Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Anna Karenina (1873) is one of a series of important works Tolstoy wrote pondering love, death, the nature of happiness, and the foundations of family life. Our reading of Anna Karenina will be the centerpiece of this course which will also include works ranging from Childhood (1852) to The Kreutzer Sonata (1889), which shocked and repelled readers with its unsparing depictions of human sexuality and murderous jealousy. Film versions of works will be screened.

(Taught in English; Politics 209)
Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union’s success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy? How has Russia's transformation affected ordinary people and Russia's relationship to the West?

(Spring) Russia and the West - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Polities 264f)
Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without the study of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and, following the collapse of the USSR in 1991, the role played by Russia and Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex and multipolar "New World Order." What should U.S. policy be toward the emerging new states of the Baltics, Central Asia, and Caucasia?

(Spring) Oil and Water Don’t Mix: Geopolitics, Energy, and the Environment - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West’s strategic energy interests?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 260f)
The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 marked the coming of totalitarianism to Russia. Led first by Lenin and then by Stalin, the country went through the most brutal civil war, purges, World War II, and the first stages of cold war. This period also saw immense social change and sweeping economic transformation. What were the causes of totalitarianism in Russia? How did the regime function? What were the major landmarks of Russian history in the period 1917-1953?

(Fall) Kremlin Rising: Russian Foreign Policy in the Twenty-first Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 263)
This course will examine the foreign policy of the Russian Federation of the past 20 years. As a successor state Russia has inherited both the Soviet Union's clout (nuclear arms, permanent seat on the UN Security Council) and Soviet debts--monetary, psychological, and historical. What are the conceptual foundations of Russian diplomacy? Can we deconstruct Russian nationalism so as to examine its different trends and their impact on foreign policy? Do Russian exports of oil and gas define Russian diplomacy, as it is often claimed? Is there any pattern in the struggle over resources and their export routes in continental Eurasia?

(Fall) Advanced Russian Language: From Reading to Speaking
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
This course aims at expansion of students' vocabulary and improvement of both writing and speaking skills. The course is intended for students who have completed at least four semesters of Russian or the equivalent. Heritage learners of Russian (those who speak the language) will also benefit from the course. With a strong emphasis on integrating vocabulary in context, this course aims to help students advance their lexicon and grammar, increase fluency, and overcome speaking inhibitions. We will read and discuss a variety of texts including short stories, films, and articles.

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Spring) Utopia and Dystopia: Imagined Worlds of Literature and Internet
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English)
The twentieth century has been largely shaped by several nations’ ambitions to build utopian societies. Russia and China have attempted to realize the vast promises of communism while Nazi Germany aimed to construct a perfect racist world. Beyond political struggle, wars, and revolutions, recent extraordinary achievements in technology have contributed to the utopian mindset. Are political utopias dead in the new millennium? How do cyberspace and the global village contribute to utopian thinking? What will be the role of utopia in the twenty-first century?

(Spring) Nationalism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 308)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multicultural states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments’ responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Fall) Impacts of War
(Taught in English; Politics 320)

Sometimes the object of aggression, sometimes itself the aggressor, Russia has been party to all the major military conflicts of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries—Napoleonic Wars, Crimean War, World War I, and World War II. Russian army also fought in numerous regional wars, notably in Afghanistan in 1979-1989 and recently in Chechnya and Georgia. We will study perceptions of war in modern Russian society and look at their origins, and for that we will do in-depth study of impacts of past wars. What generated support for the government? How does the notion of "acceptable losses" change over time? How did wars of the past affect social structures and gender roles in Russia?

(Spring) Origins of Terrorism - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 243s)

Russia was the first nation in the world to face political terrorism. In Russia, the era of terrorism lasted from the 1860s, when the People's Will group launched the hunt on the tsar Alexander II, until 1918, when the Socialist Revolutionary Party attempted to assassinate Lenin. A case study of terrorism in Russia will help us to answer a number of questions highly relevant today. What are the causes of terrorism? What are its goals and methods? What can governments do to cope with it? What is the impact of terrorism on society?

(Fall) Revolutions - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 350f)

Revolution is far from over. First came the explosion in Eastern Europe, the collapse of the USSR, the rise of the Taliban in Afghanistan, bloodless overthrow of old elites in Indonesia and the Philippines, and what Hugo Chavez calls the Bolivarian revolution in Venezuela. The goal of revolutions may no longer be socialism, it may not even be directed at greater liberty. But revolutions continue to affect millions of people's lives and reflect states' responses to global change and social dislocation. They are still with us as the Arab Spring so clearly demonstrated. We will examine revolutions, their beginnings, their victories, and their ends.

(Taught in English; Politics 350f)

Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia's early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Qualitative Research and Data Analysis - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces students to qualitative research methods. The course is designed for students to receive basic training in the collection and analysis of qualitative research data, gain experience writing and presenting qualitative data, get exposure to the theoretical assumptions underlying qualitative inquiry, and to gain insight about the ethical responsibilities surrounding qualitative social analysis. We will focus on methods such as in-depth interviews, focus groups, participant observation, and archival analysis.

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Globalization, Organization, and Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The past thirty years have been marked by increasing attention to international trade and the emerging global marketplace. Who is driving these economic changes? If the world is changing, what strategies should states, industries, and firms employ to become a dominant player? This course will explore questions such as these using sociological theories and analytical techniques. We will study three important levels of social organization (nation-states, industries, and firms) in order to understand how each influences the others. You will learn how to assess competing accounts of the global economy and draw your own informed conclusions.

(Spring) Survey Research and Data Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to the use of quantitative data in sociology. The focus of the course is understanding how researchers use such data to make sociological arguments. To appreciate this, it is necessary to not only study how it is done, but also to do some of it. For this reason, students will be asked to analyze data for both weekly assignments and a final paper. The aim of the course is to show how to understand the uses of different types of survey data, and to create and analyze simple statistics and multivariate statistics using statistical software.

(Fall) Criminology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course focuses on the historical and theoretical development of the major approaches to crime and criminality. Criminology began in the second half of the nineteenth century when its pioneers asked the "big questions" pertaining to crime, society, and human nature. As criminology progressed, it narrowed its focus, concentrating on special areas, such as violent crime and property crime. As sociology began to dominate criminology, new theories were developed to explain the social facts gathered in the last 50 years.

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Theories and Practice of Development in Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores the intersection of theoretical knowledge and the implementation of development in the field. We will cover the relationship of sociological and anthropological theory building to fieldwork. Our goal is to understand how theories of development work on the ground, and therefore we will examine case studies to analyze the challenges of development in African rural communities. Overall, the course will prepare students to answer questions such as what is development as a theoretical design.

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Race, Class, and Gender
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this class we will investigate questions of power and inequality as they relate to class, race, gender and their various intersections. We will learn some of the foundational theories in the fields of inequality, intersectionality, gender, and race studies. In addition, we will read empirical work from various methodological perspectives, which highlight the theoretical approaches we will explore.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department
Instructors: N. Milman
Expected enrollment: 20

SOCI-316-03 - Sociology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Transnational Social Movements and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; International Relations 321)
How does culture influence cooperation and communication among NGOs and transnational social movements operating in world politics? In exploring this question, this course provides an introduction to the study of culture focusing on sociological theories of social movements, ethnography, sociolinguistics and narrative analysis. First, we will look at culture as a set of discourses and practices structuring inter-state relations and trans-national flows of communication. Second, we will investigate culture within transnationally operating non-state organizations such as NGOs and activist groups. The class concludes with recent debates on global democracy.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Sociology

SOCI-316-04 - Sociology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Latina/o Immigration
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Latin American Studies 387, Gender Studies 333U)
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.

(Spring) Contemporary Social Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this critical survey of the main theoretical perspectives in contemporary sociology, we focus specifically on structural functionalism, symbolic interactionism, critical theory, feminism, and postmodernism. Besides gaining familiarity with these alternative perspectives, we try to identify the main axes of theoretical dispute in sociology and discuss the problems of evaluating and resolving conflict between theories.

(Spring) First Year Seminar: Rebels and Radicals: Latin American Feminist Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture through a study of nineteenth- through twenty-first-century feminist authors, visual artists, and performers. We will look at the construction of the female subject through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and films. We will disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, and sexuality and think about the ways that feminist cultural production has contributed to social movements in Latin America.

(Fall) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Constructing (Our) America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

Who are we? This is the question that Latin American writers, artists, philosophers and politicians have attempted to answer through fiction, nonfiction, visual arts, and film. Through representative cultural texts from figures such as D. F. Sarmiento, José Martí, Gabriela Mistral, Marta Rojas, and Hugo Chávez, we will explore discourses of identity, different sociopolitical positions, and the representation of race and gender in the construction of "latinoamericanidad."

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This survey course will review the complex interaction of gender and violence as a personal and institutional issue in Spain from Medieval times to the present. What are the ideological and sociocultural constructs that sustain and perpetuate violence against women? What are the forms of resistance women have put into play? Among the texts, we will study short stories by Lucanor (thirteenth century) and María de Zayas (seventeenth century), song by Bebé and movie by Boyaín (twentieth century), contemporary news (twenty-first century), and laws (from the thirteenth century to the present).

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

As women perform gender, so too do they perform culture. In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture, through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. (Fall) Concepts and Practices of Power: An Introduction: Rethinking (Under)Development in Latin America

This course is an introduction to the theory and practice of translation with a focus on reinforcing and advancing the student's knowledge of Spanish. Students will become familiar with key concepts and techniques involved in the discussion of the main issues in translation. Course work will include analysis of translations and extensive translation exercises of a variety of text types—medical, legal, literary, technical, etc.—mostly from English into Spanish and occasionally from Spanish into English. Those Spanish grammar areas considered to be more problematic for English speaking students will be examined. This class will explore the contradictory ways in which indigenous peoples have both been represented and, in turn, have represented themselves across various historical periods. Any conversation around the differences between terms like indio, indigenismo, and indigena will necessitate a critique of the colonial encounter and its legacies. We will begin with colonial texts and move through the nineteenth century to explore the ways in which indigenous peoples were represented in both paintings and early photography projects. We will analyze various twentieth-century texts, films, and performances from Mexico, the Andes, and Chile that draw attention to the ways that indigenous peoples challenge neoliberal concepts of the body, temporality, and space.

Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

In 1492, the Spanish conquest forever changed indigenous America and created a "new" world. European imperial discourses collided with resistance movements and the emerging voices of oppressed peoples, including indigenous communities, women, and mestizos. This course traces the tensions between imperialist and resistance discourses during both the colonial period and today. We will analyze the "fighting words" that consolidated the Spanish empire and later opened the path to Latin American independence. Tracing the impact of these struggles on the Americas today, we will examine how subaltern communities strive to make their voices heard in the global context.

(Fall) Advanced Studies in Identities and Intersections: Spain and Islam
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernismo to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
This course will explore questions and concerns regarding the "Islamic constant" of Spanish history. We will focus on four major political and cultural contexts: the coexistence and conflicts among Jews, Muslims, and Christians in Medieval Iberia; the "morescos" (converted Muslims) of Imperial Spain (sixteenth-seventeenth centuries); Spanish orientalism and colonial enterprises in Africa between the end of the nineteenth and the first half of the twentieth centuries; and the question of the Muslim emigrants in contemporary Spain. Readings will include literary texts, political and legal documents, historical accounts, and other cultural material such as architecture, film, and documentaries.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernismo to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
With the growth of Afro-Latin American literary studies, there has been a growing interest in the recovery and the study of works by women of African descent. This course will examine the intersections of ethnic, cultural, national, class, sexual, and gender identities in representative texts (poems, short stories, essays, testimonios, and film) by Afro-Latina and Afro-Latin American women. We will discuss the construction and meaning of "race," color, and racialized gender roles. Secondary objectives include the development of research and writing skills and rudimentary orientation on various regional ethnic and feminist, cultural, and post/neocolonial theories.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: The Other (in the) Media: New Media and Otherness in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
New technologies (Internet, social media, digital storytelling) are changing the media landscape as well as social, political, and economic relationships. The "other" media is reshaping the notion of otherness itself, as new forms of representation (self-produced, instantly available, sometimes unfiltered) continue to emerge and effect change worldwide. This class examines how traditionally marginalized groups, and local as well as international NGOs, employ new media to gain visibility and tell their story in their own voice. Taught mostly in Spanish, this class is linked (we share several class sessions and a final project) with IR 357, International Human Rights Advocacy.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Language and Society: Mothers and Daughters
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Italian 361, French 321)
Study of this crucial and problematic relationship in modern novels and films from Romance cultures. Exploration of the mother-daughter bond as literary theme, social institution, psychological dynamic, and metaphor for female creativity. Readings include Western myths and diverse theories of family arrangements (Rousseau, Freud, Chodorow, Rich, Iglarz, Giorgio, Mernissi, Niazemek). Authors and films will be grouped cross-culturally by theme and chosen from among: Colette, Vivante, Morante, Emaux, Tusquets, Roy, Roig, Rodoreda, Martin Gaité, Ramondetto, Pineau, Beyala, Bourouzi; films: Children of Montmartre (La maternelle); Indochine; The silences of the Palace; My Mother Likes Women.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in the Language Resource Center.

STAT-140-01 - Statistics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological, and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables and regression.
Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra
Instructors: B. Westgate

STAT-240-01 - Statistics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level mathematics or statistics course or permission of instructor.
Instructors: J. Gifford

(Fall) Probability
This course develops the ideas of probability simultaneously from experimental and theoretical perspectives. The laboratory provides a range of experiences that enhance and sharpen the theoretical approach and, moreover, allows us to observe regularities in complex phenomena and to conjecture theorems. Topics include: introductory experiments; axiomatic probability; random variables, expectation, and variance; discrete distributions; continuous distributions; stochastic processes; functions of random variables; estimation and hypothesis testing.

Prerequisites: Mathematics 203

Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in fall 2015 and 2017.

Instructors: B. Westgate

Theatre Arts

THEAT-100-01 - Theatre Arts - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Taught by Department of Theatre Arts faculty and staff, this course offers the student a study and practice of theatre as a collaborative art. Course includes the analysis of the dramatic text in terms of the actor; the director; the scenic, costume, lighting, and sound designers; and technicians. Close analytical readings of play texts and critical/theoretical essays will be supplemented by attending theatre productions both on and off campus and by staging students' own theatrical projects.

Notes: requirement for the Theatre major

Instructors: S. Daniels, R. Babh, The department

Expected enrollment: 36

(Fall) Acting I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to performance through a variety of improvisational exercises designed for developing basic techniques. After exploring visual, aural, tactical, and literary performance sources, the students will rehearse and present performance projects.
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-120-01 - Theatre Arts - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Design: Costume Construction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will take you through the theatrical process of creating clothing and accessories for the stage. Topics covered are hand sewing techniques, fabric identification and use, and clothing alterations. The course will explore basic pattern drafting and draping, and some accessory construction. Students will work from costume renderings to build and alter clothing for Rooke Theatre productions.
Notes: lab; materials fee $45
Instructors: E. Bergeron
Expected enrollment: 10

THEAT-122-01 - Theatre Arts - 2013-2014
(Fall) Scene Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how this work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of the process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, models and some hand drafting. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: lab; $30 materials fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: V. James
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-126-01 - Theatre Arts - 2013-2014
(Fall) Lighting Design I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and practice of lighting design for the theatre. This course will cover the basics of light, lighting equipment and how to develop a light design for a theatrical production. Students will have the opportunity to create their own lighting designs in the Black Box Light Lab and present them to the class. In addition to class time, students are required to complete additional hours on light prep crew -- this is an extension of the class where students will learn how to hang and focus lights, read a light plot, and work as a lighting team on the Theatre Department main stage productions.
Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: L. Dubin
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2013-2014
(Spring) What Is Performance?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive course that includes innovative individual and group exercises.

(Fall) Topics in Design: Costume Crafts: Costumes beyond Clothing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, domestic interiors, and materials and techniques. The course combines historical study with studio work.
This course will explore areas of costume that do not include clothing: millinery, armor making, masks, fabric painting and dyeing, as well as body sculpting. This is part research, and a lot of hands-on work. We will explore the materials used for these types of projects and the safe handling of these materials. Students will create a project in each area covered.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 120 (Costume Construction) or permission of instructor
Notes: Lab; Students must have hand and machine sewing skills
Instructors: E. Bergeron

(Spring) Topics in Design: Theatrical Drawing for Set and Costume Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art Studio 226-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, domestic interiors, and materials and techniques. The course combines historical study with studio work.
This course is an investigation into the fundamentals of drawing for costume and set design, with illustration of visual ideas as the focus. Topics will include figure drawing, garment, fabric, and texture rendering for the purposes of costume design, and scale and perspective drawing of objects and environments for set design. Various media will be explored including pencil, paint, and mixed media collage.

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Queer Theory, Performance, and Public Practice - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 223s(01))
How are gender and sexuality constructed, rehearsed, and contested through performance? How can queer cultural production serve as a method of activist intervention in dominant culture? In this course, students are introduced to the central theories and debates in queer studies, with attention to the intersections among gender, sexuality, race, and class. Students also see, write about, and discuss performances that critically engage queer discourses. Additionally, this course asks students to put theory into practice: students stage scenes from selected plays, create original performances inspired by course readings, and experiment with other performative interventions in public culture.

(Fall) Seminar: American Comedies of Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 345f(01))
Surveys of American drama are often weighted with family and social drama; comedy gets short shrift. But from its inception, the American theatre has employed comedy to examine specifically "American" types, offering not only a stereotypical gallery of "other" Americans but also a form in which African American, Latino, and gay playwrights, for instance, could revise their own images onstage. In this course we will chart the path of American comedy from Royall Tyler's "first American play" The Contrast through works by such playwrights as Anna Cora Mowatt, Philip Barry, Christopher Durang, Luis Valdez, and Philip Kan Gotanda.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women in American Theatre and Drama
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
This course offers a history of women in performance, from the colonial era to the present day. Americans inherited a European theatrical economy that was largely male dominated, though actresses played a central role on stage and in the public imagination. Today, while serious inequities remain, women are gaining access to the most privileged and powerful positions in a swiftly changing field. We are therefore equally interested in how women have participated in theatrical culture—as actors, producers, playwrights, directors, designers, managers, and audience members—and how they have been represented on commercial, experimental, and regional stages, and across genres and communities.

(Summer) Jane Austen
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Jane Austen's work stands almost as its own subgenre in the evolution of the novel. Happening at a moment of transitions, her work can be read formally as a bridge between the experiments of eighteenth century realism and what was just to come in the Victorian novel. Although she is often admired for her humor and satire around marriage and sex, the novels also engage with aesthetics, epistemology, and sensibility: political ideas about what constitutes beauty, what it means to know something, and how much one should feel. We will read the completed novels, some of her influences and contemporaries, and critical and theoretical contexts.

(Fall) Urban Policy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; Politics 302)
Gentrification, unemployment, crime, failing schools, disinvestment, mass incarceration--what comes to mind when you think of the inner city? In response to a constrained fiscal environment, cities have increasingly adopted neoliberal policy approaches to address seemingly intractable urban problems. The seminar will study current research to assess the political and economic impact of this neoliberal policy regime on housing, education, and public safety. This is an inter-institutional class, linked with an advanced seminar on the same topic at Holyoke Community College. Both classes will meet together occasionally for films and guest speakers.

AFCNA-341-01 - Africana Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in Africana Studies: Return to the Source: The Political Economy of Nationalism and Development in Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
This course will examine the relationship between nationalism the state and development in African economies. It will begin with an exploration of the foundations of African nationalism in the decolonization movements, followed by the attempts to create African nations out of the former colonies and the role that the colonial inheritance, inequality and ethnicity played. This will be followed by an examination of the state and its role in the economy. To do this an exploration of African elites will be undertaken. The course will end by exploring whether a developmental state can emerge in a multi-party election system under conditions of high inequality.

(Spring) Black Radicalism
(Writing-intensive; Politics 369)
The struggles and ideas of transatlantic black radicals have changed the ways we think and study--through the formation of Africana/African-American/Black Studies--and the ways in which we express thoughts and ideas--through culture and politics. In this seminar, we will study the interdisciplinary history of black radicalism in the 20th century--in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa. This interdisciplinary history is animated by a central debate over the role of black internationalism, if any, in domestic black radical thought and action, in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa.
Prerequisites: AFCNA 200 or Permission of Instructor
Notes: There will be a number of shared classes/discussions with the Africana Studies Senior Seminar at Williams College, both in person and through video-conference, who will be sharing the same syllabus. We will make a class visit to Williams, and we will host a visit from the Williams seminar. The shared meetings will be organized around speakers, presentations, and local activists.

ANTHR-212-01 - Anthropology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Shopping and Swapping: Cultures of Consumption and Exchange
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
We shop for our food, for our clothes, for our colleges. We purchase cars, manicures, and vacations. It seems that there is little that cannot be bought or sold. But we also give and receive gifts, exchange favors, "go dutch" in restaurants, and invite friends for potlucks. This course examines exchange systems cross-culturally, in order to understand their cultural significance and social consequences. It explores how our own commodity exchange system, which appears to be no more than an efficient means of distributing goods and services, in fact contains intriguing symbolic dimensions similar to the gift exchange systems of Native North America, Melanesia, and Africa.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology and Human Rights: Between Devil's Advocate and Rights Advocacy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course explores anthropological approaches to human rights—a key theme of transnational politics and international law. Anthropologists have contributed to discussions on human rights since the UN Declaration and the field has provided a vibrant platform to analyze ideologies, politics, and practices surrounding human rights. We will survey an array of anthropological studies that approach human rights from the perspective of cultural relativism, contextualization, advocacy, and practice. Students will gain a critical perspective on the seemingly universal rhetoric of human rights by learning how it produces diverse effects in places such as Africa, Latin America, and the Middle East.

(Spring) Topic: Feminist Health Politics

(Gender Studies 241HP)

Health is about bodies, selves and politics. We will explore a series of health topics from feminist perspectives. How do gender, sexuality, class, disability, and age influence the ways in which one perceives and experiences health and the access one has to health information and health care? Are heteronormativity, cissexism, or one’s place of living related to one’s health status or one’s health risk? By paying close attention to the relationships between community-based narratives, activities of health networks and organizations and theory, we will develop a solid understanding of the historical, political and cultural specificities of health issues, practices, services and movements.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Archaeology of Food

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course explores the study of ancient foodways with a focus on how and why humans across the globe began to domesticate plant and animal resources approximately 10,000 years ago. The first half of the course presents the types of archaeological data and analytical methods used to study the "agricultural revolution" in a variety of regions. The second half explores a number of themes within the archaeology of food that investigate the relationship between agriculture and sedentism, food and gender, the politics of feasting, and methods for integrating archaeological and ethnographic approaches to the study of food.

(Spring) Making Class Visible

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course examines questions of social class within the Mount Holyoke community, at critical intersections with race, gender, and disability. Drawing upon readings in anthropology and film studies that critique the notion of a homogeneous "community" and offer alternative theoretical models, students will focus reflexively on three projects: the co-production of an ethnographic film, the creation of an advertising campaign for the film, creation of a website, for extending the conversation about class. Among the questions we explore at all three sites are: What is your idea of work? Where and when do you notice class? Is class a topic of conversation and/or storytelling in your family?

Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2.75 hours) plus screenings and production time to be arranged

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement. (Sociology 226)

This seminar explores practical issues in doing research in anthropology and sociology. Depending on student interest, activities could include reading field notes, narrative analysis of texts, survey design, coding and measurement of quantitative variables, and/or visual analysis. Students will have an opportunity to think about how to develop a class paper into an independent study, how to organize research for a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or Sociology

Notes: CR/NC grading only (no letter grading)

Instructors: J. Roth, E. Townsley

(Fall) Medical Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
Biocultural aspects of disease and healing are examined through case studies of nonindustrialized societies, including the relationship between malaria and sickle cell anemia in West Africa and ritual cannibalism, AIDS, and a degenerative nervous-system disorder (kuru) in highland New Guinea. This course surveys the cultural construction of suffering and healing, the medicalization of human social problems, and inequities in the distribution of disease and therapy.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Visual Anthropology in the Material World
(Community-based learning course; Film Studies 320S-02)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.

Instructors: D. Battaglia
Expected enrollment: 19

ANTHR-316-01 - Anthropology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Gender, Food, and Agriculture in the Global Context - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women’s agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Global Bodies: Culture, Politics, and Materiality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course takes the body, understood as a social and cultural construction, as its central object of analysis. The course will draw on the literature on the anthropology of the body and on embodiment to provide a set of theoretical tools to apply in our exploration of relevant topics, issues, and ethnographic case studies. Over the course of the semester, we will examine the body’s entanglement in matters of reproduction and the population, sex, gender and sexuality, citizenship, life, death, and personhood, subjectivity and identity, and commodification and capitalism.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Eggs and Embryos: Innovations in Reproductive and Genetic Technologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This seminar will focus on emerging innovations in the development, use and governance of reproductive and genetic technologies (RGTs). How do novel developments at the interface of fertility treatment and biomedical research raise both new and enduring questions about the "naturalness" of procreation, the politics of queer families, the im/possibilities of disabilities, and transnational citizenship? Who has a say in what can be done and for which purposes? We will engage with ethnographic texts, documentaries, policy statements, citizen science activist projects, and social media in order to closely explore the diversity of perspectives in this field.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology of Violence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course will approach the study of violence through a variety of perspectives and mediums. We will set out to understand the relationship and interaction between biology, culture and aggression. How do individuals, groups and institutions use and legitimize violence? How has violence been used throughout history to establish, maintain and subvert power? In the course we will examine many forms of violence including political, symbolic and everyday violence. We will also explore the costs and consequences of violence on health, community and culture.

Architectural Studies

(Fall) Introduction to Architecture: Sculpting Space
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This studio course will be a design investigation of a particular theme in or approach to architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (sketches, plans, elevations, models, computer diagramming, and various modes of digital representation) to interdisciplinary and socially pertinent design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space. Our goal is to apply creative techniques in art and sculpture to the creation of meaningful space.
Prerequisites: One semester of design or drawing is recommended
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: T. Long
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Intermediate Studies in Architecture: Principles of Environmental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This hybrid studio addresses human comfort with lectures and problem work sessions integrated with design projects. We start with an in-depth study of the world's climate regions, the sun, and the earth's tilt and spin. Primary methods of heat transfer are investigated as students research two architectural solutions (vernacular and contemporary) within each climate. Using daylight, the sun's movement, and sun-path diagrams students will design, draw and build a functioning solar clock. Issues in day-lighting and thermal comfort will then drive an extended design problem. Students will be asked to solve numerical problems and present design solutions using both drawings and models.
Prerequisites: minimum 4 credits of architecture design studio; knowledge of algebra and trigonometry.
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: N. Darling
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Research Seminar in Art History and Architectural Studies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Art History 391)
This seminar explores practical issues in doing advanced research in art history and architectural studies. Depending on student projects, activities could include reading primary sources, critical assessment of texts and archival materials, use of library and digital resources, and visual analysis. Students have an opportunity to think about how to organize research into a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art, revolution and nationalization; nineteenth-century realism; and abstraction and empathy. Lectures will be complemented by class discussion, short films, and assignments in the art museum.
Instructors: P. Staiti

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Spring) Image and Environment: Architecture: The Face of Human Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
A survey of architecture as a functional and expressive medium from the ancient world to the present. Accommodating domestic life, religious ritual, political, commercial, and leisure activities, architecture both shape and reflects the natural environment, technology, social values and visions. While the history of Western architecture constitutes the primary focus, the course will include buildings from around the world.
Instructors: M. Davis

(Fall) Arts of Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This multicultural course introduces students to the visual arts of Asia from the earliest times to the present. In a writing- and speaking-intensive environment, students will develop skills in visual analysis and art historical interpretation. Illustrated class lectures, group discussions, museum visits, and a variety of writing exercises will allow students to explore architecture, sculpture, painting, and other artifacts in relation to the history and culture of such diverse countries as India, China, Cambodia, Korea, and Japan.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Inside Art - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar
A discussion-oriented introduction to art history. Working with original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, we will examine the various materials, practices, and strategies of artists as we move historically across the centuries from the Renaissance to the present. Students will practice the art of describing and refine their skills of observation and analysis.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 16

ARTH-110-02 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Early Modern Art - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar
This seminar explores the extraordinary variety of objects that commemorated love, marriage, fertility, and eroticism in fifteenth and sixteenth-century Europe. We will consider works ranging from the loftiest representations of Platonic love down to the frankly sexual, from paintings to prints to painted marriage chests, including objects that can be seen firsthand in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will refine their skills of visual and verbal analysis, while also learning to interpret these works through the lens of social history, paying particular attention to the role of women.

(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Film Studies 202-01)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours)

(Fall) From Alexander to Cleopatra: The Hellenistic World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.

(Spring) Empire: The Art and Archaeology of the Roman Provinces - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Italian Renaissance Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This survey outlines the arts in Italy from the late thirteenth to sixteenth centuries, a time of major cultural transformation. To trace these developments, we will take a geographic approach, focusing on cities and societies in order to understand the diverse social networks that linked artists like Leonardo da Vinci and Michelangelo with their publics. We will also address themes such as the role of women in the arts as both patrons and producers; the rise of print; and the expanding networks of cross-cultural contact that linked Italian cities like Florence, Rome, and Venice to places throughout western Europe and beyond.

ARTH-233-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Renaissance and Baroque Architecture in Italy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course focuses on architecture in Italy—including churches, palaces, villas, and fortifications, as well as city planning—from 1400 to 1680. In this period, architects took their cues from the classical tradition even as they carved out their own territory, developing new techniques and perfecting old ones to realize their designs. We will trace shifting architectural practice through key figures from Brunelleschi to Bernini, and through the lens of larger cultural forces. We will also examine buildings in light of the painted and sculpted decorative programs that were often integral to their overall effect.

(Spring) The Global Renaissance: *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
The traditionalist view of the Renaissance treats Europe as if it were an isolated hotbed of cultural innovation. This course will reconsider the period as one of intensifying cross-pollination, when European artists were deeply affected by contact with the Near and Far East, Africa, and the Americas. Specific topics will include representations of distant lands and peoples; the collecting of exotic materials; cartography and expanding world horizons; Venice and the Ottoman world; and the reception of classical architecture in Latin America. We will consider many facets of Renaissance visual culture—from paintings and buildings to maps, prints, and illustrated books—that framed these global crosscurrents.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course traces major developments in European art during the periods traditionally designated by the terms neoclassicism, romanticism, realism, and impressionism. Focusing primarily on French art, but branching out to consider the art of England and Spain, it explores the key artistic themes of the century: the engagement with history, the rise of nationhood, the experience of the urban, the Marxist proposal, the grappling with modernity, the dealing in individual temperaments. Among the major figures to be studied are Constable, Courbet, David, Delacroix, Goya, Ingres, Manet, Monet, and Renoir.

(Fall) History of Photography - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, Mexico and the countries in Western Europe. It charts the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, so-called "vernacular," and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are the early landscape photographers O'Sullivan and Watkins, the avant-garde photographers Stieglitz and Genthe, the Depression-era photographers Evans and Lange, and the so-called New Documentarians Arbus and Frank.

(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.

(Spring) European Art: 1885-1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course examines the great ruptures in European art that today we call modernist. It relates aspects of that art to the equally great transformations in European society: revolutionary ferment, the rise and consolidation of industrial capitalism, colonization and its discontents, and world war. Among the major figures to be studied are Duchamp, Mattise, Malevich, Picasso, Seurat, and van Gogh.

(Fall) Contemporary Art

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography in the United States and, less so, Western Europe since World War II. Initially, most of these paths traced a relationship with the "crisis of modernism," but increasingly, they have taken on a different vitality, drawing energy from a wide variety of postmodern and postcolonial subjects and debates. Among the major movements: abstract expressionism, pop, minimalism, earthworks, new wave feminist art, happenings, performance, and more.

(Spring) Arts of India
The multicultural course will survey architecture, sculpture, painting, and other arts of India from the earliest times to the twenty-first century. Students will explore the various arts as material expressions of a relationship between religious beliefs, geography and cultural conditions of the subcontinent of India in different historical periods. Class sessions will also provide opportunities for an examination of cross-cultural issues relating to the study of non-Western art in a Western academic discipline. Students will develop strategies for visual analysis and critical thinking through written assignments, class discussions, and close reading of scholarly articles.

(Fall) Issues in Art History:: Gods & Mortals: Classical Myth in Ancient Art
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Myths appear in a range of media (sculpture, mosaic, fresco, lamps, and gems) and contexts (domestic, sacred, political). Which stories were represented? and what do we know about their reception among ancient viewers? Original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum offer case studies.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Pompeii
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Buried in the volcanic eruption of 79 CE, Pompeii provides an astounding level of preservation for fresco, sculpture, and luxury arts in addition to temples, baths, houses, shops, theaters, and streets. The rediscovery of the ancient site since the eighteenth century had a significant impact upon European art and literature. The course examines the surviving environment and artifacts created in the late republic and early empire and considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of Pompeii in art, theatre, and film up to the present.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

(Fall) Issues in Art History:: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions
(Film Studies 270(01))
Indian popular cinema, known as Bollywood, is commonly criticized for meandering storylines, overblown spectacles, and distracting dance numbers. But we will take popular cinema seriously, and explore it as both, a vibrant cultural form in India as well as intelligent filmmaking that entertains and challenges us. We will analyze a selection of films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Closely reading scholarly articles, participating in debates, writing guided assignments as well as independent research papers, we will learn to develop provocative ideas on Indian films in the context of world cinema.

(Spring) Topics in Art History: The City as a Work of Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will focus on city maps and bird's-eye views in order to explore urban representation and symbolisms. Emphasis will be on European imagery from the fifteenth to eighteenth centuries, but the overall scope will range from ancient to modern times, encompassing western and non-western places and works. The class includes units on the history, theory, and form of the city (including utopian and ideal cities); approaches to representing the city (maps, models, pictorial views); and case studies (Kaifeng, Kyoto, Paris, Siena, Tenochtitlan, Venice, and others). The overarching goal is to understand how the essence of the city can be expressed in visual form.

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Textiles and Fashion in Africa and the African Diaspora
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
By examining textile production (both hand weaving and industrial) and fashion (both streetwear and haute couture), this class investigates questions around cultural exchange, industrialization, and globalization. Students will gain knowledge about the flexibility of taxonomies of art, and they will learn basic analyses of textiles, dress, and fashion as they relate to African and African Diasporic cultures. Among the topics we study: Kente cloth and nationalism; waxprint cloth and globalization; Hip hop music and global fashion; and African fashion and haute couture.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Ancient Painting and Mosaic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
The course treats the themes, techniques, and contexts of painting and mosaic in the ancient Mediterranean. From Bronze Age palaces to early Byzantine churches, surfaces were embellished with frescoes, pebbles, glass and jewels. These might be rendered in complex geometric shapes or with mythological scenes. Portable vases displayed elegantly drawn figures. We will examine the unique effects of each medium and how they influenced and interacted with each other.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Introduction to Classical Archaeology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course has two aims: to introduce the various methods and disciplines that make up the field of classical archaeology, and to acquaint students with some of the major sites and artifacts of ancient Greece and Rome. Classes and assignments will involve work with original artifacts and case studies of such sites as Troy, Olympia, and Pompeii. Issues of conservation and cultural property will be discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Survey of African Art: The Creation of African Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
What is African art? Why are so many different kinds of cultural expressions from such a large and diverse continent categorized in the same way? In this course, we emphasize artistic creation from the perspective of artists by studying works from various African cultures. We analyze the creation of African art as a subject of inspiration and research. Throughout the semester, we discuss African diasporic arts and contemporary African art. Students examine both scholarly and popular interpretations of art objects to develop skills in critical analysis and visual literacy. The course incorporates visits to on-campus resources, such as the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Gilvin
Expected enrollment: 30

ARTH-300-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar: Critical Approaches to Art Historical Study
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Intended primarily for art history majors, this course introduces key research tools and scholarly methods in the field. Through intensive readings, discussions, presentations, and written work, students will hone their analytical and communication skills. We will learn to navigate libraries and digital resources, to read with a critical eye, and to write persuasive prose. We will become acquainted with interpretive approaches ranging from formalism to Marxism to post-colonialism. Students will also be exposed to a variety of professions that demonstrate how the art historical skills they acquire as undergraduates can translate into life after college—in the art world and beyond.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., 8 credits in department
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-300-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: Theory and Interpretation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
The seminar explores the intellectual discipline of art history and closely examines the methods used for analyzing the visual arts across cultures and periods. The course is intended for upper-level students with a strong interest in art history and visual culture. Class discussions and research papers will challenge students to explore various scholarly approaches to art as well as analyze the relationship of the arts to social and cultural theories, gender discourses, and postmodern critiques of visual culture.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

(Fall) Topics in Art History: Contemporary Art of Africa and the African Diaspora - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
African and African Diasporic artists recently have achieved unprecedented acclaim in the most august institutions and trendiest art fairs in contemporary art. This course examines the complex and global histories of both "overnight sensations" and artists still unknown in global art circuits. The course examines arts education in Africa, African nationalism, the Black Arts Movement, Pan-Africanism, anti-Apartheid struggles, and the postcolonial theoretical and curatorial interventions of the 1990s and 2000s. Writing assignments will relate to a temporary exhibition of contemporary art from Africa at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Gilvin
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTH-302-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Great Cities: Reimagining Paris - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
By 1300 Paris was the largest city in Europe, the royal capital of France, home to a brilliant university, and a thriving commercial hub. This seminar investigates the city through its surviving buildings, paintings, graphic images, maps, and literature. Using digital tools we will reconstruct key lost monuments in a process that casts participants in the role of builder, that demands careful evaluation of fragmentary evidence and that encourages creative imagination informed by art and architectural history.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, medieval studies, computer science, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Lure of the Past: Collecting Antiquity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The seminar studies the collecting and display of Greek and Roman objects from antiquity to the present. We will look at current and past controversies about plunder and cultural patrimony. Students will engage in firsthand study of coins, vases, statues, portraits, frescoes, and mosaics and conduct advanced research on their original functions and contexts. Trips to museum collections will offer opportunities to assess installations of ancient objects in modern settings.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor. Courses in art history, classics, or ancient history
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Seminar in Ancient Art: Female Portraits
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(GNDST-333b)
The seminar investigates likenesses of women from ancient Greece and Rome. Facial features, body language, hair and clothing will be studied with reference to contemporary social customs, theories of character and beauty, medical treatises, beliefs in deity and in the afterlife. Special attention will go to original objects in the Mount Holyoke Art Museum, including marble portraits and coins depicting classical queens and empresses.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculanum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present. One highlight will be a visit the Pompeii exhibition at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or permission of instructor.
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-320-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Art: Chartres Cathedral - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This seminar will explore Chartres Cathedral, its architetural history, its vast programs of sculpture, and its stained glass narratives. The church and its imagery, which took shape between ca. 1140 and 1250, offer a view back in time to medieval religious beliefs and practices, social dynamics, architectural technology, and fashion. We will also consider how differing views of the cathedral--as a popular communal creation or as the embodiment of an oppressive elite--reflect modern interpretive perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or medieval studies
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Seminar in Baroque Art: Art and Architecture of Rome - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Rome was--and remains--a most complex and magnetic city, one that has endured and become "eternal" through countless transformations to its urban and artistic fabric. The focus of this seminar is a particularly intense period of change in Rome--when artists, architects, and intellectuals flocked to the city, bringing traditions from elsewhere that mixed freely with the work of others, while responding to what was already present. More than a survey of famous works in Rome, this course aims to conjure some of the excitement of a city that considered itself the most fashionable and vibrant place in the world.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTH-340-01 - Art History - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in 19th Century Art:: After Impressionism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
What happened after the introduction of Impressionism - that is, after the radical challenge to modernist painting's way with the canvas and its image of everyday life? This seminar will explore the proposals put forward by Seurat, van Gogh, Gauguin, and Toulouse-Lautrec.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Walker Evans and Henri Cartier-Bresson - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This seminar explores the careers of two towering figures in the history of photography. Although they were contemporaries, Evans and Cartier-Bresson developed ideas about camerawork that couldn't have been more different. Among other topics, we will explore the tensions between art, documentary, and photojournalism; street photography; the vernacular; the "decisive moment," and more.

Prerequisites: One 200-level course in Art History; jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Lee

Expected enrollment: 15

(Film Studies 370(01))

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor.

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Photography in India - *Not offered this year/term

Explores the way photography seized hold of the imagination in India. Nineteenth-century documentary photographs of Indian ruins memorialized the reach of the British Empire when used for dioramas, panoramas, and magic lantern shows on the streets of London. By the twentieth century, manipulated photographs and mechanically reproduced "photos" of Indian gods complicated photography's claim to truth. Students will debate scholarly views and develop research projects to examine photography's imaginative uses in India.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course explores the various technical and conceptual aspects of drawing that are specific to portraying the human form. Students will work largely from the figure and examine their drawings within the context of other historical figurative work. Students will pay special attention to the drawings of the Cubists, De Kooning and Richard Diebenkorn. Students will mainly produce drawings, complete several readings and present the work of a contemporary artist working with the figure. While this class does not have a pre-requisite, it will demand that you work rigorously during class sessions and on out-of-class assignments.

(Spring) Word and Image - *Not offered this year/term
This course explores the interrelationship between word and image. Through studio and theoretical investigations, students learn how to interface word, image, symbol, and structure. Students experiment with intertextuality while examining visible and invisible structures of our languages, visual codes, and society. The course considers art as visual language. Primary readings are on structuralism and post-structuralism.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr and Art(Studio)116 or 120
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.
Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 14

(Fall) Papermaking with Local Plants - *Not offered this year/term
In addition to learning basic paper chemistry in this course, students collect usable sections of a variety of plants wherever they live throughout the summer and in the Pioneer Valley in the fall during the course. These plants are examined and recorded before and after drying, then cooked and processed to become paper pulp. Students conceive and construct their art projects inspired by the historical, biological, ecological, and personal aspects of plants as well as their physical qualities.
Prerequisites: Art Studio 116, 120, or equivalent and at least one 200-level studio art course.
Notes: Two studios (2 hours and 30 minutes) Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

ARTST-268-01 - Art Studio - 2014-2015
(Fall) Papermaking/Paper Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

In this course traditional and contemporary paper art and hand papermaking are explored. Both Japanese-style and Western-style papermaking methods are introduced to further develop students' art making experience. Topics include evolution of papermaking methods, fiber selection and preparation, sheer forming, paper pulp casting, and basic paper chemistry.

Prerequisites: One 100-level art studio course and at least one 200-level art studio course.

Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi

Expected enrollment: 12

ARTST-269-01 - Art Studio - 2014-2015
(Spring) Japanese Papermaking

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

In this course, students learn the traditional practice and history of Japanese hand papermaking, while exploring contemporary applications of the method. Thin, translucent, strong paper is great for drawing and printmaking, as well as sculptural construction and paper casting. This fluidity of medium naturally encourages students to become interdisciplinary in their art making. The apparent fragility, structural strength, and surprising longevity of the material provides a foundation for philosophical investigations into the nature of creativity.

Prerequisites: Art (Studio)116 or 120, AND AT LEAST one 200-level studio art course

Notes: 2 studios (2 hours and 30 minutes each); Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi

Expected enrollment: 12

ARTST-280-01 - Art Studio - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in Studio Art II: Thinking Through Paper and Ink

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This class explores the intersection of two mediums, paper and print. As the first layer in a print project, the papermaking process will be treated as an opportunity to embed content and imagery while creating a support for additional print work. Students will learn to make various types of paper that fit with the ideas they want to express in the finished print. Printmaking techniques may include screenprinting, intaglio, and relief. Projects may include editioned prints, artists books, and unique images. Students should have prior experience with either papermaking or printmaking.

Prerequisites: ARTST 116 or 120 AND ARTST 256, 267, or 279

Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

Instructors: T. Ginsberg

(Fall) First Year Sanskrit I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
Introduction to Sanskrit, the classical language of India. Related to other Indo-European languages (including English) and the ancestor of most of the sixteen major Indian languages (e.g., Hindi), Sanskrit is the medium of the literary classics, and of the texts of the Hindu, Buddhist, and Jain religions. This first-semester course covers Sanskrit grammar. The emphasis is on sentence construction, recognition and production of grammatical forms, and translation. Attention is also given to script, chanting, and pronunciation. The goal is proficiency in reading sentences and sustained passages in Sanskrit, in preparation for reading authentic texts in the second semester.

ASIAN-150-01: First-Year Seminar: Representative Works of Modern Chinese Literature

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)

The twentieth century started with the downfall of the Chinese monarchy, numerous humiliations at the hands of Western countries, and the establishment of the Republic of China in 1911. In the spirit of reform and renaissance, a group of young writers, educated in both China and the West, spearheaded a new direction in Chinese literature. This group of writers abandoned the classical Chinese language, was keenly interested in social development and betterment, attacked Confucian tradition, and adopted Western ideals. The class will read representative works of these writers and try to understand their sociopolitical impact, while appreciating the artistic qualities of these writings.

