Course Information Archive 2000-2016

This document contains course information – including numbers, descriptions, designations, and instructors – for courses offered from academic year 2000 (beginning fall 2000) to academic year 2016 (through summer 2017). The information reflects the public contents of the now-decommissioned online Course Catalog Database. These contents were frequently updated after the Bulletin and Course Catalog was published each year and therefore often contain more current course information than appears in the archived Bulletin and Course Catalog PDFs for these past years.

While this document is lengthy, it can be easily navigated using the Bookmarks and Find tools in your PDF reader. Use Bookmarks to navigate to the year of interest, then to the academic subject within that year. Use Find to navigate to a specific course number if known (for example, POLIT-116).

Key to Course Information

For each course in this document, the following information is listed in this order:

- Course number, subject, and academic year
- The term(s) in which the course was planned to be offered, course title, and "not offered this year/term" if appropriate
- Credits (or PE units if a non-credit Physical Education course), any College-wide undergraduate degree requirements met (see that year's Bulletin and Course Catalog for details of requirements)
- Additional designations (such as writing-intensive) and/or the department and course number of any crosslisting
- Course description
- Prerequisites and/or registration restrictions
- Any other notes about the course
- Instructor(s)

African American and African Studies

(Fall) Introduction to African American and African Studies: Identity, Community, and Progress
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this introduction to the African American experience in twentieth-century America, historical, cultural, economic, political, and aesthetic elements of the urban African American experience are examined. Because of the interdisciplinary nature of African American studies, we consider methodological issues as they bear on the constitution of the African American subject, the descriptive edifices of the contemporary African American community, and programs for liberation.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Wilson

(Fall) Chocolate Cities and Vanilla Suburbs
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course critically explores assumptions about cities and suburbs, examining how racial and class segregation affect metropolitan development. Using African Americans as a case study we examine the impact that race, class, and gender have on their lives in the city and suburbs. We will consider how "chocolate cities and vanilla suburbs" represent blacks' and whites' different social and political statuses. Other issues examined are gentrification, leisure and public space, gated communities, and public-private partnerships in regional development.
Prerequisites: African American and African Studies 101 or per instructor

(Fall) Luminous Darkness: African American Cultural Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Changing historical and determinate racial conditions permit a conjunctural study of various responses to the question, What is black culture in twentieth-century American experience? The course explores black cultural products as a way to understand the moral and political striving of African Americans to achieve racial democracy and economic justice. An overdeterminist theoretical approach provides an analysis and critique of concrete cultural productions and institutions, as those productions and institutions inhibit and enhance social change and black public life.

American Studies

AMST-250-01 - American Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Asian American Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course we will trace the development of the panethnic concept of "Asian America" and the interdisciplinary field of study that has resulted. Through immigration histories, critical texts, fiction and nonfiction literature, and films, we will explore Asian American histories and cultures. We will also examine the relation of Asian Americans to the dominant binary racial paradigm in the U.S. Finally, we will consider how Western conceptions of "Asia" and global issues impact Asian American identities.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. K. Cardozo-Kane

AMST-301-01 - American Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Senior Seminar

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
This seminar examines the career of Richard Wright, from his early stories and major literary works (Native Son and Black Boy) to his experience as an expatriate author in Paris and his participation in various liberation struggles around the world. In addition, the seminar will consider Wright's "influence" on a number of subsequent literary and cultural figures, including Himes, Baldwin, Ellison, Morrison, and Petrie. Among the topics to be explored are Wright and the Communist Party, Wright and urban sociology, African American autobiography, African American artists in France, the Negritude movement in Africa, and Wright's relation to postcolonial theorizing.

Prerequisites: sr, 8 credits or equivalent in any of a combination of American Literature, African American Literature, American History, or African American History or permission of the instructor.

(Spring) Exploring Asian Americas - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive; asian 203)
The concept of "Asian America" developed in the 1960s in conjunction with the broader civil rights movement. Since the 1960s, new migration has dramatically changed the composition of Asian America, and new theoretical perspectives challenge us to reexamine the concept itself. While a clear division between Asia and the U.S. was inherent in the original concept of Asian America, more recent theories of hybridity, diaspora, and transnationalism blur such clear-cut boundaries around national, ethnic, and racial formations. In this course, we will examine these empirical changes in migration and ethnic identification as well as the shifts in theoretical paradigms for understanding them.

ANTHR-204-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Anthropology of Modern Japan
(Speaking-intensive; asian 204)
Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as mysterious and fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will read key texts in Japanese studies, some of which attempt to bridge this gap by presenting Japanese people as individuals with understandable motivations for their behavior, others of which attempt at a more general level to explicate underlying social structures, psychology, religion, and aesthetics. We will then turn to several more recent anthropological studies of different aspects of Japanese society.

(Fall) Cultures of Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
What happens when anthropology goes to Europe? This course examines a variety of cultural experiences from continental Europe and the British Isles. Specific problem areas (such as political, national, and religious identity; peasant and urban environments; tourism; and witchcraft) are explored from alternative theoretical perspectives. In addition to lectures and readings, the course relies on guest lecturers and films.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. Lass

ANTHR-207-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Peoples of the South Pacific - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course emphasizes the social and cultural diversity of peoples in Polynesia, Micronesia, Melanesia, and Australia. Special attention is given to comparing "traditional" and "modern" forms of social relationships, political economies, ritual, and religious practices.

(Spring) Issues in Anthropology: Political and Legal Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
Rules and norms regulate people’s lives in all societies, yet legal institutions and processes vary widely from one society to another. Each constructs and resolves problems of debt, theft, infidelity, and injury in different ways. How does legal consciousness differ along gender, ethnic, and class lines and how has it changed over time? How are legal systems related to hierarchies of power? Through a survey of the ethnographic literature, we will explore how people in African, Central American, East Asian, and North American societies have interpreted and negotiated law. Through community-based learning, students will see how community groups engage the legal system at various levels.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: Community-based Learning course; 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Roth

ANTHR-216-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Issues in Anthropology: Peoples and Cultures of South Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
This course is an overview of the peoples and cultures of South Asia, with emphasis on India, Pakistan, and Nepal. We will consider historically embedded Western images of the region to understand our preconceptions. We will then review classic themes in the anthropology of the region: village studies, caste, kinship, gender, the life cycle, modes of subsistence, and reproductive decisions in the context of urbanization and planned change. We will also examine the cultures of subaltern groups, including tribes, Hijras, low castes, and women. We will conclude with an exploration of rituals, myths, and oral traditions as both embodiment and critique of local ideologies.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Thompson

ANTHR-216-02 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Issues in Anthropology: Gender in Social Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
This course explores the meanings of gender in a range of societies. We assess both classic texts and current studies to critically evaluate the key dichotomies in gender studies: nature/culture, domestic/politico-jural, woman/man. We examine rival theories of socialization, marriage, and gender subordination. The readings cover a range of ethnographic subjects, including sexual inequality, feminist research methods, gender and history, gender and ethnographic writing, masculinity, and culture and sexuality. We conclude with a reassessment of the cross-cultural validity of the categories of sex, gender, and sexuality, especially in view of their changing nature in Western industrial nations.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Thompson

ANTHR-222-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) The Anthropology of Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores the material culture, music, dance, and theater of Africa and the Pacific, with an emphasis on visual symbolism and the imagery of power in ritual and ceremonial contexts.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Battaglia

ANTHR-223-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Development of Social Thought
(Writing-intensive; soci 223)
This course examines the origins and development of sociological theory in the nineteenth century. Focusing on the three most important representatives of the classical tradition in sociology—Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim—we consider in detail the ideas of each, compare perspectives on emerging industrial society, and assess their contemporary significance.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. K. Tucker

(Spring) The Anthropology of International Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores international economic development from an anthropological perspective. We examine theories used to explain development and underdevelopment, including modernization and dependency theories as well as poststructural critiques of development discourse. Using case studies from Latin America, Africa, and elsewhere, we will examine intellectual and applied anthropological contributions to development issues and problems.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Morgan

ANTHR-230-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Language in Culture and Society - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Every society is held together by systems of interpersonal and institutional communication. This course examines the nature of communication codes, including those based on language (speaking and writing) and those based on visual images (art, advertising, television). To understand communication in its social and historical dimensions, we study the psychological and cultural impact of media revolutions and then look at ways communication systems manipulate individual consciousness. Illustrative examples are drawn from Western and non-Western societies.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Lass

An anthropological inquiry into the structure, function, and expression of belief systems in selected societies, this course examines the ways in which worldviews influence perception, guide social behavior, and deal with cultural process and change. Topics may include the analysis of ethical beliefs expressed in symbolic forms, such as art, architecture, and ritual as well as cross-cultural comparisons of belief systems, such as witchcraft, sorcery, mythology, and cosmology.

Prerequisites: Anthropology 105
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Battaglia

ANTHR-235-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Development of Anthropological Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will review the key issues and paradigm shifts in the development of anthropology from its foundations in classical thought to its emergence as an independent discipline. The readings will include works from the American, British, and Continental traditions.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Lass

ANTHR-240-01 - Anthropology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Medical Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Biocultural aspects of disease and healing are examined through case studies of nonindustrialized societies, including the relationship between malaria and sickle cell anemia in West Africa and ritual cannibalism and a degenerative nervous-system disorder (kuru) in highland New Guinea. This course surveys the cultural construction of suffering and healing, the medicalization of human social problems, and inequities in the distribution of disease and therapy.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Anthropology of Gender and Sexuality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar focuses on contemporary scholarship concerned with the extent to which gender and sexuality are socially constructed. We look at ways in which it is possible to describe the experience of sexual identity and read accounts of cross-culturally varied ways in which natural and cultural phenomena are genderized. Topics include sexual knowledge, secrecy, ritualized homosexuality and transvestism, and the genderization of knowledge and power.
Prerequisites: senior major in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Morgan

(Fall) Anthropology of History - *Not offered this year/term
In this seminar we question the distinction between myth and history and consider the possibility that historical consciousness is not dependent on the invention of writing. We then examine the relationships among literacy, art, nationalism, and the invention of tradition and test the limits of ethnohistory. Finally, we look at the ways in which relics, museums, and tourism have all helped make history—as fact, experience, or commodity—possible.

(Spring) Bringing It All Back Home: Anthropology of Contemporary United States and Britain

Anthropologists are increasingly recognizing the epistemological and political difficulties of regarding non-Western peoples as "others"—as objects for social scientific consumption. Some have responded by focusing attention on their own sociocultural circumstances. This course examines both the theoretical basis of the anthropological turn from "exotic" fieldwork and the results of the new research about the United States. Topics include youth subcultures, class, race, and suburban and inner-city lives.

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Spring) Image and Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture from ancient times to the present. In six focused units, we will explore themes of power and faith, life and death, and person and society as they were expressed visually in the arts of ancient Greece, medieval France, Islamic Asia, Renaissance Italy, and modern Europe and America. Lectures will be complemented by small discussion sections, which will sometimes be held in the College's art museum.

(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(class 102)
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. Bergmann, Ms. Debnar

(Spring) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Spring 2001: Egyptian Art and Its Revivals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Egypt holds a unique fascination in the West, as a continuous parade of blockbuster exhibitions attests. The seminar examines the ancient art and its revivals in the West, where recurring waves of artists have imitated monuments of a distant and seemingly exotic past. In the ancient Nile valley, works of art carried potent meanings and expressed a distinctive worldview. Artists of other times and places have taken up Egyptian motifs and treated them in ways suiting their own purposes and sensibilities. The course trains students in the visual and contextual analysis of works of art.
Prerequisites: Prereq: fy, or permission of instructor;
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. J. Varriano

ARTH-235-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Spring) Baroque and Rococo Art in Northern Europe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century art in Holland, Flanders, and France emphasizes the way in which widely divergent religious practices and governmental institutions affected the making of art in those countries. Rembrandt, Hals, Vermeer, Rubens, Van Dyck, and Poussin are among the artists discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; (fy only with permission of instructor)
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Varriano

ARTH-243-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.
Prerequisites: Prereq: soph, jr, sr; (fy only with permission of instructor);
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Davis

ARTH-245-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Spring) Contemporary Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course examines issues and developments in American and European art from 1940 to the present. We consider the cultural and art historical contexts for work by artists from abstract expressionism to minimalism, pop, and conceptual art; earthworks and site-specific sculpture; performance art and postmodernist practices in the 1990s. The course concerns the role of artists' writings, critical interpretations, and the functions of the gallery and museum as they relate to the artworks and our responses to them.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; (fy only with permission of instructor);
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. Lee

ARTH-250-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Spring) American Painting
This survey of eighteenth-, nineteenth-, and early twentieth-century art emphasizes the work of individual artists and the cultural environments in which art was produced and viewed. Topics include the colonial portrait, landscape painting, images of American life, impressionism, expatriatism, modernism, and the machine age. Copley, Cole, Church, Eakins, Homer, Whistler, Sargent, Cassatt, O'Keeffe, and Hopper are some of the artists to be discussed.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; (fy only with permission of instructor)

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Spring 2001: The Domestic Interior, Renaissance to Modern
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Through case studies ranging from palaces in sixteenth-century Europe to urban lofts in twentieth-century America, this course explores how the design of living environments can express cultural attitudes and shape social and personal experience. The typology, distribution, and furnishing of rooms will be examined as aspects of complex visual and spatial compositions that produce meaning through an interplay of form and usage. Particular attention will be given to notions of public and private, the relationship between the interior and the body, the use of technology and imagery, the commodification of decoration, and the role of interior design in the process of identity formation.
Prerequisites: Art history background desirable, but not necessary; written application required (available in the art department office); and permission of instructor.
Notes: Limited enrollment
Instructors: Ms. M. Hellman

ARTH-290-01  -  Art History  -  2000-2001
(Fall) Issues in Art History: Fall 2000: Asian Art in the Period of Western Domination
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
European nations campaigned in Asia since the seventeenth century for luxurious commodities and Christians, leading by the nineteenth century to such developments as the establishment of the British Empire in India. The course will explore the visual cultures of Asia in this period of rapid and unprecedented change in India, China, and Japan. Through analysis of the arts and discussion on a set of critical readings, students will study the impact of Western colonization in Asia, compare responses of different countries to it in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and trace in recent art of those countries an ongoing crisis of cultural identity at the margins of the Western world.
Prerequisites: Soph, jr, sr; (fy only with permission of the instructor)
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Sinha

ARTH-290-02  -  Art History  -  2000-2001
(Fall) Issues in Art History: Fall 2000: Introduction to Film Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Fall) Senior Seminar in Theory and Interpretation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar is intended for senior art majors and other upper-level students with a strong background in art history. The course will address critical issues related to the creation and interpretation of works of art, through history and across cultures. Social history, gender, and postmodern discourses will be considered along with traditional theories of iconography, connoisseurship, and formalism.
Prerequisites: sr with 8 credits in art history or permission of instructors
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Lee, Mr. A. Sinha, Mr. J. Varriano

(Spring) Great Cities: Spring 2001: Rome, the Eternal City
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
The seminar will study the monuments and urban fabric of Rome from antiquity until the present day. Beginning with the classical period of the Republic and Empire, the class will examine the transformation of the city under papal rule in the medieval, Renaissance, Baroque, and new classical periods, and will conclude with the period after 1870 when the city became the capital of the unified Italy. Some attention will also be given to the mythic stature of Rome as revealed in literature and, more recently, in film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of the instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Varriano

