SPAN-330-01 - Spanish - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Studies in Identities and Intersections: Blak Is Black: Afro-Central American Literatures and Cultures

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

From Belize to Panama, there exists an Afro-Creole cultural continuum with roots in the British colonial history and U.S. transnational expansion. In spite of the rhetoric of inclusion, Afro-Central Americans are largely absent from official discourse of national identity. This course will examine texts by Afro-Central American writers and artists as they contest discourses of invisibility, dominant representations of blackness, and racial ideologies that exclude Afro-descendants from the national literary canons. This course will study the works from Belize, Honduras, Nicaragua Costa Rica, and Panama.

Instructors: D. Mosby

Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: Natural's Not in It: Pedro Almodóvar

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 380-01)

This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema's favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?

Prerequisites: Spanish 212 and Film Studies 201, or Film Studies 202 or Spanish 240; or permission of instructor

Notes: Weekly evening screenings

Instructors: J. Chunbaugh

Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-350-01 - Spanish - 2010-2011

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This community-based learning course examines how digital storytelling enables communities to express themselves and gain social visibility through literary and media discourses. How do traditionally marginalized communities tell their own stories? Together with the Springfield-based Latino Youth Media Institute, students will produce digital stories and co-lead media workshops for community residents. Throughout the semester, students will alternate classroom instruction and off-campus work in Springfield (transportation arranged by the College).

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Concepts and Practices of Power: Beyond Logocentrism

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 333)

Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Language and Society: History of Romance Languages

(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.

This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.

Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student's choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive advanced credit.

STAT-140-01 - Statistics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological, and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables and regression.
Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra
Instructors: P. Matheson

STAT-240-01 - Statistics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level mathematics or statistics course or permission of instructor.
Instructors: J. Gifford

(Spring) Linear Statistical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Mathematical concepts from linear algebra and n-dimensional Euclidean geometry, together with statistical concepts of estimation and hypothesis testing, are developed and used to construct a unifying theory for two classes of applied methods: analysis of variance and regression analysis. The theory is developed in three stages: least squares and orthogonal projections; moment assumptions and the Gauss-Markov theorem; and the normal distribution and F-tests.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211

(Fall) Probability - *Not offered this year/term
(Mathematics 342f)
This course develops the ideas of probability simultaneously from experimental and theoretical perspectives. The laboratory provides a range of experiences that enhance and sharpen the theoretical approach and, moreover, allows us to observe regularities in complex phenomena and to conjecture theorems. Topics include: introductory experiments; axiomatic probability; random variables, expectation, and variance; discrete distributions; continuous distributions; stochastic processes; functions of random variables; estimation and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in fall 2011.

(Spring) Mathematical Statistics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to the mathematical theory of statistics and to the application of that theory to the real world. Topics include probability, random variables, special distributions, introduction to estimation of parameters, and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and 342
Notes: offered every spring semester alternately at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in spring 2012.

THEAT-120-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Design: Costume Construction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will explore the evolution of costume construction, using both historical and modern methods. Commercial patterning, flat patterning, and draping methods will be covered. Students will learn skills for the construction, care, identification, and treatment of fabric and the use and maintenance of tools used in the costume shop. Through these methods we will interpret costume renderings by prominent designers.
Prerequisites: preference to fy and so
Notes: lab fee $35; additional purchase of construction supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: Bergeron
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-122-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set and costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how their work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of this process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, and models. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.

Notes: lab; $30. lab fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.

Instructors: V. James, S. Conly
Expected enrollment: 24

THEAT-126-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) Lighting Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and practice of lighting design for the theatre. This course will cover the basics about light, lighting equipment and how to develop a design. Students will learn how to draft a light plot, focus lights, and build light cues.

Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student

Instructors: L. Dubin

THEAT-128-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) Sound Design I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
What is sound design? This course attempts to answer that question, exploring how to look at a text and launch the creative process, and how to take the ideas based on that creative process and turn them into sounds to be used in a show. This is all done through a series of introductory lab projects and then a complete design for a short play, all while learning three new pieces of software. This is a highly interactive class, where student participation is key; students will be expected to take part in each project, as well as creating their own work.

Instructors: R. Kaplowitz

THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) What Is Performance?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.

Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Babb

THEAT-166-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to the Music of Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Music 166)
This course concentrates on indigenous musical traditions from different parts of Africa. Cross-cultural features as well as regional varieties are examined. A major objective of the course is to facilitate an understanding of the cultural contexts within which African musical traditions derive their meaning and significance. Relying on live performances and recordings, the course examines the conceptual and behavioral aspects of music, the contexts and functions of performances, musical instruments and vocal styles, the training and status of musicians, and the stylistic features of the music. The course culminates in a performance of an African opera.

Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: What Is Memory?

THEAT-205-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011

A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain, and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

Acting II - Not offered this year/term

THEAT-215-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011

A continuation of techniques developed in Performance I with a greater commitment to the culture of collaboration. Concentration is on scene work with "classic" realist playwrights, Chekhov, Ibsen, and Williams. Scene study continues with contemporary masters Churchill, Mamet, and Parks. Actor training will involve the embodiment of physical behavior, the visceral use of language, and more intermediate composition work with Viewpoints to develop and refine character. Practical tools explored in class are intended to offer the student greater vocal, physical, and imaginative freedom and clarity, as well as formidable text analysis skills.

Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 105 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); lab; $10 lab fee.

THEAT-215-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011

The focus of this course is on the performance structures of Japanese theatre. The course is divided into sections of theory and practice. The theory section will contain an overview of the history of Japanese theatre forms and styles and more in depth exploration of Noh, Kyogen, Kabuki, and Butoh. Students will work in class on scenes from classic Japanese texts and will be trained in basic forms of Japanese movement. Each student will be required to perform in two scenes and to do an in-class presentation.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor

Notes: Lab fee $10

Instructors: B. OHarra

In this course we will engage (perform/direct) scenes from plays written by contemporary American women playwrights (i.e., Sybil Kempson, Erin Courtney, Karinne Keithly) while comparing them to scenes from early experimental American women playwrights (Gertrude Stein, Susan Glaspell). This is an advanced performance class that will rely heavily on dramaturgy as a point of access into texts that often defy the basic rules of drama and acting. There will be some theoretical and historical reading assignments, short individual research projects, and monthly scene presentations.

THEAT-220-01  - Theatre Arts  - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Design: Masks and Mask Making for the Stage
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The class will provide an overview of the history of masks and their traditional and nontraditional uses and will teach the basics of mask making: creating a life mask, molding and casting, making masks from positive and negative molds, etc. Students will design and build several masks using both traditional and modern techniques and materials.
Prerequisites: Preference for work on production crews and taking one or more of the following: painting, drawing, sculpture, architecture, costume and/or set construction, lighting design.
Notes: lab (see catalogue), and $25 lab fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: S. Conly

THEAT-220-03  - Theatre Arts  - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Design: Twentieth Century Fashion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course is on the development of fashion and wearable art from the end of the nineteenth century to the year 2000. The course provides an overview of styles and a closer look at the work of individual artists including Charles Frederick Worth, Paul Poiret, Mario Fortuny, Elsa Schiaparelli, Coco Chanel, Cristobal Balenciaga, Emilio Pucci, Mary Quant, Rudi Gurentzch, Alix Gres, Yves Saint Laurent, Christian LaCroix, Issey Miyake, Hussein Chalayan, Jean-Paul Gaultier, Anna Sui and Vivienne Westwood, most of whom have also designed iconic costumes for theatre or film. Lectures will be accompanied by PowerPoint presentation and where possible original examples of clothing will be shown.
Instructors: V. James

THEAT-224-01  - Theatre Arts  - 2010-2011
(Spring) Costume Design II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An in-depth and hands-on study of the art and craft of the costume designer focusing primarily on costume design for the stage but touching also upon film and television design. Students will hone skills in script and character analysis, design research and development, production collaboration/coordination, rendering techniques, and all of the other responsibilities that fall upon the costume designer between the signing of the contract and opening night. Students, including those who doubt their artistic ability, will be given ample instruction, opportunity, and encouragement to develop artistically and should be prepared to work seriously to develop the necessary design skills.

Prerequisites: Instructor permission and Design I. Preference for one or more of the following and production crew work: painting, drawing, sculpture, architecture, costume and/or set construction, lighting design

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and lab; $25 lab fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student

THEAT-251-01 - Theatre Arts - 2010-2011
(Fall) Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

(Spring) Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.

(Spring) Seminar: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(320x02 filmst  Seminar in film studies Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre)
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: THEAT 252 or FILMST 201 or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Seminar: Renaissance Theater and the Early Modern Book
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 317)
The commercial theater of Shakespeare and his contemporaries evolved as a popular art as the emerging market for printed books began to create a popular literature. Theaters, acting companies, plays, and theatrical audiences helped shape one another, as the book trade shaped and was shaped by reading publics. Case studies in plays by such writers as Christopher Marlowe, Thomas Dekker, Ben Jonson, Thomas Middleton, Elizabeth Cary, and John Webster; sustained attention to acting companies, performance practices such as cross-dressing, gender roles, and sexuality. Substantial opportunity for independent work reflecting each student's interests.

(Spring) Seminar: Performance Criticism Workshop - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar immerses students in the local theatre scene. Through conscious spectatorship, we learn to approach live performance from a critical perspective, rethinking how we see, understand, and respond as audience members. In addition, we read and discuss the work of selected theatre critics, considering the politics of theatre-going as a public discourse. Each student will write a number of short reviews over the semester, which will be workshopped with an eye for publication. As such, we will consider elements of style and tone, and practice the arts of editing, revising, and offering feedback to others.

African American and African Studies

AFRAM-100-01 - African American and African Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: The Civil Rights Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; History 101)
We will examine the crusade for desegregation both within and beyond the South. Some attention will be given to the movement's Reconstruction precedents, but we will concentrate on the post-1954 period. Readings will cover how segregation was instituted; different phases of the movement; leaders, organization, and followers; the role of women and children; and post-movement history.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. J. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Introduction to African American and African Studies: Identity, Community, and Progress - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will introduce students to topics and methodologies within the vast field of African studies. This course will attempt to disrupt the history-based, U.S.-centric model by presenting alternate texts and approaches to the study of the global black experience. We must necessarily begin by questioning the idea, definition, and practice of blackness: what is it? How/did a unified black identity emerge from disparate people, practices, and experiences? After investigating the formation of the African diaspora, we will consider texts from the Americas, Europe, and the continent, assessing each for its historical, aesthetic, political, and cultural value.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) Black Women Writers: Feminist Visions from the African Diaspora - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement (Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204)
This course will explore the influence of feminist politics on the writing of women throughout the African Diaspora. By exploring the different cultural, political, and historical contexts in which these writers work, we will attempt to define the continuities and conflicts that exist within the vast field of black women's writing. Why, when, and how did a black feminist consciousness emerge? How did racial tensions within the predominantly white feminist movement lead to the development of a separate black "womanist"/Third World agenda? How does feminist literature of the African Diaspora challenge negative stereotypes and misrepresentations of black women's realities?

(Fall) African American Culture and Society - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Reviews theory and policy research that targets durable (race, gender, and class) inequalities. How has recent policy (especially involving schools and prisons) shaped public life and private sector capacity in communities of color from 1976 to the present? What are the consequences of governing through crime and punishment? Is poor discipline a viable approach to strengthening the social fabric? Data and personal narrative will be used. Brings together Mount Holyoke students and women in the final stages of their sentences in Hampden County, who collaborate as peers in a semester-long exploration of these issues. The semester culminates with a reading and completion ceremony.

(Spring) Luminous Darkness: African American Social Thought After DuBois
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the causes of and proposed solutions to "the Negro problem" in post-Civil War American public policy. Focuses on the life, work, and legacies of DuBois. Drawing on domestic and diasporic fictional and nonfictional depictions of black life in the "DuBoisian century" the course considers different responses to his 1903 question, "How does it feel to be a problem?" Examining theories, arguments, movements and policies targeting blacks and their environment allows us to criticize black modernity, assess the changing role of black intellectuals in society, evaluate "race theory" and consider dominant and marginal attempts to analyze and overcome the "color line" in America.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department, permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Gender, Terror, and Trauma in African American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will explore representations of violence in African American culture, with special consideration given to literary depictions of rape and lynching. After examining the historical function of violence within the United States, students will perform a comparative analysis of texts authored by black women and men. We will also explore cultural, social, and political movements (abolition, civil rights, black power, black feminism, hip-hop) that have emerged in response to the violent policing of black bodies. How has violence been used to terrorize blacks? What role has violence played in the African American struggle for liberation and equality?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department or permission of instructor

(Fall) Black Feminism: Theory and Praxis: Black Feminism: Theory and Praxis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores foundational texts of major authors along with lesser-known contributors to the black feminist movement, from the nineteenth century to the present. It also examines the various ways in which black feminist theory has been expressed in and applied to the arts and political activism, analyzing black feminist cultural criticism as it applies to music, film, fine arts, performance, and literature. Conflicts and continuities between black and white feminists, and the role of profeminist men within the movement will be considered as well.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Sex, Love, and Gender in Contemporary African American Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Film Studies 320-01)
This course will explore the representation in film of intimate relationships among African Americans. Confronting an ongoing history of racist, sexist, and homophobic images, films produced by and featuring blacks can offer alternate interpretations of love, romance, and sexuality. Coupled with literary and theoretical readings by feminists and black cultural critics, students will consider the function of—and challenges to—intimacy in interpersonal relationships among African Americans. Directors under consideration include Spike Lee, Kasi Lemmons, Marlon Riggs, and Sanaa Hamri.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in African American and African Studies, including African American and African Studies 101

(Spring) What all is "about" about?
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Not all 'about' claims imply the same kind of 'about.' Do scientific inquiries answer to a different kind of 'about' question than the arts, literary criticism or political rhetoric? Paintings depict and writing describes, what does music do? Express? Do a religious icon, a realistic painting and an abstract painting involve the same kind of depicting, just different subject matters and styles, or does 'intent' also make a difference? What is that difference, how do I describe it? Do the answers to my questions apply equally at different times in history and in other cultures? This seminar will involve lots of reading, writing, looking and listening, some guest lectures and group projects.

(Spring) Anthropology of Violence
First-year seminar
The range of violent phenomena is wide; it includes everything from political violence to domestic violence to the mere use of any form of force. In this course, we will look at violence as a problem of politics and how different segments of society utilize violence to solve social and political issues in our contemporary world. The course will aim to tackle questions such as: What is the role of violence in our political systems? How is violence treated in its aftermath? How does violence affect gender roles? What, if anything, does human nature have to do with warfare and violence? How does violence affect community ties and what does displacement and expulsion do to people?

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Archaeology of Food
This course explores the study of ancient foodways with a focus on how and why humans across the globe began to domesticate plant and animal resources approximately 10,000 years ago. The first half of the course presents the types of archaeological data and analytical methods used to study the "agricultural revolution" in a variety of regions. The second half explores a number of themes within the archaeology of food that investigate the relationship between agriculture and sedentism, food and gender, the politics of feasting, and methods for integrating archaeological and ethnographic approaches to the study of food.

(Fall) Making Class Visible
This course examines questions of social class within the Mount Holyoke community, at critical intersections with race, gender, and disability. Drawing upon readings in anthropology and film studies that critique the notion of a homogeneous "community" and offer alternative theoretical models, students will focus reflexively on three projects: the co-production of an ethnographic film, the creation of an advertising campaign for the film, creation of a website, for extending the conversation about class. Among the questions we explore at all three sites are: What is your idea of work? Where and when do you notice class? Is class a topic of conversation and/or storytelling in your family?

Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Language in Culture and Society

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Every society is held together by systems of interpersonal and institutional communication. This course examines the nature of communication codes, including those based on language (speaking and writing) and those based on visual images (art, advertising, television). To understand communication in its social and historical dimensions, we study the psychological and cultural impact of media revolutions and then look at ways communication systems manipulate individual consciousness. Illustrative examples are drawn from Western and non-Western societies.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Living the Law: Seminar in Political and Legal Anthropology
This course will explore the fundamental question of how the state and the law figure into our everyday lives. We will look at the ways in which state practices and apparatuses come to influence society and culture. Issues to be dealt with will also include transitional justice, post-conflict reconciliation, law and colonialism, and law and violence. The course will think through theories in legal and political anthropology but also include a secondary regional component where many ethnographic examples will come from the Middle East. We will take advantage of contemporary legal claims and constitutional battles resulting from the 2011 Arab revolts to place theory into the social world.
Instructors: S. Hermez
Expected enrollment: 20

ANTHR-316-01 - Anthropology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Arab Revolutions and Social Movements
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course, students will study the 2011 Arab revolutions as politics in process, and consider the factors that led to the current uprisings as well as the path that each continues to take. We will look in particular at various social movements in the region - past and present - their demands, modes of resistance and relationship to their respective states. In looking at these movements, students will be challenged to place the current revolutions within a historical context. Examples of topics that will be covered are security regimes, the Arab-Israeli conflict, and ways of thinking about the Arab world.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor; some knowledge of Middle East History and/or Politics is strongly recommended
Instructors: S. Hermez
Expected enrollment: 20

ANTHR-331-01 - Anthropology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Anthropology and Sexualities
(Gender Studies 333s(07))
This seminar focuses on contemporary anthropological scholarship concerned with the varieties of sexual expression in diverse cultural settings. We will read ethnographic accounts of sexual ideologies and the politics and practices of sexuality in Brazil, Japan, Native North America, India, and elsewhere. We will examine anthropological theories of sexuality with an emphasis on contemporary issues, including performance theory, "third gender" theories, sexual identity formulation, and techniques used by various societies to discipline the body.
Prerequisites: sr or jr major in department or gender studies, plus 8 credits in department
Instructors: L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 20

ANTHR-334-01 - Anthropology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Memory, History, and Forgetting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this seminar we question the distinction between myth and history and consider the relationship of historical consciousness to memory, forgetting, and other types of temporal awareness. We then examine the relationships among literacy, art, nationalism, and the invention of tradition and test the limits of ethnohistory. Finally, we look at the ways in which relics, museums, and tourism have all helped make history--as fact, experience, or commodity--possible.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
ANTHR-350-01 - Anthropology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Issues in Contemporary Anthropological Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course offers an appraisal of the core questions and theoretical frameworks of the past two decades. It covers the relationship of fieldwork to theory building, new trends in anthropological analysis, and critical examinations of the uses and abuses of anthropological data.
Prerequisites: sr, 8 credits in department
Instructors: A. Lass
Expected enrollment: 20

Architectural Studies
ARCH-205-01 - Architectural Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in Architecture: Sculpting Space: Introduction to Architectural Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This studio course will be a design investigation of a particular theme in or approach to architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (sketches, plans, elevations, models, computer diagramming, and various modes of digital representation) to interdisciplinary and socially pertinent design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space. Our goal is to apply creative techniques in art and sculpture to the creation of meaningful space.
Prerequisites: One semester of design or drawing is recommended
Notes: Studio fee
Instructors: T. Long
Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-205-01 - Architectural Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Architecture: Introduction to Architectural Design - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introductory studio architecture course is a rigorous series of design investigations into architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (drawings, models) to interdisciplinary and significant design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space.
Prerequisites: One semester of Drawing I, design, or sculpture is recommended.
Notes: Studio fee $60.
Instructors: S. Brown
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Introduction to Architectural Design II: Regenerative Design: Shifting the Sustainability Paradigm
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This studio will begin with a discussion of sustainability, identifying the merits and failures of both practices and products. Picking up where these methodologies fall short, students will conduct multidisciplinary research that will inform and lead them on a path toward regenerative solutions within their studio projects. In this, the studio becomes a laboratory where the scope of being a designer is redefined; programs are reinvented to spur new economic and community growth and sustainability takes on greater accountability, momentum and credibility. This studio (and optional workshops) will enable students to work with both digital and physical drawings and models.

Notes: Students are expected to purchase course supplies at campus store
Instructors: S. Brown
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Topics in Architectural Studies: Issues in Sustainability: Adaptive Reuse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This architectural studio will look at the issue of sustainability through the lens of the adaptive reuse of buildings and sites. Digital modeling tools will be introduced to allow for a holistic approach and evaluation of design proposals. Solutions will look to preserve older buildings while layering into them new programs with new (and used) materials. Digital fabrication methods will be investigated and juxtaposed against traditional construction techniques to evaluate the environmental impact of both.
Prerequisites: so,jr,sr. At least one semester of architectural studio (Architectural Studies 205 or equivalent); exposure to "Rhinoceros" software preferred but not required
Notes: Studio Fee $60. Additional material fees apply.
Instructors: S. Brown
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor

Art History

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art, revolution and nationhood; nineteenth-century realism; and abstraction and empathy. Lectures will be complemented by class discussion, short films, and assignments in the art museum.
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Image and Environment: Architecture: The Face of Human Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of architecture as a functional and expressive medium from the ancient world to the present. Accommodating domestic life, religious ritual, political, commercial, and leisure activities, architecture both shapes and reflects the natural environment, technology, social values and visions. While the history of Western architecture constitutes the primary focus, the course will include buildings from around the world.
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-100-02 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Image and Environment: Introduction to Art History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course introduces students to the pleasures of art history as a field of inquiry. In case studies beginning with the Renaissance and extending to the Modern era, from Europe and the Americas, we will explore art's complicated and shifting relation to history -- to its social, cultural, political, and intellectual worlds. Lectures and class discussion will be augmented by visits to the art museum.
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 25

ARTH-110-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Inside Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
A discussion-oriented introduction to art history. Working with original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, we will examine the various materials, practices, and strategies of artists as we move historically across the centuries from the Renaissance to the present. Students will practice the art of describing and refine their skills of observation and analysis.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Staiti

ARTH-110-02 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Early Modern Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
This seminar explores the extraordinary variety of objects that commemorated love, marriage, fertility, and eroticism in fifteenth and sixteenth-century Europe. We will consider works ranging from the loftiest representations of Platonic love down to the frankly sexual, from paintings to prints to painted marriage chests, including objects that can be seen firsthand in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will refine their skills of visual and verbal analysis, while also learning to interpret these works through the lens of social history, paying particular attention to the role of women.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Maier

ARTH-202-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 202-01)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.

(Fall) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature - Not offered this year/term

(Classics 211)

Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.

(Fall) The Hellenistic World: From Alexander to Cleopatra - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.

(Spring) Empire: The Art and Archaeology of the Roman Provinces - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.

(Spring) Age of the Cathedrals

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Arts of the court, monastery, and city in Europe from the fall of the Roman Empire (fourth-fifth century) to the Hundred Years War (fourteenth-fifteenth century). We will study a selection of monuments and their furnishings, including sculpture, reliquaries, stained glass, tapestries, altarpieces, joyaux, and illuminated manuscripts. Our goal will be to differentiate between the diverse forms of artistic production within this long time period and to understand the function of these works for a medieval audience.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

ARTH-230-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Renaissance Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey outlines the history of painting, sculpture, architecture, and urbanism in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy, a time of major artistic and cultural transformation. To trace these developments, we will take a geographic approach, focusing on cities and societies in order to understand the diverse social networks that linked artists with their patrons and publics. We will also examine the expanding networks of cross-cultural contact that linked Italian cities like Florence, Rome, and Venice to places throughout western Europe and beyond.

(Fall) History of Photography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, Mexico and the countries in Western Europe. It covers the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, so-called "vernacular," and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are the early landscape photographers O'Sullivan and Watkins, the avant-garde photographers Stieglitz and Genthe, the Depression-era photographers Evans and Lange, and the so-called New Documentarians Arbus and Frank.

(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.

(Spring) Contemporary Art: Art Since 1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography in the United States and, less so, Western Europe since World War II. Initially, most of these paths traced a relationship with the "crisis of modernism," but increasingly, they have taken on a different vitality, drawing energy from a wide variety of postmodern and postcolonial subjects and debates: identity politics, transnationalism, diaspora. Can something that can be identified as an avant-garde practice exist in such a context? What kinds of questions are appropriate to ask about works that stridently attempt to suspend the very category of art?

(Spring) American Art and Architecture 1620-1880 - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

A survey of painting, architecture, sculpture, and design from the Colonial period to the late nineteenth century, this course introduces students to period styles and building types, as well as individual painters and architects. Classes develop ways of looking at and thinking about art and objects as material expressions of American social, political, and cultural ideas. Topics will include: portraiture, colonial Boston, art and revolution, nature and nation, the West, domestic architecture, and the city of Washington. Copley, Peale, Jefferson, Stuart, Cole, and Church are some of the key figures to be studied.

(Fall) Arts of Islam: Book, Mosque, and Palace

(Asian Studies 271)

Through investigation of major works produced in the Muslim world between the seventh and seventeenth centuries from Spain to India, this course explores the ways in which art and architecture were used to embody the faith, accommodate its particular needs, and express the power of its rulers. Topics include the calligraphy of the Qur'an, illustrated literature, the architecture of the mosque, and the aristocratic palace.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Instructors: M. Davis

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Storytelling in Ancient Art
The aim of the course is to acquaint students with visual modes of storytelling in the predominantly oral cultures of ancient Greece and Rome. Myths and legends appear in a range of media (sculpture, mosaic, fresco, lamps, and gems) and contexts (domestic, sacred, political). Which stories were represented and what do we know about their reception among ancient viewers? Original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum will offer case studies.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

ARTH-290-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Issues in Art History: Ancient Painting and Mosaic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course treats the themes, techniques, and contexts of painting and mosaic in the ancient Mediterranean. From Bronze Age palaces to early Byzantine churches, surfaces were embellished with frescoes, pebbles, glass and jewels. These might be rendered in complex geometric shapes or with mythological scenes. Portable vases displayed elegantly drawn figures. We will examine the unique effects of each medium and how they influenced and interacted with each other.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Introduction to Classical Archaeology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course has two aims: to introduce the various methods and disciplines that make up the field of classical archaeology, and to acquaint students with some of the major sites and artifacts of ancient Greece and Rome. Classes and assignments will involve work with original artifacts and case studies of such sites as Troy, Olympia, and Pompeii. Issues of conservation and cultural property will be discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Spring) Issues in Art History: American Modernisms, 1900-1929
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the diversity of modern art in early twentieth-century America. As new technologies and ideologies transformed the political, economic, and social fabric of the country, changes in the arts were equally rapid and as dramatic. The course examines the competing and often conflicting ideas and styles of the American avant-garde against the background of more conservative movements of the era. Robert Henri, Georgia O'Keeffe, Man Ray, Charles Demuth, and Edward Hopper are among the artists to be discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: N. Noble
Expected enrollment: 20

ARTH-301-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Art History: Current Issues in Latin American Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course highlights recent scholarship and criticism written in and about Latin America, focusing upon visual culture from 1520 to the present. Among the works we consider: colonial paintings and urban planning, representations of Frida Kahlo and Karl Marx, Brazilian film, contemporary photography, and museum exhibitions. Of particular interest will be the theoretical and methodological issues that characterize writing on visual culture from the 1990s to the present, and the ways they challenge our response to the question "What is Latin American art?"
Prerequisites: at least one 200-level course in art history or one 200-level course in Latin American anthropology, government, history, film or literature. Reading knowledge of Spanish useful, but not required.
Instructors: D. Leibsohn

(Fall) Great Cities: Paris-Paradise: The Medieval City and Its Transformation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In 1323, Jean of Jandun wrote that Paris "seems to have received from the Most-High the role of the earthly paradise." Using medieval eyewitness accounts and descriptions, surviving monuments, and graphic records, this seminar will explore the transformation of Paris from a small twelfth-century town into Europe's most important metropolis by 1300. We will then consider the metamorphosis of medieval Paris into a modern capital in the nineteenth century paying particular attention to representations of the city by painters, writers, and, most recently, filmmakers.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-310-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: Lives of Ancient Objects
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar focuses on Greek and Roman objects in the "Reconstructing Antiquity" exhibition in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will engage in firsthand study of coins, vases, statues, portraits, frescoes, and mosaics and conduct advanced research on their original functions and contexts. Issues of collecting practices, both ancient and modern, and museum display will be considered.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-310-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Art History: Who Owns the Past?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar examines the heated status of antiquities today in light of their discovery, collecting, and display from the Roman empire to the present. Special attention is paid to war booty, to the purposeful destruction and effacement of monuments, and to ongoing struggles over excavation and cultural property. Students will engage with original objects in the college art museum and research original donors of objects in the archives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTH-310-10 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculaneum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present. One highlight will be a visit the Pompeii exhibition at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or per permission of instructor.
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-320-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Art: Chartres Cathedral - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar will explore Chartres Cathedral, its architectural history, its vast programs of sculpture, and its stained glass narratives. The church and its imagery, which took shape between ca. 1140 and 1250, offer a view back in time to medieval religious beliefs and practices, social dynamics, architectural technology, and fashion. We will also consider how differing views of the cathedral—as a popular communal creation or as the embodiment of an oppressive elite—reflect modern interpretive perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or medieval studies
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-332-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Baroque Art: Gianlorenzo Bernini: Practices, Works, Ideas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the painting, sculpture, and architecture produced by the seventeenth century's most influential multimedia artist. It puts Bernini's innovations in the context of the political, religious, and artistic debates of his day, closely examining the Roman society that Bernini dominated during the reigns of three different popes, as well as the France of Louis XIV where Bernini briefly lived and worked. Topics include:
workshop practices and preparatory works; ephemeral creations (festive and theatrical); antiquity and modern invention; the aesthetic of marvel; the myth of the artist; and the legacy of Bernini’s "bel composto."

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Jarrard

Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-332-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Baroque Art: Art and Architecture of Rome

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Rome was--and remains--a most complex and magnetic city, one that has endured and become "eternal" through countless transformations to its urban and artistic fabric. The focus of this seminar is a particularly intense period of change in Rome--when artists, architects, and intellectuals flocked to the city, bringing traditions from elsewhere that mixed freely with the work of others, while responding to what was already present. More than a survey of famous works in Rome, this course aims to conjure some of the excitement of a city that considered itself the most fashionable and vibrant place in the world.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Maier

Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-342-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Shudders!: Photography Goes Public

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar will explore the explosion of photography in 1930s America. The decade’s photography is often epitomized by the heartrending images of the Great Depression, of social concern, of the traumas experienced by the poor and displaced. But in fact the period also witnessed photography’s extraordinary vitality and new visibility, in the colorful pages of Life magazine and the tabloids, on the walls of MOMA, in experimental photobooks, at Photo League exhibitions, and much more. Among the major figures to be studied are photographers as diverse as Walker Evans, Weegee, and Aaron Siskind.

Prerequisites: One 200-level courses in Art History; jr,sr,or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Lee

Expected enrollment: 12

ARTH-350-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in American Art: The Gilded Age

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course examines aspects of American art and culture from the Civil War to the turn of the twentieth century. Classes will be thematic, and art will be linked up with ideas, trends, events, and novels of the period. Among the themes to be treated are: naturalism, masculinity, nervousness, street culture, and reform. Key artists include Sargent, Eakins, Homer, Bellows, and Sloan.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor

Instructors: P. Staiti

Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Seminar in American Art: The Architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar will explore Frank Lloyd Wright's 60-year career in architecture. We will pay particular attention to ways in which he handled form, space, and structure to frame human activity and to create a modern American style. We will also explore the social implications of Wright's approach to domestic design and community planning.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history, architectural studies, or American studies, or permission of instructor

Instructors: M. Davis

Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-360-01 - Art History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Photography in India

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Explores the way photography seized hold of the imagination in India. Nineteenth-century documentary photographs of Indian ruins memorialized the reach of the British Empire when used for dioramas, panoramas, and magic lantern shows on the streets of London. By the twentieth century, manipulated photographs and mechanically reproduced "photos" of Indian gods complicated photography's claim to truth. Students will debate scholarly views and develop research projects to examine photography's imaginative uses in India.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, with 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Sinha

Expected enrollment: 18

Seminar in Asian Art: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions - *Not offered this year/term

(Film Studies 370-01)

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

Preamble (for topics courses): Asian Studies 110f-111s, 120f-121s, 130f-131s and 141f-142s satisfy the Mount Holyoke College language requirement. Students who have had previous training in Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, and Sanskrit and wish to continue their studies should arrange for placement in appropriate courses by contacting Mr. Jiyad for Arabic, Ms. Nemoto for Japanese, Ms. Wang for Chinese, and Ms. Peterson for Sanskrit. Introduction to Sanskrit, the classical language of India. Related to other Indo-European languages (including English) and the ancestor of most of the sixteen major Indian languages (e.g., Hindi), Sanskrit is the medium of the literary classics, and of the texts of the Hindu, Buddhist, and Jain religions. The first-semester course covers Sanskrit grammar. The emphasis is on sentence construction, recognition and production of grammatical forms, and translation. Attention is also given to script, chanting, and pronunciation. The goal is proficiency in reading sentences and sustained passages in Sanskrit, in preparation for reading authentic texts in the second semester.

(Spring) Androgyny and Gender Negotiation in Contemporary Chinese Women’s Theater
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 204-03(s))
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will improve students' four communication skills (reading, writing, listening, and speaking) by studying contemporary Chinese films, including several prize winners/nominees by internationally acclaimed directors such as Zhang Yimou, Li An, and Chen Kaige. The class will watch the films and then use the synopses and selected dialogues from the scripts as reading materials to facilitate both linguistic and cultural learning. Social and cultural issues reflected in the films will be discussed. The class will be conducted mainly in Chinese.
Prerequisites: Asian Studies 311 or equivalent (contact Ms. Wang for placement)
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

ASIAN-324-01 - Asian Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Third Year Japanese I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
This course helps students attain a higher level of proficiency in modern Japanese through the extended use of the language in practical contexts. The class will be conducted mostly in Japanese.
Prerequisites: Asian 223 or equivalent (consult Ms. Nemoto for placement)
Instructors: F. Brown
Expected enrollment: 15

ASIAN-326-01 - Asian Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Third Year Japanese II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
This course continues Asian Studies 324, Third Year Japanese I. Emphasizes attaining a higher level of proficiency in modern Japanese through the extended use of the language in practical contexts. The class will be conducted mostly in Japanese.
Prerequisites: Asian 324 or equivalent (see Ms. Nemoto for placement)
Instructors: F. Brown
Expected enrollment: 15

ASIAN-331-01 - Asian Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Asian History: Tokugawa Japan - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement (History 331)
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
A research seminar on Japan's transformation from a chaotic set of warring states (mid-sixteenth century) into a highly urbanized, literate, cultured but nonetheless feudal state capable of leaping into the modern world (late nineteenth century). Topics will include economic evolution; the development of tea ceremony, fiction, poetry, and theatre; political and social change, including class/status relations; evolution of gender roles; and the rise of the three great cities (Edo, Kyoto, Osaka). After a core of common readings and research exercises, students will design and undertake individual projects, using primary and secondary sources, and complete a substantial essay.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor; 8 credits in history; written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application.html) is required
Instructors: J. Lipman
Expected enrollment: 15

ASIAN-331-01 - Asian Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Asian History: China's Tumultuous Twentieth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement (History 331s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
A research seminar on the socioeconomic transformation of China from the advent of nineteenth-century imperialism to the Cultural Revolution. Topics include reform programs of the late Qing, the chaos and experimentation of the Republican period, and the centralizing totalitarianism of the People's Republic. Requirements include reviews of primary and secondary literature, definition and presentation of a research topic, and a final essay based on intensive research.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor; 8 credits in history; written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application.html) is required
Instructors: J. Lipman
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Love, Gender-Crossing, and Women's Supremacy: A Reading of The Story of the Stone
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Gender Studies 333f-03)
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women’s supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieu of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.
Prerequisites: jr, sr
Instructors: Y. Wang
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Love, Desire, and Gender in Indian Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 333s-12)
Seminar on love, desire and gender, major themes in Indian literature. We will read classic poems, plays, and narratives in translation from Sanskrit, Tamil, Hindi, and other languages, in relation to aesthetic theory, visual arts (miniature paintings) and performance genres (Indian dance and the modern Bollywood cinema). Study of the conventions of courtly love, including aesthetic mood (rasa) and natural landscapes, and their transformation in Hindu bhakti and Sufi Muslim mystical texts, the Radha-Krishna myth, and film. Focus on representations of women and men, and on issues of power, voice, and agency.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, and 100 or 200 level course in literature in any language (inc. English)
Instructors: I. Peterson
Expected enrollment: 18

Astronomy

ASTR-100-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Survey of the Universe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-101 but this course does not have a lab.
Instructors: J. Levine

ASTR-100-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Survey of the Universe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-101-01 but this course does not have a lab.
Instructors: D. Dyar
Expected enrollment: 80

ASTR-100-02 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Survey of the Universe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.

(Fall) Survey of the Universe with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole.

In lab, learn the constellations and how to use the telescopes. Use them to observe celestial objects, including the moon, the sun, the planets, nebulae, and galaxies. Learn celestial coordinate and timekeeping systems. Find out how telescopes work.

Notes: Designed for non-science majors. The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for AST 100. FY only, though others will be able to register during Add/Drop if spaces remain available.

Instructors: J. Levine, M. Stage

ASTR-105-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Mars: Missions, Conditions, and Prospects for Habitation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Exploration of Mars is a goal of the current U.S. president and a dream of many citizens. We will examine what needs to be done before anyone sets foot on the Red Planet. We will consider the history and politics behind Martian exploration, our knowledge of geology and atmospheric conditions on Mars based on data from current missions, and plans for future exploration.

Prerequisites: fy

Instructors: M. Dyar

ASTR-110-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

A comprehensive introduction to the study of modern astronomy that explores the celestial bodies that inhabit the universe--planets, stars, and galaxies--and examines the universe itself--its origin, structure, and ultimate destiny.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100 or 101 or the equivalent
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-100 and 101. Students in this course (110) must attend a weekly 4th hour section.
Instructors: J. Levine
Expected enrollment: 10

ASTR-110-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Survey of the Universe with Coffee Table Astrophysics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In addition to attending the Astronomy 100 lectures, students will take part in a 4th hour in which we will discuss current frontiers in modern astronomy and astrophysics. Although this 4th hour is somewhat tailored to the interests of the enrolled students, anticipated topics include Einstein's Theories of Relativity, Death of Massive Stars, Black Holes and Warped Spacetime, and the Expanding Universe. Using readings and discussion we will examine the nature of these mind-boggling discoveries and their treatment in the popular media.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100 or 101 or the equivalent

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This intermediate-level course covers fundamentals of spectroscopy, remote sensing, and planetary surfaces. Discussions will include interiors, atmospheres, compositions, origins, and evolution of terrestrial planets; satellites, asteroids, comets, and planetary rings.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100/101 and one semester of a physical science course
Instructors: C. Fassett, D. Dyar
Expected enrollment: 40

ASTR-228-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Astrophysics I: Stars and Galaxies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A calculus-based introduction to the properties, structure, formation, and evolution of stars and galaxies. The laws of gravity, thermal physics, and atomic physics provide a basis for understanding observed properties of stars, interstellar gas, and dust. We apply these concepts to develop an understanding of stellar atmospheres, interiors, and evolution, the interstellar medium, and the Milky Way and other galaxies.
Prerequisites: Physics 115 and Math 202; Physics 216 and Math 203 strongly suggested
Instructors: The department

ASTR-330-01 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
*(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Mars - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Exploration of several unresolved questions about the Red Planet, such as 1) Where was the water on Mars and where did it go? How well will future missions answer this question? 2) How has the Martian atmosphere evolved over time? 3) What rock types are present on the Martian surface based on meteorite studies vs. direct observation? 4) How can geomorphic features of Mars best be interpreted, and what do they tell us about the evolution of the planet? and 5) Was there life on Mars at any time? Is there life on Mars at present, and if so, where? An interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature as well as daily reports from current mission Web sites.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended
Instructors: D. Dyar
Expected enrollment: 18

ASTR-330-02 - Astronomy - 2011-2012
*(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Moon - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will survey the past, present, and future of lunar exploration and science. We will focus on the evolution of the Moon as a paradigm for terrestrial planets, with specific units on interiors, heat flow, thermal evolution, magnetism, volcanism, volatiles, impacts, crustal composition and mineralogy, regoliths, and spectroscopy of its surface. This is a discussion-based, interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 12

(Writing-intensive)
Are we alone in the universe? The essence of that question has likely been a source of inspiration since the dawn of humanity. We will look at the history of extraterrestrial debate and analyze the transdisciplinary science behind astrobiology. We will investigate the properties of life as we know it and extrapolate their properties to consider the potential for simple life forms to exist on Mars and elsewhere in our solar system, to the possibility of intelligent life on habitable planets near distant stars, and finally the implications of extraterrestrial life to life on Earth. Assessments will include critical reading and writing about scientific literature on this topic.

BIOCH-111-01 - Biochemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Life's Matrix: Water, Water, Every Where ... Nor Any Drop to Drink
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Water, the ideal solvent in which life-granting reactions occur, makes up 70 percent of the planet and our body. We will examine the remarkable chemical, physical properties of water that sustain life, and study its involvement in two critical biochemical processes: cellular respiration and photosynthesis. We are running out of this precious resource, due to population expansion, unsustainable usage of water by industrialized societies, pollution of waterways, and the redistribution of water due to engineering, climate change, and commerce. Steven Solomon's book, Water: The Epic Struggle for Wealth, Power and Civilization (2010), will inform our discussions.

(Fall) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.

Notes: Students conducting an independent lab research project for credit in a department, program, or lab covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research; credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training.

(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism

(Biological Sciences 311f, Chemistry 311f)

This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), Chemistry 302

Instructors: L. Hsu

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology

(Biological Sciences 314s, Chemistry 314s)

This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.

BIOCH-330-01 - Biochemistry - 2011-2012

(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected.

Biological Sciences

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Nature Harmoniously Confused
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar
Most organisms are notably unlike ourselves—a tapestry of bacteria, protozoans, algae, and, off by themselves, the plants, fungi, and other animals. We will survey the whole range of organisms, especially those in the ponds and forests of our campus. Labs will start in the field, offering many opportunities for wet or muddy work. The class is addressed to students intrigued by natural history; it might be useful for students interested in further study of the environment.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Rachootin | 02 LAB S Rachootin |
Expected enrollment: 21

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it will change our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard | 02 LAB C Woodard |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Comparative Vertebrate Physiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will explore the structure and function of major physiological systems in vertebrate animals. Of particular interest will be identifying the solutions that different animals have evolved to deal with similar problems (e.g., how do fish gills and bird lungs function in gas exchange?).
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 03 LAB G Gillis | 04 LAB G Gillis | 05 LAB G Gillis |

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Evolution, Physiology, and Behavior of Animals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers some fundamental biological concepts to understand how and why animals behave the way they do. We study the principles of evolution by natural selection, how neurons work at the cellular level, how hormones influence development and behavior, and how individual animals fit into their larger populations and communities. We will bring together these principles to understand how behavior allows animals to find food, avoid predators, and attract mates. Field and laboratory exercises will include quantitative analysis, observation, and experimentation.

(Fall) Introductory Biology: A Green World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar
This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Diversity of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will survey the great diversity of life on earth from the archaea-bacteria that live in hot sulfur springs to giant sequoia trees to singing birds. Labs will explore biological diversity via collecting trips around campus as well as laboratory experiments and will introduce students to data collection, manipulation, and analysis.

BIOL-145-05 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Complexity of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Planet Earth is inhabited by a variety of organisms, ranging from simple viruses to complex organisms, humans, and plants. We will examine the vast diversity of life forms surrounding us and how these organisms have evolved. We will also examine the essential biological processes and systems that sustain life. Using all resources available, such as laboratory experiments, articles, books, and the World Wide Web, students will gain practical experience and understand how scientific results are collected, analyzed, and presented.

(Fall)Introductory Biology: Organismal Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course encompasses a broad range of concepts central to our understanding of how organisms function and evolve. We will investigate important biological processes, such as photosynthesis and metabolism, and of systems, such as the cardiovascular and immune systems. We will also take a holistic view of biology and use our newly acquired knowledge to explore such diverse topics as the evolution of infectious diseases, the consequences of development and design on the evolution of organisms, and how the physiology and behavior of animals might affect their responses to global climate change.

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
How are animal bodies built to deal with living on earth? In this course we will study the function of cells, organs, and organ systems that have evolved to help animals make their way through the physical and chemical environment. We'll consider the common needs of animals--needs such as feeding, breathing, and reproducing--and the diverse solutions they have devised. A range of life, from unicellular organisms to animals with backbones (including mammals) will be considered.

BIOL-145-14 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it will change our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.

Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-146-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Postbaccalaureate Introductory Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for students beginning the Postbaccalaureate Studies Program in preparation for pursuing graduate-level study in the health professions. Topics include basic principles of biodiversity and taxonomy, genetics, basic biochemical principles, cell structure and function, and organ systems. Laboratory exercises complement lecture material and are intended to help students develop strong skills in microscopy, familiarity with using a variety of lab equipment, experimental design and data collection and analysis, and scientific writing.
Prerequisites: Postbaccalaureate students only
Instructors: D. Gardner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Gardner |

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160L). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.
Instructors: R. Brodie, M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 48

BIOL-200-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introductory Biology II: How Organisms Develop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchins), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145, 146, or 160

BIOL-220-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course undertakes an integrated study of the processes and structures that define life at the cellular level. We will consider the molecular and supramolecular organization of membranes, cytoskeleton, and organelles in the context of the physical and chemical principles governing their assembly, and their participation in phenomena such as the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, transport, motility, signal transduction, and maintenance of cytoplasmic organization. The laboratory portion of this course illustrates and analyzes these phenomena through selected optical and biochemical approaches.
Instructors: P. Sacchetti, C. Rounds
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB | 04 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 84

BIOL-223-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.
Prerequisites: An MHC Biology class or Environmental Studies 200 and a minimum of one semester of high school or college calculus or statistics
Notes: Biology 223 and/or Biology 226 must be taken for the Biology major

BIOL-226-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The mechanisms of evolutionary change within populations and between species; patterns of change in space, time and form; and the origin of adaptations. These approaches make sense of the diversity of life. Then we turn to the evolution of developmental pathways, as a way of approaching the unity of life.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223

BIOL-301-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Regenerative Medicine: Biology and Bioethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
What is regenerative medicine? What is the science that drives new medical therapies using stem cells? We will study the biology of adult, embryonic, and induced pluripotent stem cells, as well as the legal, ethical, and moral implications of using these cells in medical therapies. Each member of the class will participate in a staged debate on these issues for an introductory biology class. Pending funding, we may travel to Washington, D.C. to attend a Commission on Bioethics meeting.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor only, with Biological Sciences 220 or equivalent expected
Instructors: R. Fink, L. Pasquerella
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Molecular Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course examines the dynamics of evolutionary change at the molecular level, the effects of various molecular mechanisms on the structure and function of genes and genomes, and the methodology involved in dealing with molecular data from an evolutionary perspective. Lab work will be devoted to learning ways to analyze DNA sequence data and to create and evaluate trees that use molecular data.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 226

Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering. The fourth hour will follow a "journal club" format with student presentations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, and either 220 or 311
Instructors: J. Knight
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interaction in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formation. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220, or permission of instructor

Instructors: R. Fink

Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Darwin

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin's theory of evolution - his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226 or 12 credits in history

Instructors: S. Rachootin

Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove - and disprove - biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226

Instructors: S. Rachootin

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-315-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Behavioral Ecology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

In this course, students learn to view and understand animal behavior within an evolutionary context. The mechanistic side of behavior is investigated and students explore how behavioral traits originate and evolve over time. Students will integrate their knowledge of how organisms work with an appreciation of why they work the way they do. At the end of the course, students will understand basic concepts in behavioral biology and know many of the experiments that have facilitated our understanding of this field. They will be able to construct hypotheses and design experiments that address behavioral phenomena. The laboratory portion of this course is based on individual projects.
Prerequisites: 8 credits of biology at the 200 level with 223 or 226 strongly recommended

(Fall) Scanning Electron Microscopy
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 316f)
Includes theory and operation of the scanning electron microscope and preparation of biological and geological materials for observation. The versatile use of the microscope will be emphasized and will include low magnification, high resolution, and back scattered (reflected) electron modes of operation as well as operation at different pressures. Energy dispersive X-ray microanalysis will be introduced.
Prerequisites: 4 credits of biological sciences or geology course at the 200 level.