Prerequisites: fy or so.

Instructors: Y. Wang

ASIAN-211-01: Topics in Asian Studies: Modern Indian and South Asian Writers

'Taught in English'

Writing in South Asian languages (e.g., Hindi, Tamil) and English, modern Indian and South Asian writers, both women and men, have responded to colonialism, nationalism and the partition of India, and spoken for social and gender justice. They have imagined ways of being a person and belonging in and emerging from South Asia, in modernity, in families, nations and the world. We will examine these themes and study style and form in the novels, short stories and essays of major writers, including Rabindranath Tagore, R. K. Narayan, Anita Desai, Mahadevi Varma, Mahasweta Devi, Arundhati Roy, Daniyal Mueenuddin, Vikram Chandra and Jhumpa Lahiri. All readings in English.

(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Chinese Thought: The Classical Period - *Not offered this year/term
(Philosophy-212)
An introduction to Chinese thought in the Classical period (~500-221 BCE), a time of great social and political furor. We will study (in translation) the works of Kongzi (Confucius), Mozi, Zhaungzi, Mengzi (Mencius), Han Feizi, and others, with an eye to the contemporary relevance of ancient Chinese thought. We will ask such questions as: What kind of life should one live? What is the source of political authority? What is human nature? We will work to understand each philosopher's answers to these questions, and develop our own views in response. We will take care to put these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.

(Spring) Androgyny and Gender Negotiation in Contemporary Chinese Women’s Theater
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 204-03, Theatre Arts 234-01)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Pink Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

(Spring) Women Writing in India - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 204)
Critical study of women's writing in India, in genres ranging from classical and medieval poems, tales, and songs (e.g., Tiruppavai) to novels, plays, and personal narratives by modern women writers (e.g., Rokeya Hossain's Sultana's Dream, Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things), in translation from Indian languages and in the original English. We will focus on women's perspectives and voices, women's agency, and resistance to dominant discourses. Attention is paid to historical contexts, the socioreligious constructions of women and gender, and the role of ideologies such as colonialism and nationalism in the production and reception of women's writing.

(Spring) Stories and Storytelling in India and the World - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
India is a treasure-house of tales, and the home of vibrant traditions of oral and written storytelling in classical Sanskrit and in modern languages. Indian tales have travelled around the world and have parallels and versions in The Arabian Nights, Decameron, and Canterbury Tales. Indian epics and myths are related to those of the Greeks. We will study the epic Ramayana, myths of Hindu gods, animal fables (Panchatantra), women's stories, and folktales in various forms, puppet plays, song, and dramatic performance. We will examine who tells stories, why and when, and compare Indian stories with tales from elsewhere, e.g., Aesop, Grimm, Homer.
Instructors: I. Peterson
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) India's Epics: Ramayana and Mahabharata
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English)
The ancient Indian epic poems Ramayana and Mahabharata, counterparts of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, are popular stories and Hindu sacred texts, rendered in oral, written, and dramatic forms in the languages of India and Southeast Asia. We will follow the Mahabharata war and the adventures of Rama, Sita, and the monkey Hanuman (Ramayana), exploring the interpretations of the epics in text, art, and performance. Topics of study include Valmiki's Sanskrit Ramayana (6th century BCE), women's folksongs and short stories about Sita, the Ramila drama, Kathakali dance, the Hindi television serial, Peter Brook's film Mahabharata, and the Ramayana in modern Indian politics. All readings in English

(Fall) Twentieth-Century Korea through Fiction and Film

(Taught in English; Film Studies 220f)

How did the events of the twentieth century set the stage for Korea in the twenty-first century? How did the country become divided into North and South, and how have their paths diverged in the decades since? In this course, students will develop a nuanced perspective of the key political, social, and cultural developments in twentieth-century Korean history through close readings of short stories, novellas, and films, including North Korean productions and rare propaganda films produced during the colonial and Korean War eras.

Notes: All readings are in English, and all films include English subtitles. No knowledge of the Korean language is required.

Instructors: N. Floyd

Expected enrollment: 19

(Spring) Modern Japanese and Korean Literature in Comparative Perspective

(Taught in English)

This course explores the modern literature of Japan and Korea in a cultural and historical context, beginning with the genesis of their first modern novels, passing through left-wing literature and modernist experimentation of the 1920s and 1930s, colonialism, WWII and Korean War accounts, student democracy activism in the 1960s, and ending with the rise of women writers in the 1970s and 1980s. While parallels between the two national literatures are assumed at the outset, we will also discuss important differences and the cultural and historical factors that may account for them.

Notes: All readings and class discussions are in English; no knowledge of Japanese or Korean is required.

Instructors: N. Floyd

(Spring) Introduction to Astronomy: Survey of the Universe with Coffee Table Astrophysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
In addition to attending the Astronomy 100 lectures, students will take part in a 4th hour in which we will discuss current frontiers in modern astronomy and astrophysics. Although this 4th hour is somewhat tailored to the interests of the enrolled students, anticipated topics include Einstein's Theories of Relativity, Death of Massive Stars, Black Holes and Warped Spacetime, and the Expanding Universe. Using readings and discussion we will examine the nature of these mind-boggling discoveries and their treatment in the popular media.

(Fall) Exploration of Mars
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Exploration of Mars is an ongoing effort that has greatly expanded our knowledge of the Red Planet and changed our vision of its surface. We will examine the history of the investigation and exploration of Mars. We will also plan future observations from orbiting spacecraft, engage with scientists involved in current missions, and imagine the best ways to explore Mars in upcoming decades. Developing physical intuition and analytical skills in astronomy, geology, physics and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as speaking and writing ability.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A calculus-based introduction to the properties, structure, formation, and evolution of stars and galaxies. The laws of gravity, thermal physics, and atomic physics provide a basis for understanding observed properties of stars, interstellar gas, and dust. We apply these concepts to develop an understanding of stellar atmospheres, interiors, and evolution, the interstellar medium, and the Milky Way and other galaxies.
Prerequisites: Physics 110 and Math 202; Physics 190/201 and Math 203 strongly suggested
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 19

ASTR-330-02 - Astronomy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Moon - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will survey the past, present, and future of lunar exploration and science. We will focus on the evolution of the Moon as a paradigm for terrestrial planets, with specific units on interiors, heat flow, thermal evolution, magnetism, volcanism, volatiles, impacts, crustal composition and mineralogy, regoliths, and spectroscopy of its surface. This is a discussion-based, interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended
Instructors: C. Fassett
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department

Biochemistry

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.
Notes: Students conducting an independent lab research project for credit in a department, program, or lab covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research; credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training.

BIOCH-311-01 - Biochemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Sciences 311, Chemistry 311)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), Chemistry 302
Instructors: T. Miles
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Sciences 314, Chemistry 314)
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302 (can be taken concurrently)
Instructors: T. Miles
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected.
Prerequisites: Biochemistry 311 or Biochemistry 314, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Hsu

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.
Notes: See safety training restrictions in the course description for Biochemistry 295

BIOCH-399-01 - Biochemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings to discuss articles and material from the current biochemical literature. Students will attend lectures, write papers, and give presentations in culmination of their biochemistry experience. Discussions relevant to graduate school applications and careers in biochemical fields will also be held.
Prerequisites: Juniors and senior biochemistry majors only.
Notes: Highly recommended for junior biochemistry majors who will be required to complete one semester of this course for graduation.
Instructors: M. Gomez
Expected enrollment: 24

Biological Sciences

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Nature Harmoniously Confused
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Most organisms are notably unlike ourselves—a tapestry of bacteria, protozoans, algae, and, off by themselves, the plants, fungi, and animals. We will survey the whole range of organisms, especially those in the ponds and forests of our campus. Labs will start in the field, offering many opportunities for wet or muddy work. The class is addressed to students intrigued by natural history; it might be useful for students interested in further study of the environment.
Prerequisites: FY
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Rachootin | 02 LAB S Rachootin |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it affects our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.
Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for first-year students
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-01 or L-02, is also required.
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard | 02 LAB C Woodard |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Diversity of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
We will survey the great diversity of life on earth from the archaeabacteria that live in hot sulfur springs to giant sequoia trees to singing birds. Labs will explore biological diversity via collecting trips around campus as well as laboratory experiments and will introduce students to data collection, manipulation, and analysis.
Prerequisites: 12 first year seats and 6 sophomore seats
BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Organismal Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course encompasses a broad range of concepts central to our understanding of how organisms function and evolve. We will investigate important biological processes, such as photosynthesis and metabolism, and systems, such as the cardiovascular and immune systems. We will also take a holistic view of biology and use our newly acquired knowledge to explore such diverse topics as: the evolution of infectious diseases, the consequences of development and design on the evolution of organisms, and how the physiology and behavior of animals might affect their responses to global climate change.
Notes: FY, Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-03 or L-04, is also required.
Instructors: R. Brodie
Section Instructors: 03 LAB R Brodie | 04 LAB R Brodie |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-145-03 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Biology: A Green World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.
Prerequisites: FY
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 06 LAB A Frary | 07 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-145-04 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Comparative Vertebrate Physiology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will explore the structure and function of major physiological systems in vertebrate animals. Of particular interest will be identifying the solutions that different animals have evolved to deal with similar problems (e.g., how do fish gills and bird lungs function in gas exchange?).
Prerequisites: 12 FY seats and 6 sophomore seats
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 08 LAB G Gillis | 09 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Can't Live with 'Em, Can't Live without 'Em: An Introduction to the Ecology and Evolutionary Biology of Symbiotic Interactions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
From mutualism to parasitism, symbiosis is a universal feature of life. In this course we will study the mechanisms of symbiotic interactions and consider their significance for the ecology and evolution of organisms. We will explore some of the most spectacular and important examples of contemporary symbioses, from coral reefs to infectious diseases, and learn how symbiosis is responsible for major developments in the history of life, such as the origin of the eukaryotic cell and the evolution of sex. Along the way we will cover fundamental concepts in ecology, evolution, population genetics, and epidemiology.
Prerequisites: FY
Instructors: J. Andras
Section Instructors: 10 LAB J Andras | 11 LAB J Andras |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160L). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.
Instructors: R. Drewell, K. Broaders
Expected enrollment: 48

BIOL-200-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introductory Biology II: How Organisms Develop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchin), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145, 146, or 160, or Neuroscience & Behavior 100
Instructors: R. Fink
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department |

BIOL-203-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Teaching Children Science: College Students in the Elementary Classroom
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Same as Educational Studies 203)
This course is designed for science students with interests in teaching and learning with children. It will focus on research, theory and practice pertinent to science education, linking scientific information gained in college classes to children's learning of scientific phenomena. Weekly class meetings (from 1-3 hours) will include laboratory and off-site field investigations. Each student will also become a "Science Buddy" at a local elementary school, assisting children with hands-on science experiences for approximately 1 hour each week.
Prerequisites: One year of college science (any discipline), at least one course with laboratory. By permission of instructor only: please email rfink or sfrenett if interested in being considered
Instructors: R. Fink, S. Frenette
Expected enrollment: 8

BIOL-206-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Local Flora
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course offers plant identification and natural history, emphasizing native and introduced trees and wildflowers. A semester-long project will assess the campus tree community: its composition, condition, and environmental benefits. On- and off-campus field trips.
Instructors: Grogan
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, Chemistry 101 must also be taken prior to or as a co-requisite to this course
Instructors: J. Knight, C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Knight | 02 LAB J Knight | 03 LAB J Knight | 04 LAB J Knight | 05 LAB J Knight |

BIOL-220-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The aim of this course is to understand the fundamental unit of life—the cell—at the molecular level. We will consider the assembly and structure of cellular membranes, proteins, organelles, and the cytoskeleton, as well as their roles in cellular processes including the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, protein sorting, motility, signal transduction, and cell-cell communication. Emphasis will be placed upon the diversity of cellular form and function and the cell biological basis for disease. The laboratory portion of this course will illustrate and analyze these phenomena through selected biochemical, genetic, and microscopy-based approaches.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 or 210, plus Chemistry 201 (can be taken concurrently).
Instructors: A. Camp
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | 05 LAB The department | 06 LAB The department | 07 LAB The department |
Expected enrollment: 64
BIOL-223-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145 or 160 plus at least one semester of Calculus or Statistics (which may have been taken in high school, but then instructor permission will be required for registration)
Notes: Biology 223 and/or Biology 226 must be taken for the Biology major.
Instructors: M. Hoopes, L. Grosslein
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes | 03 LAB M Hoopes | 04 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 45

BIOL-226-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The mechanisms of evolutionary change within populations and between species; patterns of change in space, time and form; and the origin of adaptations. These approaches make sense of the diversity of life. Then we turn to the evolution of developmental pathways, as a way of approaching the unity of life.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Rachootin | 02 LAB S Rachootin | 03 LAB S Rachootin |
Expected enrollment: 45

BIOL-234-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Biostatistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The statistics sections of biology articles have become so technical and jargon-filled that many biologists feel intimidated into skipping them or blindly accepting the stated results. But how can we ask relevant questions or push the boundaries of knowledge if we skip these sections? Using lectures, data collection, and hands-on analysis in R, this course will connect statistics to biology to help students develop a gut instinct for experimental design and analysis. We will explore sampling bias and data visualization and review methods and assumptions for the most common approaches with examples from current biological literature and our own data.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Biology or ES 200
Instructors: M. Hoopes, S. Cox
Expected enrollment: 22

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of instructor
Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College’s chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.
Instructors: The department

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of instructor
Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.

BIOL-301-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Regenerative Medicine: Biology and Bioethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
What is regenerative medicine? What is the science that drives new medical therapies using stem cells? We will study the biology of adult, embryonic, and induced pluripotent stem cells, as well as the legal, ethical, and moral implications of using these cells in medical therapies. Each member of the class will participate in a staged debate on these issues for an introductory biology class. Pending funding, we may travel to Washington, D.C. to attend a meeting of the Commission on Bioethics.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor only, with Biological Sciences 220 or equivalent expected

Instructors: R. Fink

Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Molecular Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course examines the dynamics of evolutionary change at the molecular level, the effects of various molecular mechanisms on the structure and function of genes and genomes, and the methodology involved in dealing with molecular data from an evolutionary perspective. Lab work will be devoted to learning ways to analyze DNA sequence data and to create and evaluate trees that use molecular data.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 226
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering. The fourth hour will follow a "journal club" format with student presentations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, and either 220 or 311
Instructors: J. Knight
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interaction in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formation. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220, or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Fink
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Fink | 02 LAB R Fink |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive; History 361s(01))
This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin's theory of evolution - his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226 or History 248
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove - and disprove - biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
BIOL-311-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biochemistry 311, Chemistry 311)
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302
Instructors: T. Miles
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 02 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 03 LAB L Lentz-Marino |
Expected enrollment: 40
Notes: Please sign up for this course as Biochemistry 311
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302 (can be taken concurrently)
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.
Notes: Please sign up for this course as Biochemistry 314

Expected enrollment: 16
BIOL-316-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Scanning Electron Microscopy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 316f)
Includes theory and operation of the scanning electron microscope and preparation of biological and geological materials for observation. The versatile use of the microscope will be emphasized and will include low magnification, high resolution, and back scattered (reflected) electron modes of operation as well as operation at different pressures. Energy dispersive X-ray microanalysis will be introduced.
Prerequisites: 4 credits of biological sciences or geology course at the 200 level.
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 10
BIOL-317-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Immunology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, cancer, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the use of clinical case studies to reinforce these ideas, although experimental models will also be discussed. In the final section of the course, students will research and deliver an oral presentation on an immunology topic of interest.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 plus either Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for Biology 319 but this course does not include a lab.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-318-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Aquatic Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this course, we will focus on marine coastal and open ocean habitats as well as freshwater systems, including lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks, and wetlands. For oceans, we will explore such topics as currents, the interaction of climate and oceans, nutrient cycling and ecosystems. Our study of freshwater systems will focus on cycles, water chemistry and flora and fauna of local freshwater habitats.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Brodie | 02 LAB R Brodie |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Immunology with Laboratory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, cancer, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with use of clinical case studies to reinforce these ideas, although experimental models will also be discussed. The laboratory portion will include experience with basic immunology techniques, followed by an extensive six-week independent project that culminates in a final research paper.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 plus either Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as Biology 317, but this course includes a laboratory.
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Stranford | 02 LAB S Stranford |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to Transmission Electron Microscopy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Basic principles of transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and potential uses in biological studies. Each student selects a project and learns the fundamentals of specimen preparation, operation of the TEM, and image acquisition. Preparation, assessment and interpretation of the resulting electron micrographs culminate in an individual portfolio. Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including Biological Sciences 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 8

(Fall) Conference Course: Art, Music, and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Music 321)
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of visual and auditory stimuli, ask how this processing may affect the way we do art and music, and explore where these phenomena may occur in the brain. As we engage in discussion and hands-on activities, we will discover the commonalities between the arts and the sciences including practice, experimentation, exploration, innovation, and creativity.
Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music
Notes: students studying art and music are encouraged to enroll
Instructors: S. Barry, L. Laderach
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their abilities to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Conference Course: Extreme Life - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees C. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 plus 1 additional Biological Sciences course above 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-ED - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Conference Course: Evolutionary Developmental Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
It may be surprising, but the genetic ingredients that assemble a human are strikingly similar to those that assemble a fly. So why do humans and flies look so different as adults? The answer lies in where and when those genetic ingredients are active during embryonic development. The intricacies of this early stage of life are now being revealed thanks to the new field of Evolutionary Developmental Biology ("Evo-Devo"). This course will explore how changes in molecular, genetic and developmental programs have shaped the evolution of morphological diversity. Evo-Devo is a thriving new sub-discipline of biology with its own questions, approaches and methods.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220 or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Drewell
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Conference Course: Topics in Invasion Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Invasive species have become a common focus for land managers and gardeners around the world, but is there anything fundamentally new, different, or threatening about these organisms? These new arrivals potentially increase local biodiversity and offer excellent examples of evolution and ecological interactions, but they also incite scientists to uncharacteristic value judgments. We will discuss the science and politics behind invasive species and explore the secrets of their success and the realities of their impacts. This course will include a whole class project or group research projects based on current issues in the literature or local invasive species.
Prerequisites: 8 credits above Biological Sciences 200 with Biological Sciences 223 or 226 or Environmental Studies 200
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Conference Course: Statistical Topics in Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The statistics sections of biology articles have become so technical and jargon-filled that many biologists feel intimidated into skipping them or blindly accepting the stated results. This course will connect statistics to biology and will help develop a gut instinct for experimental design and analysis with an emphasis on understanding rather than formulas. We will review methods and assumptions for the most common approaches with examples from current biological literature and discuss how we can apply these tools to increase our understanding of our own research and of the world around us.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Biological Sciences above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Expected enrollment: 16
BIOL-321-N - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Conference Course: Neurotechnology: Thinking on the cutting edge of science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Neuroscience and Behavior 321f(01))
Recently, the development of novel technologies for probing neurobiological questions has proceeded at a dizzying pace. This course focuses on three broad fields in neurotechnology: optical methods for examining neural activity and structures, innovations in electrophysiology, and mind-machine interfaces. Specific topics may include: optogenetics, 2-photon microscopy, "brainbow" imaging, methods for single ion channel recording, and neuroprosthetics. Presentation, discussion, and critique of research articles will form the core of the course. As a culminating experience, students will write mock grant proposals for experimentation based on techniques discussed in class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Instructors: G. Tanner
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-321-P - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Conference Course: Molecular Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Physics 222)
Over the past quarter century, molecular genetic methods have become increasingly important in ecological research. In this course, we will examine contemporary molecular genetic tools and learn how they can be used to answer ecological questions. Topics will include: reconstruction of ancestral relationships; measuring the size, diversity, and spatial structure of populations; characterization of migration and dispersal patterns; and identification of sensitive or threatened species and populations. We will explore these themes through foundational texts and current scientific literature, and we will analyze molecular genetic datasets in class to gain familiarity with available techniques.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223 or 226.
Instructors: J. Andras
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-322-P - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Physics 222)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-325-P - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Plant Diversity and Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 223 or 226, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
BIOL-326-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Ocean Blues: State of the World’s Oceans
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar explores the science behind pressing issues facing our oceans, such as coastal eutrophication, ocean acidification and overfishing. Professors from the Five College Coastal and Marine Sciences (FCCMS) certificate program, representing different science disciplines, will engage with students in this discussion-based course. Students will gain a greater understanding of the scientific approaches being used to investigate ocean ecosystem health. They will also learn to analyze scientific literature and engage constructively in scholarly discussions. Ocean Blues can be applied to any of the course categories required for the FCCMS certificate.
Prerequisites: Any 200 level science, preference will be given to juniors and seniors who are participating in the Coastal and Marine Sciences certificate program
Notes: Ocean Blues can be applied to any of the course categories required for the certificate.
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-327-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Microbiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223
Notes: In this instance, this course does not satisfy the lab requirement.
Instructors: A. Camp
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-328-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Human Physiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A consideration of the physiological processes involved in the control of human body functions. We will study the mechanisms for regulating individual organ systems and how these mechanisms respond to changing needs of the individual. Our examination of the physiological controls will include an analysis of the underlying cellular and molecular processes that drive the mechanisms and integrate the activities of the different systems.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Bacon | 02 LAB S Bacon |
Expected enrollment: 28

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 or Environmental Studies 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Macroevolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, and the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015
(Fall) Neurobiology
We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics

Notes: preference given to seniors

Instructors: G. Tanner

Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Tanner | 02 LAB G Tanner |

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-334-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015

Spring Chemical Communication in Vertebrates - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking-intensive)

How is information about physiological states coded in the chemical signals passed between animals, and between organ systems in the body? In this course we'll read and discuss the primary literature in biology to examine the nature of chemical communication in vertebrate animals, including ourselves. We will study hormones and their effects in development and in adulthood. We will also reflect upon the social and cultural contexts in which these signals operate.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220, 223 or 226

Instructors: S. Bacon

Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-335-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015

Fall Mammalian Anatomy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

This course will examine the fundamental structural organization of the mammalian body. The lecture portion of the class will focus largely on humans, and students will gain practical insight into other mammalian systems in the laboratory.

Notes: course open to 12 juniors and 12 seniors

Instructors: G. Gillis

Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-336-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015

Fall Bacterial Cell Biology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

Long considered to be simple "bags of enzymes," bacteria are now appreciated to be highly ordered and dynamic cells. Bacterial cells organize their genetic material, assemble cytoskeletons, localize proteins, construct organelle-like compartments, differentiate, and communicate with one another to coordinate multicellular behaviors. This course will explore the exciting new field of bacterial cell biology via the primary scientific literature. Substantial student participation in the form of group work and discussions will be expected.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220

Instructors: A. Camp

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015

Fall Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210

Instructors: C. Woodard

Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2014-2015

Chemistry

(Fall) General Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.
Prerequisites: Department placement exam required for entry

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Forensic Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will offer an introduction to the science in forensic investigations. We will explore several methods and instruments often used in CSI programs, such as mass spectrometry, infrared spectroscopy and DNA analysis, which are very valuable in evaluating crime scene evidence. We will explore the validity of scientific findings and the political implications of the use and availability of the data. Students will have a chance to be expert witnesses and be in the lab evaluating evidence. Analytical thinking and processing information in chemistry, biology, and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as oral and written communication skills. Short labs are planned.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: T. Breton
Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-110-03 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) First-year Seminar: Using Spectroscopy to Analyze Paintings - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Seeing with multiple wavelengths of light reveals different layers in paintings. This course will study how spectroscopy can reveal details of an artist's painting style. First, the electromagnetic radiation and how it interacts with matter will be introduced. Next, the structure of a painting will be discussed along with case studies of famous or infamous paintings. Finally, students will apply their knowledge to study their own paintings through visible and infrared light.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: M. Gomez
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Solar Energy: Technology, Policy, and Impact
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar
The way humans use energy has been the driving force behind major social and environmental changes in the 20th and 21st centuries. An understanding of modern energy sources and their impact on society is critical to informed decision-making by citizens and policymakers. This course will introduce students to a broad range of topics related to energy use by focusing on examples related to solar energy. Students will become familiar with the technical concepts behind photovoltaics and solar fuels. We will also explore the economic aspects of energy usage and the policies that are commonly used to encourage renewable energy generation.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: A. Goldstein
Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-160-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biology160)
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.
Prerequisites: Department placement exam required for entry
Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds. Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 or 160 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Snyder

(Fall) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry, nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions, the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers, and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis, practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography, molecular modeling, and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.

CHEM-208-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introduction to Materials - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course provides an introduction to different types of materials, including metals, ceramics, polymers and composites, emphasizing structure and property relationships. The principles behind the design and implementation of materials as well as advances in materials in the areas of nano-, bio- and electronic technology will be presented. Class time is split among lecture, discussion and laboratory.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Physics 110 and Mathematics 101; during the first week of registration, only first years, sophomores and juniors will be eligible. Seniors can check for any available spaces thereafter.

Instructors: W. Chen

Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-212-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Chemistry of Biomolecules
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An examination of the major ideas of biochemistry from the point of view of the chemical sciences rather than the life sciences. Structures of important biomolecules. The role of energetics and reaction dynamics in biochemical processes. Major metabolic pathways are considered, including those of proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, and nucleic acids.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: This course is not intended for Biochemistry majors, who must complete Biochemistry 311f and 314s.
Instructors: K. McMenimen

Expected enrollment: 9

CHEM-224-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Analytical Chemistry of Art Analysis Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course introduces concepts of analytical chemistry under the theme of "Chemistry in Art". The topics of quantitative chemical analysis and instrumental analysis are discussed through hands-on observation based experiments in collaboration with the Mount Holyoke College art museum. Experimental techniques -- such as gas chromatography, mass spectrometry, X-ray fluorescence, UV visible spectroscopy, infrared spectroscopy, and scanning electron microscopy -- are incorporated for the analysis of paintings and art objects.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Chemistry 201 or 202 as a prerequisite or co-requisite.

Notes: This is offered half semester only.

Instructors: H. Jayathilake

Expected enrollment: 8

(Fall) Poisons: Death by Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will look at the effect of poisons at the molecular, cellular, and physiological levels from the chemistry and biochemistry perspective. We will discuss: the classification of poisons and the common structural elements of the molecules within each class; the interaction of toxic molecules with proteins and nucleic acids present in the cell; the physiologic effect of toxins on different systems of the body; dosage effects and pharmacokinetics; the mechanisms by which antidotes work; and the analytical techniques that toxicologists use to determine which poisons are present in the body. The different classes of proteins will be discussed in the context of historical case studies.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201 with a grade of C or better
Instructors: A. van Giessen
Expected enrollment: 19

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training
Instructors: The department

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Notes: Lab sections 05, 06, and 07 require permission of instructor. Lab runs first half of semester only.
Instructors: D. Hamilton

CHEM-304-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor and Chemistry 302 as prerequisite or co-requisite
Notes: second half of semester
CHEM-304-02 - Chemistry - 2014-2015

(Spring) Chemical Thermodynamics without a Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of "driving forces" for the physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.
Prerequisites: Math 202, Physics 110, Chemistry 202, with a grade of C or better.
Instructors: M. Gomez
Expected enrollment: 5

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Chemical Thermodynamics with Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and Physics 110 and Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Instructors: M. Gomez
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake | 02 LAB H Jayathilake
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement (Biochemistry 311, Biological Sciences 311)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts of the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principle of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), and Chemistry 302
Instructors: T. Miles
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
(Spring) Introduction to Polymer Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered once every three years
Instructors: W. Chen
Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-325-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, Chemistry 202 and Electromagnetism (Physics 201), all with grade of C or better; Mathematics 203 is recommended
Instructors: H. Jayathilake
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake | 02 LAB H Jayathilake |
Expected enrollment: 24

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and either: Chemistry 325 in the past or taken concurrently with this course.
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Physical Organic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. An examination of the mechanistic principles underlying free radical, ionic, pericyclic, and photochemical reactions, and the experimental and theoretical support for mechanistic postulates. Topics will include qualitative molecular orbital concepts, reaction kinetics, thermodynamics, and an introduction to computational methods.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Instructors: G. Snyder
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-339-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) The Organic Chemistry of Biological Pathways - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course explores the underlying organic chemistry of biological pathways and thereby seeks to build a framework for understanding biological transformations from the perspective of mechanistic organic chemistry. Beginning with common biological mechanisms, and drawing parallels with their sophomore organic chemistry counterparts, a broad overview will be constructed of the pathways by which the key classes of biological molecules—lipids, carbohydrates, amino acids, nucleotides—are manufactured, modified, and consumed. Several specific biosyntheses will also be dissected from a mechanistic perspective. These case studies will include antibiotics, an alkaloid, and heme.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302. Enrollment by permission of instructor.
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 15
CHEM-343-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Chemistry of DNA - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This advanced-level seminar will focus on the molecular properties of DNA. Using as sources a graduate-level text and readings from the primary literature, the class will discuss a variety of current topics in the research community, including the binding of proteins and small molecules to DNA, the covalent modification of DNA by mutagenic agents, and the dynamic nature of DNA across timescales. Critical analysis of experimental design and conclusions from data will be encouraged. Students will be evaluated based on participation in discussions, oral presentations, and an original research proposal.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and one additional 300-level chemistry course
Expected enrollment: 12

CHEM-344-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Spring) Physical Chemistry of Biochemical Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides an overview of the fundamental principles of physical chemistry with an emphasis on their application to the study of biological molecules and processes. Topics will include quantum mechanics, statistical mechanics and thermodynamics. Discussion of applications will relate commonly used experimental techniques -- such as spectroscopy and calorimetry -- to the fundamental principles on which they are based. In addition, students will gain experience and confidence in the use of mathematical models to describe biochemical systems.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202, Math 202 and Physics 110 with a grade of C or better.
Instructors: A. van Giessen
Expected enrollment: 5

CHEM-346-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015

CHEM-399-01 - Chemistry - 2014-2015
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.
Prerequisites: Chemistry majors only. Two semesters required, spring (as a junior) fall (as a senior)
Notes: Credit/No Credit grading only
Instructors: M. Gomez
Expected enrollment: 20

Classics

CLASS-205-01 - Classics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Cleopatra: "The Not Humble Woman"
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
In this course Cleopatra will be considered both as a political figure of importance in her own right and also as an enemy queen, representing a presumptuous challenge to the political hegemony and cultural values of the Romans. She may serve, therefore, as a lens through which one may view social and political tensions within Roman society over the nature of authority and empire. Readings include Vergil, Horace, Propertius, Lucan, Caesar, Sallust, Plutarch and the plays of Shakespeare and Shaw, where she is ambivalently portrayed as a woman who desires power or, contrariwise, as a romantic idealist who scorns temporal powers in fulfillment of private desires.
Instructors: B. Arnold
Expected enrollment: 30

CLASS-211-01 - Classics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Ancient Greek and Roman Myth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
We will accompany Odysseus on his return from Troy, retrieve the Golden Fleece with Jason, and race with Ovid through his witty--and often troubling--retelling of Greek myths from a Roman perspective. This course examines how Greek and Roman authors and artists from very different periods used myth to explore questions about life, art, and politics. Works include: Homer, Odyssey; Apollonius of Rhodes, Argonautica; Ovid, Metamorphoses and Heroides; Greek tragedy, and ancient images representing myths.
Prerequisites: most spaces will be reserved for first-years and sophomores
Notes: Optional screenings of films related to ancient myth.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 45

CLASS-212-01 - Classics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Greek Tragedy, American Drama, and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
This course examines the critical influence of the three most important Athenian dramatists, Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, on the works of modern dramatists and filmmakers, including Eugene O'Neill, Tennessee Williams, Arthur Miller, Roman Polanski, Woody Allen, Ridley Scott, Jules Dassin, Theodoros Angelopolous, and others. Attention is given to the different concepts of tragedy underlying the genre, such as the tragedy of self-knowledge and illusion, the tragedy of desire, the tragedy of sin and redemption, and tragedy as protest against social injustice.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus 1 screening
Instructors: B. Arnold
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Athenian Democracy and Its Foes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes, Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Knowing God
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course examines the following key texts from the ancient world that treat significantly the problem of knowing God and the mystery enveloping such knowledge: Sophocles' Oedipus the King, Plato's Phaedo, Cicero's Concerning the Nature of the Gods, Job, Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and others. Attention is also given to the different ways of thinking about the divine and human natures in these works, which are broadly reflective of Graeco-Roman and Judaeo-Christian value systems.
Instructors: B. Arnold

(Spring) Politics and Greek Tragedy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 329)
Students in this course will explore ancient Greek tragedy as a way of thinking through such central problems of political life as freedom, identity, responsibility, and justice. The course will place the ancient texts in their particular historical context, while also attending to the material as a springboard for confronting contemporary political questions. The course will also address the broader implications of turning to ancient material and to literature as sources for political theorizing.
Prerequisites: Prereq. 8 credits in Politics or Classics (or permission of the instructor)
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Socrates Against the Sophists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Philosophy 350)
In a number of Plato's dialogues we find the character Socrates debating various sophists--itinerant teachers-for-hire whose views were often diametrically opposed to Socrates' own. This seminar is structured around a close, careful reading of three such dialogues: the Euthydemus, the Protagoras, and the Gorgias. These dialogues will offer a general introduction to Socratic philosophy, but we will also focus on a few issues in much greater detail. Chief among those special topics will be questions about the nature and value of moral knowledge, the possibility of moral education, and the efficacy of the Socratic method of inquiry.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Philosophy or Classics (or in combination of Philosophy and Classics) or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Hagen
Expected enrollment: 19

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Encountering the Sacred: The Bible and Reading - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Martin Buber famously wrote that we must read the Bible "as though it were something entirely unfamiliar, as though it had not been set before us ready-made." Whether you come to the Bible from within a faith tradition or not, this course will ask you to do just that. We'll take a text that for more than 2,000 years has stood at the heart of the Western tradition and ask how we can approach that text today, from the place where you stand. What does it mean to read a sacred text? How has it been read by people situated both within and at the margins of Western culture? What are the possibilities for your reading?
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Scotto
Expected enrollment: 15

COLL-101-02 - College Courses - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Literature and Politics: The Power of Words - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Literature and politics: what are the connections? How do writers combine their literary and political goals? How does their work impact politics?
What literary genres do they employ -- utopianism, realism, magic realism, satire, modernism, or postmodernism? How do governments react to literary challenges? We will look closely at the texts themselves, examine the interaction between aesthetics and politics, but also focus on the social and political context. Why was the book written, and in what way did the book impact the politics and ideas of its time? Authors will include Shakespeare, Rousseau, Swift, Dickens, Orwell, Sarte, Andrei Platonov, Solzhenitsyn, Rushdie, and Chinua Achebe.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 15

COLL-101-03 - College Courses - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Stressed Out - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
We've all been there. Each of us carries a deep physical understanding of what its like to be under stress. But what are the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of this experience? How and why do our bodies respond to stress in such a characteristic way? And what is the impact of this biological response on health and disease? Through reading and discussion, we'll explore the biology of stress, the brain's ability to link the outer and inner worlds, the organ systems whose activity is altered by the stress response, and emerging research on the impact of long-term stress on memory, immune function, cardiovascular health, and cancer risk.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Bacon
Expected enrollment: 16
(Fall) Tying It All Together: Curriculum to Career
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Learn to speak with confidence and clarity about your summer internship or research project. What have you learned? How is it useful? What are your next steps? Students will reflect on their experience and collaborate with others to generate useful knowledge. Required for the Nexus but open to all students. For more information, email nexus-wm@mtholyoke.edu.
Notes: Class meeting dates: 9/15, 9/22, 9/29, 10/6, and 10/20. All students will present at LEAP Symposium on October 17, 2014.
Instructors: H. Hanson, E. Townsley

COLL-225-02 - College Courses - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in Leadership: Women, Business, and Leadership Development - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
What does leadership mean and what does it look like? What does it mean to become a leader in a business context? And what does this mean for women? In this half-semester course, we will examine research literature and case examples from various business contexts including small businesses, nonprofits, and larger corporations. Topics will include: leadership capacities, models of leading and managing, effective mentoring and networking, women’s career development, and negotiation and influence.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Notes: Half-semester course, October 20 - December 8. No letter-grading (credit/no-credit only). Cannot be repeated if taken in Fall 2012.
Instructors: B. Packard, J. Lansberry

COLL-250-01 - College Courses - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: War: What Is It Good For?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
A multidisciplinary examination of the various ways humans have understood, represented, experienced, and justified war over time and across cultures. The course considers the representation of war through art, literature, and music. It analyzes possible causes of war, including innate human drives, gender differences, socialization, and economic and resource competition. In addition, it examines justifications for war from a range of ethical perspectives. Faculty from various disciplines will be asked to guest lecture.
Instructors: S. Hashmi

Complex Organizations
COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2014-2015
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+, -, *, /) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Instructors: S. Schmeiser
Expected enrollment: 40

COMOR-212-01 - Complex Organizations - 2014-2015
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(PSY 212f)
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations - especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a leader; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Butterfield

COMOR-299-01 - Complex Organizations - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topic: Leadership in the Liberal Arts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
What makes a great leader? Can we identify who should be a leader? Are leaders born or made? How does an education in the liberal arts prepare someone to become a leader? Through reading a mix of the Great Books of Western Civilization (e.g., Homer, Plato, Shakespeare) and contemporary classics in leadership studies, we will explore these and many other related questions.
Instructors: J. Hartley
Expected enrollment: 19

COMOR-299-02 - Complex Organizations - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topic: Innovative Leadership: Navigating the Collective Creative Process
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
In this course we will take a systems approach to understanding the creative problem solving process—from idea stage to implementation. Drawing from the latest theories of design thinking, creativity, complex organizations, leadership, social psychology, negotiations and social change, we will examine the individual, group, organizational and contextual dynamics that enable and constrain creativity and innovation. We will assess our strengths and weaknesses as innovative leaders, and immerse ourselves in hands-on learning experiences that stretch us out of our comfort zones and build our capacity as change agents, entrepreneurs, and innovators in any field.

COMSC-100-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Fall) An Introduction to Computer Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An introduction to basic computer science concepts with a focus on Python programming to manipulate images and sounds. Laboratory assignments will provide the main programming opportunities with Python, images, and sounds, while lectures will cover topics such as the origins of computing, computer architecture, artificial intelligence, and robotics.
Notes: students should NOT take this course after Computer Science 101

(Fall) Problem Solving and Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Computers are used every day for an enormous variety of tasks, from playing games and chatting with friends to transferring billions of dollars, delivering radiation treatments, and controlling the electrical grid. Computer programs are an essential ingredient in allowing for this great diversity of applications. In this course, you will learn to create your own programs, based on core programming concepts and analytical problem solving approaches. You will develop dynamic programs by first using Adobe Flash CS4 and AS3 (ActionScript 3), the technology behind many Web applications. The last portion of the course will teach you Java, a very popular modern programming language. We assume no prior study of computer science. Programming intensive.

COMSC-105-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Fall) iDesign Studio
Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar
Designers are continually innovating ways of incorporating technology into today's world, from projections of butterflies on Grammy performance dresses to "smart" purses that sense when your wallet is missing. The recent emergence of low-cost, user-friendly components is making this new world of design accessible to a broad community. In this course, students will think critically about products already in the marketplace and will be given the tools to create their own designs. A sequence of hands-on workshops on electronics basics and microcontroller programming will provide the surprisingly minimal level of comfort and background in technology required to produce prototypes of these designs.

(Spring) Introduction to Scientific Computing
Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The matrix-based programming language Matlab will be used to introduce students to programming and fundamental computing methodologies such as top-down design and objects. Course work will involve vectors, matrices, numerical integration and differentiation, curve-fitting and graphics. The course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101
Section Instructors: I F Dobosh
Expected enrollment: 25

COMSC-201-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Fall) Advanced Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course builds on the basic programming concepts learned in Computer Science 101. Emphasis is on developing the skills needed to write more sophisticated programs. This includes strategies to aid in assuring the correctness of programs through the use of assertions and unit testing as well as advanced Java features such as inheritance, polymorphism, and network programming. We will also introduce some widely used data structures such as vectors and linked lists. This course is programming-intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101 with a grade of C or better or permission of Instructor
Instructors: H. Pon-Barry
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Pon-Barry | 02 LAB H Pon-Barry
Expected enrollment: 36

COMSC-211-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015

(Fall) Data Structures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Using Java. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 201
Instructors: A. St. John
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Software Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Building large software systems introduces new challenges to software development. Appropriate design decisions early in the development of large software can make a major difference in developing software that is correct and maintainable. In this course, students will learn techniques and tools to help them address these problems and develop larger software projects, improving their skills in designing, writing, debugging, and testing software. Topics include design patterns, UML, designing for maintainability, software architecture, and designing concurrent and fault tolerant systems. Programming intensive.

COMSC-221-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015

(Spring) Computer System & Assembly Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course looks at the inner workings of a computer and computer systems. It is an introduction to computer architecture. Specific topics include assembly language programming, memory, and parallelism. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 201
Instructors: A. Woodhull
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Woodhull | 02 LAB A Woodhull
Expected enrollment: 26

(Spring) Topics: Robotics Workshop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This intermediate-level course will give students hands-on experience designing and developing robots. Not traditionally lecture-based, material will be delivered through an initial set of tutorial-style laboratory sessions. In the first few weeks, students will learn basic hardware components through the use of a microcontroller (e.g., the Arduino Uno). Students will then pitch and develop a robot for the remainder of the semester. A three-dimensional printer is available to produce components for student designs.
Prerequisites: COMSC 101; permission of instructor
Instructors: A. St. John

COMSC-311-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Theory of Computation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 201 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: A. St. John
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-312-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Algorithms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
How does Mapquest find the best route between two locations? How do computers help to decode the human genome? At the heart of these and other complex computer applications are nontrivial algorithms. While algorithms must be specialized to an application, there are some standard ways of approaching algorithmic problems that tend to be useful in many applications. Among other topics, we will explore graph algorithms, greedy algorithms, divide-and-conquer, dynamic programming, and network flow. We will learn to recognize when to apply each of these strategies as well as to evaluate the expected runtime costs of the algorithms we design.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: D. Sheldon
Expected enrollment: 25

COMSC-316-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Software Practicum
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Tired of writing programs that nobody ever uses? Then, this is the course for you. Software enables enterprises to carry out previously tedious or impossible tasks, but many organizations lack the resources to develop needed software. You will apply your programming skills to develop and deliver software to meet the requirements of a client from the community. You will learn critical communication skills required to work with a client, work as a team with classmates, and experience the software lifecycle from requirements elicitation through delivery. You will synthesize many topics learned in courses as well as new technologies required to complete the project. Programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 215 and permission of instructor.
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 15

COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Fall) Operating Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection, and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and 221
Instructors: A. Mishra
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Computer Graphics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL and other graphical environments; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 201, 211 (may be taken concurrently), and at least one of Mathematics 203, Mathematics 211, Mathematics 232, or permission of instructor
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Artificial Intelligence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An introduction to artificial intelligence (AI) research issues in fields such as Natural Language Processing and Machine Learning. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: H. Pon-Barry
Expected enrollment: 19

COMSC-335-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Fall) Machine Learning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
How does Netflix learn what movies a person likes? How do computers read handwritten addresses on packages, or detect faces in images? Machine learning is the practice of programming computers to learn and improve through experience, and it is becoming pervasive in technology and science. This course will cover the mathematical underpinnings, algorithms, and practices that enable a computer to learn. Topics will include supervised learning, unsupervised learning, evaluation methodology, and Bayesian probabilistic modeling. Students will learn to program in MATLAB or Python and apply course skills to solve real world prediction and pattern recognition problems. Programming Intensive.
Prerequisites: COMSC 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete, Math 101 Calculus I
Instructors: D. Sheldon
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Intelligent Information Retrieval
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Introduces the basic concepts, methodologies, and research findings in information retrieval. Special topics include Web searching, cross-language retrieval, data mining, and data extraction. Completion of this course will provide the necessary foundation to work in today's business environment where competitive advantage is obtained by retrieving needed information.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 15

COMSC-341-01 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics: Natural Language Processing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This seminar provides an introduction to natural language processing, the discipline of getting computers to understand human language. We will cover core ideas and algorithms relevant to both speech processing and text processing, with emphasis on applications in human-computer natural language interaction. Students will design and complete an open-ended final project.
Prerequisites: CS 211
Instructors: H. Pon-Barry
Expected enrollment: 15

COMSC-341-02 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics: Programming Language Design and Implementation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Ever wonder why there are so many semicolons in Java programs, or what it would mean for a language to not be object-oriented? In this course, we will explore issues related to the design and implementation of programming languages. Along the way, we will discover answers to these questions and more. Topics will include syntax, semantics, runtime support for languages as well as an introduction to functional programming.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211
Expected enrollment: 15

COMSC-341-03 - Computer Science - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics: Robotics and HCI - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This is a seminar-based course, drawing on a combination of traditional lectures, student presentations and projects. We will cover core robotics and HCI (Human Computer Interaction) concepts, with additional topics directed by student interest.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Mathematics 232 Recommended: Computer Science 312 Algorithms, Mathematics 211 Linear Algebra

Critical Social Thought

CST-100-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Politics of Inequality: Social Movements in the U.S. - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar (Latin American Studies 105f(01))
The course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the twentieth century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. Hernandez
Expected enrollment: 15

CST-100-03 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: The Self and Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Politics 100f)
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-223-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) United Colors of Neoliberal America
(Speaking-intensive; English 223)
"What can Brown do for you?" This question captures a central theme of this course: how a word like "Brown" evolved from a 1970s signifier of antiracist coalition building into a motto of the United Parcel Service (UPS), selling speed, efficiency, and access to networks of the global economy. Using interdisciplinary methods, we will explore the way multicultural imagery, Civil Rights discourse, and state policy have converged in the service of global capitalism. Focusing on fiction (e.g., Octavia Butler, Karen Yamashita), film (e.g., Crash, Sleep Dealer) and secondary sources, we will examine the impact of neoliberal multiculturalism and how cultural producers amplify and challenge its logics.