(Fall) Seminar in Nineteenth-Century Art: Fall 2000: French Painting in the 1880s
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Understanding French art of the 1880s has always been key in trying to understand the characteristic subjects and attitudes in modernist painting. And with good reason: the decade was ushered in by the fifth and sixth impressionist exhibitions; punctuated by the half-monumental, half-farcical canvases of Seurat; qualified by the anxious, dissenting voice of van Gogh; and closed with Gauguin leaving France for Tahiti in what he believed was a nonmodern adventure. This seminar will explore the decade, artists, works, and issues which made and continue to make it crucial to modernist art history.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; (soph only with permission of instructor); 8 credits in art history, preferably including 241 or 244, or permission of instructor;
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours);
Instructors: Mr. A. Lee

(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Spring 2001: Photography Case Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar will follow up on a photography project from the fall semester--pictures taken by the professional photographer Michael Jacobson-Hardy and the Mount Holyoke students with whom he will work. It has two general goals: to scrutinize the body of work from a series of theoretical and interpretive attitudes (Barthes, Bourdieu, Sontag, to name some of the writers whose perspectives we will try on) and to prepare catalogue-like essays for an exhibition devoted to the photographs.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; (soph only with permission of instructor) 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Lee

(Fall) Seminar in American Art: Fall 2000: Hollywood Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This is a seminar on twelve visually aggressive, feature-length American films from the silent era to the present. Classes will consist of critical conversations on the ways of interpreting each film. Weekly readings, one or two class presentations, and a term project are required. Among the possible films to be screened are: Sunrise, The Grapes of Wrath, Sunset Boulevard, Touch of Evil, Blade Runner, and Blue Velvet.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 16

ARTH-360-01 - Art History - 2000-2001
(Spring) Seminar in Asian Art: Spring 2001: Indian Films
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar will examine a selection of films in relation to India's urban culture in the twentieth century. We will screen old and new films, those belonging to the commercial industry--the Bollywood--and those made by directors who remain outside that industry. Our challenge will be to develop possible ways to understand the many facets of film culture in India. Using critical essays, class discussions, and research, we will explore the relationship of film to national politics, examine the global circulation of Indian films, analyze how films reflect the desires and fantasies of their audiences, and evaluate India's place in the history of world cinema.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor; 8 credits in art history or film studies, including either ARTH 290f(01) Issues in Asian Art, or Film Studies 201 Intro. to Film, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (5 hours), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours);
Instructors: Mr. A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
A student may undertake independent study in any of the following fields: American, Asian, European, classical, Near Eastern, or Islamic art. She must have a minimum B+ average in art history courses, must receive permission from her project adviser, and consult guidelines available in the art department office. A student undertaking a two-semester independent study project (Art History 395) should be aware that only 4 credits will be applied to her major requirements. Thus, in addition to two 395 courses, she must enroll in two 300-level seminars.

Introduction to Sanskrit, the classical language of India. Related to other Indo-European languages (including English) and the ancestor of most of the 16 major Indian languages (e.g., Hindi), Sanskrit is the medium of the literary classics, as well as of the texts of the Hindu, Buddhist, and Jain religions. The first-semester course covers Sanskrit grammar. The emphasis is on sentence construction, recognition and production of grammatical forms, and translation. Attention is also given to script, chanting, and pronunciation. The goal is proficiency in reading sentences and sustained passages in Sanskrit, in preparation for reading authentic texts in the second semester.

(Spring) History of Astronomy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at astronomy and cosmology from earliest times, Egyptian, Babylonian, Greek, Islamic; the medieval universe; Newtonian universe; mechanistic universe of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries; gravitational theory; origin, structure, and evolution of stars and galaxies; developments in modern astronomy. Nontechnical, with emphasis on history and cosmology.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. White

ASTR-223-02 - Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(geol 223)
A first-year level introductory course for physical science minors and majors. Topics include origin and evolution of the planets; planetary orbits, rotation, and precession; gravitational and tidal interactions; asteroids, comets, and planetary rings; meteorites; interiors and atmospheres of the Jovian and terrestrial planets; geology, tectonics, and mineralogy of the terrestrial planets and satellites; new data from Mars Pathfinder, Lunar Surveyor, and current NASA missions.
Prerequisites: any physical science course
ASTR-224-01: Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Stellar Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The basic observational properties of stars will be explored in an experimental format relying on both telescopic observations and computer programming exercises. No previous computer programming experience is required.
Prerequisites: Physics 115, Math 101 or equivalent
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours and 45 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. White

ASTR-224-01: Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Stellar Astronomy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The basic observational properties of stars will be explored in an experimental format relying on both telescopic observations and computer programming exercises. No previous computer programming experience is required.
Prerequisites: Physics 115, Math 101 or equivalent
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours and 45 minutes)
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Galactic and Extragalactic Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The basic observational properties of galaxies are explored in an experimental format relying on both telescopic observations and computer programming exercises. No previous computer experience is required.
Prerequisites: Physics 115, Math 101 or equivalent
Notes: 2 meetings (2 1/2 hour)
Instructors: Mr. S. Schneider, Ms. S. Edwards

(Fall) Cosmology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at cosmological models and the relationship between models and observable parameters. Topics in current astronomy that bear upon cosmological problems, including background electromagnetic radiation, nucleosynthesis, dating methods, determinations of the mean density of the universe and the Hubble constant, and tests of gravitational theories. Discussion of some questions concerning the foundations of cosmology and its future as a science.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101 and a physical science
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. G. Greenstein

(Spring) Cosmology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at cosmological models and the relationship between models and observable parameters. Topics in current astronomy that bear upon cosmological problems, including background electromagnetic radiation, nucleosynthesis, dating methods, determinations of the mean density of the universe and the Hubble constant, and tests of gravitational theories. (Fall) Independent Study
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph

Instructors: Mr. T. Dennis

(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Devoted each year to a particular topic or current research interest, this course will commence with a few lectures in which an observational and a theoretical problem is laid out, but then quickly move to a seminar format. In class discussions a set of problems will be formulated, each designed to illuminate a significant aspect of the topic at hand. The problems will be significant in difficulty and broad in scope: their solution, worked out individually and in class discussion, will constitute the real work of the course. Students will gain experience in both oral and written presentation. Topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: Astronomy 224, 351 or 352
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. M. Dyar

ASTR-337-01 - Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Observational Techniques in Infrared and Optical Astronomy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the techniques of gathering and analyzing astronomical data, particularly in the optical and infrared. Telescope design and optics; instrumentation for imaging, photometry, and spectroscopy; astronomical detectors; computer graphics and image processing; error analysis and curve fitting; data analysis and astrophysical interpretation, emphasizing globular clusters.
Prerequisites: Astronomy 224-225, Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 evening lab (3 hour)

ASTR-338-01 - Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Techniques of Radio Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to radio astronomy equipment, techniques, and the nature of cosmic radio sources. Radio receiver and antenna theory; radio flux, brightness temperature, and the transfer of radio radiation in cosmic sources; effect of noise, sensitivity, bandwidth, and antenna efficiency; techniques of beam switching, interferometry, and aperture synthesis; basic types of radio astronomical sources: ionized plasmas, masers, recombination and hyperfine transitions; nonthermal sources; applications to the sun, interstellar clouds, and extragalactic objects.

Prerequisites: two semesters of physics and two semesters of calculus
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and observation sessions
Instructors: Mr. R. Snell

ASTR-351-01 - Astronomy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Astrophysics I: Stars and Stellar Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at physical principles governing the properties of stars, their formation and evolution: radiation laws and the determination of stellar temperatures and luminosities; Newton's laws and the determination of stellar masses; hydrostatic equilibrium and the thermodynamics of gas and radiation; nuclear fusion and stellar energy generation; physics of degenerate matter and the evolution of stars to white dwarfs, neutron stars, or black holes; nucleosynthesis in supernova explosions; dynamics of mass transfer in binary systems; viscous accretion disks in star formation and X-ray binaries.
Prerequisites: 2 300-level physics courses
Notes: 3 meetings (80 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Van Blerkom

(Spring) Astrophysics II: Galaxies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course applies physics to the understanding of astronomical phenomena. Physical processes in the gaseous interstellar medium; photoionization in HII regions and planetary nebulae; shocks in supernova remnants and stellar jets; energy balance in molecular clouds. Dynamics of stellar systems; star clusters and the virial theorem; galaxy rotation and the presence of dark matter in the universe; spiral density waves. Quasars and active galactic nuclei: synchrotron radiation; accretion disks, supermassive black holes.
Prerequisites: 2 300-level physics courses
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Lowenthal

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 04 LEC | 05 LEC | 06 LEC | 07 LEC |

(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department

Biochemistry

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 10 LEC |

(Spring) Independent Study
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.

BIOCH-311-01 - Biochemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism

(biol 311; chem 311)

This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302

Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)

Instructors: Ms. E. Wiley

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology

(biol 314; chem 314)

This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302, Biochemistry 311, or permission of instructor

Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)

Instructors: Ms. E. Wiley

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation is expected.

Prerequisites: Biochemistry 311, 314, or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)

(Fall) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.

Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 03 LEC | 04 LEC | 05 LEC | 06 LEC | 07 LEC | 08 LEC | 09 LEC | 10 LEC | 11 LEC | 12 LEC | 13 LEC | 14 LEC | 15 LEC | 16 LEC | 17 LEC | 18 LEC | 19 LEC | 20 LEC |

(Spring) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.

Biological Sciences
BIOL-100-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Science of Life - Not offered this year/term
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How do living organisms develop and function? In this course, we will address this question, paying close attention to the role of genes in life processes. We will focus much of our discussion on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it will change our lives. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); 4 credits. Sign-up in Biology Office or via e-mail at biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period.
Instructors: Mr. C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-100-A - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Science of Life
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How do we and other animals sense the world and move within it? How does our brain use the information from sensory organs to construct a mental image of the world? What is consciousness? Are other animals conscious? We will explore these and related questions in this speaking- and writing-intensive course.
Instructors: Mrs. S. Barry
Section Instructors: A1 | A2 |
Expected enrollment: 20

BIOL-100-B - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Science of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
An introduction to biodiversity and conservation, with special emphasis on the habitats and conservation opportunities in the vicinity of the Mount Holyoke campus.
Instructors: Mr. K. Moody
Section Instructors: B1 LAB | B2 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-100-B - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Biology I: How Organisms Function
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Comparisons of how particular plants and animals conduct their lives, in light of their physiology, anatomy, and the materials from which they are made, and two case studies: 1) how organisms meet the challenge of life on land, 2) integrations of nerve and muscle in different kinds of animals.
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Gruber
Section Instructors: A1 LAB | A2 LAB | A3 LAB | A4 LAB | A5 LAB |

BIOL-151-B - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Biology I: How Organisms Function
Comparisons of how particular plants and animals conduct their lives, in light of their physiology, anatomy, and the materials from which they are made, and two case studies: 1) how organisms meet the challenge of life on land, 2) integrations of nerve and muscle in different kinds of animals.
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. S. Bacon-Temaner
Section Instructors: B1 LAB | B2 LAB | B3 LAB | B4 LAB | B5 LAB |

BIOL-151-C - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Biology I: How Organisms Function
Comparisons of how particular plants and animals conduct their lives, in light of their physiology, anatomy, and the materials from which they are made, and two case studies: 1) how organisms meet the challenge of life on land, 2) integrations of nerve and muscle in different kinds of animals.
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith
Section Instructors: C1 LAB | C2 LAB | C3 LAB | C4 LAB | C5 LAB |

BIOL-200-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Introduction to Biology II: How Organisms Develop
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchins), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 151
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Frary, Ms. D. Kelly
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB | 04 LAB | 05 LAB |

BIOL-206-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Local Flora
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Offers plant identification and natural history, emphasizing trees, native and introduced, and wildflowers. On- and off-campus field trips.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), including field trips; Sign-up in Biology Office or via e-mail at biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period.
Instructors: Ms. A. Frary
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-208-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Ornithology
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Introduces the study of birds, especially the local avian fauna, emphasizing fieldwork.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours), including field trips
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Offers a comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance, and population genetics.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 151 and 200, Chemistry 101

Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. C. Woodard, Mr. J. Knight

BIOL-213-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Ecology and Evolution

This course looks at the complexity of the living world—the ecological interactions and mechanisms of evolutionary change within a population, and between species, in the context of the physical world that organisms have helped to shape; the nature of biological diversity and the origin of adaptations.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 151, 200, and 210/orES200

Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin

BIOL-220-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Cell Biology

Undertakes an integrated study of the processes and structures that define life at the cellular level. Considers the molecular and supramolecular organization of membranes, cytoskeleton, and organelles in the context of the physical and chemical principles governing their assembly, and their participation in phenomena such as the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, transport, motility, signal transduction, and maintenance of cytoplasmic organization. The laboratory illustrates and analyzes these phenomena through selected optical and biochemical approaches.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. F. DeToma, Ms. S. Gruber

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Fall) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Prerequisites: soph and permission of instructor

Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.

Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 03 LEC | 04 LEC | 05 LEC | 06 LEC | 07 LEC | 08 LEC | 09 LEC | 10 LEC | 11 LEC | 12 LEC | 13 LEC | 14 LEC | 15 LEC | 16 LEC | 17 LEC | 18 LEC |

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Prerequisites: soph and permission of instructor

Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Mammalian Anatomy: Tissue to Organ System - *Not offered this year/term

Offers a systematic study of mammalian anatomy at both the histological and gross anatomical levels, including examination of the skeletal, muscular, digestive, circulatory, excretory, reproductive, and nervous systems. Emphasizes structural and functional relationships in the cat with comparisons to human systems.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in biology
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LAB

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 meeting (50 minutes); this course will NOT be offered with a lab for 2001.
Instructors: Mr. J. Knight

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interactions in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formations. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210 with 220 strongly recommended
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. R. Fink

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive; Hist 361)
This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin's theory of evolution--his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended. This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement in Biology but does satisfy distribution in History.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213, History 151, 161, or 255, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin

BIOL-309-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Vertebrate Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A study of vertebrates with emphasis on structural adaptations for functions such as feeding and locomotion, and on natural history. Some morphology and field identification involved in laboratory work.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals, in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove, and disprove, biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 213
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LAB
BIOL-311-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
See Biochemistry 311f; same as Chemistry 311f.