(Spring) Aquatic Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
In this course, we will focus on marine coastal and open ocean habitats as well as freshwater systems, including lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks, and wetlands. For oceans, we will explore such topics as currents, the interaction of climate and oceans, nutrient cycling and ecosystems. Our study of freshwater systems will focus on cycles, water chemistry and flora and fauna of local freshwater habitats.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 24

(Spring) Immunology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as immune mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Special emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the addition of clinical case studies and independent projects to reinforce these ideas.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Instructors: S. Stranford

(Fall) Introduction to Transmission Electron Microscopy
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Basic principles of transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and potential uses in biological studies. Each student selects a project and learns the fundamentals of specimen preparation, operation of the TEM, and image acquisition. Preparation, assessment and interpretation of the resulting electron micrographs culminate in an individual portfolio. Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including Biological Sciences 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently.

BIOL-321-A - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012

(Fall) Conference Course: Extreme Life
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees C. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-A - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Conference Course: The Biology of Neurological Disorders - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
The course will present an overview of basic anatomical, biochemical, cellular, and physiological concepts applicable to neuronal cells, through discussion of the major neurological disorders affecting human population today. We will examine the impact of developmental abnormalities, chemical imbalance and injury on complex motor, behavioral, and cognitive processes. Students will analyze primary literature and present current data on possible causes and mechanisms underlying neurological and degenerative disorders. Cell death, protein dysfunction and alterations in neurotransmission will be some of the topics covered, as well as regeneration and other potential cures.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220; preference given to juniors and seniors
Instructors: P. Sacchetti
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-B - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Conference Course: Advanced Topics in Vertebrate Structure and Function
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course will take a comparative approach to examine the diverse structure and function found within vertebrates. Why can an eagle fly, but not an ostrich or a dog? Focus will be placed on understanding the specializations in skeletal, muscular, and sensory systems within the context of the ecology and behavior of the organism. These topics will be approached with the ultimate goal of understanding the evolutionary significance of vertebrate diversity. The course will include discussions of examples from the primary literature, comparative dissections, and observation of prepared specimens.
Prerequisites: two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: L. Macesic
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Conference Course: Sexual Selection and Sexual Conflict in Animals: Theory, Research, and Feminist Critique
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 333f-08)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Sexual selection theory explains how selection on traits that allow individuals to attract potential mates or defeat potential rivals can lead to the evolution of sexual dimorphism. Sexual conflict theory investigates how the conflicting interests of males and females in mating interactions can result in the co-evolution of traits for manipulation and resistance. Feminist critics point out how these theories reflect and in turn propagate stereotypes about human behavior. This course explores classic and current biological literature on sexual selection and sexual conflict alongside feminist critiques of the language use, the assumptions, and the interpretation of research in these fields.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and permission of instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Conference Course: Art, Music, and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of a visual object, such as shape, color, and depth, and ask how this processing may affect the way we draw and paint. We will ask whether musical dissonance and consonance are biologically or culturally determined and whether or not different parts of the brain process different aspects of music such as pitch, melody, harmony, rhythm, and the emotional content of a musical piece.
Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music
Notes: students studying art and music are encouraged to enroll
Instructors: S. Barry
Expected enrollment: 10
(Spring) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This seminar is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their abilities to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Conference Course: Response to Environmental Contaminants and Evolution: Communicating the Science to the Public
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
It is essential for scientists to communicate their findings to the public. Students will learn the basic concepts of toxicology—the study of chemical contaminants—and they will consider how toxicity is both a product and a selective force in the evolution of particular groups of organisms. They will research particular toxicants—their chemistry, physiological effects in different kinds of organisms, and the environmental and evolutionary contexts for varying susceptibilities and responses. Their findings will be the basis of articles written for online publication in the Encyclopedia of Earth, a freely available, expert-reviewed collection of articles written in non-technical language.
Prerequisites: 8 credits from environmental studies, chemistry, biochemistry, biological sciences, or geology; or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Monosson
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Conference Course: The Cytoskeleton in Cell Growth and Motion
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Cell shape, division, motion and function all depend on cytoskeletal elements and their associated proteins. Rapid and sensitive image acquisition coupled with new methods of labeling the cytoskeleton and a constantly changing set of microscopic techniques have transformed the way we can watch, measure and manipulate actin and microtubules. This course will focus on reading and critiquing the current research on both plant and animal cytoskeleton. We will consider cell division, cell motility, polarized growth and intracellular transport. We will also review recent developments about prokaryotic cytoskeleton which will lead to discussions of the evolution of the eukaryotic cytoskeleton.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220

(Fall) Conference Course: Mechanisms of Hormone Signaling
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
What are the molecular mechanisms by which hormones direct cellular processes? In this seminar course, we'll read and discuss the primary literature to look in depth at the nature of chemical communication between cells. We will study hormones, receptors, and signal transduction pathways, and the ways in which these signaling systems regulate development, programmed cell death, inflammatory responses, and other biological processes.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Instructors: C. Woodard
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-G - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Conference Course: Molecular Physiology of the Cell
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
DNA and protein are just part of what makes a cell alive; without the compartments, membranes and chemical gradients of the cell they could do nothing. In this course we will explore the ways molecular biology informs our understanding of cell physiology. The course will include in-depth discussions of protein trafficking, membrane transport, cell motility, membrane potential and respiration. We will also cover cell structure and the implications of the endosymbiotic events that have led to the eukaryotic cell's form. The laboratory section of the course will include the use of molecular techniques and fluorescence microscopy in several different cell types.

(Spring) Conference Course: Emerging Infectious Diseases - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking-intensive)

What is the current state of infectious disease in the world? What are the important factors that favor the emergence or re-emergence of specific infectious agents? In this course the primary literature will be used as a foundation for discussing global emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases. As a group we will discuss the science behind these diseases and their therapies as well as some of the social aspects relevant to the present-day spread of infectious disease. Students will be expected to work in collaborative groups to present background material and original research findings relevant to these pathogens and the diseases they cause.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 319

(Spring) Conference Course: Topics in Invasion Ecology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Invasive species have become a common focus for land managers and gardeners around the world, but is there anything fundamentally new, different, or threatening about these organisms? These new arrivals potentially increase local biodiversity and offer excellent examples of evolution and ecological interactions, but they also incite scientists to uncharacteristic value judgments. We will discuss the science and politics behind invasive species and explore the secrets of their success and the realities of their impacts. This course uses local examples, some field trips, and current literature to examine invasion ecology and other local issues in conservation biology.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

What is our current understanding of HIV-induced AIDS? What factors favor disease progression or resistance? Are there new therapies or vaccines in pipeline? In this course, the primary literature will be used as a foundation for discussing the global picture on AIDS and current research. As a group we will discuss the science behind this immune deficiency causing virus, therapies, research priorities and new vaccine strategies. We will also touch on the social, economic and political situations that influence rates of HIV infection and disease progression. Students will be expected to work in small groups to present background material and original research.

(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term

(Physics 222)

The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 223 or 226, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-327-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Microbiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223
Instructors: J. Knight
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Knight | 02 LAB J Knight |
Expected enrollment: 28

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 with permission of instructor; or Environmental Studies 200 with permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Macroevolution - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology, and major transitions in vertebrate evolution.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Neurobiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics; permission of instructor
Notes: preference given to seniors
Instructors: S. Barry
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Barry | 02 LAB S Barry |
BIOL-334-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Chemical Communication in Vertebrates - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
How is information about physiological states coded in chemical information passed between animals? How is this information passed between organs in the body? In this course we'll read and discuss the primary literature in biology to look in depth at the nature of chemical communication in vertebrates. We will study hormones, pheromones, and neurotransmitters, the neuroendocrine mechanisms which mediate their functions in the body, and the social and physical contexts in which these signalling mechanisms operate.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220, 223 or 226
Instructors: S. Bacon
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-335-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Mammalian Anatomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will examine the fundamental structural organization of the mammalian body. The lecture portion of the class will focus largely on humans, and students will gain practical insight into other mammalian systems in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Notes: course open to 12 juniors and 12 seniors
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Spring) Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard | 02 LAB C Woodard |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2011-2012
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and permission of department; submit application in biological sciences office or via the department's Web site
Notes: NOTE: See safety training restrictions in description of Biological Sciences 295
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 30

Chemistry

CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) General Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.
Instructors: W. Cotter
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | 05 LAB The department |

CHEM-101-03 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) General Chemistry I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Forensic Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will offer an introduction to the science in forensic investigations. We will explore several methods and instruments often used in CSI programs, such as mass spectrometry, infrared spectroscopy and DNA analysis, which are very valuable in evaluating crime scene evidence. We will explore the validity of scientific findings and the political implications of the use and availability of the data. Students will have a chance to be expert witnesses and be in the lab evaluating evidence. Analytical thinking and processing information in chemistry, biology, and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as oral and written communication skills. Short labs are planned.
Instructors: S. Browne
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-year Seminar: Using Spectroscopy to Analyze Paintings
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Seeing with multiple wavelengths of light reveals different layers in paintings. This course will study how spectroscopy can reveal details of an artist's painting style. First, the electromagnetic radiation and how it interacts with matter will be introduced. Next, the structure of a painting will be discussed along with case studies of famous or infamous paintings. Finally, students will apply their knowledge to study their own paintings through visible and infrared light.
Instructors: M. Gomez
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibria with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, and introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics. Laboratory emphasizes on analytical skills and illustrates basic concepts in chemical equilibria, thermodynamics, and kinetics.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 and Mathematics 101, first year only, and permission of instructor (weichen@mtholyoke.edu)
Instructors: W. Chen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB W Chen |
CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds. Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor
Instructors: W. Chen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | 05 LAB The department |

CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry, nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions, the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkyne, ethers, and others, and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis, practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography, molecular modeling, and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor
Instructors: K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department |

CHEM-212-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Chemistry of Biomolecules
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
An examination of the major ideas of biochemistry from the point of view of the chemical sciences rather than the life sciences. Structures of important biomolecules. The role of energetics and reaction dynamics in biochemical processes. Major metabolic pathways are considered, including those of proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, and nucleic acids.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: This course is not intended for Biochemistry majors, who must complete Biochemistry 311f and 314s. First priority will be given to sophomores and juniors.
Instructors: M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-250-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to the History of Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Traces the growth of chemistry in several ways: as a body of knowledge and beliefs, as a practical means of intervention, and as a community of practitioners linked (or divided) by sociopolitical bonds and common interests, intellectual and otherwise. After an overview of chemical history and an introduction to various scholarly traditions in the field, the balance of the course will be devoted to case studies of narrower topics or episodes, such as the alchemical tradition and Robert Boyle, the eighteenth-century Chemical Revolution, nineteenth-century organic chemistry, Ionism, atomism and elementalism, chemistry and war, the quantum revolution, educational traditions, the role of women.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-295-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training
Instructors: The department

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Instructors: K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | Expected enrollment: 60

CHEM-304-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor and Chemistry 302 as prerequisite or co-requisite
Notes: second half of semester
Instructors: D. Hamilton, K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB | Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-304-02 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory

CHEM-306-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Methods of Measurement - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
We will discuss analytical techniques which are currently applied in chemical, environmental, and medical science. These techniques include: chromatography including GC and LC spectroscopy (UV-Vis, FT-IR, AA, fluorometry, and NMR), surface science and mass spectrometry. Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.
Notes: Corequisite: Chemistry 302

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Chemical Thermodynamics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Chemistry 202, Mathematics 101, Physics 103 and 204, or 115 with grade of C or better
CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 311f; Biological Sciences 311f)
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Hsu | 02 LAB L Hsu |

CHEM-314-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology

(Biochemistry 314s; Biological Sciences 314s)

CHEM-317-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Principles of Polymer Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered once every three years
Instructors: W. Chen

CHEM-325-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Chemistry 202, Mathematics 202, Physics 216, Chemistry 308 with grade of C or better
Instructors: M. Gomez
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Gomez | 02 LAB H Jayathilake |

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and either: Chemistry 325 in the past or taken concurrently with this course.
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-336-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Organic Synthesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is examined. A general strategy for the synthesis of complex molecules is also presented.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Physical Organic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-339-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) The Organic Chemistry of Biological Pathways - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course explores the underlying organic chemistry of biological pathways and thereby seeks to build a framework for understanding biological transformations from the perspective of mechanistic organic chemistry. Beginning with common biological mechanisms, and drawing parallels with their sophomore organic chemistry counterparts, a broad overview will be constructed of the pathways by which the key classes of biological molecules--lipids, carbohydrates, amino acids, nucleotides--are manufactured, modified, and consumed. Several specific biosyntheses will also be dissected from a mechanistic perspective. These case studies will include antibiotics, an alkaloid, and heme.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-343-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Chemistry of DNA
(Speaking-intensive)
This advanced-level seminar will focus on the molecular properties of DNA. Using as sources a graduate-level text and readings from the primary literature, the class will discuss a variety of current topics in the research community, including the binding of proteins and small molecules to DNA, the covalent modification of DNA by mutagenic agents, and the dynamic nature of DNA across timescales. Critical analysis of experimental design and conclusions from data will be encouraged. Students will be evaluated based on participation in discussions, oral presentations, and an original research proposal.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and one additional 300-level chemistry course
Instructors: M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 12

CHEM-345-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Spring) Physical Biochemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces the fields of biophysical chemistry and molecular biophysics, where biological systems are probed and described by physical techniques and models. Topics will include the physical properties of biological molecules (proteins, nucleic acids, carbohydrates, and lipid membranes); applications of spectroscopy to biological systems, both in vitro and in vivo; the mechanisms of light harvesting and energy conversion; and technological developments inspired by biological systems. Lecture sessions (two per week) will be complemented by a weekly discussion of papers from the contemporary literature.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 required; Chemistry 212, Biochemistry 311 or Biology 220 recommended, or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

CHEM-399-01 - Chemistry - 2011-2012
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement. A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice. Prerequisites: sr Notes: Credit/No Credit grading only Instructors: D. Hamilton

Classics

CLASS-106-01 - Classics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Tragedy Ancient and Modern
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement First-year seminar (Writing-intensive) This course will examine the conventions of tragedy in the ancient Greek theater and their influence on modern American drama. Readings will include representative plays from the three celebrated ancient Athenian dramatists, Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides, and from the moderns, Eugene O'Neill, Tennessee Williams, and Arthur Miller. Tragic forms and themes in The Book of Job from the Hebrew Bible will provide a further interesting point of comparison. Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor Instructors: B. Arnold Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Ancient Greece - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (History 127f)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.

Instructors: R. Payne
Expected enrollment: 35

CLASS-128-01 - Classics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Ancient Rome
(History 128)
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century and the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Roman Empire and those who came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean. Topics include their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics, and the Roman family. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.

Instructors: J. Moralee
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Ancient Greek and Roman Myth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
We will accompany Odysseus on his return from Troy, retrieve the Golden Fleece with Jason, and race with Ovid through his witty—and often troubling—retelling of Greek myths from a Roman perspective. This course examines how Greek and Roman authors and artists from very different periods used myth to explore questions about life, art, and politics. Works include: Homer, Odyssey; Apollonius of Rhodes, Argonautica; Ovid, Metamorphoses and Heroides; Greek tragedy, and ancient images representing myths.

Notes: Optional screenings of films related to ancient myth.

Instructors: P. Debnar

CLASS-225-01 - Classics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Athenian Democracy and Its Foes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(History 225)
Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.

Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 20

CLASS-260-01 - Classics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Knowing God - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the following key texts from the ancient world that treat significantly the problem of knowing God and the mystery enveloping such knowledge: Sophocles' Oedipus the King, Plato's Phaedo, Cicero's Concerning the Nature of the Gods, Job, Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and others. Attention is also given to the different ways of thinking about the divine and human natures in these works, which are broadly reflective of Graeco-Roman and Judeo-Christian value systems.

Notes: may satisfy either Humanities I-A or I-B requirement

Instructors: B. Arnold

College Courses

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Stressed Out
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
We've all been there. Each of us carries a deep physical understanding of what its like to be under stress. But what are the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of this experience? How and why do our bodies respond to stress in such a characteristic way? And what is the impact of this biological response on health and disease? Through reading and discussion, we'll explore the biology of stress, the brain's ability to link the outer and inner worlds, the organ systems whose activity is altered by the stress response, and emerging research on the impact of long-term stress on memory, immune function, cardiovascular health, and cancer risk.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Bacon
Expected enrollment: 16

COLL-115-01 - College Courses - 2011-2012
(Spring) Global Challenges: Development in Crisis
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Team-taught by faculty from the Departments of Economics, Environmental Studies, History, International Relations, Politics, and Sociology.
In the current globalization process, economic development faces a triple crisis: exclusion of hundreds of millions of people, an environmentally unsustainable growth pattern, and lack of structural transformation. In this team-taught course, we will analyze the reasons for the triple crisis and explore policy solutions that lead to democratization of development, to an increase in the well-being of half the world's population without jeopardizing the sustainability of the natural environment, and to a transformation of the economic structure. The course leads up to a two-day conference on the same topic which brings together leading authorities from around the world.
Notes: The course starts on Jan 24 and ends on March 6 after the March 2-3 conference on the same topic, which students are required to attend. The course counts as credit in Economics, International Relations and Politics
Instructors: E. Paus, T. Farnham, S. Khan, C. Corson, V. Ferraro, H. Hanson, M. McKeever, J. Western

(Fall) Western Civilization: An Introduction through the Great Books - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Beginning with works emerging from Athens and Jerusalem and proceeding to the modern world, this course will explore the prominent ideas of Western civilization. The course material will be centered on the Great Books from across disciplinary boundaries and will include authors such as Dante, Darwin, Homer, Nietzsche, Plato, Shakespeare and the writers of the Old and New Testaments.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Hartley
Expected enrollment: 16

COLL-210-01 - College Courses - 2011-2012
(Spring) Ready for the World: Preparing for Your Internship and Research Project
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for students embarking on summer internships and research projects. It focuses on the connections students will make in the world beyond Mount Holyoke College. The course will examine the work of organizations, take account of the particular social situations in which students find themselves, analyze social dynamics in interpersonal and professional interactions, explore interviewing techniques for research and other modes of communication, and learn about organizational priorities and ethical guidelines. Students are expected to keep a journal of their readings and activities and participate fully in each session. Those thinking of doing an internship/research project in summer 2012 should register for this course.
Notes: Class will meet 7-10pm on: March 12; March 26; April 2; April 9; April 16. The last day to drop the course without any record is 3/23 by 11:59pm via email to registrar@mtholyoke.edu. The last day to withdraw from the course with a W or, for non-Nexus minors, to select the ungraded option is 4/9 by 5:00pm.
Instructors: R. Blaetz, M. Pierson
Expected enrollment: 70

COLL-211-01 - College Courses - 2011-2012
(Fall) Tying It All Together: Curriculum to Career
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for students who have recently completed summer internships and research projects to help them integrate their experience within the context of their liberal arts education and career goals. Students will apply problem-solving skills to various situations that occurred during their summer project; learn how to identify and articulate transferable skills gained during the project to potential employers and graduate schools; discuss how the experience has affirmed and/or modified their career goals; learn strategies to identify and network with individuals to advance their professional and academic development; and prepare a presentation on their internship or research project for the fall LEAP Symposium.
Notes: Meets Mondays, 7-10pm. Meeting dates: 9/12, 9/19, 9/26, 10/3, 10/17, plus day of LEAP symposium (TBA).
Instructors: P. Gill

COMOR-204-01 - Complex Organizations - 2011-2012
*(Fall) Poverty in the United States - Not offered this year/term
(Community-based learning course; Politics 204)
Why are so many people poor in the most affluent of all nations? Are there self-perpetuating “cultures of poverty?” Is poverty the result of economic conditions; failed government programs; discrimination; out-of-wedlock births; inadequate parenting; divorce; poor schools; poor health; poor housing; defects of intelligence or moral character? We will examine conflicting explanations of poverty and potential remedies from a variety of political perspectives, and analyze public assistance laws, Medicaid, and tax policies. Students will participate, in small groups, in an off-campus community-based learning project collaboratively designed with community partners, the instructor and the CBL program. Spanish language skills preferred.
Instructors: J. Fox, C. Pyle
Expected enrollment: 20

COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2011-2012
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+, -, *, /) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested. See http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/cljohnso.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr

COMOR-212-01 - Complex Organizations - 2011-2012
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
(Psychology 212)
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations - especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a manager; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Butterfield
Expected enrollment: 24

COMOR-220-01 - Complex Organizations - 2011-2012
(Fall) Winners and Losers: Taxation, Social Justice, and Economic Choices
(Speaking-intensive; Politics 225)
The maze of laws that make up the U.S. tax system shape and define what our nation is and will be; they also create winners and losers. Who benefits from special relief provisions such as for housing, health care, education, retirement savings, charitable giving, and child care? What are the economic consequences? How are families taxed? Women? The poor? Capital gains? Should we have an estate tax, reform the income tax, or adopt a consumption tax? How can we save Social Security? All these issues and more are addressed, including a review of federal tax history from the Constitution to the present.
Prerequisites: History 171, or Politics 104, or Economics 103 or 104, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Fox
Expected enrollment: 20

COMOR-232-01 - Complex Organizations - 2011-2012
(Fall) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 232s)
There is much talk recently of the need for increased attention to "ethics" in organizational life. This course examines the basis for this concern and the underlying beliefs and structures that give rise to ethical issues, with the goal of helping students to clarify their own positions. Topics addressed will include profit, governance, consumption, distribution and the social contract. Readings will draw on philosophy, religion, economics, history, literature, management theory and current events

COMSC-100-01 - Computer Science - 2011-2012
(Fall) An Introduction to Computer Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to basic computer science concepts and issues with a focus on HTML and JavaScript programming. Additional topics will be chosen from: origins of computers, computer architecture, assemblers and compilers, digital logic, the Internet, and artificial intelligence. Laboratory assignments will offer some experience with programming and the use of application software.

(Fall) Problem Solving and Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Computers are used every day for an enormous variety of tasks, from playing games and chatting with friends to transferring billions of dollars, delivering radiation treatments, and controlling the electrical grid. Computer programs are an essential ingredient in allowing for this great diversity of applications. In this course, you will learn to create your own programs, based on core programming concepts and analytical problem solving approaches. You will develop dynamic programs by first using Adobe Flash CS4 and AS3 (ActionScript 3), the technology behind many Web applications. The last portion of the course will teach you Java, a very popular modern programming language. We assume no prior study of computer science. Programming intensive.

(Fall) The Computer Science Revolution Is Here
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
Social software such as Facebook and Skype and mobile devices like smartphones and iPads have revolutionized personal computing in recent years. In this course we will look at issues surrounding this revolution in personal computing, such as privacy and free speech. We will also look at how computing is revolutionizing other disciplines, e.g., medicine, assistive technology for the disabled, and scientific research. Topics will include understanding the potential of Watson to build smarter search engines, the role of computing in drug discovery, and how countries can censor or even turn off the Internet.

(Fall) Data Structures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Using Java. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance. This course is programming intensive.

(Fall) Software Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Building large software systems introduces new challenges to software development. Appropriate design decisions early in the development of large software can make a major difference in developing software that is correct and maintainable. In this course, students will learn techniques and tools to help them address these problems and develop larger software projects, improving their skills in designing, writing, debugging, and testing software. Topics include design patterns, UML, designing for maintainability, software architecture, and designing concurrent and fault tolerant systems. Programming intensive.

(Fall) Theory of Computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101,102(aka 201) and Mathematics 232
Instructors: A. St John

COMSC-312-01 - Computer Science - 2011-2012
(Spring) Algorithms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
How does Mapquest find the best route between two locations? How do computers help to decode the human genome? At the heart of these and other complex computer applications are nontrivial algorithms. While algorithms must be specialized to an application, there are some standard ways of approaching algorithmic problems that tend to be useful in many applications. Among other topics, we will explore graph algorithms, greedy algorithms, divide-and-conquer, dynamic programming, and network flow. We will learn to recognize when to apply each of these strategies as well as to evaluate the expected runtime costs of the algorithms we design.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232

(Spring) Software Practicum - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Tired of writing programs that nobody ever uses? Then, this is the course for you. Software enables enterprises to carry out previously tedious or impossible tasks, but many organizations lack the resources to develop needed software. You will apply your programming skills to develop and deliver software to meet the requirements of a client from the community. You will learn critical communication skills required to work with a client, work as a team with classmates, and experience the software lifecycle from requirements elicitation through delivery. You will synthesize many topics learned in courses as well as new technologies required to complete the project. Programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 215
Instructors: B. Lerner

COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2011-2012
(Fall) Operating Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection, and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.

(Spring) Computer Graphics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL and other graphical environments; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.

COMSC-341-01 - Computer Science - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics: Robotics and HCI - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is a seminar-based course, drawing on a combination of traditional lectures, student presentations and projects. We will cover core robotics and HCI (Human Computer Interaction) concepts, with additional topics directed by student interest.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-341-02 - Computer Science - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics: Computational Geometry in Video Games - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Developing video games is an exciting and challenging domain, involving many areas of computer science, such as graphics, artificial intelligence and robotics. In this course, we focus on the geometric problems that arise in video game programming. Due to the expensive computations often demanded by current video game technology, efficient algorithms are required that not only satisfy speed requirements, but result in realistic user experiences. Topics will include standard problems from computational geometry, such as triangulation of 2-D and 3-D objects, point detection and visibility.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John

Critical Social Thought

CST-100-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: War and Memory - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 100, European Studies 100)
How do nations, groups, and individuals remember war? We explore the conflicting narratives of war that emerge at memorial sites, in museums, in film and other visual media, and in oral testimony. With an emphasis on case studies of actual national and transnational controversies arising out of competing versions of the past by the multiple participants in war, we investigate the impact of war in the last century up to the present for defining national, ethnic, gender, and racial identities; for establishing responsibility and rendering justice; and for remembering the dead. Cases focus on the remembrance of WW II and its legacies in Germany, Japan, and the U.S.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: No knowledge of German necessary;
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-100-02 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-year Seminar: Self and Political Thought
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Politics 100f(02))
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-100-03 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-year Seminar: What Is Performance?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Theatre Arts 150 (02))
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 14

CST-100-04 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Goodbye, Conventional Wisdom
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; European Studies 100 (01))
One of the hallmarks of a liberal arts education is to draw on a broad base of knowledge in order to interrogate common assumptions. No one exemplifies this critical approach better than French philosopher Michel Foucault. One of the most influential thinkers of recent times, Foucault revolutionized several academic disciplines and even questioned the very notion of a discipline itself. He did so by revealing the history and transformations of ideas now viewed as self-evident. This first-year seminar invites students to develop similar analytical skills. Following Foucault's lead, the course pays special attention to preconceptions about government, freedom, identity, and sexuality.
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 15

CST-248-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Spring) Science, Revolution, and Modernity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as 'revolutionary'? How are scientific developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?
Prerequisites: so, jr, or permission of instructor
Notes: Gateway course for minor in Conceptual Foundations of Science
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 226fs, Religion 226)
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life.
Instructors: J. Grayson
Expected enrollment: 35

(Spring) Twentieth-Century Theory and Its Discontent: Psychoanalytic Theory - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive; Psychology 225)
An introduction to the contested terrain of psychoanalytic theory, which has so hugely influenced twentieth-century thinking. Reading widely across Freud's work and that of his colleagues, we will situate key ideas--repression, desire, masochism, neurosis, sublimation, etc.--within a range of interpretive frameworks. Our goal will be to analyze the varied implications of psychoanalytic theory for contemporary thinking about individuals and society.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. One prior course in either Psychology or CST
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-252-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) Art and Politics: Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 251)
A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created--in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting--but also for whom, and why.
Instructors: E. Rundle

(Spring) Art and Politics: Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 252 (01))
A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to: the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created--in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting--but for whom, and why.

(Spring) Critical Race Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(African American and African Studies 208)
This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.

CST-254-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Postcolonial Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Postcolonial theory probes the centrality of colonialism and imperialism to modernity, and examines vital forms of anticolonial insurgency as models for critiques of domination and hegemony. This course will explore these imperatives from Marxist, poststructuralist, feminist, and psychoanalytic perspectives, paying particular attention to nationalism, the state, globalization, identity, and alternative political formations in the context of empire. Theorists read will include Lenin, Fanon, Spivak, Lloyd, Rose, and Chakrabarty.

(Fall) Human Agency and Historical Transformation: Pivotal Moments in the Development of Capitalism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Economics 204, History 301)
This seminar examines evidence and theories on the origins, development, and dynamics of capitalism and the modern state. We shall focus on the transition to (agrarian) capitalism in early modern England, the industrialization of production in nineteenth-century Europe and the United States, and the political and economic crisis of the 1930s depression. As we ask how fundamental changes in human communities come about, we shall consider the relative contributions of individual agency and social determination to the creation of a world so many now regard as either natural or inevitable.

CST-350-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar for CST seniors in which they present their independent research, respond critically to one another’s work, and lead discussion. In support of that research, this course will explore the history of critical method, from the Enlightenment through 20th-century critical theory and post-colonial studies. Every student will produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought. Students will present their work publicly and cultivate agility in speaking, arguing, and writing.

Prerequisites: Critical Social Thought sr; other jr and sr with permission of instructor

Notes: seniors who intend to write a thesis must take 4 credits of Critical Social Thought 395 in the fall, in addition to this course

Curricular Support Courses

CUSP-100-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2011-2012
(Spring) Engaging the Pioneer Valley: Community-Based Learning (CBL) Theory and Practice
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
This course will equip students to enter communities effectively and responsibly as learners, researchers, volunteers, and citizens. Successful community-based learning depends on familiarity with communities and methods to study and assess conditions in them, and on familiarity with the history, politics, policies and practices of campus-community partnership. Students will analyze and interact with nonprofit and civic organizations, issues, and leaders to refine personal interests and skills for social justice advocacy. Students will identify and prepare to address critical needs and opportunities via community partnerships through readings, discussions, panel sessions and assignments.
Notes: Note: For students entering the College in Fall 2008 or later, there is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation. (Students who entered before Fall 2008 have a limit of one non-liberal arts course, and no limit on Curricular Support courses.)
Instructors: A. Bloomgarden
Expected enrollment: 40

CUSP-102-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2011-2012
(Fall) Community-Based Learning: Networks, Reflection, and Meaning
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
Community-based learning that effectively develops civic leaders and engages purposefully in community development requires students to develop networking, reflection, and analytic practices. Readings on civic engagement, discussions and exercises will advance campus and community networks, writing and oral reflection on field experiences, and information-sharing so students will better understand themselves and communities. This course is designed to facilitate learning and impact for CBL Program student staff pursuing concurrent fellowships and mentorships. Students in C.A.U.S.E. leadership, off-campus work-study, and independent study positions may also enroll by permission.
Prerequisites: For current CBL Fellows. For students entering the College in Fall 2008 or later, there is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation. Students who entered before Fall 2008 have a limit of one non liberal arts course, and no limit on Curricular Support courses.

(Spring) Integrating Learning, Service, and Social Action
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
Connecting community-based learning to social justice advocacy requires experience with asset-based community analysis, and skills for project planning, implementation, and assessment. Students will develop logic models for social change and participate in exercises and reflections that enhance their capacity to support organizational community partnership development. This course is designed to facilitate learning and impact for CBL Program student staff pursuing concurrent fellowships and mentorships. Students in C.A.U.S.E. leadership, off-campus work-study, and independent study positions may also enroll by permission.

CUSP-104-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2011-2012
(Fall) Public Speaking, Leadership Presence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
What are the elements of an effective public speech? What rhetorical strategies do people use to support and/or influence one another? Using the same techniques that professional actors use to relax, focus their message, and connect with their audience, students will explore the art and craft of public speaking. Through an intensive semester of training, analyzing, writing, and speaking, students will learn and practice how to confidently communicate, express themselves authentically, and motivate others. A number of public speeches will be analyzed to enable students to evaluate critically the effects of culture on communication and communication on culture.

Dance

DANCE-101-01 - Dance - 2011-2012
(Fall) Politics of Dance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
How do the politics on the world stage influence dance and dance artists? This course investigates the repercussions of political policies in the careers of individual dancers and the societies in which they live. Students will read biographies and autobiographies, view films, and write about the intricacies of this game of political chess with dancers as its pawns. This course will have a multimedia narrative as its final project; students will work with a Technical Mentor to help develop the project.
Instructors: C. Flachs, R. Flachs
Expected enrollment: 15

DANCE-101-01 - Dance - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Dance - First-Year Seminar: Dance as an Art Form
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an experiential introduction to dance as a performing art. Its goals are to provide students with an understanding of the body as a source of movement, imagery, and expression, and to broaden students’ capacities for seeing, describing, and interpreting dance. No previous formal dance training is required. Course work will include regular movement practice, a series of introductory master classes in different dance idioms, video and concert viewings, experiments in group improvisation and choreography, and readings on the aesthetic and cultural contexts of different dance traditions.
Instructors: T. Freedman
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Pilates - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Pilates is a method of physical and mental conditioning. It is a unique method of toning, stretching, and strengthening. It utilizes special apparatus to achieve balance in the body and create harmony of body, mind and spirit. Joseph Pilates, who came to the U.S. in the 1920s, originally developed the Pilates method. The goal of this course will be to use specific Pilates exercises to strengthen and elongate muscles, improve bodily alignment, and solidify kinestheic awareness. This course will focus on creating a conditioning routine that is suited for students interested in improving their ballet and modern technique. Assignments will include readings and a final paper.

(Fall) Advanced Studies: Twentieth-Century American Dance: Sixties Vanguard to Nineties Hip-Hop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey of twentieth-century American dance moves from the sixties—a decade of revolt and redefinition in American modern dance that provoked new ideas about dance, the dancer's body, and a radically changed dance aesthetic—to the radical postmodernism of the nineties, when the body continued to be the site for debates about the nature of gender, ethnicity, and sexuality. We will investigate how the political and social environment, particularly the civil rights/black power movement, anti-war/student movement, and the women's movement, with its proliferation of feminist performance works, informed the work of succeeding generations of dance artists.
Instructors: C. Hill

A topical coverage of development economics used in conventional textbooks does not do justice to the evolution of integrated thinking in the field. A topical organization also does not do justice to the topic linkages or to the important debates in the field. This course adopts a history of macro development economics thought approach with an emphasis on alternative approaches right up to the current debates. While the field started in the 1940s, the influence of classical economists and Marx on the pioneering development economists and the field will also be traced.

About 1900 the "New Woman" emerges in social, political, and literary representations. In contrast to 19thc. "True Womanhood"--wife and mother at home--New Women pursued education and employment that propelled them into the public sphere. Our readings tell of larger cultural issues: suffrage, citizenship, immigration, Jim Crow segregation, urbanization, nativism. Many texts present multiple, conflicting images of the New Woman. From diverse backgrounds the New Woman symbolized different things to different people. These competing definitions offer insight now, a century later. Were the concerns in 1900 all that new, or simply understood anew? Does "new" mean progress--then or now?

ENGL-101-03 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Error and Self-Discovery
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.
Mary Wollstonecraft once wrote that the key for women to enlarge their minds was to err and "frequently go astray." This course will explore how many writers plot their stories and poems around all types of mistakes, errors, or missteps both intentional and accidental. We will discuss what kinds of knowledge about the self and the world the fall into error might offer, how we know when we've made mistakes, and what kind of change or redemption is possible in the wake of these discoveries. Readings may be drawn from Milton, Rousseau, Coleridge, Mary Shelley, Austen, Christina Rossetti, as well as a few contemporary writers.

Who decides which categories are available for defining one's sense of self? How do categories themselves complicate our ability to make sense of who we are and our place in the world? How do stark binaries such as "Black/White," "Man/Woman," or "American/Foreigner" prove problematic for those who find themselves somewhere in between, or indeed outside of, these imagined worlds? In this course we will consider how authors in the United States have used fiction writing and memoir to answer questions about mixed, marginalized, or unacknowledged identities; in doing so, we will explore how language itself paradoxically creates and challenges available labels.

The Western fascination with the East is at least as old as Greek tragedy. From Troy and Persia then to India in the eighteenth century to the Middle East now, the worlds the West has conquered have, paradoxically, revealed to it the limits of its own political, philosophical, and literary practices. We will study both the Western writing that has defined itself against the East (Greek tragedy, eighteenth-century Orientalism, contemporary European philosophy) and the non-Western texts that have nonetheless deeply influenced it (The Thousand and One Nights, Hafiz, Arabic poetry, etc.).

(Spring) Introduction to Creative Writing - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
In this class we will use pictures of mythological characters and scenes as inspiration for a series of exercises which focus on the different components of creative prose: description, characterization, dialogue, point of view, scene, and dramatic action. We will also devote a week to reading and writing poetry based on mythic themes. The exercises will serve as a basis for a flight into your own myth-making, and the final result will be a complete short story that reflects both your engagement with myths of the past and the creation of a "mythic" world that is entirely your own.

(Fall) Introduction to Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
The finest journalists are professors to the people. They educate citizens so as to facilitate reasoned, fact-based dialogue on subjects as diverse as politics, poverty, war, science, and the arts. We will look at journalism's role in the culture as well as some of its failings and foibles. Students will try their hand at writing about an event, a person and an issue using the reporter's skills of interviewing, research, and thoughtful analysis to produce snapshots of the world inside and outside the College gates. Curiosity leads. Mastery follows.

(Spring) Introduction to British Literary and Cultural Studies since 1660: Culture and Society: 1798-1900 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a broad study of selected figures in modern literary and intellectual history and helps prepare students for more advanced classes in British and/or postcolonial studies. We will use these figures to probe the dynamic relationship between imaginative practice and social change, which may involve global as well as national contexts. This course will introduce students to writing sustained pieces of critical analysis, challenging them to explore the theoretical relationship between literary form and historical transformation in the modern period.
This course will examine a number of major literary texts from the Lyrical Ballads of Wordsworth and Coleridge through Conrad's Heart of Darkness.
The focus will be on major poets and novelists of the period, but we will also consider some nonfiction prose writers as well. The course will be particularly concerned with the literary response to social change such as the migration from the country to the city, the rise of industry, the situation of women, and the legacy of imperialist expansion.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: W. Quillian
Expected enrollment: 20

ENGL-230-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Victorian Detective Fiction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Victorian detective literature was popular entertainment at the same time that it took on the anxieties and hopes of its historical moment, including those around capital, otherness, authority, domesticity, and theories of knowledge. Through historical readings and current theory, we will examine the double work of this literature. Arthur Conan Doyle and his institution Sherlock Holmes will provide a focus through which we will read influences and afterlives, which may include works by Wilkie Collins, Dickens, Poe, R.L. Stevenson, Hawthorne, and Georges Perec, as well as television and film adaptations and the fanaticism of steampunk.
Prerequisites: 4 credits of English or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-231-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) British Romanticism: Revolution and Reaction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This class will examine the ways Romantic-era writers figured revolution and the reaction against it, in the wake of the French Revolution's spectacular but failed promises of liberty, fraternity, and equality for all. We will pay special attention to how British writers envisioned their own versions of freedom and equality, extending them to women, slaves, and the poor. Likewise we will explore how this project for social change was necessarily related to revolusions in language and aesthetics. Authors may include Burke, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Smith, Barbauld, Blake, Austen, Keats, Percy and Mary Shelley, Byron, and Hemans.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-233-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to Queer Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course introduces students to the social and political contexts mediating nonnormative gender and sexual expression since the nineteenth century. In our examination of queer epistemological genealogies and methodologies, we will also consider the value of queer theory as a subjectless analysis as opposed to a queer of color critique that calls into question the sedimentation of a white, male, North American queer identity with global pretensions. Prerequisites: soph, or permission of instructor
Instructors: I. Day

ENGL-235-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Modern British Poetry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introduction to modern British poetry pays special attention to the emergence, consolidation, and dismantling of modernist poetry and poetics. It will link this literary history with, amongst other things, the loss of faith, the two world wars, and the relationship between monumental aesthetics, utopian poetics, and totalitarian politics. Writers will include Hardy, Yeats, Eliot, H.D., and Auden. Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or English 200
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-237-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Scottish Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In The Quarry Wood, Martha's father teaches her, "Scotland is bounded on the South by England...and on the West by Eternity." This course explores that image, tracing the relationship of Scottish literature to European history and the making of Scottish identity, understanding language and form as political actions in the creation of Scotland's national, international, and mythologized identities. Selections survey Enlightenment thought, sentimentalized Scotland (the Kailyard school), grim "realism," modern novels, and contemporary fiction, and may include Hume, Smith, Scott, Burns, Barrie, Stevenson, MacDiarmid, Gibbon, E. Muir, W. Muir, Shepherd, Kelman, television, and film.
Instructors: J. Pyke

ENGL-239-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Novels of the Later Eighteenth Century: Worthy Hearts and Saucy Wits
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204f(02))
Eighteenth-century England witnessed the birth of the novel, a genre that in its formative years was both lauded for its originality and condemned as intellectually and morally dangerous, especially for young women. We will trace the numerous prose genres that influenced early novelists, including conduct manuals, epistolary writing, conversion narratives, travelogues, romance, and the gothic. In doing so, we will concomitantly examine the novel's immense formal experimentation alongside debates about developing notions of gender and class as well as the feeling, thinking individual. Authors may include Richardson, Fielding, Sterne, Walpole, Burney, and others. Prerequisites: soph, jr, or sr
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: K. Singer
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-239-02 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Literature of the British Isles: From Virtue Rewarded to a Vampire's Kiss: Epistololarity in Eighteenth- and Nineteenth-Century Fiction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course we will track the evolution of the epistolary form from the mid-eighteenth century through the end of the nineteenth. How does this format function differently in a sensation novel of the 1860s than, say, an epistolary novel of the 1740s? What elements of literary and cultural history have assisted in effecting this change? Authors may include Jane Austen, Anne Bronté, Fanny Burney, Wilkie Collins, Charles Dickens, Choderlos de Laclos, Samuel Richardson, and Bram Stoker.
Instructors: E. Meadows
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-240-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) American Literature I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of American literature from the literature of exploration through the major authors of the mid-nineteenth century, with special attention to the formation of an American literary tradition, along with the political, social, and religious context that helped shape the imaginative response of American writers to their culture.

ENGL-241-01 - English - 2011-2012
American Literature II - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of English 240, which explores the diversity of writers and literary forms that arose in U.S. society in the period from the Civil War to World War I. Authors may include Alcott, Chopin, Crane, Dreiser, Dunbar, Dunbar-Nelson, DuBois, Sui-Sin Far, Gilman, Harper, James, Jewett, Stein, Twain, Wharton, and Whitman. Will address the development of realism and naturalism, and the beginnings of modernism, and explore literary redefinitions of race, gender, sexuality, and class as shaped by social and economic pressures during this era.

African American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an introduction to the literary works of African Americans from the late-eighteenth century to the present, with an emphasis on poetry and fiction. Beginning with slave narratives and early poetry, we will consider issues of genre, literary traditions, and historical context while gaining experience in reading and analyzing literary texts. We will examine how authors consciously went about creating a literary tradition that mirrored, challenged and created a dialogue with the American canon.

Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor

Instructors: G. Pemberton

---

ENGL-251-01 - English - 2011-2012
African American Literature II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine the major African American writers of the twentieth century, beginning with the poetry and prose of Paul Laurence Dunbar and ending with the fiction of Toni Morrison, John Wideman, and the poetry of Yusef Komunyaka, Rita Dove, and others. We will discuss the strategies involved in the creation of a "black voice" and its relationship to Anglo-American literature. We will also consider the nature of literary influence along with the attempts, by some writers, to create a distinct "black aesthetic." Finally, we will discuss the difficulties black authors encounter in asserting the literary over the sociological among readers of all intellectual and social strata.

(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 267)
"Most people are on the world, not in it." --John Muir. An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.

(Spring) Women Writers: Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204)
In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winternucaa.
Prerequisites: soph, second-year fy with permission of instructor

ENGL-276-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Mapping Jewish American Generations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Jewish Studies 276)
This course sets canonical Jewish American literature in creative dialogue with contemporary Jewish American writers, filmmakers, and performance artists to explore how early twentieth-century figures (Abraham Cahan, Anzia Yezierska, and Henry Roth) continue to influence --inspire-- a rising generation of authors. The key mediating figure in this generational dialogue is Philip Roth, whose work we will examine as well. Topics to be explored include "immigrant" writing then and now; the uses of nostalgia; genealogies of standup comedy and popular culture in general; the emergence of "hipster" Judaism and its various modes of expression (above all via websites).
Prerequisites: soph; 4 credits in English, religion, Jewish studies, history, sociology, film studies
Instructors: D. Weber

ENGL-280-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Literary Criticism and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is designed to offer students a broad historical overview of literary theory as well as exposure to contemporary debates about "theory" and literary representation. The course is both an exercise in practical criticism and a survey of the Western critical tradition from Plato to Derrida. Beginning with the question of why Plato wished to ban poets from his ideal Republic, the course will go on to consider such topics as the Classic vs. Romantic theories of the imagination, the "invention" of psychology and the necessary difficulty of much modern literature, the relation of gender and ethnicity to literary expression, and the uncertainties of literary interpretation.