CST-248-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) Science, Revolution, and Modernity - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(History 248)
Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as 'revolutionary'? How are scientific... developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?

Prerequisites: so, jr, or permission of instructor

Notes: Gateway course for minor in Conceptual Foundations of Science

Instructors: D. Cotter

CST-249-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015

(Spring) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Modern Western Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Politics 212)

Through the writings of such thinkers as Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Marx, and Mill, we will examine central issues of modern Western political thought. Understanding modernity to entail a turn from political legitimacy based on the will of God, age-old traditions, and/or patriarchal right to political legitimacy based on the conscious designs of human beings with equal natural status, we will focus on the significance of this turn for questions concerning the purpose of politics, the ideal relationship between rulers and ruled, the justice or injustice of social inequality, and the meaning of freedom.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or first-year with permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Cocks

Expected enrollment: 25

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015

(Fall) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Classics in Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought

(Politics 239)

An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, and Fyodor Dostoevsky, focusing on the style as well as the substance of their theoretical works. The course will highlight their competing notions of the clash between appearance and reality, the logic and historical trajectory of domination and subordination, the basis and function of religion and morality, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life.

Prerequisites: fy, soph, jr, and seniors with permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Cocks

Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Histories of Performance I - *Not offered this year/term

(Theatre Arts 251(01))

A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

Instructors: C. Mannex

Expected enrollment: 25

CST-253-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015

(Spring) Introduction to Twentieth-Century Critical Race Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Africana Studies 208)

This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but not required, or permission of instructor

CST-254-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introduction to Postcolonial Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 254)
Postcolonial theory probes the centrality of colonialism and imperialism to modernity, and examines vital forms of anticolonial insurgency as models for critiques of domination and hegemony. This course will explore these imperatives from Marxist, poststructuralist, feminist, and psychoanalytic perspectives, paying particular attention to nationalism, the state, globalization, identity, and alternative political formations in the context of empire. Theorists read will include Lenin, Fanon, Spivak, Lloyd, Rose, and Chakrabarty.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but NOT required, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Martin

CST-256-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) Rethinking (Under)Development in Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
When and how did the notion of "development" emerge and spread? Why does nearly every country now aspire to it? What stigmas and hierarchies does the term "under-development" imply? Throughout Latin America, such language proves problematic not only as a material reality but also as a framework for understanding place, time, and selfhood. In this course, students rethink conventional wisdom about "underdevelopment" through the study of writers, filmmakers, and painters from Latin America working at different historical junctures of the twentieth century.
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-280-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) Literary Criticism and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 280)
An introduction to literary and cultural theory with an emphasis on twentieth century and contemporary thought. We will focus on crucial questions that have focused, and continue to focus, critical debate. These questions may include representation, subjectivity, ideology, identity, difference, gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, and nation. Throughout we will be particularly interested in the ways in which language and form mediate and construct social experience.

CST-349-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) Advanced Topics: Economic Justice - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Writing-intensive; Economics 349)
The seminar examines critical debates around the theory and practice of economic justice. Focusing on mainstream and heterodox knowledges of capitalism, the seminar covers topics such as: the importance of human rights and human freedom to economic growth; conflicting interests between political and economic interests; individual versus group rights in public policy; philosophical tensions between equity and efficiency; disparate impact claims and interest convergence; the role of social obligation (redistribution) and the appropriateness of collective action in addressing inequality and well-being. Thinkers include Rawls, Veblen, Nussbaum, Nozick, Sen, Marx, Anderson, and others.
Prerequisites: Economics 212
Instructors: L. Wilson
CST-350-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar for CST seniors in which they present their independent research, respond critically to one another's work, and lead discussion. In support of that research, this course will explore the history of critical method, from the Enlightenment through 20th-century critical theory and post-colonial studies. Every student will produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought. Students will present their work publicly and cultivate agility in speaking, arguing, and writing.
Prerequisites: Critical Social Thought sr; other jr and sr with permission of instructor
Notes: seniors who intend to write a thesis must take 4 credits of Critical Social Thought 395 in the fall, in addition to this course
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-365-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) Disposable People: A History of Deportation from the U.S.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; LATST-365, LATAM-387DP)
Taught in English, the course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the 20th century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice. (Fall) Pivotal Political Ideas: The Idea of Conservatism - *Not offered this year/term
(Politics 391)
This course explores such contested political concepts as democracy, power, nationalism, freedom, identity, alienation, civil society, and the public sphere - as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of political thought. This fall we will examine the idea of conservatism, focusing on the intellectual legacy of Edmund Burke, Leo Strauss, and Ayn Rand, as well as the political writings of contemporary conservatives and the platforms of popular tendencies such as the Tea Party movement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department or in critical social thought
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: The Concept of Power - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 391)
This course explores such contested political concepts as democracy, freedom, alienation, civil society, and the public sphere, as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of political thought. We will focus on the concept of power, with special emphasis on the work of three maverick scholars -- Michel Foucault, Judith Butler, and James C. Scott -- who in different ways have shaken up both conventional and radical thinking on the subject.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department or in critical social thought
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-391-02 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: Sovereignty
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 391)
An exploration of the idea of sovereignty, from its articulation as absolute monarchical authority in the 16th and 17th centuries to its metamorphosis as popular sovereignty in the 18th and 19th centuries to current debates over whether sovereign power is outmoded both domestically and in international relations. Drawing on historical as well as political theoretical texts, we will assess sovereign power and sovereign freedom as political ideals and consider whether we should lament or applaud the difficulty of actualizing them in political life.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in politics, international relations, critical social thought, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 18
CST-392-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2014-2015
(Fall) Portraits of Political Thinkers: Hannah Arendt
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 392)
This topics course explores the life, affiliations, and ideas of a political theorist who has made a special contribution to the self-understanding of our age. In addition to the writings by that thinker, we also will read biographies and secondary commentaries as well as selected essays by authors who have influenced our thinker or who have been influenced by her or him. The thinker for this year is Hannah Arendt, who has written controversial but influential works on revolution, violence, and totalitarianism; the nation-state and statelessness; imperialism and racism; and anti-Semitism and Zionism.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and 4 credits in political theory, philosophy, or critical social thought; or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 18

Curricular Support Courses

(Fall) First-Year Connections - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This six-week course will provide first-year students with information and strategies that will help them to effectively navigate their first year at Mount Holyoke. Sessions will cover such topics as maximizing your own liberal arts experience; asking constructive questions and creating positive faculty interactions; speaking up in class and improving confidence for presentations; the writing/revising process; connecting to experiential learning opportunities; and managing stress and conflict. Students will set goals for their time at Mount Holyoke, reflect on their current and past experiences, learn about campus resources, and gain skills and knowledge transferable to future semesters.
Prerequisites: fy, and concurrent enrollment in any first-year seminar
Notes: Half-semester course; meets between September 9 and October 18; required of those who enroll in any first-year seminar. Credit/No-Credit grading. Note: There is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation.

(Spring) Dance Education: The Power of Dance: Education and Beyond - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Community-based learning course)
This course is designed for students of many fields, including dance, education, and psychology to answer questions such as: How do I access learning and teaching through the medium of the body and movement? How do I teach others how to become change agents through dance? How can I create a program of dance that will challenge and invigorate young people in schools, so that all youth can have access and share their own inspiring movement and culture? How do I work with and master existing educational parameters, standards and frameworks and still stay in touch with the reason I dance, and the reasons people dance and want to dance?
Notes: There will be field trips, teaching opportunities, advocacy experiences, and readings, discussion, studio work, movement and lecture.
What are the functions that dance serves in society? How does the dancing body signify cultural values? How is dance a vehicle for the articulation of cultural identities? This course attempts to answer these questions from the perspective of dance anthropology and, on occasion, dance history. We will analyze documentaries and texts that illustrate the diverse manners in which dance ethnographers and historians approach the study of dance as a cultural expression. Balancing breadth and depth, the course focuses on a handful of dance forms from North America, Latin America, Africa, Asia, the Middle East, and Europe.

This survey of twentieth-century American dance moves from the sixties—a decade of revolt and redefinition in American modern dance that provoked new ideas about dance, the dancer's body, and a radically changed dance aesthetic—to the radical postmodernism of the nineties, when the body continued to be the site for debates about the nature of gender, ethnicity, and sexuality. We will investigate how the political and social environment, particularly the civil rights/black power movement, anti-war/student movement, and the women's movement, with its proliferation of feminist performance works, informed the work of succeeding generations of dance artists.

Instructors: C. Hill
Expected enrollment: 20

A continuation of Dance 287. The focus now shifts specifically to performance and the notation of complex rhythmic structures. Working as an ensemble, the class will create a music/dance suite, using body music, movement, vocal work, and music visualization as our inspiration. Emphasis will be placed on odd and mixed meters and rhythmical accuracy. Students will contribute both movement and musical material. Class time will be run like a professional rehearsal. Outside work will focus on musical research, choreography, and music notation. This suite will be performed at Blanchard Campus Center at a date to be determined.

Prerequisite: Dance 287
Instructors: P. Jones

(Fall) History of Development Economic Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A topical coverage of development economics used in conventional textbooks does not do justice to the evolution of integrated thinking in the field. A topical organization also does not do justice to the topic linkages or to the important debates in the field. This course adopts a history of macro development economics thought approach with an emphasis on alternative approaches right up to the current debates. While the field started in the 1940s, the influence of classical economists including Marx on the pioneering development economists and the field will also be traced.
Prerequisites: Economics 211 and 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Khan
Expected enrollment: 19

(Fall) Senior Seminar for Thesis Students
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course guides thesis students through the thesis process. We will discuss how to do economic research, how to do a research proposal, and how to write a literature review. Students will then complete a proposal and write their own review. Over the course of the semester, they will be matched with advisors in the department and will complete their theses in a section of Economics 395 with their advisor in the spring.
Prerequisites: sr, Economics 211 and 212
Notes: Thesis students are expected to enroll in this course to begin their thesis. However, we will continue to allow two semesters of 395 to constitute a thesis if appropriate.
Instructors: M. Robinson

(Fall) Teaching Children Science: College Students in the Elementary Classroom
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Biological Sciences 203)
This course is designed for science students with interests in teaching and learning with children. It will focus on research, theory and practice pertinent to science education, linking scientific information gained in college classes to children's learning of scientific phenomena. Weekly class meetings (from 1-3 hours) will include laboratory and off-site field investigations. Each student will also become a "Science Buddy" at a local elementary school, assisting children with hands-on science experiences for approximately 1 hour each week.

(Fall) Special Topics in Educational Studies: Promoting Bilingual Literacy Through Digital Storytelling in Springfield, MA.
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernismo to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.

This course examines how digital storytelling (DST) may enhance bilingual literacy. Students will assist Spanish-speaking residents in Springfield during the completion of an English-language digital storytelling workshop imparted by the Latino Youth Media Institute. Grounded in New Media Literacies and Latina/o studies, students will bring their own interests and disciplinary expertise as we evaluate and refine our experimental use of DST to promote bilingualism. Five College faculty and community partners will support our multidisciplinary and digital project. Taught mostly in English with some Spanish. Intermediate Spanish (201) is required for non Spanish majors or minors.

Prerequisites: Spanish 201 for non Spanish majors/minors. 212 and 2 200-level courses for Spanish majors/minors.

Notes: Taught in both English and Spanish according to level of Spanish proficiency of students enrolled.

Instructors: R. Minana

(Fall) Introduction to Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
The finest journalists are professors to the people. They educate citizens so as to facilitate reasoned, fact-based dialogue on subjects as diverse as politics, poverty, war, science, and the arts. We will look at journalism's role in the culture with a particular view to some of the profession's failings and follies. Students are expected to leave the comfortable confines of the classroom as they try their hand at covering an event, writing a profile, and reporting on an issue of local significance. Throughout the term we will employ the journalistic skills of interviewing, research, and thoughtful analysis to produce snapshots of the world inside and outside the College gates. Curiosity leads. Mastery follows.

(Spring) Expository Prose: Making the Argument - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Societies evolve through the exchange of information and ideas. This course explores that exchange as it occurs in contemporary opinion (or op-ed) pieces. Though we begin with Aristotle, most readings will come from the debates of our time. Our aim is to include divergent opinions on a wide array of subjects. Students will team up for close readings, exploring issues of evidence, structure and style. Extensive independent research and considerable rewriting required. This course is intended for students in all disciplines who seek mastery as prose stylists confronting the contentious issues of the day.

(Spring)  Topics in Medieval Studies: The Curious Middle Ages

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

(Writing-intensive)

While influenced by Augustine's warning that worldly inquiry could endanger the pilgrimage of the soul, medieval literature contains many instances of curious looking. Exploring the medieval desire to know, this course considers how the period's tendencies toward spiritual and metaphysical thought are balanced against its fascinations with the observable world. We will study the ways allegories, travel narratives, romances, and dream visions intersect with natural philosophy, historiography, cartography, and architecture. Literary analysis is the basis for our investigative work to uncover the epistemological impulses that inform medieval art and literature.

Prerequisites: English 200; English 210 or 213 recommended

(Fall)  Introduction to British Literary and Cultural Studies since 1660: The Victorian Period

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a broad study of selected figures in modern literary and intellectual history and helps prepare students for more advanced classes in British and/or postcolonial studies. We will use these figures to probe the dynamic relationship between imaginative practice and social change, which may involve global as well as national contexts. This course will introduce students to writing sustained pieces of critical analysis, challenging them to explore the theoretical relationship between literary form and historical transformation in the modern period. This section examines the major ideas, shifts, expansions, and disruptions of the Victorian period. We will discuss prose, poetry, fiction, and art to understand how these forms engage with movements in voting rights, industry, living conditions, money, gender, definitions of class, and imperialist expansion. Writers may include Arnold, Carlyle, Martineau, Mill, Elliot, Dickens, Bronte, W. Collins, Browning, Rossetti, Hopkins, and many others, as well as painters and current readings in criticism and theory.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr and 4 credits in English

(Spring) United Colors of Neoliberal America
(Speaking-intensive; Critical Social Thought 223)
"What can Brown do for you?" This question captures a central theme of this course: how a word like "Brown" evolved from a 1970s signifier of antiracist coalition building into a motto of the United Parcel Service (UPS), selling speed, efficiency, and access to networks of the global economy. Using interdisciplinary methods, we will explore the way multicultural imagery, Civil Rights discourse, and state policy have converged in the service of global capitalism. Focusing on fiction (e.g. Octavia Butler, Karen Yamashta), film (e.g. Crash, Sleep Dealer) and secondary sources, we will examine the impact of neoliberal multiculturalism and how cultural producers amplify and challenge its logics.

ENGL-231-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) British Romanticism: Revolution and Reaction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This class will examine the ways Romantic-era writers figured revolution and the reaction against it, in the wake of the French Revolution’s spectacular but failed promises of liberty, fraternity, and equality for all. We will pay special attention to how British writers envisioned their own versions of freedom and equality, extending them to women, slaves, and the poor. Likewise we will explore how this project for social change was necessarily related to revolutions in language and aesthetics. Authors may include Burke, Wollstonecraft, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Smith, Barbauld, Blake, Austen, Keats, Percy and Mary Shelley, Byron, and Hemans.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-235-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Modern British Poetry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This introduction to modern British poetry pays special attention to the emergence, consolidation, and dismantling of modernist poetry and poetics. It will link this literary history with, amongst other things, the loss of faith, the two world wars, and the relationship between monumental aesthetics, utopian poetics, and totalitarian politics. Writers will include Hardy, Yeats, Eliot, H.D., and Auden.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or English 200

Instructors: N. Alderman

ENGL-238-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Modern Irish Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will introduce students to the literature of modern Ireland beginning with Swift, moving through the nineteenth century, examining the Irish Literary Revival and Irish modernism, and finally contemporary drama, poetry, and fiction. We will focus on Irish women writers and their literary interventions concerning colonial history, nationalism, and Unionism. We will pay particular attention to representations of Irishness, the relationship between literature and national history, and questions of violence and representation. The course will explore how the genres, styles, and forms of Irish writing are determined by the experience of colonial trauma and the imperative to imagine national identity.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr with English 200 or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Martin

Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-239-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Fall) Contemporary British and Irish Poetry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to the most important poetic figures, movements, and backgrounds in contemporary British and Irish poetry, with an especial interest in poetry as a contested domain in which, and through which, poets wrestle new social content into poetic form. Poets may include Philip Larkin, Geoffrey Hill, Seamus Heaney, Denise Riley, Paul Muldoon, Grace Nichols, and Carol Ann Duffy.

(Spring) Topics in American Literature: The American Essay
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Throughout America's history, the essay has been a vital literary genre. From personal, religious, and confessional essays to highly political, satirical, and sometimes preposterous ones, American authors have revealed their passions and hatreds both eloquently and roughly. We will read essays from the eighteenth century to the present, concentrating on masters of the form. Authors include Ralph Waldo Emerson, Mark Twain, Henry James, James Baldwin, Joan Didion, Gore Vidal, and E. B. White.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr and, with permission of instructor, second-semester fy

(Fall) African American Literature I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course offers an introduction to the literary works of African Americans from the late-eighteenth century to the present, with an emphasis on poetry and fiction. Beginning with slave narratives and early poetry, we will consider issues of genre, literary traditions, and historical context while gaining experience in reading and analyzing literary texts. We will examine how authors consciously went about creating a literary tradition that mirrored, challenged and created a dialogue with the American canon.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Notes: meets English Department's 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: G. Pemberton

(Spring) African American Literature II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course will examine the major African American writers of the twentieth century, beginning with the poetry and prose of Paul Laurence Dunbar and ending with the fiction of Toni Morrison, John Wideman, and the poetry of Yusef Komunyaka, Rita Dove, and others. We will discuss the strategies involved in the creation of a "black voice" and its relationship to Anglo-American literature. We will also consider the nature of literary influence along with the attempts, by some writers, to create a distinct "black aesthetic." Finally, we will discuss the difficulties black authors encounter in asserting the literary over the sociological among readers of all intellectual and social strata.
Prerequisites: English 250
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-253-01 - English - 2014-2015

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Fall) Writing Historical Fiction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Does historical fiction offer readers something history books cannot? What obligation does the writer of historical fiction have to the verifiable facts of the past? Is history a place we can visit, or is it a living force, defining the present? Isn't there a sense in which all fiction is historical fiction? In this course we'll consider these and other questions as we read and write historical fiction. We'll go out with our shovels and teaspoons to dig in the past, unearthing the psychological atmosphere, the gossip, the voices, and the important lies that will show us the way to breathe new life into the cold, dead facts of history.

ENGL-311-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Chaucer: The Canterbury Tales
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Known as a storyteller par excellence, Chaucer was also a famous reader of classical epic, romance, and philosophy. This research seminar will give students the opportunity to read the Canterbury Tales in light of the work's cultural, historical, and literary contexts. Throughout the semester, students will engage with Chaucer's tales and his favorite sources to examine and discuss his representations of gender and class, his perspectives on religious authority, his use of the English vernacular, and his commitment to poetry.

Prerequisites: English 200; English 210 or 213 recommended

Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: W. Yu

(Fall) Studies in Renaissance Literature: Trauma in the Premodern World - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

When told that his wife's madness cannot be cured, Macbeth asks: "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?" Although the term "trauma" was not used to describe a psychological state until the nineteenth century, Macbeth's query suggests that premodern subjects both understood and experienced the sorts of psychic injury the term denotes. This course will explore how trauma was discerned, expressed and represented in premodern European culture. Readings will include contemporary theoretical explorations of trauma, as well as works by Shakespeare, Marlowe, Aphra Behn, and Daniel Defoe.

Prerequisites: English 200; English 210 or 211

Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

(Spring) Studies in Renaissance Literature: Early Modern Drama - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

(Theatre Arts 334)

"All the world's a stage." This course surveys the era of literary history that invented this powerful idea. The drama of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is a drama obsessively self-conscious, bursting with disguises, confidence tricks, cross-dressers, rituals, masques, and plays-within-plays. Reading Shakespeare as well as his rivals and peers (Marlowe, Jonson, Webster, and others), we will consider how theater, and the idea of theater, illuminates such concepts as desire, evil, gender, and ideology. Plays will likely include Titus Andronicus, Doctor Faustus/The Alchemist, and The Duchess of Malfi.

Prerequisites: English 200 and English 210 or 211

ENGL-319-01 - English - 2014-2015

(Fall) The Renaissance: Literature and Science in the Renaissance

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores the interplay between literary art and scientific thinking in the period held as the dawn of modernity, in which the distinction between such terms as "art" and "science" was anything but clear. Reading the works of prominent poets and dramatists (Shakespeare, Jonson, Donne, Milton) alongside scientific and philosophical literature (Lucretius, Montaigne, Bacon, Burton) we will ponder the relation between aesthetic and empirical paths to truth. Topics will include the anatomical body, faculties of mind, illness and healing, matter and spirit, animals and plants, navigation, alchemy, and magic.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 200 and English 210 or 211
Notes: meets English department pre-1700; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: S. Roychoudhury
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Studies in Nineteenth-Century British Literature: Victorian Sympathy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In the Victorian novel Middlemarch, one character explains, "To have in general but little feeling seems to be the only security against feeling too much on any one occasion." This course will examine feeling and sympathy in nineteenth-century prose, novels, poetry, and art. These representations will frame a discussion of Victorian concerns, and will also be considered in the historical context of eighteenth- and early twentieth-century epistemology, aesthetics, and literary forms. Writers may include: Austen, Meredith, G. Eliot, Forster, Wollstonecraft, Mill, Ruskin, Carlyle, Tennyson, Browning, Rossetti, Hopkins.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement; meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Studies in Nineteenth-Century British Literature: Nineteenth-Century Science and the Victorian Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Explaining why we can't judge others' marriages, one Victorian narrator turns to science: "Even with a microscope directed on a water-drop we find ourselves making interpretations which turn out to be rather coarse." The microscope becomes a standard of seeing and simultaneously just one more mode of knowing. This course explores the ways science and the Victorian novel interact, in direct references but also in subtle shifts in theories of the senses, embodiment, self-creation, and what it means to "see." Nineteenth-century readings in neuroscience, physiology, aesthetics, and evolution with tangents to larger contexts. Novelists may include Eliot, Dickens, Bronte, Carroll, Verne, Trollope.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English and some coursework in the Victorian period or the history of the novel; online course application required
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke

ENGL-323-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) The Victorian Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will explore the project of realism in the Victorian novel, watching tensions between a desire for guidance and a desire for mimesis. One critic has said the Victorians brought a sense of social duty to Romantic world-awareness, creating a "duty of awareness" that was almost overwhelming for the novelist and novel. We will explore this "duty of awareness" as we investigate representations of gender, class, and feeling as structuring principles in the novel. Novelists may include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220 or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-327-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in the Literature of the Romantic Period: William Wordsworth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
William Wordsworth lived through a time of revolutions and world wars: the American Revolution, the French Revolution, the Haitian Revolution, the rise and fall of Napoleon, wars of independence and of imperial conquest, and, behind it all the social transformations arising from the industrial revolution. As Wordsworth wrestled with how to adapt his art to these new realities, he introduced dramatically new content and experimented with a startling variety of poetic forms, styles, and techniques. In the end his main subject became the question of how individual identity is formed. This course will be an introduction to Wordsworth's poetry, showing why he is the first and greatest modern English poet.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200

(Fall) Two Irish Poets: W.B. Yeats and Seamus Heaney
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
A study in depth of two poets whose careers span the late nineteenth through the early twenty-first centuries. We will read poems, essays, and dramatic works by these two Nobel Prize winners with attention to their treatment of Ireland's legendary past and troubled recent history; to other themes of love and loss, nature and art; and to their explorations of the stylistic tensions and opportunities felt by Irish poets writing English verse.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: R. Shaw

(Spring) Asian American Film and Visual Culture: Beyond Geishas and Kung Fu Masters
(Speaking-intensive; Film Studies 320)
This course examines contemporary Asian American film and visual culture through the lens of cultural recovery, self-invention, and experimentation. Focusing primarily on film and photography, we will explore issues of race and visibility, Hollywood orientalism, memory and postmemory, and racial impersonation and parody. Students will engage with a variety of theoretical and critical approaches. Artists may include Nikki S. Lee, Margaret Cho, Tseng Kwong Chi, Jin-me Yoon, Justin Lin, Binh Dahn, Richard Fung, Mira Nair, Deepa Mehta, and Alice Wu.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

ENGL-337-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) The Political Imagination in Contemporary South Africa - *Not offered this year/term
This seminar examines the variety of literary and cultural expression in South Africa since the 1970s, focusing on the relations between art and political struggle. Among the topics to be discussed are the imagination of history in South African literature; the emergence of the Black Consciousness movement (and its legacies); responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Among the authors to be studied are Nadine Gordimer, J.M. Coetzee, Njabulo Ndebele, Zoe Wicomb, and Zakes Mda, along with a number of contemporary poets, playwrights, and filmmakers.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits at the 300 level in English, history, politics, or related fields
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: D. Weber

ENGL-341-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) American Literature III
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course explores the range and variety of American literary expression from the 1920s through the early 1940s. Topics include the role of regionalism; the emergence of a "modernist" aesthetic; ethnicity and modernism; debates within African American literary culture. Authors include Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, William Faulkner, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Henry Roth, and Pietro Di Donato.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English beyond 101 or permission instructor
Instructors: D. Weber
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-347-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Modern Urban British Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
As London and the British novel enter the new millennium, both are sites of competing histories, traditions, and agendas. This course will map the city's progress from the center of an empire to a node in the global world's economy, and chart the twentieth-century novel's movement from realism to postmodernism and beyond. Beginning by contrasting the realist London of Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes with Virginia Woolf's modernist version in Mrs. Dalloway, we will go on to trace the development of the post-1945 British novel.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 15
ENGL-349-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Cosmopolitanism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
"Nothing human can be alien to me." Taking its cue from Terence's maxim, and focusing on works of contemporary transnational literature, this seminar explores the idea of "cosmopolitanism." Can there be such a thing as global citizenship, a set of values or commitments that transcend local particulars and instead emphasize universality? How does cosmopolitanism square with nationhood and global mobility? What in particular constitutes literary cosmopolitanism? To find our way through these questions, we will read fiction and non-fiction from the Caribbean, Africa, South Asia, and East Asia, as well as philosophical and theoretical texts. Authors may include Achebe, Naipaul, Coetzee, and Desai.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 200 and 4 English credits in post-1900 literature
Instructors: S. Roychoudhury
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Studies in African American Literature: Harlem Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
The course will study the literature, politics, and art of the Harlem Renaissance—roughly a period from 1915 to 1940. The New Negro Movement brought together writers, artists, philosophers, musicians, and everyday people from many parts of the United States and the Caribbean to New York City's Harlem. Their efforts to create a distinct African American art resulted in a flowering of art from several different perspectives. The era has most frequently been thought of as a 1920s-only phenomenon, and many have suggested that it was less a "renaissance" than a first flowering of a collective artistic spirit. We will energetically take on the debate.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Pemberton

ENGL-359-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Fall) Emily Dickinson in Her Times
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333AA)
This course will examine the writing of Emily Dickinson, both her poetry and her letters. We will consider the cultural, historical, political, religious, and familial environment in which she lived. Special attention will be paid to Dickinson's place as a woman artist in the nineteenth century. The class will meet at the Dickinson Museum (280 Main Street in Amherst and accessible by Five College bus). Enrollment is limited to ten students.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English or 8 credits in Gender Studies
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) in Amherst; does not meet the English department seminar requirement
Instructors: M. Ackmann

(Fall) Women in American Literature: "Desperate Housewives" in 19th- through early 20th-century American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333(DH))
This course will explore visual and literary images of nineteenth through early 20th-century marriage and motherhood. Discussion of Virginia's Woolf's "A Room of One's Own" and Barbara Welter's essay "The Cult of True Womanhood" will serve as the springboard for our focus on representations of women in the home. We will incorporate a visit to the art museum, and will analyze film adaptations of some of the texts we read. The course will focus primarily on American literature, film, and art, with the exception of Ibsen's A Doll's House; selected written texts will include works by writers such as Hawthorne, James, Stowe, Gilman, Freeman, Chopin, Hurston, and Wharton.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor

(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century) - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333 and Environmental Studies 373)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: L. Glasser

ENGL-374-01 - English - 2014-2015
(Spring) Hitchcock and After
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Film Studies 320)
This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in shifting historical contexts, including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Marnie, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, and De Palma. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.
Prerequisites: online application required

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introduction to Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces students to the field of environmental studies and to some of the scientific, historical, political, economic and cultural aspects of environmental concerns. Through interdisciplinary lenses, we explore the complexities of many issues and problems such as climate change, threats to biodiversity, and toxic environments. In addition to fostering an understanding of their origins, the course focuses on potential solutions.
Instructors: L. Savoy, C. Corson
Expected enrollment: 60

ENVST-104-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Physics 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.

Expected enrollment: 50

ENVST-200-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Most of the environmental challenges we face are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. This course introduces students to the scientific principles, concepts, and methodologies required to both understand the interrelationships of the natural world, as well as to identify and analyze environmental problems and think critically about alternative solutions for addressing them. Key concepts from ecology, biogeochemistry, and other scientific fields inform our study of climate change, water resources, soil sustainability, food production, and other topics. Fundamental and emerging issues are examined using regional case studies, hands-on problem solving, and field and laboratory experiments.
Prerequisites: One 100-level lab science; one course in statistics is recommended
Instructors: K. Ballantine
Section Instructors: 01 LAB K Ballantine | 02 LAB K Ballantine |
Expected enrollment: 24

ENVST-210-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Political Ecology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course will explore the historical, political, economic, social, and cultural contexts in which human-environment interactions occur. We will cover critical topics and trends in the field of political ecology, from its early manifestations to more recent expansions. Using case studies from the global south and north, we will discuss factors that shape social and environmental change across scales from the personal to the global, and we will examine the role of gender, race, class, and power in struggles over resources. Students will become familiar with the academic debates in which political ecologists are engaged, and they will apply the concepts discussed in a case of their choice.

(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Earth's landscapes have changed dramatically over the planet's long history. In this course we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We also consider how geologic setting or physical environment has influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent. By "reading" the land we can recognize the complex layering of natural and cultural histories that creates what is experienced as "sense of place." Reading the land can also provide a clearer sense of how various peoples have used and shaped Earth's surface differently, and how these differences have contributed to a spectrum of environmental impacts.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. High school earth science or 4 credits in geology recommended.
Instructors: L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-240-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) The Value of Nature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Through this seminar, students develop an in-depth knowledge of and articulate vocabulary for the significant and diverse ways that humans value the natural world - utilitarian, scientific, aesthetic, naturalistic, symbolic, ethical, and spiritual. We use these different typologies of human environmental values as frameworks for readings and discussion, extending our examination to historical and cultural variations in values, competing perspectives of the natural world, and other value concepts, including intrinsic and transformative value. We examine the concept of biophilia and probe the role values play in the concern over losses of biological diversity and its implications.
In this course, we will explore the different facets of numerous environmental policy issues and review the substantive aspects, legal themes, and regulatory structure of the major federal environmental laws. The laws covered in this course include the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, and others. The course objectives are for the student to learn the basic regulatory characteristics of the major laws and to become well-versed in the current environmental issues which we will focus upon throughout the semester, such as global climate change, ocean degradation, energy resources, and biodiversity loss.

(Spring) Research Methods in History, Environmental Change, and Public Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

An introduction to interdisciplinary research methods in history, social science, and the digital humanities, using conceptions of nature, environmental change, and public health as themes for investigation. Topics include the collection, organization, and analysis of information from databases, printed materials, and research notes, as well as bibliographic management. Computer-assisted analysis of textual information and GIS will be introduced to study agricultural change, industrialization, urbanization, and their impacts on public health during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries in Europe and the United States.

Prerequisites: so,jr,sr or permission of instructor

Expected enrollment: 20

ENVST-267-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.

Prerequisites: You must apply for admission to this course by completing the online application form

We live in an age of energy crises, in which the future of energy is questioned in countless headlines and Twitter feeds. Often our energy agony accompanies other assumptions about energy’s past, in particular the idea that social change invariably follows the discovery of new energy technologies. From food to fuel cells, this colloquium charts a more complicated and interesting history, a history in which people have continually shaped and made meaningful the energies that fuel the modern world. It will be of particular interest to students in history and environmental studies and to those interested in the social study of science and technology.

(Fall) Research, Ethics and Policy in Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Designed to promote curriculum-to-career, this hands-on course prepares students for independent research, research internships, or research careers. Students pick topics of interest and share weekly assignments. Over the course of the semester, we examine methods for designing research and for gathering and analyzing information, and we discuss using data to inform policy. We speak with Mount Holyoke alumnae who have conducted research during internships, for honors theses and independent study, or for policy institutes after graduating. Finally, we consider ethical issues, from gendered experiences to cross-cultural research, and students prepare institutional review board proposals. Students from various disciplines are welcome.
Prerequisites: 8 credits of 200 level social science or humanities courses, and permission of the instructor. Meets the ES politics and policy and environment and development concentration requirements
Instructors: C. Corson
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-316-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Restoration Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Community-based learning course)
A key test of our ecological knowledge is whether we can successfully apply it to create or restore ecosystems that have been damaged or destroyed. As we take on the role of restoration ecologists this semester, we will use principles and methods of ecology, conservation biology, hydrology, soil science, and related disciplines to learn about the theory, practice, and politics of ecosystem restoration. This course emphasizes fieldwork, interdisciplinary teamwork, and ecological planning to evaluate and design restoration projects in our surrounding communities and regional landscapes. On a few occasions, meetings may last until 5:05 pm so that we can go on fieldtrips that are farther from campus.
Prerequisites: Environmental Science 200, at least 8 credits of 200 or 300-level laboratory science, or permission of the instructor.

ENVST-317-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Perspectives on American Environmental History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
We explore the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration, colonization, and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.

(Spring) Landscape and Narrative - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Different stories or narratives—whether myth, literature, maps, or scientific theory—have been created about every region or environment on Earth as human attempts to describe and understand our connections with that place. How do braided strands of human history and natural history contribute to stories we tell of the land, and to stories we tell of ourselves in the land and of relational identity? In this reading and writing seminar we will reflect on how lifeways, homeplace, and identity of an individual or a community are linked with environment or the land. We will also create written and visual narratives of our own and explore creative environmental writing in reflection and action.

(Spring) Wetlands Ecology and Management
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Although they cover ~0.6% of the earth's surface, wetlands perform more ecosystem services per hectare than any other ecosystem type. Alarmingly, over half of the earth's wetlands have been lost to agriculture and development. With these wetlands were also lost the valuable ecosystem functions wetlands perform. This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to examine the biogeochemical, ecological, societal, and regulatory aspects of wetland ecosystems. Group discussion of primary scientific literature, as well as independent experimental design and the writing of a research proposal are core components. Field trips will sometimes keep us until 5:05 pm, and will provide an opportunity to explore these fascinating ecosystems in person.
Prerequisites: Environmental Science 200, at least 8 credits of 200 or 300-level laboratory science, or permission of the instructor.

ENVST-341-01 - Environmental Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Science and Power in Environmental Governance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course applies concepts from political ecology to study how governance, broadly defined, works in relation to the environment. Using case studies of international environmental issues, we will explore how people make decisions about the environment in a policy realm. We will discuss the role of various agents, such as governments, scientific bodies, and nongovernmental organizations, in the decision-making process. We will reflect on who has access to decisions; how scientific data is used; how environmental ideas become powerful; and how policies are legitimated. Armed with this information, we will consider how to advocate for global environmental sustainability and social equity.

(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century) - *Not offered this year/term
(English 373, Gender Studies 333)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.

(Fall) Production Seminar in the Moving Image: Beginning Video Production: Eye to Ear - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
What is the relationship between image and sound in video? How does listening affect what we see and imagine? This class will provide a foundation in technical and conceptual skills for making short videos. We will study the aesthetics and mechanics of shooting digital video, recording and mixing sound, and editing with Final Cut Pro. Sonic expression will play a leading role in our exploration of video production and interpretation in narrative, documentary, and experimental works. Course work includes individual and group production projects, weekly screenings, readings, and several short writing assignments. Students will complete three short videos and a final project.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, application and permission of instructor. Application available through Film Studies website.

(Fall) Special Topics in Film Studies: Twentieth-Century Korea through Fiction and Film
A study of ten to twelve plays and their film adaptations. Plays are drawn from a range of periods and genres, and films are chosen to show the scope of adaptive approaches from filmed play to radical re-imagining. The course will include readings on the theory and history of theatre-to-film adaptations. Playwrights will likely include Christopher Marlowe, John Gay, Oscar Wilde, Bertolt Brecht, Tennessee Williams, Eugene O'Neill, Lorraine Hansberry, Edward Albee, Harold Pinter, David Mamet, and David Henry Hwang. Though Shakespeare is not a focus, we will give some comparative attention to particularly influential films of his plays.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231f-02)
Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (tragi)comedy in film.
Notes: Taught in English. Students with previous knowledge of German are encouraged to enroll in German Studies 223 instead

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Adaptation from Page to Screen - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 284)
The Oxford English Dictionary lists as its primary definition for "adaptation": "the bringing of two things together so as to effect a change in the nature of the objects." Our course considers the complex relationship between a source and its retellings, including the way in which such retellings permanently alter the source material and how each incarnation of a given narrative offers us a window of insight into a particular historical moment.
Readings/films will include Macbeth, Frankenstein, The Silence of the Lambs, and No Country for Old Men.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or English 200
Instructors: A. Rodgers

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Religion and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 213)
This course is an investigation of the intersections between film and religion. In it, we will examine how the cultural phenomenon of religion is represented in film and how religion, understood critically and theoretically, can be a useful means to interpret film. We will learn the basic issues inherent in the interpretation of this art form (e.g., How do the visual, aural, and narrative components of film work together to create meaning?), and we will critically investigate the concept of religion as a means to better understanding the significance of cultural practice (e.g., What is religion? What are the myriad ways it is made manifest in culture?).

FLMST-250-01 - Film Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) History of World Cinema Through 1960
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course offers an historical survey of the cinema as a developing art form and a means of communication. We will examine the history of this international medium from its 19th-century beginnings through the mid-20th century. The national and thematic focus of the course shifts through the semester. For example, we will focus on U.S. film in studying the earliest developments in film technology and narrative, and on Soviet and French films to study the formal and social experimentation of the 1920s. The course provides a background for understanding film history and pursuing further studies in the field.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202 or 203 or Art History 202
Instructors: R. Blaetz

(Spring) National and Transnational Cinema: Reel Critiques: Film and Social Change in Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 240)
In this class, we will look at both feature films and documentaries as tools for social change in contemporary Latin America. We will view movies from Central America and South America, including Brazil, in order to look at the way that contemporary Latin American cinema has addressed neocolonial class, race, gender, and sexual prejudices in the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries. In addition to discussing the way that films have addressed the need for social change in Latin America, we will think about how their messages extend globally. The course will be conducted in Spanish. Films will be viewed primarily outside of class.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Notes: Taught in Spanish. Component Course in Film Studies.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231, Gender Studies 204)
Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform; Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim’s It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi’s Romeos, Mettke’s Transpapa.

(Spring) Film Theory: Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Philosophy 275s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.

(Spring) Production Seminar: Advanced Projects in Video Production
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): In this class, students will take the skills and insights gained in introductory production courses and, working individually or in pairs, develop them over the length of the semester through the creation of one short project, 10 minutes long. Students may choose to work in narrative, documentary, experimental, or hybrid forms.
We will learn by making work as well as by researching, reading, and watching films related to our projects. We will begin with brainstorming, research, script or documentary proposal writing, and pre-production. Each student will develop a script or in-depth proposal to begin. As we move into production, we will review and deepen our knowledge of camera, lighting, sound, and editing principles and techniques. We will move between production and post-production in the second half of the semester, first developing sequences, then rough cuts and fine cuts, before ultimately completing our final cut.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 210 or its equivalent. Application and permission of instructor required. Application available through Film Studies Web site.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Philosophy 375)
Many critics considered Kathryn Bigelow's Zero Dark Thirty to be the best film of 2012, but it was also widely criticized for seeming to promote torture. Movies can be morally dangerous, seemingly endorsing or even promoting immoral or discriminatory ideals, or romanticizing immoral characters and behavior, as in Hannibal Lecter from Silence of the Lambs (Thomas Harris, 1991). In this course, we evaluate the arguments given for treating certain movies as immoral, and we examine whether and how our moral evaluations of movies should affect us. When, if ever, are movies immoral? Should certain movies be censored? Should we withhold praise from morally objectionable movies?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or in film studies or permission of instructor

FLMST-320-01 - Film Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Hitchcock and After
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 374)
This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Manne, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.
Prerequisites: online application required
Notes: meets English Department seminar requirement; film screenings Mondays, 7:00-10:00 pm
Instructors: E. Young

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; Anthropology 310s-01)
Component course for Film Studies. In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Theatre Arts 356(01))
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Notable Novels in Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(French 311-01)
Focusing on late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French novels, we will explore the historical and cultural background of a decadent French aristocracy and witness the triumph of the bourgeoisie. As visual resources we will use paintings by Boucher, Fragonard, Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Manet, Degas, as well as cinematic interpretations of Laclos’ _Les Liaisons dangereuses_, Diderot’s _La Religieuse_, and literary works by George Sand, Stendhal, Balzac, Flaubert, Zola, and Maupassant. Literacy in technology is an integral part of this course, and students will learn to produce a digital narration in iMovie as a term project.
Prerequisites: permission of course instructor
Notes: Component course for Film Studies

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Beyond Geishas and Kung Fu Masters: Asian American Film and Visual Culture
(Speaking-intensive; ENGL 334)
This course examines contemporary Asian American film and visual culture through the lens of cultural recovery, self-invention, and experimentation. Focusing primarily on film and photography, we will explore issues of race and visibility, Hollywood orientalism, memory and postmemory, and racial impersonation and parody. Students will engage with a variety of theoretical and critical approaches. Artists may include Nikki S. Lee, Margaret Cho, Tseng Kwong Chi, Jin-me Yoon, Justin Lin, Binh Dahn, Richard Fung, Mira Nair, Deepa Mehta, and Alice Wu.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Topics in Experimental Film: Women Experimental Filmmakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or 203
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 15

FLMST-360-01 - Film Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Film Genre: Expired Horror? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.

The horror film stands at the core of the body genres; however, in 2013 it may be hard for us to experience visceral impact from films made at a time that, in some ways, looked so different from our own. This course will survey the genre from 1896 to 1968, the year that the rating system was introduced in the United States. Yet our scope will be international, tackling not only Hollywood's Universal Horror, but the UK's Hammer Horror, Mexican Horror, Les yeux sans visage (1960), Italy's Mario Bava, and precursors to J-Horror.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and 1 screening (2 hours, 30 minutes)
Instructors: K. Eisenstein
Expected enrollment: 25

FLMST-370-01 - Film Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Art History 360)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

FLMST-370-02 - Film Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Taboo-Breakers: Censors and the Filming of Brecht, Kafka, Hesse, the Manns - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This course studies selected filmmakers from Weimar to the present who have filmed literary texts and evoked the wrath of the censors: Sternberg's Blue Angel, H. Mann's Professor Unrat with Dietrich as the New Woman; Dudow/Brecht's Proletarian film, Kuhle Wampe, censored for including an abortion; Szabós 1981 film of Klaus Mann's 1936 novel Mephisto, banned to protect actor Gustav Gründgens from a questionable Third-Reich past. Also, works by Kleist, Storm, Fontane, Hesse, Kafka, and Thomas Mann inspired filmmakers like Fassbinder, Hunteburth, and Haneke, not only because they broke existing taboos but also by foregrounding current issues such as globalization, alienation, terrorism, and homophobia.
Prerequisites: at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Notes: Film studies students interested in studying the material in English should contact the instructor for permission to enroll in 395 independent studies.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Race and Representation in Latina/o Film - *Not offered this year/term
(Latin American Studies 387s(03))
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This seminar offers an interrogation of the ways in which Latinas and Latinos are represented in the cinema. We will explore early portrayals of Latinas and Latinos in film history and then explore contemporary cinema with a focus on race, class, gender and sexuality in these representations. Employing multiple aesthetic and disciplinary approaches we will analyze commercial films alongside independent films with particular attention to the market-driven and political mandates of these projects. We will focus on films by both Latina/o filmmakers and non-Latina/o filmmakers interrogating the multifarious points of entry of these artists.