BIOL-314-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
See Biochemistry 314s; Chemistry 314s
Instructors: Ms. E. Wiley

BIOL-315-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Ethology
This course studies the biology of animal behavior, including both invertebrates and vertebrates. Topics include sense organs and communication; circadian and other rhythms; orientation and navigation; and the evolution and ecology of social systems. Laboratories involve an individual project.
Prerequisites: two of the following: Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213, or permission of instructor
Notes: Will not be offered in 2001-2002.
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith

BIOL-316-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Scanning Electron Microscopy
Includes theory and operation of the scanning electron microscope and preparation of biological and geological materials for observation. The versatile use of the microscope will be emphasized and will include low magnification, high resolution, and, back scattered (reflected) electron modes of operation. Energy dispersive X-ray microanalysis will be introduced. Students may elect the course for 4 credits for further experience in energy dispersive microanalysis, including quantitative analysis and element mapping.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor and a 200-level course in biological sciences or geology, Geology 220 if electing 4-credit option
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours), 1 lab (3 hours), 1 additional meeting (50 minutes) for 4-credit option
Instructors: Mrs. S. Gruber, Mrs. M. Rice

BIOL-318-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Spring) Comparative Physiology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Topics include systems and cellular mechanisms underlying the physiological adaptations of organisms to temperature extremes, low oxygen pressure at high altitudes and during diving, and high and low atmospheric pressure. Also, specialized sensory and defense mechanisms such as ultrasound, bioelectricity, and color adaptations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, Chemistry 202
Notes: Biological Sciences 220 recommended; 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Bacon

BIOL-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) An Introduction to Immunology
This course presents the elements of immunochemistry and immunobiology. Topics include the anatomy, genetics, and biochemistry of the immune response; antibody structures and functions; the allergic response; autoimmune diseases; and the applications of immunology to research and clinical problems.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. F. Detoma
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

BIOL-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Studies with the Electron Microscope
Introduction to the transmission electron microscope and its potential contributions to the biological sciences, through semester-long investigations of students' choosing. Projects may range from the molecular to the cellular/organismal levels and draw upon a variety of preparation techniques.
Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently. The 2-credit option will focus primarily on the laboratory component. The 4-credit option will emphasize, in addition, discussion of relevant literature.
Prerequisites: 220 or permission of instructor
Instructors: Mrs. S. Gruber
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

BIOL-321-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Mammalian Reproduction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 SEM | 02 LEC |

BIOL-321-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Programmed Cell Death. The orderly demise of cells is crucial for organisms to develop normally and to mount defenses against various stresses. When the process does not work properly, diseases often result. Relying on the current literature and class discussions, we will examine the phenomenon broadly. Topics will include the cellular mechanisms at play, the implications to the organism, and the various forms of programmed cell death in a range of eukaryotic cells.
Prerequisites: Biol. 220
Notes: Sign up in the Biology Office or via e-mail at biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period.
Instructors: Ms. S. Gruber, Mr. P. Gruber
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-321-02 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Conference Courses in Biology: Comparative Biomechanics: Mammalian Reproduction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
How do organisms cope with their physical environment? This course examines the mechanical engineering of organisms, focusing on properties of biological materials, their arrangement into working structures, and ways that organisms live in air and water.
Prerequisites: Biol 213, or calculus or physics
Notes: 2 75-minute meetings, 1 3-hr lab. 4 credits towards the Biology major
Instructors: Mrs. D. Kelly

BIOL-323-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001
(Fall) Physiology and Anatomy of Plants: Growth Regulation - *Not offered this year/term
This course is a study of the higher plant, its structure and organization, including factors influencing the placement of leaves, branching, and the production of flowers. Emphasizes recent advances concerning mode of action of plant growth regulators, protoplast and tissue culture, photomorphogenesis, and molecular controls.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210, 213 or 220

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

This seminar explores recent developments in major areas of botanical research. Topic changes from year to year.

Prerequisites: major with permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

Instructors: Mr. P. Gruber, Mr. A. Ellison

This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.

Prerequisites: two of the following: Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213, or 220, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); Offered alternate years

Instructors: Ms. A. Frary

---

This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 and either 210 or 213

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. J. Knight

Section Instructors: 01 LAB  | 02 LAB  |

A consideration of the physiological processes involved in the control of human body functions. We will study the mechanisms for regulating individual organ systems and how these mechanisms respond to changing needs of the individual. Our examination of the physiological controls will include an analysis of the underlying cellular and molecular processes that drive the mechanisms and integrate the activities of the different systems.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 220

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 meeting (50 minutes); 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. S. Bacon

Section Instructors: 01 LAB  | 02 LAB  |

---

Patterns of distribution and abundance of organisms and ecosystem structure and function are studied using experimental approaches, mathematics, and computer modeling. Readings and data from the primary scientific literature, along with results of student-run field and laboratory experiments will be used to develop and explore predictive models of ecological phenomena.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213 and one course in calculus or Statistics 240, and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. A. Ellison

Section Instructors: 01 LAB

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Fall) Macroevolution - *Not offered this year/term

This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Although whole organisms are emphasized, there also are several excursions into molecular biology.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213 and 210

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin.

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Neurobiology

Topics include the physiology of nerve and muscle, synaptic transmission, the human brain, the senses, and movement control.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in chemistry or physics, and Biological Sciences 200, and 210 or 220

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. S. Barry

BIOL-334-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Biostatistics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement (stat 334)

Introduction to statistical techniques used most commonly in biological and medical sciences. Emphasis will be on hypothesis testing, regression, analysis of variance, statistical power, comparisons of confidence intervals, time-series analysis, spatial analysis, and Bayesian inference. Examples and datasets will be drawn from student independent projects.

Prerequisites: one of the following: Biological Sciences 210, 213, 331, calculus, Statistics 240, and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours); Offered alternate years

Instructors: Mr. A. Ellison

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2000-2001

(Spring) Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics

This course will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (particularly breast cancer), animal development and programmed cell death. We will also take a detailed look at the science behind the Human Genome Project. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles, and we will often use a case method approach.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); Will not be offered in 2001-02

Instructors: Mr. C. Woodard

Chemistry

(Fall) General Chemistry I
This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

CHEM-200-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Environmental Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
This course is designed to use chemical principles to understand issues surrounding our environment. The concepts of bonding, equilibrium, acidity, basic organic chemistry, and reaction mechanisms will be applied to such topics as water pollution and acid rain, fossil fuels and alternative energy sources, atmospheric chemistry including smog formation and stratospheric ozone depletion, and herbicides and pesticides in the environment. Laboratory work will concentrate on both qualitative and quantitative methods of analysis.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 biweekly lab (3 hours); Offered once every three years
Instructors: The department

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) General Chemistry II
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibria with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds. Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 (or Chemistry 150 for Classes 2001-2002) or PI, and Mathematics 101 (or concurrently)
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. W. Cotter
Section Instructors: 01 LAB  | 02 LAB  |

Instructors: Ms. K. Bradley
Section Instructors: 01 LAB  | 02 LAB  |

(Fall) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry; nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions; the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers; and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis; practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography; molecular modeling; and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101, advanced placement, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. D. Hamilton

CHEM-210-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Biotechnology: Science, Culture, and Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
The development of a molecular understanding of the basis of life, and the application of this knowledge to alter and engineer living organisms, is an ongoing scientific revolution with far-reaching social and ethical considerations. This course introduces the science of the biotechnology revolution within its historical and social context; a description of the fundamental chemistry and molecular biology underlying these technologies is integrated with exploration of their social and ethical impacts. Topics to be covered include the structure of DNA, the human genome project, genetic engineering in agriculture, and cloning.
Prerequisites: Chem 101 or Bio 151 or Unity of Science or permission of instructor
Notes: Offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training.
Instructors: The department

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Organic Chemistry II
A continuation of 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: 2 lectures (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. S. Browne
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Chemical Thermodynamics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state. In the laboratory each student performs a limited number of investigations dealing with equilibrium and heat measurements using research-quality instrumentation.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Chemistry 202, Mathematics 101, Physics 103 and 204, or 115
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)
Instructors: Ms. W. Chen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(biochm 314)

(Fall) Experimental Methods I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Experimental Methods I uses extended, research-style projects to introduce advanced techniques in physical measurement (e.g., high-resolution spectroscopy, calorimetry, electrochemistry), separation and analysis (e.g., gas- and liquid-phase chromatography, mass spectrometry), and chemical synthesis (e.g., catalytic and enantioselective methods, biomolecules, polymers). Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308 (pre- or co-requisite for 315f, or PI)
Notes: Not offered in fall 2000
Instructors: The department

Instructors: W. Chen

(Fall) Principles of Polymer Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 discussion (50 minutes); Offered once every three years
Instructors: Ms. W. Chen

(Fall) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure, and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy. The laboratory incorporates a variety of spectroscopic techniques to provide experience in obtaining and interpreting actual structural data using modern instrumentation.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, 202, Mathematics 202, Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)

Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

CHEM-331-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Organometallic Chemistry and Catalysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An examination of the chemistry of compounds containing direct metal-carbon bonds, emphasizing the role of these compounds in chemical catalysis. After introducing the nature and scope of catalysis by organometallic compounds, the course will concern itself with principles of structure and reactivity. Analysis of the elementary reaction steps in organometallic chemistry (e.g., oxidative addition, reductive elimination, migratory insertion, transmetalation) culminates in the construction of catalytic cycles and an introduction to rational catalyst design.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Cotter

CHEM-332-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Spectroscopy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The application of NMR spectroscopy to the determination of the configurations and conformations of molecules is studied. The fundamental principles of NMR; the operation of CW, Fourier transform, and high-field spectrometers; magnetic resonance imaging; and the vast array of modern experimental methods are discussed. Primary emphasis is placed on the use of NMR spectroscopy to solve specific structural and dynamic problems that arise in organic and biochemical research. A course in physics is desirable but not required.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered once every three years
Instructors: Mr. D. Hamilton

CHEM-333-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Protein Structure and Function - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces the subject of how the three-dimensional molecular structures of proteins determine and modulate their function. Topics will include fundamentals of protein chemistry and structure, comparisons of various structural motifs, and a survey of a wide range of protein functions. Examples will be drawn from the current literature on enzyme mechanisms, photosynthetic systems, motor proteins, ion channels, and topics of student interest. This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Cotter

(Spring) Organic Synthesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is examined. A general strategy for the synthesis of complex molecules is also presented.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Hamilton

CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Physical Organic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mrs. S. Browne

CHEM-344-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Advanced Physical Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to topics in molecular spectroscopy and group theory.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered once every three years
Instructors: Ms. H. Leung

CHEM-345-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Spring) Physical Biochemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes the wealth of information that can be gained by physical measurements on substances of biological importance, such as proteins, nucleic acids, and model compounds for these substances. Applications of X-ray diffraction, measurement of thermodynamic parameters, spectroscopic methods, and hydrodynamic measurements to biological systems. Specific topics are chosen according to the interests of each class, with special emphasis on readings from the recent literature.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Ms. M. Campbell

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

CHEM-399-01 - Chemistry - 2000-2001
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are primarily given by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.

Prerequisites: sr

Classics

(Fall) Sappho's Muse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Writing-intensive)
This course, emphasizing writing and discussion in a small seminar format, introduces students to the tradition of love poetry in the ancient Greco-Roman world, as practiced by such notable poets as Sappho, Alcaeus, Catullus, Horace, and Ovid. Particular attention will be given to the way such personal poetry defied social and literary conventions of the time and how it addresses issues that are more varied and significant than the term "love poetry" commonly calls to mind.

Prerequisites: fr/soph preference given to students

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. B. Arnold

Expected enrollment: 18
CLASS-212-01 - Classics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Greek Tragedy and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the evolution of tragedy in classical Athens from choral performance to sophisticated drama through the contributions of the three most important tragedians, Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides. Attention is given both to the political context in which the plays were performed and to the dramatic effects employed by the playwrights that made the stage an influential medium of powerful artistry. Students will also study the influence of ancient tragedy on film by examining dramatic strategies modern directors employ and the allusions to Greek tragedy found in some innovative films by Roman Polanski, Woody Allen, Jules Dassin, Michael Cacoyannis, and others.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus 1 screening; Next offered spring 2001
Instructors: Mr. Arnold

CLASS-216-01 - Classics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Many-Colored Athena: The Formation of Greek Identities
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
"Ancient Greece" consisted of numerous independent and diverse cities scattered from the Black Sea to Marseilles. Despite frequent hostilities, often charged by the notion of Greek "races," these cities believed that they shared a distinct culture that made them Greek. We will compare factors that constructed Greek identity (e.g. panhellenic oracles, Olympic games, Persian aggression) and those that threatened it (e.g. intra-hellenic ethnicity, the position of women, gendered views of "national" character). Readings may include Herodotus, Aeschylus, Aristophanes, ancient medical writers, and Plutarch.

Complex Organizations

COMOR-107-01 - Complex Organizations - 2000-2001
(Spring) Poverty in the United States
(Politics 107s)
Why do so many people live in poverty in the most affluent of nations? This course will attempt to sort myths from realities in debates over the morality and feasibility of measures which might narrow the gap between rich and poor and expand opportunities, especially for the 20 million children in poverty. Students will explore how poverty is related to class, race, sex, family structure, and economics, and how it is affected, for better and worse, by governmental programs involving housing, education, crime, welfare, and taxation.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Fox, Mr. C. Pyle

(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations—especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a manager; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

COMOR-220-01 - Complex Organizations - 2000-2001
(Fall) Taxation and the Values of Democracy
This seminar examines federal tax history and policies, from the Constitution to the present. We focus on income, estate and gift, and Social Security taxes. Tax laws represent the most comprehensive expression of official public values. For example, our income taxes depend upon marital status, family size, whether we own or rent our home, fringe benefits at work, retirement planning, investment choices, charitable behavior, access to professional advice, and more. The laws produce winners and losers. They often operate unfairly, are needlessly complex, and unnecessarily constrain economic growth. We study how and why, and possible reforms.
Prerequisites: History 171, Politics 104, Economics 103 or 104, or permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. J. Fox

(Spring) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
This course examines ethical issues that arise in organizational contexts and helps students develop techniques for resolving ethical problems. Issues treated include whistle-blowing, conflicts of interest, employee privacy, affirmative action, and corporate social responsibility. There is considerable use of case studies.

Computer Science

COMSC-100-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) An Introduction to Computer Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to basic computer science concepts and issues. Topics will be chosen from: origins of computers, data representation and storage, computer architecture, assemblers and compilers, operating systems, networks and the Internet, distributed systems, information retrieval, data organization, graphics, artificial intelligence, robotics, the theory of computation, and trends in internet commerce and use. Laboratory assignments will offer some experience with programming and the use of application software.

Prerequisites: None (students should not take this course after 101).

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours)

Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

(Fall) Problem Solving and Structured Programming

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Introduces the C language and the use of structured programming techniques. Emphasizes the solution of complex computational problems by their analysis into smaller subproblems that can be solved independently and then combined to form a complete solution. Introduces other topics relevant to computer science. Assumes no previous study or use of computers. This course is programming intensive.

Notes: 2 lectures (75 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours)

COMSC-211-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Data Structures

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Using C++. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance.

This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 101

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. P. Dobosh

(Fall) Computer Systems and Assembly Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course looks at the inner workings of a computer and computer systems. It is an introduction to computer architecture, software engineering, and the fundamentals of operating systems. Specific topics include assembly language programming, memory and I/O issues, and the techniques of software design, implementation, and testing as a group. This course is programming intensive.

COMSC-311-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Theory of Computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models and relating these models to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101 and Mathematics 232 or permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Spring) Operating Systems
COMSC-324-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Computer Architecture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, and 221 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Strahman

COMSC-325-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Computer Networks - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to computer networks, the mechanisms used in their construction, and the factors that affect their performance. Topics include network architecture, data transmissions, network protocols, error and connection management, internetworking, the Internet, client-server programming, examples, and applications. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and 221
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. L. Ballesteros

COMSC-327-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Distributed Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
In decentralized systems, users often solve large problems by spreading effort over groups of computers. Problems involving information, computation, and hardware distributed at various locations must be solved. A distributed system of computers may not share a common memory or a clock. Therefore, efforts to work together require explicit communication and synchronization mechanisms. We will look at issues of problem solving with multiple processors, distributing workload, and providing access to shared resources such as I/O and storage devices and file systems; centralized and distributed methods for control of parallel activities and for detection; and resolution of conflicts.
Prerequisites: Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, 221, and 322 or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Strahman

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Spring) Computer Graphics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include: drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 211, 221, and at least one of Mathematics 203, 211, 232, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver

COMSC-334-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Fall) Artificial Intelligence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to AI research issues and models of intelligence. Topics include AI history, philosophical and research questions, LISP, state space representation, search, heuristics, connectionism, learning, and an introduction to advanced AI fields such as Natural Language Processing and Computer Vision. Course emphasis understanding AI model development and how it relates to the theoretical issues. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, 221 and Mathematics 232, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

COMSC-335-01 - Computer Science - 2000-2001
(Spring) Introduction to Computer Vision and Robotics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

An introduction to theories that suggest how to provide a computer with the ability to "see" and how to use that ability to control the actions of a robot. The potential role that robot actions can play in making computer vision possible is also discussed. Specific topics include: the physics of vision, image processing, pattern recognition, image understanding, representations, planning, robot control, architectures, and applications. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 334 and Mathematics 202 or permission of instructor.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

Critical Social Thought

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Critical Social Thought
A yearlong introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. We will explore the influential ideas of these thinkers, the style as well as substance of their works, and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The first semester will focus on such figures as Marx, Nietzsche, Freud, and Du Bois; the second on such figures as Arendt, Said, Foucault, and Benjamin. Required of all critical social thought majors.