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Writing Historical Fiction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Does historical fiction offer readers something history books cannot? What obligation does the writer of historical fiction have to the verifiable facts of the past? Is history a place we can visit, or is it a living force, defining the present? Isn’t there a sense in which all fiction is historical fiction? In this course we’ll consider these and other questions as we read and write historical fiction. We’ll go out with our shovels and teaspoons to dig in the past, unearthing the psychological atmosphere, the gossip, the voices, and the important lies that will show us the way to breathe new life into the cold, dead facts of history.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 203, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement

ENGL-301-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Studies in Journalism: Digital and Multimedia Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The fast-changing landscape of new information technologies, from the Internet to iPods, is redefining the nature and practice of journalism today. We will explore the multimedia platforms available to journalists and learn how to tell stories across these platforms. We will examine the political, sociological, legal, and ethical issues raised by these media technologies and study the impact of the Web on the traditional watchdog role of the press.
Students will be asked to write a blog and stories about an event and person. They will also be asked to create a podcast and/or a slide show to be posted online. Rough drafts, rewrites and individual meetings with the professor are required.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement

(Spring) Studies in Journalism: Health and Science Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
Good medical and science journalism has never been more important in understanding our world and how to fix it. This course is an introduction to the skills needed to cover medical and science news and communicate science to the general public. It will focus on how to report and write daily news stories and longer features. We will also explore controversies in science and ethical issues raised by media coverage of science and medicine. Students will be asked to write a news story, a feature story, and an opinion piece on an important issue in medicine or science. Rough drafts, rewrites, and individual meetings with the professor are required.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, equivalent writing course or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: A. Bass

ENGL-301-02 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Studies in Journalism: Journalism History and Ethics: The Role and Function of the Fourth Estate
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Can a story be accurate but false? Should reporters value protecting national security over telling the truth? Is it ethical to tell a lie if it allows access to important information? Journalists face difficult ethical dilemmas every day. But how do they know what to do? Are there rules? In this class we will study ethics in journalism from the time of the muckrakers to the rise of the blog.
Prerequisites: jr, sr
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: C. Manegold
ENGL-301-02 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Studies in Journalism: Magazine Writing - Sequence I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this class we will read extensively from contemporary articles in the New Yorker, Slate, Vanity Fair, the New York Times Sunday Magazine, and other mainstream publications as we study the best magazine writing in America today. Writing assignments will stress getting students out of the library and "into the world." Each student will be asked to pursue stories of her own, and produce original writing distinguished by solid reporting, independent research, and compelling and elegant prose.
Prerequisites: Intro to Creative Writing, Narrative Non-fiction, or permission of the instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: C. Manegold

ENGL-301-03 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Studies in Journalism: Narrative Nonfiction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This class is designed to immerse students in some of the most powerful nonfiction being published today. We will read extensively to explore the art of telling factual stories with drama, accuracy, imagination, and skill by examining works on topics ranging from business to science to history and politics. Outside the classroom students will be expected to apply these skills to their own writing through a series of assignments culminating in the production of one magazine-length work. Throughout, we will focus on challenges of structure, "voice," and sustaining a narrative. Our goal will be to produce work distinguished by simple, accurate, and compelling prose.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 202
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: C. Manegold
Expected enrollment: 12

ENGL-301-04 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Studies in Journalism: Magazine Writing - Sequence II - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is designed for students committed to moving their writing to the next level. In this class we will read extensively from New Yorker, Slate, Vanity Fair, The New York Times Sunday Magazine and other mainstream publications as we study the impact and the techniques of the best magazine writing in America today. Students will produce their own magazine-length work on topics of their own choosing. These pieces will be distinguished by extensive reporting and research coupled with compelling and original prose.
Prerequisite: Intro to Journalism, Narrative Non-fiction, Magazine Sequence I or permission of the instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: C. Manegold
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-303-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Short Story Writing II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This workshop is for students seriously engaged in writing short stories. Students will refine their technical skills and work on the subtleties of style. Extensive readings are required.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including 203 or equivalent, submitted writing sample, and permission of instructor

ENGL-304-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Verse Writing II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this workshop students will generate new poems, working in both free verse and traditional forms. Emphasis will be given to honing elements of craft, to developing one's "voice," and to the all-important process of revision. Readings will include books by contemporary poets, with workshops devoted to critiquing student work and discussing the poems of established writers.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including 204, or permission of instructor
ENGL-305-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Writing Literature for Children - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A workshop focusing on writing for children at different age levels. Students will work on a variety of projects in fiction and nonfiction, and experiment with different styles, forms, and approaches. Weekly writing and editing assignments and selected readings of children's literature are required. The course includes guest lectures (which are open to the campus) and field trips.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101 including either 201 or 204, 265, and permission of instructor. Creative writing sample must be submitted to instructor during advising week.

(Fall) Old English
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the language and literature of Anglo-Saxon England (ca. 450-1066 AD) in a series of graduated grammar lessons and readings of Old English poetry and prose. These will include selections from the Bible, the Venerable Bede, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles, "The Wanderer," "The Dream of the Rood," "The Wife's Lament," and the Exeter Book riddles. We will also learn the 31-character Old English futhorc as it was preserved in "The Rune Poem" and used to inscribe verses on the Franks Casket and the Ruthwell Cross.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
Instructors: C. Demas
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-311-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Chaucer: Stories of Cupid's Martyrs
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Medieval Studies 300)
This course begins with a close reading of Chaucer's great love story Troilus and Criseyde together with The Legend of Good Women, taking into consideration the multiple cultural contexts a late medieval audience would have brought to both poems along with such topics as honour, love, trouthe and betrayal. We will conclude by comparing Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida with Chaucer's work as a way of understanding the continuities and changes between a late medieval and early modern understanding of men and women in love and war.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 8 credits in English or Medieval Studies and permission of instructor; online application required
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
Instructors: S. Harris
Expected enrollment: 20

ENGL-312-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Shakespeare, Adapted and Interpreted
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
"The history of Shakespeare's work is the history of the European imagination." By focusing on a small group of plays (The Tempest, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Hamlet, and Macbeth), the seminar will study the post-Shakespearean adventures of Shakespeare's work in the arts of music and painting as well as in the theater and in literature. Topics will include The Tempest as semi-opera, A Midsummer Night's Dream as Victorian fairy painting, Hamlet as an orchestral prince, and Macbeth as opera; but students will be expected to pursue and report upon independent projects to be chosen from a wide and fascinating field of material.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 211 or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: F. Brownlow
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-312-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Shakespeare: Religion, Magic, and the Shakespearean Stage
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Theatre Arts 312)
Religious rituals, black magic, and theatrical entertainment were linked by controversy in Shakespeare's England: were they potent acts or empty performances? How did they seduce and endanger unwitting audiences? Foregrounding the plays of Shakespeare and his contemporaries, we will explore the intersecting cultural histories of religious persecution, witchcraft trials, and movements to close down the theaters. We will consider how England's religious culture was destabilized not only by the Protestant Reformation but also by global trade and travel. Our focus will extend beyond the interpretation of simple representational allusions to grapple with the particular semiotics of theatrical performance.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 211 or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement; meets Theatre dramatic literature requirement for Theatre
Instructors: J. Degenhardt
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-313-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Milton
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

ENGL-322-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) "The Silver Link, the Silken Tie": Marriage in Victorian Prose and Poetry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course we will explore links between social and literary forms through the motif of marriage--arguably the most important social form of Victorian England. Along the way, we will address questions of narrative form, lyric stasis, and social change. Authors may include Jane Austen, Charlotte Brontë, Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning, George Eliot, George Meredith, Coventry Patmore, Alfred Tennyson, and Anthony Trollope.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Meadows
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-323-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) The Victorian Novel: Realism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333f-08)
This course will explore the project of Realism in the Victorian novel, watching tensions between a desire for guidance and a desire for mimesis. One critic has said the Victorians brought a sense of social duty to Romantic world-awareness, creating a "duty of awareness" that was almost overwhelming for the novelist and novel. We will explore this "duty of awareness" as we investigate representations of gender, class, and feeling as structuring principles in the novel. Novelists may include Austen, Dickens, G. Eliot, Gaskell, Bronte, W. Collins, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, 236, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-323-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) The Victorian Novel: Gender and Class - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

Instructors: A. Martin

Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-325-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Victorian Literature and Visual Culture

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course will examine literary texts that represent new forms of visuality in nineteenth-century Britain as well as examples of visual culture that provide a framework for reading Victorian culture in innovative ways. We will study nineteenth-century photography—portrait, prison photography, imperial photographs, and private and popular erotic images—as well as novels and autobiographical writing that engage with new photographic technology and its transformation of the ways in which Victorians understood identity, politics, aesthetics, and representation. The course will take a similar approach to painting, literary illustration, political cartoons and caricature, and advertising.

Prerequisites: English 220 or English 323 and at least 4 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: A. Martin

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-326-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Romantic Epistemologies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

In this seminar, we will examine Romantic poetry’s unique contemplation of the problems of perception, cognition, and epistemology. We will investigate how male and female writers explored various theories of knowledge through their play with the figures of the idiot or savage, drug culture, and new technologies surrounding the Gothic genre and the virtual imagination. Authors including Wordsworth, Robinson, Coleridge, DeQuincey, and Keats will be read alongside philosophers such as Edmund Burke, Immanuel Kant, scientists John Galt and J. G. Spurzheim, and accounts of pre-cinematic entertainment such as the magic lantern and the phantasmagoria.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: K. Singer

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-331-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Modern Poetry: Hilda Doolittle, T. S. Eliot, Ezra Pound, and Mina Loy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course will chart the development of Modernist poetics from its origins at the beginning of the twentieth century to the publication of The Waste Land in 1922. We will focus on four poets (Hilda Doolittle, T. S. Eliot, Mina Loy, and Ezra Pound) and will chart the ways in which they interact with one another to produce experimental poetry of extraordinary force.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200; preference will be given to students who have taken English 235 or English 245

Notes: meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: N. Alderman

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-334-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Queer Kinship in Asian North American Literature and Film - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course examines alternative kinship formations in Asian North American cultural production. It will focus on the gender and sexual management of racial bodies since the nineteenth century, from the U.S. Page Law of 1875 that restricted Chinese women on the basis of their presumed sexual immorality to various forms of "racial castration" that mediate Asian masculinities. We will consider how alternative kinship arrangements and queer cultural projects expose and/or upset the narrative assumptions embedded in heteronormative scripts of national belonging.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor. Preference will be given to students who have taken English 274, Introduction to Asian American literature

Notes: meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: I. Day

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-341-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) American Literature III

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the range and variety of American literary expression from the 1920s through the early 1940s. Topics include the role of regionalism, the emergence of a "modernist" aesthetic, ethnicity and modernism; debates within African American literary culture. Authors include Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, William Faulkner, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Henry Roth, and Pietro Di Donato.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in English beyond 101 or permission instructor

Instructors: D. Weber

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Studies in American Literature: Henry James on Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 380)
This seminar will examine the various screen adaptations of assorted novels by Henry James. We will read the novels against the films, exploring how James's texts translate--or do not translate--into film. Novels and films to be studied include Washington Square, The Exponents, Portrait of a Lady, The Turn of the Screw, and Wings of the Dove.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: D. Weber

(Spring) Studies in American Literature: 150 Years of American Theater
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350)
This course will move from April 1865, when Lincoln was assassinated in a Washington theater while laughing at a hugely successful British comedy, to the present day, when revivals of the classic American playtexts grace major theaters in London. We shall follow the emergence of a distinctively national drama, responding to British precedents initially, and more recently incorporating further diverse, even international, perspectives. Playwrights studied include Susan Glaspell, Langston Hughes, Eugene O'Neill, Edward Albee, Miguel Piñero, August Wilson, David Mamet, Suzan-Lori Parks, David Henry Hwang, Lynn Nottage, and Will Eno.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: H. Holder

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-347-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Modern Urban British Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
As London and the British novel enter the new millennium, both are sites of competing histories, traditions, and agendas. This course will map the city's progress from the center of an empire to a node in the global world's economy, and chart the twentieth-century novel's movement from realism to postmodernism and beyond. Beginning by contrasting the realist London of Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes with Virginia Woolf's modernist version in Mrs. Dalloway, we will go on to trace the development of the post-1945 British novel.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: N. Alderman

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-350-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) Studies in African American Literature: Slavery and the Literary Imagination
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course we will study American works that focus on enslavement in America and the ways in which historical fact and literary conventions inform representations of enslaved and self-emancipated people, as well as enslavers, abolitionists, and free people of color. In what ways do race, class, region, and history influence portrayals of slavery? How do conventions of the slave narrative and sentimental novel affect the representation of slavery and freedom? Authors may include Octavia Butler, Charles Chesnutt, Frederick Douglass, William Lloyd Garrison, Lawrence Hill, and Harriet Beecher Stowe.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, including at least one of the following: English 240, 241, 250, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: L. Brown

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-350-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Studies in African American Literature: Race, Grace, and the Politics of Salvation in African American Writing - *Not offered this year/term
Our course will focus on the ways in which African American writers from the eighteenth century through today have conceptualized salvation as a spiritual, social, romantic, and political enterprise. In what ways have historical realities such as migration, enslavement, civil war, colonization, and segregation shaped literary and cultural debates about salvation and, as a result, the contrasting state of damnation? Writings by authors such as Butler, Chesnutt, Douglass, Forten, Hopkins, Hurston, Naylor, Stewart, Truth, and Wheatley will inform our considerations of how salvation is imagined, problematized, and romanticized in African American writing.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including at least one of the following: English 200, 240, 241, 250, or permission of instructor.

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: L. Brown

ENGL-368-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Fall) African American Literature at Midcentury
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
The Harlem Renaissance was over. The most intensive period of the Civil Rights Movement was yet to be. From the late 1930s through the 1950s, African American novelists and poets were nonetheless writing important, sometimes wonderful books. We will study the writers and their times, gauging the influence of the past and their influence on the future. Writers will include Richard Wright, Gwendolyn Brooks, Robert Hayden, William Attaway, Chester Himes, Ann Petry, James Baldwin and Ralph Ellison.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-369-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) American Fiction: Lost and Found
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine a number of great literary works that are read infrequently, or not at all these days, by authors whose other work is known and by those whose names are not familiar to us. We will study these texts with an eye to their quality and significance; the literary, political, and social contexts of their publications; and their relationships to other literature. Authors will include Herman Melville, Harold Frederic, Mark Twain, Henry Roth, Flannery O'Connor, Nelson Algren.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 241, or other course in nineteenth- or twentieth- century American Literature
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-373-01 - English - 2011-2012
(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

Instructors: L. Glasser

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-374-01 - English - 2011-2012

(Spring) Hitchcock and After

(Film Studies 320)

This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Marnie, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.

(Spring) Asian American Literature in a Transnational Age - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar examines the distinct critical genealogies within Asian Canadian and Asian American literary and cultural studies over the last three decades, probing their evolving objectives and their intellectual futures. Throughout the course, we will examine the major shifts and intersections in these fields, focusing in particular on: androcentric cultural nationalism; feminist and queer interventions; historical materialist, psychoanalytic, postcolonial, and deconstructive theoretical approaches; and domestic and transnational critical formations.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

(Fall) George Eliot, Virginia Woolf, and Doris Lessing

(Gender Studies 333f(06))

This seminar will focus on major works of fiction by these three writers and will be particularly concerned with their response to the social and cultural worlds around them. Considering each as a major voice for the concerns of women of her time, the course will examine their critical and theoretical prose as well as their fiction.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200, or permission of instructor; English 220, 280 highly recommended

(Fall) Re-imagining Los Angeles: Multiethnic Fictions of Tomorrowland - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

In Ridley Scott's 1982 science fiction film, Blade Runner, Los Angeles is a beleaguered metropolis overrun by immigrant "bordex" and menacing replicants, presenting a dystopic forecast of multiculturalism. By surveying major genres in relation to the racialized and gendered contexts of migration, labor, and urban redevelopment, this course focuses on alternative constructions of Los Angeles in African American, Asian American, and Chicana/o short stories, novels, and film. Works will include Southland, Uproot of Orange, Twilight Los Angeles 1992, Their Dogs Came with Them, Devil in a Blue Dress, We Should Never Meet, and Kindred.

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Environmental Studies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces students to the field of environmental studies and to some of the scientific, historical, political, economic and cultural aspects of environmental concerns. Through interdisciplinary lenses, we explore the complexities of many issues and problems such as climate change, threats to biodiversity, and toxic environments. In addition to fostering an understanding of their origins, the course focuses on potential solutions.

ENVST-104-01 - Environmental Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Renewable Energy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.

(Fall) Environmental Science

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Most of our society's environmental problems are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. Environmental science is a course designed to teach integrative thinking, the "scientific method," and problem solving. Lectures will be drawn from a variety of scientific fields including ecology, hydrology, chemistry, geology, and biology with an emphasis on ecosystems and biogeochemical cycles. The course will use case studies of regional environmental problems, practical hands-on problem solving, and landscape analysis. Training in field and laboratory techniques is an integral part of the course. Priority given to environmental studies majors.

Prerequisites: One 100-level lab science; one course in statistics is recommended

Instructors: J. Bubier

ENVST-210-01 - Environmental Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Political Ecology

This course will explore the historical, political, economic, social, and cultural contexts in which human-environment interactions occur. We will cover critical topics and trends in the field of political ecology, from its early manifestations to more recent expansions. Using case studies from the global south and north, we will discuss factors that shape social and environmental change across scales from the personal to the global, and we will examine the role of gender, race, class, and power in struggles over resources. Students will become familiar with the academic debates in which political ecologists are engaged, and they will apply the concepts discussed in a case of their choice.

(Fall) The Value of Nature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Through this seminar, students develop an in-depth knowledge of and articulate vocabulary for the significant and diverse ways that humans value the natural world - utilitarian, scientific, aesthetic, naturalistic, symbolic, ethical, and spiritual. We use these different typologies of human environmental values as frameworks for readings and discussion, extending our examination to historical and cultural variations in values, competing perspectives of the natural world, and other value concepts, including intrinsic and transformative value. We examine the concept of biophilia and probe the role values play in the concern over losses of biological diversity and its implications.

(Spring) Environmental Issues
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this course, we will explore the different facets of numerous environmental policy issues and review the substantive aspects, legal themes, and regulatory structure of the major federal environmental laws. The laws covered in this course include the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, and others. The course objectives are for the student to learn the basic regulatory characteristics of the major laws and to become well-versed in the current environmental issues which we will focus upon throughout the semester, such as global climate change, ocean degradation, energy resources, and biodiversity loss.

(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 267)
An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.

(Spring) Perspectives on American Environmental History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
We explore the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration, colonization, and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.

(Fall) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Response to Environmental Contaminants and Evolution: Communicating the Science to the Public

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Biological Sciences 321D)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

It is essential for scientists to communicate their findings to the public. Students will learn the basic concepts of toxicology—the study of chemical contaminants—and they will consider how toxicity is both a product and a selective force in the evolution of particular groups of organisms. They will research particular toxicants—their chemistry, physiological effects in different kinds of organisms, and the environmental and evolutionary contexts for varying susceptibilities and responses. Their findings will be the basis of articles written for online publication in the Encyclopedia of Earth, a freely available, expert-reviewed collection of articles written in non-technical language.

Prerequisites: 8 credits from any of the following departments: environmental studies, chemistry, biochemistry, biological sciences, geology; or permission of instructor

Instructors: E. Monosson

Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Wetland Ecosystem Research

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

Peatlands have sequestered vast stores of soil carbon since deglaciation, accounting for approximately one-third of the global pool of soil carbon. This seminar will focus on responses of northern wetlands to climate change. In particular, we will address three main topics: the environmental controls on interannual and seasonal variability in CO2 and CH4 gas exchanges, the responses of plant communities along hydrologic and nutrient gradients to climate variability, and the influence of atmospheric nitrogen deposition on carbon exchanges and vegetation. Group discussion of primary scientific literature, independent research, and investigation of research methods are core components.

Prerequisites: At least 8 credits of 200 or 300-level laboratory science, and permission of the instructor

Instructors: J. Bubier

(Spring) Landscape and Narrative - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Different stories or narratives—whether myth, literature, maps, or scientific theory—have been created about every region or environment on Earth as human attempts to describe and understand our connections with that place. How do braided strands of human history and natural history contribute to stories we tell of the land, and to stories we tell of ourselves in the land and of relational identity? In this reading and writing seminar we will reflect on how lifeways, homelands, and identity of an individual or a community are linked with environment or the land. We will also create written and visual narratives of our own and explore creative environmental writing in reflection and action.

(Spring) Political Economy of International Conservation - *Not offered this year/term

This course uses concepts from political ecology to study the relationship between global political economy and environmentalism. Scholars from a variety of disciplines have charted the rise of a neoliberal economic paradigm in global political economy during the past 40 years. Drawing on a range of literature, we will reflect on changing perceptions of the market in international conservation policy during this time period. We will consider the political and ecological impacts of changing ideas, and associated conservation practices, including natural resource limits to growth, sustainable development, community conservation, market-based approaches, and corporate social responsibility.

(Fall) Science and Power in Environmental Governance
This course applies concepts from political ecology to study how governance, broadly defined, works in relation to the environment. Using case studies of international environmental issues, we will explore how people make decisions about the environment in a policy realm. We will discuss the role of various agents, such as governments, scientific bodies, and nongovernmental organizations, in the decision-making process. We will reflect on who has access to decisions; how scientific data is used; how environmental ideas become powerful; and how policies are legitimated. Armed with this information, we will consider how to advocate for global environmental sustainability and social equity.

(Spring) Biogeochemistry of Northern Ecosystems - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Global climate models and recent evidence show that ecosystems in the northern latitudes are extremely sensitive to climate change. This interdisciplinary science course examines boreal, subarctic, and arctic ecosystems through the study of nutrient cycling, plant ecology, hydrology, soil processes, and biosphere-atmosphere interactions. Topics include fundamentals of biogeochemical cycling of major elements such as carbon and nitrogen at scales from the microscopic to global, sensitivity and feedbacks to climate change, and disturbance processes such as fire and permafrost degradation.
Prerequisites: at least 8 credits of 200-level lab science and permission of the instructor. Global Biogeochemistry (Chem 232) recommended.

(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 373 and Gender Studies 333)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Goodbye, Conventional Wisdom
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 100-04)
One of the hallmarks of a liberal arts education is to draw on a broad base of knowledge in order to interrogate common assumptions. No one exemplifies this critical approach better than French philosopher Michel Foucault. One of the most influential thinkers of recent times, Foucault revolutionized several academic disciplines and even questioned the very notion of a discipline itself. He did so by revealing the history and transformations of ideas now viewed as self-evident. This first-year seminar invites students to develop similar analytical skills. Following Foucault’s lead, the course pays special attention to preconceptions about government, freedom, identity, and sexuality.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 100, Critical Social Thought 100)
How do nations, groups, and individuals remember war? We explore the conflicting narratives of war that emerge at memorial sites, in museums, in film and other visual media, and in oral testimony. With an emphasis on case studies of actual national and transnational controversies arising out of competing versions of the past by the multiple participants in war, we investigate the impact of war in the last century up to the present for defining national, ethnic, gender, and racial identities; for establishing responsibility and rendering justice; and for remembering the dead. Cases focus on the remembrance of WW II and its legacies in Germany, Japan, and the U.S.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (History 101f-02)
An exploration of revolutionary terror. Centered on the Hungarian and Czech experience from the start of the Cold War, this course covers the Communist takeovers and expropriations of the late 1940s, the Yugoslav deviation, and various policies and spectacles of the Rakosi and Gottwald regimes, including the show trials. It then turns to the unraveling after Stalin's death, in which memories of terror played an important role. Assignments balance historical studies with memoir, art, fiction, and film. Emphasis lies on comparative analysis of politics high and low.

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English; Politics 151, Russian Eurasian Studies 151f(01))
Situated between the Black and Caspian Seas, and squeezed between Europe and Asia, the political and cultural landscape of the Caucasus is an intriguing reflection of over 2,000 years of imperial contestation, migration, and occupation. Tracing the fate of one Georgian family through empire, war, revolution, and independence, we explore the politics and culture of everyday life in the Caucasus. This interdisciplinary course will incorporate music, literature, history, and politics to understand the comprehensive and complex nature of change in this region, its connection with global developments, and its impact on ordinary citizens' lives over the last 200 years.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course focuses on the Italian peninsula and urban life in Florence, Naples, Rome, Milan, and Venice from the fourteenth through the early seventeenth centuries; it follows the little people (popolo minuto), artisans, and elites in their challenges to government, law, church, and society. It looks broadly at the economic, political, social, and cultural factors that gave rise to disturbing questions about traditional conceptions of temporal and cosmic order, about men and women's relationships to one another and the world about them, about wealth, guilt, the shortcomings of human nature, and the potential of the human spirit.

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: The Art and Science of Revolution in German Cultures

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political, and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic, and other units. Revolutions are deeply embedded in cultural, economic, political, and environmental structures. Some are violent, some are peaceful; some evolve out of historical processes over long periods of time; and others emerge spontaneously without warning. Still others are material in nature, such as the industrial revolution or the end of the Berlin wall. The seminar explores the causes, forms, and impact of major revolutions in German cultures from the invention of the printing press to the most recent "Wende" that led to unification. Other revolutions include the French Revolution, the German Revolution of 1848, the founding of the Weimar Republic, and the student movement in 1968.

Preamble (for topics courses): In order to explain the complexity of present-day France, this course will explore its most conflictual historical moments—feudalism, absolute monarchy, political and social revolutions. Students will learn the social and historical context of French art and architecture. While exploring the decisive periods of France's past, students will also examine the development of art and architecture, from the Middle Ages to the twentieth century, and familiarize themselves with the mentality of each period (emphasis on medieval cathedrals and Renaissance castles, Baroque and Rococo works of art, and nineteenth-century paintings). (Spring) Russian Politics: From Communism to Capitalism
Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union's success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy?

(Spring) Doubt, Dissent, and Heresy in the Age of the Inquisition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 254)
The Holy Office of the Inquisition of the Roman Catholic Church proved an effective instrument for controlling religious and political orthodoxy from the Middle Ages through the early modern era. Its range of activity spanned investigations into doctrinal purity, groups of dissenters, Jews and Muslims who converted to the Christian faith, scientific discoveries, witchcraft, cunning folk, the black arts, and popular dissent. This course examines this institution and the social, political, mental, and imaginary world it monitored to safeguard "faith and morals" in this life and access to salvation in the next.

(Spring) Topics in European Studies: Market Cultures in Western Civilization, 1600 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 207)
The history of the modern world has often been told as the history of markets and their expansion over time and place, culminating with what is often called "market society," a society in which market relations are said to shape all of our everyday lives. What does it mean to live in a market society and how have past cultures responded to the supposed intrusion of market relations? We will explore the cultural history of markets and market relations over the past several hundred years, with particular emphasis on European and North American cultures. We will also study institutional histories of markets--how they were built and organized--alongside the ways in which people thought about and responded to forms of market exchange in everyday life.

(History 255s-01)
"Our age is pre-eminently the age of great cities," wrote Robert Vaughan in 1843. Many Europeans questioned whether the greatness of cities was such a good thing, but most agreed that the history of nineteenth-century Europe could not be written without reference to them. We will examine that history from the perspective of Europe's largest cities between the mid-eighteenth and twentieth centuries. Taking greatness in its broadest sense, our readings will treat both the feats of urban transformation and the murkier histories of streets, sewers, sex, and slums. We will learn of the unruliness of cities and of their being ruled through government, social reformers, planners, and engineers.

(Spring) Topics in German Studies: Global Europe?: Immigration and Representations of Im/migrants in Film and Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 315)
The course focuses on key issues facing contemporary Europe as it attempts to integrate large im/migrant populations: such legal issues as the development of asylum, immigration, citizenship, and anti-discrimination/hate laws and such cultural issues as the meanings of integration vs. assimilation; multicultural vs. pluralistic societies; the roles of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam in the construction of European societies and cultural identities; perceptions of (Post-)Colonialism and the interceptions of gender, race, class, and nationality; and the (dis)integrative role of language. Focus on the emergence of European Union rules vs. representative national policies in Germany, France, and Great Britain.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: majors/minors in the department should simultaneously enroll in both German Studies 232 (taken for 300-level credit) and GRMST-315 or EURST-316 to receive major/minor credit, and read, write about, and discuss selected materials from EURST-316 or GRMST-315 in German.

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: "Uncommon Women" Conquer the World: Archival Memories Come to Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315, Gender Studies 333)
A gift of a voluminous scrapbook by an alumna (1909) studying German at MHC serves as the basis for this hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era when women in Europe pushed open all doors to higher education (1908), when women scientists, artists, and public leaders achieved prominence. Key questions: how did women's education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness? Research outcome: bilingual media project.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Notes: Students with interest in this topic and in global and European studies, but insufficient or no prior knowledge of German, should enroll in German Studies 330 (2 cr.) taught in English.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) European Studies Seminar: From 1001 Nights to the Nightmare of Al Quaida?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in German; German Studies 331)
What defines European or Islamic "culture" and "civilization"? Europe has dreamt of the Tales of 1001 Nights, has created "exotic" images of "Orientalism." But what about the blossoming of art and science under Islam: the Alhalmbra, Avicenna's Canon of Medicine? Recent global events have triggered an ancient European angst based on the collective memory of the Crusades and tales of the legendary assassini; the Ottomans' siege of Vienna and conquest of the Balkans. What role does the media play in the representation of Europe and Islam? Our sources: films, farwas, facts and fiction, presented by Muslim filmmakers, scholars, and religious authorities.
Notes: Language requirement in German met only if seminar is taken in conjunction with 2-credit tutorial (German Studies 332) which is taught in German.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: History and Bollywood - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; HIST 101)
This course will concentrate on the relationship between Bollywood (or the Bombay Film Industry) and history. How do Bollywood films produce the past? What historical moments are they interested in capturing? How do these images and narratives compare to those produced by historians? The purpose of this course is to introduce students to South Asian history, to challenge them to think critically about film production, and to test and strengthen their writing skills.

(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 202)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.

(Fall) Production Seminar in the Moving Image: The Personal and the Political in Documentary: Beginning Video Production
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this introductory video production course we will study and make documentaries that highlight connections between the private and the public, the local and the global, the personal and the political. We may use our own stories as a jumping off point to explore larger historical, economic, environmental, or social forces. Conversely, we might begin by looking at events on the world map and then trace a path back to our own coordinates. Through screenings, readings, and discussion, as well as video projects, students will develop their own points of view while learning the vocabulary of moving images and gaining production and postproduction technical training.
Prerequisites: Introduction to Film Studies. Application and permission of instructor. Application available through FS website.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged
Instructors: B. Mellis

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: The Seventh Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
At its earliest presentations, comparisons were drawn between the cinema and other arts (e.g., Lumière and Pre-Raphaelite painters); soon afterward, the new medium was christened the seventh. The youngest and its elders have consistently energized each other, and this course will trace key points along that circuit. Beginning on recently turned ground (Moving Pictures: American Art and Early Film and Picasso and Braque Go to the Movies) we will track movements, figures, and technologies (German Expressionism and Soviet Constructivism, Duchamp and Warhol, 16mm film and video) that have bridged the visual arts and the cinema, harvesting what grows out of such cross-fertilization.

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: What’s So Funny?: Humor and Comedy in Contemporary German Film, TV, and Song
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 223s(01))
Germans have no sense of humor, right? Yet the cultural critic Marcel Reich-Ranicki claims that, next to England, no other country demonstrates a cultural tradition as deeply steeped in humor and comedy. Who is right? Are Germans humorless robots or born with funny bones? We will challenge the notion of humor as a universal concept and examine the comic as a cultural phenomenon. Based on selections from works by Freud and others, we will explore diverse forms of the comic in a range of media: from Goethe's erotic poetry to film classics like The Blue Angel, and recent films about popular humorist successes of the 1920s such as the Comedian Harmonists, the first Boy Band.

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: The Remembrance of the Holocaust in Film - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 223)

(In German) This seminar explores the remembrance of the Holocaust as represented primarily, but not solely, in German and European films from the immediate postwar era to the present, including documentary and feature film, as well as in other forms of visual media, such as television, photographs, and art. Themes include the working through of the past, expressions of guilt, remorse and sorrow, and the relationship between art and politics as exemplified in attempts to understand the causes, motives, and consequences of the Holocaust. Films include Night and Fog, Shoah, Biebraller's List, Gehörtig, The Night Porter, Life is Beautiful, The Nasty Girl, Wannsee Conference and others.

Prerequisites: Same as GERM-223. Previous study of German

Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224).

(Fall) Film Genre: Film Genre and Gender

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Gender Studies 204f-01)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.

This course examines the development of Hollywood film genres largely in the post-studio era, particularly the Western, the Melodrama, the Science Fiction and Horror film, and film noir. We will consider the evolution of these four genres in relation to changes in the film industry and in American society, especially in relation to gender.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours, 30 minutes)

(Spring) Film Genre: The Musical Film - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.
This course explores the American musical film from its first appearance in the early 1930s in the films of Busby Berkeley to its recent revival in films such as Baz Luhrmann’s Moulin Rouge. The course also examines musical films from other national cinemas that either comment self-reflexively on the genre and its American context and/or expand common definitions of the genre.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202 or by permission of instructor

(Fall) National and Transnational Cinema: Silent Cinema - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This course is an introduction to silent cinema in the U.S. and the contexts of its reception. We will consider issues of gender, age, race, and ethnicity in the making of the cinematic audience. Contemporary forms of live entertainment, such as vaudeville, minstrelsy, burlesque, pugilism, and ethnic theatre, will be discussed in order to illuminate the broader cultural origins of American film.

(Spring) National and Transnational Cinema: Abandoned Hopes: The Russian 20th Century in Literature and Film

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 211)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries.

Some examples that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This course will survey the dramatic history of Russia in the 20th century through the prism of its cultural achievement. How did aesthetic forms -- literature and film -- reflect on the age of war, revolution, and terror, characterized by absolute power and stalwart resistance? What means of cultural expression emerged in response to the bloody and often dehumanizing diction of the Soviet period? The task of this course is both to assess the historical panorama of a decisive and difficult period and to zoom in on its especially characteristic works, including literature by Shklovsky, Babel, Bulgakov, Grossman, Kharm and Brodsky, and films by Eisenstein, Tarkovsky, and Paradjanov.

Notes: Component course for Film Studies.

(Spring) Film Authorship: Cinephilia and the Auteur--Forests and Trees - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 211)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.

In his review of Bitter Victory (1958), Jean-Luc Godard declared: "the cinema is Nicholas Ray." In his study The American Cinematic Directors and Directions 1929-1968, Andrew Sarris placed Ray just beneath the "Pantheon Directors" in a lovely named but secondary grouping he called "The Far Side of Paradise." This course will dive into this fascinating period of film criticism and cinephilia (the 1950s and 1960s). By examining the French response (Andre Bazin and Cahiers) to the American cinema (mainly of the 1940s and 1950s), and by looking at the films of directors like Ray, Howard Hawks, and Fritz Lang, we will explore the French influence on American and British critics.

(Spring) Film Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory through Film

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Gender Studies 221)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.

We will be reading a number of key feminist texts that theorize the construction of sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigm.

This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism’s prominent blind spots. We will study these shifts through the analysis of a few moving pictures, or, to put it differently: all you always wanted to know about feminism, but didn't think to ask filmmakers such as Almodóvar, Hitchcock, Jarman, Pasolini, Varda, and others.

(Spring) Film Theory: Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 275-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.

(Spring) Production Seminar: Advanced Documentary Production Workshop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Preamble (for topics courses): An advanced course in the theory and practice of film/video production as an art form. Topics for the seminar will vary from year to year.
In this class, we will take skills and insights gained in introductory production courses and develop them over the length of the semester through the creation of one short documentary project, 10 minutes long. We will explore the ethical questions and ambivalences inherent in this medium, seeking complex answers to difficult questions about representation and the often blurry lines between fiction and non-fiction. We will watch documentaries each week, films that introduce us to new ideas and information both in their content and in their form. Come with your idea; we will hit the ground running with proposal writing the first week.
Prerequisites: Beginning video production or its equivalent. Application and permission of instructor required. Application available through FS Web site.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged.

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Montage: Millimeters or Miles
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Hollis Frampton claimed that it was "from [Eisenstein's] montage that we, all of us, measure our distances, in millimeters or in miles." Frampton's "all" extends beyond those directly involved with the cinema, echoing Eisenstein who stated that he was "interested in everything besides&hellip;the cinema," and who once began an essay with this epigraph from Goethe: "In nature we never see anything isolated, but everything in connection with something else which is before it, beside it, under it, and over it." This seminar will focus on Eisenstein's films and writings, pursuing their reverberations in Hollywood (e.g., Lang, Sirk) and the avant-garde (e.g., Brakhage, Sonbert, Child).
Prerequisites: 8 credits in film studies including 201 or 202 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Enlightenment and Revolutions in Films
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(FREN 311-02)
Using contemporary films, multimedia material and texts, we will approach the ideas and events that rocked France in the eighteenth century. We will study revolutionary luminaries such as Rousseau, Voltaire, Diderot, Robespierre, Napoléon, Toussaint L'Ouverture, and will study the French revolution of 1789 and its consequences on the Haitian revolution of 1804. We will discuss each film in class, and students will give PowerPoint presentations on topics relevant to French art of the Ancient Regime and historical events of the period. Using visual documentation from artists such as Watteau, Boucher, Fragonard, Chardin, and David, students will produce an iMovie as a term paper.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: Component course in Film Studies
Instructors: N. Vaget

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Notable Novels in Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 311-01)
Focusing on late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French novels, we will explore the historical and cultural background of a decadent French aristocracy and witness the triumph of the bourgeoisie. As visual resources we will use paintings by Boucher, Fragonard, Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Manet, Degas, as well as cinematic interpretations of Laclos' Les Liaisons dangereuses, Diderot's La Religieuse, and literary works by George Sand, Stendhal, Balzac, Flaubert, Zola, and Maupassant. Literacy in technology is an integral part of this course, and students will learn to produce a digital narration in iMovie as a term project.

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350B(01))
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Rundle
Instructors: N. Vaget
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Women Experimental Filmmakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or 203
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Topics in Experimental Film: Home Movies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This course examines that strain of the American Avant-Garde that finds its raw material in the domestic and quotidian world of everyday life, which it shapes through various, often highly complex editing practices. The theoretical work for the course is centered on the notion of duration; some of the filmmakers to be considered include: Stan Brakhage, Marie Menken, Marjorie Keller, and Peggy Ahwesh.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Film Studies 201 or 202 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 331f (02))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion, a reaction to "cinema de Papa," won an aesthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry.
Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor.
Notes: Taught in French
Instructors: C. Le Gouis
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 360)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: A. Sinha

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: States of Terror: From Kaspar Hauser to 9/11 in Film and Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 325)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
Case studies in terrorism, starting with the case of the mysterious 1828 foundling Kaspar Hauser, rumored even during his lifetime to have been the prince of Baden. Surviving the terror of solitary imprisonment for 12 years, was he the victim of political terrorism at the time? The course investigates parallels and differences between Kaspar's case and the terrorism of the leftist Red Army Faction (RAF) that shook Germany as of the 1970s, as well as their relation to the trauma of 9/11 and present-day international conflict. Multidisciplinary text selection on the theme. Films range from New German Cinema (Herzog, von Trotta) to Ulrike Meinhof (2006) and Der Baader-Meinhof Komplex (2008).
Prerequisites: sr.; others by permission of instructor
Notes: Taught in German; Component course for Film Studies

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Courses in Francophone Studies: Ousmane Sembène - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 341)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
Born in 1923 in Senegal, the writer/filmmaker Ousmane Sembène is one of the rare witnesses of the three key periods of contemporary African history: the colonial period; the period of struggle for political and economic independence; and the period of effort to eliminate neocolonialism through the rehabilitation of African cultures. This course is entirely devoted to the works of Ousmane Sembène and will explore the key moments of his life, his activism in European leftist organizations, his discovery of writing, and most of all the dominant features of his film work.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: Component course for Film Studies Minor
Instructors: S. Gadjigo

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Advanced Studies in Visual Culture: Memory (of) War - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the repressive, right-wing military regime of Francisco Franco (1939-1975) have shaped contemporary thought and cultural production in Spain. Cinema in particular shows a persistent concern with war and memory. The films studied in this course raise a number of philosophical and political questions to this effect. How does the devastation of war register through the medium of film? How do censorship and propaganda condition memory, and how does the past return in a postdictatorship? What and why do people choose to remember or to forget? Films to be studied include both mainstream commercial features and experimental works, and range in genre.
Prerequisites: Spanish 221 or Spanish 240, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Global Europe?: Immigration and Representations of Im/migrants in Film and Text
- *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 315 and European Studies 316)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
The course focuses on key issues facing contemporary Europe as it attempts to integrate large im/migrant populations: such legal issues as the development of asylum, immigration, citizenship, and anti-discrimination/hate laws and such cultural issues as the meanings of integration vs. assimilation; multicultural vs. pluralistic societies; the roles of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam in the construction of European societies and cultural identities; perceptions of (Post-)Colonialism and the interceptions of gender, race, class, and nationality; and the (dis)integrative role of language. Focus on the emergence of European Union rules vs. representative national policies in Germany, France, and Great Britain.

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Queer Kinship in Asian North American Literature, and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 334s(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
This course examines alternative kinship formations in Asian North American cultural production. It will focus on the gender and sexual management of racial bodies since the nineteenth century—from the U.S. Page Law of 1875 that restricted Chinese women on the basis of their presumed sexual immorality to various forms of "racial castration" that mediate Asian masculinities. We will consider how alternative kinship arrangements and queer cultural projects expose and/or upset the narrative assumptions embedded in heteronormative scripts of nationalism.

(Spring) Topics in Film Authorship: Natural's Not in It: Pedro Almodóvar
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema's favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or Spanish 221 or permission of instructor

Notes: Weekly evening screenings. Taught in English.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.

In the 1990s GLBT liberation entered the public sphere as a major political force. Simultaneously, American academia produced and exported a new academic discipline: queer studies. As a consequence, the North American liberalational model displaced cultural and theoretical models of sexuality of other countries. We will consider some of the key U.S. texts that have consecrated queer studies as a discipline and juxtapose them with theories and cinematic texts from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, and Mexico in order to recuperate cultural models under erasure in the wake of the U.S. model's identity-focused and consumer-driven triumphalism.

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Topic: The Mind of the Traveler: Journeys, Expeditions, Tours

(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Spanish 360, Italian 361)

Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students are expected to read works and write papers in French.

Travel literature has always been a precious source for the study of culture, politics, arts and, last but not least, people. From Tacitus to Marco Polo, from Stendhal to Camilo Jose Cela, we will read and discuss authors who traveled for political, personal, and recreational reasons. We will also pay special attention to tales of emigration and immigration in the third millennium.

Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, and permission of course instructor

Notes: NOTE: To receive 300-level credit in French, students must write all papers and do appropriate course readings in French.

(Fall) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Writing and Politics: Literature as Social Engagement

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon—an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode—relevant to the civilizations of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.

Study of French and Francophone writers, filmmakers, and artists, in their specific contexts, whose works engage with important political and social issues of their time and place. Preliminary readings theorize how texts can communicate, explicitly or implicitly, an ideological stance. We will then consider imaginative works, from the Middle Ages to the present, whose thematic, narrative, cinematic, stylistic, or linguistic techniques connect with movements for social or cultural change.

Prerequisites: 12 credits including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and course instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

(Spring) Courses on Women and Gender: Disease, Destruction, and Death: The Figure of the Femme Fatale in French Narrative Fiction

(Gender Studies 333)

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses explore cultural, literary, and social issues relating to women and gender identities in France and French-speaking countries. Topics may include women’s writing, writing about women and men, the status of women, feminist criticism, and theories of sexuality and sexual difference.

An examination of vivid literary incarnations of the femme fatale, female characters eerily and inextricably linked to untimely, unseemly, or tragic death. Characters fall roughly into two categories: women who directly or indirectly bring about someone else’s death; or women who serve as scapegoats, whose symbolically sacrificial death, at the conclusion of the novel, allows the other characters to continue their own lives. We will discuss these works as expressions of misogyny and fear of female sexuality while also attempting to reach broader conclusions about the implications of both individual texts and the femme fatale novel as a sub-genre.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

(Fall) Advanced Level Seminar: The Detective Novel in France
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies. Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
The French detective novel found its origins in Poe and in the disillusionment and malaise of the increasingly urban universe of the nineteenth century. It generally centered on a dark, mysterious Parisian atmosphere that spoke to a growing public awareness of the worlds of crime and of the police. Realist novelists, in particular Dostoevsky, enriched the genre's conventions, but the detective novel evolved beyond realism as it moved into the twentieth century, combining unsettling social critique with reassuringly flawless reasoning.

(Spring) Advanced Level Seminar: Proust: À la Recherche du temps perdu
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies. Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
À la Recherche du temps perdu is the greatest literary masterpiece of the twentieth century and is both rooted in a specific past and universal in its analysis of human intellect and emotion. We will concentrate on themes of love and desire in three relationships: Swann's adoration of Odette; the narrator's fixation on Albertine; and the Baron de Charlus's homosexual passions. Assignments will include most of Du Côté de chez Swann, Nostalgie et Gomorrhe, and La Temps retrouvé; excerpts from the other four novels; selections from important criticism; and film. Analysis of construction of the entire work will facilitate reading unassigned sections for ambitious Proustians.
Prerequisites: 12 credits including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes).

Gender Studies

GNDST-101-01 - Gender Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to Gender Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This course introduces students to social, cultural, historical, and political perspectives on gender and its construction, with particular attention to performance as a method of analysis. Through discussion, writing, and somatic exercises, we explore the intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in multiple contexts. Taking an interdisciplinary approach, we consider the distinctions between sex and gender, the relationship between individual identity and state power, the making of masculinity and femininity, queer movements, racism, and the possibilities for social change. We also examine the promises and challenges of feminism as a theoretical and activist frame.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Gender and Power in the History of Mount Holyoke College
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; History 101f-04)
Mary Lyon, founder in 1837 of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, held out to her students the possibility that they might transform the world—a tall order for young women who were excluded from proper citizenship and political power. To Lyon, duty, discipline, and community would make it possible. What transformations ensued? And what can we learn from them about the complexities of gender and power? This course will introduce students to the craft of historical research through the richness of the College Archives. Special attention will be paid to the College's missionary past, its role in labor research and activism, and the place of racism and antiracism in its history.

(Spring) Methods and Practices in Feminist Scholarship
How do scholars produce knowledge? What can we learn from differences and similarities in the research process of a novelist, a biologist, an historian, a sociologist, and a film critic? Who decides what counts as knowledge? We will examine a range of methods from the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, including visual analysis, archival exploration, interviewing, and ethnography, as we consider the specific advantages (and potential limitations) of diverse disciplinary approaches for feminist inquiry. We will take up numerous practical questions as well as larger methodological and ethical debates. This course provides a foundation for advanced work in the major.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers
(English 270)
In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winnemucca.

(English 239)
Eighteenth-century England witnessed the birth of the novel, a genre that in its formative years was both lauded for its originality and condemned as intellectually and morally dangerous, especially for young women. We will trace the numerous prose genres that influenced early novelists, including conduct manuals, epistolary writing, conversion narratives, travelogues, romance, and the gothic. In doing so, we will concurrently examine the novel's immense formal experimentation alongside debates about developing notions of gender and class as well as the feeling, thinking individual. Authors may include Richardson, Fielding, Sterne, Walpole, Barney, and others.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Women Writing in India
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; ASIAN 220s)
Critical study of women's writing in India, in genres ranging from classical and medieval poems, tales and songs (e.g., Tirumandiram) to novels, plays, and personal narratives by modern women writers (e.g., Rolkey Hossain's Sujata's Dream, Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things), in translation from Indian languages and in the original English. We will focus on women's perspectives and voices, women's agency, and resistance to dominant discourses. Attention is paid to historical contexts, the socioreligious constructions of women and gender, and the role of ideologies such as colonialism and nationalism in the production and reception of women's writing.

(Taught in English; Asian Studies 215)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

As an extreme, but common experience, war creates, shapes, and contests normative constructions of masculinity, femininity, and gender relations in general. This seminar explores the concept of war, its causes, and its representation in memoirs, fiction, art, and photography within German-speaking realms with an emphasis on World War II and its aftermath. What impact does war have on gender relations within a matrix of other categories of identity, such as race, class, and sexuality? Materials include texts by Bachmann, Brecht, Celan, and other German writers and films such as Triumph of the Will and Das Boot.