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(French 331f (02))
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion, a reaction to "cinema de Papa," won an aesthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(French 341)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
The relationship between colonizer and colonized is two-fold: on the one hand a visible, immediate (military, economic, and political) domination, and on the other, a more subtle, less visible (ideological) domination. These will be explored through texts (literature and films) representing both the metropolitan and the native, from the colonizer's point of view. This course will discuss first how, through its writers and filmmakers, France projected itself onto the imagination of colonized Africans and second, how, in response, Africans appropriated the pen and the camera to convey their perception of their French experiences with the metropolitan Other.
Prerequisites: 12 credits from French department, including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of instructor
Notes: Taught in French. Component course in Film Studies.
Instructors: S. Gadjigo

(Fall) Topics in Film Authorship: Henry James on Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 345f-(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
This seminar will examine the various screen adaptations of assorted novels by Henry James. We will read the novels against the films, exploring how James's texts translate--or do not translate--into film.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): The primary purpose of this course is to familiarize students with contemporary issues in French culture as they are represented in French-speaking media of today.
This course will introduce students to contemporary popular culture in France and the French-speaking world, largely through the study of recent (post-1990) best-selling novels, popular music, and feature films. Students will be asked to give formal oral presentations based on up-to-date materials gathered from the Internet and/or French television and to participate actively in class discussion.
Prerequisites: French 203, or placement score of 450+, or department placement
Instructors: C. Rivers
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Intermediate Courses in Culture and Literature: Introduction to the Civilization of France
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): In order to explain the complexity of present-day France, this course will explore its most conflictual historical moments—feudalism, absolute monarchy, political and social revolutions. Students will learn the social and historical context of French art and architecture.
Images et Patrimoine: In this multimedia course students learn to decode images and study the social and historical context of French art and architecture. Medieval tapestries, Romanesque and Gothic cathedrals, Renaissance castles, Classic and Rococo art, and nineteenth century schools of painting. Students give in-class presentations and write essays about notable French landmarks. The purpose of such inquiry is to revisit the past and see how it has affected contemporary French society. All course material is online.
Prerequisites: French 203, or placement score of 450+, or department placement
Instructors: N. Vaget

FREN-311-01 - French - 2014-2015
(Fall) Period Courses: Topic: (pre-1800) Sex, Lies and Parchment: The Roman de la rose - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.

After first defining "courtly love" via Chrétien's Lancelot and other texts, we shall read the two-part, thirteenth-century Roman de la rose, begun as a serious allegorical love quest by one author, then, years later, "continued" in an opposite vein by another author using virtually all knowledge and controversy to define love, and life, against Church and state dogma. The Rose's learned yet irrevocent, schizoid nature and manuscript images made it an international blockbuster admired and/or reworked by Dante, Chaucer and others. It sparked the first literary debate about women, pitting Christine de Pizan against the Parisian male intelligentsia, whose debate letters we shall examine.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: Note: Class format will involve introductory lectures for background, while students should expect to participate actively in open discussion of each text, to submit a midterm paper and somewhat longer final research paper.
Instructors: N. Margolis
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Period Courses: Topic: The Detective Novel in France - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.

The French detective novel found its origins in Poe and in the disillusionment and malaise of the increasingly urban universe of the nineteenth century. It generally centered on a dark, mysterious Parisian atmosphere that spoke to a growing public awareness of the worlds of crime and of the police. Realist novelists, in particular Dostoevsky, enriched the genre's conventions, but the detective novel evolved beyond realism as it moved into the twentieth century, combining unsettling social critique with reassuringly flawless reasoning.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: C. LeGouis
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, Romance Language & Literature 375)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.

This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: for language majors; two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level;
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French must read texts and write papers in French to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.
Instructors: E. Castro-Cuenca

(Fall) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Topic: (pre-1800) Seduction and Tyranny
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon—an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode—relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.

"Seduction and Tyranny": Targeting the institution of marriage that enables fathers and husbands to behave as absolute masters, Molière, Marivaux and Beaumarchais advocate equality and justice for wives, daughters and servants. Students will study plays by Molière (L'école des femmes, Tartuffe, Don Juan), Marivaux (La fausse suivante, l'ile des esclaves), Beaumarchais (Le barbier de Séville, Le mariage de Figaro). They will watch operas by Mozart (Le nozze di Figaro, Don Giovanni) and Rossini (Il barbiere di Siviglia) and explore relevant films (Molière, Le roi danse, Beaumarchais). As term papers, students will produce multimedia projects in iMovie.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: Technical support is provided by workshops in the Language Resource Center. Films are available for online viewing.
Instructors: N. Vaget
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Writing and Politics: Literature as Social Engagement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon—an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode—relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.

Study of French and Francophone writers, filmmakers, and artists, in their specific contexts, whose works engage with important political and social issues of their time and place. Preliminary readings theorize how texts can communicate, explicitly or implicitly, an ideological stance. We will then consider imaginative works, from the Middle Ages to the present, whose thematic, narrative, cinematic, stylistic, or linguistic techniques connect with movements for social or cultural change.

Prerequisites: 12 credits including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: E. Gelfand
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Courses in Francophone Studies: Topic: Ousmane Sembene: The Work of a Militant Artist - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

This course is devoted entirely to the works of writer-director Ousmane Sembène. We will explore the major highlights of his life; his involvement in leftist movements in Europe, his writing and cinema and especially the place of his work in the African cultural discourse. The study of Sembene’s work will be divided into four main themes: 1) Experience exile and the search for a voice; 2) The historical work; 3) The political and social criticism; 4) Woman and society. Finally, we will examine the role of Sembene’s work in the history of cultural discourse in Africa.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: S. Gadjigo

(Spring) Courses in Francophone Studies: Paris dans l'imaginaire Africain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

Colonial relations have not only been a contest over land ownership but were also always centered around the question of who has the right to represent whom. This course will examine how, from the fifties and sixties, African students in France have represented France and Paris in their narratives. Readings will include novels and travelogues.

Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: S. Gadjigo
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Courses on Women and Gender: Every Secret Thing - Contemporary Women's Autobiographical Narrative
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses explore cultural, literary, and social issues relating to women and gender identities in France and French-speaking countries. Topics may include women's writing, writing about women and men, the status of women, feminist criticism, and theories of sexuality and sexual difference.

This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially the traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself.

Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.

Prerequisites: Two of French 215, 219, 225, 230, and one 300-level course in French department.

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

Instructors: C. Rivers

(Fall) Advanced Level Seminar: Topic: Corporalités: Writing the Body in French
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.

Study of representations of the body in French and Francophone fiction, film and art. How has embodiment been conceived across time and culture? What concepts of beauty, gender, race, class, sexuality, and age do the works communicate? How do representations of bodies convey power and desire? What forms of violence and monstrousness appear? Theoretical readings (Descartes, Freud, Beauvoir, Fanon, Foucault, Chebel) plus possible authors and films: Rabelais; Molière; Balzac; Gide; Colette; Duras; Blais; Djemai; Warner-Vieyra; Rawiri; Un chien andalou; Cléo de 5 à 7; Le Jardin parfumé.

(Spring) Advanced Level Seminar: Proust: À la Recherche du temps perdu
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.

à la Recherche du temps perdu is the greatest literary masterpiece of the twentieth century and is both rooted in a specific past and universal in its analysis of human intellect and emotion. We will concentrate on themes of love and desire in three relationships: Swann's adoration of Odette; the narrator's fixation on Albertine; and the Baron de Charlus's homosexual passions. Assignments will include most of Du Coté de chez Swann, Sodome et Gomorrhe, and Le Temps retrouvé; excerpts from the other four novels; selections from important criticism; and film. Analysis of construction of the entire work will facilitate reading unassigned sections for ambitious Proustians.

  - From the ancient world to the present day, animals have been captive to the demands of human exceptionalism. Evolutionary theorists, along with critical thinkers from a growing number of disciplines, have interrogated the human-animal binary, asking difficult and provocative questions about the nature of life and the politics of being. In this course, first-year students will explore "the animal question" from a variety of perspectives, revisiting their own assumptions and experiences as they discover the interspecies networks that constitute the changing environment of Mount Holyoke.
  - Special attention will be paid to the discourse of species as it intersects with other forms of difference.

  - How do scholars produce knowledge? What can we learn from differences and similarities in the research process of a novelist, a biologist, an historian, a sociologist, and a film critic? Who decides what counts as knowledge? We will examine a range of methods from the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, including visual analysis, archival exploration, interviewing, and ethnography, as we consider the specific advantages (and potential limitations) of diverse disciplinary approaches for feminist inquiry. We will take up numerous practical questions as well as larger methodological and ethical debates. This course provides a foundation for advanced work in the major.

  - (Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Double Takes: Women's Artistic Production in Contemporary Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
  - As women perform gender, so too do they perform culture. In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays as part of the course.

(Taught in English; Asian Studies 215, Gender Studies 204)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 204)
Are animals persons? Subjects? Do they have gender? Important shifts in public opinion have taken place concerning the moral, legal, and affective status of animals, yet liberal Academia still marginalizes the "animal question." In this course, we will draw on feminism's engagement against speciesism to chart diverse forms of human/non-human companionship. The analytic categories of gender and species will be examined side by side for their usefulness in understanding a world in which we no longer approach the human as the great exception. We will consider theory, fiction, films, art work, and the internet in approaching post-human concepts of life, personhood, and subjectivity.

Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform; Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim’s It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi’s Romeo, Mettke’s Transpapa.
Notes: If time conflict with the screening session, please contact the instructor for alternate arrangements. Only meets language requirement if student simultaneously completes GRMST 232. Majors/minors in German Studies and students interested in German credit should simultaneously enroll in both GRMST 231 and GRMST 232 (2 cr.) taught in German.

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of History: American Women's History, From Settlement to Reconstruction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(History 275)
Introduction to major themes in U.S. history through the lens of women's history. Located both near the centers of power in American society and at its margins, the history of women as a social group is one of conflict and diversity. While women do not make up a coherent group, all share the unique experience of being "women" in class, racial, and religiously specific ways. Themes include Native American and Hispanic women during European contact and settlement; the impact of the American Revolution; benevolent women and the "fallen" women they hoped to help; enslaved women and the plantation mistress; women in the multicultural west; women's involvement in the Civil War and Reconstruction.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of History: African Women: Food and Power
(Community-based learning course; History 296s)
This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories, and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional fourth hour discussions.

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of History: The Culture of AIDS in the U.S. - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(History 283)
An examination of the powerful unleashing of literary and political activism in the wake of the AIDS outbreak. We will look at literary texts such as Tony Kushner's play Angels in America, Larry Kramer's novel Faggots and play The Normal Heart, Sarah Shulman's novel People in Trouble, and Jonathan Larson's play, Rent. We will look at the AIDS quilt and other memorializing efforts, political groups such as The Gay Men's Health Crisis, ACT UP and Queer Nation for the ways that it redefined activism and recrafted the politics of medical trials and drug distribution, and will conclude with the role AIDS played in the consolidation of the Christian New Right.

(Fall) Women and Gender in Philosophy and Religion: Women in American Religious History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(RELIG 218)
This course is a critical study of significant women (Anne Hutchinson, Mother Ann Lee, Mary Baker Eddy, Ellen Gould White, Aimee Semple McPherson, Dorothy Day, and others) and their roles in the pluralistic character of American religion. It raises central questions concerning leadership, marginality, deviant behavior, and criticism of women. Students are expected to contribute to the course by their participation and individual research.

(Spring) Women and Gender in Philosophy and Religion: Women and Philosophy
This course will focus on topics to which feminist thinking has made important philosophical contributions, such as: pornography, objectification, and consent. We will draw on a variety of philosophical resources, ranging from liberal and feminist political theory, to speech act theory. We will consider questions such as: Is pornography morally problematic? Can sexism or other biases lead to bad science? Is it wrong to choose to be a stay-at-home parent? The goal will be to see how careful philosophical thought can help us with pressing issues of sex and gender.

(Spring) Feminist Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

We will read a number of key feminist texts that theorize sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. The postcolonial critique of feminism is a fourth vector we will examine, as well as anti-racist and postcolonial intersections with queerness. We will also study trans-theory and its challenge to the queer paradigm.

This course explores the overlapping dualities of the feminine and the masculine, the private and the public, the home and the world. We examine different forms of power over the body; the ways gender and sexual identities reinforce or challenge the established order; and the cultural determinants of "women's emancipation." We emphasize the politics of feminism, dealing with themes that include culture, democracy, and the particularly political role of theory and on theoretical attempts to grasp the complex ties and tensions between sex, gender, and power.

(Spring) Women and Gender in Science: Feminist Health Politics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Anthropology 216HP)

Health is about bodies, selves and politics. We will explore a series of health topics from feminist perspectives. How do gender, sexuality, class, disability, and age influence the ways in which one perceives and experiences health and the access one has to health information and health care? Are heteronormativity, cissexism, or one's place of living related to one's health status or one's health risk? By paying close attention to the relationships between community-based narratives, activities of health networks and organizations and theory, we will develop a solid understanding of the historical, political and cultural specificities of health issues, practices, services and movements.

(Politics 255f)

The Americas have been characterized by the strictness of their laws in the criminalization of abortion. In some countries abortion is criminalized even when the woman's life is at risk. What role have women's movements played in advancing abortion rights? What has mattered most for a movement's success, its internal characteristics or external forces? Has the way the movement framed its demands mattered? How has the political influence of the Catholic and Evangelical churches influenced policies in this area? We will answer these questions by exploring examples from across the region through primary and secondary sources.

(Spring) Gender and Power in Global Contexts: Women and Social Movements in Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
In the last 30 years, Latin America has seen the emergence of a large array of social movements that have shaped the political and economic processes in the region. From human rights to peasants' movements, from indigenous to unemployed movements, women have been increasingly involved in political activism. What has been the role of women in these movements? How have traditional women's roles been at the same time useful and an obstacle to their activism? How have women influenced the repertoires, frames, identities and strategies of these movements? We will answer these questions through the exploration of case studies in the region using academic readings, testimonies, and documentaries.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Beyond Logocentrism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 350s-01)
Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women’s Autobiographical Narrative in French - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself. Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.

(Speaker- and writing-intensive; Spanish 330f-01)
This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erauso, and María de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.

(Anthropology 316s)
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women in American Theatre and Drama - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(THEAT 350-02)
This course offers a history of women in performance, from the colonial era to the present day. Americans inherited a European theatrical economy that was largely male dominated, though actresses played a central role on stage and in the public imagination. Today, while serious inequities remain, women are gaining access to the most privileged and powerful positions in a swiftly changing field. We are therefore equally interested in how women have participated in theatrical culture—as actors, producers, playwrights, directors, designers, managers, and audience members—and how they have been represented on commercial, experimental, and regional stages, and across genres and communities.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Embodiments
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Em)bodi/ment: body/mind. How does our culture fantasize about severing them? Where is there ever pure mind, pure body? Who counts as able, as broken, or as food? How does discipline, punishment, and usefulness come into play? What is agency and knowledge in relation to embodiment? We will study different "problem" cases of embodiment where the fabric of culture begins to unravel: athletics, birthing, breeding and assisted reproduction, chronic illness, dairy, disability, drugs, dying, fatness, pregnancy, queerness, sexuality, speech ("disorder"), and others. Much of the seminar's agenda will be driven by students' own research and interests in studying embodiment.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Despite cries of non-heterosexual behavior as "unnatural," a closer look at "nature" shows that the more-than-human world is quite queer, indeed. Animals, plants, and fungi exceed and ignore the binary models humans have imposed on them. In this course, we will use a study of the environment as an entry point into contemporary queer theory. We will engage questions of natural and unnatural; the boundary between human and non-human; and the intersections of fact, fiction, and magic. Course materials will include texts, but also an engagement with the campus and surrounding area, through short outings beyond the classroom.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: "Desperate Housewives" in 19th- through early 20th-century American Literature
(English 373)
This course will explore visual and literary images of nineteenth through early 20th-century marriage and motherhood. Discussion of Virginia's Woolf's "A Room of One's Own" and Barbara Welter's essay "The Cult of True Womanhood" will serve as the springboard for our focus on representations of women in the home. We will incorporate a visit to the art museum, and will analyze film adaptations of some of the texts we read. The course will focus primarily on American literature, film, and art, with the exception of Ibsen's A Doll's House; selected written texts will include works by writers such as Hawthorne, James, Stowe, Gilman, Freeman, Chopin, Harston, and Wharton.

This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriquenas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centroamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas, and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

How do novel developments at the interface of fertility treatment and biomedical research raise both new and enduring questions about the "naturalness" of procreation, the politics of queer families, the im/possibilities of disabilities, and transnational citizenship? Who has a say in what can be done and for which purposes? We will engage with ethnographic texts, documentaries, policy statements, citizen science activist projects, and social media in order to closely explore the diversity of perspectives in this field.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Who's Involved?: Participatory Governance, Emerging Technologies and Feminism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Anthropology 316PG)
Deep brain stimulation, genome sequencing, regenerative medicine...Exploring practices of 'participatory governance' of emerging technologies, we will examine the formal and informal involvement of citizens, patients, health professionals, scientists and policy makers. What initiatives exist at local, national and transnational levels to foster science literacy? How do lived experiences of nationality, ability, class, race, ethnicity, gender and sexuality become visible and/or disappear within constructed frameworks of participatory governance? How can feminist ethnographic research and feminist theory contribute to a larger project of democratizing knowledge production and governance?

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Gender and Class in the Victorian Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 323s)
This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Theologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 323f)
Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Race, Gender, and Empire: Cultural Histories of the United States and the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(History 301)
Recent cultural histories of imperialism--European as well as U.S.--have illuminated the workings of race and gender at the heart of imperial encounters. This course will examine the United States' relationship to imperialism through the lens of such cultural histories. How has the encounter between Europe and America been remembered in the United States? How has the cultural construction of "America" and its "others" called into play racial and gender identities? How have the legacies of slavery been entwined with U.S. imperial ambitions at different times? And what can we learn from transnational approaches to "the intimacies of empire?"
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and 8 credits in History or Gender Studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Renda
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Female Portraits
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Art History 310)
The seminar investigates likenesses of women from ancient Greece and Rome. Facial features, body language, hair and clothing will be studied with reference to contemporary social customs, theories of character and beauty, medical treatises, beliefs in deity and in the afterlife. Special attention will go to original objects in the Mount Holyoke Art Museum, including marble portraits and coins depicting classical queens and empresses.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Asian Studies 340f)
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women's supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieus of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Gender, Food, and Agriculture in the Global Context - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Anthropology 316)
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 373 and Environmental Studies 373)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women and Gender in Modern South Asia - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive; HIST 301)
This colloquium will explore the history of South Asia as seen from women's perspectives. We will read writings by women from the ancient period to the present. We will focus on the diversity of women's experiences in a range of social, cultural, and religious contexts. Themes include sexuality, religiosity, rights to education and employment, violence against women, modernity and citizenship--in short, those issues central to women's movements in modern South Asia. In addition to the textual sources, the course will analyze Indian popular film and the representation of women in this modern visual genre.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: The Shakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 332)
This course will examine the historical and cultural creation of the Shaker society. Shakers were convinced that celibacy was the primary teaching of the Christian message. In the process, they reconfigured traditional understandings of God and Christ to include major female components, and they constructed a series of communities, built worlds, to reflect a new social and political order. Their music, art, and extensive visionary material also carried their understanding of gender relations and sexual activity (or lack thereof) into all areas of life in America. They were patriotic, but did not vote; were pacifists, anti-slavery, and communitarian.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Sex and the Early Church - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 306)
This course examines the various ways first- through fifth-century Christians addressed questions regarding human sexuality. We will concentrate on the rise of sexual asceticism and pay particular attention to the relationship between sexuality and issues of gender, culture, power, and resistance. Primary readings will include letters, narrative accounts of female and male ascetics, monastic rules, and "heretical" scriptures. These will be supplemented by modern scholarship in early Christian studies and the history of sexuality.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Latina/o Immigration
(Community-based learning course; Latin American Studies 387f, Sociology 316f(02))
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-
U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 330)
With the growth of Afro-Latin American literary studies, there has been a growing interest in the recovery and the study of works by women of African descent. This course will examine intersections of ethnic, cultural, national, class, sexual, and gender identities in representative texts (poems, short stories, essays, testimonios, and film) by Afro-Latina and Afro-Latin American women. We will discuss the construction and meaning of "race," color, and racialized gender roles. Secondary objectives include the development of research and writing skills and rudimentary orientation on various regional ethnic and feminist, cultural, and post/neocolonial theories.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: The Art of Fact: Writing the Lives of Women
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 302)
This course will examine narrative nonfiction biographies written by women biographers in order to determine the specific ways in which women tell the stories of other women's lives. We will investigate stylistic and theoretical approaches to writing biographies in which gender is a central focus. We will ask if "feminist biography" constitutes a literary genre. We will experience the challenges (and thrills) of conducting archival and primary research. The course will culminate in students writing chapter-length biographies.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Slanted Subjects: Queer Theories and Literatures in Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 350)
This class will interrogate the limits and possibilities of talking about a slanted or queer subject position with the context of Latin American literature. Looking at texts from the Caribbean, Central America and South America, we will explore the construction of a queer subjectivity through literature, film and visual art. We will pay careful attention to the intersections of class, race, gender, and sexuality to speak of queerness not only as a sexual orientation, but also as a decolonial intervention. Readings will draw from philosophy as well as literature.
Prerequisites: Two 200-level courses in Spanish above Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Witches in the Modern Imagination - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
From the middle ages to the present day, witches have evoked both fear and fascination. Their fellowships (real or fantastic) challenged the prevailing power structures of church and state patriarchies and upset the ordered precepts of the modern world. This seminar offers an overview of the history of witchcraft in Atlantic cultures, with special attention to the early modern British and American colonial eras. We will examine figures of the witch in European art; religious and legal texts that document the persecution of sorcerers; and dramatic, literary, and cinematic representations of witches that have helped to shape our understanding of gender, nature, theatricality, and power.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Thinking through the Body: Messy Feminisms, Queer Transfections, Cross-Species Connections - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

The brain sends an impulse, the body executes it? Science examines, matter is inert? Men look, women are displayed? People train, dogs and horses obey? The sperm is mobile, the egg lays waiting? Spirit (leaders) infuse(s), nature (the masses) receive(s)? "Thinking through the body," challenges these assumptions that some feminists see as coming from the stranglehold of masculinist Reason. Transfections are different ways of reaching into each other the esthetics, epistemologies, and politics of which we will explore. The sex wars, the AIDS crisis, the neo-baroque, translation theory, eating habits, and zoontologies are just some of the contexts explored primarily through film, literature, and theory.

(Spring) Seminars: Sense of Place, Sense of Planet

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.

The complex intersections of local and global processes underpin this exploration of a sense of place and an extended sense of planet. Specifically, we examine human-environment relations at various geographic scales and consider themes such as community, displacement, consumption and waste, sustainability, violence, and economic development. Field trips, in-class exercises, and thematic readings will further situate us both within the Pioneer Valley and the global context.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, one course in Geography and one course in related social sciences at 200-level.

Spring Seminars: Environment and Development in Latin America

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.

This course examines the spatially uneven, changing, and contested relationships between environment and development in Central and South America. We will focus on theories of development and of the causes and consequences of environmental degradation, reading these theories through the recent history of Latin America. Major topics include (post)colonialism, biodiversity conservation, resource extraction, gender relations, poverty reduction, peasantries and agriculture, and vulnerability to global change.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, one course in Geography and one course in related social sciences at the 200-level.

GEOG-399-01 - Geography - 2014-2015
(Fall) Getting Ahead in Geology and Geography
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 399)
This course provides support and mentoring for geology and geography majors as they pursue internships, summer jobs, independent research, and careers. Experiences will include: resume and communication workshops; self-reflection and sharing opportunities for students returning from internships, work experiences, and semesters abroad; guidance on preparing for, selecting, and applying to graduate school; information about careers in education and teacher licensure; and discussion of new research in geology and geography.
Prerequisites: Geography or Geology Major or Minor
Notes: Course meets just after the "Earth Adventures at Lunch" talks
Instructors: S. Dunn
Expected enrollment: 20

Geology

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Physical Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Humans are intimately connected with and dependent upon the physical environment. We have only been present on the Earth for a brief span, but we try to understand how the Earth has evolved since its formation over four billion years ago. Our knowledge of the Earth is critical, not only for reconstructing its history, but also for helping us to understand issues relevant to our lives, such as the availability of natural resources, pollution, climate change, and natural hazards. In this course, we will perform a general survey of the physical Earth. In classroom, lab and field, we will examine rocks and minerals of which the solid Earth is composed, processes that generate the Earth's landforms, natural hazards associated with those processes, and geologic time.
Instructors: P. Batra
Section Instructors: 01 LAB P Taylor | 02 LAB P Taylor |
Expected enrollment: 24

(Fall) Environmental Geology with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment. The labs cover selected geologic topics including methods for recognizing and interpreting environmental hazards, and developing strategies to address environmental problems.
Prerequisites: Preference given to first- and second- year students during the first week of registration. Juniors and Seniors should check ISIS after that for availability.
Instructors: S. Dunn
GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) History of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar
Life forms have inhabited the surface of our planet for most of its history. Earth, as a result, has a unique geology that is unlike that of any other planet. In this course we will examine the interrelations between life processes and Earth’s crust and atmosphere and how they work together to create the geology of the planet. Using both the rock and fossil record, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips will emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-103-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Because more than seventy percent of our planet is covered by oceans, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. We will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to affect weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to resources.
Instructors: P. Batra
Expected enrollment: 75

GEOL-107-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Environmental Geology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet at the same time it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for GEOL 101, but this course does not include a lab.
Instructors: S. Dunn
Expected enrollment: 25

GEOL-115-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Emergence of Animals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The origin of animals was one of the most important events in the history of earth. In this course we will review the history of the planet, learn basic geology, and then examine the problem of the origin of animals by studying Mount Holyoke's unequalled collection of Precambrian and Cambrian fossils. The emergence of animals has been called the Cambrian Explosion. We will examine what this means for our understanding of evolutionary theory.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOL-201-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Rocks and Minerals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
In this course you will learn to recognize the common rock-forming minerals and principal rock types, and to understand their origins, properties, associations, and geological significance. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on field trips. Students must have either a one-year high school earth science class or any 100- or 200-level geology course or Geography 107.
Instructors: S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Dunn | Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-203-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Surface Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The surface of the Earth is a history book of past environmental change. Every hill and valley, every erosional feature and every deposit is the result of processes acting at the Earth’s surface. In this course we study these processes (e.g. glaciers, rivers, slopes, coastlines, windblown sand, frozen ground, cave formation, soil development) to better understand how they work and to understand the resulting landforms and deposits. With this understanding we can then observe different landforms and deposits and infer past processes (environments of deposition).

Prerequisites: Geology 100 or 101
Instructors: P. Batra
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Werner
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-210-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Plate Tectonics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Plate tectonic theory explains the origins of volcanoes and earthquakes, continental drift, and the locations of mountain belts and oceans. This course focuses on the geometry of plate tectonics. Topics include mid-ocean ridge systems, transform faults, subduction zones, relative plate motion, earthquake analysis, triple point junctions, and stereographic projection. Work includes individual research projects on active plate boundaries.
Notes: Comfort with geometry and trigonometry required.
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOL-211-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Uranium - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
From the A-bomb to zircon, uranium has revolutionized humanity’s destructive potential and wisdom about time. Uranium is the planet’s heaviest naturally occurring element, and it transforms by both radioactive decay and nuclear fission. This course uses computer modeling to explore these two transformations and what we make of them, specifically: the age of the earth, high-precision dating of recent geologic and climate events, nuclear power, nuclear weapons, plutonium production, and the uniquely long-term challenge of nuclear waste disposal and storage.
Prerequisites: Any course in Chemistry, Geology, Math, or Statistics
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-224-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Paleontology-Stratigraphy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides an intensive study of fossils, fossil preservation, relationships between major groups of organisms, depositional environments, sediments, sedimentary rocks, and the processes of sedimentation. We will employ the principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation to interpret ancient environments and paleoclimate, reconstruct paleogeography, and probe the characteristics of sedimentary basins. Laboratory exercises and field trips will introduce a variety of analytical techniques used to study sedimentary rocks.
Prerequisites: one course in geology at the 100 or 200 level or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-227-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Groundwater - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major environmental concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we will cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students are required to prepare weekly problem sets/labs, a term paper, and an oral presentation.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level geology course
Instructors: A. Werner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Werner
Expected enrollment: 11

GEOL-295-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Expected enrollment: 12

GEOL-322-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Igneous and Metamorphic Petrology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course covers mineralogical and chemical compositions, classification, genesis, and mode of occurrence of igneous and metamorphic rocks, including relationships between rock-forming processes and global plate tectonics; labs involve the study of representative rock suites in hand specimen and thin section, introduction to analytical techniques and in-depth coverage of mineral optics. One or more field trips required.
Prerequisites: Geology 201 or Permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Dunn |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-326-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: Global Change - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The Earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change and the prospects of a warmer world.
Prerequisites: 1 200-level geology course or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 14

GEOL-333-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements meet: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology and structural analysis: field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock strength, deformation mechanisms, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Most labs are field trips that involve data collection. Weekly writing assignments focus on presenting original research and distinguishing between observations and interpretations. During the final weeks of the semester, oral presentations and a final paper emphasize fluency in the published literature of structural geology.
Prerequisites: Geology 201
Instructors: M. Markley
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Markley |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-334-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) History of the Earth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements meet: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course explores the evolution and interaction of life, rocks, oceans, and atmosphere during the past 4.5 billion years of earth history. Some topics covered are: ice ages and greenhouse atmospheres, continental drift, extinctions and radiations of flora and fauna, the early evolution of earth, absolute and relative dating of rocks, and the geologic time scale.
Prerequisites: Any one of the following courses: Geology 100, 101, 201, 203, 224, Biology 223, 226 or Environmental Studies 200
Instructors: P. Barra
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-341-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminars - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 10

GEOL-342-01 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: Current Topics in Geoscience
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
Consult the department for information about future seminars.
This seminar will focus on critical evaluation of ideas and methods presented in recent research papers covering a range of current topics in the geosciences. Active participation in class discussions is required.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in GEOL at 200- or 300-level
Instructors: S. Dunn
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-342-02 - Geology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: Death Valley Field Course - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
Consult the department for information about future seminars.
This seminar will cover selected topics on the geology of Death Valley region, California. We will meet for two hours per week up until spring break, then embark on a ten-day field trip to Death Valley National Park. A participation fee is required. Students will be responsible for researching particular topics and presenting a written and oral final post-trip report.
Prerequisites: two geology courses and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and ten-day field trip; enrollment limited
Instructors: S. Dunn, A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 12

GEOL-395-01 - Geology - 2014-2015

German Studies
GRMST-101-01 - German Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Elementary German
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces speaking, reading, and writing German. Cultural and literary readings together with frequent use of Internet resources dealing with everyday situations and experiences in the German-speaking countries sensitize students to the cultural context in which the language is used. Online grammar and listening comprehension exercises, as well as weekly conversation sessions with a peer assistant from Germany supplement class work.
Notes: required conversation session (50 minutes)
Instructors: D. Van Handle
Expected enrollment: 19

GRMST-201-01  German Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Intermediate German
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course emphasizes further development of contextual reading, writing, and speaking skills in German. Focus on strategies that help students learn vocabulary and use grammatical structures in appropriate ways. Discussion of a variety of texts and genres, as well as exploration of topics such as immigration and social justice. Frequent writing assignments and speaking opportunities.
Prerequisites: German Studies 101 & 102, or 103, or permission of instructor
Notes: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
Instructors: M. Lauer
Expected enrollment: 19

GRMST-215-01  German Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Lesen, Schreiben, Sprechen - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Intensive practice in reading, writing, and speaking German. Students will write short essays on topics of their choosing, in addition to application letters and a sample résumé for an internship or job in Germany. We will focus also on developing reading strategies and on improving students' ability to converse colloquially, idiomatically, and formally in German. Readings on popular culture, music, as well as current political, social, cultural, historical, and economic issues in the German-speaking world, reflecting student interest and academic focus. Students engage in a variety of speaking activities such as presentations, role-playing and simulations, pair work, and group discussions.
Prerequisites: German Studies 201
Notes: Students in German Studies 221fs or 223fs are strongly encouraged to enroll in German Studies 215f or 216s for additional language practice and review along with the focus on culture studies topics in 221 and 223.
Instructors: D. Van Handle
Expected enrollment: 15

GRMST-220-01  German Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Stories and Histories: German Culture from 1945 to the Present - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines historical, cultural, and political developments that continue to frame debates surrounding the twentieth century, WWII, the former GDR, and German unification. Thematic focus helps students develop accuracy, fluency, and complexity of expression. Reading, writing, and speaking are consistently integrated. Special emphasis placed on text organization toward expanding students' language abilities, with a gradual movement from personal forms of expression to written and public discourses.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German.
Notes: Students in 220 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 221).
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-221-01  German Studies - 2014-2015
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a novel, tell a narrative that makes us laugh and cry? Can it help us discern the constructions of our individual, national, and transnational identities? In which these works were produced. Authors include: the Grimms Brothers, Ludwig Tieck, Theodor Storm, Wilhelm Busch, E.O. Plauen, Barbara Honigmann, Janosch, Christa Wolf, Heinrich Böll, Anna Seghers. Students will practice and improve their reading, speaking, and writing skills through class discussions, essays with multiple drafts, grammar review, one oral presentation, and one exam.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 3 semesters of college German, or 3 or more years of high school German; or permission of instructor.

Instructors: A. Holden

Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) The Diversity of German Culture: 1800 to the Present: Once Upon a Time: Past and Present Fairy Tales and Stories

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This course introduces students to the tradition of the German fairy tale and the development of the short story from the 19th century to the present. We will discuss texts, picture stories, visual texts (cartoons), and watch short films and examine the historical, cultural, and socio-political context in which these works were produced. Authors include: the Grimm Brothers, Ludwig Tieck, Theodor Storm, Wilhelm Busch, E.O. Plauen, Barbara Honigmann, Janosch, Christa Wolf, Heinrich Böll, Anna Seghers. Students will practice and improve their reading, speaking, and writing skills through class discussions, essays with multiple drafts, grammar review, one oral presentation, and one exam.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 3 semesters of college German, or 3 or more years of high school German; or permission of instructor.

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: The Environment in German Literature and Art

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

Germany is often regarded as a progressive leader in developments concerning issues such as climate change, recycling, transport, renewable energy sources, sustainability, and environmental policies. This course examines environmental issues through the lens of German literature, film, and nonfiction texts from the 19th century to the present. Students will read texts and analyze cinematic treatments of ecological topics pertaining to the limits of technological progress, the effects on the environment of pollution and human-made environmental catastrophes, images of nature and landscape that shape cultural and personal identity, and eco-criticism. Taught in German.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: "Tickling Germany's Funny Bone: Laughter in German Film and Television - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

An article in the August 2012 LE MONDE indicates that Germans are indeed equipped with a Funny Bone. We will investigate that Bone to learn if everyone is truly both comic target and stand-up comedian: Ossi, Wessi, East Fresian native and Turkish immigrant. Le Monde notes the German passion for political cabaret, "No other dictatorship in the world has ever paid actors to mock the regime." Both Film and TV support strong comedy traditions, from slapstick and parodies of Westerns to romantic relationships. Jewish German comedy has created its own film genre, within a trans/national cinema culture. Recent films poke fun at male/female gender roles and smile at (three legal) gender identities.

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: "Curing" the Woes of Integration?: Culturally Diverse Film Comedy as "Medicine" - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

Early on, German cinema was embroiled in heated debates about its value: Is it, like the theater, both entertainment and education? Does it, like the novel, tell a narrative that makes us laugh and cry? Can it help us discern the constructions of our individual, national, and transnational identities? In recent decades, Germany, and Western Europe, have grappled with integrating large migrant groups. Politicians are frantically searching for a nostrum to cure the ills purportedly caused by integration failure; anti-immigrant rightist parties are growing in the EU. Yet a vibrant corpus of comedic films and literature about and by migrants has arisen. Will laughter prove the "best medicine"?2
Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 4 or more semesters of college German, or 4-5 years of high school German; or extended exchange study in a German-speaking country; or per I.

Notes: Students new to the department must complete the online placement exam. Final placement will be determined at the beginning of the semester. Please contact the instructor during the summer with any concerns. Students may consult with the instructor to take this course at the 300 level.

(Spring) Topics in German Studies in Transnational Contexts: Germans Outside Germany: German-Language Cultures in Europe - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

This course offers an introduction to the history and literature of Austria, Switzerland, and German-language cultures in Eastern Europe. We will examine the role the Habsburg Empire, World War II, the Holocaust, neutrality, immigration, and communist dictatorship played in the formation of national, cultural, and personal cultural identity. Authors discussed include three Nobel Prize Winners in Literature: Elias Canetti, Elfriede Jelinek and Hertha Müller, as well as internationally acclaimed writers such as: Frank Kafka, Robert Musil, Paul Celan, Ingeborg Bachmann, Ruth Klüger, Rose Ausländer, Catalin Dorian Florescu, Richard Wagner, Zsuzsanna Gahse, and Ilija Trojanow. Taught in German.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German

Notes: This course can be taken for 300-level credit.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Critical Social Thought 250)

Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.

An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century with emphasis on their relevance for contemporary issues. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, W.E.B. Du Bois and Franz Kafka focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life. Case studies of contemporary issues with attention to the impact of 19th century thinkers on critical theory in the 20th and 21st centuries also round out the course.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: Students with one or more years of college-level German may opt for German 232, a tutorial in close reading and translation of the German texts related to the material in 231. Students with no previous study of German are encouraged to take German 101 or 103 to complement this course.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 270s(01) Gender Studies 204s (06))
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.

Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform; Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim's It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi's Romeos, Mettke's Transpapa.

(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 220f-03)
Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (tragi)comedy in film.

Notes: Taught in English. Students with previous knowledge of German are encouraged to enroll in German Studies 223 instead. 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours)

(Spring) German from Curriculum to Career - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course studies selected filmmakers from Weimar to the present who have filmed literary texts and evoked the wrath of the censors: Sternberg's Blue Angel, H. Mann's Professor Unrat with Dietrich as the New Woman; Dudow/Brecht's Proletarian film, Kuhle Wampe, censored for including an abortion; Szabo's 1981 film of Klaus Mann's 1936 novel Mephisto, banned to protect actor Gustav Gründgens from a questionable Third-Reich past. Also, works by Kleist, Storm, Fontane, Hesse, Kafka, and Thomas Mann inspired filmmakers like Fassbinder, Huntgeburth, and Haneke, not only because they broke existing taboos but also by foregrounding current issues such as globalization, alienation, terrorism, and homophobia.

(Spring) Topics in German Culture in a European and Global Context: On Being Human: Medical Technology, Literary Imagination and the Suffering Body
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This interdisciplinary seminar takes a close look at the connection between German literature and medicine. We will explore what it is to be an embodied being: a body that ails, a body that heals, a body confronted with finitude. We will examine the ways in which technological advances have forced us to rethink our definition of mental health, disability, and even death itself. In our age of transplantation, gene technology and dreams of immortality, what are the benefits and ethical pitfalls addressed by German literature and film? Students will delve into a wide selection of literary genres, media and theoretical articles concerning these issues. Authors include Goethe, Salome, Bernhard.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: M. Meirosu

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units. (Speaking- and writing-intensive; The "long 19th century," with the political explosion of the French Revolution and the scientific explosion of the steam engine, burst into modernity, defining itself and the "short 20th century" in manifold areas: science, economics, politics, art, literature, education. Controversial values are attributed to concepts like secularization, nation-building, industrialization, and democratization. We will analyze representations in film and text of such discoveries and visions, e.g., in bacteriology, environmentalism, political and social upheaval, the concept of a democratic nation state, Marx's theories, Bismarck's German unification, the social-security system, and women's movements.

GRMST-325-01 - German Studies - 2014-2015

(Fall) Senior Capstone Seminar

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This seminar is designed to explore the nature of our field of inquiry in theory and practice. 1) All students read texts exploring such questions as: What does German Studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? Why learn German vis a vis "global English"? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization"? 2) Students pursue independent research connecting German studies and another major academic field of interest, respond critically to each others’ work, and lead discussions.

Prerequisites: sr; non-seniors by permission of the department; normally 8 credits in dept. or per I

Notes: Pending approval by the AAB, this seminar may constitute the first 4 credits of the 8 credits of independent work required in Faculty Legislation for completion of an honors thesis. During spring semester, students would continue the project started in 325, in a 395 independent study with the instructor of 325 or another supervisor.

(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Germans outside Germany: German-Language Cultures in Europe - *Not offered this year/term

(Taught in English)

Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms of "culture" and "civilization?" Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.

This course offers an introduction to the history and literature of German-language cultures in Austria, Switzerland, and Eastern Europe. The focus is on the role that topographical locations and socio-historical circumstances of German-language writers outside Germany, but inside geopolitical constructs like: World War II, the Holocaust, neutrality, immigration, and communist dictatorships play for an understanding of national, cultural, and personal identity formation. Authors discussed include two Nobel Prize Winners in Literature, Elfriede Jelinek and Herta Müller, and Max Frisch, Urs Widmer, Ilse Aichinger, Franz Kafka, Doron Rabinovich, Ingeborg Bachmann, Peter Handke, Richard Wagner.

History

(Fall) Foundation: Jack the Ripper and the Making of late-Victorian London
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In the summer and fall of 1888, a series of gruesome murders captured the attention of Londoners and brought questions of class, gender, race and social-economic change to the forefront of public debate. Though the culprit was never identified, Jack the Ripper became synonymous with the perceived dangers of late-Victorian London. Using newspapers, periodicals, police archives, and other sources from the period, this course will set students on an historical investigation of the "Whitechapel Murders," seeking to understand the event, its historical context, and the way historians have interpreted its meaning.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. Fitz-Gibbon
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Foundation: How Wars End
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar
What social processes and institutions are necessary to bring an end to war? Do the efforts of citizens make a difference? What is the role of beliefs regarding identity? What about access to resources? What is the role of visible forms of restorative or retributive justice? This first-year seminar focuses primarily on small, regional conflicts in Africa to explore the social processes and institutions which facilitate the resolution of conflict. We will begin in the late 19th century, but concentrate on more recent events. Course assignments are designed to develop skills in academic writing, historical research, and collaborative learning.
Prerequisites: fy

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Foundation: The Once and Future Family Farm? A Social History of Small-Scale Agriculture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Small-scale agriculture fed the world until the middle of the 20th century, and the majority of the world's population farmed small plots in rural areas until the last decade. What role will family farms play in the world we are creating? We examine how small scale agriculture has changed over the past 200 years in East and West Africa, the Andes, China, India, and in the United States, and consider its future. Using recent and classic scholarship, autobiographies, memoirs, archives, and oral histories, we will develop skills in analysis, critical reading, and academic writing. We will visit local farms and interact with farmers on other continents using social media.

(Spring) History of Modern South Asia, 1700 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course will explore the history of South Asia between the eighteenth century and the present. Using a combined chronological and thematic approach and against a historical canvas that engages such diverse issues as gender, political economy, conquest, resistance, state formation, economic exploitation, national liberation, and identity politics, the aim of this course is to interrogate the impact of British colonialism and South Asian nationalisms on the state, society, and people of the subcontinent. Using primary and secondary sources, we will address both the most significant historical moments of modern South Asian history and the historiographical debates that surround them.
Instructors: N. Gill

(Fall) Modern East Asia, 1600-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
A comparative history of China, Japan, and Korea from the early seventeenth century to the present, with strong focus on regional interaction. After an introduction to early modern histories and cultures, we will examine the struggles of these countries to preserve or regain their independence and establish their national identities in a rapidly changing, often violent modern world order. While each of these countries has its own distinctive identity, their overlapping histories (and dilemmas) give the region a coherent shape. We will also look at how individuals respond to and are shaped by larger historical movements.