This course satisfies a distribution requirement in social sciences.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. J. Cocks

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2000-2001

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Notes: Offered at Amherst College
Instructors: Ms. W. Woodson

DANCE-054-01 - Dance - 2000-2001
(Fall) *AC TH/DA Choreography and the Camera - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
We will explore the connections between choreography/performance and video/film. The emphasis will be experimental—to learn by doing. We will work with cinematographic and choreographic terms and languages to discover similarities and differences. Encouraging reciprocity and dialogue between choreography and video/film will be the principle spirit that animates the course. Studio practice with choreography and the camera (primarily video hi 8), class discussions, viewing of videos and films, basic editing techniques, and assigned readings.
Prerequisites: previous experience in choreography, directing, or video/film useful but not required, admission with permission of instructor
Notes: Offered at Amherst College
Instructors: Ms. W. Woodson

(Fall) Conditioning for Dancers: Pilates - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Pilates provides a safe and energetic workout for all ages and physical conditions. It is a full-body exercise that encourages muscular strength, balance, skeletal alignment, coordination, and flexibility. Groups are tailored to individual needs. Evaluation will depend on attendance, commitment, and retention of the material.
Instructors: Ms. C. Boyce
Expected enrollment: 35

DANCE-113-01 - Dance - 2000-2001
(Fall) Modern I
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the basic principles of dance movement: body alignment, coordination, strength and flexibility, basic forms of locomotion. No previous dance experience required.
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes)
Instructors: L. Kleinschmidt-Salvi

DANCE-114-01 - Dance - 2000-2001
(Fall) Modern II - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Advanced beginning modern technique. The course will concentrate on aspects of strength, flexibility, and anatomical integration in order to improve technical skills. Improvisation as well as various body therapies will be included in the class format.
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered at Smith College, fall 2000

ECON-105-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): The Department of Economics does not offer a business major. However, we do offer an accounting course that will be of interest to students interested in business. The accounting course does not serve as an introduction to economics or as a part of the major.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+, -, *, /) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested. See http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/cljohnso. This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Does not recommended for first year students
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Johnson

ECON-201-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Game Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(omorg 201)
Preamble (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find one or more of these courses useful complements to majors and minors other than economics.
The course will illustrate and analyze the strategies used in making interrelated decisions. Concepts from game theory will be developed using examples and cases drawn from economics, business, politics, and even sports. Applications will include the Prisoner's Dilemma and related games, signaling, bargaining, voting and power, brinkmanship, and nuclear deterrence.
Prerequisites: Not open to first-year students as their first course in economics
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
(Spring) East Asian Economic Development - *Not offered this year/term

Preamble (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find one or more of these courses useful complements to majors and minors other than economics. This course provides an overview of economic development in East Asia. The complex interplay of public policy, global competition, and domestic economic relationships in China, Japan, and Korea will serve as the core subject matter of the course, though patterns of economic development in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore will also be discussed. Special attention is given to conditions under which regional economies have successfully blended elements of import-substituting industrialization with export-oriented growth. The course will conclude with a discussion of the impact of the regional economic crisis, the current wave of reforms, and the potential for future growth and development.

Prerequisites: Not open to first-year students as their first course in economics

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. S. Gabriel

Preamble: (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find one or more of these courses useful complements to majors and minors other than economics.
Examines the historical development of the U.S. economy from the colonial period to the present from a variety of theoretical perspectives. The main questions addressed are: What are the reasons for the successes of the U.S. economy (growth, increased productivity, increased living standards, etc.)? What are the causes of the problems or failures in the U.S. economy (unemployment, inflation, inequality, poverty, etc.)? How have different groups in society (classes, races, and genders) been affected differently by these successes and failures? What has been the role of the government in the U.S. economy? To what extent have wars in U.S. history been caused by economic conflicts?

(Fall) Political Economy of "Race" in the U.S.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

A colloquium on unique economic problems faced by racial minority groups in the U.S. (primarily African Americans). Analyzes economic and noneconomic conditions which narrate "race" stories of success and failure, efficiency and inefficiency in modern economic discourses. Explores how:

1) "raced" bodies become marketable and valuable;
2) those bodies are oppressed by logics of "race" and racism;
3) strategies for remedying the effects of "race" and racism work, as those strategies are articulated within different discursive contexts. Historical context grounds discussion of key issues like affirmative action, wealth/income differentials, jobs/joblessness.

Prerequisites: Economics 212
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. L. Wilson

(Fall) Seminar in Industrial Organization
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(comorg 307)
Analysis of theoretical models and empirical studies on the economic performance of industries. Approaches studied include transactions costs economics, game theory, and pricing models. Topics include advertising, research and development; relationships between government and business such as regulation and antitrust laws. Students will conduct and present individual research projects.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 212
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours); alternates with econ 207

Notes: Alternates with econ 313
Instructors: Ms. P. Higino Schneider
Expected enrollment: 15

ECON-313-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Seminar in International Finance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Analysis of the international monetary system and of its macroeconomic implications for the United States and foreign economies. Investigation of theoretical models of capital movements and exchange rate determination to help analyze current policy issues, such as intervention in foreign exchange markets, the pattern of international debt, and regional monetary unions.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 217
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours); alternates with econ 312
(Spring) Economic Development in the Age of Globalization
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Critical analysis of how globalization has changed prospects for economic development. Study of conditions under which a developing country can or cannot benefit from structural adjustment, the presently dominant free-market-based development strategy. Analysis of the East Asian miracle, particular challenges faced by transition economies and sub-Saharan Africa, and the different development path in Latin America compared to East Asia. Emphasizes engagement in academic controversy and development of presentation and argumentation skills. See <http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/epaus/econ314> for a more detailed description.
Prerequisites: Economics 213 and either 216 or 217
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Ms. E. Paus
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) History of Economic Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Study of the historical development of economics by reading the original works of the "great masters": Smith, Ricardo, Marx, Marshall, and Keynes. Also examines the influence of the social context in which these theories were developed. Provides a historical perspective on modern microeconomics and macroeconomics - how these modern theories are similar to and different from earlier theories.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 211 and 212
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. F. Moseley

(Spring) Econometrics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A study of advanced statistical methods in quantifying economic theory. Emphasis on the practical application of regression analysis to test economic theory, especially where the assumptions underlying ordinary least squares analysis are violated. Examines several different subjects that illustrate empirical economic research.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 211, 212, 220
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Robinson

(Spring) Comparative Economic Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar course in the comparative analysis of variant types of capitalist and noncapitalist social formations and the transition of social formations from one set of prevalent characteristics to a new and radically different set. The course focuses upon economic phenomena; the role of cultural, political, and environmental processes in shaping economic differences between societies is also discussed. The theoretical implications of the current economic crisis in Asia; dramatic economic reforms in China; big bang reforms in Japan; the crisis of the chaebol system in South Korea; the kibbutz system in Israel; and Islamic economic systems in theory and practice are covered.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 211 and 212; or permission of instructor; 213 recommended
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Gabriel

ECON-338-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Money and Banking
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Monetary theory and policy. Overview of financial markets and institutions. Explores the nature of money and the effects of changing money supply on the economy; theories of money demand; the various methods by which monetary policy can be conducted and the advantages and disadvantages of each; methods of banking regulation and the attendant problems that arise; important episodes in monetary history (e.g., the Great Depression).
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Economics 211; Mathematics 101 recommended
(Fall) Comparative Economic Performance of the G-7
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will look at employment, equality, productivity, and real wages as measures to judge economic performance in the G-7 (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, U.K., U.S.). In our attempts to explain differences among these countries, we will focus primarily (but not exclusively) on labor relations and their institutional structure. The course will emphasize policy analysis: What can be done to improve economic performance?
Prerequisites: 211, 212, 220 and 320 recommended; Permission of instructor required
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Hartley

ECON-341-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy and Methodology of Economics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar in the philosophy and methodology of modern economics that investigates the following issues: the advent and nature of scientism in modern economics; the positivist tradition from the Vienna Circle to Popper, Friedman, McCloskey, and others; "paradigms" and "progress of knowledge" philosophies of science of Kuhn and Lakatos; and recent rhetorical, anthropological, feminist, and postmodern challenges to modernist economics. Primary objectives are to explore the standards and criteria for appraising different and competing economic knowledges; and offer a critical evaluation of the epistemological foundations that are most often assumed to underlie (and unify) economic practice.
Prerequisites: Economics 211, 212
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Christiansen

ECON-349-01 - Economics - 2000-2001

(Spring) Junior Research Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar is designed to prepare students to do independent research in economics. It is meant especially, but not exclusively, for students who are considering writing a thesis in economics during their senior year. The course is a study of how to do research in economics. The topics include how to find a suitable research topic, how to find literature and data relating to the topic, how to read professional economic work, how to work with theoretical economic models, and how to devise and evaluate empirical tests of a hypothesis. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Prerequisites: jr
Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour)
Instructors: The department

ECON-391-01 - Economics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Senior Thesis Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar is organized around students who are writing an honors thesis. It is meant to provide a group context for the thesis writing process, where students present their research at various stages, critique each other's work, and discuss similarities and differences in the analytical processes they are working through. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Prerequisites: sr
Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour)

(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Tangling with Truth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Can we ever really tell it like it is? This course will look at the challenges involved in rendering truthfully the complexities of individual and collective experience. We will explore the controversies that arise when people disagree about the meaning of terms like fact, fiction, truth, lie, history, memory, and imagination. Along with supplementary readings, texts include: Johnson's The Autobiography of an Ex-Colored Man, Spiegelman's Maus, O'Brien's The Things They Carried, and Hong Kingston's The Woman Warrior. Through various assignments, you will discover firsthand how audience and context shape your own attempts to "tell the truth."

(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: The Performance of Race and Identity in American Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This fundamental course develops the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Readings in individual sections vary from political, critical, and personal essays, to fiction, autobiography, journalism, to scientific articles, to poetry and drama. All sections emphasize how to read closely and critically, how to develop a distinctive voice or voices in writing, how to become confident in asking questions, formulating answers, and framing persuasive arguments. Students will also become familiar with the library's resources and with issues of research and use of electronic sources.

Through the use of film, literature, and other expository writings, we will explore the various ways in which notions of race and other identities are socially constructed performances. What does it mean to act, talk, be black, white, or multi-racial? Masculine or feminine? How do these identities relate to one's socio-economic status or do they? Can socio-economic status be performed as well? Finally, when are these social constructions of identity fluid, interchangeable, temporary, or permanent? Students will experiment with several different types of expository writing styles that will address the ways in which identities are performative.

(Intensive writing) This course is designed to encourage you to think critically about the world around you, to expose you to other cultures and different points of view, and, above all, to teach you how to express your opinions on paper. Whenever possible, students will be encouraged to connect the writing they do to the world outside of Mount Holyoke. For example, students will send reviews of current films to newspapers for possible publication and will have the opportunity to write letters on behalf of political prisoners for extra credit. Good writing demands a significant amount of editing; thus we will spend a lot of time on revision and peer editing through out the semester.

(Fall) Writing about Science from the Inside Out - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course, a variation of 206, is especially for students with a keen interest in the natural sciences, not only traditional physical and biological sciences but mathematics and computing, psychology, and neuroscience. Its focus is on writing about science or issues raised by science for non-specialized readers, either the educated nonscientist or scientists from disciplines other than those being written about. It will not try to teach students how to write technical scientific papers; rather, by reading some excellent non-specialized writing about science, we will concentrate on gaining clarity, liveliness, and broad accessibility in writing for general audiences.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; fy with permission of instructor

(Spring) The Development of Literature in English: Late Victorian through Contemporary - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to English literary history from 1850 to the present, focusing on works, authors, forms, conventions, and ideas in chronological order and historical setting. As we progress from mid-Victorian to contemporary writing, the range of writers studied will broaden to include writers from outside England; new voices being heard from postcolonial societies formerly belonging to the British Empire. Frequent reference will be made to political, economic, philosophical, and cultural contexts in which works of literature were composed and are read. Like other courses in the 210-241 sequence, this one is recommended for students thinking of pursuing graduate degrees in English.
Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor.

ENGL-250-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) African American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of great works in the African American literary tradition, this course will focus on representations of Africa in African American literature. We will read some of the earliest writing in the tradition, as well as more contemporary novels and narratives of the African American experience going back to Africa. Our readings will be in a variety of genres--poetry, novels, narratives, short stories, and appeals--and we may watch several films. Authors may include, among others, Equiano, Gronniosaw, Douglass, Hughes, Cullen, Johnson, McKnight, Butler, Walker, and Marshall.
Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
ENGL-251-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Spring) Literature of the Black Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course traces the development of a diasporic sensibility in African American literature and culture by examining narratives of an imagined "black" or "African empire" from the late nineteenth through the twentieth century. The trope of a "dark empire" gave black writers the opportunity to represent nationally independent black communities and yet to imagine these communities as part of a larger black cultural world. These writers helped develop a 'pan-Africanist' sensibility that challenged borders between culture, or literature, and politics. Authors include Delany, Du Bois, Cesaire, Conde, Hurston, and McKay.
Prerequisite: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Stephens

ENGL-253-01 - English - 2000-2001

(Fall) Women Writers: Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winnemucca.

Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of the instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: J. Insko

(Fall) Women Writers: Twentieth-Century American Women Writers

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; womst 203)

This course examines the work of a variety of twentieth-century women writers located in the United States, focusing on the genre of prose fiction and the themes of gender, race, and sexuality. Particular attention will be paid to developments in African American women's writing, to Southern writers, and lesbian literary representation. Writers may include Gwendolyn Brooks, Willa Cather, Kate Chopin, Zora Neale Hurston, Nella Larsen, Carson McCullers, Flannery O'Connor, Gertrude Stein, Alice Walker, Edith Wharton, and Hisaye Yamamoto.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; English 240, 241, or 270 recommended; enrollment may be limited

(Spring) Reading and Writing About Poetry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
An introduction to reading poetry, focusing on its formal varieties and on developing a vocabulary for discussing them. What distinguishes rhythm from meter, or tone from voice? And how does the poet—or the student—write prose about poetry? All periods of poetry, but an emphasis on such twentieth-century poet-critics as Eliot, Auden, Jarrell, Wilbur. Recommended as background for other courses in the department that feature poetry.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Salter

ENGL-283-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) Light Verse, Comic Verse - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This is "light verse" in a broad sense; parodies, nonsense verse, children's verse, song lyrics. Students will be introduced to a broad range of poetic forms and the vocabulary of versification. Older readings to include Shakespeare, Pope's "Rape of the Lock," Byron's Don Juan, Lewis Carroll, Edward Lear. Twentieth-century readings to include: Eliot's "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," Auden's "Letter to Lord Byron," Robert Frost, Ogden Nash, Elizabeth Bishop. Song lyrics will extend from Campion and Dowland to W.S. Gilbert and some lyricists from Broadway and Tin Pan Alley: Cole Porter, Ira Gershwin, Stephen Sondheim.