(History 275)
Introduction to major themes in U.S. history through the lens of women's history. Located both near the centers of power in American society and at its margins, the history of women as a social group is one of conflict and diversity. While women do not make up a coherent group, all share the unique experience of being "women" in class, racial, and religiously specific ways. Themes include Native American and Hispanic women during European contact and settlement; the impact of the American Revolution; benevolent women and the "fallen" women they hoped to help; enslaved women and the plantation mistress; women in the multicultural west; women's involvement in the Civil War and Reconstruction.

(History 296s-02)

This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories, and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional fourth hour discussions.

(Religion 241)
This course explores women and Buddhism during different historical periods and in different cultures. Through a variety of sources, this course will illuminate Buddhist concepts of gender and sexuality, views of women's spiritual capacities, the diversity of women's images, roles, experiences, concerns, and contributions in Buddhist societies, and scholarly approaches to women in Buddhism. Special attention will be given to how gender is constructed in each cultural and religious context encountered, with particular emphasis on Buddhist women in Southeast Asia. We will look into the reasons why texts on religion have not always included the voices of women, and we will investigate ways to uncover them through research techniques and alternative hermeneutical strategies.

In the last 30 years, Latin America has seen the emergence of a large array of social movements that have shaped the political and economic processes in the region. From human rights to peasants' movements, from indigenous to unemployed movements, women have been increasingly involved in political activism. What has been the role of women in these movements? How have traditional women's roles been at the same time useful and an obstacle to their activism? How have women influenced the repertoires, frames, identities and strategies of these movements? We will answer these questions through the exploration of case studies in the region using academic readings, testimonies, and documentaries.

(Writing-intensive; Politics 271)
This course will explore the relationship between feminism and capitalism in a contemporary context, particularly the ways in which they reinforce and contradict each other. Examining this question through Marxist, liberal, post-structuralist, and post-colonial feminist theory, and the recent history of feminist and anti-capitalist movements, we will consider the economic and political underpinnings of feminist thinking and practice. Do certain feminisms carry implicit anti-capitalist commitments? To what extent are particular feminisms, especially liberal feminism, reliant upon capitalist structures and processes? What stakes might feminists have in preserving or uprooting capitalism?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350b(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course coincides with MHC's yearlong celebration of renowned American playwright Wendy Wasserstein '71. Readings include Wasserstein's complete works, Julie Salamon's new biography Wendy and the Last Boys, and critical essays that place Wasserstein in the context of feminist theatre practice. Students will have the opportunity to conduct archival research using the Wasserstein Papers, and will participate in numerous campus events, including the Weissman Center's playwriting symposium and guest lectures by visiting scholars and artists. As dramaturgs for the department's production of Uncommon Women, the class will create a substantial program honoring Wasserstein and her legacy.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 301)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

In this seminar, we will study the history of sexuality, desire, and bodies. The premise of this interdisciplinary seminar is that sexuality is both historically constructed (fluid and changing over time and culture) and embodied and lived (experienced for many as essential and unchanging). We will study experts who set out terms and frameworks for understanding modern sexuality; how in different ways and in different times communities of sexual minorities strategically used selected elements of expert discourse to forge their own narratives of self and desire. Students will examine sexual classifications—mainstream and "normal" or subcultural and "deviant"—as mutually constructed.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women’s supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieus of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course will examine narrative non-fiction biographies written by women biographers in order to determine the specific ways in which women tell the stories of other women's lives. We will investigate stylistic and theoretical approaches to writing biographies in which gender is a central focus. We will ask if "feminist biography" constitutes a literary genre. We will experience the challenges (and thrills) of conducting archival and primary research. The course will culminate in students writing chapter-length biographies.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315, European Studies 315)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

A gift of a voluminous scrapbook by an alumna (1909) studying German at MHC serves as the basis for this hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era when women in Europe pushed open all doors to higher education (1908); when women scientists, artists, and public leaders achieved prominence. Key question: how did women's education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness? Research outcome: bilingual media project.

Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201; required online application, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

Notes: Taught in German. Students with interest in this topic and in global and European studies, but insufficient or no prior knowledge of German, should enroll in German Studies 330 (2 cr.) taught in English.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Disease, Destruction, and Death: The Figure of the Femme Fatale in French Narrative Fiction

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

(French 351s)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

(Taught in French) An examination of vivid literary incarnations of the femme fatale, female characters eerily and inextricably linked to untimely, unseemly, or tragic death. Characters fall roughly into two categories: women who directly or indirectly bring about someone else's death; or women who serve as scapegoats, whose symbolically sacrificial death, at the conclusion of the novel, allows the other characters to continue their own lives. We will discuss these works as expressions of misogyny and fear of female sexuality while also attempting to reach broader conclusions about the implications of both individual texts and the femme fatale novel as a sub-genre.

(Politics 328)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course is designed to engage students in central questions of liberalism, as well as critical responses to it. We will explore the development of liberal thinking, drawing from classic seventeenth-century texts as well as contemporary works. Together we will consider concepts such as rights, individualism, choice, and equality, with particular attention to liberal feminism and feminist critiques of liberalism.

(Latin American Studies 387s(01), Spanish 330s(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriqueñas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centrosamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

English 323f
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course will explore the project of Realism in the Victorian novel, watching tensions between a desire for guidance and a desire for mimesis. One critic has said the Victorians brought a sense of social duty to Romantic world-awareness, creating a "duty of awareness" that was almost overwhelming for the novelist and novel. We will explore this "duty of awareness" as we investigate representations of gender, class, and feeling as structuring principles in the novel. Novelists may include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Sexual Selection and Sexual Conflict in Animals: Theory, Research, and Feminist Critique
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Biological Sciences 321(B))

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

Sexual selection theory explains how selection on traits that allow individuals to attract potential mates or defeat potential rivals can lead to the evolution of sexual dimorphism. Sexual conflict theory investigates how the conflicting interests of males and females in mating interactions can result in the co-evolution of traits for manipulation and resistance. Feminist critics point out how these theories reflect and in turn propagate stereotypes about human behavior. This course explores classic and current biological literature on sexual selection and sexual conflict alongside feminist critiques of the language use, the assumptions, and the interpretation of research in these fields.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Theologies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 323f)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women's Autobiographical Narrative in French - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself. Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women Writers: Early Feminisms - Not offered this year/term

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 330f-01)

This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erauso, and María de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.

(Speaking-intensive; English 377s-01)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This seminar will explore innovations in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century women's verse. By investigating experiments with narrative, genre, stanza form, meter, and figurative language, we will contemplate what political, social, and ideological problems women writers attempted to present and perhaps solve through linguistic creativity. Larger questions include how to define "feminist poetics" and what potential such a project might afford poets and thinkers today. To this end, we will read selections of poetry in conversation with contemporary feminist theory as well as representations of women's incantation, prophecy, and singing by male poets and novelists of the day.

This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

(Fall) Mapping and Spatial Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides a comprehensive introduction to maps, including their design, compilation, and computer production. Introduces students to the principles of abstracting the Earth's surface into spatial databases using GIS, remote sensing, and Global Positioning Satellites.
Instructors: C. Kelley
Expected enrollment: 12

GEOG-206-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Political Geography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Systematically studies political phenomena and their geographic expression, at a variety of spatial scales - national, regional, and international. Major themes include nation-state formation, boundary, territory, and ethnic issues, regional blocs and spheres of influence, and conflicts over access to and use of resources.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 50

GEOG-214-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Geography of South Asia - *Not offered this year/term
The region is studied in terms of its physical, cultural, and political geography. Emphasis is given to the numerous ways in which the peoples of South Asia have adapted to and utilized their local environments, the reasons for varying patterns of population growth throughout the region, and the environmental impact of economic development programs.

Instructors: G. Kebbede

GEOG-215-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Geography of the Middle East and North Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course, the Middle East and North Africa are studied in terms of their physical, cultural, economic, and political geography. Emphasis is placed on the environmental conditions and ecological evolution, population and demographic characteristics, the resource base and major problems in the social, political, and economic transformation of the region.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-217-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) The African Environments
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The course provides an integrated analysis of biogeography, environmental change, and hydrology within each of the biomes found in the African continent: forest, savanna, desert, coast, wetland, mountain, and Mediterranean environments. It also discusses the impact and significance of human activity on African environments by exploring debates about soil erosion, desertification, biodiversity and depletion, and conservation and development.
Notes: 1 meeting (3-hr)
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-224-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Atmosphere and Weather - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In this course we will learn weather forecasting skills. This will involve examining weather observations, satellite and radar images, surface and upper-air weather charts, and predictions made by computer models. We will have an opportunity to learn atmospheric dynamics and gain an understanding of the Earth's radiation budget. Topics will include severe storms, hurricanes, and winter weather.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level natural science course
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOG-295-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement
Prerequisites: soph and permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

GEOG-295-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Independent Study

GEOG-304-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Regional Planning - Special Topics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the post 2nd World War transition of US urban communities to suburban communities. The first part of the semester will survey urban design and planning efforts from the early 1900s through the 1940s and the abrupt change in focus during the post war suburban sprawl period. The second half of the semester will focus upon future urban and suburban development paradigms in the absence of cheap energy and a weakening economy.
Prerequisites: Any 200-level geography course
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: T. Millette
GEOG-307-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Remote Sensing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course presents the fundamentals of digital analysis of aerial and satellite imagery. Students are introduced to the characteristics of Earth images and learn to make qualitative and quantitative assessments of multi-spectral aerial and satellite data. This class includes a term-long collaborative project to map forest and land cover in Western Massachusetts.
Prerequisites: Geography 205
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOG-311-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminars: Global Movement: Migrations, Refugees, and Diasporas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
The voluntary and involuntary movement of people around the globe is the core focus of this course on migrations, refugees, and diasporas. Questions of borders, nativism, transnationalism, the global economy, and legality thread through this seminar as we consider the many social, cultural, environmental, economic, and political factors shaping decisions to leave a home or homeland. Historical and contemporary case studies, compelling theoretical texts, and geographic perspectives on these topics collectively animate our discussions.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., 4 credits in department and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200 level or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Houston
Expected enrollment: 12

GEOG-312-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminars: Sense of Place, Sense of Planet
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
The complex intersections of local and global processes underpin this exploration of a sense of place and an extended sense of planet. Specifically, we examine human-environment relations at various geographic scales and consider themes such as emotional connections to place, exclusions and displacement, social movements, and sustainability. Several theoretical perspectives, in-class and out-of-class exercises, and thematic readings will further situate us both within South Hadley and the global context.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, soph with permission of instructor; 4 credits in department and four 200-level related social science credits
Instructors: S. Houston
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOG-313-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Fall) Third World Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Offers an interdisciplinary perspective on social, economic, and political features of contemporary development in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, regions referred to as the Third World or the South, and provides an introduction to theoretical origins and definitions of economic growth, development, and underdevelopment. It then addresses more specific aspects of development such as trends in population growth, migration, and urbanization; agrarian change; livelihood strategies and aspects of social welfare such as health, education, and shelter; poverty and the environment; and external economic relationships. The latter part of the course draws extensively on selected case studies.
Prerequisites: Prereq. jr., sr., soph with permission of instructor; 4 credits in department and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200 level or permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-319-01 - Geography - 2011-2012
(Spring) Africa: Problems and Prospects
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This course intends to offer an interdisciplinary perspective on selected contemporary development problems in Africa south of the Sahara. Central to the course will be an examination of the social, economic, and political consequences of colonialism, the physical resource base and ecological crisis, agrarian systems and rural development, gender relations and development, urbanization and industrialization, and the problems and prospects of regional cooperation and integration.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, soph with permission of instructor; 4 credits in department and 4 credits at the 200 level in geography or related social science.
In this course, students will learn basic and intermediate GIS skills and apply them to study natural hazards. Data from various sources are combined to create a spatial databases from which spatial models will be used to help in the study of different aspects of natural disaster management.

Prerequisites: Geography 205 or permission of instructor

Instructors: T. Millette

Expected enrollment: 10

GEOG-395-01 - Geography - 2011-2012

Geology

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Physical Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From earthquakes to landscapes, deserts to glaciers, landslides to limestone, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Learn to interpret the geology of your surroundings when traveling to new places and understand how geologic setting influences how people live. Lectures focus on exploring and explaining geological features and processes using concept sketches. Labs focus on mineral and rock identification, map reading, and local field trips.
Notes: Preference given to first- and second-year students during the first week of registration. Juniors and Seniors should check ISIS after that for availability.
Instructors: M. Markley
Section Instructors: 01 LAB P Taylor | 02 LAB P Taylor | 03 LAB P Taylor | 04 LAB P Taylor |
Expected enrollment: 60

GEOL-101-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Environmental Geology with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment. The labs covers selected geologic topics including methods for recognizing and interpreting environmental hazards, and developing strategies to address environmental problems.
Prerequisites: 4 credits, 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours), field trips.
Notes: Preference given to first- and second-year students with 25 spaces held for first-year students. Junior and seniors should register at the academic fair on a first-come, first-served basis. The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for GEOL 107.
Instructors: S. Dunn
Expected enrollment: 72

GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) History of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Life forms have inhabited the surface of our planet for most of its history. Earth, as a result, has a unique geology that is unlike that of any other planet. In this course we will examine the interrelations between life processes and Earth’s crust and atmosphere and how they work together to create the geology of the planet. Using both the rock and fossil record, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips will emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

Instructors: M. McMenamin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-103-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Because more than seventy percent of our planet is covered by oceans, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. We will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to affect weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to resources.
Instructors: A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 75

GEOL-107-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Environmental Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet at the same time it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for GEOL 101, but this course does not include a lab.
Instructors: S. Dunn

GEOL-111-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Dynamic Earth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
The earth is a dynamic planet, creating oceans and mountain ranges, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. This course explores the scientific revolution of plate tectonics, which provides a comprehensive theory explaining how and why volcanoes and earthquakes occur. Our emphasis will be on recent earthquake and volcanic events, including their hazards and impact on humans. We will consider recent tsunamis in Sumatra and Japan; recent eruptions of Mount St. Helens, Pinatubo, and Kilauea; as well as momentous events from the past, such as the San Francisco earthquake of 1906 and the 79 A.D. eruption of Vesuvius that destroyed Pompeii.
Instructors: M. Rhodes

GEOL-115-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Diamonds
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Are diamonds a girl's best friend? This course explores the geology of diamond deposits, the cultural and economic complexity of diamonds and diamond mining, the physical properties of diamond, and industrial uses of synthetic diamonds. Students will lead and participate in class discussions, complete assignments in groups, make oral arguments about difficult and complicated topics, and write short papers.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-115-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Emergence of Animals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The origin of animals was one of the most important events in the history of earth. In this course we will review the history of the planet, learn basic geology, and then examine the problem of the origin of animals by studying Mount Holyoke's unequaled collection of Precambrian and Cambrian fossils. The emergence of animals has been called the Cambrian Explosion. We will examine what this means for our understanding of evolutionary theory.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 20
GEOL-201-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Rocks and Minerals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course you will learn to recognize the common rock-forming minerals and principal rock types, and to understand their origins, properties, associations, and geological significance. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on field trips.
Prerequisites: a one-year high school earth science class or any 100- or 200-level geology course or Geography 107
Instructors: S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Dunn |
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-203-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Surface Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The surface of the Earth is a history book of past environmental change. Every hill and valley, every erosional feature, every deposit is the result of processes acting at the Earth's surface. In this course we study these processes (e.g., glaciers, rivers, slopes, coastlines, windblown sand, frozen ground, cave formation, soil development) to better understand how they work and to understand the resulting landforms and deposits. With this understanding we can then observe different landforms and deposits and infer past process (environments of deposition). Fieldwork and trips allow students to explore firsthand the processes that have created and modified the Earth's surface.
Prerequisites: Geology 100 or 101
Instructors: A. Werner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Werner |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-210-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Plate Tectonics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Plate tectonic theory explains the origins of volcanoes and earthquakes, continental drift, and the locations of mountain belts and oceans. This course focuses on the geometry of plate tectonics. Topics include mid-ocean ridge systems, transform faults, subduction zones, relative plate motion, earthquake analysis, triple point junctions, and stereographic projection. Work includes individual research projects on active plate boundaries.
Notes: Comfort with geometry and trigonometry suggested.
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOL-224-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Paleontology-Stratigraphy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides an intensive study of fossils, fossil preservation, depositional environments, sediments, sedimentary rocks, and the processes of sedimentation. We will employ the principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation to interpret ancient environments and paleoclimate, reconstruct paleogeography, and probe the characteristics of sedimentary basins. Laboratory exercises and field trips will introduce a variety of analytical techniques used to study sedimentary rocks.
Prerequisites: one course in geology at the 100 or 200 level or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M McMenamin |
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-227-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Groundwater - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major environmental concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we will cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students prepare weekly problem sets, labs, a term paper, and an oral presentation.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level geology course
Instructors: A. Werner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Werner |
Expected enrollment: 11

GEOL-295-01 - Geology - 2011-2012

GEOL-322-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Igneous and Metamorphic Petrology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Studies mineralogical and chemical compositions, classification, genesis, and mode of occurrence of igneous and metamorphic rocks. Special attention paid to the relationships between rock-forming processes and global plate tectonics. Laboratory study of representative rock suites in hand specimen and thin section, introduction to analytical techniques, including mineral optics, and one or more field trips.
Prerequisites: Geology 201 or Permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Dunn |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-326-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar: Global Change
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The Earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change and the prospects of a warmer world.
Prerequisites: 1 200-level geology course or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 14

GEOL-333-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology and structural analysis: field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock strength, deformation mechanisms, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Most labs are field trips that involve data collection. Weekly writing assignments focus on presenting original research and distinguishing between observations and interpretations. During the final weeks of the semester, oral presentations and a final paper emphasize fluency in the published literature of structural geology.
Prerequisites: Geology 201
Instructors: M. Markley
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Markley |
Expected enrollment: 15

*(Spring) History of the Earth - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the evolution and interaction of life, rocks, oceans, and air during the past 4 billion years of earth history. Some topics covered are: ice ages and greenhouse atmospheres, continental drift, extinctions and radiations of flora and fauna, the early evolution of earth, absolute and relative dating of rocks, and the geologic time scale. Labs teach geologic map interpretation and simple computer modeling of earth systems. Oral presentations and writing assignments focus on proposal writing, the design and testing of earth science hypotheses, and critical analysis of recently published research on earth history.
Prerequisites: Geology 201, or Geology 203, or Geology 224 (can be taken concurrently with the permission of Instructor), or Biology 223, or Biology 226

Instructors: M. Markley

GEOL-341-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminars: Water Resources Evaluation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year. The hill town of Shutesbury, Massachusetts, is concerned about its water resources. Simply put, the town needs to know if there are limitations regarding water supply or water quality that should influence decisions of development and zoning. This lab and field based course will collect samples and gather (from existing town records) data in order to provide a better understanding of the hydrologic conditions in the town. Weekly meetings will involve field sampling and laboratory analysis of water samples and the mapping of soil and bedrock hydrologic properties. Each student will pursue her own research project and present her results in a final report.
Prerequisites: Geology 203 or Geology 227 or Environmental Studies 200 and permission of instructor.
Instructors: A. Werner

Expected enrollment: 10

GEOL-342-01 - Geology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Death Valley Field Course
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year. Consult the department for information about future seminars.
This seminar will cover selected topics on the geology of Death Valley region, California. We will meet for two hours per week up until spring break, then embark on a nine-day field trip to Death Valley National Park, March 16-24, 2012. A participation fee is required. Students will be responsible for researching particular topics and presenting a final report.
Prerequisites: two geology courses and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) and nine-day field trip (Friday, March 16 to Saturday, March 24); enrollment limited
Instructors: M. Markley, M. McMenamin

GRMST-100-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: War and Memory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Critical Social Thought 100, European Studies 100)
How do nations, groups, and individuals remember war? We explore the conflicting narratives of war that emerge at memorial sites, in museums, in film and other visual media, and in oral testimony. With an emphasis on case studies of actual national and transnational controversies arising out of competing versions of the past by the multiple participants in war, we investigate the impact of war in the last century up to the present for defining national, ethnic, gender, and racial identities; for establishing responsibility and rendering justice; and for remembering the dead. Cases focus on the remembrance of WW II and its legacies in Germany, Japan, and the U.S.

GRMST-103-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Intensive Elementary German
Credits/PE Units: 8; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement.
Two semesters in one. Practice in speaking, reading, and writing German. Cultural and literary readings together with frequent use of Internet resources dealing with everyday situations and experiences in the German-speaking countries sensitize students to the cultural context in which the language is used. Online grammar and listening comprehension exercises, as well as weekly conversation sessions with peer assistant from Germany supplement class work.
Notes: 4 meetings (75 minutes) plus required conversation session (50 minutes)
Instructors: A. Holden
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-201-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Intermediate German
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course emphasizes the development of German reading, writing, and speaking skills by focusing on contextualized grammatical features. Combining content and language knowledge, we look at a variety of texts and genres. The completion of various task-sheets and specific instructions on speaking and writing assignments will complement the work with the texts.
Prerequisites: Combined: 101 & 102 or 103
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes), mandatory conversation session (50 minutes)
Instructors: M. Lauer
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Creation and Production of a German Play - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Students write and stage an original play in German. Students develop proficiency in the language through reading and acting out several scenes from a variety of German plays. In addition, students will discuss theoretical writings on the theatre as well as recorded play performances (movies) of the plays discussed in class. Students will perform a play at the annual LRC Language Theatre Contest and the annual German Theatre Festival and Competition hosted each spring by Mount Holyoke College.
Prerequisites: Open to students who have completed an intermediate-level German course, or per permission of department chair.
Instructors: M. Lauer
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-220-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) German Culture Today: Stories and Histories
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines historical, cultural, and political developments that continue to frame debates surrounding the twentieth century, WWII, the former GDR, and German unification. Thematic focus helps students develop accuracy, fluency, and complexity of expression. Reading, writing, and speaking are consistently integrated. Special emphasis placed on text organization toward expanding students' language abilities, with a gradual movement from personal forms of expression to written and public discourses.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students in 220 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 221).
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: The Art and Science of Revolution in German Cultures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; European Studies 223f-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units. Revolutions are deeply embedded in cultural, economic, political, and environmental structures. Some are violent, some are peaceful; some evolve out of historical processes over long periods of time; and others emerge spontaneously without warning. Still others are material in nature, such as the industrial revolution or the end of the Berlin wall. The seminar explores the causes, forms, and impact of major revolutions in German cultures from the invention of the printing press to the most recent "Wende," that led to unification. Other revolutions include the French Revolution, the German Revolution of 1848, the founding of the Weimar Republic, and the student movement in 1968.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224).
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-223-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in German Studies: What's So Funny? Humor and Comedy in German Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 220w(04))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units. Germans have no sense of humor, right? Yet the cultural critic Marcel Reich-Ranicki claims that, next to England, no other country demonstrates a cultural tradition as deeply steeped in humor and comedy. Who is right? Are Germans humorless robots or born with funny bones? We will challenge the notion of humor as a universal concept and examine the comic as a cultural phenomenon. Based on selections from works by Freud and others, we will explore diverse forms of the comic in a range of media: from Goethe's erotic poetry to film classics like The Blue Angel, and recent films about popular humorist successes of the 1920s such as the Comedian Harmonists, the first Boy Band.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224). The 224 tutorial will stress current forms of humor, comedy, and satire in film and popular media.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) Tutorial in German Culture: Writing Workshop: What's So Funny?: Humor and Comedy in Contemporary German Film, TV, and Song
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Focus on the discussion and analysis of films and other media and DVD-based interactive cultural historical materials and on topics of interest to students. Emphasis on developing oral presentations for both German and U.S. academic audiences. Students in 223 are expected to enroll in this complementary, yet self-standing, two-credit tutorial, i.e., German Studies 224. Students not enrolled in 223 may also participate in 224.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-231-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in German and European Studies within a Global Context: War: What is it Good For?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English)
A multidisciplinary examination of the various ways humans have understood, represented, experienced, and justified war over time and across cultures. The course considers the representation of war through art, literature, and music with particular emphasis on European, American and Asian contexts. It analyzes possible causes of war, including innate human drives, gender differences, socialization, and economic resource competition. In addition, it examines justifications for war from a range of ethical, national, and cultural perspectives. Contributing faculty include: V. Ferraro, O. Frau, L. Glasser, S. Hashmi, R. Schwartz, and J. Western.
Prerequisites: so, jr or permission of instructor
Notes: gateway course for thematic minor on War and Society (2009-2012).
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-232-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) German Tutorial: War and Memory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on developing discussion and reading skills in German, and revising and editing papers written in German for German studies courses taught in English.
How do nations, groups, and individuals remember war? We explore the conflicting narratives of war that emerge at memorial sites, in museums, in film and other visual media, and in oral testimony. With an emphasis on case studies of actual national and transnational controversies arising out of competing versions of the past by the multiple participants in war, we investigate the impact of war in the last century up to the present for defining national, ethnic, gender, and racial identities; for establishing responsibility and rendering justice; and for remembering the dead. Cases focus on the remembrance of WW II and its legacies in Germany, Japan, and the U.S.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: To receive credit for GRMST 100 (taught in English) toward a minimum major or minor in German Studies, students also have to complete GRMST 232-01 (taught in German).
Instructors: K. Remmler

(Spring) Advanced Studies in German Language and Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Familiarizes students with oral and written discourses in all modalities, especially reading, writing, and speaking. Students focus on in-depth analyses of writing and speaking patterns in current newspaper and magazine articles. Thematic foci include the role of Germany's past in contemporary German society, Germany's responsibilities and political agenda within the European Union, and Germany's political and economic ties to Asia. Material based on most recent articles and news reports. Frequent text-oriented exercises emphasize students' individual progress in light of different language and learner profiles and therefore different student needs.
Prerequisites: Open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Instructors: M. Lauer
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: "Uncommon Women" Conquer the World: Archival Memories Come to Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; European Studies 315, Gender Studies 333f(01))
A gift of a voluminous scrapbook by an alumna (1912) studying German at MHC serves as the basis for this hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era when women in Europe pushed open all doors to higher education (1908), when women scientists, artists, and public leaders achieved prominence. Key question: how did women's education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness? Research outcome: bilingual media project.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Notes: Students with interest in this topic and in global and European studies, but insufficient or no prior knowledge of German, should enroll in German Studies 330 (2-4 cr.) taught in English.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-325-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Senior Seminar: Topographies of Berlin: Case Studies in the Meaning of Space, Place, and Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore the nature of our field of inquiry in theory and practice. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization"? Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.

Post-Unification Berlin provides a testing ground for seeing how space shapes identity. Historic sites within the built environment of contemporary Berlin, whether markers of historical upheaval and reconciliation, or of the transformation of the periphery into productive sites of commerce and cultural exchange, serve as a point of departure to explore the emergence of multidimensional identities in today's Europe. We explore the history, design, function, construction, and, in some cases, destruction, of major historical sites in Berlin, such as the Berlin Wall, the Reichstag, the Museum Island, the Holocaust Memorial, and others through case studies, archival research, and visual media.

Prerequisites: sr or permission of instructor
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-330-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Fall) Special Topics in German Taught in English (Colloquium): "Uncommon Women" Conquer the World: Archival Memories Come to Life
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Taught in English; European Studies 315, Gender Studies 333(f))

Preamble (for topics courses): German Studies 330 colloquia in English parallel 300-level courses taught in German. They focus on making topics of extensive cross-disciplinary interest accessible to students majoring in diverse fields of study, and aim to facilitate intellectual discourse among speakers of German and students who do not speak German.

In this course, students participate in researching and preparing the English parts of the bilingual media project for German 315, a hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. 315/330 mainly draw on resources in the MHC Archives, especially a detailed scrapbook donated by a 1909 MHC alumna who studied German at MHC. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era for women throughout the world. Key question: how did women's education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness?

Notes: For GRMST 330, no knowledge of German is necessary. Students who wish to pursue research papers in English in conjunction with 330 may consult with the instructor and sign up for GRMST (or EURST or FLMST) 395 credits in addition to 330.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis

GRMST-331-01 - German Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Europe and Islam: From 1001 Nights to the Nightmare of Al Quaida?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking: and writing-intensive; Taught in English; European Studies 316)

What defines European or Islamic "culture" and "civilization"? Europe has dreamt of the Tales of 1001 Nights, has created "exotic" images of "Orientalism." But what about the blossoming of art and science under Islam: the Alhambra, Avicenna's Canon of Medicine? Recent global events have triggered an ancient European angst based on the collective memory of the Crusades and tales of the legendary assassin; the Ottomans' siege of Vienna and conquest of the Balkans. What role does the media play in the representation of Europe and Islam? Our sources: films, fatwas, facts and fiction, presented by Muslim filmmakers, scholars, and religious authorities.

Notes: Note: language requirement in German met only if seminar is taken in conjunction with 2-credit tutorial (German Studies 332) taught in German. For credit toward minimum major or minor in German Studies, students must also complete the 2-credit German Studies 332 tutorial, in German, this semester.
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis

(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies within a Global Context: Deutschland, Europe and der Islam/ismus
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on developing argumentation and reading skills in German, and researching, revising and editing seminar papers written in German for German studies seminars taught in English.

With Islam constituting the third largest religious affiliation in Europe today, a vociferous debate has arisen concerning the integration of large groups of immigrants from diverse Muslim cultures and countries, women's rights according to the Q'ran and Sharia law interpretations, and the relations between religious Islam and political extremist Islamism. This tutorial, taught in German, focuses on the debate in German's and investigates the economic, social, and political subtexts of media representations of Muslim women and men, especially their depictions of Islamist and violent youth cultures.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Taught in German. This course alone cannot satisfy the FLR requirement, nor the Humanities 1A nor Multicultural requirements, nor count towards the major or minor in German Studies. To satisfy requirements, you must enroll in this course AND either German Studies 331 or European Studies 316.

History

HIST-101-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Foundation: Crossing Medieval Boundaries: European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic Encounters, 1200-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Medieval Studies 101f-01)
This seminar focuses on medieval boundaries: those separating Christians, Jews, and Muslims in Europe, as well as those between men and women from the thirteenth through sixteenth centuries. The course also examines new boundaries separating--and constructing--Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Engaging closely and critically with sources from Atlantic societies of these centuries, students will investigate and debate the making and remaking of "Western culture" in an era of state formation, imperial expansion, agrarian capitalism, and chattel slavery. Readings range from Christian-Jewish disputations to indigenous writings from the Americas.
Instructors: H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 18

HIST-101-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Foundation: The Civil Rights Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; African American and African Studies 100)
We will examine the crusade for desegregation both within and beyond the South. Some attention will be given to the movement's Reconstruction precedents, but we will concentrate on the post-1954 period. Readings will cover how segregation was instituted; different phases of the movement; leaders, organization, and followers; the role of women and children; and post-movement history.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. J. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 15

HIST-101-02 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Foundation: Stalinist Europe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (European Studies 100f-03)
An exploration of revolutionary terror. Centered on the Hungarian and Czech experience from the start of the Cold War, this course covers the Communist takeovers and expropriations of the late 1940s, the Yugoslav deviation, and various policies and spectacles of the Rakosi and Gottwald regimes, including the show trials. It then turns to the unraveling after Stalin's death, in which memories of terror played an important role.
Assignments balance historical studies with memoir, art, fiction, and film. Emphasis lies on comparative analysis of politics high and low.

HIST-101-02 - History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Foundation: How Wars End
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
What social processes and institutions are necessary to bring an end to war? Do the efforts of citizens make a difference? What about educational structures? What is the role of visible forms of restorative or retributive justice? This first year seminar focuses primarily on small, regional conflicts in Africa, to explore the social processes and institutions which facilitate the resolution of conflict. We will begin in the late 19th century, but concentrate on more recent events. Course assignments are designed to develop skills in academic writing, historical research, and collaborative learning.

(Fall) Foundation: Chinese Diasporic Communities around the World: History, Identity, and Race
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How does a study of the Chinese diasporic communities in Southeast Asia, the U.S., and other parts of the world help us rethink concepts of "Chinese-ness"? We seek to answer the question in this introductory history seminar on the Chinese diaspora. Coverage spans from the 1500s to the present. Readings focus on the question of Chinese-ness as constructed and negotiated by different groups and individuals. Themes include imperialism, race, ethnicity, gender, nationalism, transnationalism, Orientalism, hegemony, and globalization.

HIST-101-04 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Foundation: Gender and Power in the History of Mount Holyoke College
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 117f-01)
Mary Lyon, founder in 1837 of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, held out to her students the possibility that they might transform the world--a tall order for young women who were excluded from proper citizenship and political power. To Lyon, duty, discipline, and community would make it possible. What transformations ensued? And what can we learn from them about the complexities of gender and power? This course will introduce students to the craft of historical research through the richness of the College Archives. Special attention will be paid to the College's missionary past, its role in labor research and activism, and the place of racism and antiracism in its history.

HIST-101-04 - History - 2011-2012
(Spring) Foundation: Women, Politics, and Activism in U.S. History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
How have women both used and rejected the power of the United States government to pursue their visions of a just world? This seminar examines the history of women's activism and political leadership in the United States and elsewhere under U.S. rule. African American freedwomen, white woman suffragists, Italian immigrant anarchist-feminists, Puerto Rican labor activists, builders of an international women's movement, Civil Rights leaders, advocates of gay marriage, and housewives who organized for change on the right as well as on the left are among the women whose movements and political initiatives we will study.

(Spring) Foundation: History and Bollywood - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 101)
This course will concentrate on the relationship between Bollywood (or the Bombay Film Industry) and history. How do Bollywood films produce the past? What historical moments are they interested in capturing? How do these images and narratives compare to those produced by historians? The purpose of this course is to introduce students to South Asian history, to challenge them to think critically about film production, and to test and strengthen their writing skills.

HIST-115-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Spring) The Medieval World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The course will provide an introduction to the history of the Middle East and Europe from the decline of the Roman empire through the aftermath of the Black Death. The period is best known for dividing the Mediterranean into Christian and Islamic worlds, but Europe and the Middle East were united by geography, intellectual traditions, economic trends, and, above all, the shared challenges of maintaining monotheisms in a world reluctant to conform with the standards of sacred texts. In addition to the diffusion of Christianity, Rabbinic Judaism, and Islam, we will explore parallels and divergences in the political, economic, social, and cultural histories of Europe and the Middle East.

HIST-124-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) History of Modern South Asia, 1700 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore the history of South Asia between the eighteenth century and the present. Using a combined chronological and thematic approach and against a historical canvas that engages such diverse issues as gender, political economy, conquest, resistance, state formation, economic exploitation, national liberation, and identity politics, the aim of this course is to interrogate the impact of British colonialism and South Asian nationalisms on the state, society, and people of the subcontinent. Using primary and secondary sources, we will address both the most significant historical moments of modern South Asian history and the historiographical debates that surround them.

(Fall) Ancient Greece - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Classics 127f)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.

HIST-128-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Ancient Rome
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Classics 128)
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century with the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Roman Empire and those who came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean. Topics include their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics, and the Roman family. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.

HIST-137-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Modern East Asia, 1600-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
A comparative history of China, Japan, and Korea from the early seventeenth century to the present, with strong focus on regional interaction. After an introduction to early modern histories and cultures, we will examine the struggles of these countries to preserve or regain their independence and establish their national identities in a rapidly changing, often violent modern world order. While each of these countries has its own distinctive identity, their overlapping histories (and dilemmas) give the region a coherent shape. We will also look at how individuals respond to and are shaped by larger historical movements.

(Spring) Violence and Social Change in Modern Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines processes of change that have shaped modern Africa. It seeks to provide both the information and the conceptual tools necessary for an informed interpretation of African affairs presented (and not presented) by popular media. Using fiction, historical narratives, and a wide range of interdisciplinary sources, the class examines nineteenth-century interactions of Africans and Europeans and the nature of colonial conquest, economic and social change during the colonial period, and the emergence of postcolonial African societies. Through reciprocal visits, we will also share what we are learning about Africa with the 9th grade at the Renaissance School in Springfield.

(Spring) British Empire and Commonwealth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the expansion, consolidation, and eventual disintegration of the modern British Empire in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. We will examine this history with an eye to understanding the causes of empire, and its effects. Themes include formal and informal imperialism, the emergence of anti-colonial nationalism, the roles of gender and culture, and the legacies of British colonialism. We will discuss British attitudes and policies toward empire, and toward particular colonies, what role empire played in the growth of the British economy, in short, how colonial ideologies and practices were shaped and in turn affected vast regions of the globe.

HIST-203-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Fall) Strategies, Dark Secrets, and Dangers in the Writing of History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is about writing history, commonly called historiography. It examines some of the most successful works of historical writing from the ancient world to the present day. It investigates strategies historians use in interpreting the past, secrets of their trade, and the awful price not a few have paid for challenging orthodox versions of the past. Students will also analyze works of contemporary authors and apply their own hand to the historian's craft.

HIST-206-01 - History - 2011-2012
(Spring) African Cities: Development Dreams and Nightmares in the Twentieth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
African cities demonstrate the failure of models of development with the aim and ideal of industrialization. This course examines the empty promises of modernity through the lens of African urban history using fiction, film, and city archives. Beginning with Timbuctu and Cairo, the course explores the emergence and decline of trade entrepots, the rise of colonial cities, and the dilemmas of postcolonial economies and politics. Dar es Salaam, Nairobi, Kampala, Kinshasa, Harare, Johannesburg, Lagos, Accra, and Dakar are among the cities studied. Designed for those seeking only an introduction to development as well as those with further ambitions, it assumes no previous knowledge of Africa.

(Spring) Market Cultures in Western Civilization, 1600 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(European Studies 260s(01))
The history of the modern world has often been told as the history of markets and their expansion over time and place, culminating with what is often called "market society," a society in which market relations are said to shape all of our everyday lives. What does it mean to live in a market society and how have past cultures responded to the supposed intrusion of market relations? We will explore the cultural history of markets and market relations over the past several hundred years, with particular emphasis on European and North American cultures. We will also study institutional histories of markets--how they were built and organized--alongside the ways in which people thought about and responded to forms of market exchange in everyday life.

(Fall) History of Global Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Why are some nations so much richer and more powerful than others? This course demonstrates that global inequality is not natural; it has a history. Exploring patterns of exchange that developed among regions of the world over the past 600 years, we will ask about the role of power in the establishment of practices of production and exchange. We will explore how cross-regional productive systems benefited some participants at the expense of others. Having traced the consequences of unequal exchange over several centuries, we will ask how global trade and production would have to change for all participants to benefit equally. The course includes a community-based learning component.

*(Spring) Romans, Persians, and their Barbarians - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Ancient empires tended to create their own barbarians. During late antiquity, two empires dominated western Eurasia--Rome and Persia--and stimulated the formation of peoples along their frontiers--Germans, Moors, Huns, Turks, and Arabs. These "barbarians" were sometimes allies, sometimes enemies, but were always in close cultural and economic contact with the empires. We will examine the interactions between Rome, Persia, and their peripheries in Europe, North Africa, Arabia, and the Russian Steppe and debate how certain "barbarian" groups--Germans in the West, Arabs in the East--precipitated the collapse of two empires. We will address classic questions from a new, transregional perspective.

*(Spring) The Byzantine Empire - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Based in Constantinople--ancient Byzantium and present-day Istanbul--the Eastern Roman or Byzantine Empire, survived the collapse of the Western Roman Empire by over a millennium. This long-lived state on the crossroads of Europe and Asia was Roman in law, civil administration, and military tradition, but predominantly Greek in education and language, and Christian in religion. The course explores the changing face of medieval Byzantium as it turned itself into one of the greatest civilizations the world has known. We trace the empire's survival through the dramatic centuries of the Islamic conquests, Iconoclasm, and the Crusades, until its final fall to the Ottoman Turks.

(University Studies 221)
This course focuses on the Italian peninsula and urban life in Florence, Naples, Rome, Milan, and Venice from the fourteenth through the early seventeenth centuries; it follows the little people (popolo minuto), artisans, and elites in their challenges to government, law, church, and society. It looks broadly at the economic, political, social, and cultural factors that gave rise to disturbing questions about traditional conceptions of temporal and cosmic order, about men and women's relationships to one another and the world about them, about wealth, guilt, the shortcomings of human nature, and the potential of the human spirit.

*(Spring) Religion and Politics in Modern India - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The history of India has been singled out for its complex intermingling of religion and politics. This course will explore the constitution of religious identities in two of India's largest religious communities: Hindu and Muslim. Focusing primarily on the colonial period, we will discuss religious reform movements, communal violence, mass politics, and the partition of the subcontinent into the independent states of India and Pakistan. Throughout we will be interested in the ways that the colonial experience affected the religious thought and practice of Indians. Finally, we will explore the meanings of this history for the postcolonial workings of democracy and secularism in modern India.

Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes, Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.

"Our age is pre-eminently the age of great cities," wrote Robert Vaughan in 1843. Many Europeans questioned whether the greatness of cities was such a good thing, but most agreed that the history of nineteenth-century Europe could not be written without reference to them. We will examine that history from the perspective of Europe's largest cities between the mid-eighteenth and twentieth centuries. Taking greatness in its broadest sense, our readings will treat both the feats of urban transformation and the murkier histories of streets, sewers, sex, and slums. We will learn of the unseating of cities and of their being ruled through government, social reformers, planners, and engineers.

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses are designed for students with a background in American history who wish to focus attention on developments since the late nineteenth century.
An examination of the powerful unleashing of literary and political activism in the wake of the AIDS outbreak. We will look at literary texts such as Tony Kushner's play Angels in America, Larry Kramer's novel Faggots and play The Normal Heart, Sarah Shulman's novel People in Trouble, and Jonathan Larson's play, Rent. We will look at the AIDS quilt and other memorializing efforts, political groups such as The Gay Men's Health Crisis, ACT UP and Queer Nation for the ways that it redefined activism and recrafted the politics of medical trials and drug distribution, and will conclude with the role AIDS played in the consolidation of the Christian New Right.

(Latin American Studies 287f)
Latin America’s inequalities have led to the exclusion of millions of voices from official historical documents. These voices emerge in testimonial literature, a literary genre where scholars create a written account of the “testimonies” of marginalized individuals. The factors that influence the production of testimonial literature will be explored through memory, authorship, and first world/third world relations, using I, Rigoberta Menchu: An Indian Woman in Guatemala, and the debates that arose after she won the Nobel Peace Prize. The class focuses on issues of subjectivity, identity, and discourse analysis as tools for using testimonial literature as a historical source.

(Spring) Women in History: African Women: Food and Power - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 206s-01)
This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional 4th hour discussions.

(Spring) Colloquium: Bodily Desires: Sexuality in the U.S. from 1900 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Same as Gender Studies 333)
In this seminar, we will study the history of sexuality, desire, and bodies. The premise of this interdisciplinary seminar is that sexuality is both historically constructed (fluid and changing over time and culture) and embodied and lived (experienced for many as essential and unchanging). We will study experts who set out terms and frameworks for understanding modern sexuality; how in different ways and in different times communities of sexual minorities strategically used selected elements of expert discourse to forge their own narratives of self and desire. Students will examine sexual classifications—mainstream and "normal" or subcultural and "deviant"—as mutually constructed.

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
Within decades of Muhammad's death, the early Muslims found themselves in charge of an empire that extended from the Hindu Kush to the Atlantic. The populations over which the first generation of Muslims ruled were largely Christian, Jewish, Zoroastrian, or Buddhist. This seminar examines the complex interactions between Muslims and non-Muslims, conquerors and conquered, during the first Islamic century. The seminar will attend to two questions: How did the conquerors draw on Islamic-Arabian traditions as well as Roman and Persian institutions to establish enduring structures of rule over non-Muslim populations? How did the conquered respond to the creation of an Islamic empire?

As rising food prices cause distress, starvation, and food riots around the world, we focus on the creation of markets for food. How did food become a marketable commodity, and what have the consequences been? What social expectations lie behind food riots, and what changes have food riots caused? How are agrarian systems that produce food as a commodity different from those that combine cash crops with self-provisioning? Why is greater market integration seen as a panacea by some and an anathema by others? We explore these questions globally, with a focus on Africa.

The Roman Empire underwent a dramatic transformation during the transition from antiquity to the middle ages. It was an era of great challenges and great achievements. The borders of the empire expanded as lost territories were reconquered. The legal code behind most modern legal systems was created. Some of the most impressive buildings of all time were constructed. Yet foreign invasions and internal revolts caused upheavals, while the traditional fabric of society was threatened by plague. The Christianisation of the state led to the persecution of other faiths. This seminar aims to shed light on political, social, and cultural history. We will by looking at the rise of a new power: Islam.

(Fall) The Middle Ages: Monasticism and the Making of the Middle Ages - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing. During late antiquity, individuals separated themselves from families, cities, and relations of power to practice asceticism in monasteries. They thus contributed to the transformation of the very societies they had abandoned. The seminar will debate the ways in which monastic practices, institutions, and literatures were involved in the social, cultural, and economic changes that distinguished "medieval" from "ancient" societies. The rich documentation for monasticism—saints’ lives, letters, papyri, ostraca, and charters—will enable us to investigate the shifting roles of holy women and men, anchorites, holy fools, and coenobites in early medieval societies, from Egypt to Ireland.

(Spring) War and Propaganda - *Not offered this year/term
This course analyzes propaganda techniques and war mobilization strategies. We present comparative, cross-cultural analyses of recent and historical examples of the influences of the state, state-society relations, the media, and information control and distortion in the mobilization for war. Case studies are selected to address the following questions: Why is propaganda necessary? What is the media’s relationship to state propaganda efforts? How do citizen groups and protest movements contest state propaganda efforts? We conclude by examining key trends in the development of mass media forms and technologies and their implications for global politics.

IR-237-01 - International Relations - 2011-2012
(Fall) International Human Rights
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.

(Spring) International Society - *Not offered this year/term

An intensive reading course in theories of international society: the idea that states and peoples are or should be linked to each other through a web of shared values and institutions. It focuses on the work of Hedley Bull, Immanuel Kant, and John Rawls. How did these three men understand international society? What are or should be the values and institutions that give rise to it and support it? What implications do their visions of international society have for war and peace, state sovereignty, religion, democracy, capitalism, distributive justice, human rights, and international law? What responses and criticisms have their arguments engendered?

(Fall) The Changing Role of Diplomacy in the Twenty-first Century

This seminar examines changes in the ways U.S. foreign policy is implemented since the end of the Cold War. During the Cold War, U.S. foreign policy was made and implemented within established parameters of negotiation procedures with known international players. Today, it is adapting to more creative interactions with a range of new actors. This course analyzes specific challenges to U.S. foreign policy, such as dealing with ethnically driven conflicts and creating "coalitions of the willing" to respond to crises. Classroom simulations of interagency/international policy procedures are important course components.

(Spring) Human Rights and Democracy in Africa

The seminar explores the complexity and diversity of African politics in the 21st century. Africa's varied and deeply-rooted traditions are in many ways still alien to and misunderstood by the United States and its Western allies. This course reviews cultural traditions and how they support or challenge human rights and democracy. Special emphasis will be placed on the role of women in light of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international conventions on the rights of women and children. We will examine cases of culturally-based clashes that underlie contemporary conflicts. The course will include case studies and simulations.