HIST-141-01 - History - 2014-2015
(Fall) Africa in the World - *Not offered this year/term
(Community-based learning course)
This course explores exchange and interaction among peoples living on the African continent and those living in South Asia, East Asia, Europe and the Americas. We begin with the spread of African-domesticated grains 5,000 years ago and end with 21st century Chinese/African businesses. We study the transmission of ideas, technologies, and goods through trade across the Sahara and the Indian Ocean, observe both voluntary migration and enslavement, and consider political and economic imperialism and their aftermaths. The course seeks to develop capacities to read effectively, to argue convincingly, and to write well. We will collaborate with recently arrived African immigrants in our region.

(Spring) Religion and Politics in Modern India
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Religion 223)
The history of India has been singled out for its complex intermingling of religion and politics. This course will explore the constitution of religious identities in two of India's largest religious communities: Hindu and Muslim. Focusing primarily on the colonial period, we will discuss religious reform movements, communal violence, mass politics, and the partition of the subcontinent into the independent states of India and Pakistan. Throughout we will be interested in the ways that the colonial experience affected the religious thought and practice of Indians. Finally, we will explore the meanings of this history for the postcolonial workings of democracy and secularism in modern India.

(Spring) History and Law - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to the study of history through law, using a comparative approach to group rights. Case studies, rooted in landmark court decisions and legislation, concern racial segregation in America before the civil rights era ("separate but equal") and in Europe during the Nazi era (the Nuremberg Laws, German "national groups" in the East), as well as affirmative action in America and attempts at promoting equality among national groups in Austria before the First World War.

(Fall) Special Topics in Medieval History: God Save the Queen: Ruling Women from Rome to the Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will explore female rulership in Europe from the late Roman empire to the age of Elizabeth I. Our discussion of various texts and images (most of them primary sources in translation) will reveal the role of queens within their societies, their relationship to broader social and cultural institutions such as the Christian Church, and the ways in which queens were celebrated, criticized, and imagined by writers and artists of their time.

(Spring) Native American History through 1865
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course surveys Native American history from ancient times through the U.S. Civil War, tracing the ways that tribal communities have shaped North America. Beginning with the diverse indigenous societies that inhabited the Americas millennia before Columbus's arrival, it discusses the cultural complexity of Native peoples, nations, and worldviews rooted in particular ecosystems and homelands. It moves through the early modern era of European scientific exploration and "discovery" of a New World, and the pivotal violences of the "Indian Wars" of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and early nineteenth centuries.

HIST-238-01 - History - 2014-2015
(Spring) The Qing Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
The most populous contiguous state on earth, the Qing Empire ruled much of East Asia for nearly 300 years (1636-1912). Its 17th and 18th century conquests created the shape and extent of modern China. Its powerful commercial economy and skillful artisans drew merchants from all over the world to its great trading cities. This course will survey the Qing's rule, focusing on the Manchu military and political elite, the enormous and diverse population over which it ruled, and the international contexts of its rise, flourishing, and fall. Students will read works of the "New Qing History," as well as primary sources, and will undertake both group and individual research projects.

HIST-244-01 - History - 2014-2015
(Fall) European Public Policy, West and East
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
In 1968, the USSR terminated the Prague Spring, and commenced a strategy of consumerist depoliticization in its European satellites. Around the same time, states on the other side of the Iron Curtain saw the postwar "miracle" of rapid economic growth and social consensus come to an end. This course, reaching across the revolutionary break of 1989 up to the present, raises questions of convergence and continuity in European public policy, West and East. Paired case studies from a variety of countries in fields such as energy and the environment, minority rights, and housing serve to clarify evolving rules and patterns to the policy-making game, from Cold War to European Union.

(Fall) Introduction to Comparative Empires - *Not offered this year/term
This course probes the characteristics of imperial rule, as well as the differences between one empire and another. The course asks: What are empires, and what animates them - economic exploitation, power politics, and/or cultural commitments? How do empires impose and maintain their authority, and what is their impact on centers and provinces, and on elites and the common people? How do empires deal with the heterogeneous peoples, religions, races, and cultures they conquer and incorporate into their fold? Who is driven to resist imperial power, how do they resist, and what other forces lead empires to dissolve? Finally, what is the relation between empire and the modern nation state?

HIST-252-01 - History of Money and Finance
(Spring) History of Money and Finance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
What is money? Is it the same in all times and places? If money could speak, what stories would it tell of the past? This course is about the history of money and money as an object of history. Using primary and secondary sources, students will learn about the social, political and cultural meaning of money at different times in the history of the western world. In addition, students will interpret the history of money using a variety of coins and money-related objects held in the MHC Art Museum. This is a course on the history of money, not the economics of money, but it will be of interest to anyone curious to learn more about the meaning of money in the past and today.

(Spring) Ideas and Society in Modern Europe: City Life in Modern Europe, 1750-1950 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(European Studies 260)
"Our age is pre-eminently the age of great cities," wrote Robert Vaughan in 1843. Many Europeans questioned whether the greatness of cities was such a good thing, but most agreed that the history of nineteenth-century Europe could not be written without reference to them. We will examine that history from the perspective of Europe's largest cities between the mid-eighteenth and twentieth centuries. Taking greatness in its broadest sense, our readings will treat both the feats of urban transformation and the murkier histories of streets, sewers, sex, and slums. We will learn of the unruliness of cities and of their being ruled through government, social reformers, planners, and engineers.

(Spring) Research Methods in History, Environmental Change, and Public Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Environmental Studies 257)
An introduction to interdisciplinary research methods in history, social science, and the digital humanities, using environmental change and public health as themes for investigation. Topics include the collection, organization, and analysis of information from on-line databases and research collections as well as bibliographic management. Computer-assisted analysis of textual information and GIS will be introduced to study agricultural change, industrialization, and public health during the 19th and early 20th centuries with data on Great Britain. Research projects for the U.S. are possible but limited by less abundant digital data on public health.

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: World War I and the Making of the Twentieth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
World War I (1914-1918) was arguably the transformative event of the 20th century. It destroyed four empires, enabled the Russian Revolution, reconstructed the political geography of Central Europe, strengthened independence movements in European possessions overseas, and facilitated the rise of fascism and a second world war (1939-1945). This course explores this history by examining the war's origins, nature, and manifold consequences from 1890s to 1939 in Europe and in global perspective. Readings include Vera Brittain, Testament of Youth, and Modris Eksteins, Rites of Spring: The Great War and the Birth of the Modern Age.

Instructors: R. Schwartz

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: The Habsburgs, Hitler, and the Law
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course starts in 1848 and ends in 1948, with the imposition of Stalinist rule on a region recently purged of Jews through the Holocaust and stripped of Germans through mass expulsion. The territorial focus is Bohemia and Moravia, lands of the Habsburg Monarchy, then of Czechoslovakia, and then of Nazi Germany. Through peace and war, we study the growth of German and Czech nationalism, the responses of a Jewish minority, and the attempts by a liberal monarchy, a democratic republic, a fascist dictatorship, and its anti-fascist successor to manage national or racial conflict through law. Readings include constitutions, poetry, radical rants, secret documents, decrees, and more.

(Fall) German History in the Modern World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course pushes beyond cliches and simplistic images about Germans, into the world-shaping and humanity-stretching German past. Beginning with the Napoleonic Wars and the emergence of German nationalism, students will follow developments up to the present--using primary sources that range from sublime to depraved and that concern politics, literature, music, and more. Themes include the roots of Nazism and of German democracy and the responsibility of individuals for social outcomes.

(Spring) Topics in North American History: African American Women and U.S. History
(Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine selected topics in the history of North America. Topics to change from year to year. Some will focus exclusively on the history of the United States; others will treat North American history more broadly.

How is our understanding of U.S. history transformed when we place African American women at the center of the story? This course will examine the exclusion of African American women from dominant historical narratives and the challenge to those narratives presented by African American women's history through an investigation of selected topics in the field.

(Fall) Topics in the Recent History of the United States: The United States since 1945: We Didn't Start the Fire
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses are designed for students with a background in American history who wish to focus attention on developments since the late nineteenth century.

The United States emerged from the Second World War as the most powerful nation on earth. This course explores American political, cultural, and social life in the postwar era, with an eye toward helping students gain a firmer understanding of contemporary issues and conflicts in our nation and around the world. Topics include birth of the national security state, the Cold War at home and abroad, popular culture and consumer society, the civil rights struggle, the political and cultural rebellions of the 1960s, the resurgence of conservatism, and America’s changing relationship to the world in the post Cold War era. Students will have the opportunity to do a research paper on the topic of their choice.

(Spring) Education and Development in Africa: History and Ethnographic Research Methods
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Community-based learning course)
What knowledge will allow us to realize the potential of education to facilitate progress for Africa, and how do we generate that knowledge? The historical component of this course explores the deliberate use of education to hold people in servitude as well as African experiences of empowering education, and asks why the immense efforts expended on education in recent decades are not yielding prosperity for the citizens of African nations. The methods component of the class develops the core skills of ethnographic fieldwork: participant observation, interviewing, making fieldnotes and writing ethnography. We collaborate with the Springfield Renaissance School ninth grade.

(Fall) Women in History: Women and Gender in the Middle East
(Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 206)
This course is designed to provide students with a nuanced historical understanding of issues related to women and gender in the region defined as the area from Morocco to Iran. After an introduction to the main themes and approaches in the study of women and gender, we will examine the development of discourses on gender and the lived experiences of women from the rise of Islam, through the Ottoman Empire, and up to the twentieth century. Topics: the politics of marriage, divorce, and reproduction; women’s political and economic participation; Islamists movements; the new field of masculinity studies; and the highly contested topics of homosexuality and transsexuality in the Middle East.

(Spring) Women in History: African Women: Food and Power
(Community-based learning course; Gender Studies 206)
This course uses archival records, fiction, film, life histories and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of power and authority despite their continuing centrality in food production. We study the erosion of women's autonomy and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's subordinate place in the world economy. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. No previous Africa coursework required. Optional collaboration with African immigrants in our region.

(Fall) Colloquium: Reading the New York Times: Journalism, Power, History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course examines the political and cultural power of the New York Times in the American past and present. Students will analyze the NYT today through daily reading, study its evolution as an institution, and research its coverage of critical historical events over the past century. We will also explore several larger issues: the history of news and newspapers; the relationship between journalistic practice and writing history; tensions between news organizations and government; the blurred boundaries between news and entertainment; the emergence of various ideological critiques of "the media."

(Spring) Colloquium: Race, Gender, and Empire: Cultural Histories of the United States and the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333G)
Recent cultural histories of imperialism—European as well as U.S.—have illuminated the workings of race and gender at the heart of imperial encounters. This course will examine the United States' relationship to imperialism through the lens of such cultural histories. How has the encounter between Europe and America been remembered in the United States? How has the cultural construction of "America" and its "others" called into play racial and gender identities? How have the legacies of slavery been entwined with U.S. imperial ambitions at different times? And what can we learn from transnational approaches to "the intimacies of empire?"

(Fall) Colloquium: History of Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 301-01)
We live in an age of energy crises, in which the future of energy is questioned in countless headlines and Twitter feeds. Often our energy agony accompanies other assumptions about energy's past, in particular the idea that social change invariably follows the discovery of new energy technologies. From food to fuel cells, this colloquium charts a more complicated and interesting history, a history in which people have continually shaped and made meaningful the energies that fuel the modern world. It will be of particular interest to students in history and environmental studies and to those interested in the social study of science and technology.

(Fall) Colloquium: The Indian Ocean World
(Speaking-intensive)
In recent years, the Indian Ocean has become an exciting field of historical scholarship, contributing to new understandings of Indian and world history. This colloquium explores trade and travel, conquest, religious conversion, and migration across a large area, from East Africa to the islands of Southeast Asia. Its purpose will be to understand a complex and integrated commercial system, pivoted on the Indian subcontinent, by considering movements of goods and people across the Indian Ocean.

(Spring) Germans, Slavs, and Jews, 1900-1950
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
This course explores relations among Germans, Slavs, and Jews in Central and Eastern Europe before, during, and after the First and Second World Wars. Emphasis lies on tracing continuities and ruptures in nationalist and racist ideologies and policies, from late imperial Germany and Austria through the interwar republics and then on to the Third Reich and the post-Nazi regimes. Topics covered include the Holocaust, Nazi treatment of Poles, and the expulsion of millions of ethnic Germans from Poland and Czechoslovakia after 1945, but also mutual accommodation, assimilation, liberal group rights, and the ambiguities of who was German or Slavic or Jewish in the first place.

(Fall) Asian History: The Meiji Revolution: Late Nineteenth-Century Japan

(Asian Studies 331)

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

A research seminar on the late-nineteenth-century transformation of Japan from a feudal state ruled by hereditary warriors into a modern nation-state ruled by a cabinet, a legislature, and a professionalized bureaucracy under the symbolic sovereignty of a sacred monarch. A turning point in East Asia's modern history, this revolution shaped the following century throughout the region and remains a subject of intense scholarly and popular interest. We will begin with secondary readings--social and political history, biography, and cultural history--then each student will identify a research question and discover her own sources to answer it in a 20-page final essay.

(Writing-intensive; See Biological Sciences 308)

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

This seminar examines the causes and the course of the Civil War, its social, economic, and political results during Reconstruction, and the early roots of both de jure segregation and the civil rights movement. It will examine the process of emancipation from the perspective of social history. Violent conflicts over free labor, the establishment of sharecropping, and the political and economic policies pursued by various groups - freedpeople, ex-masters, northern policymakers, wage laborers, and African American women, for example - will be covered. African American viewpoints and histories will receive particular emphasis.

(Spring) The Afterlives of Objects: Revisiting Early American and Indigenous Histories through Material Culture

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Material culture studies examine relationships between people and objects. Tangible artifacts like furniture, clothing, ceramics, tools, and buildings give insight into communities' identities, aspirations, and struggles. This course approaches early American and indigenous histories through objects, and considers how interdisciplinary methodologies can reveal alternative understandings of the past. The course traces changing theories and practices of preservation, curation, and display; shifting conceptions of "heritage" among diverse peoples; and ethical challenges posed by Native American items held in museums.

International Relations

IR-200-01 - International Relations - 2014-2015
(Spring) Research Methods
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Develops students' skills in writing expository essays and introduces basic quantitative and qualitative research methods used in the social sciences and history. The course provides a foundation for writing research papers in advanced courses, as well as an honors thesis.
Notes: This course should be taken by IR majors in their sophomore year.
IR-211-01 - International Relations - 2014-2015
(Fall) Middle East Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
Introduction to the cultures and politics of the Middle East. Includes the situation of the region at the time of the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire; the emergence of independent states before and after World War II; the rise of Arab and Zionist nationalism; the Arab-Israeli conflicts; and the superpower rivalry and its influence on regional politics. Other topics include the Iranian revolution, the domestic and regional role of Islamic movements, and the political economy of oil.
Prerequisites: Politics 116

(Fall) European Politics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar explores European politics and societies from a transnational and historical comparative perspective. First, we discuss what kind of supranational entity the European Union is in the context of present and classical theories of European integration and supranational cooperation. Second, we explore European societies and public debates through transnational comparison: How do European leaders, journalists, and engaged citizens in different countries define democracy, citizenship, and equality in the context of globalization in comparison to North Americans or citizens in other regions?
Prerequisites: Politics 116
Instructors: N. Doerr
Expected enrollment: 40

IR-237-01 - International Relations - 2014-2015
(Fall) International Human Rights - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.
Prerequisites: Politics 116 or permission of instructor

IR-241-01 - International Relations - 2014-2015
(Fall) Global Resource Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
An intensive examination of the international politics surrounding disputes over the ownership, extraction, and vital natural resources including fresh water, petroleum, arable land, timber, minerals, and oceanic fisheries. The course will assess the growing pressures being brought to bear on the world's resource base, including population growth, globalization, unsustainable consumption, and climate change. It will also examine the various ways (war, adjudication, conservation, innovation) in which various actors (states, regional and international organizations, multinational corporations, warlords, civil society groups, and so on) are responding to contemporary resource disputes.

(Fall) Topics in International Relations: The Principles and Practice of International and Non-Profit Work

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course provides an introduction to the principles and practice of international and non-profit work through an examination of development projects undertaken in United Nations and Non-Governmental Organizations. It offers opportunities for the development of authentic skills in project management as well as a new understanding how to interact in a multicultural environment. We will examine, apply, and critique the skill sets needed for planning, monitoring, evaluating, and communicating the results of development projects. We will draw upon examples from a range of health, education, protection, and humanitarian emergency projects on several continents.

(Fall) Transnational Social Movements in World Politics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

How do multinational corporations, interest groups, NGOs, and social movements engage in world politics? In exploring this question, this course provides an introduction to the study of transnationally operating non-state actors and transnational social movements. First, we will look at the influence of movements on inter-state relations and on international organizations. Second, we will investigate their increasing involvement in global governance. The class concludes with recent debates on the global economic crisis and conflict resolution and on global immigration, politicization, and democratization through social movements and new media.

IR-305-01 - International Relations - 2014-2015
(Spring) International Society

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

An intensive reading course in theories of international society: the idea that states and peoples are or should be linked to each other through a web of shared values and institutions. It focuses on the work of Hedley Bull, Immanuel Kant, and John Rawls. How did these three men understand international society? What are or should be the values and institutions that give rise to it and support it? What implications do their visions of international society have for war and peace, state sovereignty, religion, democracy, capitalism, distributive justice, human rights, and international law? What responses and criticisms have their arguments engendered?

(Spring) Culture and Social Movements
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How do cultural diversity and inequality influence cooperation among NGOs and social movements cooperating in complex transnational environments and multicultural organizations on the ground? This course provides an introduction to the study of culture, including debates about class, race, and gender, nationality, language, and religion. First, we will investigate culture within transnationally operating non-state organizations such as NGOs and activist groups. Second, we will look at culture as a set of discourses and practices including news media analysis and the role of social media and cultural and political translation practices used by the most recent wave of global protests for equality, justice, and democracy.

(Spring) Democratization in the Middle East and North Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course provides a historical, theoretical, and empirical foundation to comprehend and question complex dynamics of political change and democratization in the Middle East. In Spring 2011, the region entered an irreversible process of political change and democratization despite strong authoritarian backlash. We will explore: What are the underlying socio-economic causes that led to the eruption of the revolution? What are the Islamic movements and what is their role in political change in the region? What explains the electoral success of Islamic-leaning parties in almost all free and fair elections in this region? Why was the Arab Spring largely contained in authoritarian republics?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course challenges students to explore and understand the Muslim world in a new era characterized by globalization, and to examine its various effects on the Islamic world. Though politics of the Muslim world has been largely studied with exclusive reference to states, the course encourages students to look beyond this statist paradigm to salient non-state actors. It provides a conceptual and theoretical framework helpful in examining various cases and issues pertaining to the process of globalization and the Muslim world, such as: transnational Islamic movements and networks, Muslims in global business or living as minorities, Islamic legal and moral doctrines, gender and human rights.

(Spring) A Different Language Is a Different Vision of Life: Contemporary Italy through Cinema - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English)
Film director Federico Fellini said that a "different language is a different vision of life." How has the Italian "vision of life" changed from Mussolini's dictatorship to Berlusconi's government? From the birth of the Republic in 1946 to the debate ignited by Roberto Saviano's bestseller Gomorrah, this course traces transformations in modern Italian society. Through historical and literary readings, films, and the media, this course explores the difficult path towards modernity Italy has traveled in the last five decades. We will explore contemporary popular culture and films that reflect these transformations and analyze family, religion, gender, sexuality, and class conflict.

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321, Romance Languages 375)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321) This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.
Instructors: E. Castro-Cuenca

JWST-212-01 - Jewish Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Introduction to Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.
JWST-225-01 - Jewish Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) The Sabbath in Jewish History and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 225)
The Sabbath, the notion and institution of a day of rest, appears to have been innovated in ancient Israel, as evidenced by the Hebrew Bible. This course systematically explores the origins, development, and nature of the Sabbath in Judaism, including desisting from labor and worldly pursuits, and as an opportunity for spiritual rejuvenation and communal celebration. How has the observance of the Sabbath changed over time, and varied among different regional communities? How has it evolved in our own time? We will also take a comparative approach by studying Sabbath or days of rest in other religious traditions, including both Western and Asian cultures.
Instructors: L. Fine
Expected enrollment: 19

(Fall) Contemporary Jewish Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 232-01)
This course will explore issues of contemporary ethics from the point of view of Jewish religious thought and tradition. Topics will include medical and genetic ethics, death and dying, family and sexual ethics, ethics of war, poverty, and the environment. The course will explore these issues in the context of theoretical approaches to questions of religion and ethics.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in religion or Jewish studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Fine

(Spring) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 235)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Zohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of Eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Spring) Encounters Between Judaism and Other Religious Traditions: Christianity, Islam, and Buddhism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 249)
This course will explore selected examples of the encounter between Judaism and other world religious traditions. Living alongside other religious traditions over millennia, how have Jewish religious thought and practice creatively appropriated, adapted, as well as resisted aspects of "foreign" religions. Examples we will consider include encounters with medieval Islam in the realms of Arabic poetry and Sufi mysticism, Christianity in connection with religious ritual, mystical notions of the divine feminine, and in our own time, the influence of Buddhism on American Judaism.

JWST-250-01 - Jewish Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) Intermediate Hebrew
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course emphasizes skills necessary for proficiency in reading, writing, and conversational Hebrew. It presents new grammatical concepts and vocabulary through texts about Jewish and Israeli culture and tradition, as well as popular culture and day-to-day life in modern Israel. Course material includes newspapers, films, music, and readings from Hebrew short stories and poetry. Starts a transition from simple/simplified Hebrew to a more literate one, and sharpens the distinction between different registers of the language.
Prerequisites: At least one year of college Hebrew or equivalent or permission of instructor
Notes: Attendance will be required at a weekly Hebrew language table at either Mount Holyoke College or Smith College.
Instructors: J. Caravita
Expected enrollment: 18

JWST-256-01 - Jewish Studies - 2014-2015
(Fall) What Didn't Make It in the Bible
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 256.)
Hundreds of ancient religious texts did not make it into the Hebrew Scripture (aka the Old Testament). This course examines some of these excluded writings. In particular, we will focus on works found among the Apocrypha, the Pseudepigrapha, and the Dead Sea Scrolls. We will read an ancient Harlequin romance, tour heaven and hell, hear of the adventures of fallen angels who sired giants (and taught humans about cosmetics), and learn how the world will end. In critically examining such texts, we will better appreciate the diversity of Judaism, better understand the historical context of early Christianity, and explore the politics behind what did and did not make it into the bible.

(Fall) Jewish Religious Art and Material Culture: From Ancient Israel to Contemporary Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
(Religion 270-01, Art History 290-01)
Despite the biblical prohibition against "graven images," there exists a rich history of Jewish religious art and aesthetics. This course will study ancient Israelite art and archeology, including the Second Temple in Jerusalem, the extraordinary mosaic floors and frescoes of early synagogues throughout the Mediterranean world, medieval illuminated Hebrew manuscripts and printed book culture, synagogues of later periods, including the wooden synagogues of Eastern Europe, and Judaic ritual objects of many types. Jewish art, architecture, and visual representation will be explored in the context of the ancient Near Eastern, Greco-Roman, Christian, and Islamic settings in which they evolved.
Instructors: L. Fine
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) The Jewish Poetic Tradition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 285)
Beginning with the psalms of the Hebrew Bible, Jewish religious tradition has produced beautiful poetry over the course of three millennia. This course explores this rich and varied tradition, including biblical poetry, the extraordinary Arabic influenced poetica of medieval Spanish Jewry, the poetry of Jewish mystical tradition, Holocaust poetry, and contemporary poems. The course will also include a comparative dimension, with examples from other religious traditions, focusing on contemplative poetry.

(Fall) Roma Ludens: Comedy and Satire in Ancient Rome

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

Could Romans be funny? Perhaps surprisingly, in a culture where seriousness (gravitas) and sternness (severitas) were praiseworthy attributes, Romans enjoyed theatrical productions adapted from Greek comedies - from raucous and ribald farces to more subtle comedies of manners. They also believed that satire, poetry that poked fun at the vices and foibles of human nature, was a truly Roman genre. Moreover, both comic and satirical elements appear in a wide range of Roman literature. Authors may include Plautus, Terence, Horace, Ovid, Martial, Juvenal, and others.

Prerequisites: Latin 222 or permission of instructor; 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: P. Debnar

(Fall) Myth, Memory, and History: Writing the Past in the Roman Republic - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement

Livy and Sallust, the best known historians of the Roman Republic, viewed history writing as a moral enterprise, presenting events from the past as exemplary tales to inform and enlighten the lives of their readers. Their narratives thus are highly rhetorical, combining myth, memory, and history to reconstruct the past. Close reading of selections from Livy's Ab Urbe Condita and/or Sallust's monographs--the Bellum Catilinae and Bellum Jugurthinum--will lead to discussions about how Romans viewed their past and how they wrote about it.

Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course

Instructors: G. Sumi

Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Special Topics in Latina/o Studies: Multicultural Theater and Latina/o Experience
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Theatre Arts 234NT)
This course examines the landscape of American theater and its relationship to the politics of diversity in the United States. We will study the theater work of Latinas/os in the U.S. to broaden our understanding of multicultural theater. In addition to studying dramatic texts, we will consider the political implications of the work and its relationship to social activism. We will look at theater companies whose primary missions are to produce Latino/a theater and at the history of the representation of Latinos on stage in this country. We will draw upon theory from fields such as cultural studies, feminist studies and dramatic criticism as we think and write about the creative work in this course.
Instructors: P. Page

(Gender Studies 333)
This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriquenas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centroamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas, and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.
Instructors: M. Diaz-Sanchez
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Race and Representation in Latina/o Film - *Not offered this year/term
(Film Studies 370)
This seminar offers an interrogation of the ways in which Latinas and Latinos are represented in the cinema. We will explore early portrayals of Latinas and Latinos in film history and then explore contemporary cinema with a focus on race, class, gender and sexuality in these representations. Employing multiple aesthetic and disciplinary approaches we will analyze commercial films alongside independent films with particular attention to the market-driven and political mandates of these projects. We will focus on films by both Latina/o filmmakers and non-Latina/o filmmakers interrogating the multifarious points of entry of these artists.
Instructors: M. Díaz-Sánchez
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Trans-Latina/o Cultural Studies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course begins by discussing the conceptual framework of cultural studies and analyzing the intellectual interceptions made by transnational Latin@ formations, followed by a discussion of transnational Latinidades and what Juan Flores and George Yudice describe as "transcreative" formations. Using these frameworks as a point of departure, we examine a range of particular issues that connect both Latin@ and Latin American communities around specific cultural practices, including the politics and claiming of space, the making of a Latin@ public sphere, transnational and subaltern imaginations, cultural production and consumption, and alternative/subversive performance practices.
Instructors: M. Diaz-Sanchez, W. Valentin-Escobar
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Visualizing Immigrant Narratives: Migration in Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course offers an interrogation of overt and embedded narratives of migrants and the migration process in popular and documentary film, paying specific attention to cinematic representations of non-citizen bodies confronting migration, deportation, labor, acculturation, and anti-immigrant hysteria. Film screenings and class discussions comprise the interpretative lens through which students will examine the aesthetic, cultural, economic, gendered, historical, political, racial and sexual dimensions of cultural texts. The course is supplemented with readings about immigration policies and histories.
Prerequisites: jr, sr
Notes: Plus 2-3 special screenings
Instructors: D. Hernandez
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Latina/o Immigration
(Community-based learning course; Gender Studies 333UU, Sociology 316f(02))
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.
Instructors: D. Hernandez
Expected enrollment: 19

(Spring) Disposable People: A History of Deportation from the U.S.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; CST-365, LATAM 387DP)
Taught in English, the course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the 20th century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice. The course also offers an optional Community-Based Learning (CBL) component.
Instructors: D. Hernández
Expected enrollment: 15

Mathematics

MATH-100-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Precalculus: Preparation for Problem Solving in Science and Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is intended for students who, based on the results of their precalculus assessment and the agreement of the instructor, need to strengthen their quantitative and algebraic precalculus skills in order to be ready to progress to calculus, science, and economics courses. In this class students learn to translate word problems into mathematics, to solve complex multi-step problems, and to gain confidence in using logarithms, exponents, and trigonometry in different types of problems.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Send score from math online self-assessment and background information to mpeterso@mtholyoke.edu.
Instructors: B. Westgate
Expected enrollment: 19

(Fall) Calculus I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is for students who have not studied calculus and who have the necessary precalculus background. It presents rates of change and their applications, integrals, the fundamental theorem, and modeling of phenomena in the natural and social sciences. All students are required to complete the online self assessment of precalculus skills before the course begins.
Instructors: J. Biermann
Expected enrollment: 40

MATH-112-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) History of Mathematics: History of Mathematics Through Galileo
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The ancient world had a surprisingly sophisticated mathematics. From Babylonia to Hellenistic Greece we find examples of mathematics that are worthy of admiration even today. Somehow, this high level of mathematics was abandoned, to be regained only slowly in the Middle Ages and Renaissance. In the early 17th century, something mysterious and remarkable happened, often called the Scientific Revolution, coinciding with a new understanding of ancient mathematics. We will use the life and work of Galileo to help organize and understand this story.

MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
We will cover the arithmetic of whole numbers and of prime numbers, in particular, examining some of the earliest questions in mathematics from a modern perspective, finding whole number solutions to equations with several variables, deciding whether or not such solutions exist and if so, determining whether the solution set is finite or infinite. Topics include the theory of “finite arithmetic,” converting questions about the infinite set of whole numbers to those involving just a small set of primes, using computers to examine problems numerically.
Prerequisites: a good grasp of arithmetic
Instructors: the department
Instructors: C. Morrow
Expected enrollment: 20

MATH-156-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Developing Mathematical Ideas K-8: Building a System of Tens and Making Meaning for Operations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Education 256)
The course is designed to develop students' conceptual knowledge of the mathematics children encounter in grades K-8 and deepen their understanding of how children make sense of these mathematical concepts in meaningful ways. Students are expected to participate fully in this active and engaging class environment. They will pose questions, share ideas, and contribute to the work and discussions that take place in small groups and whole group situations. There will be weekly reading and writing assignments and maintenance of a portfolio. Students are required to have access to early childhood, elementary, or middle school students for four assignments during the semester.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Flynn
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Chaos: What Is It and What are Its Implications for Everyday Life? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar
Are tornadoes and hurricanes random events or can they be predicted mathematically? Do epidemics spread in predictable patterns? Chaos theory was born at the intersection of randomness and predictability. In this course we will pursue an understanding of this theory and its implications for everyday life by reading novels and plays, academic and news articles, as well as by watching films, investigating fractals, and doing mathematics. How is it that this theory appeared so suddenly in the 1970s in such disparate fields as art, meteorology, biology and medicine, mathematics, and physics, and what is its continuing impact on the culture and philosophy of today's world?

(Fall) Calculus II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Most students who have taken calculus in high school begin with Calculus II. In particular, if you have studied the derivative and its applications and have been introduced to the definite integral, you will be prepared for Calculus II. Please read the "Beginning the Study of Mathematics" section.
Topics include techniques of integration, applications of integration, differential equations, sequences, series, and Taylor series.
Instructors: M. Peterson

Prerequisites: at least one Mathematics class at the two hundred level or above
Instructors: A. Schwartz
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Discrete Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Studies some aspects of discrete mathematics. Topics include sets, functions, elementary probability, induction proofs, and recurrence relations.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 or Computer Science 101 or above, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Schwartz

(Spring) Discrete Mathematics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

MATH-251-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, or permission of instructor

MATH-302-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Complex Analysis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Topics include differentiation and integration of functions of a complex variable, the Cauchy integral formula, residues, conformal mapping, and applications to physical science and number theory.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 301 or Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205), or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges
Instructors: the department

(Spring) Topics in Analysis: Analytic Number Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
We will look at the application of methods from calculus and analysis in general to answer questions about the integers. This began with Euler's use of the divergent harmonic series to prove the infinitude of the set of primes, so we will start with that idea. From there we will go on to learn about Dirichlet's variant of a p-series, called a Dirichlet L-function, and see how he combined elements of algebra and analysis to prove that any "appropriate" arithmetic progression contains infinitely many primes.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, 211; Mathematics 301 helpful but not required
Instructors: G. Davidoff

MATH-311-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Abstract Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Topics include algebraic structures: groups, rings (including some elementary number theory), fields, and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, and one chosen from Mathematics 232 or 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Schwartz
Expected enrollment: 20

MATH-311-02 - Mathematics - 2014-2015

(Spring) Topics in Geometry and Topology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topologicaal spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251 and 301, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Differential Equations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This is an introduction to differential equations for students in the mathematical or other sciences. Topics include first-order equations, second-order linear equations, qualitative study of dynamical systems, and first- and second-order linear partial differential equations.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Peterson

(Spring) Mathematical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Topics include specific examples of mathematical models that have been formulated to deal with problems arising in various applications, together with an outline of the development of particular mathematical tools and techniques used in these models.

Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211
Instructors: the department
Expected enrollment: 30

MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Stochastic Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A stochastic process is a collection of random variables. For example, the daily prices of a particular stock are a stochastic process. Topics of this course will include Markov chains, queueing theory, the Poisson process, and Brownian motion. In addition to theory, the course will investigate applications of stochastic processes, including models of call centers and models of stock prices. Simulations of stochastic processes will also be used to compare with the theory.

Medieval Studies

MEDST-217-01 - Medieval Studies - 2014-2015
(Spring) Special Topics in Medieval Studies: Bad Lovers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 230BL)
Love is constantly thematized in Medieval and Renaissance literature. From a variety of perspectives, authors try to account for what love is, what its effects are on the body and the soul, how one is supposed to obtain it and keep it, and also how and why it can be avoided. Writing about love is also questioning what is considered essentially good or bad for oneself and the community. In this course, students will explore medieval and early modern love theories and practices in a selection of Spanish texts, as they reflect on literature as a means for ethical interrogation.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Early Muslim/Christian Encounters
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Religion 337MC)
This course explores a set of recently discovered documents that substantially changes our understanding of Christian/Muslim relations. We will read texts such as a Christian/Muslim debate, a bishop's letter on how to bribe Muslim rulers, and an exorcism account concerning demon-possessed monks. Students will be among the first in a thousand years to read these works providing them with a strong knowledge of the history of Christianity, of Islam, and of their first interactions with each other.

Music

MUSIC-100-01 - Music - 2014-2015
(Fall) Basic Musicianship
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Explores the ways in which sound is organized into musical structures. Topics include the physical properties of sound; the basic vocabulary of Western music (scales, key signatures, intervals, triads, rhythm, meter); and an introduction to musical form and analysis. Includes extensive practice in music reading, sight singing, ear training, and critical listening.
Instructors: G. Steigerwalt

(Spring) Music and Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.
Instructors: M. Gionfriddo
Expected enrollment: 15

MUSIC-103-01 - Music - 2014-2015
(Spring) History of Jazz - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will follow the origins and evolution of jazz from the late nineteenth century to the present, with emphases on prominent stylistic trends and significant individuals. Along with some analysis of the musical language jazz employs, the music will be examined in its relation to the social contexts that helped produce and shape it. The ability to read music is not a requirement for this course.
Instructors: D. Sanford

(Fall) The Hyperbolic World of Opera in 25 Episodes -- An Introduction to Western Classical Opera from the Renaissance to the Present Day - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course begins with the birth of opera at the end of the Renaissance Period, and ends with some of the most successful operas in the past decade. Our investigation includes operas in English, French, German, Italian and Russian. Alongside an introduction to the materials of opera, from vocal fachs, forms, and styles, to vocal virtuosity, the course situates opera as a cultural phenomenon by considering the unique set of historical, intellectual, social, political and economic conditions of each work of art. The course includes some opera projections; each one is preceded by an introduction of the period in which it was first performed and is followed by class discussion.

(Fall) Adventures in Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Designed for students with or without prior musical experience, "Adventures in Music" explores the materials of music. Through reading, hands on interaction with instruments and their players, discussions and recordings, students will explore concepts of pitch, time, space, structure and timbre, thereby enriching their perception of the world of sound. The best way to access the indescribable in music is often to make music. With this in mind the class will embark in mini composition projects culminating in a final project that utilizes the knowledge acquired over the duration of the course.

(Spring) World Music - *Not offered this year/term
(Writing-intensive)
This course is a survey of selected musical traditions from different parts of the world, including Africa, Indonesia, Indian, the Caribbean, and the United States. The course adopts an ethnomusicological approach that explains music as a cultural phenomenon, and explores the social and aesthetic significance of musical traditions within their respective historical and cultural contexts. It examines how musical traditions change over time, and how such changes reflect and relate to social and political changes within a given society. Weekly reading and listening assignments provide the basis for class discussions. Students are expected to undertake a final project in music ethnography.
Instructors: O. Omojola

MUSIC-228-01 - Music - 2014-2015
(Spring) African Folk Opera in Theory and Practice - *Not offered this year/term
(Writing-intensive; Theatre 215-02)
In this course, African folk opera will provide the framework for exploring salient features of African music. The course will begin by examining a wide range of performance elements, including ensemble practice, the role of dance, and musical storytelling. The second part will feature practical sessions culminating in a public performance of an African folk opera. Students will work with visiting African master drummers and choreographer. The practical sessions will afford students an opportunity to reflect on the theoretical issues examined earlier on in the semester, and gain practical knowledge of the African operatic tradition.
Instructors: B. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) African Popular Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines selected genres and their relationships to the political and social dynamics of their respective national origins. Regional examples like highlife, soukous, chimurenga, and Fela Anikulapo-Kuti's Afro-beat will provide the basis for assessing the significance of popular music as a creative response to the African colonial and postcolonial environment. The course also discusses African hip-hop music by exploring how indigenous cultural tropes have provided the basis for its local appropriation. Themes explored include music and identity; music, politics, and resistance; interaction of local and global elements; and political significance of musical nostalgia.
Instructors: O. Omojola

(Spring) Conducting I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Conducting I introduces musicians to the fundamentals of conducting including common beat patterns, tempo, score study for conducting and rehearsal skills. In addition, students explore how these fundamentals have to be adapted to fit their own physiology and by extension how they individually express music in movement. Issues pertinent to conducting, such as styles of leadership, musical leadership, conducting in the different contexts, performance practice etc. The conducting class forms the ensemble for the class. Detailed study of each student's gesture is assisted by the review of taped conducting footage, reflective journals, rehearsal plans and ultimately a mini class performance.

(Fall) Advanced Interdisciplinary Topics: Art, Music and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Biologic Sciences 321A(f))
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of visual and auditory stimuli, ask how this processing may affect the way we do art and music, and explore where these phenomena may occur in the brain. As we engage in discussion and hands-on activities, we will discover the commonalities between the arts and the sciences including practice, experimentation, exploration, innovation, and creativity.

(Fall) Topics in Music: Analytical Studies in World Music
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to increase familiarity with and facility in the use of primary materials for musicological/ethnomusicological and/or theoretical research, as well as in the critical evaluation of published scholarship. Engagement with a shared topic at the outset of the semester provides the context from which each student fashions an independent project. Oral presentations are integral to the course, with a major paper as the final requirement.
The main focus of this course is to facilitate a culturally sensitive analytical engagement of musical traditions from different parts of the world. The course surveys some of the theoretical and methodological issues that have shaped the field of ethnomusicology and influenced the study of musical traditions, and examines musical examples from different parts of the world, including Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Emphasis will be on understanding musical structures as defined in specific traditions, and the ways in which musical performances/compositions relate to and are shaped by factors emanating from the cultural environment in which they are situated.

NEURO-100-01 - Neuroscience and Behavior - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to Neuroscience and Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This comprehensive survey course explores the brain and the biological basis of behavior. We will examine the anatomy of the nervous system and the unique properties of the cells that make up the brain. We will discuss the mechanisms by which individual brains cells communicate with each other, and how small networks of cells underlie more complex processes such as perception, learning, and behavior. In labs, students will perform experiments that expand upon and reinforce these ideas through hands-on exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission from Gary Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB  | 02 LAB  |
Expected enrollment: 24

(Fall) Conference Course: Neurotechnology: Thinking on the cutting edge of science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Science 321(N))
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Recently, the development of novel technologies for probing neurobiological questions has proceeded at a dizzying pace. This course focuses on three broad fields in neurotechnology: optical methods for examining neural activity and structures, innovations in electrophysiology, and mind-machine interfaces. Specific topics may include: optogenetics, 2-photon microscopy, "brainbow" imaging, methods for single ion channel recording, and neuroprosthetics. Presentation, discussion, and critique of research articles will form the core of the course. As a culminating experience, students will write mock grant proposals for experimentation based on techniques discussed in class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Instructors: G. Tanner
Expected enrollment: 24

NEURO-330-01 - Neuroscience and Behavior - 2014-2015
(Spring) Biology of Neurological Diseases
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Biology of Neurological Diseases will explore the molecular and cellular basis of neurological diseases. We will investigate the biological mechanisms underlying neurodegenerative diseases, such as Alzheimer's disease. We will focus on animal models used to investigate pathogenic mechanisms and the biology underlying therapeutic strategies. This class will rely heavily on primary research articles and in-class discussions.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220 plus Psychology 250 or Neuro 100

Instructors: K. Colodner

Philosophy

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will discuss questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: Philosophy As A Way of Life
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar is about what it means to live a philosophy. The ancient Greek philosopher Socrates--(in)famous for living and dying according to his beliefs--will provide our central case study. Through a close reading of various historical texts, we will critically examine how Socrates' philosophical views directed his life. We will engage with the philosophical questions raised in these texts, including questions about the demands of political participation, the place of friendship in an examined life, and the proper attitude toward death. And through class discussions and frequent writing assignments we will develop our skill at articulating our own answers to these questions.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. Hagen
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.

Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to ancient Greek philosophy, focusing mainly but not exclusively on the works and ideas of three Athenian philosophers who worked and taught in the period between the Persian Wars and the rule of Alexander the Great, more than 2,300 years ago: Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the world? What is truth, and how can it be known? What kind of life should we live? We will work to understand each philosopher's responses to these questions, but we will also learn to develop our own answers. We will take care to place these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.

Instructors: V. de Harven
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.

Instructors: D. Hagen
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will focus on classic and contemporary work on central topics in ethics. The goal will be to see whether there is anything to be said in a principled way about what to do and how to live. The core of the course will be an examination of the central traditions in moral philosophy in the West, typified by Aristotle, Kant, and Mill. We will also examine vexing contemporary moral issues with an eye to whether moral theories can give us practical guidance. Finally, we will step back and ask whether any of the moral theorizing we have been engaging in is really capable of uncovering objective moral truths.

Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Knowledge and Reality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?

Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-209-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Theories of Probability and Causation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this course we will look at theories of causation, probability, and their interaction. We will look first at Hume on causation, and then move on to some very basic probability theory. We will briefly explore the standard statistical approaches and go on to Bayesian reasoning and confirmation theory. Finally, we’ll examine recent developments in the Bayesian Net theory of causation. As a whole, the class is an investigation of recent mathematical and philosophical theories about how science works, what justifies the hypotheses we ought to believe, and how observations could justify hypotheses about unobserved entities and regions.

Prerequisites: One course in either Philosophy or Mathematics or permission of instructor.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.

Instructors: D. Hagen

(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Chinese Thought: The Classical Period - Not offered this year/term
(Asian-214)
An introduction to Chinese thought in the Classical period (~500-221 BCE), a time of great social and political furor. We will study (in translation) the works of Kongzi (Confucius), Mozi, Zhangzi, Mengzi (Mencius), Han Feizi, and others, with an eye to the contemporary relevance of ancient Chinese thought. We will ask such questions as: What kind of life should one live? What is the source of political authority? What is human nature? We will work to understand each philosopher's answers to these questions, and develop our own views in response. We will take care to put these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: J. Harold

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory "good"? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? In what ways does science in practice depart from scientific ideals? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.
Instructors: The department

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-238-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Ethics of Career Choice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Mary Lyon said "When you choose your fields of labor, go where no one else will go." For most students attending a college like Mount Holyoke, one of the most important questions is: what career should I prepare to pursue after graduation? When most of us think about this question, we tend to think about self-centered considerations: what will make us happy, or express our talents, or provide financial independence. This class examines the ethical aspects of choosing a career. Do we have moral responsibilities to others, to ourselves, or to future generations, in choosing our careers? For example, are we obligated to work against social injustice? How should such moral considerations affect this most important of choices?
Instructors: J. Harold

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Social and Political Philosophy - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will cover three topics (liberty, equality, and the reconciliation of liberty and equality) along three dimensions of justice (interpersonal, civic, and distributive) and through the lens of three theories of justice (utilitarianism, libertarianism, and egalitarian liberalism).
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Philosophy and Literature - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course examines philosophical themes in literature and philosophical questions about literature. Can literature yield knowledge about the world? What is the meaning of a work of literature, and how can we know it? Are the author's intentions relevant to how a work is to be interpreted? Can works of literature be immoral? How is the identity of the reader relevant to the understanding of a literary work? What is a work of literature? Can a work of literature also be a work of philosophy?

Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-249-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Women and Philosophy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course will focus on topics to which feminist thinking has made important philosophical contributions, such as: pornography, objectification, and consent. We will draw on a variety of philosophical resources, ranging from liberal and feminist political theory, to speech act theory. We will consider questions such as: Is pornography morally problematic? Can sexism or other biases lead to bad science? Is it wrong to choose to be a stay-at-home parent? The goal will be to see how careful philosophical thought can help us with pressing issues of sex and gender.

Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-250-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Philosophy of Mind: Science of Happiness

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Philosophers have long debated the nature of happiness and its contribution to the good life. Happiness is something we all want, but what is it, and why do we all want it so much? What makes us happy and why? Is happiness just a matter of feeling good? Can psychology or neuroscience help us better understand happiness? How might a better understanding of happiness help us think about society, education, and well-being? This course will draw on literature, psychology, and neuroscience to help us pursue the philosophical task of understanding happiness.

(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Nineteenth Century - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores the ways the nature, possibility, and extent of human freedom were conceptualized by German philosophers in the nineteenth century. Readings are drawn from the work of Hegel, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. Specific topics include Hegel's metaphysics of spirit, Feuerbach's critique of religious and philosophical mystification, Marx's analysis of alienation, and Nietzsche's ideal of the "Over-Man."

(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.

PHIL-260-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Problems in Global Ethics: Climate Change, War, and Poverty

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice.
Living in a global world presents distinctive and pressing moral problems. What are the responsibilities of individuals, particularly individuals living in relatively affluent societies, to prevent climate change, and to alleviate the harms caused by it? How should we act to prevent war, and should we ever initiate wars in order to prevent greater evils (such as genocide)? What responsibilities do citizens of relatively affluent nations have to prevent and ameliorate poverty and global inequality? In order to reason clearly about these questions, we will need to think deeply about the notion of global citizenship (or "cosmopolitanism") and the nature of individual moral responsibility.

Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-260-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Global Bioethics and Public Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice.

As the ongoing Ebola crisis shows, health and disease are increasingly global. This course focuses on ethical aspects of global medical and public health problems. Topics discussed include: whether access to health care is a universal human right; whether justice requires addressing global health inequalities; whether Western bioethical principles (like informed consent) rightly apply everywhere; and whether pharmacological knowledge rightly constitutes an intellectual property.

Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Philosophy of Mind - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Philosophy of the Arts - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

The purpose of this course is to explore philosophical problems concerning the arts and aesthetic experience. Some questions to be explored include: What is the difference between beauty and moral goodness? Can taste be objective? What does it mean for a work of music to be "sad"? Are the intentions of artists relevant to appreciation? What is the purpose of art criticism? How do pictures represent objects? Readings will be drawn from both historical and contemporary philosophical writings.

Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement (Film Studies 290s(02))

An exploration of philosophical and theoretical issues encountered in the study of film such as: Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? There will be weekly required film screenings.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in Philosophy or Film Studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (1.5 hours)

Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 27

PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement (Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)

When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
How do words come to mean things? Frege introduced two aspects of meaning: reference, that is, whatever expressions pick out in the world, and sense, a publicly accessible means by which expressions pick out their references, which must be grasped by all speakers. This course is an extended examination of the concept of sense, the uses to which it has been put, and the criticisms that have been lodged against it. We'll look at Frege's work, the complaints made by Quine and Kripke, Davidson's theory of meaning, and Dummett's defense of sense.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-327-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
*(Fall) Advanced Logic - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of Gödel's incompleteness results. It includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in philosophy or mathematics, or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-328-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
*(Spring) Non-Classical Logic - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course looks at the recent flowering of non-classical logics. The most prominent are modal logics concerning necessity and possibility, which have come to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. Conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have also become important. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy but also are interesting in their own right.
Prerequisites: One course in Logic, Mathematics, Computer Science or Philosophy 209
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-334-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
*(Spring) Topics in Ethics: Moral Epistemology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will focus on a handful of epistemological challenges to morality. We will consider questions such as: How is moral knowledge possible? Can we gain moral knowledge from testimony? What are the implications of the prevalence of moral disagreement? Do our evolutionary origins pose a challenge to our moral beliefs?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Vovova
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2014-2015
Topics in Philosophy: Freedom and Responsibility

If all our actions are causally determined, is free will possible? Might we be justified in blaming, praising, rewarding, or punishing people even if their actions are not free? Abstract metaphysical questions about freedom intersect in important ways with everyday problems we face in our relationships with others and our attitudes about moral ignorance and madness. This course will examine these issues side by side in the hope of improving our understanding of freedom and responsibility.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department or permission of instructor

Instructors: E. Vavova

Expected enrollment: 19

Topics in Philosophy: Socrates Against the Sophists

In a number of Plato's dialogues we find the character Socrates debating various sophists--itinerant teachers-for-hire whose views were often diametrically opposed to Socrates' own. This seminar is structured around a close, careful reading of three such dialogues: the Euthydemus, the Protagoras, and the Gorgias. These dialogues will offer a general introduction to Socratic philosophy, but we will also focus on a few issues in much greater detail. Chief among those special topics will be questions about the nature and value of moral knowledge, the possibility of moral education, and the efficacy of the Socratic method of inquiry.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Philosophy or Classics (or in a combination of Philosophy and Classics) or permission of instructor

Instructors: D. Hagen

Expected enrollment: 19

Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Kant - *Not offered this year/term

Immanuel Kant's Critique of Pure Reason is one of the few works in the Western philosophic tradition that fundamentally transformed our understanding of the place of human beings in the world. This seminar involves a careful, critical reading of the text in order to assess the nature and significance of the epistemological and metaphysical views it expounds. There will be frequent, short papers.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 202 or equivalent

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

Philosophy of Art: Illustration

Illustrations surround us, occurring in picture books, scientific texts, fine art editions of books, magazines, and in the pockets of airline seats. Yet there is little philosophical reflection about illustrations and their functions. In this seminar, we will investigate the topic of illustration theoretically and practically. There will be readings, viewings, and studio sessions. Participants will be expected to take part in this approach, producing both written and studio work. Our approach will be eclectic, hoping to educate our eyes, minds, and bodies about this important use of images.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

Philosophy of Art: Arthur Danto - *Not offered this year/term

This seminar will focus on the work of Arthur Danto, perhaps the preeminent contemporary philosopher of art and art critic for The Nation. We will explore his writings from his seminal essay, "The Artworld," to his recent book, The Abuse of Beauty, in an attempt to understand his views on art, its development, and its future.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

Philosophy of Film: Dangerous Movies

This seminar will focus on the work of Arthur Danto, perhaps the preeminent contemporary philosopher of art and art critic for The Nation. We will explore his writings from his seminal essay, "The Artworld," to his recent book, The Abuse of Beauty, in an attempt to understand his views on art, its development, and its future.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19
Preamble (for topics courses): An examination of different theoretical issues concerning the nature of film and film viewing. Topics vary yearly.

Many critics considered Kathryn Bigelow's Zero Dark Thirty to be the best film of 2012, but it was also widely criticized for seeming to promote torture. Movies can be morally dangerous, seemingly endorsing or even promoting immoral or discriminatory ideals, or romanticizing immoral characters and behavior, as in Hannibal Lecter from Silence of the Lambs (Thomas Harris, 1991). In this course, we evaluate the arguments given for treating certain movies as immoral, and we examine whether and how our moral evaluations of movies should affect us. When, if ever, are movies immoral? Should certain movies be censored? Should we withhold praise from morally objectionable movies?

PE-452-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Advanced Dressage
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
For experienced dressage riders to improve understanding of straightness, rhythm, obedience, and suppleness. The goal is to improve application of aids through a balanced and effective seat. Riders at this level must have experience riding First Level movements or above.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (60 minutes); Riding Fee, $765
Instructors: M. Hilly
Expected enrollment: 5

PE-455-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Bringing Dressage Theory to Life
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will explore a series of principles and movements in classical dressage with extensive use of video and text and then work to apply this knowledge in mounted sessions. For advanced dressage riders. Class will meet one time per week mounted and one time per week unmounted. Unmounted session meeting time TBD by instructor and class at first class meeting. One section offered.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings, 60 minutes. Riding Fee, $605
Instructors: P. Pierce

PE-456-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Jumping for Boarders and Ship Ins
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
For experienced jumping riders with their own mounts to learn and practice over fences weekly. Hunter, jumper, equitation, and event riders welcome. Each week gymnastics and/or full courses will be used to best train the horse and rider to negotiate jumping obstacles in a smooth and harmonious manner with emphasis on track, pace, balance, rhythm, and timing. In the event a personal horse becomes unusable, a pro-rated fee will be incurred.
Prerequisites: By permission.
Notes: 1 meeting, 60 minutes. Riding Fee $405
Instructors: J. Collins

PHYED-110-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Pursuit of Wellness
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
This course examines topics within the physical, mental, psychological and social dimensions of wellness. Current research and trends in health and wellness are emphasized and students will be encouraged to apply this knowledge in practical ways for healthful living. While this course is not activity based, a few classes will involve physical activity to promote wellness.

Prerequisites:
Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Women in Sport - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Gender Studies 216)

This course is designed to introduce students to the history of women in sport, the status of women in sport since the passage of Title IX in 1972, and current issues impacting women in sport such as race, gender, and sexual orientation. Students will explore the influence of sport on the lives of women and how selected women sport leaders have influenced the growth and development of sport.

Notes: No P.E. credit. Academic credit only.

Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

PHYED-275-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2014-2015

(Spring) Introduction to Sport Pedagogy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Community-based learning course)

This course is designed to introduce students to the many facets of sport pedagogy and coaching. Our focus is the strategies and styles of coaching youth sports. Topics include coaching philosophy, motor learning, anatomy and physiology, biomechanics, sport psychology and risk management/liability. Other topics include the benefits of playing sports, developing age-appropriate instruction and training, goal setting, effective feedback, special issues in coaching children, and coaches as role models for children. In a local school system, we will apply the concepts and theories learned, by developing and implementing lesson plans to introduce various athletic skills and sports.

Notes: No PE units awarded.

Physics

PHYS-100-01 - Physics - 2014-2015

(Fall) Foundations of Physics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.

PHYS-104-01 - Physics - 2014-2015

(Spring) Renewable Energy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

(Environmental Studies 104)

We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements... and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.

PHYS-105-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Science in the Media - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar
Popular coverage of science ranges in depth and accuracy, and many scientists do not see the importance of communicating their work, or their excitement, to the general public. Scientific breakthroughs contribute to everyone's quality of life, but the process is poorly understood by many, leading to misunderstandings and misgivings that can affect public policy. This course will look at newsworthy results from current scientific research, exploring topics to better understand the science, ideas such as scientific consensus and repeatability, and examining the tension that may exist between the scientists and the public. Topics will be pulled largely from the physical sciences.

Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-210-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Waves and Optics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, and special relativity.
Prerequisites: Electromagnetism (Physics 190/201) and Intro to Math Methods (Physics 200/205) or concurrent enrollment in 205
Instructors: S. Smith
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Gender in Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 241)
This course examines explanations for the underrepresentation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-222-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Sciences 322)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.

PHYS-250-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 200/205 and 210
Instructors: S. Smith
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-290-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Advanced Laboratory Practicum - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is a hands-on practicum, intended to introduce students to the practice of modern physics research. Depending on student interest, topics include external research seminars by practitioners in the field, training in oral and written scientific communication, presentation and interpretation of research results, scientific modeling, and hands-on experimental skills. Research projects are an integral part of this course; credit will be apportioned in relation to the intensity of the project.
Prerequisites: Permission of department

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 190/201
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined)
Instructors: T. Herd
Expected enrollment: 14

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Newton's great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.

Prerequisites: Physics 200/205

Instructors: S. Smith

Expected enrollment: 22

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
*(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green's functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.

Prerequisites: Physics 201,205

Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years

Instructors: The department

Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.

Prerequisites: Intro to Math Methods (Physics 200/205)

Instructors: S. Smith

Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solids; the specific heat of solids.

Prerequisites: Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205) and Quantum Mechanical Phenomena (Physics 302/250) or permission from department

Instructors: S. Smith

Expected enrollment: 12

*(Spring) From Lilliput to Brobdingnag: Bridging the Scales Between Science and Engineering - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Writing-intensive; Chemistry 328

The performance of many engineered devices is dependent on macroscopic factors (pressure, temperature, flow, conductivity). As a result, engineers often model devices macroscopically considering atomistic level details only through fixed parameters. These parameters do not always capture the full atomistic level picture. More accurate multi-scale approaches for modeling macroscopic properties use basic atomistic level chemistry at key points in larger scale simulations. This course is an introduction to such approaches focusing on fuel cells as a concrete example. Basic scientific principles will be developed along side of basic engineering principles through project/case studies.

Prerequisites: Math 202 and Physics 216/190

Instructors: M. Gomez

Expected enrollment: 15

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2014-2015
(Spring) Quantum Mechanics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; and perturbative methods.

Prerequisites: Physics 250

Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Politics and Truth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors' perspectives on these questions.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Family Ties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
In this course, students will engage a number of classic works of literature and philosophy, as well as contemporary works, in order to reflect on the ways the family shapes private and public life and is, in return, shaped by them. We will cover such questions as: how does the family create and then influence the individual? What does it mean to be part of a family? What do individuals owe their families and are those obligations fair? How do we form families? Can the family insulate individuals from politics and society--in good ways and bad? Is political order like familial order? Are the state and society a threat or support for the family? How have these understandings changed over time?

POLIT-100-02 - Politics - 2014-2015
(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: What in the World is Going On?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
We know the world faces several profound problems that may well threaten the long-term sustainability of life as we know it: environmental degradation and resource limits, deepening global inequality, global corporate capitalism, and ineffective national and international political institutions. To respond wisely, we must understand the complex interlocking systems we loosely name contemporary globalization. Only then will we be able to imagine appropriate responses and solutions.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: The Politics of Food - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
A critical examination of the political and economic forces informing the production, distribution, marketing, and consumption of food in the United States. We will look at the power relations and institutional arrangements that inform what we eat. Topics include the industrialization of food production and its impact on workers, public health, and the environment; animal welfare, veganism, and other ethical issues; the marketing of unhealthy diet choices; and corporate influence over agricultural policy and food regulation. We will also consider various individual, cultural, and policy solutions to the problems surrounding food and diet in America.

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Black Metropolis: From MLK to Obama - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar
"Black Metropolis" refers to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King's failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson's urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.

POLIT-106-01 - Politics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Comparative Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course provides an introduction to comparative political analysis, one of the four subfields of political science. The primary objective is to help students understand how the "modern" world, one characterized by the rise of industrialized nation-states, took form and what shape it might take in the post-Cold War era. We will examine how the challenges of economic development, social transformation, and nation-building sparked the emergence of alternatives to "modernity" characterized by diverse configurations of political institutions and social forces. We will also assess how globalization and the re-emergence of local identities may be redefining our understanding of "modernity."

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: How Words Change Worlds: Writers, Politics, and Power
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Jean Paul Sartre tells us words are like "loaded pistols." They have the power to transform worlds and inspire revolutions. Focusing on the power of language and the ideas they carry, we will look at writers as agents of social and political change. How do governments and society react to their work (censors, the media, readers?) We have two goals: to examine the interaction between aesthetics and politics, and the relationship between writers and governments. We will include some of the "greats" such as Rousseau, Swift, Orwell, Sartre, Andrei Platonov, Solzhenitsyn, Rushdie and Chinua Achebe.

(Fall) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Through the works of the ancient tragedians and comedians, Thucydides, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Augustine, Aquinas, and Pizan, this course explores themes in ancient and medieval political thought. In alternating years, the course will be taught as either a survey of a wide array of authors or as a more thematically focused study of just a few writers. In either format, we will pay particular attention to the ways these writers characterized the relationship between the individual and community; the roles knowledge, reason, emotion, and rhetoric play in political life; the link between gender and citizenship; and the various forms political community can take.

(Spring) Oil and Water Don’t Mix: Geopolitics, Energy, and the Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; RES 242s)

Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

This course probes the characteristics of imperial rule, as well as the differences between one empire and another. The course asks: What are empires, and what animates them - economic exploitation, power politics, and/or cultural commitments? How do empires impose and maintain their authority, and what is their impact on centers and provinces, and on elites and the common people? How do empires deal with the heterogeneous peoples, religions, races, and cultures they conquer and incorporate into their fold? Who is driven to resist imperial power, how do they resist, and what other forces lead empires to dissolve? Finally, what is the relation between empire and the modern nation state?

(Fall) Gender and Power in Global Contexts: The Politics of Abortion in the Americas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Gender Studies 250f(02))
The Americas have been characterized by the strictness of their laws in the criminalization of abortion. In some countries abortion is criminalized even when the woman's life is at risk. What role have women's movements played in advancing abortion rights? What has mattered most for a movement's success, its internal characteristics or external forces? Has the way the movement framed its demands mattered? How has the political influence of the Catholic and Evangelical churches influenced policies in this area? We will answer these questions by exploring examples from across the region through primary and secondary sources.

(Community-based learning course; Africana Studies 302)

Gentrification, unemployment, crime, failing schools, disinvestment, mass incarceration—what comes to mind when you think of the inner city? In response to a constrained fiscal environment, cities have increasingly adopted neoliberal policy approaches to address seemingly intractable urban problems. The seminar will study current research to assess the political and economic impact of this neoliberal policy regime on housing, education, and public safety. This is an inter-institutional class, linked with an advanced seminar on the same topic at Holyoke Community College. Both classes will meet together occasionally for films and guest speakers.

(Fall) Nationalism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 330)

Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments’ responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

*(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 312)

The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Spring) European Studies Seminar: Foreigners Within, Foreigners Without: The EU and its New Neighbors
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Russian and Eurasian Studies 316)
The enlargement of the European Union (EU) to Central and Eastern European countries has generated new neighbors to the east and south - the Western Newly Independent States (WNIS) of Russia, Belarus, Moldova, and Ukraine, and Southern Mediterranean countries (SMCs) Egypt, Libya, and Tunisia. Europe's new neighbors make up 410 million inhabitants, but their GDP capita is barely one tenth of the European Union's. This has brought problems for the EU, including migration pressures, human trafficking, and refugees. How is the EU dealing with these issues and how will relations with the new neighbors affect the domestic and foreign policies of the EU?
Prerequisites: jr, sr; at least one course at the 200 or 300 level relevant to European studies or permission of the instructor

(Fall) Democratization and Civil Society in East Asia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course examines the dramatic emergence of democratic institutions and civil society in East Asia. The primary aim of the class is to help students understand and analyze the process of democratic unfolding in Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. We will also evaluate China’s recent, albeit limited experiments with democratic practices. We will begin by contrasting Western perspectives of democracy with both traditional and more contemporary Asian understandings of democracy. We will then focus on the actual processes of democratic consolidation in each of the cases, especially the developments that precipitated political crisis and ultimately, political change.

(Spring) Politics and Rhetoric
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Writing-intensive)
People have long accused politicians of using rhetoric to pander to audiences and get what they want regardless of the truth. But democratic politics depends on communication to persuade and motivate others. In this course, we will analyze classical writings on rhetoric, contemporary democratic political theory, and hear from professionals in order to probe the relationship between rhetoric and politics. Students will also engage in an extended campaign simulation, in which they devise, implement, and react to campaign rhetorical strategies. Prior work in political theory is required and prior work in American Politics is strongly recommended.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor. 8 credits in politics, including at least one theory course required.

(Fall) Decision Making - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?

(Spring) Black Radicalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Writing-intensive; Africana Studies 369)
The struggles and ideas of transatlantic black radicals have changed the ways we think and study -- through the formation of Africana/African-American/Black Studies -- and the ways in which we express thoughts and ideas -- through culture and politics. In this seminar, we will study the interdisciplinary history of black radicalism in the 20th century in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa. This interdisciplinary history is animated by a central debate over the role of black internationalism, if any, in domestic black radical thought and action in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa.
Prerequisites: Africana Studies 200 or permission of instructor
Notes: There will be a number of shared classes/discussions with the Africana Studies Senior Seminar at Williams College, both in person and through video-conference, who will be sharing the same syllabus. We will make a class visit to Williams, and we will host a visit from the Williams seminar. The shared meetings will be organized around speakers, presentations, and local activists.

On the antinomy of the citizen and the foreigner. We will examine both classic theories of citizenship and practical challenges to those theories posed by diasporic groups and other cultural strangers such as exiles, refugees, economic migrants, and stateless populations. We also will consider the pressures placed on traditional notions of citizenship by transnational social and environmental problems, as well as by the power of global economic forces over domestic political communities.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department, international relations, critical social thought, or permission of instructor.

Instructors: J. Cocks

Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Pivotal Political Ideas: Good and Evil - *Not offered this year/term

This section will emphasize ideas of good and evil as deployed historically by various political theorists. Among other topics, it will address ethics in international relations, the development of international law regarding war crimes and crimes against humanity, and ways that the concepts of good and evil are deployed in connection with self-defense, honor, and conflict both domestically and internationally.
Societies pride themselves on being civilized when they transcend rule by violence and implant rule by law. Civilized societies pride themselves on being liberal democracies when they recognize the political equality of all citizens, represent the interest of those citizens in government, and make decisions through peaceful deliberation and compromise. But what exactly is violence, and what is wrong with it? Does it entail physical force, or can violence be present when bloodshed is absent? Is violence a means to power, an expression of powerlessness, or both? Is justice always served by the exit of violence from social life? Are liberal democracy and violence truly antithetical?

(Fall) Introductory Seminars in Psychology: Of Madness and Molecules: The Technology of Drugs for Mental Illness - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

First-year seminar

What causes madness? How effective are drugs in treating it? This course explores these and other related questions by offering a history of neuropsychopharmacology—the science and technology of medication. We begin with Charpentier, a French scientist of the 1940s, who unwittingly discovered a chemical, chlorpromazine, that has altered dramatically our perception of madness as a result of its widespread use. We then turn to the principles of pharmacology and the examination of applications of this technology to such illnesses as schizophrenia, depression, anxiety, and violent behavior.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Gender Studies 212)
This course explores the experience of working mothers in America. What are the political, economic, social and psychological factors that shape the experiences of women who work and raise children? How does the American woman's experience vary across race, class and educational level, and how does it compare to the experiences of women in other cultures? How have the roles of mother and worker or "career woman" changed over time? How have they remained the same? What type of support do women need to balance these roles? We'll explore these questions using research in social psychology, theoretical texts, fiction, our own lived experience, and inquiry into the experiences of others.

Credits/PEUnits: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
What is race? Who decides? Are we a "postracial" society? This course focuses on historical, social, psychological, and legal underpinnings of the social construction of race and examines how perspectives on race have influenced the lives of students and teachers in schools. Class sessions compare the old vs. "new" racism, contrast the workings of white privilege with calls for white responsibility, explore perspectives on the "achievement" and "opportunity" gaps, and examine how antiracist pedagogies can address inequities in education at the curricular, interpersonal, and institutional levels. Essays, response papers, field experiences, and a digital media project are required.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor

Notes: Prepracticum required

Instructors: S. Lawrence

Expected enrollment: 25
Examines changes in cognitive, social, and emotional functioning, including theory and research that illuminate some central issues in characterizing these changes: the relative contributions of nature and nurture, the influence of the context on development, continuity versus discontinuity in development, and the concept of stage. Includes observations at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology

Instructors: K. Haydon

(Fall) Educational Psychology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Community-based learning course; Education 233fs)

What do we learn? How do we learn? Why do we learn? In this course, we will study issues of learning, teaching, and motivation that are central to educational psychology. We will explore the shifting paradigms within educational psychology, multiple subject matter areas, (dis)continuities between classroom and home cultures, students' prior experiences, teachers as learners, ethnic and gender identity in the classroom, and learning in out-of-school settings. Requires a prepracticum in a community-based setting.

Prerequisites: soph, jr or sr

Notes: Prepracticum required. Many of the available placements for this course are in after-school settings (one afternoon per week)

(Fall) Children’s Cognitive Development

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course covers the major cognitive theories and research findings on the development of children's thinking from infancy to adolescence. Students will examine the nature and processes of change in six domains of knowledge: language, perception, memory, conceptual understanding, problem-solving and academic skills. Emphasis will be made on evaluating the practical implications of these cognitive theories and research.

Prerequisites: 100-level psychology course

Notes: NOTE: this course counts in the developmental or cognitive area.

Instructors: K. Hanson

(Spring) Visual and Auditory Perception - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

Why is it that some people, mostly men, cannot distinguish red socks from green ones? Why does the moon on the horizon appear larger than when it is overhead? How do Magic Eye pictures work? Why does the Mona Lisa's smile seem so elusive? This course addresses such questions by examining biological and psychological studies of the visual and auditory systems. Among the topics we will explore are object recognition; color vision; the perception of depth, size, and movement; the effects of experience on perception; sound localization; and the perception of pitch.
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: M. Breen

(Spring) Lab in Social Psychology: Social Psychological Perspectives on Diverse Adoptive Families
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Families in the U.S. have become increasingly diverse. From perspectives of social issues and controversies, this course provides an overview of methods (including design, methodology, analysis, statistical inference, and ethics) for studying adoptive, lesbian- and gay-parented, and multiracial families. Students design and complete a research project using quantitative data (e.g., surveys, interviews, and/or family observations) in which parents' gender, sexual orientation, race and ethnicity, or other social contexts (e.g., the influence of discrimination and social support) will be analyzed to explore questions about identity, adjustment, and relationships among diverse adoptive families.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200; students cannot have taken Psychology 330DF.
Instructors: R. Farr
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in Social Psychology: Psychology and the Media
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This seminar will examine how psychology is represented across a wide range of media, including newspapers, magazines, books, films, Web sites, and advertisements. We will analyze the continuing competition between "pop psychology/self-help" and professional representations of the field, in light of ongoing struggles for authority over mental life. Students will give frequent oral presentations and write a major research paper on a topic of their choosing.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 200, 201, plus 8 additional credits in the department. Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Mental Health Outcomes Research
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course)
This course examines health data and outcomes. The course will focus on quantitative analysis of health (mental and physical) indicators and outcomes. As part of the class, students will be introduced to concepts and techniques of clinical interviewing and clinical case studies. Students will interact with researchers and practitioners from the community. The course will also emphasize research, clinical, and professional ethics. Students will be exposed to different clinical instrumentation, the role of data in clinical interventions, in assessments, and in research on treatment effectiveness.
Prerequisites: Jr. sr., Psych 200, 201 and one course in abnormal psychology
PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Psychology of Trauma
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement (Gender Studies 333f(DP))
What happens after a traumatic event? Why do some people develop psychological disorders and others do not? This course will explore the psychological theories and research on trauma and stress. Topics covered will include childhood abuse, domestic violence, combat violence, community violence, and interpersonal violence. The seminar will explore psychological dysfunction, disorders, as well as adaptation and coping following exposure to traumatic stress. In addition, the course will explore the concept of "cultural trauma."
Prerequisites: 100 level psychology course; Psychology 200; jr or sr. A course in abnormal psychology preferred
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-329-02 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Body Image and Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
How does the body "shape" who we are and does our identity shape our body? This course will explore the interacting relationship between the image of the body and body image with identity and sense of self. Drawing on personality theories, social constructivist thought, and feminist principles, this course will examine the intersections of self-image with a focus on gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, social class, size, age, and physical ability.
Prerequisites: jr, sr and 8 credits in the department. A course in Gender Studies or Personality Psychology preferred
Instructors: R. Goren-Watts
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Laboratory in Romantic Development: Observational Coding Methodology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Students will work in teams to code videotaped observations of romantic partners discussing their relationships. Students will learn to code emotion expressions and behavior, relationship idealization, and couple synchrony at the dyadic and individual levels. Students will address issues of coding bias, construct validity, and intercoder reliability. The final project will report original quantitative analyses based on data generated during the course.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201
Instructors: K. Haydon
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Adoption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Adoption has become a common way to create families in the United States and many other countries. The experience of adoptees, birth parents, and adoptive families raise many questions about family relationships, identities, and community membership. In this course we will look how adoption has been studied, with a particular focus on the experiences of adoptees and their adoptive parents. Students will develop research questions, consider different methods and related ethical issues, and analyze survey and interview data.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200; 201; and 230 or 236.
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-02 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Diverse Families
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Families in the United States have become increasingly diverse over the past several decades. This course presents an overview of laboratory methods in studying a range of families (particularly adoptive and lesbian-and gay-parent families) including: research design, methodology, data analysis, statistical inference, and ethical considerations. Course material will be considered from the perspective of social issues, questions, and public controversies. Students will design and complete a research project using quantitative data (e.g., from surveys, interviews, and/or family interaction observations) in which aspects of child development, parenting, and/or family functioning will be analyzed to explore questions about outcomes and relationship dynamics among diverse family systems.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200; Psychology 230 or 233; or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Farr
Expected enrollment: 14

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 labs (3 hours each) required at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook

Instructors: A. Grillo

(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: Language and Literacy Development in Early Childhood

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course explores how home and school learning environments influence the development of language and literacy skills of children ages 3-8 and examines situations in which families and schools, although utilizing different languages, dialects, and ways of communicating, can work together to enhance children's language learning. Particular attention is given to children's development of academic language -- the written and spoken language needed to understand and create texts required for success in school.

Prerequisites: Prior coursework in developmental psychology, educational psychology, or cognitive psychology required.

Instructors: J. Jacoby

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

(Community-based learning course)

Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with the professor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.

Notes: 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield is required.

Instructors: K. Binder

Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Human Electrophysiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course surveys the theory and practice of using recordings of electrical activity of the brain to study aspects of human cognition. Lectures will describe how event-related brain potentials (ERPs) have been used to address issues related to language, memory, attention, and perception, and students will gain experience critically reading and evaluating research reports in this area. Students will also learn how to collect, process, statistically analyze, and interpret ERP data through the completion of group research projects.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201 and permission of instructor. A cognitive psychology course recommended.

Instructors: M. Breen

Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Seminar in Perception and Cognition: Language and Thought

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

Languages differ in the way they describe the world. For example, the noun for bridge is feminine in German, but masculine in French. Russian has two words for blue, while English has only one. The Piraha (an Amazonian hunter-gatherer tribe) arguably have no number words. In this course, we will be asking to what extent these cross-linguistic differences are reflected in thought. That is, do German speakers think bridges are more feminine than French speakers do? Can Russian speakers discriminate different shades of blue better than English speakers? Can the Piraha count? In exploring these questions, we hope to discover how tightly linked language and thought are.

(Fall) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This intensive laboratory course will train students to use the technical methods and tools commonly used in behavioral neuroscience research. Skills covered will include animal care and handling, use of behavioral assays, pharmacology, and neurosurgical procedures. Students will engage in weekly exercises and hands-on experiments to study the link between brain function and behavioral responses. These preclinical tools will be used to test research questions related to learning and memory, social-emotional responses, and drug-seeking behaviors. After completion of this course, students will have a deeper understanding of the design and implementation of behavioral neuroscience research.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200; Psychology 250 or Neuroscience 100; and permission of instructor

Notes: Interested students must meet with the instructor before or during the advising week to obtain additional information about the course.

(Spring) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior: Clinical Neuroscience

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

Explore how psychology, neuroscience, and medicine come together to study the etiology and treatment of neuropsychiatric disorders. Students will examine the behavioral features and neurobiology behind various clinical disorders such as Autism, ADHD, Substance Use Disorders, Mood Disorders, Schizophrenia, Anxiety, and Neurodegenerative Diseases. The course will rely on primary research to identify how changes in physiology and biology might manifest in the behaviors that define psychopathology. Students will gain a deeper understanding of clinical and preclinical techniques used to study these disorders while bridging their knowledge of molecular, cellular, and systems neuroscience research.

Prerequisites: Neuro 100 or Psych 250, and Psych 200

Instructors: J. Schwartzer

(Fall) Developing Mathematical Ideas K-8: Building a System of Tens and Making Meaning for Operations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course is designed to develop students' conceptual knowledge of the mathematics children encounter in grades K-8 and deepen their understanding of how children make sense of these mathematical concepts in meaningful ways. Students are expected to participate fully in this active and engaging class environment. They will pose questions, share ideas, and contribute to the work and discussions that take place in small groups and whole group situations. There will be weekly reading and writing assignments and maintenance of a portfolio. Students are required to have access to early childhood, elementary, or middle school students for four assignments during the semester.

(Fall) Observing and Assisting in Inclusive Classrooms
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students are expected to complete a supervised field experience full-time every day during January Intersession in an inclusive classroom in a school setting. Placements can be located within or outside of the Five College area. In addition to the field experience component, students attend three course meetings (detailed below). Reading and writing assignments focus on a survey of learning disabilities, descriptions of special education programs, understanding Individuals with Disabilities Education Act policies and placement options, interpreting Individualized Education Program plans, and planning curriculum for inclusive classrooms.
Prerequisite: Prereq. One of the following: Psychology 230, 233, Education 205, Educational Studies 215 or permission of instructor. Three mandatory meetings (2 hours each): two in November and one in Feb. Prepracticum: five days a week for three weeks in January; permission to participate in prepracticum experience for credit is contingent upon attendance at the meetings in November. RELI 221 01 - Religion - 2014-2015
(Fall) Religious Movements in America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
What is American religion? Is America a "Christian" nation? How has immigration affected the American religious landscape? How have struggles for freedom, civil rights, racial, economic, gender, and LGBTQ equality affected what people believe and how they act out these beliefs? To begin to answer these questions, we survey the main historical narratives of religion in the U.S. from the colonial period to the present. We also zero in at various moments in this history to appreciate the variety of religion and religious experience in American life. This combination enables us to engage the tension between the two main ways of considering religion in America: the quest for religious consensus and the recognition of a thoroughly pluralistic American religious culture.

(Spring) Religion and Politics in Modern India
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; History 223)
The history of India has been singled out for its complex intermingling of religion and politics. This course will explore the constitution of religious identities in two of India's largest religious communities: Hindu and Muslim. Focusing primarily on the colonial period, we will discuss religious reform movements, communal violence, mass politics, and the partition of the subcontinent into the independent states of India and Pakistan. Throughout we will be interested in the ways that the colonial experience affected the religious thought and practice of Indians. Finally, we will explore the meanings of this history for the postcolonial workings of democracy and secularism in modern India.

(Fall) Topics in Religion: The Sabbath in Jewish History and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Jewish Studies 225)
The Sabbath, the notion and institution of a day of rest, appears to have been innovated in ancient Israel, as evidenced by the Hebrew Bible. This course systematically explores the origins, development, and nature of the Sabbath in Judaism, including desisting from labor and worldly pursuits, and as an opportunity for spiritual rejuvenation and communal celebration. How has the observance of the Sabbath changed over time, and varied among different regional communities? How has it evolved in our own time? We will also take a comparative approach by studying Sabbath or days of rest in other religious traditions, including both Western and Asian cultures.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course explores the central role that food and eating have in religious cultures, particularly Judaism, Christianity, Islam, Buddhism, and Hinduism. What rules do religious traditions have about what to eat and what is prohibited? What practices are associated with daily religious rituals, table rites, and sacred festivals? What social dimensions to food and eating are there within the family and community? What are the ethical dimensions to food and religious traditions, especially in a world of hunger and concern about sustainability?

(Spring) Hinduism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
In this thematic and historical introduction to the major religious tradition of India, Hinduism is explored in its various expressions, including texts (Ramayana, Bhagavad Gita), myths and gods (Krishna, the Great Goddess), philosophy, rituals, art, worship, and popular practice. The roles of key religious figures (Shankara, Mirabai), movements (Bhakti), techniques (yoga), institutions (guru, caste, women's rites), and concepts (karma, dharma) are studied in their cultural contexts, and with reference to issues of gender, class, and agency. Extensive use of audiovisual material.

(Fall) Introduction to Buddhism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
Some scholars have argued that there is no such thing as "Buddhism" in the singular, but only "Buddhisms" in the plural. This course introduces students to select historically and culturally diverse forms of Buddhism, including Sri Lankan Theravada Buddhism, Japanese Zen Buddhism, and Tibetan Buddhism. The course pays particular attention to modern (and modernist) reinterpretations of Buddhism, including contested views of gender.

Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333T)
This course examines the various ways first- through fifth-century Christians addressed questions regarding human sexuality. We will concentrate on the rise of sexual asceticism and pay particular attention to the relationship between sexuality and issues of gender, culture, power, and resistance. Primary readings will include letters, narrative accounts of female and male ascetics, monastic rules, and "heretical" scriptures. These will be supplemented by modern scholarship in early Christian studies and the history of sexuality.

(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Theology: Feminist Theologies
Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333(FF))
Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Advanced Topics in Religion: "Written by Herself": African-American Religious Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course, we investigate how racial identity is constructed through the genre of autobiography, and how racial identities intersect with religious, and gendered identities. Key questions that we explore are: How have African Americans become the selves they name and form through writing? What are the sources--theological, racial, and political--from which (black)selves have been created and contested in American history? What role has literacy played in the formation of African Americans' own self-identities and the reception of these identities by their readers? We read autobiographies from a variety of historical periods (from Sojourner Truth to Staceyann Chin) and a variety of religious traditions (from Richard Allen to Malcolm X).

(Fall) Seminar in American Religious History: The Shakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333f (P))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
This course will examine the historical and cultural creation of the Shaker society. The religious vision of an alternative society whose birth and development paralleled that of the new American nation; by contrast and by imitation, the separate Shaker route thus offers an intriguing critique of American society and its values, and an unusual laboratory for examining a religious community based on a dual godhead.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Religion, or 8 credits in Gender Studies, or Permission of Instructor.

ROMLG-375-01 - Romance Languages and Literatures - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.

(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.
Instructors: P. Scotto

(Fall) Topics in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature: The Culture of the Cold War: Atom Bombs, Show Trials, Witch Hunts, and Alien Invasions - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
No other historical event so affected the psyche of the post-WWII world as the standoff between "The Free World" and "The Evil Empire." This course brings two bitter enemies - the Soviet Union and the United States - back together in a final battle. Like the Cold War, this one will be fought through proxies: the literary, cinematic, and cultural texts of the two Super Powers. It addresses the ideologies and paranoia that divided the world into an "us" and a "them," and the terror and lunacy that the bomb, spy mania, and witch-hunts evoked. What was it like to loathe and be drawn to "the enemy"? What are the sources of "Cold War nostalgia"? Are there connections between the Cold War and the current political climate?

(Spring) Topics in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature: Diabolic Carnival: Bulgakov's Master and Margarita and Its Contexts - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
Mephistopheles in Moscow? The Gospel retold? At turns both wildly comic and metaphysically profound, Bulgakov’s novel has been a cult classic since its unexpected discovery in 1967. This course will consider Bulgakov’s masterpiece together with some of its literary, historical, and social contexts. Additional readings from Goethe, Gogol, E.T.A.Hoffman, Akhmatova, and others.
Instructors: P. Scotto
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) Dostoevsky and the Problem of Evil: The Brothers Karamazov
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
Perhaps no other novelist has delved as deeply into the psychological and metaphysical dimensions of evil as the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky. This course will be devoted to a close reading of Dostoevsky’s landmark novel of murderous passion and parricide, The Brothers Karamazov. Why should crime and transgression be a privileged avenue of access into the human interior? How is psychology tied to the metaphysical aspect of human existence? What are the sources of evil—and redemption?

(Spring) Anna Karenina and Contexts: Tolstoy on Love, Death, and Family Life - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English)
Anna Karenina (1873) is one of a series of important works Tolstoy wrote pondering love, death, the nature of happiness, and the foundations of family life. Our reading of Anna Karenina will be the centerpiece of this course which will also include works ranging from Childhood (1852) to The Kreutzer Sonata (1889), which shocked and repelled readers with its unsparing depictions of human sexuality and murderous jealousy. Film versions of works will be screened.

(Fall) Contemporary Russian Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 209f)
Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union’s success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy? How has Russia's transformation affected ordinary people and Russia's relationship to the West?

(Spring) Russia and the West - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 264f)
Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without the study of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and, following the collapse of the USSR in 1991, the role played by Russia and Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex and multipolar "New World Order." What should U.S. policy be toward the emerging new states of the Baltics, Central Asia, and Caucasia?

(Spring) Oil and Water Don’t Mix: Geopolitics, Energy, and the Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

(Fall) Advanced Russian Language: From Reading to Speaking - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
This course aims at expansion of students' vocabulary and improvement of both writing and speaking skills. The course is intended for students who have completed at least four semesters of Russian or the equivalent. Heritage learners of Russian (those who speak the language) will also benefit from the course. With a strong emphasis on integrating vocabulary in context, this course aims to help students advance their lexis and grammar, increase fluency, and overcome speaking inhibitions. We will read and discuss a variety of texts including short stories, films, and articles.

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Spring) European Studies Seminar: Foreigners Within, Foreigners Without: The EU and its New Neighbors
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(POLIT-316)
The enlargement of the European Union (EU) to Central and Eastern European countries has generated new neighbors to the east and south - the Western Newly Independent States (WNIS) of Russia, Belarus, Moldova, and Ukraine, and Southern Mediterranean countries (SMCs) Egypt, Libya, and Tunisia. Europe's new neighbors make up 410 million inhabitants, but their GDP capita is barely one tenth of the European Union's. This has brought problems for the EU, including migration pressures, human trafficking, and refugees. How is the EU dealing with these issues and how will relations with the new neighbors affect the domestic and foreign policies of the EU?

(Fall) Nationalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 308)
Preamble (for topics courses): Courses in this section satisfy the distribution requirement in social sciences.
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Fall) Revolutions - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Taught in English; Politics 350f)
Revolution is far from over. First came the explosion in Eastern Europe, the collapse of the USSR, the rise of the Taliban in Afghanistan, bloodless overthrows of old elites in Indonesia and the Philippines, and what Hugo Chavez calls the Bolivarian revolution in Venezuela. The goal of revolutions may no longer be socialism, it may not even be directed at greater liberty. But revolutions continue to affect millions of people's lives and reflect states' responses to global change and social dislocation. They are still with us as the Arab Spring so clearly demonstrated. We will examine revolutions, their beginnings, their victories, and their ends.

(Fall) Racial and Ethnic Relations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
In this course students will be introduced to the various sociological perspectives and theoretical frameworks used to understand racial and ethnic relations in the United States. Racial and ethnic identities remain an important aspect of how people view themselves and others. In this course, we will discuss the dynamics of individual racial and ethnic groups including African Americans, Latino Americans, Native Americans, Asian Americans, and White Americans. We will also examine what the concepts of race and ethnicity mean and how they affect various aspects of American society.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123
Instructors: P. Banks
Expected enrollment: 30

SOCI-216-01 - Sociology - 2014-2015
(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Status and Power in Social Interaction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course will use theories and research from sociological social psychology to examine status and power dynamics within social interaction as both symptoms and sources of social inequality. We will learn how status beliefs emerge from social differences in material resources and power, and how they serve to perpetuate social inequalities over time by shaping our interpretations of social events and our behavior and emotions when we interact with others. We will explore why broad social inequalities are often durable, and how the dynamics of social interaction serve to sustain them. We will also examine the means by which these inequalities can be overcome.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Sociology
Instructors: K. Rogers
Expected enrollment: 30

SOCI-216-02 - Sociology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Education
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
The educational system is intended to ensure that all children have an equal chance of success, but often falls short of this goal. In this course, we will ask two fundamental questions: First, what is the function of the educational system in contemporary society? Second, what individual, group, or institutional characteristics make educational success more or less likely? In answering these two questions, we will develop a sociological understanding of education in America.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123, or permission of instructor

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Social Networks: Who You Know, How You Know Them, and Why It Matters
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
Social networks are much more than the people you know on Facebook and Twitter. They affect everything from political beliefs to health outcomes to professional success. This course asks, "What are social networks?" and examines their impact on contemporary life. Students will develop the analytical skills to understand the formation, evolution, and significance of different relationship structures and the way they shape individuals' lives.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Sociology
Instructors: T. Malacarne

(Spring) Survey Research and Data Analysis

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is an introduction to the use of quantitative data in sociology. The focus of the course is understanding how researchers use such data to make sociological arguments. To appreciate this, it is necessary to not only study how it is done, but also to do some of it. For this reason, students will be asked to analyze data for both weekly assignments and a final paper. The aim of the course is to show how to understand the uses of different types of survey data, and to create and analyze simple statistics and multivariate statistics using statistical software.