(Spring) Topics in Late Medieval Literature: Gender, Language and Power, 1300-1700 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course explores how some women expressed their understanding of the social, ideological, and political struggles in which they were engaged between the early fourteenth and late seventeenth centuries. It asks what roles they played in the construction of public discourse and the state, the reshaping of the family, the reconstruction of Christianity, and the change from medieval feudal estates to early modern agrarian capitalism. Readings include works by Christine de Pisan, the Paston women, Anne Askew, Lady Mary Wroth, Elizabeth Carey, Lady Eleanor Davies, as well as records of Elizabethan coronation pageants, public ceremonies, household accounts, and diaries.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English or history, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette

ENGL-317-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) Studies in Renaissance Literature: The Baroque in English Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A study of five major exemplars of the brilliant "conceitist" style often described, for want of a better term, as baroque: the Elizabethan poet and martyr Robert Southwell, William Shakespeare (the poems and sonnets, Cymbeline), John Donne, Sir Thomas Browne, Richard Crashaw. With some attention to continental writers who influenced the style in England (St. John of the Cross, Luis de Granada, Tasso), and to parallels in music and painting.
Prerequisites: sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, include at least one of the following, 210, 211, 315, 319 or permission of the instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. F. Brownlow

ENGL-317-01 - English - 2000-2001
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Feminist scholars foreground questions about gender, enrich the literary canon, and ask, "Did women have a Renaissance?" New Historicists suggest that poems and plays construct rather than reflect the world in which they appear. About half the course will be devoted to Shakespeare and his critics; other readings will include Sir Philip Sidney, Spenser, Mary Sidney, and other women writers, as well as recent critical essays. Topics will include cross-dressing and the construction of gender, English national identity in an age of exploration and conquest, and the relationships among sacred and sexual love, the languages of gender, and the languages of power.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond 101 including 210 or 211 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Berek

ENGL-318-01 - English - 2000-2001

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The life and works of John Donne, in both verse and prose.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, in department, including 210, and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. E. Hill

ENGL-319-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) History of the English Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is a study of the development of the language from its origins to the present day, with illustration of this development through readings in English prose and verse, public and private letters, and contemporary assessments of the language from different periods. Brief introduction to linguistics, with attention to the effect of linguistic changes on literary style and achievement. Readings, ranging from the Old English period to the present, chosen from writers such as King Alfred, Chaucer, Sidney, Swift, Johnson, Austen, Forster.
Prerequisites: English 210 or permission of the instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette, Mr. A. Farnham

ENGL-320-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) The Eighteenth Century: Reading Jane Austen
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
It is a truth universally acknowledged that Jane Austen wrote far too few novels, but what she wrote provides the opportunity to know her fiction, its context, and its afterlife quite thoroughly. Our primary attention will be on the major novels; on historical and biographical sources; on critical interpretations of them; and on their re-creation in film.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Johnson

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
An intensive study of these two poets' lives and works as exemplifying two generations of English Romanticism. In addition to poetry we will read selections from Wordsworth’s critical prose and Keats's letters, as well as critical reactions to their work by their contemporaries.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond 101, including two of 200, 210, 220, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Shaw

ENGL-322-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Spring) Nineteenth-Century Poetry and Prose II: Victorians and their "Others": Negotiating Difference in the Victorian Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores constructions of subjectivity in a series of novels written during the Victorian period. The nineteenth century saw the vast proliferation of capitalist, industrialist, and imperialist structures that eventually brought the English into more frequent contact with nonwhite populations. At home, working class protests, early feminism, and political radicalism began to transform social identities in the metropolis. This class examines how a sampling of novelists represented and responded to these changes. Students will do presentations on historical topics such as Chartism, "the Jewish Questions," and "the Scramble for Africa."
Prerequisites: jr, sr, in department including 200, 230, 204, 321, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Callanan

ENGL-323-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Fall) The English Novel in the Nineteenth Century: Tradition and Transgression in the English Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this survey of the English novel we will explore the formal and thematic history of the genre in the nineteenth century through the early twentieth century. We will read works by M. Shelley, Austen, C. Bronte, Dickens, Eliot, Conrad, Wilde and Woolf. Our discussions will address the shape and structure of each narrative; the presentation of such issues as race, class, and gender; and the ways in which each novel engages with its cultural context. Students will give presentations on a variety of historical issues. Critical and theoretical readings from such authors as Watt, Armstrong and Miller will inform our reading of the primary texts.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, in department including 220 or 230, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Callanan

ENGL-324-01 - English - 2000-2001

(Fall) American Literature III: Studies in American Modernism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course studies the era we have come to know as American modernism, with special attention to the relationships between the "new" cultural identities and literary movements of the period--for example, the new woman, the new Negro, the new theater. Topics include the "Lost Generation," the Harlem Renaissance, the novel of social protest, expatriate experience, and the immigrant experience. Authors may include Stein, Hemingway, Fitzgerald, O'Neill, McKay, Hughes, Huxton, Wright.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department, including 240 or 241, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Stephens

ENGL-342-01 - English - 2000-2001
(Spring) The American Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The quick-witted hero of Alger's novel, Ragged Dick, overcomes his lowly station as a shoe-shine boy through hard work and moral integrity. Dick's rags-to-riches story has become a central theme in American culture, from the Gold Rush '49ers to Internet millionaires. America is the land where everyone can achieve their dreams of wealth and fame. Or is it? We will read nineteenth- and twentieth-century American novels that confront class disparity in America. We will visit life underground--in the filthy iron mills of Rebecca Harding Davis's novel--and agonize over Clyde Griffiths's lust for high society in Dreiser's An American Tragedy.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, including 240 or 241, or permission of instructor
ENGL-345-01  -  English  -  2000-2001

ENGL-347-01  -  English  -  2000-2001
(Spring) Indian Captives, Barbary Pirates, and Runaway Slaves: The Nineteenth-Century Narrative Tradition.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
White slaves, bloodthirsty pirates, cruel overseers, illicit romances, and harrowing escapes. Between 1675 and 1830 thousands of white Americans were taken captive by Native Americans in the wilds of North America, while hundreds of European Americans were forced into slavery on the coast of North Africa. Like runaway African American slaves who narrated their experiences, many European American slaves wrote autobiographies. This seminar focuses on the intersection between three narrative traditions--Indian captivity narratives, African American slave narratives, and Barbary captivity.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, including at least one of the following 240, 241, 341, 342 or with permission of the instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Margulis

(Spring) Studies in African American Literature: The Splendor of the Harlem Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar will be an intensive study of the literature, music and visual art produced during the Harlem Renaissance. We will also explore the philosophical and cultural critiques offered by the African American intelligentsia of the period. This course will introduce all of the major male figures of the Harlem Renaissance: DuBois, Locke, Johnson, Garvey, Hughes, Cullen, McKay, Toomer, Schuyler, and others. However, a large part of the seminar will focus on the rich tradition of artistic production left by the women of the Harlem Renaissance: Hurston, Larsen, Fauset, West, Spencer, Douglas-Johnson, Dunbar-Nelson, Bennett and several other lesser known female writers, poets and artists.
Prerequisites: jr, sr. 8 credits in department beyond 101, including at least one of the following 240, 241, or 250, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. T. Vaughn

(Fall) Toni Morrison - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will focus on Toni Morrison and the extensive literary criticism generated in response to her writings. As we read works such as The Bluest Eye, Sula, Beloved, Paradise, we will discuss Morrison's evolution as a writer, the ways in which she critiques and reconstructs American communities, her authorial agendas, and her critical reception. We will consider Morrison in relation to her contemporaries and the African American and American... literary traditions. Discussions will take up questions about the roles and responsibilities of the African American author, the genres of historical fiction and romance, and redefinition of black womanhood.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, including at least one of the following: 240, 241, 250 or permission of instructor. Previous course work in African American literature recommended

ENGL-352-01  -  English - 2000-2001
(Spring) Mourning and Memory in American Literature and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores the intersections of private expressions of loss and public occasions of mourning in recent American literature. Starting with nineteenth-century precedents, our readings center on responses to World War II, the Vietnam War, and the AIDS epidemic. We will explore the interaction between mourning and historical memory, the ways representations of loss involve wrestling with the past for individuals, communities, and nations. Readings will be framed by theoretical debates about psychoanalysis, public memorials, trauma, and nationalism, and will include fiction, poetry, memoir, and drama by Mason, O'Brien, Silko, Kogawa, Morrison, Spiegelman, Dooy, and Kushner.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101 and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

(Spring) Coming-of-Age in Asian America: An examination of Asian American Novels
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar focuses on Asian American coming-of-age novels by addressing questions of identity formation. Themes pertinent to our discussion include the influences of family, class, sexuality, violence, and history in the maturation process of Asian American protagonists. We will also question definitions of Asian American ethnic identity, the phrase "coming-of-age," and the concept of "Asian America." Novels by Gish Jen, Nora Okja Keller, Milton Murayama, Lan Cao, Mei Ng and screenings of two to three films will be used as primary texts.
Prerequisites: Any Asian American Studies course, or consent of instructor.

(Fall) The Caribbean in American Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; afram 370)
This seminar uses the interdisciplinary methods of American studies to explore the role migrants from the English-speaking Caribbean have played in the United States. We will examine Caribbeans' images of themselves in literature and popular culture to understand the various ways they have (re)defined what it means to be "American" and "African American" in the twentieth century. A major theme will be the intersections of race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality in Caribbean American identity. North American perceptions and constructions of the Caribbean will also be central. Readings include Lorde, Hughes, Hurston, Marshall, Cliff.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101, or with permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (1 3/4 hours), plus screenings

(Spring) The Literature of Exile - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar will address the shifting means of exile over the course of the twentieth century. The course is organized historically beginning in the context of European imperialism and concluding in an age of porous transnational borders. Some of the themes to be considered are: questions of belonging; the contestation of national borders; the relationship between internal and external exile, defined in terms of geography; the relationship between psychological and political exile; the aesthetic versus the political motivations for exile. Readings include Baldwin, Camus, Conrad, Hemingway, Momaday, Naipaul, Rushdie, and Wright.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101 and/or permission of instructor

(Spring) Film Melodrama and Horror
(Spring) Seminar in Narrative and Critical Theory: George Eliot and James Joyce
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar will focus on the work of two of the greatest novelists in English, George Eliot and James Joyce, pairing texts from various phases of their careers. Beginning with Eliot's Scenes of a Clerical Life and Joyce's Dubliners, we will go on to read The Mill on the Floss and A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man with the second half of the semester focused entirely on Middlemarch and Ulysses. The seminar will examine the aesthetics of narrative realism, focusing on Eliot and Joyce as exemplary figures of their respective literary and cultural spheres. Primary reading will be complemented by readings in contemporary narrative theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in the department including English 200 or permission of the instructor. English 280 and English 360 highly recommended.

(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
(Community-based learning course) Most of our society’s environmental problems are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. Environmental science is a course designed to teach integrative thinking, the "scientific method," and problem solving. Lectures will be drawn from a variety of scientific fields including ecology, hydrology, chemistry, geology, and biology with an emphasis on ecosystems and biogeochemical cycles. The course will use case studies of regional environmental problems, practical hands-on problem solving, and landscape analysis. Training in field and laboratory techniques is an integral part of the course. Priority given to environmental studies majors.
Prerequisites: ES100 is required; one course in statistics is recommended.

(Fall) Water in Life, Literature, and Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
This course explores humans' intimate relationship with water. We will cover the physiological necessity of water for life, ranging from our own needs to the importance of water in a range of ecosystems, from aquatic to desert. With this as background, we will explore the historical role of water (in driving human settlement, exploration, and development), which will lead into how humans have portrayed their views of water through literature and art. Finally, we will focus on our local watershed—the Connecticut River—and (re)discover it through an ecological, historical, artistic, and personal lens.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. E. Monosson

(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Contaminants in the Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
This course is designed to be an introduction to the toxicology of several important environmental contaminants, including PCBs, dioxins, DDT and mercury. We will cover where appropriate, the history, chemistry, route(s) of exposure and biological effects of these contaminants on both wildlife and humans. Class projects will focus on developing case histories for selected contaminants.
Prerequisites: Either a course in Chemistry or Biology or Environmental Studies 200 or Permission of Instructor
Notes: 1 3-hr meeting
Instructors: Ms. E. Monosson

(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: International Water Issues and Policies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
Water scarcity now poses serious constraints on food security, ecological health, and regional peace and stability in many parts of the world. This course examines the history of water development, the signs and consequences of water scarcity today, and the emerging politics of water. Case studies (e.g., the Everglades, Middle East rivers) provide an opportunity to grapple with real-world problems. A key focus is the interplay between technologies, policies, institutions, and law in confronting water challenges.
Prerequisites: Department Major or Minor or Permission of the Instructor
Notes: 1 3-hr meeting
Instructors: Ms. S. Postel

(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Forest Ecology and Conservation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
This seminar will focus on managing biodiversity in northeastern American forests. An emphasis will be placed on conservation in the Great Northern Forest and on local conservation of forests in western mass. The Northern Forest encompasses an ecoregion and contains many large undisturbed tracts. In contrast, local forests tend to be small and highly fragmented. Since, different pressures threaten each area, distinctive conservation strategies may be required in each landscape. The seminar will explore relevant concepts in conservation biology and landscape ecology. The role of both government and private organizations in managing these forests will also be discussed.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 200 or Biology 213 or Permission of Instructor

(Fall) The French-Speaking World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; afram 219)
This course introduces the literatures of French-speaking countries outside Europe. Readings include tales, novels, plays, and poetry from Africa, the Caribbean, Canada, and other areas. Discussions and short papers examine the texts as literary works as well as keys to the understanding of varied cultures.
Prerequisites: French 203, 201 or 200 with permission of instructor, or 4 or more admission units with permission of instructor
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Gadjigo
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Studies in French and Francophone Culture and Literature in English Translation: Topic: Nation and Supra-Nation: France in Europe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Study of works by French-speaking authors (in English translation) using a variety of approaches (thematic, sociohistorical, generic, etc.) to explore cultural contexts, ideas, important writers and works, aesthetic conventions, major figures, or political and historical events. Conducted in English. Does not count as part of the minimum requirement for the major or minor.
This course examines urgent issues surrounding the current project of European Union. Taking the perspective of France, we will consider the pressing questions and sticky debates surrounding the developing European supra-national organization: the new currency, commercial exchange, citizenry and nationality, military defense, social programs, and cultural policy issues that concern every European nation. Material used will be interdisciplinary: texts and articles by historians, political scientists, sociologists, economists, and philosophers.
Prerequisites: Students who wish to obtain 300-level credit in French and have the necessary prerequisites (215 and one of 219, 225, or 230) must have the permission of the instructor. (300-level credit falls into the category of post-1700 work.)
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes).
Instructors: Ms. J. Fette

(Spring) Studies in French and Francophone Culture and Literature in English Translation: Topic: A Medieval Room of One's Own: Christine de Pizan and her World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; medst 200)
Preamble (for topics courses): Study of works by French-speaking authors (in English translation) using a variety of approaches (thematic, sociohistorical, generic, etc.) to explore cultural contexts, ideas, important writers and works, aesthetic conventions, major figures, or political and historical events. Conducted in English. Does not count as part of the minimum requirement for the major or minor.
The patriarchal society in which Christine lived was a difficult place to find work when her husband died and she became the sole support of her children. Her world was a troubled world: the late fourteenth and early fifteenth centuries saw political, social, and economic crises in France. The course will examine how Christine made a place for herself amidst personal and political turmoil. It will provide a broad canvas of late-medieval literary and historical transformation, including the stunning appearance of Joan of Arc. Study of Christine's works, of texts by other authors, and of manuscript illumination will give a rich sense of the period.
Prerequisites: Students who wish to obtain 300-level credit in French and have the necessary prerequisites (215 and one of 219, 225, or 230) must have the permission of the instructor. (300-level credit falls into the category of pre-1700 work.)
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes).