(Fall) Florence and the Making of the Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Michelangelo's Poems, Da Vinci's Notebooks, Machiavelli's Prince. These are only some of the many windows into the extraordinary genius that was the Renaissance. In these works by Florentine writers, artists, and thinkers, man placed himself at the very center of the universe and claimed the right to decide his own destiny. This course will engage with some of the greatest achievements of the Renaissance experiment, giving special importance to the ways through which—from literature, to the visual arts, to architecture and political science—Florence consciously pursued a mythical status to seal its own supremacy.

ITAL-320-01 - Italian - 2011-2012
(Spring) Redefining the Cosmos: Voyages to the New World in the Italian Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The Renaissance has long been understood as the very laboratory of modernity. While revolutionary ideas about art, politics, and science took shape, Europe faced an extraordinary challenge: how to integrate into "the Renaissance experiment" the new experience opened by the voyages to the New World. In Italy, this challenge produced a heterogeneous body of literature—epic poems, popular cantari, travelogues—which represents at once a historical account of the "discoveries" and ethnographic exploration with an incursion into the fantastic. Pulci, Columbus, and Vespucci lure us into unexplored territory, where science, poetry, and history merge in an unparalleled metaphor for humanism.

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Topic: The Mind of the Traveler: Journeys, Expeditions, Tours
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Romance Language 375, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
Travel literature has always been a precious source for the study of culture, politics, arts and, last but not least, people. From Tacitus to Marco Polo, from Stendhal to Camilo Jose Cela, we will read and discuss authors who traveled for political, personal, and recreational reasons. We will also pay special attention to tales of emigration and immigration in the third millennium.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.

JWST-212-01 - Jewish Studies - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.
Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies; opportunities to become rabbis; new approaches to God, theology, and social issues; the Jewish lesbian movement; women's writing and documentary filmmaking.

The Sabbath, the notion and institution of a day of rest, appears to have been innovated in ancient Israel, as evidenced by the Hebrew Bible. This course systematically explores the origins, development, and nature of the Sabbath in Judaism, including desisting from labor and worldly pursuits, and as an opportunity for spiritual rejuvenation and communal celebration. How has the observance of the Sabbath changed over time, and varied among different regional communities? How has it evolved in our own time? We will also take a comparative approach by studying Sabbath or days of rest in other religious traditions, including both Western and Asian cultures.

Instructors: L. Fine
Expected enrollment: 15

This course will explore issues of contemporary ethics from the point of view of Jewish religious thought and tradition. Topics will include medical and genetic ethics, death and dying, family and sexual ethics, ethics of war, poverty, and the environment. The course will explore these issues in the context of theoretical approaches to questions of religion and ethics.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in religion or Jewish studies, or permission of instructor

Instructors: L. Fine

Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Zohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular Pietistic movement of Eastern Europe from the eighteenth century onward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Spring) Cicero and the Enemies of the Roman Republic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
The career of the Roman orator and statesman Marcus Tullius Cicero spanned the last generation of the Roman Republic, a period of political instability and civil war. As the leading orator of his day, Cicero often used his rhetorical skills to thwart those who he believed were bent on the destruction of the Roman Republic. In this course, we will examine the role of public oratory in the political process in this period with a close reading of Cicero's speeches and letters concerning one of his political enemies (Catiline, Clodius, or Mark Antony).
Prerequisites: Latin 222 or permission of the instructor.

LATIN-313-01 - Latin - 2011-2012
(Fall) Myth, Memory, and History: Writing the Past in the Roman Republic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Livy and Sallust, the best known historians of the Roman Republic, viewed history writing as a moral enterprise, presenting events from the past as exercises in virtue to inform and enlighten the lives of their readers. Their narratives thus are highly rhetorical, combining myth, memory, and history to reconstruct the past. Close reading of selections from Livy's Ab Urbe Condita and/or Sallust's monographs--the Bellum Catilinae and Bellum Jugurthinum--will lead to discussions about how Romans viewed their past and how they wrote about it.
Prerequisites: Latin 222 or permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Sumi

(Fall) Paradigms of New World Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is devoted to the work of commanding figures of Latin American and Caribbean thought at various times and different places. Thinkers whose work may form its basis in various offerings include among others: Columbus, Bartolomé de Las Casas, José Martí, J. C. Mariátegui, C.L.R. James, etc. Their lives and work exemplify the diversities, varying regional settings, social contexts, and shifting historical coordinates of major epochs of transition. Their assessment of a myriad of key issues has made each a touchstone of continuing authority and influence extending beyond their particularlocale, time, or region. Why this should be so is among the many questions we will address.

(Fall) Topics in Latin American Studies: Introduction to Latina/o Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 250f(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.
This course offers an introduction to the study of Latina/o communities in the United States. We will explore major concepts and debates in the growing field of Latina/o Studies, through the study of texts across disciplines including history, sociology, performance theory, personal narrative and ethnography. This interdisciplinary approach will provide us with rich frameworks to interrogate how Latinas/os negotiate complex identities across communities and specific geographic and political contexts.

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Performance in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Spanish 240b(01), Theatre Arts 234s(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.
This course offers Latina/o and Latin American transnational approaches to the theory and political practice of performance in the Americas with a focus on issues of race, sexuality, class, gender, indigenous and diasporic identities. Employing multiple modes of performance from theater, dance, performance art, ritual, visual art, and folkloric music, we will explore how these practices have functioned and continue to inspire politically subversive or resistant transformation.

(Fall) Modern Mexico

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

An analysis of the modern Mexican nation-state organized around three major themes: the conflictive yet symbiotic relationship with the United States, from the war of the 1840s through NAFTA most recently; the succession of reformist and revolutionary upheavals in 1810-1821, 1856-1867, 1910-1917, the 1930s, and again today, seeking to resolve both problems of the colonial past and new conflicts traceable to the very reforms generated by earlier political and social struggles; and the meaning of Mexican nationality from different ethnic, gender, and class perspectives. Readings include autobiographical and literary works, historical studies, and films.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

A sustained comparative study of the developing canon of three major contemporary writers—Alejo Carpentier (Cuba), V.S. Naipaul (Trinidad), and Maryse Conde (Guadeloupe)—from the Caribbean, representing the region's Spanish-, English-, and French-speaking cultural zones. Examines the evolving content, contours and scope of each writer's work and unique perception of the New World, as well as its distinctively Antillean "structure of feeling," participation in modern debates about Caribbean culture, and distinctive contributions to the development of the novel in the contemporary Caribbean.

(Spring) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: Latina Feminisms

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Spanish 330b(01), Gender Studies 333s(05))

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.

This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriqueñas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centroamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

(Spring) Postmodernism and Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 388)
For many the "discovery" of America opened the modern era. Its closing may also have been foretold in Latin America's confounding of diverse theories of modernization and development in recent times. This seminar will introduce the student to a number of both classic and more recent works on Latin America (in English) that advance along postmodernist lines, ranging from cultural contact and conflict, language, meaning, and power in the sixteenth century, to the invention of national identities in the nineteenth century, to discourses of ethnicity, class, gender, and reason in the twentieth century.

(Spring) Explorations in Algebra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Using examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.

MATH-120-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Explorations in Geometry: Origami and Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Origami, the art of paper folding, has strong connections with mathematics. The process of folding paper can be explored and modeled with geometry, algebra, number theory, graph theory, and more. In this course we will study origami primarily through geometry, but with connections to other branches of mathematics. Students will fold many origami models for observation and mathematical study. Effective ways to use origami projects to teach and inspire middle-school and high-school mathematics students will be discussed. No prior origami experience is needed.
Instructors: C. Morrow
Expected enrollment: 24

MATH-120-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Explorations in Geometry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The system of geometry devised by the ancient Greeks was immutable until the nineteenth century, when it was put in a broader framework better able to accommodate the varied interests of physical science and mathematics. In this course, we begin by a careful and close observation of what we can see and physically construct, reasoning informally about those observations. We will then explore a selection of geometry from the time of Euclid to the recent past, including curved surfaces and the hyperbolic plane.

MATH-160-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Mathematics and Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
For centuries people have explored the connections between mathematics and music. Sounds are waves, and pleasant-sounding musical intervals are simple fractions. Keyboard instruments are tuned following both regular and slightly irregular mathematical rules. Bells in change ringing follow simple patterns. Some musical pieces can be played both backwards and forwards. On the other hand, aesthetics are paramount in music, yet also play a part in mathematics. This course will explore these ideas.
Prerequisites: fy, must be able to read music or permission of instructor; 4 credits; expected enrollment 12
Instructors: A. Durfee
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Galileo, Mathematics, and the Origins of the Scientific Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Physics 160)
We will use the life and work of Galileo to organize a survey and investigation of the many texts and traditions that came together in the scientific revolution, ranging from classical philosophy and mathematics to the Renaissance arts.
Instructors: M. Peterson
Expected enrollment: 14

MATH-201-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Examining Features of Shape and Measuring Space in One, Two, and Three Dimensions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Education 202)
We will work with 2D and 3D shapes, develop mathematical vocabulary regarding features of shapes, and explore definitions and properties of geometric objects. The seminar includes a study of angle, similarity, congruence, and the relationship between 3D objects and their 2D representations. The measurement component will provide opportunities to examine different attributes of size, develop facility in composing and decomposing shapes, and apply these skills to make sense of formulas for area and volume. As we explore the conceptual issues of length, area, and volume and their complex interrelationships, we will also examine how children develop these ideas.

MATH-202-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Calculus II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Most students who have taken calculus in high school begin with Calculus II. In particular, if you have studied the derivative and its applications and have been introduced to the definite integral, you will be prepared for Calculus II. Please read the "Beginning the Study of Mathematics" section.

Topics include techniques of integration, applications of integration, differential equations, sequences, series, and Taylor series.

MATH-232-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Discrete Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies some aspects of discrete mathematics. Topics include sets, functions, elementary probability, induction proofs, and recurrence relations.
Prerequisites: any 100-level mathematics or computer science course, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Lee

MATH-251-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.
Prerequisites: 4 credits from the department or permission of instructor
Instructors: H. Pollatsek

MATH-301-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Real Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include the real number system, convergence of sequences and series, power series, uniform convergence, compactness and connectedness, continuity, abstract treatment of differential and integral calculus, metric spaces, and point-set topology.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and two chosen from Mathematics 211, 232 and 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Davidoff

MATH-302-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Complex Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differentiation and integration of functions of a complex variable, the Cauchy integral formula, residues, conformal mapping, and applications to physical science and number theory.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 or Physics 303
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges
Instructors: M. Noonan

MATH-309-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Analysis: Hilbert Spaces
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The course will begin with studying inner product, orthogonality, Hilbert spaces, and their applications to minimization problem and Fourier analysis. The latter part of the course will serve as an introduction to functional analysis.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, 211; Mathematics 301 helpful but not required
Instructors: J. Lee

MATH-311-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Abstract Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include algebraic structures: groups, rings (including some elementary number theory), fields, and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, and one chosen from Mathematics 232 or 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Robinson

(Spring) Topics in Geometry and Topology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topological spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit
Instructors: The department

MATH-333-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Differential Equations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to differential equations for students in the mathematical or other sciences. Topics include first-order equations, second-order linear equations, qualitative study of dynamical systems, and first- and second-order linear partial differential equations.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202
Instructors: M. Noonan

MATH-334-01 - Mathematics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Mathematical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include specific examples of mathematical models that have been formulated to deal with problems arising in various applications, together with an outline of the development of particular mathematical tools and techniques used in these models.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211
Instructors: The Department
Expected enrollment: 30

(Fall) Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries: European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic Encounters, 1200-1700

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; History 101f-01)

This seminar focuses on medieval boundaries: those separating Christians, Jews, and Muslims in Europe, as well as those between men and women from the thirteenth through sixteenth centuries. The course also examines new boundaries separating--and constructing--Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Engaging closely and critically with sources from Atlantic societies of these centuries, students will investigate and debate the making and remaking of "Western culture" in an era of state formation, imperial expansion, agrarian capitalism, and chattel slavery. Readings range from Christian-Jewish disputations to indigenous writings from the Americas.

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Chaucer: Stories of Cupid's Martyrs

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course begins with a close reading of Chaucer's great love story Troilus and Criseyde together with The Legend of Good Women, taking into consideration the multiple cultural contexts a late medieval audience would have brought to both poems along with such topics as honour, love, trouthe, and betrayal. We will conclude by comparing Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida with Chaucer's work as a way of understanding the continuities and changes between a late medieval and early modern understanding of men and women in love and war.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 8 credits in English or Medieval Studies; online application required.

Music

MUSIC-100-01 - Music - 2011-2012

(Fall) Basic Musicianship

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Explores the ways in which sound is organized into musical structures. Topics include the physical properties of sound; the basic vocabulary of Western music (scales, key signatures, intervals, triads, rhythm, meter); and an introduction to musical form and analysis. Includes extensive practice in music reading, sight singing, ear training, and critical listening.

Instructors: T. Ng

(Spring) Music and Technology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.

MUSIC-103-01 - Music - 2011-2012
(Fall) History of Jazz
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will follow the origins and evolution of jazz from the late nineteenth century to the present, with emphases on prominent stylistic trends and significant individuals. Along with some analysis of the musical language jazz employs, the music will be examined in its relation to the social contexts that helped produce and shape it. The ability to read music is not a requirement for this course.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Transgressive Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
The seminar will introduce and discuss various musical works and genres that fall under rock critic Ann Powers' definitions of "Violator Art," exploring them within the context of their wanton and disturbing appeal, as well as their often scandalous social impact. Topics will include the Second Viennese School, free jazz, protest music, punk rock, hip-hop, works such as J. S. Bach's "Cantata No. 179," Strauss's "Salome," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du printemps," Billie Holiday's "Strange Fruit," George Crumb's "Black Angels," and artists such as Frank Zappa, Donna Summer, Prince, and Nirvana. (Students should be prepared for mature themes and some coarse language.)
Instructors: D. Sanford
Expected enrollment: 15

MUSIC-110-02 - Music - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Keyboard sinstrument - How Technology Transformed Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
Students will explore issues common to all keyboard instruments, keyboard geography, tuning and temperament; investigate the instruments' constructions and playing mechanisms; and examine the interrelationship of technological advances in instrument construction and the nature of the music composed for each instrument. Throughout the course, students will listen to music composed for each specific instrument, as well as music written for other media realized on various keyboard instruments. After the introduction of a basic vocabulary for describing music, students will examine how the differences in performing medium affect their understanding of a piece of music.
Instructors: L. Schipull

(Fall) Chamber Music: Euridice Ensembles

Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Euridice Ensembles are groups of students and faculty who perform baroque and classical chamber music with attention to historical performance practice. Individual ensembles may include baroque trios, classical quartets, cantata groupings, etc., and are formed according to the needs and interest of students participating each semester. Singers, modern and early string, wind and keyboard players from the Five Colleges are invited to participate.

MUSIC-220-01 - Music - 2011-2012
(Fall) Music and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 220)
This course is for all who stay to the end of the credits, purchase soundtracks, and argue over who should have won the Oscar for Best Score, along with anyone else interested in the undervalued importance of music to the general effect of a motion picture. We will explore and discuss the myriad ways in which these two media interact. The course will focus on classic scores by Herrmann, Morricone, and Williams, as well as the uses of existing music in films of Bergman and Kubrick.
Prerequisites: Music 100 or 103 or 105 or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Sanford
Expected enrollment: 20

MUSIC-226-01 - Music - 2011-2012
(Spring) World Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is a survey of selected musical traditions from different parts of the world, including Africa, Indonesia, Indian, the Caribbean, and the United States. The course adopts an ethnomusicological approach that explains music as a cultural phenomenon, and explores the social and aesthetic significance of musical traditions within their respective historical and cultural contexts. It examines how musical traditions change over time, and how such changes reflect and relate to social and political changes within a given society. Weekly reading and listening assignments provide the basis for class discussions. Students are expected to undertake a final project in music ethnography.
Instructors: O. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 30

MUSIC-229-01 - Music - 2011-2012
(Fall) African Popular Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines selected genres and their relationships to the political and social dynamics of their respective national origins. Regional examples like highlife, soukous, chimurenga, and Fela Anikulapo-Kuti's Afro-beat will provide the basis for assessing the significance of popular music as a creative response to the African colonial and postcolonial environment. The course also discusses African hip-hop music by exploring how indigenous cultural tropes have provided the basis for its local appropriation. Themes explored include music and identity; music, politics, and resistance; interaction of local and global elements; and political significance of musical nostalgia.
Instructors: O. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 25

(Psychology 245)
Every culture in the world has some form of music, but why did music evolve, and what function does it serve? In this course, we will explore the cognitive and neural processes that underlie music perception and production to ask the following questions: Does music have universal features that cross cultures? How does music convey emotion? What do infants know about music? Is music specifically human? And finally, what are the parallels between music and language? Through these questions, we hope to discover something about the origin of music and what makes it such an integral part of our daily lives.

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will discuss questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 70

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We will consider influential philosophical texts and theories that attempt to answer questions such as these: Is it possible for creatures like us to have knowledge of an external world that exists outside of our own minds? Are we justified in believing that events in the future will be much like events in the past? Is the human mind an immaterial substance (like a soul), or is it a mere physical object (like the brain)? Do human beings have free will? Is a person's having free will compatible with all of her actions being predetermined by events occurring before her birth? What, if anything, makes an action morally right or morally wrong?
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: What is the Good Life?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How should I live? What actions are right and wrong? How should I treat myself and others? In this class, we will discuss these issues through the lens of practical problems facing daily life. By considering human rights and poverty, we will evaluate how our actions should be constrained by the needs and interests of others. Through a discussion of the environment, we will consider whether values exist in nature, who is a member of our moral community, and why. Does quantity or quality of life matter? We will consider these issues and other questions of well-being in the context of euthanasia. This course will explore a range of ethical dilemmas with an eye towards living the best life.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Delston
Expected enrollment: 19
PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: Personal Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Who or what am I, and what makes me what I am? How am I different from a very sensitive robot, or a very clever dog? Am I a single changing person throughout my life, or a series of unchanging ones? What will connect my past to my future? This cluster of philosophical worries will occupy the center of this course. In the process of addressing them, we will work to develop methods for resolving problems that appear beyond solution.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 15

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.
Instructors: M. Brown
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: History of Ancient Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to ancient Greek philosophy, focusing mainly but not exclusively on the works and ideas of three Athenian philosophers who worked and taught in the period between the Persian Wars and the rule of Alexander the Great, more than 2,300 years ago: Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the world? What is truth, and how can it be known? What kind of life should we live? We will work to understand each philosopher's responses to these questions, but we will also learn to develop our own answers. We will take care to place these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.
Instructors: J. Delston
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: History of Modern Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course serves as an introduction to some of the main philosophical theories of ethics and ideas about human nature through a study of fundamental approaches including utilitarian, deontological, and virtue ethics. Among the issues covered will be the clarification of basic assumptions about morality, such as whether morality has any basis beyond differing teachings of various cultures (relativism), or whether all actions are fundamentally selfish (egoism). Attention will be given to the application of ethical theory and principles to contemporary issues.
Instructors: J. Delston
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Knowledge and Reality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-209-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Theories of Probability and Causation
In this course we will look at theories of causation, probability, and their interaction. We will look first at Hume on causation, and then move on to some very basic probability theory. We will briefly explore the standard statistical approaches and go on to Bayesian reasoning and confirmation theory. Finally, we'll examine recent developments in the Bayesian Net theory of causation. As a whole, the class is an investigation of recent mathematical and philosophical theories about how science works, what justifies the hypotheses we ought to believe, and how observations could justify hypotheses about unobserved entities and regions.

Prerequisites: One course in either Philosophy or Mathematics or permission of instructor.

Instructors: S. Mitchell

Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddily ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.

Instructors: L. Bowie

Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory "good"? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? In what ways does science in practice depart from scientific ideals? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.

Instructors: S. Hawthorne

Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.

Instructors: L. Bowie

Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
(Religion 226-01, Critical Social Thought 250f-01)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of Pietism and Romanticism in Schleiermacher's Speeches. Finally, we focus on the idealistic and pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion.

(Fall) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Complex Organizations 232)
There is much talk recently of the need for increased attention to "ethics" in organizational life. This course examines the basis for this concern and the underlying beliefs and structures that give rise to ethical issues, with the goal of helping students to clarify their own positions. Topics addressed will include profit, governance, consumption, distribution, and the social contract. Readings will draw on philosophy, religion, economics, history, literature, management theory, and current events.

PHIL-235-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral and philosophical problems. Topics discussed include: What is the distinction between health and illness? How should limited health care resources be distributed? How are medical problems related to larger social problems (e.g., gender inequality)? What are the responsibilities of medical researchers toward their research subjects? What moral reasons do we have to be concerned about the growth of technology in medicine? Are the basic institutions of medicine and medical education just?
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Environmental Ethics: Nature/Culture/Values - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Should we control nature by applying scientific and technological expertise? Or should we strive for noninterference and preservation of the wild? How do we balance the pressing needs of people for food, energy, and other resources with the needs of other species or whole ecosystems? Students will explore these questions and issues in the classroom and in community-based learning or other experiential projects that put ideas into action.
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-241-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Issues in Contemporary Moral Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Do we need to develop virtues to lead a good life? Is morality founded on freedom or happiness? What does it involve for an individual to be just? What is the relationship between morality and power? This course explores questions and texts relevant to contemporary ethical philosophy. We will read a mix of contemporary and historical texts examining some of these questions in detail.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Social and Political Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An examination of a variety of topics in social and political philosophy, drawing from historical as well as contemporary sources. We will examine questions such as the following: What is the nature and scope of political authority? Do citizens have a duty to obey the laws of their state? What duties do we have to oppressed and marginalized groups? How do race, class, gender, and sexual orientation matter to political freedom and authority? How should we balance political liberties against the public good? Attention will be given to the application of these questions to particular contemporary social and political issues.
Instructors: J. Delston
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-248-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race?" Does science construct "race?" What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-249-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Women and Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210)
Women have to a great extent been denied a place in the canon of Western philosophy. But voices of historical women philosophers are being recovered, and increasingly women contribute to current literature and teaching. In the first half of the course, we'll read selections from historical literature—the ancient Greeks through the American pragmatists. In the second half, we'll examine recent feminist literature, tracing themes that have been important over the centuries. We'll also ask questions about the role of women in philosophy, such as: Is their contribution distinctive? Is reason gendered? When is philosophy feminist?
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 40
PHIL-252-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Nineteenth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the ways the nature, possibility, and extent of human freedom were conceptualized by German philosophers in the nineteenth century. Readings are drawn from the work of Hegel, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. Specific topics include Hegel's metaphysics of spirit, Feuerbach's critique of religious and philosophical mystification, Marx's analysis of alienation, and Nietzsche's ideal of the "Over-Man."
Notes: 2 meetings
Instructors: J. Murphy

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.
Instructors: K. Thomason
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Philosophy of Mind
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Whorf, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor

(Spring) Philosophy of the Arts - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Can a pile of bricks be art? What is the difference between a musical work and a bunch of random noise? What makes a Marx Brothers movie funny? Othello a tragedy? Should any appeal to the masses?
Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 290s)
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or in film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (1.5 hours)
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30
PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
How do words come to mean things? Frege introduced two aspects of meaning: reference, that is, whatever expressions pick out in the world, and sense, a publicly accessible means by which expressions pick out their references, which must be grasped by all speakers. This course is an extended examination of the concept of sense, the uses to which it has been put, and the criticisms that have been lodged against it. We'll look at Frege's work, the complaints made by Quine and Kripke, Davidson's theory of meaning, and Dummett's defense of sense.

PHIL-327-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Advanced Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Mathematics 327f)
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of G"odel's incompleteness results. It includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in philosophy or mathematics, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-328-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Spring) Non-Classical Logic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course looks at the recent flowering of non-classical logics. The most prominent are modal logics concerning necessity and possibility, which have come to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. Conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have also become important. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy but also are interesting in their own right.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225 and 4 credits in philosophy or in mathematics
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-334-01 - Philosophy - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in Ethics: International Justice: Possibilities and Limits
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In an increasingly globalized world, ethical questions take on international scope. Poverty contributes to one third of human deaths annually, raising questions about equality, distributive justice, and human rights across national boundaries. The moral evaluation of global institutions, the ethical use of coercive practices, and the moral status of groups and states take on more force. What are our obligations to international justice? How do national citizenship and membership in other groups shape or contribute to these obligations? In this course, we will focus on practical and theoretical issues of global justice.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Delston

Expected enrollment: 20
This seminar will focus on the work of Arthur Danto, perhaps the preeminent contemporary philosopher of art and art critic for The Nation. We will explore his writings from his seminal essay, "The Artworld," to his recent book, The Abuse of Beauty, in an attempt to understand his views on art, its development, and its future.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) The Philosophy of Art: The Shock of the New - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Art Studio 280s-01)

Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.

Innovative works of art shock the world and are difficult for viewers to interpret in light of previous artistic practice. How, then, can viewers and critics understand new and challenging works of art? This is the topic that we will investigate in this course by looking at art, reading about art, making art, and writing about art.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 10

(Spring) Philosophy of Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 390-02)

Preamble (for topics courses): An examination of different theoretical issues concerning the nature of film and film viewing. Topics vary yearly.

Recently, philosophers have argued that films resemble philosophy in their use of thought experiments. But the role of thought experiments in philosophy is itself contested. The seminar will investigate how thought experiments are used in science and philosophy in order to determine whether films and, more generally, art can legitimately claim that their presentation of thought experiments connects them to philosophy. Some previous acquaintance with philosophy highly recommended.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or in film studies or permission of instructor
Notes: There will be film screenings in addition to the regular class meeting times

PE-117-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Bon Odori (Japanese Spiritual Dance)
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course focuses on a Japanese Buddhist folk dance performed outdoors and danced in a concentric circle around a raised platform. It is celebrated as a reminder of the gratefulness one should feel toward one's ancestors. From this dance of joy comes Bon Odori, a time in which ancestors and their sacrifices are remembered and appreciated. Through studying the dance, students will understand its intentions: remembering and appreciating who you are and where you come from. Because the dance is closely related to Buddhism, this course will provide an opportunity for the students both to exercise through dancing and to calm their minds.

Preamble (for topics courses): Riding Fee $560
This course ties the concepts of straightness, rhythm, obedience and suppleness to technique over fences. Focuses on riders' effectiveness and position in both disciplines. Riders should be comfortable riding a green or unknown horse over a course of 3'3" jumps and capable of riding a 1st level dressage test on an unknown horse. Two spots will be reserved for riders without their own horse.
Prerequisites: Permission of Instructor. 1 meeting, 90 minutes. Fee course.
Instructors: J. Collins
Expected enrollment: 6

PE-458-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Riding Team
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Team members are required to enroll in one of these levels of riding: 051, 052, 151, 251, 351, 451fs. Team members practice on Fridays. Five shows are in the fall, five shows are in the spring. The College is a member of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: Selection by tryouts in fall and spring.
Instructors: C. Law

PHYED-261-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2011-2012
(Spring) Women in Sport
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 216)
This course is designed to introduce students to the history of women in sport, the status of women in sport since the passage of Title IX in 1972, and current issues impacting women in sport such as race, gender, and sexual orientation. Students will explore the influence of sport on the lives of women and how selected women sport leaders have influenced the growth and development of sport.
Notes: No P.E. credit. Academic credit only.
Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

PHYED-275-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Sport Pedagogy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed to introduce students to sport pedagogy with a focus on coaching youth sports. Topics include coaching philosophy, motor learning, sport physiology, sport biomechanics, sport psychology, and risk management/liability. We will consider the benefits of playing sports, the development of age appropriate instruction and training programs, goal setting, effective feedback, and the importance of coaches as role models for children.

Notes: no PE units are awarded
Instructors: D. Allen
Expected enrollment: 20

Physics

PHYS-103-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.
Instructors: M. Peterson

PHYS-104-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement (Environmental Studies 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.
Instructors: A. Arango
Expected enrollment: 50

PHYS-105-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Science in the Media
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar
Popular coverage of science ranges in depth and accuracy, and many scientists do not see the importance of communicating their work, or their excitement, to the general public. Scientific breakthroughs contribute to everyone’s quality of life, but the process is poorly understood by many, leading to misunderstandings and misgivings that can affect public policy. This course will look at newsworthy results from current scientific research, exploring topics to better understand the science, ideas such as scientific consensus and repeatability, and examining the tension that may exist between the scientists and the public. Topics will be pulled largely from the physical sciences.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: K. Aidala

PHYS-204-01 - Physics - 2011-2012

(Spring) Phenomena of Physics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course studies a variety of topics in physics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, including thermodynamics, acoustics, wave optics, electricity, magnetism, and nuclear phenomena. As in Physics 103f, the applicable mathematics is geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis.

Prerequisites: Physics 103 or 115

Instructors: M. Peterson

Expected enrollment: 32

PHYS-211-01 - Physics - 2011-2012

(Spring) Gender in Science

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Gender Studies 241)

This course examines explanations for the underrepresentation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.

PHYS-222-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 322)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: Physics 115 and permission of the instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours) with 12 per lab
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

PHYS-231-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Techniques of Experimental Physics
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides training in the techniques employed in the construction of scientific equipment.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, major
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) for 3 weeks
Instructors: L. McEachern
Expected enrollment: 4

PHYS-295-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

PHYS-301-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Waves and Optics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, and special relativity.

Prerequisites: Physics 216 and either: 303 or concurrent enrollment in 303
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department |
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-302-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-303-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series. The course includes a brief introduction to Mathematica and Matlab, in addition to a traditional emphasis on analytic solutions.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 or concurrent enrollment
Instructors: A. Arango
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Electronics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined); fall 2011 offered at Smith
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Newton's great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.
Prerequisites: Physics 303
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 22

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 324s)
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green's functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.

Prerequisites: Physics 301, 315, or 324
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solid; the specific heat of solids.

Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: Team taught with Chem 308; this course has 4th hour but no lab requirement
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in Advanced Physics - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2011-2012
(Spring) Quantum Mechanics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; and perturbative methods.

Prerequisites: Physics 302
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-395-01 - Physics - 2011-2012

Politics

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others' presentations.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: V. Ferraro
Expected enrollment: 12

POLIT-100-02 - Politics - 2011-2012
(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Family Ties - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
In this course, students will engage a number of classic works of literature and moral philosophy, as well as contemporary works, in order to reflect on the ways the family shapes private and public life and is, in return, shaped by them. We will cover such questions as: how does the family create and then influence the individual? What does it mean to be part of a family? What do individuals owe their families and are those obligations fair? How do we form families? Can the family insulate individuals from politics and society—in good ways and bad? Is political order like familial order? Are the state and society a threat or support for the family? How have these understandings changed over time?
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-100-03 - Politics - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Confessions, Novels, and Notebooks: The Self and Political Thought
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; CST 100 (02))
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 16

POLIT-100-04 - Politics - 2011-2012
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: The Politics of Food
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
A critical examination of the political and economic forces informing the production, distribution, marketing, and consumption of food in the United States. We will look at the power relations and institutional arrangements that inform what we eat. Topics include the industrialization of food production and its impact on workers, public health, and the environment; animal welfare, veganism, and other ethical issues; the marketing of unhealthy diet choices; and corporate influence over agricultural policy and food regulation. We will also consider various individual, cultural, and policy solutions to the problems surrounding food and diet in America.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Black Metropolis
First-year seminar
Black Metropolis referred to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King's failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson's urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors’ perspectives on these questions.

(Fall) Comparative Politics
(Writing-intensive)
This course provides an introduction to comparative political analysis. The primary objective of the class is to help students understand how the modern world, one characterized by the rise of industrialized nation-states, took form and what shape it might take in the post-Cold War era. We will examine how the challenges of economic development, social transformation, and nation-building sparked the emergence of alternative roads to modernity characterized by diverse configurations of political institutions and social forces. We will also assess how globalization and the re-emergence of local identities may be redefining our understanding of modernity.

(Spring) Politics of Minority Rights
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the politics surrounding minority rights in the US since World War II, with special emphasis on the politics of race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship/immigration. Our aim will be to trace the accomplishments and limitations of the American state in offering full democratic inclusion to all members of the polity. Through readings, lectures, discussions, and film screenings, we will analyze several public debates related to contemporary minority inclusion. In the process, we will evaluate such behemoths of minority politics as affirmative action, same-sex marriage, and the Americans with Disabilities Act (1990).

(Spring) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Through the works of the ancient tragedians and comedians, Thucydides, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Augustine, Aquinas, and Pizan, this course explores themes in ancient and medieval political thought. In alternating years, the course will be taught as either a survey of a wide array of authors or as a more thematically focused study of just a few writers. In either format, we will pay particular attention to the ways these writers characterized the relationship between the individual and community; the roles knowledge, reason, emotion, and rhetoric play in political life; the link between gender and citizenship; and the various forms political community can take.

(Taught in English; RES 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Gender Studies 250f(01))
The Americas have been characterized by the strictness of their laws in the criminalization of abortion. In some countries abortion is criminalized even when the woman’s life is at risk. What role have women’s movements played in advancing abortion rights? What has mattered most for a movement’s success, its internal characteristics or external forces? Has the way the movement framed its demands mattered? How has the political influence of the Catholic and Evangelical churches influenced policies in this area? We will answer these questions by exploring examples from across the region through primary and secondary sources.

(Spring) Feminism and Capitalism

(Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 270)

This course will explore the relationship between feminism and capitalism in a contemporary context, particularly the ways in which they reinforce and contradict each other. Examining this question through Marxist, liberal, post-structuralist, and post-colonial feminist theory, and the recent history of feminist and anti-capitalist movements, we will consider the economic and political underpinnings of feminist thinking and practice. Do certain feminisms carry implicit anti-capitalist commitments? To what extent are particular feminisms, especially liberal feminism, reliant upon capitalist structures and processes? What stakes might feminists have in preserving or uprooting capitalism?

(Spring) Religion and Democracy

Across the globe, religion appears to be steadily inserting itself into politics. In this course, we will examine themes such as liberalism, the separation of church and state, democracy, the burgeoning of the New Christian Right in the United States, Islam’s relationship with liberalism, and the growth of Hindu Nationalism in South Asia. The purpose of the course is to investigate some of the tensions that exist between liberal-democratic practices and deeply-held religious convictions to discover whether any synthesis of religion and politics is at all possible in an increasingly modernizing and globalizing world.

(Fall) The New Democracies

(Taught in English; Russian Eurasian Studies 313f)
With the collapse of the USSR we were told that history was dead and liberal democracy triumphant. There was a "third wave" of democratic change. How accurate have these optimistic characterizations turned out to be? After an introduction to theories of liberal democracy and to the new discipline of "transitology" we will look at how states and leaders have applied such liberal-democratic ideas in Eastern Europe and the former USSR (with comparative examples from Africa and South America), and with what success.

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Spring) Colloquium in Politics: Community Development - *Not offered this year/term
(Community-based learning course)
The course engages students in the theories, debates, and strategies regarding the revitalization of inner-city communities. Examines what roles business, government, and nonprofit, community-based organizations (the "third sector") play in developing "blighted" neighborhoods. Topics include economic development, affordable housing, equal and accessible social services, and political empowerment. Features speakers from related fields of community development. Students conduct research projects generated by community-based organizations in Holyoke and Springfield. Focuses on helping students integrate knowledge derived from class discussions, speakers, and their research experience.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in politics including Politics 252 or permission of instructor
Instructors: P. Smith

(Fall) The Politics of Work - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar explores the contentious relationship between work and politics. The focus will be on workplace dynamics and how technological change, gender, methods of labor organization, and management philosophy affect the way in which authority is structured and perpetuated. The experiences of such regions as the United States, Japan, and China will also be used to shed light on the future of labor and work in an age of increasing globalization.

(Fall) War and Peace in South Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Multiple forms of conflict and violence fueled by economic inequality, political instability, and rising radicalism mark South Asia—a region of contested histories, ideologies, and territories. We will explore the histories and causes of enduring conflicts, such as Kashmir and the wars in Afghanistan, separatist movements in Pakistan, India, and Sri Lanka, and potential conflicts over scarce water and energy resources. We will conclude with analysis of the role of external powers, such as China, Iran, and the U.S. in South Asia and assess the prospects for peace in the region.
Prerequisites: jr. sr.

(Fall) Democratization and Civil Society in East Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the dramatic emergence of democratic institutions and civil society in East Asia. The primary aim of the class is to help students understand and analyze the process of democratic unfolding in Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. We will also evaluate China’s recent, albeit limited experiments with democratic practices. We will begin by contrasting Western perspectives of democracy with both traditional and more contemporary Asian understandings of democracy. We will then focus on the actual processes of democratic consolidation in each of the cases, especially the developments that precipitated political crisis and ultimately, political change.
Prerequisites: jr. sr.

(Spring) Politics & Rhetoric - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
People have long accused politicians of using rhetoric to pander to audiences and get what they want regardless of the truth. But politics, especially democratic politics, depends on communication to persuade and motivate others. What is the relationship between speech and politics? Can we have political communication without rhetoric? How can citizens use speech to improve democracy? What are the political effects of different rhetorical styles? How can speech help communities deal with conflict? The course will focus on these questions, moving from classical writings on rhetoric to contemporary democratic political theory.

(Spring) Dictatorships, Democracies and Human Rights in Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
During the 1960s and 70s military coups brought authoritarian regimes to power in Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay. In an effort to prevent what was perceived as imminent socialist revolutions, they launched repressive campaigns aimed at demobilizing labor and eliminating dissent. The 1980s saw the establishment of democratic regimes in all four countries. The course will analyze the role of human rights movements in the transition and consolidation of democracy, as well as the design and implementation of transitional justice mechanisms in each of these cases.
Instructors: C. Fernandez Anderson

(Fall) International Migration
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines migration and transnational processes from a comparative perspective. It focuses on the relationship between globalization and international migration, with special attention to transnational networks and diaspora politics. We will explore major theories, forms, and patterns of migration in global politics; the involvement of diaspora organizations in the politics of host and home states; and the implications of migration and refugee flows for state sovereignty, national identity, and citizenship. We will conclude by analyzing the key debates and framing of immigration policies and models of citizenship in Europe and the United States.

(Spring) Decision Making
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?

(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: Political Violence
Preamble (for topics courses): This course explores such contested terms of political discourse as freedom, alienation, power, democracy, conservatism, cosmopolitanism, and the public sphere - as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of political thought. Each year we will highlight a different conceptual theme.

Societies pride themselves on being civilized when they transcend rule by violence and implant rule by law. Civilized societies pride themselves on being liberal democracies when they recognize the political equality of all citizens, represent the interest of those citizens in government, and make decisions through peaceful deliberation and compromise. But what exactly is violence, and what is wrong with it? Does it entail physical force, or can violence be present when bloodshed is absent? Is it a means to power, an expression of powerlessness, or both? Is justice always served by the exit of violence from social life? Are liberal democracy and violence truly antithetical?

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Politics, International Relations, Critical Social Thought

Instructors: J. Cocks

(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: Citizen and the Foreigner - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course explores such contested terms of political discourse as freedom, alienation, power, democracy, conservatism, cosmopolitanism, and the public sphere - as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of political thought. Each year we will highlight a different conceptual theme.

This year we will examine the idea of the citizen and the foreigner, examining both classic theories of citizenship and challenges to those theories posed by diasporic groups and other cultural strangers such as exiles, refugees, economic migrants, and stateless populations. We also will consider the pressures placed on classic notions of citizenship by transnational social and environmental problems, as well as by the power of global economic forces over domestic political communities.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Psychology: 100 Marathons
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Why do some people push themselves further than what seems humanly possible, while others stop short? Why is something just a hobby for one person, and a complete identity or life’s work for another? In this course, we will explore people who run 100 marathons, both literally and metaphorically, including athletes, business leaders, and educational reformers. We will examine case studies of incredible stamina, persistence, and leadership, using a variety of analytic perspectives, including psychological, spiritual, contextual, and physical.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Psychology: Bright, Shiny People. The Technology of Human Enhancement
First-year seminar
Is intellectual and physical performance enhanced by neuroactive chemicals? Will reproductive technology obviate the necessity of the biological womb? What is the limit of life extension? Of interest is the application of technology to human enhancement. The course departs from a survey of current attempts to restore human function, and moves to a consideration of the imagined futures of nanotechnology, biotechnology, information technology, and cognitive science. A context for enhancement is found in modern fiction (e.g., Shelley’s Frankenstein) and culture (e.g., the eugenics movement), and postmodern philosophy (e.g., transhumanism) and literature (e.g., cyberpunk).

(Fall) What Is Memory?
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 212f (1))
Memory has a wide range of meanings and applications in many different contexts. What, for example, is the difference between artificial intelligence and human memory? How are national identities constructed around the commemoration of great events? What is the importance of memory in relation to concepts like justice and progress? How do rituals and performances work to determine gender and other identities? How can we understand the differences in episodic, implicit, long-term, short-term, or working memory? For individuals and societies, what are the implications of the absence of memory? We examine psychological, social, political, and cultural approaches to understanding memory.
Prerequisites: Prereq sophomore or junior; first years with permission of the instructor
Notes: Gateway course for the thematic minor on Memory.

PSYCH-234-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Differences in Learning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Education 234s)
Prerequisites: A 100 level course in psychology, 230 or 236, and 233
Instructors: G. Bass
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-236-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Adolescent Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course offers a comprehensive introduction to human development during adolescence. It considers historical and cultural forces that contribute to adolescence as a distinct segment of the life span. Contemporary problems confronting adolescents—such as crime, violence, gender, race, eating disorders, substance abuse, and depression—are also examined.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: E. Graham
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-240-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Visual and Auditory Perception
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why is it that some people, mostly men, cannot distinguish red socks from green ones? Why does the moon on the horizon appear larger than when it is overhead? How do Magic Eye pictures work? Why does the Mona Lisa's smile seem so elusive? This course addresses such questions by examining biological and psychological studies of the visual and auditory systems. Among the topics we will explore are object recognition; color vision; the perception of depth, size, and movement; the effects of experience on perception; sound localization; and the perception of pitch.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: M. Breen
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-241-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: M. Breen
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-245-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Psychology of Music
Every culture in the world has some form of music, but why did music evolve, and what function does it serve? In this course, we will explore the cognitive and neural processes that underlie music perception and production to ask the following questions: Does music have universal features that cross cultures? How does music convey emotion? What do infants know about music? Is music specifically human? And finally, what are the parallels between music and language? Through these questions, we hope to discover something about the origin of music and what makes it such an integral part of our daily lives.

Prerequisites: a 100 level course in Psychology or permission of instructor. Formal music training is not required for the course

Instructors: M. Breen

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-250-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012

(Fall) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior

(Neuroscience and Behavior 250f)

This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 4 credits in biological sciences, and instructor permission

Instructors: W. Millard

Expected enrollment: 50

PSYCH-250-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012

(Spring) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior

(Neuroscience and Behavior 250s)

This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology and 4 credits in biological sciences

Instructors: S. Tershner

Expected enrollment: 50

PSYCH-251-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012

(Fall) Animal Behavior

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking-intensive)

Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology

Instructors: K. Hollis

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-252-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012

(Fall) Bon Appetit! Food, Appetite, and Culture

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Food is energy, an occasion for intimacy, and often a cause of aggression and pathology. The provenance of food preferences in humans and other species is considered from the perspectives of anthropology, biology, neuroscience, and psychology. Specific topics include the sensory properties of food, attitudes toward food, the psychology of ingestion, and the neuroscience of feeding.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology

Instructors: W. Millard

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012

(Fall) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Independent study programs are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor

Instructors: The department
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent research projects are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department.

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor - *Not offered this year/term
(Gender Studies 333s(04))
This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students must meet with instructor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-320-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Concepts of Abnormality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of how maladaptive patterns of thought and action are understood from a psychological viewpoint. Behaviors ranging from neurotic to psychotic are studied in terms of underlying character structure and origins in childhood experience. Competing psychoanalytic theories are brought to bear on these phenomena.
Prerequisites: jr, sr (permission required for exceptions), two prior psychology courses, Psychology 230 recommended
Instructors: R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Laboratory in Qualitative Research - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course offers a hands-on introduction to methods of psychological research that focus on the qualitative description and analysis of human experience. Students learn a variety of techniques of data collection (interviewing, intensive observation, archival research) and methods of analyzing textual sources—from historical accounts to blogs, memoirs, observational narratives, and interview transcripts. Readings focus on specific methodological practices as well as on the history and philosophy of science differentiating qualitative methods from other approaches to psychological research. Students work both collaboratively and individually on projects throughout the course.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor.
Notes: This course also counts in the Social area of psychology.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to research methods in abnormal and personality psychology. Students will work as a class to collect data using quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Students will be expected to collect survey- and questionnaire-based data as well as engage in some interviewing projects. We will consider the various stages of research including literature review, design, ethical considerations, data collection, and analysis (qualitative and quantitative), and consider the statistical inference or implications of our findings. The course focuses on the impact of stress and coping on the lives of individuals, identity, their relationships, and psychological adjustment.
Prerequisites: Jr. sr., Psych 200, 201; one course in the personality/abnormal area preferred, and permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Douglas
PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Psychology of Trauma
(Gender Studies 333f(01))
What happens after a traumatic event? Why do some people develop psychological disorders and others do not? This course will explore the psychological theories and research on trauma and stress. Topics covered will include childhood abuse, domestic violence, combat violence, community violence, and interpersonal violence. The seminar will explore psychological dysfunction, disorders, as well as adaptation and coping following exposure to traumatic stress. In addition, the course will explore the concept of "cultural trauma."
Prerequisites: 100 level psychology course; Psychology 200; jr or sr. A course in abnormal psychology preferred.
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-329-02 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: First-Person Narratives of Madness
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Psychologists have typically conceptualized "mental illness" in terms of the symptoms and diagnoses proposed by psychiatrists in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). These categories, while perhaps useful for prescribing medication, do little to help us understand the subjective experiences that are considered "mad." In this seminar, we analyze accounts (historical and contemporary) written by people who have experienced extreme states, intense emotions, or unusual perceptions or beliefs, to understand how these "counter-narratives" offer new insights into psychological life.
Prerequisites: A 100-level course in psychology, jr, sr and permission of instructor; Students with a background in literature particularly welcome. Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors
Notes: Students must submit an information sheet (form available in department office) by noon on Thursday of advising week to get permission to register for the course.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Factors Affecting the "Math Path" of Young Women
(Gender Studies 333f (07))
This course is a study of research methods in educational settings, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques and using as a context adolescent girls' educational experiences in mathematics. Students will be working directly with the SummerMath database, which spans more than 25 years. Students will develop skills in formulating research questions, designing research, and finding appropriate methods (both qualitative and quantitative) by which to analyze the data. Each student will complete a major research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201 and permission of instructor
Notes: Students should submit a statement of interest by email to the professor during advising week. This course can be counted in area C (Developmental and Educational Psychology) OR D (Perception and Cognition) of the curriculum.
Instructors: C. Morrow
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Adoption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Adoption has become a common way to create families in the United States and many other countries. The experience of adoptees, birth parents, and adoptive families raise many questions about family relationships, identities, and community membership. In this course we will look how adoption has been studied, with a particular focus on the experiences of adoptees and their adoptive parents. Students will develop research questions, consider different methods and related ethical issues, and analyze survey and interview data.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; and 230 or 236.
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-02 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Personality, Health, and Well-Being in Midlife
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Recent research suggests that midlife is a unique phase and is distinct from younger and older adulthood. This course will cover the latest theory and research on midlife development, examining the psychological, biomedical and social aspects within the context of the adult lifespan. Students will conduct two research projects during the semester examining midlife using different methodologies, and give presentations on selected articles and lead in-class discussions. By the end of this course students will have developed their skills in writing coherent literature reviews, gain confidence using analytical methods (SPSS), and learn to write a high-quality research report.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; and 230 or 236

Instructors: E. Graham

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 labs (3 hours each) required at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook

Instructors: P. Ramsey

Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-339-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: Adult Development and Aging
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course will focus on the developmental changes that occur after adolescence. Specifically we will discuss emotional, cognitive and psychosocial changes across the adult lifespan, including middle age and older adulthood. Critical study of the theories and methods in the field will be addressed, and we will evaluate what it means to age successfully or unsuccessfully from various psychological perspectives.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or 236

Instructors: E. Graham

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy

(Community-based learning course)

Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with the professor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.