Prerequisites: sociology majors or permission of instructor

Instructors: K. Rogers

Expected enrollment: 30

(Fall) Research Seminar in Sociology and Anthropology

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This seminar explores practical issues in doing research in anthropology and sociology. Depending on student interest, activities could include reading field notes, narrative analysis of texts, survey design, coding and measurement of quantitative variables, and/or visual analysis. Students will have an opportunity to think about how to develop a class paper into an independent study, how to organize research for a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or Sociology

Notes: CR/NC grading only (no letter grading)

Instructors: J. Roth, E. Townsley

Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Criminology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course focuses on the historical and theoretical development of the major approaches to crime and criminality. Criminology began in the second half of the nineteenth century when its pioneers asked the "big questions" pertaining to crime, society, and human nature. As criminology progressed, it narrowed its focus, concentrating on special areas, such as violent crime and property crime. As sociology began to dominate criminology, new theories were developed to explain the social facts gathered in the last 50 years.

(Spring) Social Problems

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This is a course on the social construction of social problems. It devotes almost exclusive attention to how a "problem" becomes a social problem; examining how atypical cases become regarded as typical; how definitions are expanded to inflate statistics; and how claim makers and advocacy groups manipulate the media to market social problems and solutions to the public.

Prerequisites: Sociology 123

Instructors: R. Moran

Expected enrollment: 25

SOCI-240-01 - Sociology - 2014-2015

(Spring) Collective Behavior and Social Movements

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement

This course examines instances of organized collective action in social, historical, and empirical contexts, from the labor movement of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries to the new social movements of today. We also explore various forms of unstructured protest, such as riots and demonstrations.

(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Unlawful Convictions in Death Penalty Cases
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
The Death Penalty in America: Unjustly Convicted Death Row Inmates. This course will examine in detail the cases of all 130 death row inmates exonerated in the post-Furman era (1976-2009). It will focus on how the 130 men ended up on death row, as well as the process by which they gained their freedom. In addition, the course will spotlight the many proposals, videotaped police interrogations, eyewitness identifications, forensic science procedures, etc., designed to correct sources of mistakes; and assess their likelihood of successfully preventing both unjust and wrongful convictions in capital cases.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Sociology; Sociology 231 strongly advised (please consult instructor for permission if you have not taken Sociology 231).

SOCI-316-01 - Sociology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Black Cultural Production and Consumption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course explores black cultural production and consumption in the United States using a sociological lens. The central focus is how the production and consumption of cultural objects such as visual art, music, and television reproduce and erode racial boundaries. Topics include the construction of racial identity through consumption; representations of blacks in the media; and the impact of cultural tastes and preferences on black achievement.

(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Latina/o Immigration
(Community-based learning course; Latin American Studies 387, Gender Studies 333UU)
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.

SOCI-316-02 - Sociology - 2014-2015
(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Self and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course will apply theories from sociological social psychology to explore the mutual relationship between the self and the social. We will learn how identities are constructed and reinforced through social interaction, and how our constructed meanings for identities influence social relations - including our expectations for self versus other and our behavior and emotion within social interaction. We will explore the relationship between self and identity, and the ways people strive to maintain coherence of self given the multitude of identities they often embody. More broadly, we will learn how social interaction can serve to sustain (or transform) the prevailing social structures and culture within a society.

(Summer) Research Seminar in Sociology and Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar explores practical issues confronting thesis students in doing research and writing. Students will have the opportunity to share their research projects, identify strengths and weaknesses, formulate research questions, locate their projects in a larger academic literature, and discuss the overall structure of the thesis. In addition, students in 326 will join those in 226 for activities that could include reading field notes, narrative analysis of texts, survey design, coding and measurement of quantitative variables, and/or visual analysis.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or Sociology, Thesis Students only
Instructors: J. Roth, E. Townsley
Expected enrollment: 12

(Summer) Social Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course is a critical survey of theoretical and empirical research on social inequality, stratification, and mobility. The central focus is class, race, and gender inequalities as they have changed during the post-World War II period in the United States (although we will look briefly at stratification regimes in other cultures and time periods). The concepts and methods of social stratification have wide application in sociology, economics, public policy, and administration contexts. As the course progresses, we will explore some of these applications as we wrestle with several policy issues currently confronting U.S. society.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123 and 4 credits in the department
Instructors: K. Tucker
Expected enrollment: 19

(Summer) Contemporary Social Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
In this critical survey of the main theoretical perspectives in contemporary sociology, we focus specifically on structural functionalism, symbolic interactionism, critical theory, feminism, and postmodernism. Besides gaining familiarity with these alternative perspectives, we try to identify the main axes of theoretical dispute in sociology and discuss the problems of evaluating and resolving conflict between theories.

(Spring) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Bad Lovers

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Medieval Studies 217BL)

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

Love is constantly thematized in Medieval and Renaissance literature. From a variety of perspectives, authors try to account for what love is, what its effects are on the body and the soul, how one is supposed to obtain it and keep it, and also how and why it can be avoided. Writing about love is also questioning what is considered essentially good or bad for oneself and the community. In this course, students will explore medieval and early modern love theories and practices in a selection of Spanish texts, as they reflect on literature as a means for ethical interrogation.

SPAN-240-01 - Spanish - 2014-2015
(Fall) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: Transatlantic Encounters: Visualizing Indigenous Cultures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Spain and Latin America may be oceans apart but they have been co-constructed as cultural spaces since the colonial period. In this class, we will trace the way indigenous peoples of the Americas were seen and represented by some of the earliest colonial-era writers, like Cristóbal Colón and Inca Garcilaso de la Vega. We will then move up to the 19th century to explore European travel writers' accounts of indigenous groups their representation in visual art, particularly landscape painting. In the twentieth and twenty-first centuries, we will interrogate "Indigenismo" and indigenous communities' use of new media - photography and video - as tools of self-representation. The course will be conducted in Spanish.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: Reel Critiques: Film and Social Change in Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 270-01)
In this class, we will look at both feature films and documentaries as tools for social change in contemporary Latin America. We will view movies from Central America and South America, including Brazil, in order to look at the way that contemporary Latin American cinema has addressed neocolonial class, race, gender, and sexual prejudices in the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries. In addition to discussing the way that films have addressed the need for social change in Latin America, we will think about how their messages extend globally. The course will be conducted in Spanish. Films will be viewed primarily outside of class.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 19

(Fall) Introduction to Spanish and Latin American Cinema - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 203)
This course offers a broad introduction to the history, politics, and aesthetics of Latin American and Spanish cinema in the context of, and in contrast with, cinemas from other regions, especially hegemonic Hollywood aesthetics. This course will also focus specifically on introducing students to the basic terminology and methodologies of film analysis, thus preparing them for the department's film seminar (Spanish 320) and other advanced courses in film studies.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-260-01 - Spanish - 2014-2015
(Fall) Studies in Language and Society: An Introduction: Introduction to Hispanic Linguistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of specific form/meaning relations in the linguistic system of Spanish and the function of language in society. Topics may include, but are not limited to, languages in contact, bilingualism, teaching methodology, translation and interpretation, sociolinguistics, phonetics and phonology, morpho-syntax, semantics and pragmatics. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
The main objectives of this course are to consolidate the knowledge of the language, as well as to help both non-native and native speakers understand and explain how Spanish works as a linguistic system for communication. Topics covered in this course will range from a review of general goals and methods in Linguistics, to phonetics and phonology, morphology and syntax, semantics, and language variation within the Spanish speaking world. The coursework will highlight those grammatical aspects that are typically problematic for learners of Spanish as a second language.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Identities and Intersections: Puerto Rican Studies: Culture, Migration, and Education
(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; EDST-250; LATAM-387-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernismo to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
Through lectures, class discussions, outside speakers, films and site visits, this Community-Based Learning course will engage Puerto Rican history, culture, and immigration with a focus on Puerto Rican communities in Western Massachusetts. In particular, students will understand how Puerto Ricans in Holyoke have negotiated their cultural identity and place in the educational system. In partnership with the Holyoke Public Schools, students will assist with a project based upon the needs of educators to develop materials to forge greater intercultural understanding and enhance learning outcomes for HPS students. Taught mostly in English with some materials and discussion in Spanish.
Prerequisites: Spanish 201 for non-Spanish majors/minors. Two 200-level courses above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Mosby
Expected enrollment: 12

(Community-based learning course; Taught in English; EduSt 250)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o culture. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples will vary each semester.
This course examines how digital storytelling (DST) may enhance bilingual literacy. Students will assist Spanish-speaking residents in Springfield during the completion of an English-language digital storytelling workshop imparted by the Latino Youth Media Institute. Grounded in New Media Literacies and Latina/o studies, students will bring their own interests and disciplinary expertise as we evaluate and refine our experimental use of DST to promote bilingualism. Five College faculty and community partners will support our multidisciplinary and digital project. Taught mostly in English with some Spanish. Intermediate Spanish (201) is required for non Spanish majors or minors.
Prerequisites: Spanish 201 for non Spanish majors/minors. 212 and 2 200-level courses for Spanish majors/minors.
Notes: Taught in both English and Spanish according to level of Spanish proficiency of students enrolled.
Instructors: R. Minana
Expected enrollment: 14

(Fall) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: Women and Film in Spain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o culture. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples will vary each semester.
This class will examine Spanish cinema by women directors through gender and film theory. The course will engage topics shaping women's films (violence against women, the female body, rejection of traditional roles) in comparison with Hollywood and Spanish male-authored production. We will study: those film-makers silenced by Franco's dictatorship; those who negotiated within censorship; and those who contributed to an increase of women behind the camera. By taking on the so-called gender-genre debate, we will analyze how each group appropriates (or subverts) male-dominated cinematic forms (neo-realism, the road movie, film noir), shaping female discursive difference in each period.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 and two 200-level courses or permission of the instructor.
Notes: Taught in Spanish. Films streamed.
Instructors: B. Zecchi
Expected enrollment: 14

(Fall) Advanced Studies in Concepts and Practices of Power: Slanted Subjects: Queer Theories and Literatures in Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
This class will interrogate the limits and possibilities of talking about a slanted or queer subject position with the context of Latin American literature. Looking at texts from the Caribbean, Central America and South America, we will explore the construction of a queer subjectivity through literature, film and visual art. We will pay careful attention to the intersections of class, race, gender, and sexuality to speak of queerness not only as a sexual orientation, but also as a decolonial intervention. Readings will draw from philosophy as well as literature.

Prerequisites: Two courses at 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Language and Society: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: Two courses in Spanish at the 200-level above 212
Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student's choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive advanced credit.

Statistics

STAT-140-01 - Statistics - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological, and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables and regression.
Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra
Instructors: A. Foulkes

(Fall) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.

Prerequisites: Any 100-level mathematics or statistics course or permission of instructor.

Instructors: J. Gifford

(Fall) Probability - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Mathematics 342)
This course develops the ideas of probability simultaneously from experimental and theoretical perspectives. The laboratory provides a range of experiences that enhance and sharpen the theoretical approach and, moreover, allows us to observe regularities in complex phenomena and to conjecture theorems. Topics include: introductory experiments; axiomatic probability; random variables, expectation, and variance; discrete distributions; continuous distributions; stochastic processes; functions of random variables; estimation and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in fall 2015 and 2017.

Seminar in Statistics and Scientific Research: Applied Statistical Genetics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

In this course students will learn about statistical methods for analyzing data arising from genetic association studies. Topics covered include: (1) basic genetic concepts and tests (including linkage disequilibrium, Hardy Weinberg equilibrium and population substructure); (2) data processing and analysis for Genome-Wide Association Studies (including fitting generalized linear models and applying parallel computing techniques); and (3) high-dimensional data analysis tools for "big data" in biomedicine (including topics in machine learning). The course will use R for illustration and applications.

Theatre Arts

THEAT-100-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Taught by Department of Theatre Arts faculty and staff, this course offers the student a study and practice of theatre as a collaborative art. Course includes the analysis of the dramatic text in terms of the actor; the director; the scenic, costume, lighting, and sound designers; and technicians. Close analytical readings of play texts and critical/theoretical essays will be supplemented by attending theatre productions both on and off campus and by staging students' own theatrical projects.
Notes: requirement for the Theatre major
Instructors: S. Daniels
Expected enrollment: 36

THEAT-120-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Costume Construction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course take students through the theatrical process of creating clothing and accessories for the stage. Topics covered are hand sewing techniques, fabric identification and use, and clothing alterations. The course will explore basic pattern drafting and draping, and some accessory construction. Students will work from costume renderings to build and alter clothing for Rooke Theatre productions.
Notes: lab; materials fee $45
Instructors: E. Bergeron
Expected enrollment: 10

(Spring) Scene Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how this work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of the process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, models and some hand drafting. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: lab; $30 materials fee. Any additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: V. James
Expected enrollment: 14
THEAT-124-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Costume Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how the designer's work impacts a production, and what methods are used in the execution of the design process. Students will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions and renderings.
Prerequisites: No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: lab; $30 materials fee. Any additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: A. Walker
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-126-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Lighting Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An introduction to the art and practice of lighting design for the theatre. This course will cover the basics of light, lighting equipment and how to develop a design for a theatrical production. Students will have the opportunity to use the Black Box Light Lab to create their own lighting designs from selected scenes of plays and musicals and learn the basics of programming a computerized lighting board. Students enrolled in this class will automatically be signed up for the Theatre Arts Department Light Prep Crew for the semester, where students learn to hang and focus lights on the Rohee Stage for the department's mainstage productions.
Instructors: L. Dubin
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) What Is Performance? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive course that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-180-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Introduction to Technical Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements meet: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will examine the materials and techniques used in building and operating theatrical scenery. It will include prop building, rigging, and welding for the theatre. Students will learn the skills to work in the scene shop interpreting scenic designs for department productions.
Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: C. Killion
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-205-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Acting II: Characterization
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements meet: Meets Humanities I requirement
A highly interactive course, focusing on scene work, using the Stanislavsky approach to acting. Classes include preparation exercises leading to the relaxation, concentration, and imagination of the actor. Practical tools explored in the course are designed to offer the student greater vocal, physical, and imaginative freedom and clarity as well as text analysis skills. Course includes characterization work and introduces the unique nature of the monologue.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 105
Instructors: S. Daniels
Expected enrollment: 14

(Fall) Topics in Performance: Voice for Performance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements meet: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a specific approach to performing. Topics include mask characterization, physical theatre techniques, acting Shakespeare, and vocal training, among others.
Linklater voice and Alexander Technique will be the tools used to lay the groundwork for healthy, natural, dependable and expressive vocal communication and postural ease for theatre and public speaking. Students will learn how to speak with poise, gain confidence, reduce performance anxiety, and build the range, resonance, and authenticity of their voice and person. Poetry and dramatic texts will be used.

Prerequisites: Permission of Theatre Chair

Notes: Students enrolled for Voice and Movement for the Stage Fall 2013 may take this course.

Instructors: R. Rootberg

Expected enrollment: 14

(Spring) Topics in Performance: Training the Actor’s Voice - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a specific approach to performing. Topics include mask characterization, physical theatre techniques, acting Shakespeare, and vocal training, among others.

After completing a series of exercises to free the body and voice of excess tension, the student will explore exercises and projects designed to develop vocal strength, projection, flexibility, and clarity.

Prerequisites: major, minor, sr, jr, Theatre Arts 100, 105, 205 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours) and lab; previously offered as Theatre Arts 211

Instructors: M. Lopez

Expected enrollment: 18

THEAT-220-08 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in Design: Makeup - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, and materials and techniques, among others.

Using basic painting and three-dimensional techniques, students will learn the fundamentals of stage makeup design and application. Included in the course are units on corrective makeup, aging techniques, realistic and fantasy character makeup, facial prosthetics, hair and facial hair. Note: Students will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials and for the purchase of a student makeup kit.

Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 100, 120, an art (studio) course or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and lab

Instructors: S. Conly

Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-224-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Costume Design - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

An introduction to the art and work of the costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a costume designer analyzes a script, approaches research, renders costume sketches, and how this work impacts a production.

Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 100, 120, an art (studio) course or permission of instructor

Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student—a supply list will be provided

Instructors: J. Ford

Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Stage to Screen
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 217, Film Studies 220)

A study of ten to twelve plays and their film adaptations. Plays are drawn from a range of periods and genres, and films are chosen to show the scope of adaptive approaches from filmed play to radical re-imagining. The course will include readings on the theory and history of theatre-to-film adaptations. Playwrights will likely include Christopher Marlowe, John Gay, Oscar Wilde, Bertolt Brecht, Tennessee Williams, Eugene O'Neill, Lorraine Hansberry, Edward Albee, Harold Pinter, David Mamet, and David Henry Hwang. Though Shakespeare is not a focus, we will give some comparative attention to particularly influential films of his plays.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr and 4 credits in English or Film Studies or Theatre Arts

Instructors: S. Sutherland

Expected enrollment: 30

THEAT-234-02 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Multicultural Theater and Latina/o Experience
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; LATST-250MT)
This course examines the landscape of American theater and its relationship to the politics of diversity in the US. We will study the theater work of Latina/os in the US to broaden our understanding of multicultural theater. In addition to studying dramatic texts, we will also consider the political implications of the work and its relationship to social activism. We will also look at theater companies whose primary missions are to produce Latino/a theater and the history of the representation of Latinos on stage in this country. We will draw upon theory from fields such as cultural studies, feminist studies and dramatic criticism as we think and write about the creative work in this course.

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Androgyny and Gender Negotiation in Contemporary Chinese Women’s Theater
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

(Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

THEAT-234-04 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Afro-Latina/o Diasporic Performance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

This course offers an introduction to the study of Latina/o communities in the United States. We will explore major concepts and debates in this growing field through the study of texts across disciplines including history, sociology, performance theory, personal narrative and ethnography. This interdisciplinary approach will provide us with rich frameworks to interrogate how Latinas/os negotiate complex identities across communities and specific geographic and political contexts.

Instructors: M. Diaz Sanchez

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Drafting for Theatre - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is an introduction to the essentials of drafting scenic and lighting plans for theatrical productions. Students will be taught the drafting conventions that are specific to the theatre industry. Projects will include the drafting of ground plans, centerline sections, front elevations, and light plots. Students are expected to already have a basic knowledge of theatre vocabulary and an understanding of the design process and technical needs of creating and building a set or lighting design for a theatre production. Drafting projects will incorporate both pencil drawing and CAD software techniques.

Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 122, 126, or 180, or permission of instructor

THEAT-251-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Fall) Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

Instructors: H. Holder

Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-252-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to: the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.

THEAT-305-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Acting III: Styles
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
"A laugh, a laugh, my kingdom for a laugh!" This performance-intensive course will focus on classic comedic styles, ranging from Shakespeare to Oliver Goldsmith’s "She Stoops To Conquer". Through a series of classroom explorations, students will learn how to craft a believable character, using the gesture, vocal, and physical language of certain comedic styles including: Commedia, Slapstick, and Restoration. Each student will present at least one soliloquy and one scene, with the final scene presented to the public.
Prerequisites: TH105 or per I
Instructors: N. Tuleja
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Topics in Performance: Advanced Performance Workshop - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Topics courses offer a specific approach to performing. They may include mask characterization, physical theatre techniques, acting Shakespeare, and vocal training, among others.
This course is for actors, directors, dramatuges, choreographers, anthropologists, video and visual artists, and designers. This workshop will develop performance pieces collaboratively. Students will work in teams that explore and investigate a chosen theme, a piece of text, or a type of behavior. Student will present weekly projects over the course of the semester. Use of edited sound, images, and video.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Topics in Design: Advanced Costume Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, and materials and techniques, among others.
A semester intensive course exploring the art and work of the costume designer in the performing arts. Students will expand on the process "from page to stage," including but not limited to period research, rendering techniques, production documentation, and the process of translating a design in the third dimension. Major stylistic developments in 20th Century costume will be explored. Students will generate a professional level costume design for an entire musical or opera.
Prerequisites: a College level costume design course
Instructors: J. Ford
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-332-01 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Modern Drama
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 332s)
A history of drama in Europe, America, and Africa from the late nineteenth century to the present. Readings include plays by Ibsen, Strindberg, Chekhov, Shaw, O’Casey, Pirandello, O’Neill, Brecht, Williams, Miller, Beckett, Pinter, Hansberry, Soyinka, Aidoo, Shepard, Fugard, Norman, Wilson, and Parks.

Instructors: J. Lemly

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Early Modern Drama - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(English 317-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatre studies including particular theatrical periods and genres. Topics may include melodrama, post-colonial theatre, early 20th century avant-garde movements, feminist theatre, etc. These courses include historical and theoretical approaches and could involve interdisciplinary collaboration.
All the world’s a stage. This course surveys the era of literary history that invented this powerful idea. The drama of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is a drama obsessively self-conscious, bursting with disguises, confidence tricks, cross-dressers, rituals, masques, and plays-within-plays. Reading Shakespeare as well as his rivals and peers (Marlowe, Jonson, Webster, and others), we will consider how theater, and the idea of theater, illuminates such concepts as desire, evil, gender, and ideology. Plays will likely include Titus Andronicus, Doctor Faustus/1>, The Alchemist, and The Duchess of Malfi.
Prerequisites: English 200 and English 210 or 211
Instructors: S. Roychoudhury
Expected enrollment: 15
THEAT-350-02 - Theatre Arts - 2014-2015
(Spring) Seminar: Women in American Theatre and Drama - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
This course offers a history of women in performance, from the colonial era to the present day. Americans inherited a European theatrical economy that was largely male dominated, though actresses played a central role on stage and in the public imagination. Today, while serious inequities remain, women are gaining access to the most privileged and powerful positions in a swiftly changing field. We are therefore equally interested in how women have participated in theatrical culture—as actors, producers, playwrights, directors, designers, managers, and audience members—and how they have been represented on commercial, experimental, and regional stages, and across genres and communities.
Prerequisites: Gender Studies 101, or Theatre 100 or 251 or 252
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 16

Art (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.ART-252-01 - Art (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(January) Color Theory: A Travelogue in Color
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This is a rigorous course that enables artists to deepen how 'seeing' nature translates to a flat surface, while maintaining the illusion of depth. Coupled with exploring paint, or oil crayon, emphasis rests on expanding drawing skills. Continual observation from actual paintings in the Museum are available to us. Artists can work from either a model, or a still-life.
Instructors: L. Ritz

Chemistry (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) General Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemical science, including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, atomic structure, and chemical bonding. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills and quantitative chemical measurements.
Prerequisites: basic arithmetic, algebra, calculator use
Instructors: D. Cotter
Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Cotter |

X.CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Continuation of General Chemistry I. Topics include thermochemistry and thermodynamics; quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to acid-base, solubility, and electron-transfer reactions; and chemical kinetics. Laboratory emphasizes analytical skills and experimental assessment of kinetic and thermodynamic parameters.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 with grade of C or better
Instructors: H. Jayathilake
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake |
X.CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry, nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions, the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers, and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis, practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography, molecular modeling, and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Snyder |

X.CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Hamilton |

Communication (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.COMM-105-01 - Communication (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(January) Speaking With Confidence: Leadership for Women
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This course helps both experienced and aspiring professional women identify what they want to communicate in all aspects of their lives. Drawing on a variety of theatre techniques used by experienced actors to relax, focus their message, and connect with an audience, this course will coach students in the art of confident and powerful communication. Students will be guided to uncover their unique strengths, develop an authentic and personalized speaking style, and overcome obstacles to delivering their message. Working closely together in a safe and supportive environment, students will complete the course with the presentation of an inspiring speech.
Notes: This course may be repeated for credit.
Instructors: S. Daniels
Expected enrollment: 15

Computing & Technology (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.CMTC-162-01 - Computing & Technology (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(January) Introduction to Robotics
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Robots are permeating every aspect of modern life. In this course, students will explore the history and current state of robotics while designing, programming and building a robot of their own. Readings will trace the history of robotics from Rossum's Universal Robots to Predator Drones. Students will develop techniques for handling analog sensor input and interacting with an uncertain environment. This course will require a significant investment of time outside of class, but no prior experience with electronics or programming is required.
Instructors: N. Baker

Education (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.EDUC-126-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Teacherpreneurs and Teacher Leadership: The Changing Role of Educators
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Explore the changing role of educators in a colorful political climate. Education is in the midst of a transformation, and we will learn from more with teacher leaders who are leading the charge. With readings and video-conferencing with National Board Certified Teachers, bloggers, and state teachers of the year, we will discuss how innovative teachers are transforming the profession in issues of equity, evaluation, compensation, curriculum, collaboration, and more. Students will also identify their leadership skills, then build their areas of expertise and develop a plan for potential future leadership.
Instructors: M. Allen
X.EDUC-222-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Queering the Curriculum
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course considers how we can think ethically, critically, and in socially just ways about disrupting the silence around LGBTQ issues in K-12 schools. Drawing on work from the fields of anti-oppression education, critical pedagogy, and queer theory, we will explore ways to challenge heteronormativity and heterosexism, and to promote gender and sexuality equity within K-12 schools. Through course work and class activities we will examine heterosexism as a system of oppression; the complexities of sex, gender, and sexuality; the institutional aspects of heterosexism in educational contexts; and contemporary issues facing educators who want to implement LGBTQ curriculum.
Instructors: K. Helmer
Expected enrollment: 20

X.EDUC-417-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Teaching with Technology
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students will read current research examining the effectiveness of teaching with technology in PreK - 12 classrooms as they explore questions about the role of technology in 21st century education. Students will experiment with a variety of tools that allow teachers to design effective lessons for a diverse range of learners. Students will focus on using technology to integrate students on IEP's, 504, and other learners with specific learning needs.
Prerequisites: MAT students only
Notes: Meets M-F 2pm-5pm, August 4-22.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

X.EDUC-420-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Schools, Schooling, and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course familiarizes students with theories of teaching and learning, adolescent development and current movements in education reform such as Race to the Top, Common Core Standards, and testing. In keeping with Massachusetts Department of Education mandates for approved licensure programs, the course provides the foundational readings to prepare teachers for work in a diverse society. Topics include knowledge of curriculum; knowledge of learners; knowledge of educational goals, knowledge of social/cultural contexts; and pedagogical content knowledge. Key tenets of Expeditionary Learning will be explored as learners experience an EL slice presented by local EL teachers.
Prerequisites: MAT students only
Notes: Meets M-F, 8:30am-1pm, August 4-22, plus additional hours to be arranged.
Instructors: B. Bell
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Practicum Seminar on Teaching and Learning: Early Childhood and Elementary Education
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
MAT students only.
This weekly seminar for MAT students provides students with opportunities to examine curriculum development models, develop an integrated curriculum unit utilizing state and national content area standards, review researched based models of classroom management, and engage in dialogue with practicing teachers regarding numerous aspects of teaching and student learning. Additional topics covered include the arts in education, physical education, legal obligations of teachers, and home-school communication. As is the case in all pre-licensure programs, there is continued emphasis on addressing the needs of students with disabilities and English Language Learners.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Limited to students accepted into the MAT program
Instructors: C. Swift
Expected enrollment: 10

X.EDUC-423-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Spring) Student Teaching in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 10; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
MAT students only.
Students participate in full-time student teaching in early childhood and elementary classrooms for 12 weeks. During this semester-long field-based placement, students hone classroom management skills, implement an extended integrated curriculum unit, deliver lessons in all content areas, and develop a wide range of assessment skills. The practicum culminates in two weeks of Lead Teaching, during which the student is responsible for managing all aspects of the classroom program. Students work with classroom teachers and college supervisors to address Professional Teaching Standards as required by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' Pre-service Performance Assessment Program.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Students must be accepted into the MAT program
Notes: 5 days a week for 12 weeks full-time student teaching in school site (includes Mount Holyoke College's spring break); limited to students accepted to the MAT program. This course is graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Instructors: C. Swift
Expected enrollment: 10

(Fall) The Process of Teaching and Learning: Developing Literacy in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
MAT students only. Through a balanced and integrated approach, students will learn to develop literacy in early childhood/elementary schools. Class members will learn about emergent literacy, diagnosing language needs, integrating phonics skills in a literature-based program, the teaching of process writing, children's fiction and nonfiction literature, and the use of portfolios for assessment. Course evaluation is based on written and oral work done individually and in groups. Requires a prepracticum.
Prerequisites: MAT students only or by permission of instructor.
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: C. Swift
Expected enrollment: 15
X.EDUC-463-01 - Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Fall) Teaching English Language Learners
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
MAT students only. This course addresses core competencies outlined in the Massachusetts Department of Education’s English Language Learner certificate requirement. Readings in language acquisition theory, language learning and teaching, effective lesson design and assessment, Sheltered Instruction Observation Protocol, and knowledge of intercultural learners are covered. Students will have experience developing and adapting lessons and curriculum to address the needs of students in their pre-practicum settings.
Prerequisites: MAT students only or by permission of the instructor
Instructors: K. Accurso
Expected enrollment: 15

(January) Chinese Hollywood - Through the Lens of Visual Literacy
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This is an intensive, interdisciplinary course exploring literature and research about China and, more specifically, Chinese women, through the analysis of Chinese film from historical, social, economic, political, and cultural perspectives. Students will develop visual literacy skills to learn to read and do a critical cultural analysis of Chinese film as visual texts. China's rapidly growing film industry, now referred to as "Chinese Hollywood," will also be examined as a cultural phenomenon with influence in China and throughout the world. This course will focus on selected key film directors whose films allow students to explore lives of Chinese and Chinese women. The course will be taught in English and all films will be viewed with English language subtitles.

Languages (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.LANG-101-HN - Languages (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Intensive Elementary Hindi
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This intensive course introduces the student to speaking, listening, reading and writing skills in Modern Hindi. Students will learn to read and write the Hindi script and develop the cultural literacy required to participate in common everyday interactions. Class sessions and homework assignments will emphasize using the language in ways a student might encounter when living or studying in a Hindi-speaking environment. Students will be required to participate in oral exercises and role plays during the class sessions.
Instructors: B. Dwivedi
Expected enrollment: 20

(Summer) Intensive Elementary Japanese I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for students who have never previously studied Japanese. The course will introduce the overall structure of Japanese, basic vocabulary, the two syllabaries of the phonetic system, and some characters (Kanji). The course will also introduce the notion of "cultural appropriateness for expressions," and will provide practice and evaluations for all four necessary skills: speaking, listening, reading, and writing.
Instructors: W. Tawa

Mathematics Education (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.MTHED-408-01 - Math Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Spring) Professional Development for Coaching Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 3; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for math specialists/coaches of grades K-8 to design, develop, critique, implement, give and receive feedback on mathematics professional development experiences that align with the Common Core standards and the particular needs of the school/district's participating staff. Topics include staying focused on mathematics while developing collaborative relationships, communicating with Teachers and administrators, developing leadership skills, and continuing to be a learner. Emphasis will be placed on learning how to move a school and/or district toward their mathematics goals by providing both support and press for teachers who teach mathematics.
Instructors: V. Bastable, M. Flynn
Expected enrollment: 10

X.MTHED-408-01  - MathEducation (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Spring) Professional Development for Coaching Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for elementary math specialists with responsibilities for supporting teachers in the development of strong mathematics education programs. Participants explore issues related to: learning mathematics while in the context of teaching; facilitating the professional development of colleagues; teachers' and students' ideas about mathematics and learning; and fostering a stance of collaborative investigation. By way of a central theme of mathematics learning, the institute will offer coaches opportunities to explore, through the coaching perspective, ideas of number and geometry in the elementary grades.
Prerequisites: 01 section is for MAMT students only.
Instructors: V. Bastable

Physics (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.PHYS-101-01  - Physics (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Physics I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This algebra-based introduction to physics covers kinematics, force, Newton's laws, equilibrium, momentum, energy, conservation laws, gravitation, rotation, and oscillations. Jointly with the Physics 2 course, it will provide a good preparation for the physics components of the MCAT.
Prerequisites: Math competency up through but not necessarily including calculus
Instructors: T. Norsen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB T Norsen
Expected enrollment: 20

X.PHYS-151-01  - Physics (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Physics II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This is the second half of the algebra-based introductory physics sequence. Topics, drawn largely from the MCAT syllabus, include fluids and elasticity, thermodynamics, sound and light waves, electricity and magnetism, and atomic structure.
Prerequisites: Math competency up through but not necessarily including calculus
Instructors: T. Norsen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB T Norsen
Expected enrollment: 20

Psychology (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.PSYC-210-01  - Psychology (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(Summer) Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course surveys a range of topics within social psychology. How do other people influence us? How do people perceive one another? How do attitudes develop and change? Under what conditions do people conform to, or deviate from, social norms? We will survey concepts across several areas of social psychology with an emphasis on empirical research evidence.

Special Education (Professional and Graduate Education)

X.SPED-436-01 - Special Education (Professional and Graduate Education) - 2014-2015
(January) Moderate Disabilities Practicum I: Student Teaching in Self-Contained Classrooms
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students are expected to complete a supervised field experience of at least 60 hours in a self-contained special education classroom in a public school setting. Placements can be located within or outside of the Five College area. In addition to the field experience component, students attend three course meetings. Reading and writing assignments focus on a survey of learning disabilities, descriptions of special education programs, understanding Individuals with Disabilities Education Act policies and placement options, interpreting Individualized Education Program plans, and planning curriculum for self-contained special education classrooms.

Africana Studies

AFCNA-100-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: The Civil Rights Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; History 101)
We will examine the crusade for desegregation both within and beyond the South. Some attention will be given to the movement's Reconstruction precedents, but we will concentrate on the post-1954 period. Readings will cover how segregation was instituted; different phases of the movement; leaders, organization, and followers; the role of women and children; and post-movement history.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 16

AFCNA-200-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Foundations of Africana Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Writing-intensive; Politics 200)
This reading- and writing-intensive course draws upon the intellectual traditions of African American, African, and African diasporic studies in order to explore the connections and disjunctions among people of African descent. While the course pays attention to national, regional, and historical contexts, it asks this question: what do African descended people have in common and when and how are their experiences and interests different?
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 25

AFCNA-208-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Fall) Introduction to Twentieth-Century Critical Race Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement

AFCNA-234-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Black Metropolis: From MLK to Obama
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 234)
"Black Metropolis" refers to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King's failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson's urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.

Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 25

AFCNA-238-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Black Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Politics 238, Critical Social Thought 238)
This course will focus on the writings of Black political thinkers in the Americas, Africa and Europe. Through critical examination of the conditions against, and contexts within, which the discourses of these thinkers are situated, this course hopes to arrive at some understanding of the principles, goals and strategies developed to contest and redefine the notions of citizenship (vis-à-vis the imperatives of race/racism and the global colonial formation), humanity, development, democracy, and freedom.
Instructors: B. Forjwuor
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Topics in Africana Studies: Afro-Latin America: From Slavery to Invisibility
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

AFCNA-251-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Contemporary African American Literature II
(English 251)
This course will examine African American literature and culture in the postwar period as American identities are coalescing around the concept of the US as a world power. Specifically, our task during the semester will be to discuss the myriad ways black authors and artists attempt to interrogate the structure of racial hegemony by creating poetry and prose meant to expand notions of culture and form. We will also examine music, visual art, and advertisements from this era to have a greater sense of the black experience through various cultural representations. Writers will include James Baldwin, Toni Morrison, Ralph Ellison, Michael S. Harper and bell hooks.
Instructors: K. Brown

(Fall) Urban Policy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Politics 302)
Gentrification, unemployment, crime, failing schools, disinvestment, mass incarceration--what comes to mind when you think of the inner city? In response to a constrained fiscal environment, cities have increasingly adopted neoliberal policy approaches to address seemingly intractable urban problems. The seminar will study current research to assess the political and economic impact of this neoliberal policy regime on housing, education, and public safety.
Prerequisites: Politics 100, a politics First-Year Seminar, or Africana Studies 200.
Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 18

AFCNA-311-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Race Governance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Politics 311, Critical Social Thought 311)
The seminar will draw upon Foucauldian analytics of governmentality to engage the concept of race/racism as founded on, and maintained by, colonial material conditions mobilized for political outcomes. In exposing race as constituted by a colonial and governmental lineage rather than a biological or ethnic ancestry of origins, the course shifts the conceptual meaning of race/racism from its contemporary anchorage in ideology and biology, to the constitutive logics of colonial practices of governmentality in contemporary western liberal democracies. The seminar maps ways race/racism can be accounted for as necessary political tools routinely employed by states for administrative control.
Instructors: B. Forjwuor
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Politics of Decolonization
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Politics 321)
This seminar is a critical exploration of the various processes, accounts and theories of colonialism and decolonization in Africa and the Americas. The aim is to chart alternative paths to rethinking the meaning and impact of these terms. Focusing on the various colonial/imperial tools employed to subjugate, exploit and dominate colonized subjects, we will examine how liberal discourses/structures that are assumed to embody the terms of freedom and sovereignty have now become extensions of the colonial they were initially employed to overcome. The main objective of this course is to explore various approaches to redefining decolonization, noting the changing meaning of colonialism.
Instructors: B. Forjwuor
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) The Visual Culture of Protest
(English 339)
This course examines social protests from the perspective of the visual. Examining cultural productions from 1948-2015 we will focus on the geographical specificity of planned and spontaneous protests that have mobilized people into action. We will use a black studies framework to engage the possibilities present in resisting disparate power structures of race, gender, sexuality, class, and region. Artists, musicians, activists, writers, and grassroots organizers of social movements have been ever cognizant of the role of the visual in subverting power structures. We will use this opportunity to place visual culture at the center of a conversation concerning resistance, human rights, political agency, citizenship, and freedom.
Prerequisites: ENGL 200 or AFCNA 200
Instructors: K. Brown
Expected enrollment: 25

AFCNA-351-01 - Africana Studies - 2015-2016
(Fall) Sex, Race, and the Visual
(English 351)
This course examines categories of race, gender, sex, and sexuality through the lens of the visual. Using contemporary literature, photography, performance art, film, and theories of the visual, our task is to investigate the import and utility of embodiment. How do race, gender, and sexuality function in the artistic imaginary? What can we glean from cultural productions that engage the viewer/reader in ways that challenge ideas about conformity, fluidity, belonging, and self-reflection? More than a linear literary or theoretical trajectory, this course will provide a template for all the mechanisms of the visual -- psychological and ocular, interpretive, rhetorical and performative.
Prerequisites: English 200
Instructors: K. Brown
Expected enrollment: 15
(Spring) Black Migrations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; Politics 356)
This seminar is a comparative examination of the migration of African-descended people within and to the United States. It looks at in succession the original African diaspora through the Atlantic slave trade; the Great Migration of African Americans from the South; the immigration to the U.S. of African-descended people from the West Indies; and last, the movement of Africans from the continent to the United States since 1965 when immigration laws became more inclusive. We will evaluate the process of African Americanization for each new migratory group in all of its cultural and political ramifications. Course material includes articles, books, films, novels, and guest speakers.

(Spring) Black Radicalism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Writing-intensive; Politics 369)
The struggles and ideas of transatlantic black radicals have changed the ways we think and study--through the formation of Africana/African-American/Black-Studies--and the ways in which we express thoughts and ideas--through culture and politics. In this seminar, we will study the interdisciplinary history of black radicalism in the 20th century--in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa. This interdisciplinary history is animated by a central debate over the role of black internationalism, if any, in domestic black radical thought and action, in the United States, the Caribbean, and Africa.
Prerequisites: AFCNA 200 or permission of instructor
Notes: There will be a number of shared classes/discussions with the Africana Studies Senior Seminar at Williams College, both in person and through video-conference, who will be sharing the same syllabus. We will make a class visit to Williams, and we will host a visit from the Williams seminar. The shared meetings will be organized around speakers, presentations, and local activists.

ANTHR-204-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Anthropology of Modern Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
Since the mid-nineteenth century, Americans have viewed Japan as the Orient's most exotic and mysterious recess, alternately enticing and frightening in its difference. Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will strive for greater understanding of shared experiences as well as historical particularities. Issues covered may vary from one semester to another, but frequently focus on work, women, minorities, and popular culture. Films and anthropological works provide ethnographic examples of some key concepts.
Instructors: J. Roth
Expected enrollment: 30

ANTHR-216-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Collecting the Past: Art and Artifacts of the Ancient Americas
Early European explorers, modern travelers, collectors, curators, and archaeologists have contributed to the development of ancient Latin American collections in museums across the globe. This course traces the history of these collecting practices and uses recent case studies to demonstrate how museums negotiate—successfully and unsuccessfully—the competing interests of scholars, donors, local communities, and international law. Students will learn how archaeologists study a variety of artifact types within museum collections and will have the opportunity to conduct independent research projects using pre-Columbian pottery collections from the Mount Holyoke Art Museum.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, and one course in archaeology, anthropology, history of Latin America, museum studies, or art history, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Topics in Anthropology: Approaching Death: Culture, Health, and Science

This class challenges assumptions about death and dying as we examine its meanings and related practices in various cultural contexts. We will ask: what is universal about death and dying, and what is socially constructed? What can the social sciences, bio medicine, literature, the arts, and our own qualitative research tell us about the processes of dying, of grieving, and of providing care? In essence, what does it take to approach death?

Instructors: F. Aulino

ANTHR-216-02 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Maya Ethnography

Maya culture has long attracted the attention of travel writers, tourists, and anthropologists. This course introduces students to historical and contemporary patterns of Maya culture through careful analysis of ethnographic texts. We will read Maya cultural formations against the historical backdrop of colonial and postcolonial Latin American history, from Spanish colonialism through the Guatemalan civil war and into the present. Discussions will cover the content of ethnographic accounts as well as the institutional and disciplinary contexts of research. The course will pay particular attention to Maya history and cosmology as intertwined fields of cultural knowledge and practice.

(Fall) Topic: Feminist Health Politics - *Not offered this year/term

Health is about bodies, selves and politics. We will explore a series of health topics from feminist perspectives. How do gender, sexuality, class, disability, and age influence the ways in which one perceives and experiences health and the access one has to health information and health care? Are heteronormativity, cissexism, or one's place of living related to one's health status or one's health risks? By paying close attention to the relationships between community-based narratives, activities of health networks and organizations and theory, we will develop a solid understanding of the historical, political and cultural specificities of health issues, practices, services and movements.