(Spring) Conversations in Culture and Literature: Speaking of Modern France: Topic: Initiation to French Academic savoir-faire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): The goal of this course is to develop students' ability to talk about texts, in French, in an organized and rigorous way. Discussions focus on selected readings of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries--French and Francophone; social, historical, political, and literary--that engage important cultural issues of their time. Though primary emphasis is on effective and precise speaking through frequent oral exposés, there are some short papers as well.
This course will teach you how to organize and present your ideas in a French format: exposé oral, résumé de texte, commentaire composé, explication de texte, analyse littéraire, et critique de film. The course will be organized under three headings: (1) current events in press and media; (2) let’s talk about literature; and (3) the language of films.
Prerequisites: French 203, 201 or 200 with recommendation of the instructor, or 4 or more admission units with permission of instructor
(Fall) French Civilization from the Early Middle Ages to the Twentieth Century: Topic: Images in Context: A Hypermedia Approach to the France of the Past
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
France of today is full of paradoxes. In order to explain the complexity of present-day France (its inclination to libertinism vs. its moralistic religious conventions; its institutionalization of rebellion vs. its longing for conformity; its official status as "the eldest daughter of the Catholic church" vs. its actual reputation as the most de-Christianized country in Western Europe), we will explore its most conflictual historical moments--feudalism, absolute monarchy, political and social revolutions. Using CD-ROMs, computer applications and films, students will learn the social and historical context of French art and architecture.
Prerequisites: French 203, or 201 or 200 with permission of instructor, or 4 or more admission units
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes). Note: This course may be taken in addition to Fr230 offered in the spring.

(Spring) French Civilization from the Early Middle Ages to the Twentieth Century: Topic: Contemporary French Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course aims to give students an understanding of French civilization through exploration of the social, cultural, and political issues that define France today. After an historical overview since the end of the nineteenth century, the course will take a thematic approach to aspects of contemporary French society. We will study women in society, immigration and nationalism, cultural policy, and France's relationship with her former colonies. Interdisciplinary materials studied will include Les Français by Laurence Wylie and work by Mona Ozouf, Henry Rousso, and Pascal Ory.
Prerequisites: French 203, 200 or 201 with permission of instructor, or 4 or more admission units with permission of instructor
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes) Note: This course may be taken in addition to Fr230 offered in the fall.

(Spring) Period Courses: Topic: Entertainment in the Middle Ages: Feasts, Festivals and Funny Stories(pre-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Many period courses treat specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.
What took the place of movies and television in the Middle Ages? How did medievals entertain themselves? Seeking answers to these questions will reveal a medieval world of humorous forms often opposed to the Church: the erotic, the transgressive, and the scandalous found as much favor in medieval times as today. Readings will include: a burlesque epic; a satirical romance in which animals assume the roles of knights and ladies; a comedy of love; short, bawdy tales; comic theater.
Prerequisites: French 215 and one of 219, 225, or 230
Notes: one meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. M. Switten

(Fall) Genre Courses: Topic: French Film: The First 100 Years, 1895-1995 (post-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses focus on the creative forms and genres of French expression (poésie, théâtre, roman, cinéma, essai, maxime, autobiographie, formes orales, textes limites). Courses may examine, for example, the singular qualities of a genre at a specific historical moment; the evolution of a particular genre across centuries; or different generic treatments of the same theme.
France has the oldest and one of the richest film cultures in the world. We will examine aesthetic and technical aspects of 15 films as well as the social and historical contexts in which they were made. We will pay particular attention to the following stages and schools: the early radical investigation of the Lumière brothers and Abel Gance’s ”Napoléon”; surrealist experiments of Buñuel, Dali, and Germaine Dulac; Jean Vigo’s social defiance; Jean Renoir; Jean Cocteau and the struggle against cinéma de papa; Godard and the New Wave of the ’50s and ’60s; ’80s cinéma du look—”Diva” by Beineix; ethnic identity and change—Mehdi Charef and Claire Denis.
Prerequisites: French 215 and one of 219, 225 or 230
Notes: one meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Legouis

FREN-331-01 - French - 2000-2001
(Spring) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Topic: Acting the Dreyfus Affair (post-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(thesit 351)
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon—an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode—relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.

The Dreyfus Affair was a defining moment in French history wherein crucial issues of national importance were played out: the survival of the Republic vs. the power of the Church and the Army; the rights of man vs. antisemitism and exclusionary nationalism; and the public awakening of French intellectuals on all sides of the affair. The course consists of two parts: an historical study of the affair in the context of France of the Belle Époque (texts include works by Jean-Denis Bredin, Michael Burns, Christophe Charle, and Madeleine Rebérioux); and a full theatrical production of a play about the Dreyfus Affair, performed at the end of the semester.

Notes: two meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Fette

(Fall) Courses in Francophone Studies: Topic: Contes et légendes d’Afrique Francophone (post-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

Since the advent of fiction writing in French-speaking Africa in the 1920s, the study of African literatures has been mainly limited to poems, novels, short stories, and plays written by a French-educated elite. In this course we will explore samples of African oral literatures including tales, epic songs, and legends from different African regions. Through translations by writers such as Léopold Sédar Senghor, Birago Diop (Senegal), Djibril Yamsmir Niane (Guinea), and Bernard Dadié (Côte d’Ivoire) we will try to view African societies from “within” and gain an understanding of the genealogy of modern African literature in European languages.

Notes: two meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Gadjigo

(Spring) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Topic: Métissages: Cultural mixing across texts and contexts in French and Francophone literature and culture (post-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to exploring the unique concept of métissage or cultural mixing. Working from novels, movies, world music, poetry, sociological essays, and current affairs, we will examine the mechanisms that allow different and conflicting cultural influences to merge. Key concepts, issues, and questions to be discussed are: definition of identity, mixing of race, le choc culturel, bilinguisme, francophonie, créolité, postcolonialism, hybridity, globalization, assimilation, integration, and multiculturalism. Selected works by Edouard Glissant, Leïla Sebbar, Patrick Chamoiseau, Abdellah Khtibi, Mathieu Kassovitz, and others.

Notes: two meetings (75 minutes).
Instructors: Ms. L. Huughe

(Fall) Courses on Women and Gender: Topic: Femmes, cultures, identités en France et dans le monde Francophone (post-1700)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses explore cultural, literary, and social issues relating to women and gender identities in France and French-speaking countries. Topics may include women’s writing, writing about women and men, the status of women, feminist criticism, and theories of sexuality and sexual difference.

Study of relationships between gender, culture, race or ethnicity, and sexuality as represented in twentieth-century works by women writing in French. First readings will address conceptions of individual and collective identities. Then we will read French, Caribbean, African, and Quebec novels that depict women negotiating these components of their lives: What are the obstacles to women’s sense of "self" in particular cultures? What quests do women undertake to arrive at self-understanding? Is their search for wholeness possible or impossible, successful or unsuccessful? Authors may include: Ernaux, Wittig, Condé, Djèbar, Sebbar, Thoretical, Warner-Vieyra. Films will also be studied.

Prerequisites: French 215 and one of 219, 225, or 230
Notes: two meetings (75 minutes).

FREN-370-01 - French - 2000-2001
(Fall) Senior Seminar: Topic: La Vie intime: Education and domesticity in Eighteenth-Century France
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.
Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
This seminar will be an examination of the theme of private life in literature and painting of the pre-Revolutionary period of the French eighteenth century (1715-1789). Through the three major themes of family, education, and private versus public life, we will analyze literary and artistic portraits of the girls and boys, and women and men of the various social classes in this era. Authors to be studied include Laclos, Rousseau, Lambert, and Diderot; artists include Greuze, Chardin, and Fragonard.
Prerequisites: sr, 12 credits including 2 advanced courses, or permission of instructor
Notes: one meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Hull

(Spring) Senior Seminar: Topic: Second Opinions: Readings in Literary Criticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.
Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
Students will be introduced to literary criticism. They will read Laclos' canonical epistolary novel Les Liaisons dangereuses, discuss the novel, and give presentations leading to collective discussions of selected pieces of criticism. Each critic's approach will be discussed and evaluated. Students will see three film versions of the novel, read criticism and reviews of each, and discuss the ways in which each screen production is an interpretation of the novel. Early in the semester students will select final-paper topics that they will discuss in class as works-in-progress. The course will culminate with an in-class symposium in which students will present their papers orally.

GEOG-206-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) Political Geography - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Systematically studies political phenomena and their geographic expression, at a variety of spatial scales--national, regional, and international. Major themes include nation-state formation; boundary, territory, and ethnic issues; regional blocs and spheres of influence; and conflicts over access to and use of resources.
Instructors: Mr. G. Kebbede

GEOG-209-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Spring) Women and the Environment - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
People's interactions with their environments are socially constructed. In this seminar, some of the ways in which women and girls interact differently with the environment are examined. Topics include women and nature; women in agricultural systems, women, the environment, health, and disease; women in earth and environmental movements; and fieldwork and researcher-informant relations.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-211-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) Geographic Information Systems
In this comprehensive introduction to the theory and technology of geographic information systems (GIS), students are introduced to basic raster and vector data structures, spatial data-base design, attribute database processing, and the role they play in a GIS. Computer exercises are used to acquaint students with state-of-the-art GIS software and highlight fundamental GIS principles.

(Fall) Geog 213 Geography of Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The human geography of Western Europe has changed substantially since the 1960s. Enlargement of the European Union (EU) symbolizes a greater sense of European identity, but at the same time important regional differences have reemerged and strengthened. Evaluating the viability of the EU first requires understanding the physical, economic, and political geography of the member states. This course offers the opportunity to focus on the common characteristics and shared problems of the member countries to better assess the future prospects and problems of the community.
Instructors: The department

(Fall) Geography of South Asia: India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
The region is studied in terms of its physical, cultural, and political geography. Emphasis is given to the numerous ways in which the peoples of South Asia have adapted to and utilized their local environments, the reasons for varying patterns of population growth throughout the region, and the environmental impact of economic development programs.

(Fall) Geography of the Middle East and North Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course, the Middle East and North Africa are studied in terms of their physical, cultural, economic, and political geography. Emphasis is placed on the environmental conditions and ecological evolution; population and demographic characteristics; the resource base and development strategies and dilemmas; the origins and implications of boundary disputes and territorial claims; and national, subregional, and regional integration processes and problems.
Instructors: The department

GEOG-217-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) The African Environments - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The course provides an integrated analysis of biogeography, environmental change, and hydrology within each of the biomes found in the African continent: forest, savanna, desert, coast, wetland, mountain, and Mediterranean environments. It also discusses the impact and significance of human activity on African environments by exploring debates about soil erosion, desertification, biodiversity and depletion, and conservation and development.

(Fall) Atmosphere and Weather - *Not offered this year/term
This course is a detailed examination of the structure of the earth's atmosphere, radiation budget, global pressure cells, and synoptic weather characteristics. The class places heavy emphasis on basic weather forecasting techniques which are conveyed via problem-based learning exercises created with local meteorological data sets.
Prerequisites: High school Earth science or any Geog 100 level course
Notes: 1 3hr meeting, 1 3hr lab
Instructors: Mr. T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 12

GEOG-225-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; geol 225)
The landscapes of Earth are the result of complex processes and have evolved dramatically since the planet's formation over 4.5 billion years ago. In this course we examine the geologic evolution of the North American continent and its natural features. Using narrative descriptions, scientific articles, maps, photographs, and videos, in addition to the text, we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We then consider how the geologic setting or physical environment influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent.
Prerequisites: High school Earth-science or any geology 100-level course or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 mins.); 1 lab (3 hrs.)
Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy

GEOG-290-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) Ethnoarchaeology and Geology of the Ancient Southwest - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(geol 290)
The American Southwest is a geologically and culturally striking landscape that has been continuously inhabited by indigenous peoples for thousands of years. Cotaught by an earth scientist and bioarchaeologist, this interdisciplinary course examines the complex interrelationships between geological and ecological processes, and human culture and biology of the ancestral Pueblo people in the Southwest. A key feature is a group field trip (fall break) to the Southwest where we consider questions on the nature of changing landscapes, environmental constraints, and biocultural processes for both ancient and modern Pueblo people.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy, Ms. D. Martin
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Selected Problems in Regional Geography: Spring 2001: Planning and the Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
As development continues to put pressure on the environment, increased interest in planning at the local and regional levels of government is seen as a grassroots approach to environmental management. This seminar course examines successful and innovative approaches used by planning agencies to monitor and protect the environment. Topics include town and regional master plan development, zoning, land evaluation and site assessment studies, and solid waste and growth management issues.
Prerequisites: Geography 204
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hr)
Instructors: Mr. T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Remote Sensing
Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course presents the fundamentals of digital analysis of aerial satellite imagery. Students are introduced to the characteristics of Earth images and learn to make qualitative and quantitative assessments of multispectrum and satellite data. Basic photo interpretation exercises are complemented with computer analysis of satellite data for land use and land cover analysis, vegetation stress analysis, and urban hydrology.

Prerequisites: Geography 205
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 3 hr lab

GEOG-311-01 - Geography - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminars--Third World Development: Third World Development
Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
This course examines the economic and environmental problems confronting less-developed countries. Themes discussed in the course include theories of development and underdevelopment, the physical environment and resources, structure of agrarian systems, internal interaction and spatial structure, and external economic relationships.

Prerequisites: Jr., Sr., 4 credits in department and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200 level or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 (3 hr) meeting

Instructors: Mr. G. Kebede

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Physical Geology
Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

From earthquakes to landscapes, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Topics are plate tectonics, minerals and rocks, volcanoes, rivers, glaciers, oceans, geologic time, energy resources, and landscape evolution. Labs focus on plate tectonics, rocks and minerals, maps, and field trips. Grades depend on weekly labs, four homework/class discussion assignments, and two in-class exams.

(Fall) Environmental Geology

Our existence is greatly affected by changing environmental conditions. Some of these changes are "natural" (floods, earthquakes), but many directly result from human mismanagement (groundwater contamination, acid rain, the greenhouse effect). Although some of these problems are of local concern, an increasing number are of global scale. In this course, students develop an appreciation for the way the Earth's environment affects our lives. In the laboratory, students learn techniques to recognize and interpret environmental hazards and develop strategies to address environmental problems.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours), field trips; 25 spaces allocated to first-year students

(Fall) History of Life

This course focuses on the interactions between life processes and Earth's crust and atmosphere. Using both body fossils and trace fossils, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

(Fall) Exploring the Dynamic Earth - *Not offered this year/term

Earth is a dynamic and ancient planet. The study of Earth is concerned with understanding how the natural world operates as well as realizing its impact on society. In this field- and project-oriented course, we evaluate the history and composition of the planet, and earth-shaping processes such as earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, mountain building, glaciation, and erosion. Lectures and weekly field and lab projects introduce the major concepts and techniques of geology. No previous knowledge of geology is required.

Prerequisites: fy, soph, and permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy

(Fall) Rocks and Minerals - *Not offered this year/term

This course is designed to help students recognize common minerals and their properties and occurrences, and the principal rock types and their origins, associations, and tectonic significance. Mineral characteristics and identification are covered mainly in the context of the common rocks in which they occur. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on several field trips.