Notes: 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield is required.

Instructors: K. Binder

Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Lab in Perception and Cognition: Speech
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course presents an overview of laboratory methods in cognitive psychology, including: research design, methodology, data analysis, and statistical inference. We will explore these issues through the lens of human communication; specifically, speech. Students will design and complete a research project in which they record and analyze speech to explore questions about how meaning is expressed through spoken language.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201 and 241
Languages differ in the way they describe the world. For example, the noun for bridge is feminine in German, but masculine in French. Russian has two words for blue, while English has only one. The Piraha (an Amazonian hunter-gatherer tribe) arguably have no number words. In this course, we will be asking to what extent these cross-linguistic differences are reflected in thought. That is, do German speakers think bridges are more feminine than French speakers do? Can Russian speakers discriminate different shades of blue better than English speakers? Can the Piraha count? In exploring these questions, we hope to discover how tightly linked language and thought are.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 241.

Instructors: M. Breen

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and one of the following: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333; and permission of instructor
Notes: Interested students must meet with the instructor before or during the advising week to obtain additional information about the course.
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-359-01 - Psychology - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior: Of Madness and Molecules: Seminar in Neuropsychopharmacology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Charpentier, a French scientist of the 1940s, unwittingly discovered a chemical that was to alter dramatically our understanding of madness. The chemical, chlorpromazine, has been widely used for the treatment of psychosis. Of interest is neuropsychopharmacology—the science and the technology. The principles of pharmacology are discussed and precede the examination of applications of the technology to psychopathology (for example, schizophrenia, depression, anxiety, and violent behavior).
Prerequisites: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333 and permission of instructor
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Examining Features of Shape and Measuring Space in One, Two, and Three Dimensions

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 201)

We will work with 2D and 3D shapes, develop mathematical vocabulary regarding features of shapes, and explore definitions and properties of geometric objects. The seminar includes a study of angle, similarity, congruence, and the relationship between 3D objects and their 2D representations. The measurement component will provide opportunities to examine different attributes of size, develop facility in composing and decomposing shapes, and apply these skills to make sense of formulas for area and volume. As we explore the conceptual issues of length, area, and volume and their complex interrelationships, we will also examine how children develop these ideas.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor

(Fall) Racism and Inequality in Schools and Society

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)

What is race? Who decides? Are we a "postracial" society? This course focuses on historical, social, psychological, and legal underpinnings of the social construction of race and examines how perspectives on race have influenced the lives of students and teachers in schools. Class sessions compare the old vs. "new" racism, contrast the workings of white privilege with calls for white responsibility, explore perspectives on the "achievement" and "opportunity" gaps, and examine how antiracist pedagogies can address inequities in education at the curricular, interpersonal, and institutional levels. Essays, response papers, field experiences, and a digital media project are required.

Prerequisites: sophomore, junior, senior or permission of instructor

Notes: Prepracticum required

Instructors: S. Lawrence

(Spring) The Process of Teaching and Learning: Developing Literacy in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Through a balanced and integrated approach students will learn to develop literacy in early childhood/elementary schools. Class members will learn about emergent literacy, diagnosing language needs, integrating phonics skills in a literature-based program, the teaching of process writing, children's fiction and nonfiction literature, and the use of portfolios for assessment. Course required for spring semester practicum students. Course evaluation is based on written and oral work done individually and in groups. Requires a prepracticum.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Limited to students accepted to the practicum year program
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: S. Frenette

(January) Observing and Assisting in Inclusive Classrooms
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students are expected to complete a supervised field experience full-time every day during the January Term in an inclusive classroom in a school setting. Placements can be located within or outside of the Five College area. In addition to the field experience component, students attend three course meetings (detailed below). Reading and writing assignments focus on a survey of learning disabilities, descriptions of special education programs, understanding Individuals with Disabilities Education Act policies and placement options, interpreting Individualized Education Program plans, and planning curriculum for inclusive classrooms.

Prerequisites: One of the following: Psychology 230, 233, 236, Education 205, Educational Studies 215 or permission of instructor. Three mandatory meetings (2 hours each): two in November and one in Feb. Prepracticum: five days a week for three weeks in January; permission to participate in prepracticum experience for credit is contingent upon attendance at the meetings in November. Consult Ms. Lawrence or Ms. Carlisle in October for exact dates of the November course meetings.

Notes: This course is required of all students pursuing teacher licensure. Graded on a credit/no credit basis.

(Spring) Practicum Seminar on Teaching and Learning: Early Childhood and Elementary Education

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This weekly seminar provides students with opportunities to examine curriculum development models, develop an integrated curriculum unit utilizing state and national content area standards, and engage in dialogue with practicing teachers regarding numerous aspects of teaching and student learning. Additional topics covered include the arts in education, physical education, legal obligations of teachers, and home-school communication. As is the case in all pre-licensure programs, there is continued emphasis on addressing the needs of students with disabilities and English Language Learners.

Prerequisites: Limited to students accepted into the practicum year program

Instructors: L. Reilly Carlisle

Expected enrollment: 30

EDUC-323-01 - Psychology and Education - 2011-2012
(Spring) Student Teaching in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools

Credits/PE Units: 10; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Students participate in full-time student teaching in early childhood and elementary classrooms for 12 weeks. During this semester-long field-based placement, students hone classroom management skills, implement an extended integrated curriculum unit utilizing state and national content area standards, and develop a wide range of assessment skills. The practicum culminates in two weeks of Lead Teaching, during which the students are responsible for managing all aspects of the classroom program. Students work with classroom teachers and college supervisors to address Professional Teaching Standards as required by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' Pre-service Performance Assessment Program.

Prerequisites: Sr, Education 300, 325 and 320j, and permission of instructor

(Spring) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Spring) The Sabbath in Jewish History and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 225)
The Sabbath, the notion and institution of a day of rest, appears to have been innovated in ancient Israel, as evidenced by the Hebrew Bible. This course systematically explores the origins, development, and nature of the Sabbath in Judaism, including desisting from labor and worldly pursuits, and as an opportunity for spiritual rejuvenation and communal celebration. How has the observance of the Sabbath changed over time, and varied among different regional communities? How has it evolved in our own time? We will also take a comparative approach by studying Sabbath or days of rest in other religious traditions, including both Western and Asian cultures.

(Fall) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 235)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Sohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Fall) Early Christianity in Iraq and Iran - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the first millennium, Christianity thrived throughout the Middle East. Because Roman Catholic and Protestant churches later declared many of these Christians to be heretics, their stories have often been excluded from the history of Christianity. This course challenges the assumption of Christianity as a "Western" religion and asks how our understanding of global Christianity changes when we include the history and perspective of Eastern Christians. We will read such sources as the tale of a transvestite nun, a letter allegedly written by Jesus, ancient Christian hymns, the story of a demon-possessed monastery, and the first Christian writings on Islam.

(Spring) Violence vs. Nonviolence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores in a comparative way, metaphorical reflections on violence and nonviolence. Sacred and classical texts that have informed social consciousness on the necessity of 'Duty' and its implications for the body, as well as offering a distinctive view of Reality will serve as the primary readings for this class; they include the Bhagavad-Gita, the Phaedo, the Bible, the Koran, and Douglass's My Bondage and My Freedom. Modern case studies involving Gandhi, King, Cleaver, and suicide bombers will be compared against the metaphorical premises of these sacred and classical texts.

(Spring) Women and Buddhism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210s(03))
This course explores women and Buddhism during different historical periods and in different cultures. Through a variety of sources, this course will illuminate Buddhist concepts of gender and sexuality, views of women's spiritual capacities, the diversity of women's images, roles, experiences, concerns, and contributions in Buddhist societies, and scholarly approaches to women in Buddhism. Special attention will be given to how gender is constructed in each cultural and religious context encountered, with particular emphasis on Buddhist women in Southeast Asia. We will look into the reasons why texts on religion have not always included the voices of women, and we will investigate ways to uncover them through research techniques and alternative hermeneutical strategies.
Notes: This course counts toward Asian Studies major.

RELIG-244-01 - Religion - 2011-2012
(Spring) Women in the Bible
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore the representation of women in the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament. We will begin by discussing a spectrum of feminist approaches to the interpretation of the Bible, ranging from those who condemn the Bible as fundamentally and inevitably patriarchal to those who seek ways to understand the Bible in less patriarchal and more feminist terms. We will then survey the biblical, apocryphal, and select non-canonical writings that are most relevant for women, as well as interpretations by contemporary feminist scholars. This course should help students better articulate their own views on how the Bible represents women.

(Fall) Hinduism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Asian Studies 261)
A major religious tradition of India, Hinduism is in practice a multiplicity of expressions. This course explores Hinduism's diverse traditions through its history, unifying themes, texts, and popular observances. We will read from the great texts (Ramayana, Mahabharata), learn about gods and goddesses (Krishna, the Great Goddess), and discuss art and ritual. Topics include: body techniques and the material universe (yoga, Tantra); philosophical traditions, concepts (karma, dharma); religious figures (Mirabai); movements (Bhakti). Hinduism's contemporary expressions in India and the West will be considered in social and historical context. Frequent illustration is provided through videos.

(Fall) Introduction to Buddhism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Some scholars have argued that there is no such thing as "Buddhism" in the singular, but only "Buddhisms" in the plural. This course introduces students to the historically and culturally diverse expressions of Buddhism. We will ask ourselves what Buddhism has meant to different people in different times and places, with particular attention to changing conceptions of belief and practice. Among the traditions we will study are Theravada, Zen, Pure Land, and Tantra.

This is an introduction to contemporary and classical Buddhist ethical ideals. Working with primary and secondary sources, we will ask the following questions: Is the universe moral? What are Buddhist ethical ideals and who embodies these? How do contemporary Buddhists interpret classical ethical ideals? What moral dilemmas do Buddhists face today? How do Buddhists grapple with moral ambiguity? We will consider the perspectives of Buddhists from different cultures including India, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Vietnam, Japan, and the United States.

(Spring) The Ethics of Interpersonal Relations in Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 275-01)
As in other religious traditions, interpersonal relations are central to Judaism. Drawing upon both classical and modern textual sources, this course explores such themes as forgiveness, compassion, humility, and honesty in interpersonal affairs. It also considers notions of love, friendship, and teacher-disciple relations, both between individuals and in the context of religious community.

(Spring) Culture Wars in Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Already in the 18th century, radical biblical critics offered a potent challenge to the churches of the day. Some called into question the Bible's historical accuracy. Others denied the relevance of the biblical narratives even if critical scholarship could reconstruct what had actually happened. Emerging conservative and liberal parties within the churches differed on how best to respond to this radical scholarship, and their differences generated heated polemics as well as heresy trials. In this course, we will examine some of the efforts to explain what happened in Palestine so long ago and also how these issues continue to inform both religion and politics in the United States today.

RELIG-304-01 - Religion - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in New Testament: Paul and the Earliest Christians
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar explores theological patterns in early Christianity as reflected in the literature of the New Testament. In any given semester, it is organized around a particular theme (e.g., eschatology, christology, ethics, soteriology) or it may be organized around a particular person or literature (such as Pauline thought, Johannine thought). Topies are announced in advance of the semester in which the course is to be given.
This course analyzes the earliest surviving Christian documents, the writings of the apostle Paul and his immediate followers. We will examine both those works that made it into the New Testament canon (e.g., Paul's letters, the Acts of the Apostles, the deutero-Pauline epistles) and those that did not (e.g. the Acts of Paul and Thecla). We will emphasize the general outlines of Paul's theology as well as its application to particular questions in his day.

(Spring) Sex and the Early Church - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
This course examines the various ways first-through fifth-century Christians addressed questions regarding human sexuality. We will concentrate on the rise of sexual asceticism and pay particular attention to the relationship between sexuality and issues of gender, culture, power, and resistance. Primary readings will include letters, narrative accounts of female and male ascetics, monastic rules, and "heretical" scriptures. These will be supplemented by modern scholarship in early Christian studies and the history of sexuality.
Prerequisites: Previous course in religion or gender studies
Instructors: M. Penn

(Spring) Women and Early Christianity - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This seminar investigates the role of women in the New Testament and in early Christian communities. We will explore controversies concerning women's leadership in the early church as well as the role of gender and gender imagery in the development of early Christian thought and practice. Our seminar will look at ancient marriage guides, misogynistic satires, New Testament gospels, Pauline letters, accounts of female martyrs, early church manuals, theological treatises, and accounts of female saints. We also will examine how recent work in women's studies, sexuality studies, and queer theory can help us better understand the power dynamics of early Christianity.

(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Theology: Modern Mythmaking and Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Stories created through the cultural media have increasingly shaped social worldviews. Many have assumed the status as Sacred Myths. Using the analyses of Eliade, Geertz, Tillich, Derrida, and others, we will examine contemporary films and texts such as The Wizard of Oz, The Da Vinci Code, Life of Pi, The Matrix, and Whale Rider. We will compare these cultural expressions with the classic stories of major religious traditions in order to determine if they qualify as contemporary Sacred Myths.

(Spring) Asian Religions IV: Gods, Myths and Devotion: Hindu Sacred Narratives - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course provides the opportunity for intensive study in Asian religious traditions. One of the traditions listed here is considered each time the course is offered. The student may therefore receive credit more than once. I. The Islamic Tradition II. History of Chinese Thought III. Japanese Religious Traditions IV. Hinduism
Telling, enacting, and listening to myths and sacred tales are essential modes of religious practice in Hinduism. This seminar focuses on the myths of the major Hindu gods and goddesses, women's ritual tales, and the lives and poetry of exemplary devotees (bhakta) of Shiva, Krishna, and Devi, the Great Goddess. We will examine the theologies and meanings manifested in these stories, in relation to narrative genres and structures, forms of expression (e.g., the dancing Shiva icon, Ramayana epic theater) and ritual and performance contexts (e.g., Goddess festival).

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
This course will examine the historical and cultural creation of the Shaker society. The religious vision of an alternative society whose birth and development paralleled that of the new American nation; by contrast and by imitation, the separate Shaker route thus offers an intriguing critique of American society and its values, and an unusual laboratory for examining a religious community based on a dual godhead.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
A distinctive mark of Western thought in the nineteenth century was its fascination with "the origin of things." The origin of the species and the origin of the universe are two prime examples. These two concerns, in particular, had a decisive impact on how religion and science came to be understood and expressed in the twentieth century. As a consequence of the ensuing public debate, this question of "origins" presented a direct challenge to the received theory of creation, the meaning of miracles, as well as the nature of biblical inspiration.

(Spring) Written on the Body: Body Images and Practices in Religious Traditions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines body images and practices in diverse religious traditions around the world. Working with different methodological and theoretical perspectives, we will ask the following questions: What are bodies? How do body images perpetuate or challenge religious and social norms? What roles do bodies play in religious experience? We will generate answers to these questions by investigating a wide range of religious phenomena including healing rituals, relics, saints, fasting, asceticism, and modest dress.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
Travel literature has always been a precious source for the study of culture, politics, arts and, last but not least, people. From Tacitus to Marco Polo, from Stendhal to Camilo Jose Cela, we will read and discuss authors who traveled for political, personal, and recreational reasons. We will also pay special attention to tales of emigration and immigration in the third millennium.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.

(Taught in English)
Explores the past and present of the diverse peoples and cultures inhabiting the territory once dominated by the Russian Empire and the Soviet Union. How has this region been imagined and mapped? How useful are conventional definitions of the boundary between "Europe" and "Asia"? What is meant by "Eastern Europe," "Central Europe," and "Eurasia"? Topics to be considered will include the struggle for a usable past and the emergence of national identity; techniques of imperial rule and colonial domination; formation and dissemination of knowledge about Eurasia; cultural traditions of the region. Designed to help students navigate the world of post-Soviet and post-socialist Eurasia.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Leo Tolstoy's Anna Karenina is an action-packed drama about love and passion, personal freedom and societal expectations, and the costs of living. We will read the text slowly, with attention to the ambiguities that defeat a clear or simple interpretation of the novel's message. We will screen films of Anna Karenina and assess interpretations of the novel.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: To the Last Station: Tolstoy after Anna Karenina - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
2010 marks the centenary of the death of Leo Tolstoy (1828-1910). We will read fiction, essays, and letters that Tolstoy wrote after his masterworks War and Peace and Anna Karenina. Readings include: The Death of Ivan Ilyich, The Power of Darkness, Kreutzer Sonata, Why Do Men Stupefy Themselves?, The Devil, Hadji Murat, and I Cannot Be Silent. We will concurrently read Jay Parini's novel, The Last Station, a portrait of the final years of Tolstoy's life, as well as memoirs by Tolstoy's family and friends. These diverse texts offer contradictory evidence about what happened in Tolstoy's final years.

(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

(Spring) Topics in Twentieth-Century Russian Literature: Abandoned Hopes: The Russian 20th Century in Literature and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Film Studies 270)
This course will survey the dramatic history of Russia in the 20th century through the prism of its cultural achievement. How did aesthetic forms--literature and film--reflect on the age of war, revolution, and terror, characterized by absolute power and stalwart resistance? What means of cultural expression emerged in response to the bloody and often dehumanizing diction of the Soviet period? The task of this course is both to assess the historical panorama of a decisive and difficult period and to zoom in on its especially characteristic works, including literature by Shklovsky, Babel, Bulgakov, Khrams and Brodsky, and films by Eisenstein, Tarkovsky, and Paradjanov.

(Spring) Tolstoy's War and Peace - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Throughout his life and in his art, Tolstoy sought to shape experience into a single and all-embracing philosophical principle, but he was never able to suppress his extravagant intuition that existence, being contradictory, fragmentary, and ultimately subject to forces beyond human control, defied attempts at codification. We will read War and Peace in an attempt to understand how that irresolvable conflict fuels Tolstoy's intellectual pursuits and informs his theories on art.

(Spring) Dostoevsky and the Problem of Evil: The Brothers Karamazov- *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Perhaps no other novelist has delved as deeply into the psychological and metaphysical dimensions of evil as the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky. This course will be devoted to a close reading of Dostoevsky's landmark novel of murderous passion and parricide, The Brothers Karamazov. Why should crime and transgression be a privileged avenue of access into the human interior? How is psychology tied to the metaphysical aspect of human existence? What are the sources of evil--and redemption?

(Taught in English; Politics 209s, European Studies 240s)
Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union's success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy?

(Taught in English; Politics 264f)
Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without an understanding of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and the role played by Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex "New World Order" we live in today. How have the expansion of the European Union, the tragedy of 9/11, and the war against terrorism influenced Russia's relations with the West?

(Taught in English; Politics 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

RES-251-01  - Russian and Eurasian Studies  - 2011-2012
(Fall) Advanced Russian Language: From Reading to Speaking
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): We will study a variety of texts and set them into the cultural context that marks them as distinctly Russian. Texts will be selected from a broad range of genres and sources. Readings, discussions, short oral and written reports. Special attention to complex grammatical constructions and vocabulary building. Taught in Russian.
The course is intended for students who have completed at least four semesters of Russian or the equivalent. Heritage learners of Russian (those who speak the language) will also benefit from the course. With a strong emphasis on integrating vocabulary in context, this course aims to help students advance their lexicon and grammar, increase fluency, and overcome speaking inhibitions. Texts will include short stories, films, and interviews. Frequent short writing assignments.
Prerequisites: Russian & Eurasian Studies 202 or permission of instructor
Notes: Does not satisfy humanities I-A
Instructors: E. Dengub
Expected enrollment: 10

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Fall) The New Democracies
(Taught in English; Politics 300f)
With the collapse of the USSR we were told that history was dead and liberal democracy triumphant. There was a "third wave" of democratic change. How accurate have these optimistic characterizations turned out to be? After an introduction to theories of liberal democracy and to the new discipline of "transitology" we will look at how states and leaders have applied such liberal-democratic ideas in Eastern Europe and the former USSR (with comparative examples from Africa and South America), and with what success.

(Taught in English; Politics 308f)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Taught in English; Politics 350f)
Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia's early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Racial and Ethnic Relations

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

In this course students will be introduced to the various sociological perspectives and theoretical frameworks used to understand racial and ethnic relations in the United States. Racial and ethnic identities remain an important aspect of how people view themselves and others. In this course, we will discuss the dynamics of individual racial and ethnic groups including African Americans, Latino Americans, Native Americans, Asian Americans, and White Americans. We will also examine what the concepts of race and ethnicity mean and how they affect various aspects of American society.

(Spring) Issues in Sociology: Sociology of Popular Culture

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

There is little question that popular culture occupies a central role in the contemporary social world. For some scholars, popular culture serves a social function akin to traditional religion, acting as a form of social solidarity by promoting collective ideas, experiences, and identities. A more critical approach views popular culture as a form of ideological domination, promoting the interests of certain social groups at the expense of others. This course will examine these theories by exploring both the social factors that help influence the production and consumption of popular culture as well as the ways in which popular culture itself helps shape society.

(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Media

This course is an overview of sociological research on mass media in which students are introduced to research at the early Chicago School of sociology (Park), the Frankfurt School tradition (Adorno, Horkheimer, and later Habermas) the Columbia School tradition (Katz, Lazarsfeld), field theory (Bourdieu, Benson), and more recent American cultural perspectives on media (Alexander, STRONG program). The relationship between democracy and the media is a central theme. In the second half of the course, students will be asked to develop their own projects which analyze a contemporary mass media system, such as television news, blogs, social networking, etc.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: The Other in the Media: (New) Media and Otherness in the Americas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Preamble (for topics courses): A seminar in Reading Writing and Reasoning, taught in English
New technologies (Internet, wireless devices, digital storytelling) are changing the media landscape as well as social, political, and economic relationships. The "other" media is reshaping the notion of otherness itself, as new forms of representation (self-produced, instantly available, some times unfiltered) continue to emerge and consolidate worldwide. This class examines how traditionally marginalized groups, including the Zapatistas in Mexico, at-risk youth in Brazil, and Latino communities in the U.S., utilize new media to gain visibility and tell their stories in their own voice (in English).

(Fall) Spanish for Heritage Speakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
Any "heritage" speaker regardless of her level of oral proficiency in Spanish may enroll. Course components build on students' existing linguistic skills, encourage interactions with various texts and media (i.e., written essays, newspapers, films, and other media), and examine issues of importance to Spanish speakers of the Americas. Specific activities include formal and informal writing; class discussions; oral presentations such as interviews, dialogues, and role-plays; grammar review focusing on verb tenses and syllabification; vocabulary expansion and development; peer editing of written assignments; analysis of literary works from Spain and Latin America; and a semester project.
Prerequisites: fy, so, jr, or sr with permission of instructor
Notes: This course is designed for students who have acquired oral fluency in Spanish through their home environments but have had little formal training in reading and writing.

(Fall) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Afro-Latina/o Diasporic Performance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Latin American Studies 287f(02))
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This course focuses on performance practices rooted in the African diaspora of the Americas, with particular attention to how race, ethnicity, sexuality, class, and gender are articulated in multiple aesthetic approaches. We will interrogate how these performances have functioned and continue to inspire political transformation as well as the recovery of shared histories of the Afro-Latina/o diaspora.

(Spring) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Black Spain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This survey course studies the complex histories and identities of blacks in Spain from the early medieval period to the present. The aim of this course is to learn a new historical perspective that brings into focus the role of black Africans (or those of African descent) as significant actors in the construction of Spain. An interdisciplinary approach will take us from the first visual representation of blacks in Alfonso X's Cantigas in the thirteenth century, through the plays based on the Renaissance black scholar Juan Latino, to the contemporary musical contributions of Hijas del Sol and Buika.
In Spanish.

(Spring) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Nomadic Imaginaries: The Cosmopolitan Andes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
One of the most important sociocultural phenomena in the twentieth-century Andes was the migration from rural towns to cities. However, in the twenty-first century, the central Andes is largely "elsewhere": New York City, Madrid, Buenos Aires, and Quebec. We will work with the theme of cosmopolitanism across three scales. First, how did the indigenous populations of the rural Andes transform the urban "lettered cities" of Quito, Lima, and La Paz? Second, how do Andean novelists and poets living in the U.S., such as Edmundo Paz-Soldán and Eduardo Mitre, reflect "lo andino" from afar? And third, how have a series of ancient texts on journeys been recently recapitulated within the region?

(Fall) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: Avant-Garde Image/Text: Locating the New
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
The "new" that defines an avant-garde aesthetic is characterized by the collision between visual images and written words. W.J.T. Mitchell has opined, "the differences between images and language are in practice, linked to things like the difference between the (speaking) self and the (seen) others; between 'hearsay' and 'eyewitness' testimony." Considering the 1920s, the 1960s, and today, we will look at manifestos, magazines, and poetry - print and electronic - that combine the written word with pictographic images to think through the "new" in literary culture as movement across semiotic registers and geographic planes: Peru, Bolivia, Argentina, Brazil, and Spain.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Latin American Studies 287s(01), Theatre Arts 234w(01))

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

This course offers Latina/o and Latin American transnational approaches to the theory and political practice of performance in the Americas with a focus on issues of race, sexuality, class, gender, indigenous and diasporic identities. Employing multiple modes of performance from theater, dance, performance art, ritual, visual art, and folkloric music, we will explore how these practices have functioned and continue to allow for politically subversive or resistant transformation.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Latin American Studies 287f(01))

Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

This course offers an introduction to the study of Latina/o communities in the United States. We will explore major concepts and debates in the growing field of Latina/o studies, through the study of texts across disciplines including history, sociology, performance theory, personal narrative, and ethnography. This interdisciplinary approach will provide us with rich frameworks to interrogate how Latinas/os negotiate complex identities across communities and specific geographic and political contexts.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This course will explore questions and concerns regarding the "Islamic constant" of Spanish history. We will focus on four major political and cultural contexts: the coexistence and conflicts among Jews, Muslims, and Christians in Medieval Iberia; the "moriscos" (converted Muslims) of Imperial Spain (sixteenth-seventeenth centuries); Spanish orientalism and colonial enterprises in Africa between the end of the nineteenth and the first half of the twentieth centuries; and the question of the Muslim emigrants in contemporary Spain. Readings will include literary texts, political and legal documents, historical accounts, and other cultural material such as architecture, film, and documentaries.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Latin American Studies 387s(01), Gender Studies 333s(05))
This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriqueñas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centroamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 380-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema's favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, or Film Studies 202 or Spanish 240; or permission of instructor

New technologies (Internet, wireless devices, digital storytelling) are changing the media landscape as well as social, political, and economic relationships. The "other" media is reshaping the notion of otherness itself, as new forms of representation—self-produced, instantly available, sometimes unfiltered—continue to emerge and consolidate worldwide. This class examines how traditionally marginalized groups, including the Zapatistas in Mexico, at-risk youth in Brazil, and Latino communities in the U.S., utilize new media to gain visibility and tell their stories in their own voice.
Prerequisites: Two courses at the 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Miñana
Expected enrollment: 14

SPAN-350-01 - Spanish - 2011-2012
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This CBL course examines how digital storytelling enables communities to express themselves and gain social visibility through literary and media discourses. How do traditionally marginalized communities tell their own stories? Together with the Springfield-based Latino Youth Media Institute, students will research and produce digital stories on issues that affect the North End community in Springfield. Throughout the semester students will alternate classroom instruction and off-campus work (transportation arranged by the College).
Prerequisites: two courses at the 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Miñana
Expected enrollment: 12
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Artistic encounters between audiences, texts, and artists draw to the fore the tensions between individual human agency and the confines of our social conditioning. Drawing upon the philosophical work of J.C. Mariátegui, C. Vallejo, J. Butler, H. Bergson, and G. Deleuze, we will think about the paradoxical confines of human agency in contemporary Latin America. We will constantly interrogate the term “vital” as connected to aesthetics. We will explore a range of performance works as well as novels and short stories by Jorge Luis Borges, Diamela Eltit, and Alison Spedding, in order to conceive of the physical body as a textual palimpsest and the written text as a breathing organ.
Prerequisites: Two courses at 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-360-01  -  Spanish  - Spring 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Topic: The Mind of the Traveler: Journeys, Expeditions, Tours
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages & Cultures 375, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student’s choice.
Travel literature has always been a precious source for the study of culture, politics, arts and, last but not least, people. From Tacitus to Marco Polo, from Stendhal to Camilo Jose Cela, we will read and discuss authors who traveled for political, personal, and recreational reasons. We will also pay special attention to tales of emigration and immigration in the third millennium.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.
Instructors: O. Frau
Expected enrollment: 16

Statistics

STAT-140-01  -  Statistics  - Fall 2011-2012
(Fall) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological, and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables and regression.
Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra
Instructors: J. Kim

STAT-240-01 - Statistics - 2011-2012
(Fall) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level mathematics or statistics course or permission of instructor.
Instructors: J. Gifford

STAT-340-01 - Statistics - 2011-2012

(Fall) Applied Regression Methods

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course includes methods for choosing, fitting, evaluating, and comparing statistical models; introduces statistical inference; and analyzes data sets taken from research projects in the natural, physical, and social sciences.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211 or any statistics course
Instructors: J. Kim

*(Spring) Linear Statistical Models - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Mathematical concepts from linear algebra and n-dimensional Euclidean geometry, together with statistical concepts of estimation and hypothesis testing, are developed and used to construct a unifying theory for two classes of applied methods: analysis of variance and regression analysis. The theory is developed in three stages: least squares and orthogonal projections; moment assumptions and the Gauss-Markov theorem; and the normal distribution and F-tests.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211
Notes: offered alternate years, next offered spring 2014.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Probability

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Mathematics 342f)
This course develops the ideas of probability simultaneously from experimental and theoretical perspectives. The laboratory provides a range of experiences that enhance and sharpen the theoretical approach and, moreover, allows us to observe regularities in complex phenomena and to conjecture theorems. Topics include: introductory experiments; axiomatic probability; random variables, expectation, and variance; discrete distributions; continuous distributions; stochastic processes; functions of random variables; estimation and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in fall 2011 and 2013.
Instructors: S. Miller

STAT-343-01 - Statistics - 2011-2012

(Spring) Mathematical Statistics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to the mathematical theory of statistics and to the application of that theory to the real world. Topics include probability, random variables, special distributions, introduction to estimation of parameters, and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and 342
Notes: offered every spring semester alternately at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in spring 2014.
Instructors: J. Kim

*(Spring) Seminar in Statistics and Scientific Research: Categorical Data Analysis - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
In this course students will learn about statistical methods for analyzing categorical data. Chi-square tests, measures of association, logistic regression, and loglinear modeling techniques. Background should include estimation, hypothesis test, regression modeling, and the analysis of variance.
Prerequisites: Statistics 240 or 340, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years; next offered in the spring 2013

Theatre Arts

THEAT-105-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Acting I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to performance through a variety of improvisational exercises designed for developing basic techniques. After exploring visual, aural, tactical, and literary performance sources, the students will rehearse and present two performance projects.
Prerequisites: preference to first-years and sophomores.
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours) and lab; $10 lab fee
Instructors: R. Babb
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-120-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Design: Costume Construction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will take you through the theatrical process of creating clothing and accessories for the stage. Hand sewing techniques, fabric use and identification, and clothing alterations are covered. We will explore basic pattern drafting and draping, and some accessory construction will also be covered. We will work from costume renderings to build and alter clothing for our productions.
Prerequisites: preference to fy and so
Notes: lab fee $25; additional purchase of construction supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: E. Bergeron
Expected enrollment: 12
THEAT-122-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set and costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how their work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of this process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, and models. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: lab; $30. lab fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: V. James, S. Conly
Expected enrollment: 30

THEAT-126-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Lighting Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and practice of lighting design (with some sound design) for the theatre. This course will cover the basics about light, lighting equipment and how to develop a design. Students will learn how to draft a light plot, focus lights, and build light cues.
Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: L. Dubin
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) What Is Performance?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 100f-03)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-180-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Introduction to Technical Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine the materials and techniques used in building and operating theatrical scenery. It will include prop building, rigging, and welding for the theatre. Students will learn the skills to work in the scene shop interpreting scenic designs for department productions.
Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: R. Mauran
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-205-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Acting II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of techniques developed in Acting I with a greater commitment to the culture of collaboration. Concentration is on scene work with realist playwrights, contemporary masters e.g. Churchill, Shepard, Wellman and Parks and with new work by contemporary playwrights. Actor training will involve the embodiment of physical behavior, the visceral use of language, and more intermediate composition work with Viewpoints to develop and refine awareness. Practical tools explored in class are intended to offer the student greater vocal, physical, and imaginative freedom and clarity, as well as text analysis skills.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 105 and reference from Acting I instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); lab; $10 lab fee.
Instructors: B. OHarra
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-215-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Performance: Scene Study - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Topics courses offer a specific approach to performing. They may include mask characterization, physical theatre techniques, acting Shakespeare, and vocal training, among others.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 105 and permission of instructor
Instructors: TBA
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-220-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in Design: Makeup and Hair Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, domestic interiors, and materials and techniques. The course combines historical study with studio work.
Using basic painting and three-dimensional techniques, students will learn the fundamentals of stage makeup design and application. Included in the course are units on corrective makeup, aging techniques, realistic and fantasy character makeup, facial prosthetics, hair, and facial hair. Note: Students will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials and for the purchase of a student makeup kit.
Prerequisites: one theatre arts course and permission of instructor, preference to theatre arts majors
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: S. Conly
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-220-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Design: Design Studio - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatrical design, or in related design fields, including theory, practice, and history. Subjects may include opera performance and design, costume crafts, domestic interiors, and materials and techniques. The course combines historical study with studio work.
This course will study the design motifs that were inspired by the culture, religion, and mythology of ancient Greece and Rome. We will investigate their revival and reinterpretation in the architecture, decorative arts, clothing and theatre designs of the Renaissance to the present day.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 122, an art (studio) course or permission of instructor
Notes: lab fee of $10. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: V. James
Expected enrollment: 8

THEAT-234-02 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Topics in Theatre Studies: Queer Theory, Performance, and Public Practice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 223s(01))
How are gender and sexuality constructed, rehearsed, and contested through performance? How can queer cultural production serve as a method of activist intervention in dominant culture? In this course, students are introduced to the central theories and debates in queer studies, with attention to the intersections among gender, sexuality, race, and class. Students also see, write about, and discuss performances that critically engage queer discourses. Additionally, this course asks students to put theory into practice: students stage scenes from selected plays, create original performances inspired by course readings, and experiment with other performative interventions in public culture.
Instructors: J. Pryor
Expected enrollment: 18

THEAT-251-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Critical Social Thought 252f(01))
A survey of world performance history, including the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-252-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement (Critical Social Thought 252)
A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 251
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-280-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Management: Stage Management
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine stage management techniques for academic, professional, and community theatre and explore the role of the stage manager in these various theatre environments. Each student will be required to stage manage a production. Students will also be required to see and evaluate theatrical productions in the area.
Notes: theatre tickets, supplies, and materials are the responsibility of the student
Instructors: J. Fife
Expected enrollment: 8

THEAT-281-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Shakespeare
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Speaking-intensive; English 211)
A study of some of Shakespeare's plays, emphasizing both the poetic and the dramatic aspects of his art, with attention to the historical context and varieties of critical interpretations, including those of the twentieth century. Nine or ten plays.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Hill

(Spring) Playwriting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive; English-205)
This course offers practice in the fundamentals of dramatic structure and technique. Weekly reading assignments will examine the unique nature of writing for the theatre, nuts and bolts of format, tools of the craft, and the playwright's process from formulating a dramatic idea to rewriting. Weekly writing assignments will include scenework, adaptation, and journaling. The course will culminate in the writing of a one-act play. Each class meeting will incorporate reading student work aloud with feedback from the instructor and the class. Students will listen, critique, and develop the vocabulary to discuss plays, structure, story, and content.
Prerequisites: an English writing course, one course in theatre arts, or permission of instructor
Notes: lab fee $10, may be re-taken at 300 level with permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Oswald
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-312-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Topics in Dramatic Literature: Religion, Magic, and the Shakespearean Stage
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; English 312-01)
Religious rituals, black magic, and theatrical entertainment were linked by controversy in Shakespeare's England: were they potent acts or empty performances? How did they seduce and endanger unwitting audiences? Foregrounding the plays of Shakespeare and his contemporaries, we will explore the intersecting cultural histories of religious persecution, witchcraft trials, and movements to close down the theaters. We will consider how England's religious culture was destabilized not only by the Protestant Reformation but also by global trade and travel. Our focus will extend beyond the interpretation of simple representational allusions to grapple with the particular semiotics of theatrical performance.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 211 or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement, meets Theatre dramatic literature requirement
Instructors: J. Degenhardt
Expected enrollment: 15

THEAT-332-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Modern Drama - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

A history of drama in Europe, America, and Africa from the late nineteenth century to the present. Readings include plays by Ibsen, Strindberg, Chekhov, Shaw, O'Casey, Pirandello, O'Neill, Brecht, Williams, Miller, Beckett, Pinter, Hansberry, Soyinka, Aidoo, Shepard, Fugard, Norman, Wilson, and Parks.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English or in theatre arts, or permission of instructor; satisfies theatre arts department seminar.

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours)

Instructors: J. Lemly

THEAT-350-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Fall) Seminar: Performance Criticism Workshop

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar immerses students in the Five College theatre scene, with opportunities for travel to regional professional theatres. By approaching live performance from a critical perspective, students rethink how they see, understand, and respond as audience members. How does the practice of theatre-going relate to public discourse? What is the social function of theatre today? Weekly readings include contemporary theatre criticism and selected plays. Each student writes a number of short reviews over the semester. In-class workshops provide opportunities for discussion and revision. Students learn the arts of editing and offering feedback to others.

Prerequisites: sr or jr with Theatre Arts 251 and 252; soph with permission of instructor

Notes: This course may be taken more than once. Purchase of theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student.

Instructors: E. Rundle

Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-350-01 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar: Wasserstein and Her World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course coincides with MHC's yearlong celebration of renowned American playwright Wendy Wasserstein '71. Readings include Wasserstein's complete works, Julie Salamon's new biography "Wendy and the Lost Boys," and critical essays that place Wasserstein in the context of feminist theatre practice. Students will have the opportunity to conduct archival research using the Wasserstein Papers, and will participate in numerous campus events, including the Weissman Center's playwriting symposium and guest lectures by visiting scholars and artists. As dramaturgs for the department's production of Uncommon Women, the class will create a substantial program honoring Wasserstein and her legacy.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor, with preference to senior Theatre Arts and Gender Studies majors. online application available at http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/theatre/300level_application.html

THEAT-350-02 - Theatre Arts - 2011-2012
(Spring) Seminar: Studies in American Literature: 150 Years in American Theatre

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course will move from April 1865, when Lincoln was assassinated in a Washington theater while laughing at a hugely successful British comedy, to the present day, when revivals of the classic American playtexts grace major theaters in London. We shall follow the emergence of a distinctively national drama, responding to British precedents initially, and more recently incorporating further diverse, even international, perspectives. Playwrights studied include Susan Glaspell, Langston Hughes, Eugene O'Neill, Edward Albee, Miguel Piñero, August Wilson, David Mamet, Suzan-Lori Parks, David Henry Hwang, Lynn Nottage, and Will Eno.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department or in related subjects or permission of instructor

African American and African Studies

AFRAM-100-01 - African American and African Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: American Dreams, American Dilemmas: Race, Democracy, and Human Capability in the Twenty-First Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Dreams of full citizenship in North America for the descendants of enslaved African Americans have been overdetermined by dilemmas of racial inequality and racial conflict. After nearly 400 years in "the new world," the "beloved community" remains elusive. What progress has been made? What challenges remain? Is the project of integration and racial harmony dead (and, if so, what would an autopsy reveal)? What work remains in the quest for racial, gender, and economic justice and democracy? The course has two goals: to highlight critical questions and debates around black striving, and to develop good writing and critical thinking skills.
Prerequisites: fy only
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 18

AFRAM-101-01 - African American and African Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to African American and African Studies: Identity, Community, and Progress - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will introduce students to topics and methodologies within the vast field of African studies. This course will attempt to disrupt the history-based, U.S.-centric model by presenting alternate texts and approaches to the study of the global black experience. We must necessarily begin by questioning the idea, definition, and practice of blackness: what is it? How/did a unified black identity emerge from disparate people, practices, and experiences? After investigating the formation of the African diaspora, we will consider texts from the Americas, Europe, and the continent, assessing each for its historical, aesthetic, political, and cultural value.

(Spring) Introduction to Africana Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive; Politics 200)
This reading- and writing-intensive course draws upon the intellectual traditions of African American, African, and African diasporic studies in order to explore the connections and disjunctures among people of African descent. While the course pays attention to national, regional, and historical contexts, it asks this question: what do African descended people have in common and when and how are their experiences and interests different?

(Fall) African American Culture and Society - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Reviews theory and policy research that targets durable (race, gender, and class) inequalities. How has recent policy (especially involving schools and prisons) shaped public life and private sector capacity in communities of color from 1976 to the present? What are the consequences of governing through crime and punishment? Is poor discipline a viable approach to strengthening the social fabric? Data and personal narrative will be used. Brings together Mount Holyoke students and women in the final stages of their sentences in Hampden County, who collaborate as peers in a semester-long exploration of these issues. The semester culminates with a reading and completion ceremony.

(Spring) Luminous Darkness: African American Social Thought After DuBois - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the causes of and proposed solutions to "the Negro problem" in post-Civil War American public policy. Focuses on the life, work, and legacies of DuBois. Drawing on domestic and diasporic fictional and nonfictional depictions of black life in the "DuBoisian century" the course considers different responses to his 1903 question, "How does it feel to be a problem?" Examining theories, arguments, movements and policies targeting blacks and their environment allows us to criticize black modernity, assess the changing role of black intellectuals in society, evaluate "race theory" and consider dominant and marginal attempts to analyze and overcome the "color line" in America.

(Fall) Black Feminism: Theory and Praxis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores foundational texts of major authors along with lesser-known contributors to the black feminist movement, from the nineteenth century to the present. It also examines the various ways in which black feminist theory has been expressed in and applied to the arts and political activism, analyzing black feminist cultural criticism as it applies to music, film, fine arts, performance, and literature. Conflicts and continuities between black and white feminists, and the role of profeminist men within the movement will be considered as well.

(Spring) Sex, Love, and Gender in Contemporary African American Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Film Studies 320-01)
This course will explore the representation in film of intimate relationships among African Americans. Confronting an ongoing history of racist, sexist, and homophobic images, films produced by and featuring blacks can offer alternate interpretations of love, romance, and sexuality. Coupled with literature and theoretical readings by feminists and black cultural critics, students will consider the function of—and challenges to—intimacy in interpersonal relationships among African Americans. Directors under consideration include Spike Lee, Kasi Lemmons, Marlon Riggs, and Sanaa Hamri.

(Fall) Anthropology of Modern Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Since the mid-nineteenth century, Americans have viewed Japan as the Orient's most exotic and mysterious recess, alternately enticing and frightening in its difference. Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will strive for greater understanding of shared experiences as well as historical particularities. Issues covered may vary from one semester to another, but frequently focus on work, women, minorities, and popular culture. Films and anthropological works provide ethnographic examples of some key concepts.

(Fall) Shopping and Swapping: Cultures of Consumption and Exchange
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
We shop for our food, for our clothes, for our colleges. We purchase cars, manicures, and vacations. It seems that there is little that cannot be bought or sold. But we also give and receive gifts, exchange favors, "go dutch" in restaurants, and invite friends for potlucks. This course examines exchange systems cross-culturally, in order to understand their cultural significance and social consequences. It explores how our own commodity exchange system, which appears to be no more than an efficient means of distributing goods and services, in fact contains intriguing symbolic dimensions similar to the gift exchange systems of Native North America, Melanesia, and Africa.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology and Human Rights: Between Devil's Advocate and Rights Advocacy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores anthropological approaches to human rights—a key theme of transnational politics and international law. Anthropologists have contributed to discussions on human rights since the UN Declaration and the field has provided a vibrant platform to analyze ideologies, politics, and practices surrounding human rights. We will survey an array of anthropological studies that approach human rights from the perspective of cultural relativism, contextualization, advocacy, and practice. Students will gain a critical perspective on the seemingly universal rhetoric of human rights by learning how it produces diverse effects in places such as Africa, Latin America, and the Middle East.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Babul
Expected enrollment: 30

ANTHR-216-02 - Anthropology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology of Way-Finding and Urban Space in Japan
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The anthropology of way-finding has focused on the cognitive problems involved when people move through space. Some have suggested that people memorize sequences of vistas, while others have argued that people abstract mental maps from their experience traveling over specific itineraries. Both approaches have in common a focus on movement through space. Meanwhile, the anthropology of place has focused on the construction of culturally meaningful places out of abstract space. Way-finding is about movement; place is about dwelling. We will explore the intersection of these two approaches, exploring the way that people navigate space and construct place in the urban environment of Tokyo.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Requires application to the instructor by February 24, 2012.

Notes: This 2-credit course will explore these issues during a May 14-28, 2012 trip to Tokyo, Japan. Course/trip fee required.

ANTHR-222-01 - Anthropology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Making Class Visible
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course examines questions of social class within the Mount Holyoke community, at critical intersections with race, gender, and disability. Drawing upon readings in anthropology and film studies that critique the notion of a homogeneous "community" and offer alternative theoretical models, students will focus reflexively on three projects: the co-production of an ethnographic film, the creation of an advertising campaign for the film, creation of a website, for extending the conversation about class. Among the questions we explore at all three sites are: What is your idea of work? Where and when do you notice class? Is class a topic of conversation and/or storytelling in your family?

Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2.75 hours) plus screenings and production time to be arranged

(Fall) Medical Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Biocultural aspects of disease and healing are examined through case studies of nonindustrialized societies, including the relationship between malaria and sickle cell anemia in West Africa and ritual cannibalism, AIDS, and a degenerative nervous-system disorder (kuru) in highland New Guinea. This course surveys the cultural construction of suffering and healing, the medicalization of human social problems, and inequities in the distribution of disease and therapy.

(Spring) Global Health and Humanitarianism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines global health disparities and the unequal distribution of disease, focusing on the health consequences of poverty, structural violence, and globalization. In addition, we critically examine the foundations of global humanitarianism and the complexities, constraints, and prospects for working collaboratively across borders to resolve global health problems. Readings will address how global health is constructed and represented, and why humanitarian endeavors (charitable, philanthropic, NGO, religious, etc.) have emerged as the preferred manner of addressing global health problems in the contemporary era.