ANTHR-222-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Spring) Making Class Visible

This course examines questions of social class within the Mount Holyoke community, at critical intersections with race, gender, and disability. Drawing upon readings in anthropology and film studies that critique the notion of a homogeneous "community" and offer alternative theoretical models, students will focus reflexively on three projects: the co-production of an ethnographic film, the creation of an advertising campaign for the film, creation of a website, for extending the conversation about class. Among the questions we explore at all three sites are: What is your idea of work?
Where and when do you notice class? Is class a topic of conversation and/or storytelling in your family?
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2.75 hours) plus screenings and production time to be arranged
Instructors: D. Barraglia

ANTHR-230-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Language in Culture and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
Every society is held together by systems of interpersonal and institutional communication. This course examines the nature of communication codes, including those based on language (speaking and writing) and those based on visual images (art, advertising, television). To understand communication in its social and historical dimensions, we study the psychological and cultural impact of media revolutions and then look at ways communication systems manipulate individual consciousness. Illustrative examples are drawn from Western and non-Western societies.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105

ANTHR-240-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Medical Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
Biocultural aspects of disease and healing are examined through case studies of nonindustrialized societies, including the relationship between malaria and sickle cell anemia in West Africa and ritual cannibalism, AIDS, and a degenerative nervous-system disorder (kuru) in highland New Guinea. This course surveys the cultural construction of suffering and healing, the medicalization of human social problems, and inequities in the distribution of disease and therapy.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor

Expected enrollment: 35

ANTHR-245-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Spring) Global Health and Humanitarianism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
This course examines global health disparities and the unequal distribution of disease, focusing on the health consequences of poverty, structural violence, and globalization. In addition, we critically examine the foundations of global humanitarianism and the complexities, constraints, and prospects for working collaboratively across borders to resolve global health problems. Readings will address how global health is constructed and represented, and why humanitarian endeavors (charitable, philanthropic, NGO, religious, etc.) have emerged as the preferred manner of addressing global health problems in the contemporary era.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Morgan

(Spring) Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course; Film Studies 320MW)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Gender, Food, and Agriculture in the Global Context - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Gender Studies 333JJ)
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.
Prerequisites: jr or sr; 8 credits in gender studies or anthropology or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Heller
Expected enrollment: 19

ANTHR-316-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Advanced Seminar in Ethnomusicology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Music 374)
Designed for music and non-music majors, this advanced seminar examines core theoretical and methodological issues in ethnomusicology and the debates that have shaped its practice since its origins in the early twentieth century as comparative musicology. Drawing on musical traditions from different parts of the world and supplemented by workshops conducted by visiting professional musicians, the course explores the interdisciplinary approaches that inform how ethnomusicologists study the significance of music "in" and "as" culture. Topics covered will include ethnographic methods, the intersection of musicological and anthropological perspectives, the political significance of musical hybridity, applied ethnomusicology, and sound studies.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Instructors: O. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 10

ANTHR-316-02 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Egg Cells and Embryos: Innovations in Reproductive and Genetic Technologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III requirement
This seminar will focus on emerging innovations in the development, use and governance of reproductive and genetic technologies (RGTs). How do novel developments at the interface of fertility treatment and biomedical research raise both new and enduring questions about the "naturalness" of procreation, the politics of queer families, the im/possibilities of disabilities, and transnational citizenship? Who has a say in what can be done and for which purposes? We will engage with ethnographic texts, documentaries, policy statements, citizen science activist projects, and social media in order to closely explore the diversity of perspectives in this field.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in gender studies or anthropology or permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Luce

Expected enrollment: 19
(Spring) Memory, History, and Forgetting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this seminar we question the distinction between myth and history and consider the relationship of historical consciousness to memory, forgetting, and other types of temporal awareness. We then examine the relationships among literacy, art, nationalism, and the invention of tradition and test the limits of ethnohistory. Finally, we look at the ways in which relics, museums, and tourism have all helped make history—as fact, experience, or commodity—possible.
Prerequisites: Juniors and Seniors only. 8 credits in department
Instructors: A. Lass
Expected enrollment: 17

(Fall) Identities/Differences: Anthropological Perspectives
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Community-based learning course)
This course examines notions of person and self across cultures, with specific reference to the social construction and experience of cultural identities. Discussions focus on issues of gender, race, ethnicity, and the values of individuality and relationality in different cultures.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: D. Battaglia
Expected enrollment: 19

ANTHR-350-01 - Anthropology - 2015-2016
(Fall) Issues in Contemporary Anthropological Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course offers an appraisal of the core questions and theoretical frameworks of the past two decades. It covers the relationship of fieldwork to theory building, new trends in anthropological analysis, and critical examinations of the uses and abuses of anthropological data.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department, seniors only.
Instructors: A. Lass
Expected enrollment: 25

Architectural Studies

(Spring) Introduction to Architecture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course introduces the many facets of architecture: history, theory, and design of buildings, landscapes, and cities. In addition to surveying architecture from the earliest forms of human habitation to contemporary residences, the course introduces basic analytical skills of architectural representation. Students will develop skills of speaking and writing about architecture, while also learning basic design tools: the sketch, map, plan, elevation, materials study, and landscape setting. Guest architects and theorists will introduce design topics and work with students preparing drawings and designs that are evaluated on effort and realization, not on proficiency.
Prerequisites: Open to first-years and sophomores
Instructors: M. Davis
(Fall) Introduction to Architectural Design: Sculpting Space
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This studio course will be a design investigation of a particular theme in or approach to architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (sketches, plans, elevations, models, computer diagramming, and various modes of digital representation) to interdisciplinary and socially pertinent design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space. Our goal is to apply creative techniques in art and sculpture to the creation of meaningful space.
Prerequisites: One semester of design or drawing is recommended
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: J. Jaminet
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Intermediate Studies in Architecture: Principles of Environmental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This hybrid studio addresses human comfort with lectures and problem work sessions integrated with design projects. We start with an in-depth study of the world's climate regions, the sun, and the earth's tilt and spin. Primary methods of heat transfer are investigated as students research two architectural solutions (vernacular and contemporary) within each climate. Using daylight, the sun's movement, and sun-path diagrams students will design, draw and build a functioning solar clock. Issues in day-lighting and thermal comfort will then drive an extended design problem. Students will be asked to solve numerical problems and present design solutions using both drawings and models.
Prerequisites: minimum 4 credits of architecture design studio; knowledge of algebra and trigonometry.
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: N. Darling
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Advanced Topics in Architecture: Digital Design and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course investigates new methods of design intelligence specifically associated with digital design and fabrication technologies. The computer is used in its capacity as a design tool, encompassing both digital skills and design thinking. Skills with 3D modeling and 2D visualization softwares are developed through a series of cumulative design exercises. Prototypes are generated using plotters, laser cutters, and 3D printers to confront the reality of virtual constructions. Design discourse is introduced through complementary lectures, readings, and discussions. This course encourages students to seek insight into the conditions that now shape the contemporary design environment.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in architectural studies, art history, or environmental studies
Instructors: J. Jaminet
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Research Seminar in Art History and Architectural Studies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Art History 391)
This seminar explores practical issues in doing advanced research in art history and architectural studies. Depending on student projects, activities could include reading primary sources, critical assessment of texts and archival materials, use of library and digital resources, and visual analysis. Students have an opportunity to think about how to organize research into a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in the department
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 10

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2015-2016

(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art and revolution; nineteenth-century abstraction. Lectures will be complimented by class discussion and short films.

Instructors: P. Staiti

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2015-2016

(Spring) Image and Environment: Ways of Seeing

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores how artists, images, and objects have sparked revolution, defined identity, changed how people think and act, reflected and made history. We will examine moments of major change in the arts through close attention to specific themes, individuals, and works from the last seven centuries. The goal is not a fact-filled, comprehensive, strictly chronological overview, but rather an understanding of the ways in which the western visual legacy has profoundly shaped how we see the world around us.

Instructors: J. Maier

Expected enrollment: 65

(Fall) Arts of Asia

(Asian Studies 107)

This multicultural course introduces students to the visual arts of Asia from the earliest times to the present. In a writing- and speaking-intensive environment, students will develop skills in visual analysis and art historical interpretation. Illustrated class lectures, group discussions, museum visits, and a variety of writing exercises will allow students to explore architecture, sculpture, painting, and other artifacts in relation to the history and culture of such diverse countries as India, China, Cambodia, Korea, and Japan.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Inside Art - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

First-year seminar

A discussion-based introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Using original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, classes will examine artistic materials, practices, and strategies from the Renaissance to the present. The course units are: Techniques and Materials, Visual Strategies, Illusion and Its Discontents, Subjects and Signs, Portraiture, and Interpretation. Students will practice the art of describing and refine their skills of observation and analysis.

Prerequisites: fy

Instructors: P. Staiti

Expected enrollment: 16

ARTH-110-02 - Art History - 2015-2016

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: How Images Shape History

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Like the internet in our modern digital age, the Renaissance printed image was an exceptionally powerful tool of communication. It was harnessed for protest, publicity, and propaganda. It had the potential to incite violence, alter beliefs, shape popular taste, and open new worlds—in short, to change the course of history. In this seminar, we will explore Renaissance printed imagery of all kinds, including many works we can see in person at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum and Special Collections. In addition to giving us a glimpse of a bygone time, these images give us a fresh perspective onto our own fast-paced visual culture.

(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Film Studies 202)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.
Instructors: P. Staiti

(Fall) From Alexander to Cleopatra: The Hellenistic World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 20

ARTH-216-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Spring) Empire: The Art and Archaeology of the Roman Provinces - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Fall) Age of the Cathedrals: Art in Europe, 1100-1500
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
A historical survey of medieval architecture, monumental sculpture, and painting of France, England, Germany, and Italy. The course concentrates on the great church as a multimedia environment and on the religious, political and social roles of art in society.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Italian Renaissance Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This survey outlines the arts in Italy from the late thirteenth to sixteenth centuries, a time of major cultural transformation. To trace these developments, we will take a geographic approach, focusing on cities and societies in order to understand the diverse social networks that linked artists like Leonardo da Vinci and Michelangelo with their publics. We will also address themes such as the role of women in the arts as both patrons and producers; the rise of print; and the expanding networks of cross-cultural contact that linked Italian cities like Florence, Rome, and Venice to places throughout western Europe and beyond.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 35

ARTH-231-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Spring) Northern Renaissance Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course covers the arts in Northern Europe during a time of upheaval. We will look at developments in panel painting, manuscript illumination, printmaking, and sculpture from the fourteenth to sixteenth centuries—examining shifting patterns of patronage and production along with shifting styles, techniques, and media. We will consider major artists like Jan van Eyck, Albrecht Dürer, and Pieter Bruegel, as well as seismic cultural shifts such as the print revolution, the emergence of the woman artist, the Reformation, and the origins of the art market.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 30

ARTH-233-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Renaissance and Baroque Architecture in Italy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course focuses on architecture in Italy—including churches, palaces, villas, and fortifications, as well as city planning—from 1400 to 1680. In this period, architects took their cues from the classical tradition even as they carved out their own territory, developing new techniques and perfecting old ones to realize their designs. We will trace shifting architectural practice through key figures from Brunelleschi to Bernini, and through the lens of larger cultural forces. We will also examine buildings in light of the painted and sculpted decorative programs that were often integral to their overall effect.
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 35

ARTH-236-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) The Global Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
The traditionalist view of the Renaissance treats Europe as if it were an isolated hotbed of cultural innovation. This course will reconsider the period as one of intensifying cross-pollination, when European artists were deeply affected by contact with the Near and Far East, Africa, and the Americas. Specific topics will include representations of distant lands and peoples; the collecting of exotic materials; cartography and expanding world horizons; Venice and the Ottoman world; and the reception of classical architecture in Latin America. We will consider many facets of Renaissance visual culture—from paintings and buildings to maps, prints, and illustrated books—that framed these global crosscurrents.
Prerequisites: so., jr., sr., or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-241-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Nineteenth-Century European Art: Neoclassicism to Impressionism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course surveys art in Europe from roughly the French Revolutionary era to the last quarter of the nineteenth century, that is, from the neoclassical painters (David and his atelier) at one end and the great painters of modern life in Paris (Manet and his followers) at the other. That chronology represents one of the most important transformations in the history of art: the origins and early development of what we today call "modern art." We will spend considerable time tracing this difficult passage, pausing here and there to readjust ourselves to the shifting language of art and to orient art's relationship to the modern public. Among the major figures to be studied are Constable, Courbet, Delacroix, Friedrich, Goya, Ingres, Monet, Renoir, and Turner.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 30

ARTH-242-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) History of Photography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, England, France, Germany, Mexico, and Russia. It charts the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, vernacular, and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are Arbus, Brady, Cameron, Cartier-Bresson, Day, Evans, Frank, Johnston, Lange, Mapplethorpe, Modotti, Muybridge, Sander, Steichen, Stieglitz, and Weston.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee

ARTH-243-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-244-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
European Art: 1885-1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course examines the great ruptures in European art that today we call modernist. It relates aspects of that art to the equally great transformations in European society: revolutionary ferment, the rise and consolidation of industrial capitalism, colonization and its discontents, and world war. Among the major figures to be studied are Duchamp, Matisse, Malevich, Picasso, Seurat, and van Gogh.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 30

Contemporary Art: Art Since 1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography since World War II. We will follow the "crisis of modernism," the rise of post-modernism, the turn to identity politics, and recent artistic interests in globalization, transnationalism, and diaspora. Among the major figures to be studied are Boltanski, Chicago, Christo, Johns, Kiefer, Mapplethorpe, Rauschenberg, and Warhol.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 30

American Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
A survey of painting and sculpture, this course introduces students to the work of individual artists. Classes also develop ways of looking at and thinking about art as the material expression of American social, political, and cultural ideas. Copley, Stuart, Cole, Church, Eakins, Homer, Sargent, Whistler, and Cassatt are some of the artists discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 35

American Art and Architecture 1620-1880
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
A survey of painting, architecture, sculpture, and design from the Colonial period to the late nineteenth century, this course introduces students to period styles and building types, as well as individual painters and architects. Classes develop ways of looking at and thinking about art and objects as material expressions of American social, political, and cultural ideas. Topics will include: portraiture, colonial Boston, art and revolution, nature and nation, the West, domestic architecture, and the city of Washington. Copley, Peale, Jefferson, Stuart, Cole, and Church are some of the key figures to be studied.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 30

Arts of China
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course will survey arts of China from the neolithic period to the twentieth century. Class lectures will analyze ceramics, bronze vessels, sculpture, architecture, calligraphy, and painting in relation to various religious ideas and political formations that took place in China's long history.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 40

Arts of Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
This course explores the special characteristics of Japanese art and architecture, from the early asymmetry of Jomon pottery and the abstraction of Haniwa figures to the later elite arts of the aristocratic, military, and merchant classes: narrative scroll painting, gold-ground screens, and the "floating world" of the color woodblock print. A historical survey of the arts of Japan, highlighting the interplay of art with religious and political issues.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Sinha

ARTH-263-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Spring) Arts of India - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
The multicultural course will survey architecture, sculpture, painting, and other arts of India from the earliest times to the twenty-first century. Students will explore the various arts as material expressions of a relationship between religious beliefs, geography and cultural conditions of the subcontinent of India in different historical periods. Class sessions will also provide opportunities for an examination of cross-cultural issues relating to the study of non-Western art in a Western academic discipline. Students will develop strategies for visual analysis and critical thinking through written assignments, class discussions, and close reading of scholarly articles.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 35

(Spring) Arts of Islam: Book, Mosque, and Palace - *Not offered this year/term
(Asian Studies 271)
Through investigation of major works produced in the Muslim world between the seventh and seventeenth centuries from Spain to India, this course explores the ways in which art and architecture were used to embody the faith, accommodate its particular needs, and express the power of its rulers. Topics include the calligraphy of the Qur'an, illustrated literature, the architecture of the mosque, and the aristocratic palace.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 35

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Unearthing the Past: Great Archaeological Discoveries of the Ancient World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement
The course considers excavations of the key Greek and Roman sites, such as Troy, Knossos, Olympia, Pompeii, and Aphrodisias, and with them the growth of archaeology as a hobby, a discipline, and a science. Moments of discovery, acts of preservation and restoration, tourism and popular reception will be covered.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 35

ARTH-290-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Spring) Issues in Art History: Pompeii - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Buried in the volcanic eruption of 79 CE, Pompeii provides an astounding level of preservation for fresco, sculpture, and luxury arts in addition to temples, baths, houses, shops, theaters, and streets. The rediscovery of the ancient site since the eighteenth century had a significant impact upon European art and literature. The course examines the surviving environment and artifacts created in the late republic and early empire and considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of Pompeii in art, theatre, and film up to the present.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 35

ARTH-290-02 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Issues in Art History: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions - *Not offered this year/term
(Film Studies 270BC)
Indian popular cinema, known as Bollywood, is commonly criticized for meandering storylines, overblown spectacles, and distracting dance numbers. But we will take popular cinema seriously, and explore it as both, a vibrant cultural form in India as well as intelligent filmmaking that entertains and challenges us. We will analyze a selection of films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a “constellation of interruptions.” Closely reading scholarly articles, participating in debates, writing guided assignments as well as independent research papers, we will learn to develop provocative ideas on Indian films in the context of world cinema.
Instructors: A. Sinha

(Spring) Topics in Art History: The City as a Work of Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will focus on city maps and bird's-eye views in order to explore urban representation and symbolism. Emphasis will be on European imagery from the fifteenth to eighteenth centuries, but the overall scope will range from ancient to modern times, encompassing western and non-western places and works. The class includes units on the history, theory, and form of the city (including utopian and ideal cities); approaches to representing the city (maps, models, pictorial views); and case studies (Kaifeng, Kyoto, Paris, Siena, Tenochtitlan, Venice, and others). The overarching goal is to understand how the essence of the city can be expressed in visual form.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Textiles and Fashion in Africa and the African Diaspora - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
By examining textile production (both hand weaving and industrial) and fashion (both streetwear and haute couture), this class investigates questions around cultural exchange, industrialization, and globalization. Students will gain knowledge about the flexibility of taxonomies of art, and they will learn basic analyses of textiles, dress, and fashion as they relate to African and African Diasporic cultures. Among the topics we study: Kente cloth and nationalism; waxprint cloth and globalization; Hip hop music and global fashion; and African fashion and haute couture.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Jewish Religious Art and Material Culture: From Ancient Israel to Contemporary Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
(Jewish Studies 270, Religion 270)
Despite the biblical prohibition against "graven images," there exists a rich history of Jewish religious art and aesthetics. This course will study ancient Israelite art and archeology, including the Second Temple in Jerusalem, the extraordinary mosaic floors and frescoes of early synagogues throughout the Mediterranean world, medieval illuminated Hebrew manuscripts and printed book culture, synagogues of later periods, including the wooden synagogues of Eastern Europe, and Judaic ritual objects of many types. Jewish art, architecture, and visual representation will be explored in the context of the ancient Near Eastern, Greco-Roman, Christian, and Islamic settings in which they evolved.
Instructors: L. Fine

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Ancient Painting and Mosaic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
The course treats the themes, techniques, and contexts of painting and mosaic in the ancient Mediterranean. From Bronze Age palaces to early Byzantine churches, surfaces were embellished with frescoes, pebbles, glass and jewels. These might be rendered in complex geometric shapes or with mythological scenes. Portable vases displayed elegantly drawn figures. We will examine the unique effects of each medium and how they influenced and interacted with each other.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Survey of African Art: The Creation of African Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
What is African art? Why are so many different kinds of cultural expressions from such a large and diverse continent categorized in the same way? In this course, we emphasize artistic creation from the perspective of artists by studying works from various African cultures. We analyze the creation of African art as a subject of inspiration and research. Throughout the semester, we discuss African diasporic arts and contemporary African art. Students examine both scholarly and popular interpretations of art objects to develop skills in critical analysis and visual literacy. The course incorporates visits to on-campus resources, such as the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Gilvin
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Topics in Art History: The City as a Work of Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
This course will focus on city maps and bird's-eye views in order to explore urban representation and symbolism. Emphasis will be on European imagery from the fifteenth to eighteenth centuries, but the overall scope will range from ancient to modern times, encompassing western and non-western places and works. The class includes units on the history, theory, and form of the city (including utopian and ideal cities); approaches to representing the city (maps, models, pictorial views); and case studies (Kaifeng, Kyoto, Paris, Siena, Tenochtitlan, Venice, and others). The overarching goal is to understand how the essence of the city can be expressed in visual form.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Issues in Art History: The City of Athens from Theseus to Alaric
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Taught in English; Classics 231)
A detailed survey of the principal surviving monuments and the overall architectural development of the city of Athens from its origins in the Bronze Age to the end of the 4th century C.E. The archaeological evidence will be discussed against a broader cultural and historical background, with an emphasis on the specific people and events that helped to shape the city and the general social and political circumstances that gave the monuments meaning.
Instructors: M. Landon
Expected enrollment: 25

ARTH-300-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Seminar: Critical Approaches to Art Historical Study - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Intended as a kind of "boot camp" for Art History majors, this course gives a major overview of the field, its methods, and its professional possibilities. Students will design their own research projects, conceptualize exhibitions, and hear from professionals working in various sectors of the art world. They will hone their research, writing, and speaking skills, while learning what it means to interpret art through lenses such as formalism, Marxism, gender, and postcolonialism. Students will also write applications for internships, jobs, and graduate programs—the goal being to consider how the art history skills they have acquired as undergraduates can translate into life after college, in the art world and beyond.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., 8 credits in department
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Topics in Art History: Contemporary Art of Africa and the African Diaspora - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
African and African Diasporic artists recently have achieved unprecedented acclaim in the most august institutions and trendiest art fairs in contemporary art. This course examines the complex and global histories of both "overnight sensations" and artists still unknown in global art circuits. The course examines arts education in Africa, African nationalism, the Black Arts Movement, Pan-Africanism, anti-Apartheid struggles, and the postcolonial theoretical and curatorial interventions of the 1990s and 2000s. Writing assignments will relate to a temporary exhibition of contemporary art from Africa at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Gilvin

ARTH-302-01 - Art History - 2015-2016
(Fall) Great Cities: Reimagining Paris - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
By 1300 Paris was the largest city in Europe, the royal capital of France, home to a brilliant university, and a thriving commercial hub. This seminar investigates the city through its surviving buildings, paintings, graphic images, maps, and literature. Using digital tools we will reconstruct key lost monuments in a process that casts participants in the role of builder, that demands careful evaluation of fragmentary evidence and that encourages creative imagination informed by art and architectural history.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, medieval studies, computer science, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculaneum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present. One highlight will be a visit the Pompeii exhibition at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or permission of instructor.
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Lure of the Past: Collecting Antiquity - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The seminar studies the collecting and display of Greek and Roman objects from antiquity to the present. We will look at current and past controversies about plunder and cultural patrimony. Students will engage in firsthand study of coins, vases, statues, portraits, frescoes, and mosaics and conduct advanced research on their original functions and contexts. Trips to museum collections will offer opportunities to assess installations of ancient objects in modern settings.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor. Courses in art history, classics, or ancient history
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Modern Art: Curating Global Contemporary Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Contemporary art belongs to a global exchange of ideas, requiring models for understanding its value beyond countries of origin. Museums and galleries regularly showcase artworks from different continents to signal historical interconnections. The course explores the challenges of curating contemporary art. We will study existing curatorial practices, and examine the role of small exhibitions as well as large international art fairs in creating an interlinked, international art community. We will work closely with the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, and develop exhibition strategies to foreground the global aspect of contemporary art.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor; 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor

ARTST-269-01 - Art Studio - 2015-2016
(Spring) Japanese Papermaking - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
In this course, students learn the traditional practice and history of Japanese hand papermaking, while exploring contemporary applications of the method. Thin, translucent, strong paper is great for drawing and printmaking, as well as sculptural construction and paper casting. This fluidity of medium naturally encourages students to become interdisciplinary in their art making. The apparent fragility, structural strength, and surprising longevity of the material provides a foundation for philosophical investigations into the nature of creativity.

Prerequisites: One 200-level studio art course

Notes: 2 studios (2 hours and 30 minutes each); Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials. Five-college students require instructor's permission for this course. Email the professor with a list of all the studio courses previously taken.

Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi

(Fall) First Year Sanskrit I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
Introduction to Sanskrit, the classical language of India. Related to other Indo-European languages (including English) and the ancestor of most of the sixteen major Indian languages (e.g., Hindi), Sanskrit is the medium of the literary classics, and of the texts of the Hindu, Buddhist, and Jain religions. This first-semester course covers Sanskrit grammar. The emphasis is on sentence construction, recognition and production of grammatical forms, and translation. Attention is also given to script, chanting, and pronunciation. The goal is proficiency in reading sentences and sustained passages in Sanskrit, in preparation for reading authentic texts in the second semester.
Notes: Students with previous language study should contact Ms. Peterson for placement.

(Fall) Topics in Asian Studies: Modern Indian and South Asian Writers - *Not offered this year/term

Credits:4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

Writing in South Asian languages (e.g., Hindi, Tamil) and English, modern Indian and South Asian writers, both women and men, have responded to colonialism, nationalism and the partition of India, and spoken for social and gender justice. They have imagined ways of being a person and belonging in and emerging from South Asia, in modernity, in families, nations and the world. We will examine these themes and study style and form in the novels, short stories and essays of major writers, including Rabindranath Tagore, R. K. Narayan, Anita Desai, Mahadevi Varma, Mahasweta Devi, Arundhati Roy, Dayal Mucunuddin, Vikram Chandra and Jhumpa Lahiri. All readings in English.

(Spring) Topics in Asian Studies: Cities in East Asia: Colonial/Modern/Global

Credits:4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores cities in East Asia from the late nineteenth century to the present. Why did the demolition of imperial city walls in Beijing, Tokyo, and Seoul symbolize "modernity" while Western-style architecture in treaty ports such as Shanghai and Yokohama represented a "new civilization"? How did monumental buildings such as Tiananmen Square, the Yasukuni Shrine, and the Kyungbok Palace play vital roles in forming new national identities? Why did these cities become centers for mass movements? In answering these questions, the course will outline the trajectory of Asian urban history from imperial city to global city.

(Spring) Topics in Asian History: Gender and Sexuality in East Asia

Credits:4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement

This course explores the political/social meaning of gender and sexuality from the nineteenth century in the East Asian context. What did womanhood mean in neo-Confucian regimes? Why did gender emerge as a significant category in various social discourses, including anarchism, Marxism, and nationalism? How did certain types of women such as "good wives and wise mothers," "sexy modern girls," and "socialist iron women" emerge as (un)desirable models in these societies? How did women become historical agents or social victims during imperialist wars and economic development? We investigate the relationship between gender and ideologies/states/market economies to find our answer.

(Spring) Stories and Storytelling in India and the World - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
India is a treasure-house of tales, and the home of vibrant traditions of oral and written storytelling in classical Sanskrit and in modern languages. Indian tales have travelled around the world and have parallels and versions in The Arabian Nights, Decameron, and Canterbury Tales. Indian epics and myths are related to those of the Greeks. We will study the epic Ramayana, myths of Hindu gods, animal fables (Panchatantra), women's stories, and folktales in various forms, puppet plays, song, and dramatic performance. We will examine who tells stories, why and when, and compare Indian stories with tales from elsewhere, e.g., Aesop, Grimm, Homer.

ASIAN-331-CS - Asian Studies - 2015-2016
(Spring) Asian History: Chinese Socialism and the Twentieth-Century World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement (History 331CS)
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
During the last two decades, China has emerged as a world superpower, transforming her image from a poverty-stricken communist country. The Communist Party itself has led the nation's development of a capitalist economy, in contradiction to its official ideology. How can we understand this historical irony? Was Chinese communism, together with world Marxism, defeated by capitalism? What can China's experience with socialism tell us today? To answer these questions, this course will explore various versions of Chinese socialism--anarchism, social democracy as well as Marxism--from the late Qing period to the present.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students who wish to register should fill out the 300-level application form on the History department's website: https://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application
Instructors: S. Lee
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Love, Gender-Crossing, and Women's Supremacy: A Reading of The Story of the Stone - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Gender Studies 333HH)
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women's supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieu of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.
Prerequisites: jr, sr
Instructors: Y. Wang
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Japanese Language and Linguistics: Content and Language Integrated Learning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I requirement
This is a content-and-language-integrated course that explores the characteristics of the Japanese language, including its vocabulary structure, phonetic system, writing system, and dialects. The class will be mainly conducted in Japanese. Readings will be authentic Japanese materials; their language levels are from children’s linguistics books to newspaper essays. Students are expected to conduct oral presentations and write short papers in Japanese in addition to readings and informal discussion.
Prerequisites: 3rd year Japanese (ASIAN 326) or equivalent and permission of instructor.
Instructors: N. Nemoto
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Love, Desire, and Gender in Indian Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I requirement (Taught in English; Gender Studies 333ND)
Seminar on love, desire and gender, major themes in Indian literature. We will read classic poems, plays, and narratives in translation from Sanskrit, Tamil, Hindi, and other languages, in relation to aesthetic theory, visual arts (miniature paintings) and performance genres (Indian dance and the modern Bollywood cinema). Study of the conventions of courtly love, including aesthetic mood (rasa) and natural landscapes, and their transformation in Hindu bhakti and Sufi Muslim mystical texts, the Radha Krishna myth, and film. Focus on representations of women and men, and on issues of power, voice, and agency.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Instructors: I. Peterson
Expected enrollment: 17

ASIAN-360-01 - Asian Studies - 2015-2016
(Fall) Topics in Asian Art: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Art History 360/B.C., Film Studies 370/B.C.)
How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a
"constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

Astronomy

ASTR-100-01 - Astronomy - 2015-2016
(Fall) Survey of the Universe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-101 but this course does not have a lab.

(Fall) Survey of the Universe with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.
In lab, learn the constellations and how to use the telescopes. Use them to observe celestial objects, including the moon, the sun, the planets, nebulae, and galaxies. Learn celestial coordinate and timekeeping systems. Find out how telescopes work.
Notes: Designed for non-science majors. The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for AST 100. FY only, though others will be able to register during Add/Drop if spaces remain available.

(Fall) Exploration of Mars
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Exploration of Mars is an ongoing effort that has greatly expanded our knowledge of the Red Planet and changed our vision of its surface. We will examine the history of the investigation and exploration of Mars. We will also plan future observations from orbiting spacecraft, engage with scientists involved in current missions, and imagine the best ways to explore Mars in upcoming decades. Developing physical intuition and analytical skills in astronomy, geology, physics and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as speaking and writing ability.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. Dyar

Expected enrollment: 16

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2015-2016

(Spring) Planetary Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This intermediate-level course covers fundamentals of spectroscopy, remote sensing, and planetary surfaces. Discussions will include interiors, atmospheres, compositions, origins, and evolution of terrestrial planets; satellites, asteroids, comets, and planetary rings.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100/101 and one semester of a physical science course.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 40

ASTR-228-01 - Astronomy - 2015-2016

(Spring) Astrophysics I: Stars and Galaxies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A calculus-based introduction to the properties, structure, formation, and evolution of stars and galaxies. The laws of gravity, thermal physics, and atomic physics provide a basis for understanding observed properties of stars, interstellar gas, and dust. We apply these concepts to develop an understanding of stellar atmospheres, interiors, and evolution, the interstellar medium, and the Milky Way and other galaxies.
Prerequisites: Physics 110 and Math 102/202; Physics 190/201 and Math 203 strongly suggested

(Fall) Topics in Astrophysics: Asteroids and Comets
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is an introduction to asteroids and comets from both an astronomical and geological point of view. Topics that will be covered will include how these objects are discovered, their orbits, the mineralogies of asteroids and meteorites, how these objects are classified, impact hazard scales, and space missions. This course is appropriate for any student interested in the properties of these small bodies.

BIOCH-311-01 - Biochemistry - 2015-2016
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Sciences 311, Chemistry 311)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), Chemistry 302
Instructors: V. Lakose
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 02 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 03 LAB L Lentz-Marino
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biological Sciences 314, Chemistry 314)
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.
(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected. This course will focus on antibiotic resistance and the emergence of drug-resistant bacteria.
Prerequisites: Biochemistry 311 or Biochemistry 314, or permission of instructor
Instructors: V. Lukose
Expected enrollment: 40

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

BIOCH-399-01 - Biochemistry - 2015-2016
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings to discuss articles and material from the current biochemical literature. Students will attend lectures, write papers, and give presentations in culmination of their biochemistry experience. Discussions relevant to graduate school applications and careers in biochemical fields will also be held.
Prerequisites: Juniors and senior biochemistry majors only.
Notes: Highly recommended to be completed during the second semester of junior year or the first semester of the senior year.
Instructors: K. Broaders
Expected enrollment: 24
How are animal bodies built to deal with living on earth? In this course we will study the function of cells, organs, and organ systems that have evolved to help animals make their way through the physical and chemical environment. In lecture and in lab, we will consider the common needs of animals -- needs such as feeding, breathing, and reproducing -- and the diverse solutions they have devised. A range of life, from unicellular organisms to animals with backbones (including mammals), will be considered.

Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for first-year students
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-01 or L-02, is also required.
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 05 LAB S Bacon | 06 LAB S Bacon |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it affects our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.
Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for first-year students
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-01, is also required.
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Diversity of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
We will survey the great diversity of life on earth from the archaebacteria that live in hot sulfur springs to giant sequoia trees to singing birds. Labs will explore biological diversity via collecting trips around campus as well as laboratory experiments and will introduce students to data collection, manipulation, and analysis.
Prerequisites: 24 first year seats and 12 sophomore seats
Instructors: S. Barry
Section Instructors: 03 LAB S Barry | 04 LAB S Barry | 05 LAB S Barry |
Expected enrollment: 36

BIOL-145-03 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Introductory Biology: A Green World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.
Prerequisites: FY
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 06 LAB A Frary | 07 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 18

BIOL-145-04 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Introduction to Biological Inquiry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This inquiry-based class will help students develop a basic understanding of how knowledge in biology is generated, and begin to acquire the skills necessary to conduct scientific research and to understand basic data analysis. Students will learn basic concepts in biology (with emphasis in organismal biology) as they gain experience formulating hypotheses and critically evaluating evidence.
Prerequisites: FY
Instructors: P. Brennan
Section Instructors: 01 LAB P Brennan | 02 LAB P Brennan |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160L). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.
Prerequisites: FY
Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.
Instructors: J. Andras, K. Broaders
Expected enrollment: 48

BIOL-200-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Introductory Biology II: How Organisms Develop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchins), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.
Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 145, 146, or 160, or Neuroscience & Behavior 100
Instructors: R. Fink, A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department |

BIOL-206-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Teaching Children Science: College Students in the Elementary Classroom
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Educational Studies 203)
This course is designed for science students with interests in teaching and learning with children. It will focus on research, theory and practice pertinent to science education, linking scientific information gained in college classes to children's learning of scientific phenomena. Weekly class meetings (from 1-3 hours) will include laboratory and off-site field investigations. Each student will also become a "Science Buddy" at a local elementary school, assisting children with hands-on science experiences for at least 1 hour each week.
Prerequisites: One year of college science (any discipline), at least one course with laboratory. By permission of instructor only: please email rfink if interested in being considered
Instructors: R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance.
BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES 220 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016

(Spring) Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement.
The aim of this course is to understand the fundamental unit of life—the cell—at the molecular level. We will consider the assembly and structure of cellular membranes, proteins, organelles, and the cytoskeleton, as well as their roles in cellular processes including the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, protein sorting, motility, signal transduction, and cell-cell communication. Emphasis will be placed upon the diversity of cellular form and function and the cell biological basis for disease. The laboratory portion of this course will illustrate and analyze these phenomena through selected biochemical, genetic, and microscopy-based approaches.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 or 210, plus Chemistry 201 (can be taken concurrently).
Instructors: K. Schreiber
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | 05 LAB The department |
Expected enrollment: 96

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES 223 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016

(Fall) Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement.
This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145 or 160 plus at least one semester of Calculus or Statistics (which may have been taken in high school, but then instructor permission will be required for registration).
Notes: Biology 223 and/or Biology 226 must be taken for the Biology major.
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes | 03 LAB M Hoopes | 04 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 45

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES 226 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016

(Spring) Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement.
The mechanisms of evolutionary change within populations and between species; patterns of change in space, time and form; and the origin of adaptations. These approaches make sense of the diversity of life. Then we turn to the evolution of developmental pathways, as a way of approaching the unity of life.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Rachootin | 02 LAB S Rachootin | 03 LAB S Rachootin |
Expected enrollment: 45

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES 234 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016

(Spring) Biostatistics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement.
The statistics sections of biology articles have become so technical and jargon-filled that many biologists feel intimidated into skipping them or blindly accepting the stated results. But how can we ask relevant questions or push the boundaries of knowledge if we skip these sections? Using lectures, data collection, and hands-on analysis in R, this course will connect statistics to biology to help students develop a gut instinct for experimental design and analysis. We will explore sampling bias and data visualization and review methods and assumptions for the most common approaches with examples from current biological literature and our own data.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Biology or ES 200
Instructors: M. Hoopes, S. Cox
Expected enrollment: 22

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES 236 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016

(Fall) Topics in Biological Sciences: Biology of Terrestrial Arthropods
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement.
Evolutionary history of the terrestrial arthropods (body plans, relationships, fossil history); physiology (the implications of cuticle, thermoregulation, flight); reproduction (life cycles, metamorphosis, mating systems); behavior (communication, sociality); ecology (parasitism, mutualism, predator-prey and plant-insect interactions). Each student will collect, mount, and identify specimens for her own collection.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of instructor
Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.

BIOL-301-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Regenerative Medicine: Biology and Bioethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
What is regenerative medicine? What is the science that drives new medical therapies using stem cells? We will study the biology of adult, embryonic, and induced pluripotent stem cells, as well as the legal, ethical, and moral implications of using these cells in medical therapies. Each member of the class will participate in a staged debate on these issues for an introductory biology class. Pending funding, we may travel to Washington, D.C. to attend a meeting of the Commission on Bioethics.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor only, with Biological Sciences 220 or equivalent expected
Instructors: R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 8

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Molecular Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course examines the dynamics of evolutionary change at the molecular level, the effects of various molecular mechanisms on the structure and function of genes and genomes, and the methodology involved in dealing with molecular data from an evolutionary perspective. Lab work will be devoted to learning ways to analyze DNA sequence data and to create and evaluate trees that use molecular data.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 226
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering. The fourth hour will follow a "journal club" format with student presentations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, and either 220 or 311
Instructors: J. Knight
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interaction in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formation. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220, or permission of instructor

BIOL-307-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Comparative Vertebrate Anatomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

We will study the structure, function and evolution of the diversity of structures that allow vertebrates to perform basic functions such as locomotion. We will connect the functions with day-to-day challenges for vertebrates, and we will discuss functional disruption such as disease and trauma. In lab we will dissect fresh-frozen and formaline-preserved vertebrates. A willingness to work with such preserved material is critical to success in class. Students are expected to work in groups during class time, as well as read the required chapters before class. This class requires you to memorize the names of several structures in a functional context.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or Biological Sciences 226

Instructors: P. Brennan

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I requirement
(Writing-intensive; History 361DA)

This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin’s theory of evolution - his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226 or History 248

Instructors: S. Rachootin

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove - and disprove - biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226

Instructors: S. Rachootin

Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Rachootin

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-311-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biochemistry 311, Chemistry 311)

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302

Instructors: V. Lukose

Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 02 LAB L Lentz-Marino | 03 LAB L Lentz-Marino

Expected enrollment: 40

BIOL-314-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Biochemistry 314, Chemistry 314)

This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302 (can be taken concurrently)

Notes: Please sign up for this course as Biochemistry 314
BIOI-315-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Behavioral Ecology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this course, students learn to view and understand animal behavior within an evolutionary context. The mechanistic side of behavior is investigated and students explore how behavioral traits originate and evolve over time. Students will integrate their knowledge of how organisms work with an appreciation of why they work the way they do. At the end of the course, students will understand basic concepts in behavioral biology and know many of the experiments that have facilitated our understanding of this field. They will be able to construct hypotheses and design experiments that address behavioral phenomena. The laboratory portion of this course is based on individual projects.
Prerequisites: 8 credits of biology at the 200 level with 223 or 226 strongly recommended
Instructors: R. Brodie
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Brodie | 02 LAB R Brodie |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOI-317-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Immunology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, cancer, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the use of clinical case studies to reinforce these ideas, although experimental models will also be discussed. In the final section of the course, students will research and deliver an oral presentation on an immunology topic of interest.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 plus either Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for Biology 319 but this course does not include a lab.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOI-318-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Aquatic Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this course, we will focus on marine coastal and open ocean habitats as well as freshwater systems, including lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks, and wetlands. For oceans, we will explore such topics as currents, the interaction of climate and oceans, nutrient cycling and ecosystems. Our study of freshwater systems will focus on cycles, water chemistry and flora and fauna of local freshwater habitats.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Brodie | 02 LAB R Brodie |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOI-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Immunology with Laboratory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, cancer, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with use of clinical case studies to reinforce these ideas, although experimental models will also be discussed. The laboratory portion will include experience with basic immunology techniques, followed by an extensive six-week independent project that culminates in a final research paper.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 plus either Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as Biology 317, but this course includes a laboratory.
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Stranford | 02 LAB S Stranford |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOI-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Full) Introduction to Transmission Electron Microscopy
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Basic principles of transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and potential uses in biological studies. Each student selects a project and learns the fundamentals of specimen preparation, operation of the TEM, and image acquisition. Preparation, assessment and interpretation of the resulting electron micrographs culminate in an individual portfolio.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220, Per I

Instructors: B. Carbajal-Gonzalez

Expected enrollment: 4

(Fall) Conference Course: Art, Music, and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Music 321AM)

Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of visual and auditory stimuli, ask how this processing may affect the way we do art and music, and explore where these phenomena may occur in the brain. As we engage in discussion and hands-on activities, we will discover the commonalities between the arts and the sciences including practice, experimentation, exploration, innovation, and creativity.

Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music

Notes: students studying art and music are encouraged to enroll

Instructors: S. Barry, L. Laderach

Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-B - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Conference Course: Biology of Aging
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

Biology of Aging explores the molecular mechanisms regulating human aging. Topics include general biology of aging, genetics of longevity, cellular aging, human longevity, and potential interventions to modulate human aging. Emphasis will be placed on age-related diseases as well, including cancer, diabetes, and Alzheimer's disease. In the laboratory component, we will examine genetic and pharmacological ways to regulate lifespan of the model organism, c. elegans.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220

Instructors: K. Schreiber

Section Instructors: 01 LAB K Schreiber | 02 LAB K Schreiber |

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This seminar is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their abilities to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226

Instructors: R. Brodie

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Conference Course: Extreme Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees Celsius. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 plus 1 additional Biological Sciences course above 200

Instructors: G. Gillis

Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-P - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Conference Course: Molecular Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement

Over the past quarter century, molecular genetic methods have become increasingly important in ecological research. In this course, we will examine contemporary molecular genetic tools and learn how they can be used to answer ecological questions. Topics will include: reconstruction of ancestral relationships; measuring the size, diversity, and spatial structure of populations; characterization of migration and dispersal patterns; and identification of sensitive or threatened species and populations. We will explore these themes through foundational texts and current scientific literature, and we will analyze molecular genetic datasets in class to gain familiarity with available techniques.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223 or 226.
Instructors: J. Andras
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-321-R - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Conference Course: Race and Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this student-centered, discussion-based seminar, we will explore hypotheses about the evolution of human variation and how our ideas about race intersect with new information from the human genome. We will focus on three main themes: genes, geography, and human variation; the misuse of evolutionary biology in the construction of race; and race in the age of the human genome.
Prerequisites: Any 200 level Biology course
Notes: Class materials will be drawn from primary scientific literature, books by evolutionary biologists and film. Student learning will be evaluated through writing assignments, presentations, and participation in online and face-to-face discussions.
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-322-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Physics 222)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 20

BIOL-325-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Plant Diversity and Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 223 or 226, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-326-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Ocean Blues: State of the World's Oceans
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar explores the science behind pressing issues facing our oceans, such as coastal eutrophication, ocean acidification and overfishing. Professors from the Five College Coastal and Marine Sciences (FCCMS) certificate program, representing different science disciplines, will engage with students in this discussion-based course. Students will gain a greater understanding of the scientific approaches being used to investigate ocean ecosystem health. They will also learn to analyze scientific literature and engage constructively in scholarly discussions. In the lab component of this course, students will use the ponds on the Mount Holyoke campus to learn how to monitor the chemical, geological and biological properties of marine and freshwater ecosystems.
Prerequisites: Any 200 level science, preference will be given to juniors and seniors who are participating in the Coastal and Marine Sciences certificate program.
Notes: Ocean Blues can be applied to any of the course categories required for the certificate.
Instructors: R. Brodie
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Brodie | 02 LAB R Brodie |
Expected enrollment: 24
(Fall) Microbiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223
Notes: In this instance, this course does not satisfy the lab requirement.
Instructors: K. Flanagan, S. Massoni, E. Mears
Expected enrollment: 24

(Spring) Human Physiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
A consideration of the physiological processes involved in the control of human body functions. We will study the mechanisms for regulating individual organ systems and how these mechanisms respond to changing needs of the individual. Our examination of the physiological controls will include an analysis of the underlying cellular and molecular processes that drive the mechanisms and integrate the activities of the different systems.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Bacon | 02 LAB S Bacon
Expected enrollment: 24

(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 or Environmental Studies 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Macroevolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, and the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Notes: Biology majors who arrange a lab project in this class can count this course as a lab course.
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Neurobiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics
Notes: preference given to seniors
Instructors: G. Tanner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Tanner | 02 LAB G Tanner | 03 G Tanner
Expected enrollment: 30

(Fall) Bacterial Cell Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
Long considered to be simple "bags of enzymes," bacteria are now appreciated to be highly ordered and dynamic cells. Bacterial cells organize their genetic material, assemble cytoskeletons, localize proteins, construct organelle-like compartments, differentiate, and communicate with one another to coordinate multicellular behaviors. This course will explore the exciting new field of bacterial cell biology via the primary scientific literature. Substantial student participation in the form of group work and discussions will be expected.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Instructors: A. Camp
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-337-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Symbiotic Interactions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
(Writing-intensive)
From mutualism to parasitism, symbiotic interactions are a universal feature of life. In this seminar we will study the mechanisms underlying symbiotic interactions and consider their significance for the ecology and evolution of organisms. Through foundational texts and current scientific literature, we will explore some of the most spectacular and important examples of contemporary symbioses - from coral reefs, to infectious diseases, to the vast communities of microbes that live on and in our bodies - and we will learn how symbiosis is responsible for major milestones in the history of life, such as the origin of the eukaryotic cell, the emergence of land plants, and the evolution of sex.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: J. Andras
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-338-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Evolution and Human Sexual Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
This seminar will discuss patterns and variations of human sexual behavior and the likely role that evolution has played in shaping some of these patterns. We will discuss the evolution of sex, gender differences, principles of sexual selection, physiology, cultural differences in sexual behavior, mating systems, etc. We will follow a recently published book on this topic, and add readings from the primary literature. Students are expected to write one major research paper on any aspect of human sexual behavior of their choosing and to be ready to present their findings to the class towards the end of the semester.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: P. Brennan
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II requirement
In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210
Instructors: C. Woodard
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and permission of department; submit application in biological sciences office or via the department's Web site
Notes: NOTE: See safety training restrictions in description of Biological Sciences 295
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 30

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2015-2016
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and permission of department; submit application in biological sciences office or via the department's Web site
Notes: NOTE: See safety training restrictions in description of Biological Sciences 295