Prerequisites: High-school Earth science or any Geol 100 level course

Notes: 3 meetings (50 mins.); 1 lab (3 hr)

Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn
(Spring) History of Earth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course introduces students to the new way of looking at Earth and its main subsystems (lithosphere, biosphere, hydrosphere and atmosphere). Study of the interaction of these systems will help students to recognize major events in Earth history. Course units include the rise in atmospheric oxygen, the supercontinents Rodinia and Pangea, the origins of animals and plants, and the Cretaceous-Tertiary impact event. Weekly labs provide hands-on, quantitative exercises for students working in small groups.
Prerequisites: High-school Earth science or any geology 100 level course or permission of instructor.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes); 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. McMenamin

(Fall) Surface Processes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this field-and project-based course we examine the processes operating at earth's surface, and we consider how the resulting landforms and deposits can be used to infer environmental change. For example, we study why landslides occur, rivers meander, and coastlines erode. Field work (and trips) are a vital aspect of this course allowing students to explore first-hand the processes that have created and modified Earth's landscapes and environment.
Prerequisites: High-school Earth science or any geology 100 level course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 mins.); 1 lab (3 hrs.)
Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy, Mr. A. Werner

GEOL-204-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Human Dimensions of Environmental Change - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; geog 204)
Using case studies from Africa, Asia, North and South America, and Europe, this course examines the interactions between human institutions (such as political and economic structures, science and technology, class and gender systems, and cultures) and the environmental/earth systems that provide their contexts and have been impacted upon them. The course will provide a forum to analyze the environmental consequences of a variety of land-use systems, resource use, and development projects, and explore possible alternative strategies of human-environment relations that could create a balance between human needs and environmental constraints.

(Fall) Mineralogy
Offers fundamentals of crystallography, crystal, chemistry, and systematic mineralogy. Introduces mineral associations, occurrences, genesis, phase relations, and optical properties. Laboratory emphasizes mineral properties, identification, and analytical methods.
Prerequisites: Geology 100 level course or Chemistry 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (1 hr); 1 lab (3 hrs.)
Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB

(Spring) Planetary Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(astr 223)
A first-year introductory course for physical science minors and majors. Topics include origin and evolution of the planets; planetary orbits, rotation, and precession; gravitational and tidal interactions; asteroids, comets, and planetary rings; meteorites; interiors and atmospheres of the Jovian and terrestrial planets; geology, tectonics, and mineralogy of the terrestrial planets and satellites; new data from Mars Pathfinder, Lunar Surveyor, and current NASA missions.
Prerequisites: any physical science course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
GEOL-225-01 - Geology - 2000-2001

GEOL-226-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Because more than 70 percent of our planet is covered by ocean water, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. Along the way, we will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to control weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to valuable resources. Field trips will augment the other course activities and materials.
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. K. Moody

GEOL-227-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Groundwater
The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major societal concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students prepare weekly problem sets, a term paper, and an oral presentation. Many of the homework problems involve computer applications.
Prerequisites: High-school Earth science or any Geology 100 level course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and a fourth hour
Instructors: Mr. A. Werner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-235-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(January) World Energy Resources
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Environmental Studies 235j)
This course explores the scientific, economic, geopolitical and environmental aspects of energy production, particularly petroleum. Emphasis will be placed on the geologic tools and techniques used in the exploration and production of oil and gas. We will also discuss the global distribution of petroleum deposits and the complexity of energy-related issues. Students with diverse interests such as environmental studies, geology, international relations, politics and economics are welcome to attend. Classroom discussion and internet-based research are encouraged.
Requirements: research paper and oral report.
Prerequisites: One Introductory Course in Geol or Envst or Per I
Notes: TuTh 10-12:00. One 1-hr lab/week
Instructors: Ms. B. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 25

GEOL-240-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Geological Resources and the Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course is a survey of the geology of important mineral deposits and energy resources, the factors that govern the economics of their production, and the environmental implications of their exploitation.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn

GEOL-250-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) The Biosphere
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The biosphere has a pronounced geochemical influence on the Earth; indeed, life has been called the greatest geological force. In this course, we will study the chemistry of life through geologic time and examine its influence on the formation and weathering of rocks, on the composition and temperature of the atmosphere, on the accumulation of gas hydrates and other hydrocarbon resources, and its role in the initiation of naturally occurring, water-mediated nuclear reactors. We will also take a close look at the Biosphere concept of Vladimir Vernadsky, the Gaia hypothesis, and Hypersea theory, and the ways in which these concepts inform our understanding of life’s geological impact.

(Fall) Paleontology - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

(this course takes a careful look at the fossil record, emphasizing the history and evolution of the marine biosphere; the recognition, distribution, and significance of faunas and their environments through geologic time; and the paleoecologic significance, evolutionary relationships, and biostratigraphic importance of major groups of fossil-forming organisms. Several local field trips, including one weekend excursion.
Prerequisites: Geology 202, Biological Sciences 213, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. McMenamin

GEOL-322-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Petrology and Petrography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Studies mineralogical and chemical compositions, classification, genesis, and mode of occurrence of volcanic, plutonic, and metamorphic rocks. Special attention paid to the relationships between rock-forming processes and global plate tectonics. Laboratory study of representative rock suites in hand specimen and thin section, introduction to analytical techniques, and one or more field trips.
Prerequisites: Geol 220 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB

GEOL-324-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Advanced Sedimentary Systems - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Special topics in the study and interpretation of sediments and sedimentary rocks, and the analysis of modern and ancient environments. Possible topics could include: sedimentary petrology, facies relationships of sedimentary rocks; paleogeography; paleoceanography; and paleoclimatology; environmental stratigraphy and paleoecology: tectonics and sedimentation; and geological and technological issues involved in the recovery of oil and gas. Laboratory exercises and field trips.
Prerequisites: Geol 230 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 mins.); 1 lab (3 hr.)
Instructors: Mr. M. McMenamin

GEOL-326-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Seminar: Global Change - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change, the prospects of greenhouse warming, and the environmental impact of a warmer world.
Prerequisites: High-school Earth science or any geology 100 level course or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Werner

GEOL-333-01 - Geology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology, structural analysis, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Lectures concentrate on field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock rheology, the relation between rock deformation and metamorphism, isotopic systems and thermal histories of rocks, and geological activity at plate boundaries. Of nine labs, five are field trips that involve collection of original data. Short problem sets emphasize quantitative skills. During the final weeks of the semester, students research the Moine thrust fault in Scotland.
Prerequisites: any geology class at the 200 level or permission of the instructor

(Fall) Seminars: Geology and Geography of the Connecticut Valley - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year. Consult the department for information about future seminars. These courses do not meet a distribution requirement in geology.

Fall 2000: This course is a seminar-in-the-field that focuses on the history of the rocks and landscapes in our backyard. Through field trips and student research projects, we will explore topics such as the assembly and break-up of Pangea; the igneous, structural, and metamorphic history of the local Paleozoic bedrock; the Mesozoic history of faulting, basin growth, and volcanism; the Ice Age and regional glacial landforms and deposits; the changing course of the Connecticut River; flooding of the river; patterns of human land use; and regional seismicity. A 10-page research paper and participation in a community-based learning project at South Hadley Middle School are required.

Prerequisites: Completion of at least two 200- or 300- level geology courses or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Markley

GRMST-325-01 - German Studies - 2000-2001
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization?" Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.
This course will examine how the daily life and personal experiences of East German citizens are depicted in the literature and in other media produced in the GDR beginning with the country's founding in 1949 until unification in 1990. We will discuss in what ways selected texts express the development of socialism in the GDR and explore authors' literary styles and political views, as well as the current validity of their works; the function of literature and the attitudes of the writers/artists towards their socialist society; and discuss films, music, as well as fictional and nonfictional representations of reality "im realexistierenden Sozialismus."

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Instructors: J. Ellis
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 03 LEC |

(Fall) Foundation: Vietnam War and American Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
American military involvement in southeast Asia between 1945 and 1975, focusing on the underlying causes of United States policy and the impact of the war in American society and culture. Sources include traditional histories of the conflict, veterans' memoirs, novels, films, and artistic statements. Requires oral presentations on the most controversial issues raised by the war (My Lai Massacre; role of antiwar movement; meaning of Vietnam War Memorial).
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Ellis

(Fall) Foundation: Family, Community, and Class
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This course offers a study of family and community life in different historical settings and periods. A peasant village, a colonial New England town, and a nineteenth-century industrial city are among the different types of communities that serve as contexts for investigating the varying ways men and women form households, raise children, organize their work and leisure, acquire individual and group identities, and engage in collective action--rebellion, protest, strikes. We study a variety of primary materials as well as secondary historical works to acquire an improved understanding of history as a mode of inquiry.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Schwartz
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Foundation: The War to End All Wars: 1914-1918
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Known as "the Great War for Civilization," the 1914-1918 conflict marked the beginning of the end of European hegemony and the dramatic entrance of the United States onto the stage of international affairs. For those who survived--and nearly ten million did not--it was a watershed of global significance. This course will examine, among other issues, the origins of the war and the catalyst of the Balkans; propaganda and censorship; the work of women and men on home fronts and battlefronts; conflicts in Asia and Africa as well as in Europe; the Russian Revolution; the Treaty of Versailles; and the rise of fascism in the immediate postwar epoch.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Burns
(Spring) Foundation: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Precedent: (medst 102)
The boundaries to be examined during this spring include those separating Christians, Jews, Muslims, and various "Others" in Europe; but the class will also investigate encounters across new boundaries separating--and constructing--Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Texts central to this inquiry will include, from c.1250, the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonso X; c.1400, Christine de Pisan's The Book of the City of Ladies; and c.1600, Holy Wednesday: A Nahua Drama from Early Colonial Mexico.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Foundation: Heroes and Heroines
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Notes: (Writing-intensive)
The great become godlike, but how are they transformed? Deeds of valor are one way, but violence is not the only road to the sacred. The courage of self-sacrifice and the vision of the philosopher are also ennobling. What social facts determine definitions of heroism? Are male and female heroism essentially the same or fundamentally different? Students investigate the core connection between free will, honor, and the divine to discern how ordinary people become extraordinary. Readings include The Iliad, the Odyssey, Iphigenia, Antigone, The Apology, the lives of saints and martyrs, Beowulf, Roland, and Lancelot.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors

(Spring) Foundation: Talking About a Revolution: Intellectuals in Modern China - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Notes: (asian 102)
A study of the visions, plans, and frustrations of intellectuals taking part in the revolutionary changes of twentieth-century China. Beginning with the radical youth of the May Fourth Movement, the course will also include Confucian reactions to modernism, moderate constitutionalist solutions, and the anarchist and Communist movements. Topics for discussion will include the ideology and cultural biases of the historian/observer, the role of intellectuals in society, and the impact of European ideas--Marxism, Ibsenism, Darwinism, among others--on traditional Chinese culture.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Foundation: Imperialism and American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Notes: (Writing-intensive)
This course explores the relationship between imperialism and American culture in the context of the United States' rise to world power. We will focus on U.S. intervention in selected areas of Africa, Latin America, the Caribbean, the Pacific, and North America itself, in the first half of the twentieth century. How did U.S. imperialism in these areas affect cultural expression in the U.S.? What were the implications of imperialism for racial, ethnic, and class relations at home? for the construction of gender and sexuality? for contests over national identity?
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Renda
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Foundation: Bonds of Intimacy in the Ancient World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Notes: (Writing-intensive)
History is not only great individuals and events, it is also the silent and "secret" side of human lives. This course will make use of the art, poetry, laws, and plays of the period to recreate the private life of the ancient world (700 B.C.-A.D. 600). We will explore such topics as family relations, homosexuality, the role of women, childbearing, and marriage in classical Greece. We shall also investigate emerging Christian values, to include the ethic of virginity, attitudes toward sexuality, the education of women, and the role of marriage. Sources will include Plato, Euripides, Livy Petronius, St. Paul, and Jerome.

Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors

(Fall) Foundation: Justice: Ideals and Practices in History - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

A full-year course using historical case studies (e.g., a peasant's revolt in 1381 and a labor strike in 1912) as well as off-campus fieldwork to ask what "justice" has meant to women and men in Europe and America, how they have fought to achieve it, and why goals and practices have changed since the Middle Ages. Both analysis of documentary evidence in the fall and community-based learning in the spring will lead to critical reflection on how historical understanding may best inform and stimulate political and social action today.

Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors

(Spring) Foundation: African American Autobiographies and Biographies - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course will focus on the rich heritage of autobiographies and biographies that have distinguished African American letters since slavery. It will begin with an examination of some slave narratives, such as Equiano's Travels and Frederick Douglass's My Bondage and My Freedom and conclude with selections from the recent past. Among our goals will be investigating why these idioms have been so characteristic of African American writing, analyzing the information they stress, uncovering their relationships to the past and the roles they have played in shaping it, and examining the political stakes involved in exploring individual lives.

Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Spring) German History in the Modern World - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course pushes beyond cliches and simplistic images about Germans, into the world-shaping and humanity-stretching German past. Beginning with the Napoleonic Wars and the emergence of German nationalism, students will follow developments up to the present--using primary sources that range from sublime to depraved and that concern politics, literature, music, and more. Themes include the roots of Nazism and of German democracy and the responsibility of individuals for social outcomes.

(Spring) Japan Since 1600 - *Not offered this year/term
(asian 133)
This course examines Japan's emergence in the nineteenth century from more than 200 years of self-imposed isolation, the process of political and economic modernization, and the attempt to find a secure and significant place in the Western-dominated world of the twentieth century. It focuses on the formation of a modern state, industrialization, Western imperialism and the rise of pan-Asianism, the Great Depression and the rise of military government in the 1930s, postwar Japan under U.S. military occupation, and problems of rapid economic growth in recent years.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Lipman

(Fall) Modern Korea
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to Korean history since the fourteenth century. After a brief introduction to geography and premodern cultural forms, the course will survey the evolution of the Yi dynasty (1392-1910) in the religious, intellectual, and socioeconomic realms. The second half will focus on Korea's interaction with the Euro-American powers and the rising Japanese empire (nineteenth and twentieth centuries). We will examine the devastating effects of imperialism, colonial occupation, civil war, and long-term division, which have also enabled rapid economic development since the 1960s.

(Spring) Late Medieval and Early Modern Europe: The Medieval Church

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who, after an introduction to European history between 1300 and 1700 or to Renaissance and Reformation Europe, wish to examine topics or aspects in greater depth.

A study of the western Church from Late Antiquity to the High Middle Ages, focusing on changing beliefs and how ideals are manifest in institutions subject to secular forces. Topics: persecution and martyrdom, the imperial church, the rise of monasticism, sacral kingship, the symbiosis of church and state, heretics and witches, sexuality and the sacred—the peculiar "Medieval Vision" of reality.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; some preparation in history or religion suggested

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

(Spring) Ideas and Society in Modern Europe: 'Les Miz' and 'Les Media': Representations and Realities in the France of Les Misérables (1800-1870)

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Victor Hugo's celebrated novel, Les Misérables (1862), will set the themes for a multimedia study of nineteenth-century France: class antagonisms, student and worker protests, and revolutions; nationalism and nation building; urbanization and the social problems of poverty, disease, and crime; romanticism, socialism, and republicanism; the rise of the novel, the newspaper, and print images. Two areas of investigation will be emphasized: 1) the representation of history in literature, print images, and films; 2) the use of multimedia technology to compare the representations with historical realities, with history as it was lived by nineteenth-century women and men.

HIST-256-01 - History - 2000-2001

(Fall) Interpreting Nature: Environmental Thinking in Europe from the Seventeenth Century to the Present - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive; envst 256)

Studies European views of nature and the natural world from the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century to the present. In addition, a case study of industrialization in nineteenth-century England serves to illustrate three aspects of environmental history: the interrelated study of past natural environments, their transformation by technology, and the results for society and nature. Central to this part of the course will be a hands-on introduction to new methods of computer-assisted mapping and data analysis known as Geographic Information Systems (GIS).