(Fall) Anthropology of Reproduction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Gender Studies 333f-02)
This course covers major issues in the anthropology of reproduction, including the relationship between production and reproduction, the gendered division of labor, the state and reproductive policy, embodied metaphors of procreation and parenthood, fertility control and abortion, crosscultural reproductive ethics, and the social implications of new reproductive technologies. We examine the social construction of reproduction in a variety of cultural contexts.

(Fall) Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course traces the otherization of Muslims in Europe and the U.S. in the aftermath of September 11. The course examines the mechanisms through which dehumanizing, racial meanings are extended to designate Muslims as a coherent, timeless category associated with backwardness, violence and an urgent threat. By the end of the semester, the students will gain a critical, comparative perspective to identify and analyze some common mechanisms such as securitization, profiling, and gendering as well as tools such as stigmatization and surveillance that travel across time and space to define certain groups as "dangerous others."
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor

This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Explorations in Cultural Semantics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 376)
Where does meaning come from, and how does it work? Do different forms of expression (verbal, visual, auditory, or tactile) involve different ways of referring, of claiming what a message is about? Where do I locate the differences, how can I describe them? This course offers an introduction to key concepts in the study of meaning with a particular emphasis on narrative theory. We will take a closer look at the similarities and differences in the construction of "the story," in literature, history, myth, and other types of claims from very different historical (Ancient, Medieval, or Modern) and cultural (European, Aboriginal-Australian, and Native-American) settings.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 12 credits in department or permission of instructor. Introductory course in linguistics or literary criticism or equivalent is required.

(Spring) Risk
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
People in all societies face uncertainty. Yet we have taken fear of the unknown and calculations of risk to a new level. Dangers appear to confront us at every turn -- in the form of tainted food, global warming, epidemics, market collapses, and accidents at work and on roads. Terrorist attacks in New York and Tokyo, and crime in Sao Paulo, have led to the increased control of public spaces in these cities. Public spaces have been the source of both excitement and anxiety, but cultures of risk have emphasized their dangers. This course will explore some of the implications of cultures of risk.

ARCH-201-01 - Architectural Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to the Built Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course is conceived as an experiential gateway into the different fields embraced by architecture and design. Emphasizing the collaborative and interdisciplinary character of practice that engages with the built environment, the course units explore specific disciplines, such as architectural design, landscape architecture, interior architecture, urban planning, historic preservation, sustainability, or building technology. Hands-on projects involving visual documentation, design exercises, or fieldwork combine with lectures and discussion that consider the historical and critical context of design and planning.
Prerequisites: Open to first-years and sophomores

ARCH-205-01 - Architectural Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Architecture: Sculpting Space: Introduction to Architectural Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This studio course will be a design investigation of a particular theme in or approach to architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (sketches, plans, elevations, models, computer diagramming, and various modes of digital representation) to interdisciplinary and socially pertinent design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space. Our goal is to apply creative techniques in art and sculpture to the creation of meaningful space.
Prerequisites: One semester of design or drawing is recommended
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials in addition to the standard studio fee of $60
Instructors: T. Long
Expected enrollment: 12
ARCH-205-01 - Architectural Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Architecture: Introduction to Architectural Design - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introductory studio architecture course is a rigorous series of design investigations into architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (drawings, models) to interdisciplinary and significant design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space.
Prerequisites: One semester of Drawing I, design, or sculpture is recommended.
Notes: Studio fee $60.
Instructors: S. Brown

ARCH-280-01 - Architectural Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Architectural Studies: Issues in Sustainability: Adaptive Reuse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course)
This design studio looks at regenerative design and sustainability through the lens of adaptive reuse, restoration of buildings and damaged sites. Topics include historic preservation, community revitalization strategies, urban agriculture initiatives, permaculture, and systems ecology. Students will be asked to invent new program types that reconnect people with the land, cleanse sick sites, and empower urban communities to be stewards of their future. Through this work, students realize how design can be a tool for healing. This course will involve direct contact with local community members as well as numerous field trips to local sites.
Prerequisites: exposure to "Rhinoceros" software preferred but not required
Notes: Students may be asked to purchase model making materials periodically.
Instructors: S. Brown
Expected enrollment: 16

ARCH-305-01 - Architectural Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Topics in Architecture: Urban Sustainability
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course studies urban space shaped by an environmentalist agenda, social equity, and economic sustenance. Urban space is understood in terms of network of spaces defined between building blocks. This emphasis on space reveals human experiences including social relations, interactions with natural settings, and economic activities. Class discussions consider criticisms of rapid urbanization, sprawl, and segregation and review recent models such as new urbanism, smart growth, landscape urbanism, and community design. Through case study assignments, students investigate design and planning strategies at scales ranging from suburbs to mill towns to metropolis.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in architectural studies, art history, or environmental studies
Instructors: I. Kaynar Rohloff
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art, revolution and nationhood; nineteenth-century realism; and abstraction and empathy. Lectures will be complemented by class discussion, short films, and assignments in the art museum.

Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 55

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Image and Environment: Byzantine to Baroque
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course provides a broad overview of Western art and architecture from the sixth through the seventeenth centuries. We will begin with the heritage of the Roman empire in Byzantine art, continue into the Western medieval tradition including Romanesque and Gothic, then conclude with the Renaissance and Baroque periods. We will consider a wide range of objects and media--including mosaics, manuscripts, paintings, sculptures, and prints--as well as building types ranging from churches to palaces and villas. Students will come away with an understanding of the dominant trends and major figures as well as the shifting ideals that shaped creative expression for more than a millennium.
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-100-02 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Image and Environment: Introduction to Art History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course introduces students to the pleasures of art history as a field of inquiry. In case studies beginning with the Renaissance and extending to the Modern era, from Europe and the Americas, we will explore art's complicated and shifting relation to history -- to its social, cultural, political, and intellectual worlds. Lectures and class discussion will be augmented by visits to the art museum.
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 25

ARTH-100-02 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Image and Environment: Architecture: The Face of Human Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of architecture as a functional and expressive medium from the ancient world to the present. Accommodating domestic life, religious ritual, political, commercial, and leisure activities, architecture both shapes and reflects the natural environment, technology, social values and visions. While the history of Western architecture constitutes the primary focus, the course will include buildings from around the world.
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-105-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Arts of Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Asian Studies 107f)
This multicultural course introduces students to the visual arts of Asia from the earliest times to the present. In a writing- and speaking-intensive environment, students will develop skills in visual analysis and art historical interpretation. Illustrated class lectures, group discussions, museum visits, and a variety of writing exercises will allow students to explore architecture, sculpture, painting, and other artifacts in relation to the history and culture of such diverse countries as India, China, Cambodia, Korea, and Japan.

ARTH-110-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Episodes in Modernism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
A discussion-oriented introduction to the field for first-year students. We will work with original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, examining and interpreting various representational strategies from World War II to the present. Attendance in ARTH 245 lecture is required.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-110-02 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Early Modern Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
This seminar explores the extraordinary variety of objects that commemorated love, marriage, fertility, and eroticism in fifteenth and sixteenth-century Europe. We will consider works ranging from the loftiest representations of Platonic love down to the frankly sexual, from paintings to prints to painted marriage chests, including objects that can be seen firsthand in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will refine their skills of visual and verbal analysis, while also learning to interpret these works through the lens of social history, paying particular attention to the role of women.

Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-110-03 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Inside Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
A discussion-oriented introduction to art history. Working with original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, we will examine the various materials, practices, and strategies of artists as we move historically across the centuries from the Renaissance to the present. Students will practice the art of describing and refine their skills of observation and analysis.

Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 14

ARTH-202-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 202-01)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: P. Staiti

(Fall) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Classics 211)
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.

Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 30

ARTH-215-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) The Hellenistic World: From Alexander to Cleopatra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 20

ARTH-216-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Empire: The Art and Archaeology of the Roman Provinces
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
ARTH-222-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Age of the Cathedrals: Art in Europe, 1100-1500
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A historical survey of medieval architecture, monumental sculpture, and painting of France, England, Germany, and Italy. The course concentrates on the great church as a multimedia environment and on the religious, political and social roles of art in society.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 30

ARTH-230-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Renaissance Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey outlines the history of painting, sculpture, architecture, and urbanism in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy, a time of major artistic and cultural transformation. To trace these developments, we will take a geographic approach, focusing on cities and societies in order to understand the diverse social networks that linked artists with their patrons and publics. We will also examine the expanding networks of cross-cultural contact that linked Italian cities like Florence, Rome, and Venice to places throughout western Europe and beyond.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; or with permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-230-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Italian Renaissance Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey explores the development of painting, sculpture, and architecture in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy with emphasis on Florence, Rome, and Venice as discrete cultural contexts for the work of Botticelli, Leonardo, Raphael, Michelangelo, and Titian.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; or with permission of instructor
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-233-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Renaissance and Baroque Architecture in Italy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course focuses on architecture in Italy—including churches, palaces, villas, and fortifications, as well as city planning—from 1400 to 1680. In this period, architects took their cues from the classical tradition even as they carved out their own territory, developing new techniques and perfecting old ones to realize their designs. We will trace shifting architectural practice through key figures from Brunelleschi to Bernini, and through the lens of larger cultural forces. We will also examine buildings in light of the painted and sculpted decorative programs that were often integral to their overall effect.
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-236-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) The Global Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The traditionalist view of the Renaissance treats Europe as if it were an isolated hotbed of cultural innovation. This course will reconsider the period as one of intensifying cross-pollination, when European artists were deeply affected by contact with the Near and Far East, Africa, and the Americas. Specific topics will include representations of distant lands and peoples; the collecting of exotic materials; cartography and expanding world horizons; Venice and the Ottoman world; and the reception of classical architecture in Latin America. We will consider many facets of Renaissance visual culture—from paintings and buildings to maps, prints, and illustrated books—that framed these global crosscurrents.
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-241-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Nineteenth-Century European Art: Neoclassicism to Impressionism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces major developments in European art during the periods traditionally designated by the terms neoclassicism, romanticism, realism, and impressionism. Focusing primarily on French art, but branching out to consider the art of England and Spain, it explores the key artistic themes of the century: the engagement with history, the rise of nationhood, the experience of the urban, the Marxist proposal, the grappling with modernity, the dealing in individual temperaments. Among the major figures to be studied are Constable, Courbet, David, Delacroix, Goya, Ingres, Manet, Monet, and Renoir.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee

(Fall) History of Photography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, Mexico and the countries in Western Europe. It charts the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, so-called "vernacular," and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are the early landscape photographers O'Sullivan and Watkins, the avant-garde photographers Steiglitz and Genthe, the Depression-era photographers Evans and Lange, and the so-called New Documentarians Arbus and Frank.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee

ARTH-243-01 - Art History - 2012-2013

(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) European Art: 1885-1945 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the great ruptures in European art that today we call modernist. It relates aspects of that art to the equally great transformations in European society: revolutionary ferment, the rise and consolidation of industrial capitalism, colonization and its discontents, and world war. Among the major figures to be studied are Duchamp, Matisse, Malevich, Picasso, Seurat, and van Gogh.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-245-01 - Art History - 2012-2013

(Spring) Contemporary Art: Art Since 1945 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography in the United States and, less so, Western Europe since World War II. Initially, most of these paths traced a relationship with the "crisis of modernism," but increasingly, they have taken on a different vitality, drawing energy from a wide variety of postmodern and postcolonial subjects and debates: identity politics, transnationalism, diaspora. Can something that can be identified as an avant-garde practice exist in such a context? What kinds of questions are appropriate to ask about works that stridently attempt to suspend the very category of art?
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) American Painting 1880-1980  *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the work of individual painters and the cultural environment in which painting was produced and viewed in America. Topics will include landscape painting, impressionism, naturalism, modernism, the machine age, the city, abstract expressionism, and pop art. Eakins, Homer, Sargent, Whistler, Cassatt, O'Keeffe, Hopper, Pollock, Johns, and Warhol are some of the artists to be discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 40

ARTH-255-01  - Art History  - 2012-2013
(Fall) American Art and Architecture 1620-1880
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of painting, architecture, sculpture, and design from the colonial period to the late nineteenth century, this course introduces students to period styles and building types, as well as individual painters and architects. Classes develop ways of looking at and thinking about art and objects as material expressions of American social, political, and cultural ideas. Topics will include portraiture, colonial Boston, art and revolution, nature and nation, the West, domestic architecture, and the city of Washington. Copley, Peale, Jefferson, Stuart, Cole, and Church are some of the key figures to be studied.

(Fall) Issues in Art History: The Creation of African Art

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

What is African art? Why are so many different kinds of cultural expressions from such a large and diverse continent categorized in the same way? In this course, we emphasize artistic creation from the perspective of artists by studying works from various African cultures. We analyze the creation of African art as a subject of inspiration and research. Throughout the semester, we discuss African diasporic arts and contemporary African art. Students examine both scholarly and popular interpretations of art objects to develop skills in critical analysis and visual literacy. The course incorporates visits to on-campus resources, such as the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Film Studies 220)

This course will survey the rise of the motion picture as both subject and mode in art since 1960. The development of video art, from monitor and installation to projection and flat screen, opened up new channels for performance and sculpture. But the rising presence of 16mm film in galleries (Tacita Dean) as celluloid disappears from movie theaters amplifies a trend that also includes artists as feature filmmakers (Julian Schnabel and Cindy Sherman), Christian Marclay's use of cinema's past in The Clock (2010), and Matthew Barney's reliance on the Guggenheim as set and cinemateque.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: American Modernisms, 1900-1929 - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course explores the diversity of modern art in early twentieth-century America. As new technologies and ideologies transformed the political, economic, and social fabric of the country, changes in the arts were equally rapid and as dramatic. The course examines the competing and often conflicting ideas and styles of the American avant-garde against the background of more conservative movements of the era. Robert Henri, Georgia O'Keeffe, Man Ray, Charles Demuth, and Edward Hopper are among the artists to be discussed.

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Egyptian Art and Egyptomania - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Why do we need the past, and how do we engage with it? In ancient Egypt, the past had power, and patrons, sculptors, and builders drew from earlier generations for inspiration. In the modern West, ancient Egypt holds a unique fascination. Recurring waves of artists and architects have taken up Egyptian motifs for their own sensibilities. The course examines ancient monuments and visual motifs in their original context as well as their appropriation in subsequent centuries, including our own.

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Storytelling in Ancient Art - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The aim of the course is to acquaint students with visual modes of storytelling in the predominantly oral cultures of ancient Greece and Rome. Myths and legends appear in a range of media (sculpture, mosaic, fresco, lamps, and gems) and contexts (domestic, sacred, political). Which stories were represented and what do we know about their reception among ancient viewers? Original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum will offer case studies.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Ancient Painting and Mosaic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course treats the themes, techniques, and contexts of painting and mosaic in the ancient Mediterranean. From Bronze Age palaces to early Byzantine churches, surfaces were embellished with frescoes, pebbles, glass and jewels. These might be rendered in complex geometric shapes or with mythological scenes. Portable vases displayed elegantly drawn figures. We will examine the unique effects of each medium and how they influenced and interacted with each other.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Intended primarily for art history majors, this course introduces key research tools and scholarly methods in the field. Through intensive readings, discussions, presentations, and written work, students will hone their analytical and communication skills. We will learn to navigate libraries and digital resources, to read with a critical eye, and to write persuasive prose. We will become acquainted with interpretive approaches ranging from formalism to Marxism to post-colonialism. Students will also be exposed to a variety of professions that demonstrate how the art historical skills they acquire as undergraduates can translate into life after college--in the art world and beyond.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., 8 credits in department
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-301-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Art History: Current Issues in Latin American Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course highlights recent scholarship and criticism written in and about Latin America, focusing upon visual culture from 1520 to the present. Among the works we consider: colonial paintings and urban planning, representations of Frida Kahlo and Karl Marx, Brazilian film, contemporary photography, and museum exhibitions. Of particular interest will be the theoretical and methodological issues that characterize writing on visual culture from the 1990s to the present, and the ways they challenge our response to the question "What is Latin American art?"
Prerequisites: at least one 200-level course in art history or one 200-level course in Latin American anthropology, government, history, film or literature. Reading knowledge of Spanish useful, but not required.
Instructors: D. Leibsohn
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTH-302-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Great Cities: Digital Paris
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar investigates medieval Paris through buildings, images, maps, and literature. Art historical research will combine with digital technologies, such as Google SketchUp, to analyze and represent the fabric of the city as well as to reconstruct key lost monuments. Ideally students will work in collaborative and interdisciplinary teams.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or computer science or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
ARTH-310-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: Lives of Ancient Objects - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar focuses on Greek and Roman objects in the "Reconstructing Antiquity" exhibition in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will engage in firsthand study of coins, vases, statues, portraits, frescoes, and mosaics and conduct advanced research on their original functions and contexts. Issues of collecting practices, both ancient and modern, and museum display will be considered.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 18

ARTH-310-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculanum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present.
Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or per permission of instructor.
Instructors: B. Bergmann
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-320-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Art: Chartres Cathedral - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar will explore Chartres Cathedral, its architectural history, its vast programs of sculpture, and its stained glass narratives. The church and its imagery, which took shape between ca. 1140 and 1250, offer a view back in time to medieval religious beliefs and practices, social dynamics, architectural technology, and fashion. We will also consider how differing views of the cathedral—as a popular communal creation or as the embodiment of an oppressive elite—reflect modern interpretive perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or medieval studies
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-332-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Baroque Art: Gianlorenzo Bernini: Practices, Works, Ideas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the painting, sculpture, and architecture produced by the seventeenth century's most influential multimedia artist. It puts Bernini's innovations in the context of the political, religious, and artistic debates of his day, closely examining the Roman society that Bernini dominated during the reigns of three different popes, as well as the France of Louis XIV where Bernini briefly lived and worked. Topics include: workshop practices and preparatory works; spheroidal creations (festive and theatrical); antiquity and modern invention; the aesthetic of marvel; the myth of the artist; and the legacy of Bernini's "bel composto."
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Jarrard
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Seminar in Baroque Art: Art and Architecture of Rome - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Rome was—and remains—a most complex and magnetic city, one that has endured and become "eternal" through countless transformations to its urban and artistic fabric. The focus of this seminar is a particularly intense period of change in Rome—when artists, architects, and intellectuals flocked to the city, bringing traditions from elsewhere that mixed freely with the work of others, while responding to what was already present. More than a survey of famous works in Rome, this course aims to conjure some of the excitement of a city that considered itself the most fashionable and vibrant place in the world.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Shudders! Photography Goes Public - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar will explore the explosion of photography in 1930s America. The decade’s photography is often epitomized by the heartrending images of the Great Depression, of social concern, of the traumas experienced by the poor and displaced. But in fact the period also witnessed photography's extraordinary vitality and new visibility, in the colorful pages of Life magazine and the tabloids, on the walls of MOMA, in experimental photo books, at Photo League exhibitions, and much more. Among the major figures to be studied are photographers as diverse as Walker Evans, Weegee, and Aaron Siskind.

Prerequisites: One 200-level courses in Art History; jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Seminar in American Art: The Architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar will explore Frank Lloyd Wright's 60-year career in architecture. We will pay particular attention to ways in which he handled form, space, and structure to frame human activity and to create a modern American style. We will also explore the social implications of Wright's approach to domestic design and community planning.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, or 8 credits in art history, architectural studies, or American studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 370f(01))

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, or 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-360-01 - Art History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in Asian Art: "Through Indian Eyes: Photography in India"

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Explores the way photography seized hold of the imagination in India. Nineteenth-century documentary photographs of Indian ruins memorialized the reach of the British Empire when used for dioramas, panoramas, and magic lantern shows on the streets of London. By the twentieth century, manipulated photographs and mechanically reproduced "photos" of Indian gods complicated photography's claim to truth. Students will debate scholarly views and develop research projects to examine photography’s imaginative uses in India.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor; 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Sinha

(Spring) Drawing I: Figure Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the various technical and conceptual aspects of drawing that are specific to portraying the human form. Students will work largely from the figure and examine their drawings within the context of other historical figurative work. Students will pay special attention to the drawings of the Cubists, De Kooning and Richard Diebenkorn. Students will mainly produce drawings, complete several readings and present the work of a contemporary artist working with the figure. While this class does not have a pre-requisite, it will demand that you work rigorously during class sessions and on out-of-class assignments.
Notes: 2 studios (2-1/2 hours); NOTE: Students preregistering for this course must attend the first class meeting of the semester or their names will be dropped from the class roster. Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

ARTST-264-01 - Art Studio - 2012-2013
(Spring) Word and Image - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the interrelationship between word and image. Through studio and theoretical investigations, students learn how to interface word, image, symbol, and structure. Students experiment with intertextuality while examining visible and invisible structures of our languages, visual codes, and society. The course considers art as visual language. Primary readings are on structuralism and post-structuralism.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr and Art(Studio)116 or 120
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 14

ARTST-267-01 - Art Studio - 2012-2013
(Fall) Papermaking with Local Plants
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In addition to learning basic paper chemistry in this course, students collect usable sections of a variety of plants wherever they live throughout the summer and in the Pioneer Valley in the fall during the course. These plants are examined and recorded before and after drying, then cooked and processed to become paper pulp. Students conceive and construct their art projects inspired by the historical, biological, ecological, and personal aspects of plants as well as their physical qualities.
Prerequisites: Art Studio 116, 120, or equivalent and at least one 200-level studio art course.
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.

ARTST-268-01 - Art Studio - 2012-2013
(Fall) Papermaking/Paper Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course traditional and contemporary paper art and hand papermaking are explored. Both Japanese-style and Western-style papermaking methods are introduced to further develop students' art making experience. Topics include evolution of papermaking methods, fiber selection and preparation, sheetforming, paper pulp casting, and basic paper chemistry.
Prerequisites: One 100-level art studio course and at least one 200-level art studio course.
Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTST-269-01 - Art Studio - 2012-2013
(Spring) Japanese Papermaking
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course, students learn the traditional practice and history of Japanese hand papermaking, while exploring contemporary applications of the method. Thin, translucent, strong paper is great for drawing and printmaking, as well as sculptural construction and paper casting. This fluidity of medium naturally encourages students to become interdisciplinary in their art making. The apparent fragility, structural strength, and surprising longevity of the material provides a foundation for philosophical investigations into the nature of creativity.
Prerequisites: Art Studio 116, 120, or equivalent and at least one 200-level studio art course
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 12

ARTST-280-02 - Art Studio - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Studio Art: Drawing for Sculpture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine the intrinsic immediate nature of drawing that allows the sculptor's voice to emerge. The class will work in a detailed and planned manner, build constructed models to scale and experiment with the intuitive use of drawing mediums. Some drawing projects will have physical weight, command space or become sculptural by using a variety of drawing materials, such as pigment, string and tape. Additionally, the course will examine the history of sculptors' drawings including: Marino Marini, Leonardo, Marcel Duchamp, Henry Moore, Italian Arte Povera Artists, Richard Serra, Tim Hawkinson and Diana Cooper.
Prerequisites: Art(Studio)116 or 120, Priority given to majors, minors, and, by permission, prospective majors
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 204-03, Theatre Arts 234-01)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

Contemporary Chinese Fiction: 1949 to the Present - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Taught in English)

A study of representative Chinese fictional writings from 1949 to the present focusing on the ways in which issues of individual and national identity, modernity, and gender have been probed and represented by different generations of Chinese writers. A particular emphasis will be placed on the novels and short stories published since the 1980s, in which both traditional ideology and literary styles are seriously questioned and challenged. Readings include works by Nobel Prize winner Gao Xingjian and other famous writers, such as Wang Meng, Zhang Xianliang, Zhang Jie, Wang Anyi, Yu Hua, Su Tong, etc.

Stories and Storytelling in India and the World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)

India is a treasure-house of tales, and the home of vibrant traditions of oral and written storytelling in classical Sanskrit and in modern languages. Indian tales have travelled around the world and have parallels and versions in The Arabian Nights, Decameron, and Canterbury Tales. Indian epics and myths are related to those of the Greeks. We will study the epic Ramayana, myths of Hindu gods, animal fables (Panchatantra), women's stories, and folktales in various forms, puppet plays, song, and dramatic performance. We will examine who tells stories, why and when, and compare Indian stories with tales from elsewhere, e.g., Aesop, Grimm, Homer.

The Great Epics of India: Representations and Interpretations - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English)

The epics Ramayana and Mahabharata are sacred texts of Hinduism and are rendered in oral, written, and dramatic forms in all the languages of India and Southeast Asia. Focusing primarily on the Ramayana, students have the opportunity to explore the epic narrative's aesthetic, religious, and cultural historical dimensions in its many manifestations, including the Sanskrit text (fifth century BCE), women's ritual songs, Tulsidas's medieval Hindi version, the Ramliila play, Kathakali dance, the television serial, and the political version of the Hindu communists in the 1990s. All readings are in English.

(Fall) Third Year Arabic I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
The goal of this course is to help students achieve an advanced to superior level of proficiency in Modern Standard Arabic with an exposure to one Arabic colloquial variety, using the four-skills (reading, writing, speaking, listening) approach. Students will read within a normal range of speed, listen to, discuss and respond in writing to authentic texts by writers from across the Arab world. Text types address a range of political, social, religious, and literary themes and represent a range of genres, styles, and periods. All of these texts may include hypothesis, argumentation and supported opinions that will cover both linguistic and cultural knowledge. This course covers Al-Kitaab, Book 3 Units 1-5, as well as other instructional materials.

Prerequisites: Asian Studies 232, or the completion of Al-Kitaab, Book 2 or its equivalent. Students must be able to use Formal Spoken Arabic as the medium of communication in this course. (Contact Ms Arafah for placement.)

(Spring) Introduction to Astronomy: Survey of the Universe with Coffee Table Astrophysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In addition to attending the Astronomy 100 lectures, students will take part in a 4th hour in which we will discuss current frontiers in modern astronomy and astrophysics. Although this 4th hour is somewhat tailored to the interests of the enrolled students, anticipated topics include Einstein's Theories of Relativity, Death of Massive Stars, Black Holes and Warped Spacetime, and the Expanding Universe. Using readings and discussion we will examine the nature of these mind-boggling discoveries and their treatment in the popular media.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100 or 101 or the equivalent
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-100 and 101. Students in this course (110) must attend a weekly 4th hour section.

(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Mars
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Exploration of several unresolved questions about the Red Planet, such as 1) Where was the water on Mars and where did it go? How well will future missions answer this question? 2) How has the Martian atmosphere evolved over time? 3) What rock types are present on the Martian surface based on meteoric studies vs. direct observation? 4) How can geologic features of Mars be interpreted, and what do they tell us about the evolution of the planet? and 5) Was there life on Mars at any time? Is there life on Mars at present, and if so, where? An interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature as well as daily reports from current mission websites.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended

(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Moon - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course will survey the past, present, and future of lunar exploration and science. We will focus on the evolution of the Moon as a paradigm for terrestrial planets, with specific units on interiors, heat flow, thermal evolution, magnetism, volcanism, volatiles, impacts, crustal composition and mineralogy, regoliths, and spectroscopy of its surface. This is a discussion-based, interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
Are we alone in the universe? The essence of that question has likely been a source of inspiration since the dawn of humanity. We will look at the history of extraterrestrial debate and analyze the transdisciplinary science behind astrobiology. We will investigate the properties of life as we know it and extrapolate their properties to consider the potential for simple life forms to exist on Mars and elsewhere in our solar system, to the possibility of intelligent life on habitable planets near distant stars, and finally the implications of extraterrestrial life to life on Earth. Assessments will include critical reading and writing about scientific literature on this topic.

(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement (Biological Sciences 311f, Chemistry 311f)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.

BIOCH-330-01 - Biochemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected.

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
Introduction to Biology: Nature Harmoniously Confused

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Most organisms are notably unlike ourselves—a tapestry of bacteria, protozoans, algae, and, off by themselves, the plants, fungi, and other animals. We will survey the whole range of organisms, especially those in the ponds and forests of our campus. Labs will start in the field, offering many opportunities for wet or muddy work. The class is addressed to students intrigued by natural history; it might be useful for students interested in further study of the environment.

(Spring) Introduction to Biology: Animal Bodies, Animal Functions

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

How are animal bodies built to deal with living on earth? In this course we will study the function of cells, organs, and organ systems that have evolved to help animals make their way through the physical and chemical environment. In lecture and in lab, we will consider the common needs of animals—needs such as feeding, breathing, and reproducing—and the diverse solutions they have devised. A range of life, from unicellular organisms to animals with backbones (including mammals), will be considered.

Prerequisites: first years will have priority during the first week of registration; upperclass students will be eligible to register for any remaining seats thereafter.

(Spring) Introduction to Biology: Organismal Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course will cover a range of topics, from the molecular to the organismal level, related to the biochemistry and physiology of vertebrates. In particular, we will study the chemical underpinnings and functional workings of mammalian body systems (such as, endocrine, reproductive, metabolic, immunologic, neurologic, etc.), while paying attention to the ways in which these systems interact with one another and how evolution has shaped these processes. These topics will be covered through a lens that highlights the scientific research that led to our current understanding of these systems.

(Fall) Introduction to Biology: Diversity of LifeEvolution, cells and organisms: the roots of biological diversity

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Life was once very simple: single cells eating and being eaten. Things have gotten complicated. Diverse habitats have selected for a staggering variety of organisms. In this course we will explore some of the organisms that inhabit the earth's myriad niches. Our examination will encompass adaptations at the cellular and organismic level, taking particular note of the symbiotic interactions that make life possible for many organisms. Throughout the semester we will discuss how researchers expand what is known by examining questions and data. You will also spend time in the laboratory honing your own questions and observation skills.

Fall Introductory Biology: A Green World - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

First-year seminar

This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160L). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance.
The aim of this course is to understand the fundamental unit of life—the cell—at the molecular level. We will consider the assembly and structure of cellular membranes, organelles, and the cytoskeleton, as well as their roles in cellular processes including the capture and transformation of energy, catalysts, protein sorting, motility, signal transduction, and cell-cell communication. Emphasis will be placed upon the diversity of cellular form and function and the cell biological basis for disease. The laboratory portion of this course will illustrate and analyze these phenomena through selected biochemical, genetic, and microscopy-based approaches.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, Chemistry 201 (can be taken concurrently)

This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.

Prerequisites: An Mount Holyoke Biology course or Environmental Studies 200 and a minimum of one semester of high school or college calculus or statistics

This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to the discussion of public health issues. The class will be co-led by a philosopher and a biologist, with additional guest experts offering a variety of disciplinary and professional perspectives on some of the most complex and vexing current public health issues. Topics may include: the hazards and benefits of vaccination programs; effective responses to and prevention of natural disasters; obesity, food policy, nutrition, and health; the controversy over hygiene and the rise of allergic and chronic diseases; or the impact of public policy and ethics on reproductive rights. Selected topics will be scrutinized through both a biological and a philosophical lens, with the intersections and divergence of those perspectives highlighted.

Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for sophomores
Notes: Some attendance at college speaking events will be required.
Instructors: J. Harold, S. Stranford

BIOL-321-A - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Conference Course: Art, Music, and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of a visual object, such as shape, color, and depth, and ask how this processing may affect the way we draw and paint. We will ask whether musical dissonance and consonance are biologically or culturally determined and whether or not different parts of the brain process different aspects of music such as pitch, melody, harmony, rhythm, and the emotional content of a musical piece.
Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music
Notes: students studying art and music are encouraged to enroll
Instructors: S. Barry
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-B - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Conference Course: How to Think Like a Plant: Ecological Context for Plant Structure and Function
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course will provide ecological context for plant structure and function emphasizing whole organisms in their (past present & future) natural environments. What plants are made of - organs, tissues, cells, organelles - and what those parts do - grow, respond, reproduce, senesce - represent integrated solutions to a highly complex physical and biotic world. Why these plants here, now? How do structure and function shape the development and stratification of plant communities in space and time? Expect immersion in botanical language, serving both descriptive and aspirational - try to think like a plant! - purposes.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Biological Sciences or Ecology at the 200-level or above
Instructors: J. Grogan
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Grogan
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Spring) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This seminar is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their abilities to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Conference Course: Extreme Life - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees C. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-F - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Spring) Conference Course: Molecular Physiology of the Cell
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
DNA and protein are just part of what makes a cell alive; without the compartments, membranes and chemical gradients of the cell they could do nothing. In this course we will explore the ways molecular biology informs our understanding of cell physiology. The course will include in-depth discussions of protein trafficking, membrane transport, cell motility, membrane potential and respiration. We will also examine how the cell reacts when things go wrong: disorders and disease. We will use the primary research literature for much of our studies, and will analyze the data that have generated the textbook view of the cell.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Instructors: C. Rounds
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-321-I - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Spring) Conference Course: Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome Seminar - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
What is our current understanding of HIV-induced AIDS? What factors favor disease progression or resistance? Are there new therapies or vaccines in the pipeline? In this course, the primary literature will be used as a foundation for discussing the global picture on AIDS and current research. As a group we will discuss the science behind this immune deficiency causing virus, therapies, research priorities and new vaccine strategies. We will also touch on the social, economic and political situations that influence rates of HIV infection and disease progression. Students will be expected to work in small groups to present background material and original research.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 319 and permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Stranford
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-J - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Spring) Conference Course: Neuroplasticity, Recovery, and Rehabilitation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
In the past decade, neuroscientists have recognized that the adult brain is considerably more plastic and adaptable than previously thought. However neuroplasticity alone may not be enough to promote recovery following an injury or disorder. This plasticity must be harnessed through effective treatments, training, and therapies. Through classroom demonstrations, examination of the scientific literature, and discussion of case histories, we will explore neuroplasticity and rehabilitation from the level of neurons and synapses to that of the whole person.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and Biol-220 or 210
Instructors: S. Barry
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-322-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Physics 222)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-325-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013
(Fall) Plant Diversity and Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 223 or 226, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years

BIOL-327-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013

(Spring) Microbiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223

Instructors: J. Knight

Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Knight | 02 LAB J Knight |

Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013

(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 with permission of instructor; or Environmental Studies 200 with permission of instructor

Instructors: N. Charney

Section Instructors: 01 LAB N Charney | 02 LAB N Charney |

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013

(Fall) Macroevolution

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, and the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226

Instructors: S. Rachootin

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2012-2013

(Spring) Neurobiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics; permission of instructor

Notes: preference given to seniors

Instructors: S. Barry

Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Barry | 02 LAB S Barry |

Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Chemical Communication in Vertebrates - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking-intensive)

How is information about physiological states coded in chemical information passed between animals? How is this information passed between organs in the body? In this course we'll read and discuss the primary literature in biology to look in depth at the nature of chemical communication in vertebrates. We will study hormones, pheromones, and neurotransmitters, the neuroendocrine mechanisms which mediate their functions in the body, and the social and physical contexts in which these signalling mechanisms operate.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220, 223 or 226

Instructors: S. Bacon

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Bacterial Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Long considered to be simple "bags of enzymes," bacteria are now appreciated to be highly ordered and dynamic cells. Bacterial cells organize their genetic material, assemble cytoskeletons, localize proteins, construct organelle-like compartments, differentiate, and communicate with one another to coordinate multicellular behaviors. This course will explore the exciting new field of bacterial cell biology via the primary literature and review articles. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation will be expected.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220
Instructors: A. Camp
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Forensic Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will offer an introduction to the science in forensic investigations. We will explore several methods and instruments often used in CSI programs, such as mass spectrometry, infrared spectroscopy and DNA analysis, which are very valuable in evaluating crime scene evidence. We will explore the validity of scientific findings and the political implications of the use and availability of the data. Students will have a chance to be expert witnesses and be in the lab evaluating evidence. Analytical thinking and processing information in chemistry, biology, and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as oral and written communication skills. Short labs are planned.
Instructors: S. Browne
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Using Spectroscopy to Analyze Paintings - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Seeing with multiple wavelengths of light reveals different layers in paintings. This course will study how spectroscopy can reveal details of an artist's painting style. First, the electromagnetic radiation and how it interacts with matter will be introduced. Next, the structure of a painting will be discussed along with case studies of famous or infamous paintings. Finally, students will apply their knowledge to study their own paintings through visible and infrared light.
Instructors: M. Gomez

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, and introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics. Laboratory emphasizes on analytical skills and illustrates basic concepts in chemical equilibria, thermodynamics, and kinetics.

(Spring) Chemistry of Biomolecules - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
An examination of the major ideas of biochemistry from the point of view of the chemical sciences rather than the life sciences. Structures of important biomolecules. The role of energetics and reaction dynamics in biochemical processes. Major metabolic pathways are considered, including those of proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, and nucleic acids.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: This course is not intended for Biochemistry majors, who must complete Biochemistry 311f and 314s. First priority will be given to sophomores and juniors.
Instructors: M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-250-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to the History of Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Traces the growth of chemistry in several ways: as a body of knowledge and beliefs, as a practical means of intervention, and as a community of practitioners linked (or divided) by sociopolitical bonds and common interests, intellectual and otherwise. After an overview of chemical history and an introduction to various scholarly traditions in the field, the balance of the course will be devoted to case studies of narrower topics or episodes, such as the alchemical tradition and Robert Boyle, the eighteenth-century Chemical Revolution, nineteenth-century organic chemistry, Ionism, atomism and elementalism, chemistry and war, the quantum revolution, educational traditions, the role of women.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-295-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better

CHEM-304-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor and Chemistry 302 as prerequisite or co-requisite
Notes: second half of semester
Instructors: D. Hamilton, A. Figueiredo
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts of the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principle of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), and Chemistry 302
Instructors: K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB K McMenimen | 02 LAB K McMenimen |
Expected enrollment: 40

CHEM-314-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013

Instructors: K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB K McMenimen | 02 LAB K McMenimen |

CHEM-317-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Principles of Polymer Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered once every three years
Instructors: W. Chen

CHEM-325-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, Mathematics 202, Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Instructors: W. Chen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake | 02 LAB H Jayathilake |
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and either: Chemistry 325 in the past or taken concurrently with this course.
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-336-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Organic Synthesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is examined. A general strategy for the synthesis of complex molecules is also presented.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) Physical Organic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: S. Browne
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-339-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) The Organic Chemistry of Biological Pathways - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course explores the underlying organic chemistry of biological pathways and thereby seeks to build a framework for understanding biological transformations from the perspective of mechanistic organic chemistry. Beginning with common biological mechanisms, and drawing parallels with their sophomore organic chemistry counterparts, a broad overview will be constructed of the pathways by which the key classes of biological molecules—l lipids, carbohydrates, amino acids, nucleotides—are manufactured, modified, and consumed. Several specific biosyntheses will also be dissected from a mechanistic perspective. These case studies will include antibiotics, an alkaloid, and heme.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-343-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Spring) Chemistry of DNA - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This advanced-level seminar will focus on the molecular properties of DNA. Using as sources a graduate-level text and readings from the primary literature, the class will discuss a variety of current topics in the research community, including the binding of proteins and small molecules to DNA, the covalent modification of DNA by mutagenic agents, and the dynamic nature of DNA across timescales. Critical analysis of experimental design and conclusions from data will be encouraged. Students will be evaluated based on participation in discussions, oral presentations, and an original research proposal.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and one additional 300-level chemistry course
Instructors: M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 12

CHEM-345-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
(Fall) Physical Biochemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces the fields of biophysical chemistry and molecular biophysics, where biological systems are probed and described by physical techniques and models. Topics will include the physical properties of biological molecules (proteins, nucleic acids, carbohydrates, and lipid membranes); applications of spectroscopy to biological systems, both in vitro and in vivo; the mechanisms of light harvesting and energy conversion; and technological developments inspired by biological systems. Lecture sessions (two per week) will be complemented by a weekly discussion of papers from the contemporary literature.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 required; Chemistry 212, Biochemistry 311 or Biology 220 recommended, or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

CHEM-399-01 - Chemistry - 2012-2013
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.
Prerequisites: Chemistry majors only. Two semesters required, spring (as a junior) fall (as a senior)
Notes: Credit/No Credit grading only
Instructors: K. McMenimen

Classics

CLASS-127-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Ancient Greece - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 127)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.
Instructors: R. Payne
Expected enrollment: 35

CLASS-128-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Ancient Rome - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 128)
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century and the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Roman Empire and those who came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean. Topics include their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics, and the Roman family. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.
Expected enrollment: 40

CLASS-211-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Ancient Greek and Roman Myth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
We will accompany Odysseus on his return from Troy, retrieve the Golden Fleece with Jason, and race with Ovid through his witty--and often troubling--retelling of Greek myths from a Roman perspective. This course examines how Greek and Roman authors and artists from very different periods used myth to explore questions about life, art, and politics. Works include Homer, Odyssey; Apollonius of Rhodes, Argonautica; Ovid, Metamorphoses and Heroides; Greek tragedy, and ancient images representing myths.
Prerequisites: most spaces will be reserved for first-years and sophomores
Notes: Optional screenings of films related to ancient myth.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 45

CLASS-225-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Athenian Democracy and Its Foes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(History 225)
Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 20

CLASS-231-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Fall) The City of Athens from Theseus to Alaric
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Art History 290-02)
A detailed survey of the principal surviving monuments and the overall architectural development of the city of Athens from its origins in the Bronze Age to the end of the 4th century C.E. The archaeological evidence will be discussed against a broader cultural and historical background, with an emphasis on the specific people and events that helped to shape the city and the general social and political circumstances that gave the monuments meaning.
Instructors: M. Landon
Expected enrollment: 25

CLASS-260-01 - Classics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Knowing God - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the following key texts from the ancient world that treat significantly the problem of knowing God and the mystery enveloping such knowledge: Sophocles' Oedipus the King, Plato’s Phaedo, Cicero’s Concerning the Nature of the Gods, Job, Paul’s Epistle to the Romans, and others. Attention is also given to the different ways of thinking about the divine and human natures in these works, which are broadly reflective of Graeco-Roman and Judaeo-Christian value systems.

College Courses

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Reading the New Yorker
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Students will subscribe to this venerable and influential magazine and will closely examine the best items across departments, from the editorial board’s short pieces on politics, to analytical articles, amusing vignettes, opinionated reviews and the famous cartoons. (Occasional readings will be drawn from the New Yorker's archive). Also included: selections from James Thurber’s The Years with Ross, Brendan Gill's At the New Yorker, and Garrison Keillor's Love Me; and discussions of the history of the magazine and its impact on American letters, up to its recent Russian focus under the editorship of David Remnick. Writing exercises will be modeled on articles studied.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: C. LeGouis
Expected enrollment: 15

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Stressed Out - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
We've all been there. Each of us carries a deep physical understanding of what its like to be under stress. But what are the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of this experience? How and why do our bodies respond to stress in such a characteristic way? And what is the impact of this biological response on health and disease? Through reading and discussion, we'll explore the biology of stress, the brain's ability to link the outer and inner worlds, the organ systems whose activity is altered by the stress response, and emerging research on the impact of long-term stress on memory, immune function, cardiovascular health, and cancer risk.

COLL-101-02 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Encountering the Sacred: The Bible and Reading
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Martin Buber famously wrote that we must read the Bible "as though it were something entirely unfamiliar, as though it had not been set before us ready-made." Whether you come to the Bible from within a faith tradition or not, this course will ask you to do just that. We'll take a text that for more than 2,000 years has stood at the heart of the Western tradition and ask how we can approach that text today, from the place where you stand. What does it mean to read a sacred text? How has it been read by people situated both within and at the margins of Western culture? What are the possibilities for your reading?

COLL-101-03 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Community Narratives: Digital Storytelling at Mount Holyoke College
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Digital stories (three- to five-minute narrative videos) enable individuals and communities to express themselves in their own voices and gain social visibility. In this course, students will produce digital stories about their first-year experience as a way to reflect on their intellectual lives at Mount Holyoke. As a model for digital storytelling, we will examine digital stories produced by Latina/o youth and compare them to dominant narratives in mainstream media. While writing intensive, this seminar will also develop students' technical skills, particularly in the use of images, sound, and digital effects.
Prerequisites: fy

COLL-101-04 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: How to Become a Successful Language Learner
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Taught in English)
This seminar will provide an understanding of the language learning process and will help students develop strategies to increase their ability in learning a second language. Students will be encouraged to reflect critically on language learning issues through a variety of topics, such as different theories of second language acquisition, individual factors considered to play a role in acquiring a language -aptitude, motivation, age, personality, learning styles, etc.-, and how these factors are related to those strategies which have been identified in the literature as "good language learners' strategies". This course will enable students to become more independent learners able to take control over their own learning experience.

COLL-210-01 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Spring) Ready for the World: Preparing for Your Internship and Research Project
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
College 210 prepares students for a summer internship. Participants will learn how to productively search for an internship, how to craft a successful internship application, how to make ethical choices in diverse situations, how to create meaningful mentoring relationships, and how to negotiate the work environment.
Notes: The course will meet from 7 to 9:30 pm on February 5, February 12, April 2, and 5:30 to 8:00 pm on April 23.
Instructors: H. Hanson
Expected enrollment: 70

COLL-211-01 - College Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) Tying It All Together: Curriculum to Career
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed for students who have recently completed summer internships and research projects to help them integrate their experience within the context of their liberal arts education and career goals. Students will apply problem-solving skills to various situations that occurred during their summer project; learn how to identify and articulate transferable skills gained during the project to potential employers and graduate schools; discuss how the experience has affirmed and/or modified their career goals; learn strategies to identify and network with individuals to advance their professional and academic development; and prepare a presentation on their internship or research project for the fall LEAP Symposium.

Notes: Class meeting dates: 9/10, 9/24, 10/1, 10/15, and 10/22. Students are also required to present at the LEAP Symposium on Friday, Oct. 12, 2012.

Instructors: H. Hanson

(Fall) Topics in Leadership: Women, Business, and Leadership Development
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
What does leadership mean and what does it look like? What does it mean to become a leader in a business context? And what does this mean for women? In this six-week course, we will examine research literature and case examples from various business contexts including small businesses, nonprofits, and larger corporations. Topics will include: leadership capacities, models of leading and managing, effective mentoring and networking, women's career development, and negotiation and influence.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Notes: Half-semester course, beginning October 23. No letter-grading (credit/no-credit only).

COMOR-115-01 - Complex Organizations - 2012-2013
(Fall) Perspectives in Global Business
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar
We study the behavior of consumers, producers, and their interactions in markets. How do consumer, producer, and social welfare depend on market organization and regulatory institutions? How do competition and international trade affect consumers and firms? How do the decisions that businesses make affect employees, customers, suppliers, the community, and the environment? How do businesses make decisions about advertising and pricing? We use case studies and microeconomic theory to explore these and other questions.

Expected enrollment: 16

COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2012-2013
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+,-,*,/) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested. See &lt;a href=http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/cljohnso&gt;http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/cljohnso&lt;/a&gt;.

(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
(Psychology 212f)
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations - especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a leader; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Butterfield
Expected enrollment: 24

(Spring) Leadership and the Liberal Arts: Non-Profit Management and Business Practice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course introduces students to the issues and challenges of leading a non-profit organization. Covered topics include dealing with boards, workers and volunteers and external agencies. We will consider funding and revenue sources as well as cost management. Finally, the course will explore strategic planning and program evaluation. The course will feature an embedded practitioner with substantial leadership experience in higher education.
Notes: The course will be a case study based course and students will be required to do a substantial project on a non-profit of their choosing.
Instructors: M. Robinson, M. Maydew

COMSC-101-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) Problem Solving and Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Computers are used every day for an enormous variety of tasks, from playing games and chatting with friends to transferring billions of dollars, delivering radiation treatments, and controlling the electrical grid. Computer programs are an essential ingredient in allowing for this great diversity of applications. In this course, you will learn to create your own programs, based on core programming concepts and analytical problem solving approaches. You will develop dynamic programs by first using Adobe Flash CS4 and AS3 (ActionScript 3), the technology behind many Web applications. The last portion of the course will teach you Java, a very popular modern programming language. We assume no prior study of computer science. Programming intensive.

COMSC-105-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) First Year Seminar:: Robots in Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
The last decade of the 20th century gave us some amazing innovations: virtual reality therapy, long-distance robotic surgery, wearable computers, robotic spacecraft, robots that paint pictures and play soccer. As social, more human-like robots are being developed, science fiction media suggests that robots will eventually take over. In this course, we will examine fascinating innovations in robotics and their impact on society and we will explore the intersection between reality and science fiction. Students will also have the opportunity to build and train their own robots.

(Fall) Advanced Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course builds on the basic programming concepts learned in Computer Science 101. Emphasis is on developing the skills needed to write more sophisticated programs. This includes strategies to aid in assuring the correctness of programs through the use of assertions and unit testing as well as advanced Java features such as inheritance, polymorphism, and network programming. We will also introduce some widely used data structures such as vectors and linked lists. This course is programming-intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101
Instructors: B. Lerner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB B Lerner | 02 LAB B Lerner
Expected enrollment: 36

COMSC-211-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) Data Structures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Using Java. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 102 or 201
Instructors: C. Andrews
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Software Design - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Building large software systems introduces new challenges to software development. Appropriate design decisions early in the development of large software can make a major difference in developing software that is correct and maintainable. In this course, students will learn techniques and tools to help them address these problems and develop larger software projects, improving their skills in designing, writing, debugging, and testing software. Topics include design patterns, UML, designing for maintainability, software architecture, and designing concurrent and fault tolerant systems. Programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 102 or 201
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-221-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Computing Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course looks at the inner workings of a computer and computer systems. It is an introduction to computer architecture. Specific topics include assembly language programming, memory, and I/O issues. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 102 (aka 201)
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 25

COMSC-241-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics: Programming Language Design and Implementation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Ever wonder why there are so many semicolons in Java programs, or what it would mean for a language to not be object-oriented? In this course, we will explore issues related to the design and implementation of programming languages. Along the way, we will discover answers to these questions and more. Topics will include syntax, semantics, runtime support for languages as well as an introduction to functional programming.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 15

COMSC-295-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013

COMSC-311-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) Theory of Computation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101,102(aka 201) and Mathematics 232
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-312-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Algorithms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
How does Mapquest find the best route between two locations? How do computers help to decode the human genome? At the heart of these and other complex computer applications are nontrivial algorithms. While algorithms must be specialized to an application, there are some standard ways of approaching algorithmic problems that tend to be useful in many applications. Among other topics, we will explore graph algorithms, greedy algorithms, divide-and-conquer, dynamic programming, and network flow. We will learn to recognize when to apply each of these strategies as well as to evaluate the expected runtime costs of the algorithms we design.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: D. Sheldon
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-316-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Software Practicum - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Tired of writing programs that nobody ever uses? Then, this is the course for you. Software enables enterprises to carry out previously tedious or impossible tasks, but many organizations lack the resources to develop needed software. You will apply your programming skills to develop and deliver software to meet the requirements of a client from the community. You will learn critical communication skills required to work with a client, work as a team with classmates, and experience the software lifecycle from requirements elicitation through delivery. You will synthesize many topics learned in courses as well as new technologies required to complete the project. Programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 215
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 12

COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) Operating Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection, and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 221
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Computer Graphics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL and other graphical environments; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 211 (may be taken concurrently), and at least one of Mathematics 203, Mathematics 211, Mathematics 232, or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Andrews
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-334-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Fall) Artificial Intelligence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to AI research issues in fields such as Natural Language Processing and Machine Learning. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-336-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Intelligent Information Retrieval - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Introduces the basic concepts, methodologies, and research findings in information retrieval. Special topics include Web searching, cross-language retrieval, data mining, and data extraction. Completion of this course will provide the necessary foundation to work in today’s business environment where competitive advantage is obtained by retrieving needed information.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20
COMSC-341-01 - Computer Science - 2012-2013

(Spring) Topics: Computational Geometry in Video Games - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Developing video games is an exciting and challenging domain, involving many areas of computer science, such as graphics, artificial intelligence and robotics. In this course, we focus on the geometric problems that arise in video game programming. Due to the expensive computations often demanded by current video game technology, efficient algorithms are required that not only satisfy speed requirements, but result in realistic user experiences. Topics will include standard problems from computational geometry, such as triangulation of 2-D and 3-D objects, point detection and visibility.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John

COMSC-341-03 - Computer Science - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics: Robotics and HCI - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is a seminar-based course, drawing on a combination of traditional lectures, student presentations and projects. We will cover core robotics and HCI (Human Computer Interaction) concepts, with additional topics directed by student interest.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John

Critical Social Thought

CST-100-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) First Year Seminar: Experiments in Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar
This course will examine the relationship among the lives of thinkers who broke with their own worlds, the new visions of reality they created, and the historical context that provoked and in turn was provoked by their ideas. Readings will include short theoretical and fictional works, memoirs and biographies, historical narratives, and secondary critical commentaries.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: C. Pleshakov
Expected enrollment: 20
CST-100-02 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-year Seminar: Self and Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Polities 100H(02))
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-100-03 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-year Seminar: What Is Performance? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Theatre Arts 150 (02))
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 14

CST-204-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Gender and Animality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204)
Are animals persons? Subjects? Do they have gender? Important shifts in public opinion have taken place concerning the moral, legal, and affective status of animals, yet liberal Academia still marginalizes the "animal question." In this course, we will draw on feminism's engagement against speciesism to chart diverse forms of human/non-human companionship. The analytic categories of gender and species will be examined side by side for their usefulness in understanding a world in which we no longer approach the human as the great exception. We will consider theory, fiction, films, art work, and the internet in approaching post-human concepts of life, personhood, and subjectivity.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Gender Studies or Critical Social Thought
Instructors: C. Gundermann
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-248-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Spring) Science, Revolution, and Modernity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 248)
Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as 'revolutionary'? How are scientific developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?
Prerequisites: so, jr, or permission of instructor
Notes: Gateway course for minor in Conceptual Foundations of Science
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231)
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century with emphasis on their relevance for contemporary issues. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, W.E.B. Du Bois and Franz Kafka focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life. Case studies of contemporary issues with attention to the impact of 19th century thinkers on critical theory in the 20th and 21st centuries also round out the course.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: Students with one or more years of college-level German may opt for German 232, a tutorial in close reading and translation of the German texts related to the material in 231. Students with no previous study of German are encouraged to take German 101 or 103 to complement this course.

Instructors: K. Remmler

(Spring) Twentieth-Century Theory and Its Discontent: Psychoanalytic Theory

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking-intensive; Psychology 225)

Instructors: G. Hornstein

Expected enrollment: 40

CST-252-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) Histories of Performance I

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Theatre Arts 251f(01))

A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

Instructors: The department

Expected enrollment: 25

CST-252-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Spring) Histories of Performance II

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Theatre 252)

A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to: the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.

Instructors: M. Cornish

Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Critical Race Theory

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(African American and African Studies 208, Philosophy 253)

This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but not required, or permission of instructor

Instructors: L. Wilson, L. Pasquerella

Expected enrollment: 25

CST-254-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Postcolonial Theory - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(English 254)

Postcolonial theory probes the centrality of colonialism and imperialism to modernity, and examines vital forms of anticolonial insurgency as models for critiques of domination and hegemony. This course will explore these imperatives from Marxist, poststructuralist, feminist, and psychoanalytic perspectives, paying particular attention to nationalism, the state, globalization, identity, and alternative political formations in the context of empire. Theorists read will include Lenin, Fanon, Spivak, Lloyd, Rose, and Chakrabarty.

CST-256-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Fall) Backwards? Rethinking (Under)Development in the Spanish-Speaking World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
When and how did the notion of "development" emerge and spread? Why does nearly every country now aspire to it? What stigmas and hierarchies does the term "underdevelopment" imply? Throughout the Spanish-Speaking world, "development" has proved problematic not only as a material reality but also as a framework for understanding place, time, and selfhood. For that reason, Latin American countries and Spain are ideal places from which to question commonly accepted understandings of "development" as well as associated concepts such as "modernization" and "progress." In this course, students rethink "development" through the study of a variety of writers and filmmakers from several countries.
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh

CST-257-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2012-2013
(Spring) Literature and Politics: Imagined Worlds of Literature and Internet
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We will study the tradition of imagined worlds in Western culture, with its mystique of utopia, social engineering, escapism, and selectiveness. Readings will include Thomas More, George Orwell, J.R.R. Tolkien, and J.K. Rowling; Jorge Luis Borges' works will be our methodological guide to the worlds of the Internet that, for the purposes of this course, may include Second Life and Postsecret.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249 or 250 recommended but NOT required

(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar for CST seniors in which they present their independent research, respond critically to one another's work, and lead discussion. In support of that research, this course will explore the history of critical method, from the Enlightenment through 20th-century critical theory and post-colonial studies. Every student will produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought. Students will present their work publicly and cultivate agility in speaking, arguing, and writing.
Prerequisites: Critical Social Thought sr; other jr and sr with permission of instructor
Notes: seniors who intend to write a thesis must take 4 credits of Critical Social Thought 395 in the fall, in addition to this course
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 16

Curricular Support Courses

CUSP-101-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-Year Connections
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This six-week course will provide first-year students with information and strategies that will help them to effectively navigate their first year at Mount Holyoke. Sessions will cover such topics as maximizing your own liberal arts experience; asking constructive questions and creating positive faculty interactions; speaking up in class and improving confidence for presentations; the writing/revising process; connecting to experiential learning opportunities; and managing stress and conflict. Students will set goals for their time at Mount Holyoke, reflect on their current and past experiences, learn about campus resources, and gain skills and knowledge transferable to future semesters.
Prerequisites: fy, and concurrent enrollment in any first-year seminar
Notes: Half-semester course; meets between September 10 and October 19; required of those who enroll in any first-year seminar. Credit/No-Credit grading. Note: There is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation.
Instructors: B. Packard, G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 75

CUSP-101-02 - Curricular Support Courses - 2012-2013

DANCE-272-01 - Dance - 2012-2013
(Spring) Dance and Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
What are the functions that dance serves in society? How does the dancing body signify cultural values? How is dance a vehicle for the articulation of cultural identities? This course attempts to answer these questions from the perspective of dance anthropology and, on occasion, dance history. We will analyze documentaries and texts that illustrate the diverse manners in which dance ethnographers and historians approach the study of dance as a cultural expression. Balancing breadth and depth, the course focuses on a handful of dance forms from North America, Latin America, Africa, Asia, the Middle East, and Europe.

DANCE-377-01 - Dance - 2012-2013
(Fall) Advanced Studies: Twentieth-Century American Dance: Sixties Vanguard to Nineties Hip-Hop - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey of twentieth-century American dance moves from the sixties—a decade of revolt and redefinition in American modern dance that provoked new ideas about dance, the dancer's body, and a radically changed dance aesthetic—to the radical postmodernism of the nineties, when the body continued to be the site for debates about the nature of gender, ethnicity, and sexuality. We will investigate how the political and social environment, particularly the civil rights/black power movement, anti-war/student movement, and the women's movement, with its proliferation of feminist performance works, informed the work of succeeding generations of dance artists.
Instructors: C. Hill

English

ENGL-101-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Images of the Self
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.
This course will look at how the question "Who am I?" has formed works of literature. We will investigate how identity is formed or not formed by forces such as society, circumstance, and family. We'll examine body image, race, gender, class, personal voice, perception, and ancestry. Course material will be drawn from poetry, fiction, drama, memoir, and film, including Maxine Hong Kingston's The Woman Warrior and Shakespeare's As You Like It, as well as shorter readings by Emily Dickinson, Adrienne Rich, Dorothy Allison, Alice Walker, Zora Neale Hurston, and Jamaica Kincaid. Students will have the opportunity to explore themselves, both as individuals and as writers.
Prerequisites: Only first-year students may preregister for this course. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class.
Instructors: K. Osborn
Expected enrollment: 16

This course examines literary representations of worlds and world-making. We will explore how major British authors interpret the idea of the world, as well as how they construct fictional worlds of complexity and beauty. We will consider how the notion of "world" is defined in relation to the cosmos, nature, human society, empire, and travel. A consistent theme will be the depiction of other or new worlds, suggested by places that are remote, abstract, or imaginary. Readings may include Utopia, The Tempest, Paradise Lost, Gulliver's Travels, Robinson Crusoe, and The Rime of the Ancient Mariner.

In American literature (1880-1930), what conversations take place between writers (like Twain, Wharton, Cather, Cahan, Hopkins, Fitzgerald, Larsen) and their texts? Recurring themes in historical context: new roles for women; race in the Jim Crow era; the relationship of science to literature; mass immigration and assimilation; and anxieties about city life, passing, and changing values. We will be less concerned with defining the period than with honing awareness as readers also participating in literary conversations. How have perspectives in literary criticism changed over a hundred years? Why do tastes and reading lists in English courses change?

In order to circumvent exclusion, persecution, or violence, individuals have been compelled to impersonate members of a ruling class by hiding key aspects of their identities, be it their Jewish or Black roots, or their gender identities. This course considers the various stakes of racial, ethnic, gender, and sexual passing. How does passing violate a natural social order, and what situations motivate characters to conceal or project aspects of their identity? Topics will include racial subversion, transgenderism/transsexualism, and whiteness as property. Authors may include David Henry Hwang, Nella Larsen, Philip Roth, Tobias Wolff, Danzy Senna, and Jeffrey Eugenides.
Prerequisites: Only first-year students may preregister for this course. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class.

ENGL-200-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) An Introduction to the Study of Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): English 200, required for the English major, introduces students to critical issues in the study of English literature. Students considering an English major who take English 101 or another first-year seminar in the fall will ordinarily take English 200 in the spring. This course examines various strategies of literary representation through a variety of genres, including such traditional literary forms as the novel, lyric poetry, drama, and autobiography, as well as other cultural forms, such as film. Particular attention is given to student writing; students are expected to write a variety of short essays on selected topics. Though the themes of specific sections may vary, all sections seek to introduce students to the terminology of literary and cultural discourse. ENGL-201-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to Creative Writing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)

In this class we will use pictures of mythological characters and scenes as inspiration for a series of exercises which focus on the different components of creative prose: description, characterization, dialogue, point of view, scene, and dramatic action. We will also devote a week to reading and writing poetry based on mythic themes. The exercises will serve as a basis for a flight into your own mythmaking, and the final result will be a complete short story that reflects both your engagement with myths of the past and the creation of a "mythic" world that is entirely your own.

(Fall) Expository Prose: The History of the Essay
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)

Since the seventeenth century, prose stylists have written essays to examine, analyze, argue, satirize, and present social, scientific, and artistic theories. The course focuses on the evolution of the sentence, prose rhythms, grammatical patterns, paragraph coherence, and developmental structures. Students will master the form by writing their own essays. Readings: Francis Bacon, John Donne, Jonathan Swift, Samuel Johnson, Henry David Thoreau, Virginia Woolf, George Orwell, Martin Luther King, Adrienne Rich, Stephen Jay Gould, and others.

(Spring) Expository Prose: Making the Argument
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)

Societies are refined through the exchange of information and ideas. This course explores that exchange as it occurs in three distinct forms: the public speech, opinion (or op-ed) pieces, and satire. Students will team up for close readings of various texts, exploring work representing opposing views on issues ranging from the environment to economic policy. Writing requirements are intensive and revolve around the production and refinement of an original work in each genre. Intended for students in all disciplines who seek mastery as prose stylists confronting the contentious issues of the day.

ENGL-214-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Medieval Studies: Love and Reason in Medieval Romance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Arthurian legend conjures enduring stereotypes of chivalry and romantic love, but how do we go about situating medieval romance in literary history? Where does it come from, why was it written, who read it, and how did it change over time? In this course, students will learn about romance's historical and social contexts, its form, tropes, and imagery. We will think about romance's contemplation of justice, loyalty, subjectivity, love, and shame, especially as this body of literature grapples with the conflicts that arise between the mortal and divine. Course readings will include works by Marie de France, Chrétien de Troyes, Chaucer, Lydgate, and Spenser. We will read in Middle English where possible.
Prerequisites: English 200; English 210, 213, or permission from instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement

ENGL-220-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to British Literary and Cultural Studies since 1660: Culture and Society: 1798-1900
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a broad study of selected figures in modern literary and intellectual history and helps prepare students for more advanced classes in British and/or postcolonial studies. We will use these figures to probe the dynamic relationship between imaginative practice and social change, which may involve global as well as national contexts. This course will introduce students to writing sustained pieces of critical analysis, challenging them to explore the theoretical relationship between literary form and historical transformation in the modern period.
This course will examine a number of major literary texts from the Lyrical Ballads of Wordsworth and Coleridge through Conrad's Heart of Darkness. The focus will be on major poets and novelists of the period, but we will also consider some nonfiction prose writers as well. The course will be particularly concerned with the literary response to social change such as the migration from the country to the city, the rise of industry, the situation of women, and the legacy of imperialist expansion.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: W. Quillian

ENGL-231-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) British Romanticism: Revolution and Reaction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This class will examine the ways Romantic-era writers figured revolution and the reaction against it, in the wake of the French Revolution's spectacular but failed promises of liberty, fraternity, and equality for all. We will pay special attention to how British writers envisioned their own versions of freedom and equality, extending them to women, slaves, and the poor. Likewise we will explore how this project for social change was necessarily related to revolutions in language and aesthetics. Authors may include Burke, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Smith, Barbauld, Blake, Austen, Keats, Percy and Mary Shelley, Byron, and Hemans.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: K. Singer

ENGL-235-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Modern British Poetry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introduction to modern British poetry pays special attention to the emergence, consolidation, and dismantling of modernist poetry and poetics. It will link this literary history with, amongst other things, the loss of faith, the two world wars, and the relationship between monumental aesthetics, utopian poetics, and totalitarian politics. Writers will include Hardy, Yeats, Eliot, H.D., and Auden.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or English 200
Instructors: N. Alderman

ENGL-237-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Modern Scottish Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In The Quarry Wood, Martha's father teaches her, "Scotland is bounded on the South by England...and on the West by Eternity." This course explores that paradox, tracing the relationship of Scottish literature to European history and the making of Scottish identity, understanding language and form as political actions in the creation of Scotland's national, international, and mythologized identities. Selections survey Enlightenment thought, sentimentalized Scotland (the Kailyard school), grim "realism," modern novels, and contemporary fiction, and may include Hume, Smith, Scott, Burns, Barrie, Stevenson, MacDiarmid, Gibbon, E. Muir, W. Muir, Shepherd, Kelman, television, and film.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in English or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-238-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Modern Irish Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course will introduce students to literature of modern Ireland beginning with Swift and ending with writers of the Irish literary revival and Irish modernists. The syllabus will also focus on Irish women writers and their literary interventions concerning colonial history, nationalism, and Unionism. We will pay particular attention to representations of ideas of Irishness through the categories of religion, race, gender, and culture. The course encourages students to think about how the genres, styles, and forms of Irish writing are determined by the experience of colonial trauma and the imperative to imagine national identity.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor

(Fall) Novels of the Later Eighteenth Century: Worthy Hearts and Saucy Wits - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204(02))
Eighteenth-century England witnessed the birth of the novel, a genre that in its formative years was both lauded for its originality and condemned as intellectually and morally dangerous, especially for young women. We will trace the numerous prose genres that influenced early novelists, including conduct manuals, epistolary writing, conversion narratives, travelogues, romance, and the gothic. In doing so, we will concomitantly examine the novel's immense formal experimentation alongside debates about developing notions of gender and class as well as the feeling, thinking individual. Authors may include Richardson, Fielding, Sterne, Walpole, Burney, and others.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, or sr
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: K. Singer

ENGL-239-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Nineteenth-Century Literature: When Families Attack
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Although nineteenth-century political economists and social theorists often invoked the family as the building block of social organization, novelists paradoxically persisted in portraying families that were anything but exemplary. In this course we will explore how literary representations of families articulate and resist ideas of class, gender, privacy, and identity. We will track the evolving concept of family in novels by Austen, E. Brontë, Gaskell, A. Trollope, and Dickens to investigate how familial power dynamics function in opposition to or connivance with larger social networks and structures.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 4 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-241-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) American Literature II - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of English 240, which explores the diversity of writers and literary forms that arose in U.S. society in the period from the Civil War to World War I. Authors may include Alcott, Chopin, Crane, Dreiser, Dunbar, Dunbar-Nelson, DuBois, Sui-Sin Far, Gilman, Harper, James, Jewett, Stein, Twain, Wharton, and Whitman. Will address the development of realism and naturalism, and the beginnings of modernism, and explore literary redefinitions of race, gender, sexuality, and class as shaped by social and economic pressures during this era.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: E. Young
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-242-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in American Literature: The American Essay
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Throughout our history, the essay has been a vital literary genre. From personal, religious, and confessional essays to highly political, satirical, and sometimes preposterous ones, American authors have revealed their passions and hatreds both eloquently and roughly. We will read essays from the eighteenth century to the present, concentrating on masters of the form. Authors include Ralph Waldo Emerson, Mark Twain, Henry James, James Baldwin, Joan Didion, Gore Vidal, and E. B. White.

(Spring) Poetry Now: Reading the New American Lyric
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to American poetry in the late twentieth and early twenty-first centuries. What fuels the contemporary American poetic imagination? What is its shape and form? Along with supplementary essays, criticism and reviews, we'll focus on a wide range of poets, including John Ashbery, Louise Gluck, Joyce Carol Oates, Claudia Rankine, James Tate, Terrance Hayes and Tracy K. Smith. We'll attune our ears to the pulse, music, and tone of the "new" lyric, while foraging for fresh images and metaphors. As we explore this moment's "nuances of the ego" (Harold Bloom), we'll also identify the values that chiefly define our nation's poetry today.

Instructors: S. London

ENGL-250-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) African American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an introduction to the literary works of African Americans from the late-eighteenth century to the present, with an emphasis on poetry and fiction. Beginning with slave narratives and early poetry, we will consider issues of genre, literary traditions, and historical context while gaining experience in reading and analyzing literary texts. We will examine how authors consciously went about creating a literary tradition that mirrored, challenged and created a dialogue with the American canon.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-251-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) African American Literature II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine the major African American writers of the twentieth century, beginning with the poetry and prose of Paul Laurence Dunbar and ending with the fiction of Toni Morrison, John Wideman, and the poetry of Yusef Komunyakaa, Rita Dove, and others. We will discuss the strategies involved in the creation of a "black voice" and its relationship to Anglo-American literature. We will also consider the nature of literary influence along with the attempts, by some writers, to create a distinct "black aesthetic." Finally, we will discuss the difficulties black authors encounter in asserting the literary over the sociological among readers of all intellectual and social strata.
Prerequisites: English 250
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-252-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Harlem Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course will study the literature, politics, and art of the Harlem Renaissance--roughly a period from 1915 to 1940. The New Negro Movement brought together writers, artists, philosophers, musicians, and everyday people from many parts of the United States and the Caribbean to New York City's Harlem. Their efforts to create a distinct African American art resulted in a flowering of art from several different perspectives. The era has most frequently been thought of as a 1920s-only phenomenon, and many have suggested that it was less a "renaissance" than a first flowering of a collective artistic spirit. We will energetically take on the debate.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-253-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) African Literature - *Not offered this year/term

ENGL-255-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Comparative Empires
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course probes the characteristics of imperial rule, as well as the differences between one empire and another. The course asks: What are empires, and what animates them - economic exploitation, power politics, and/or cultural commitments? How do empires impose and maintain their authority, and what is their impact on centers and provinces, and on elites and the common people? How do empires deal with the heterogeneous peoples, religions, races, and cultures they conquer and incorporate into their fold? Who is driven to resist imperial power, how do they resist, and what other forces lead empires to dissolve? Finally, what is the relation between empire and the modern nation state?

Prerequisites: so, jr or fy with permission of instructor

Notes: Gateway course for thematic minor on Comparative Empires.

(Spring) Transnational Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

What is the role of memory in transnational Anglophone literature? How does recollection aid the creation of continuity in narratives that extend across geographic or cultural borders? This course considers themes such as trauma, nostalgia, introspection, and myth in relation to contemporary representations of colonialism, cosmopolitanism, expatriation, and diaspora. We will read novels, memoirs, and poems from the last half-decade by authors from all over the world, including Nabokov, Rushdie, Ishiguro, Ondaatje, and others.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor

Instructors: S. Roychoudhury

(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 267)

"Most people are on the world, not in it." --John Muir. An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.

ENGL-280-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Literary Criticism and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive)

This course is designed to offer students a broad historical overview of literary theory as well as exposure to contemporary debates about "theory" and literary representation. The course is both an exercise in practical criticism and a survey of the Western critical tradition from Plato to Derrida. Beginning with the question of why Plato wished to ban poets from his ideal Republic, the course will go on to consider such topics as the Classic vs. Romantic theories of the imagination, the "invention" of psychology and the necessary difficulty of much modern literature, the relation of gender and ethnicity to literary expression, and the uncertainties of literary interpretation.

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Writing Historical Fiction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Does historical fiction offer readers something history books cannot? What obligation does the writer of historical fiction have to the verifiable facts of the past? Is history a place we can visit, or is it a living force, defining the present? Isn't there a sense in which all fiction is historical fiction? In this course we'll consider these and other questions as we read and write historical fiction. We'll go out with our shovels and teaspoons to dig in the past, unearth the psychological atmosphere, the gossip, the voices, and the important lies that will show us the way to breathe new life into the cold, dead facts of history.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 203, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Studies in Journalism and Nonfiction: Narrative Nonfiction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This class is designed to immerse students in some of the most powerful nonfiction being published today. We will read extensively to explore the art of telling factual stories with drama, accuracy, imagination, and skill by examining works on topics ranging from business to science to history and politics. Outside the classroom students will be expected to apply these skills to their own writing through a series of assignments culminating in the production of one magazine-length work. Throughout, we will focus on challenges of structure, “voice,” and sustaining a narrative. Our goal will be to produce work distinguished by simple, accurate, and compelling prose.

(Fall) Old English
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the language and literature of Anglo-Saxon England (ca. 450-1066 AD) in a series of graduated grammar lessons and readings of Old English poetry and prose. These will include selections from the Bible, the Venerable Bede, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicles, "The Wanderer," "The Dream of the Rood," "The Wife's Lament," and the Exeter Book riddles. We will also learn the 31-character Old English futhorc as it was preserved in "The Rune Poem" and used to inscribe verses on the Franks Casket and the Ruthwell Cross.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
Instructors: S. Harris

ENGL-310-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Beowulf
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the epic poem Beowulf in its original language and in translation. Written between c. 750 and c.1000 CE, Beowulf is the chief poetic achievement of Anglo-Saxon England, a work of stunning artistry, complex structure, and ancient folk wisdom. Beowulf has inspired J. R. R. Tolkien and Seamus Heaney as well as numerous authors and translators today. Reading the poem closely, we will put it into its historical and literary contexts, imagining Anglo-Saxon readers as well as modern ones. A knowledge of the Old English language is preferred but not required.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
Instructors: S. Harris
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-311-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Chaucer: The Canterbury Tales
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Known as a storyteller par excellence, Chaucer was also a famous reader of classical epic, romance, and philosophy. This research seminar will give students the opportunity to read the Canterbury Tales in light of the work's cultural, historical, and literary contexts. Throughout the semester, students will engage with Chaucer's tales and his favorite sources to examine and discuss his representations of gender and class, his perspectives on religious authority, his use of the English vernacular, and his commitment to poetry.
Prerequisites: English 200, English 210 or 213
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: W. Yu

(Spring) Chaucer: Stories of Cupid’s Martyrs - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Medieval Studies 300)
This course begins with a close reading of Chaucer's great love story Troilus and Criseyde together with The Legend of Good Women, taking into consideration the multiple cultural contexts a late medieval audience would have brought to both poems along with such topics as honour, love, trueth, and betrayal. We will conclude by comparing Shakespeare’s Troilus and Cressida with Chaucer's work as a way of understanding the continuities and changes between a late medieval and early modern understanding of men and women in love and war.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 8 credits in English or Medieval Studies and permission of instructor; online application required

(Spring) Seminar in Victorian Poetry and Prose: Sensational Victorians

In Tennyson's poetry of sensation, the shocking fictions of Collins and Braddon, and the sensually charged poetry of D.G. Rossetti and Swinburne, literary sensations became a nexus for Victorian anxieties about the embodied effects of literary form. This course investigates how authors deployed sensation in poetry and prose as they drew on emergent scientific discourses on disease and madness, ruptured barriers between high and low cultural forms, and blurred categories of class and gender to question the role of aesthetic labor in Victorian culture. Other readings will include texts by Trollope, Dickens, and James, as well as supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-322-01 - English - 2012-2013

(Full) Seminar in Victorian Poetry and Prose: George Eliot

When George Eliot's first stories were published, Charles Dickens wrote, "The exquisite truth and delicacy both of the humor and the pathos of these stories, I have never seen the like of." Decades later, Virginia Woolf called Middlemarch "one of the few English novels written for grown-up people." In her letters, Eliot said she wanted to change what the novel could do. Her novels are concerned with the mysterious and mundane, with the force of culture and history, and with the reverberations that move through the world from individual to individual. We will read some of her major works, including Adam Bede, Middlemarch, and Daniel Deronda, as well as some of her essays, influences, and historical and critical contexts.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200

Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-322-01 - English - 2012-2013
ENGL-323-20 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) The Victorian Novel: Realism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333f-08)
This course will explore the project of Realism in the Victorian novel, watching tensions between a desire for guidance and a desire for mimesis. One critic has said the Victorians brought a sense of social duty to Romantic world-awareness, creating a "duty of awareness" that was almost overwhelming for the novelist and novel. We will explore this "duty of awareness" as we investigate representations of gender, class, and feeling as structuring principles in the novel. Novelists may include Austen, Dickens, G. Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, W. Collins, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, 236, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-325-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Victorian Literature and Visual Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine literary texts that represent new forms of visuality in nineteenth-century Britain as well as examples of visual culture that provide a framework for reading Victorian culture in innovative ways. We will study nineteenth-century photography--portraiture, prison photography, imperial photographs, and private and popular erotic images--as well as novels and autobiographical writing that engage with new photographic technology and its transformation of the ways in which Victorians understood identity, politics, aesthetics, and representation. The course will take a similar approach to painting, literary illustration, political cartoons and caricature, and advertising.
Prerequisites: English 220 or English 323 and at least 4 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-327-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in the Literature of the Romantic Period: William Wordsworth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
William Wordsworth lived through a time of revolutions and world wars: the American Revolution, the French Revolution, the Haitian Revolution, the rise and fall of Napoleon, wars of independence and of imperial conquest, and, behind it all the social transformations arising from the industrial revolution. As Wordsworth wrestled with how to adapt his art to these new realities, he introduced dramatically new content and experimented with a startling variety of poetic forms, styles, and techniques. In the end his main subject became the question of how individual identity is formed. This course will be an introduction to Wordsworth's poetry, showing why he is the first and greatest modern English poet.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in department including English 200
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement; meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-327-02 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in the Literature of the Romantic Period: Jane Austen
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Jane Austen's work stands almost as its own subgenre in the evolution of the novel. Happening at a moment of transitions, her work can be read formally as a bridge between the experiments of eighteenth century realism and what was just to come in the Victorian novel. Although she is often admired for her humor and satire around marriage and sex, the novels also engage with aesthetics, epistemology, and sensibility: political ideas about what constitutes beauty, what it means to know something, and how much one should feel. We will read the completed novels, some of her influences and contemporaries, and critical and theoretical contexts.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement; meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-330-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) The Modern English Novel: D. H. Lawrence and Virginia Woolf
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the modernist movement in Britain in the early twentieth century, with the focus on the fiction and nonfiction writings of D.H. Lawrence and Virginia Woolf. Readings will include Lawrence's Sons and Lovers, The Rainbow, and Women in Love; Woolf's Mrs. Dalloway, To the Lighthouse, and The Years. Readings will also include critical essays by each author as well as brief critical biographies and selected secondary criticism.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101
ENGL-331-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in Modern Poetry: Hilda Doolittle, T. S. Eliot, Ezra Pound, and Mina Loy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will chart the development of Modernist poetics from its origins at the beginning of the twentieth century to the publication of The Waste Land in 1922. We will focus on four poets (Hilda Doolittle, T. S. Eliot, Mina Loy, and Ezra Pound) and will chart the ways in which they interact with one another to produce experimental poetry of extraordinary force.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in department including English 200; preference will be given to students who have taken English 235 or English 245
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-332-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) Modern Drama
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 332)
A study of the history of drama in Europe, America, and Africa from the late nineteenth century to the present. Readings include plays by Ibsen, Strindberg, Chekhov, Shaw, O'Casey, Pirandello, O'Neill, Brecht, Williams, Miller, Beckett, Pinter, Hansberry, Soyinka, Adeb, Shepard, Fugard, Norman, Watson, and Parks.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in English or theatre arts, or permission of instructor; satisfies theatre arts department seminar requirement (Theatre Arts 350)
Instructors: J. Lemly

(Fall) Two Irish Poets: W.B. Yeats and Seamus Heaney - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
A study in depth of two poets whose careers span the late nineteenth through the early twenty-first centuries. We will read poems, essays, and dramatic works by these two Nobel Prize winners with attention to their treatment of Ireland's legendary past and troubled recent history; to other themes of love and loss, nature and art; and to their explorations of the stylistic tensions and opportunities felt by Irish poets writing English verse.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in English or department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: R. Shaw
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Asian American Fiction, Nonfiction, and Film: After the Asian American Model Minority
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
At the height of the civil rights movement, a U.S. News and World Report article pronounced Japanese Americans as the "model minority." Since then the stereotype has reduced Asian American life to studiousness, academic achievement, and upward mobility. Its prevalence has often obscured our ability to understand contemporary forms of Asian racialization, from the 1992 "Honor Roll Murder" to the 1999 espionage case against Wen Ho Lee. Examining literature and film, we will consider the myth's representation as an extension of prior anti-Asian racism or a break from the past. Authors may include Amy Chua, Susan Choi, Vincent Lam, and Chang-rae Lee. Films may include Better Luck Tomorrow and Crash.

ENGL-337-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) The Political Imagination in Contemporary South Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar examines the variety of literary and cultural expression in South Africa since the 1970s, focusing on the relations between art and political struggle. Among the topics to be discussed are the imagination of history in South African literature; the emergence of the Black Consciousness movement (and its legacies); responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Among the authors to be studied are Nadine Gordimer, J.M. Coetzee, Njabulo Ndebele, Zoe Wicomb, and Zakes Mda, along with a number of contemporary poets, playwrights, and filmmakers.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits at the 300 level in English, history, politics, or related fields
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
ENGL-341-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Spring) American Literature III - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the range and variety of American literary expression from the 1920s through the early 1940s. Topics include the role of regionalism; the emergence of a "modernist" aesthetic; ethnicity and modernism; debates within African American literary culture. Authors include Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, William Faulkner, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Henry Roth, and Pietro Di Donato.

(Fall) Studies in American Literature: Henry James on Film - *Not offered this year/term (Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 380)
This seminar will examine the various screen adaptations of assorted novels by Henry James. We will read the novels against the films, exploring how James's texts translate--or do not translate--into film. Novels and films to be studied include Washington Square, The Europeans, Portrait of a Lady, The Turn of the Screw, and Wings of the Dove.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

ENGL-347-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Modern Urban British Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
As London and the British novel enter the new millennium, both are sites of competing histories, traditions, and agendas. This course will map the city's progress from the center of an empire to a node in the global world's economy, and chart the twentieth-century novel's movement from realism to postmodernism and beyond. Beginning by contrasting the realist London of Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes with Virginia Woolf's modernist version in Mrs. Dalloway, we will go on to trace the development of the post-1945 British novel.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200

ENGL-359-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Emily Dickinson in Her Times
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333A)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This course will examine the writing of Emily Dickinson, both her poetry and her letters. We will consider the cultural, historical, political, religious, and familial environment in which she lived. Special attention will be paid to Dickinson's place as a woman artist in the nineteenth century. The class will meet at the Dickinson Museum (280 Main Street in Amherst and accessible by Five College bus). Enrollment is limited to ten students.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English or 8 credits in Gender Studies
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) in Amherst
Instructors: M. Ackmann

(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333 and Environmental Studies 373)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

(Spring) Hitchcock and After - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 320)
This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Manne, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.

(Spring) Explorations in Cultural Semantics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Anthropology 318)
Where does meaning come from, how does it work? Do different forms of expression (verbal, visual, auditory, or tactile) involve different ways of referring, of claiming what a message is about? Where do I locate the differences, how can I describe them? This class offers an introduction to key concepts in the study of meaning with a particular emphasis on narrative theory. We will take a closer look at the similarities and differences in the construction of "the story," in literature, history, myth, and other types of claims from very different historical (ancient, medieval, or modern) and cultural (European, Aboriginal Australian, and Native American) settings.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Anthropology 230, 12 credits in department or permission of instructor. Introductory course in linguistic anthropology or equivalent is required.
Instructors: A. Lass

ENGL-383-01 - English - 2012-2013
(Fall) Just Joyce
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Seminar on Joyce's major texts excluding Finnegan's Wake. Beginning with Dubliners, the seminar will consider recent trends in critical theory as they pertain to Joyce's work. Half the semester will be spent on a careful reading of Ulysses. Students will be responsible for seminar reports as well as a midterm paper (7-10 pages) and a final paper (15-20 pages).
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 200, or permission of instructor; English 230 and English 280 highly recommended
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: W. Quillian

(Fall) Re-imagining Los Angeles: Multiethnic Fictions of Tomorrowland - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
In Ridley Scott's 1982 science fiction film, Blade Runner, Los Angeles is a beleaguered metropolis overrun by immigrant "hordes" and menacing replicants, presenting a dystopic forecast of multiculturalism. By surveying major genres in relation to the racialized and gendered contexts of migration, labor, and urban redevelopment, this course focuses on alternative constructions of Los Angeles in African American, Asian American, and Chicana/o short stories, novels, and film. Works will include Southland, Tropic of Orange, Twilight: Los Angeles 1992, Their Dogs Came with Them, Devil in a Blue Dress, We Should Never Meet, and Kindred.

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course introduces students to the field of environmental studies and to some of the scientific, historical, political, economic and cultural aspects of environmental concerns. Through interdisciplinary lenses, we explore the complexities of many issues and problems such as climate change, threats to biodiversity, and toxic environments. In addition to fostering an understanding of their origins, the course focuses on potential solutions.

(Fall) "Are We Modern Yet?" Introduction to the Histories and Theories of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

What is so compelling about the idea of development? Why does it fail much of the global south? Do colonialism and capitalism have anything to do with it? Why do hunger, poverty, inequality, unemployment, and ecological crises persist in the so-called developed world? What are the parameters of the proposed solutions to underdevelopment such as neoliberal market reforms versus those of alternative models? What are the connections between development and environmental issues? development and war? Can development be sustainable? Are gender and race incidental or central to these issues? This course engages these questions through readings, lectures, discussions, and writing assignments.

(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.

ENVST-200-01 - Environmental Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

Most of the environmental challenges we face are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. This course introduces students to the scientific principles, concepts, and methodologies required to both understand the interrelationships of the natural world, as well as to identify and analyze environmental problems and think critically about alternative solutions for addressing them. Key concepts from ecology, biogeochemistry, and other scientific fields inform our study of climate change, water resources, soil sustainability, food production, and other topics. Fundamental and emerging issues are examined using regional case studies, hands-on problem solving, and field and laboratory experiments.

Prerequisites: One 100-level lab science; one course in statistics is recommended

(Fall) Political Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course will explore the historical, political, economic, social, and cultural contexts in which human-environment interactions occur. We will cover critical topics and trends in the field of political ecology, from its early manifestations to more recent expansions. Using case studies from the global south and north, we will discuss factors that shape social and environmental change across scales from the personal to the global, and we will examine the role of gender, race, class, and power in struggles over resources. Students will become familiar with the academic debates in which political ecologists are engaged, and they will apply the concepts discussed in a case of their choice.

(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Earth's landscapes have changed dramatically over the planet's long history. In this course we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We also consider how geologic setting or physical environment has influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent. By "reading" the land we can recognize the complex layering of natural and cultural histories that creates what is experienced as "sense of place." Reading the land can also provide a clearer sense of how various peoples have used and shaped Earth's surface differently, and how these differences have contributed to a spectrum of environmental impacts.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. High school earth science or 4 credits in geology recommended.

(Fall) The Value of Nature - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Through this seminar, students develop an in-depth knowledge of and articulate vocabulary for the significant and diverse ways that humans value the natural world - utilitarian, scientific, aesthetic, naturalistic, symbolic, ethical, and spiritual. We use these different typologies of human environmental values as frameworks for readings and discussion, extending our examination to historical and cultural variations in values, competing perspectives of the natural world, and other value concepts, including intrinsic and transformative value. We examine the concept of biophilia and probe the role values play in the concern over losses of biological diversity and its implications.

(Spring) Environmental Issues

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

In this course, we will explore the different facets of numerous environmental policy issues and review the substantive aspects, legal themes, and regulatory structure of the major federal environmental laws. The laws covered in this course include the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, and others. The course objectives are for the student to learn the basic regulatory characteristics of the major laws and to become well-versed in the current environmental issues which we will focus upon throughout the semester, such as global climate change, ocean degradation, energy resources, and biodiversity loss.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive; English 267)

An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.

(Fall) Qualitative Research Methods in Environmental Studies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The course is designed for upper level students interested in conducting independent or honors thesis qualitative research on environmental issues. We will discuss the logic of qualitative social research and examine a range of methods, considering the specific advantages (and limitations) of different techniques. Students will also discuss ethical issues, including the challenges of conducting research in cross-cultural settings, and they will prepare institutional review board proposals. This is a hands-on course in which each student will pick a research topic of interest (on an environment-society problem) and then share and discuss weekly assignments in class. Students from a variety of disciplines are welcome.

Prerequisites: 8 credits of 200-level social science or humanities and permission of instructor.

(Spring) Restoration Ecology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

One test of our ecological knowledge is whether we can successfully apply it to create or restore ecosystems that have been damaged or destroyed. As we take on the role of restoration ecologists this semester, we will use principles and methods of ecology, conservation biology, hydrology, soil science, and related disciplines to learn about the theory, practice, and politics of ecosystem restoration. This course emphasizes fieldwork, interdisciplinary teamwork, and ecological planning to evaluate and design restoration projects in our surrounding communities and regional landscapes.

(Spring) Perspectives on American Environmental History - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

We explore the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration, colonization, and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.

(Fall) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Environmental Justice and American Literature

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

As environmental justice scholars such as Vandana Shiva and Robert Bullard have explained, people of color, the poor, and women suffer disproportionately from ecological crisis. This course will study literary works grounded in this material reality of simultaneous ecological and human devastation specific to U.S. minority groups and raise questions about the power of literature to document, illustrate, arouse, and instruct in the face of environmental crisis. Topics will include ecofeminism, environmental racism, urban ecology and planning, sexuality and environment, and U.S. environmental imperialism. We will read critical theory alongside poetry and prose from a diverse range of nineteenth- and twentieth-century American writers.

(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Food Justice: Literature, Art, and Activism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

In a world of diminishing resources, the complex balance of the global food supply calls into question issues of justice and human values. Why is it that certain groups of people suffer disproportionately from food scarcity and contamination? How do we ensure affordable, nutritious, and culturally appropriate food for all in the face of overconsumption, climate change, and population growth? We will study a diverse range of contemporary media as we engage in critical discussion of the production, distribution, and consumption of food. Topics will include food sovereignty and security; food disparities related to race, class and gender; animal liberation; and new food technologies.

(Spring) Photography and Landscape: Earth As Visual Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Our understanding of the world around us is deeply influenced by the visual images created in response to human experience of nature. This course explores photography as a way of seeing and interpreting landscape and environment through time. Projects allow students to examine visual elements of landscape, develop photographic techniques, and create photo-narratives of their own. Using readings, observations, and photographs we consider how cultural and environmental issues and insights are communicated through photographic media. Basic understanding of photography and access to a camera are required.

(Spring) Landscape and Narrative - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Different stories or narratives—whether myth, literature, maps, or scientific theory—have been created about every region or environment on Earth as human attempts to describe and understand our connections with that place. How do braided strands of human history and natural history contribute to stories we tell of the land, and to stories we tell of ourselves in the land and of relational identity? In this reading and writing seminar we will reflect on how lifeways, homeplace, and identity of an individual or a community are linked with environment or the land. We will also create written and visual narratives of our own and explore creative environmental writing in reflection and action.

(Spring) Environmentalism and "The Market:" Evolving Strategies for Conservation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course focuses on the relationship between global political economy and environmentalism. Drawing on a range of literature, we will reflect on changing perceptions of and strategies related to "the market" in environmental policy. We will consider the political, economic, social and ecological influences and impacts of changing ideas and associated environmental practices, with particular attention to programs such as payments for ecosystem services, ecotourism and green buying, corporate social responsibility, water privatization, carbon markets, and wildlife derivatives. Throughout the course, we will explore issues of equity, wealth and governance related to these new market-based approaches to environmental conservation.

(Spring) Science and Power in Environmental Governance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course applies concepts from political ecology to study how governance, broadly defined, works in relation to the environment. Using case studies of international environmental issues, we will explore how people make decisions about the environment in a policy realm. We will discuss the role of various agents, such as governments, scientific bodies, and nongovernmental organizations, in the decision-making process. We will reflect on who has access to decisions; how scientific data is used; how environmental ideas become powerful; and how policies are legitimated. Armed with this information, we will consider how to advocate for global environmental sustainability and social equity.

(Spring) Topics in European Studies: History in Literature: Historical Times, Historical Places, and Novel Spaces - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 260s-01)
Studies the connections between history, geography, and literature in 19th and 20th century Europe. Case studies on Mary Shelley's Frankenstein (1818), Victor Hugo's Les Misérables (1862), and Thomas Hardy's Tess of the D'Urbervilles (1891) will be undertaken in relation to broader comparative perspectives on the history and geography of European novels from Jane Austen's Persuasion (1817) to Eric Marie Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front (1929), as suggested by secondary accounts such as Franco Moretti's recent Atlas of the European Novel, 1800-1900 (1998).

EURST-323-01 - European Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in German Studies: German Culture from 1800 to 2000: Visions and Discoveries That Transformed the Present: Voices of Makers and Filmmakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 323)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.
The "long nineteenth century," with the political explosion of the French Revolution and scientific explosion of the steam engine, burst into modernity, defining itself and the "short twentieth century" in manifold areas: science, economics, politics, art, literature, education. Controversial values are attributed to concepts like secularization, nation-building, industrialization, and democratization. We will analyze representations in film and text of such discoveries and visions, e.g., in bacteriology, environmentalism, political and social upheaval, the concept of a democratic nation state, Marx's theories; Bismarck's German unification, the social-security system; and women's movements.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German

Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224). The 224 tutorial will stress film visions by women directors along with working on revising written work from 223.

Instructors: G. Davis

Expected enrollment: 25