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. R. Schwartz

(Fall) Computing Applications in History and the Humanities: War of the Worlds: Witchcraft and Witch Hunting in the Early Modern Era (1500-1800) - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive)

A multimedia study of elite and popular culture in Europe and New England, focusing on the beliefs and practices of witchcraft and witch hunting.

We shall examine differing historical interpretations of witchcraft and use multimedia technology to explore the representation of witches and their prosecution in judicial records, quantitative materials, visual images of the era, and modern films. Students will work in teams to create multimedia projects on the Web.

Notes: 2 meetings (two hours)

Instructors: Mr. R. Schwartz

(Spring) Computing Applications in History and the Humanities: Frankenstein Meets Multimedia - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive)

This course introduces multimedia computing as a tool for carrying out a cultural history of Mary Shelley's Frankenstein (1818)—a wonderfully rich source for understanding the varied and shifting views of nature, gender, human development, and science during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. It also provides hands-on practical experience using instructional technology to design and produce a significant multimedia study on CD-ROM or the Web.

(Fall) Antisemitism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Instructors: M. Burns
Section Instructors: 01 LEC  | 02 LEC  |

(Fall) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: Antisemitism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This introductory survey will explore the history of Western attitudes toward Jews—and the history of Jewish responses—from the Enlightenment to the present. It will investigate religious myths and secular stereotypes and consider how anti-Semites grafted old habits to new social, economic, and political concerns. Topics include: the foundations of European racism; the Dreyfus Affair in France; the rise of modern Zionism; the Holocaust; and the contemporary politics of prejudice.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Burns

(Fall) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: From Habsburg to Hitler: Bohemian Politics, 1848-1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the complex, often comic, and ultimately tragic history of Bohemia, a territory located today in the Czech Republic, but previously a part of the Habsburg Monarchy, then of Czechoslovakia, and then of Hitler's Third Reich. Students will complement historical studies with autobiographical material and contemporary fiction, beginning with the Revolution of 1848, progressing through the achievements and worrisome trends of Emperor Francis Joseph's 68-year reign, and concluding with the world wars. Emphasis on the interplay among Czechs, Germans, Jews, and other pivotal players: the House of Habsburg and its supporters, and the political elites of neighboring countries.

(Fall) U.S. Women's History since 1890
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; womst 200 (01))
This course examines the history of women and the cultural construction of gender in the United States since the end of the last century. How have class, race, and ethnicity shaped the history of women's work, debates over female sexuality, women's work for social change, and representations of women in cultural and political contexts? In what ways has gender contributed to racial consciousness and class formation in the United States? Using primary and secondary material, we will examine "women's experience" in the realms of work, politics, sexuality, and reproduction.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed for in-depth exploration of women's experiences and their roles in various cultures and societies. How are the changing and varied experiences of women related to notions of the sacred? How are the very distinctions between "women" and "men" affected by such notions? In what ways is spirituality a source of power for women or a limit to their power? Case studies include European women during the transition from medieval to modern society, African women during early encounters with European Christians as well as in the period after "independence," and women of the African diaspora.

(Writing-intensive; womst 200s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed for in-depth exploration of women's experiences and their roles in various cultures and societies. Transformations in gendered divisions of labor and in women's access to resources are fundamental to understanding contemporary African societies. We explore how African women have created contexts for productivity using strategies such as marriage, pledged female friendship, and voluntary dependency. We investigate the loss of women's work of governing in the colonial period, and the consequences for women's wealth and productivity of incorporation into a global market economy. Texts include recorded life histories, autobiography, fiction, and film, and primary sources such as the testimony of participants in the Ibo Women's War of 1929.

(Fall) Colloquium: Martyrdom as Social Protest: Resistance and Honor in Antiquity and the Middle Ages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Not all victims of tyranny and persecution become martyrs, nor are all martyrs victims of tyranny. What social and political conditions foster the choice of martyrdom? What cultural values drive this form of self-immolation? What's worth dying for? In antiquity, the word "martyr" meant an active "witness." Today, it can mean a passive "victim." Our approach uses cross-cultural comparisons and psychoanalytic theory to help understand how martyrdom shaped the history and culture of antique Europe and Japan. Subjects: Imperial suicides, child sacrifice, political martyrs, gladiators, Samurai and kamikaze, women martyrs, soldiers, and virgins.

(asian 331)
China, Japan, and Korea were all well-organized states and societies in the nineteenth century, when the full impact of Euro-American imperial power arrived in East Asia. From that time until the present, all three have gone through painful and conflicted transformations to establish themselves as modern nation-states. This colloquium will focus on the current secondary literature on nationalism and nation building within an explicitly comparative framework, using material from all three East Asian cultures.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
What is the power of money in human interactions? Do money and markets determine the shape of social institutions? We examine the process through which societies in Africa, Europe, Latin America, and the Pacific replaced patterns of exchange based on forms of mutual obligation with patterns of exchange based on money. What changed, what did not change, and why? We will consider some of the ways that social theorists and economic anthropologists have answered these questions and decide whether the evidence from our case studies supports or disproves their theories.

(Fall) Debate
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
The focus of the class will be improving public-speaking skills, especially under circumstances when one's position is being actively challenged. To accomplish this, students will learn three of the most popular styles of competition debate: Policy Debate, Lincoln-Douglas Debate, and Parliamentary Debate. Each student will participate in two debates in each style of debate during the course of the semester, as well as evaluating other students' debating. These debates will be scheduled outside of regular class time at the convenience of the participants. Topics for the debates will likely concern domestic and international policy, morality, politics, and the law.

(Spring) Dialogue
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
One of the main goals of intergroup dialogue is to encourage informed dialogue rather than debate between participants. Informed dialogue—a process of interactive communication and education which encourages voicing, listening, asking clarifying questions, gathering of information from different perspectives, reflection and analysis—is a particularly effective method of dealing with conflictual issues in diverse groups. Students will be both participants in and observers of dialogue groups for the purpose of learning group facilitation and leadership skills.

JWST-104-01 - Jewish Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (relig 104)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Fine

(Fall) Texts and Readers: Introduction to the Religious Classics of Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
(relig 208)
The study of a religious textual tradition that is thousands of years old is like an archaeological dig. One uncovers layer upon layer of cultural meaning. This course surveys the most important and influential layers of Jewish textual culture: Biblical narrative and law; rabbinic theology and law; medieval mysticism, philosophy, ethics and poetry; and examples of modern Jewish thought. How does one layer build upon those prior to it? What is the role of various historical communities in the process of interpretation and innovative reading?

(Fall) Engendering Judaism: Women and Jewish Tradition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive; relig 222)
This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies, opportunities to become rabbis, new approaches to God, theology, and social issues, the Jewish lesbian movement, women's writing and documentary filmmaking.

*(Fall) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (relig 235)

Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Zohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of Eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (relig 245)

The destruction of European Jewry by the Nazis during the Second World War was the most devastating tragedy in all of modern Jewish history and perhaps of the twentieth century as a whole. The Holocaust poses fundamental questions for all people about what it means to be human, the nature of social community, and about religious faith and tradition. This course explores significant attempts to come to grips with these moral and philosophical questions through literature, religious thought, and film, including the work of Paul Celan, Primo Levi, Elie Wiesel, Aharon Appelfeld, Arthur Cohen, Richard Rubenstein, Jean Amery, Claude Lanzmann, Eva Fogelman, and Pierre Sauvage.

Latin American Studies

LATAM-170-01 - Latin American Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Readings in Caribbean Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Features comparison of selected readings in the literature of the Spanish-, French-, and English-speaking Caribbean. Introduces the literary personality of the area, the transformation of the material of Caribbean social life into formally crafted and effective literary statement, and characteristic thematic and broader cultural preoccupations. Asks primary questions, such as "How does a novel--or poem--work?" and addresses similar issues related to forms of critical thinking and literary analysis. Readings and discussion in English.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Marquez

LATAM-175-01 - Latin American Studies - 2000-2001
(Spring) Historical Emergence of the Caribbean
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
The historical development of the Caribbean from the Conquest to the mid-twentieth century. Patterns of conquest, colonization, and settlement by European nations; the rise of plantation-dominated society; the process of insular and interregional differentiation; the emergence of American imperial designs; and the rise of anticolonial, nationalist movements Comparative reviews of the experience of Haiti, Jamaica, and Puerto Rico highlight broader regional trends and the ways the Caribbean's major language zones have responded to the challenge of their shared history. This course satisfies a distribution requirement in humanities--history, philosophy, and religion, not in politics.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Fall) Introduction to Latin American Cultures
Examines the confrontation, assimilation, and transformation of Amerindian, African, and European cultures in Latin America from the sixteenth century to the present. Focuses on the processes in which distinctive self-images emerged in the region and how these images have been challenged and changed over time. Uses films, literature, and folk traditions to complement scholarly analyses of the emergence of a New World mentality.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Gudmundson

(Spring) Introduction to Latin American Economies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(a hist 181)
A historical study of economic and social structures in Latin America from the Conquest to the present, focusing on various interpretations of development and dependency. Topics include colonialism and imperialism; land and labor systems; interethnic and gender relations; urbanization, industrialization; and modern political change. This course satisfies a distribution requirement in social sciences, not in history.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 4 credits
Instructors: Mr. L. Gudmundson

(Spring) Studies in Caribbean Literature: The Anglophone West Indian Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Representative readings from the fiction produced in the cultural region made up by Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, Guyana, Grenada, Saint Lucia, and the other former British colonies in the Caribbean. Special attention will be paid to the wider context out of which it emerges, the specific characteristics (of form, content, and expression) that define its Antillean peculiarity, and the important stages of development of a distinctly West Indian novel. Among the writers whose work will come under discussion are: Edgar Mittelholzer, Roger Mais, John Hearne, V. S. Reid, Gerorge Lamming, Samuel Selvon, V. S. Naipaul, and Caryl Phillips.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr in Latin American studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 4 credits
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Fall) Puerto Rican Literature and Society: Borinquen to El Barrio - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
An examination of the rise of national society in Puerto Rico and the literary forms in which it finds expression. Emphasis is on the historical context, artistic evolution, forms, moods, settings, and characteristic concerns of that expression, including a probe of the impact on and changes in literary utterance effected by annexation to the United United States. The emergence of a uniquely Puerto Rican literature within the American metropolis, its distinctive character, voice, texture, and cultural singularity will thus be an important part of our concern.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Spring) Contemporary Caribbean Societies: Cuba and the Dominican Republic: Revolution and Reaction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Third in the ongoing cycle of self-contained examinations of a distinctively regional and cultural subdivision of the Antillean archipelago, which includes The Haitian Condition: Dessalines to Duvalier and Beyond, and Revolution in the West Indies: Trinidad, Jamaica, Guyana, Grenada. This course's special concern will be an exploration of the unfolding patterns of historical, social, and cultural development of society in Cuba and the Dominican Republic into the immediately contemporary period.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 4 credits in Latin American studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Spring) Caribbean Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Comparative examination of contemporary women's writing in the Caribbean. Emphasis will be on their engagement with issues of history, cultural articulation, race, class, gender, and nationality, including exploration of their formal procedures, individual moods, regional particularity, and general impact as writers. Rosario Ferré, Ana Lydia Vega, Julia Alvarez, Edna Brodber, Maryse Conde, Simone Schwarz-Bart, Jean Rhys, Beryl Gilroy, and Rosa Guy are among those whose works we will review.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. R. Marquez

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Women in Latin American Cinema

'Taught in English; span 287

Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who have had an introduction to Latin America through 180 or 181 or a course on Latin America in some other discipline (anthropology, history, literature, or politics, for example), this course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.

Spring 2001: Women and Latin American Cinema This course is a critical study of the representation of women in Latin American cinema. Beginning with Mexico’s edad de oro (1930-1940) to the present, we will explore the positioning of a gendered spectator, the role of melodrama, as well as issues of race and class in the construction of a national identity through film. Special attention will be paid to women directors such as María Nova, María Luisa Bemberg, Sara Gómez, and María Elena Velasco. This course is in English and open to students who have no background in Spanish but may be applied toward a major or minor in Spanish if readings and written work are done in Spanish.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in Latin American studies and permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. N. Gerassi-Navarro

(Fall) Modern Mexico

(hist 288)

An analysis of the modern Mexican nation-state organized around three major themes: the conflictive yet symbiotic relationship with the United States, from the war of the 1840s through the North American Free Trade initiative of today; the succession of reformist and revolutionary upheavals in 1810-1821, 1856-1867, 1910-1917, the 1930s, and again today, seeking to resolve both problems of the colonial past and new conflicts traceable to the very reforms generated by earlier political and social struggles; and the meaning of Mexican nationality from different ethnic, gender, and class perspectives. Readings include autobiographical and literary works, historical studies, and films.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. L. Gudmundson

(Spring) Slavery in the Americas

(afram 289; hist 289)

A course, organized topically rather than geographically or nationally, that offers a comparative analysis of African American slavery as a dominant social system in Brazil, the Caribbean, and the U.S. South. Topics include why slavery?; sugar and slavery; historical demography; culture and the law; kinship and family; long-run economic development; patterns of race relations; master class and racist ideologies; resistance to slavery; and abolition and its aftermath. Readings include historical and anthropological studies, as well as a major documentary collection on slavery in Brazil.

(Spring) Independent Study
(Spring) Studies in Comparative Caribbean Culture: Contemporary Caribbean Writers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A sustained, comparative study of the developing canon of at least three major contemporary writers from the Caribbean, representing the region's Spanish-, English-, and French-speaking cultural zones. Articulates the evolution, contours, and scope of each author's unique perception of the New World and, especially, the broadly defining features of what Welsh cultural historian Raymond Williams would have called their peculiarly Antillean "structure of feeling."
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Spring) Paradigms of New World Thought: History, Race, Class, and Nationality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This sustained study of the work of at least two representative New World thinkers emphasizes the national context, distinct intellectual evolution, influence, ideological importance, and wider implications of that work. We will be especially interested in the ways their work engages the drama of history, race, and class as part of a larger notion of nation and against the backdrop of specific historical circumstances. Since the authors studied will change each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Fall) Foundations of the Colonial Enterprise in the Americas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Exploration of the historic roots of colonialism, from its antecedents in the Crusades, and the emergence of Columbus' Enterprise of the Indies to the establishment of a multinational constellation of European New World colonies more than two centuries after his fateful voyage. Emphasis is on the ways in which the world before and immediately after Columbus set in place the particular terms, character, and contradictions of modern colonialism, reshaping our conception of the world and laying the foundations for the continuing importance of a variety of dramas still central to our own time.
Prerequisites: jr., sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

LATAM-386-01 - Latin American Studies - 2000-2001
(Spring) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(hist 386)
This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. L. Gudmundson

(Fall) Special Topics in Latin American Studies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)

(Fall) Postmodernism and Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English)
For many the "discovery" of America opened the modern era. Its closing may also have been foretold in Latin America's confounding of diverse theories of modernization and development in recent times. This seminar will introduce the student to a number of both classic and more recent works on Latin America (in English) that advance along postmodernist lines, ranging from cultural contact and conflict, language, meaning, and power in the sixteenth century, to the invention of national identities in the nineteenth century, to discourses of ethnicity, class, gender, and reason in the twentieth century.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in Latin American studies or related field, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. L. Gudmundson

(Fall) Agrarian America: Sugar, Cotton, Coffee, Wheat - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English)
This course explores the structure and variety of societies generated in North, Central, and South America by four widely distributed export crops. Although not bound by rigid chronology, our focus will be primarily on the period 1750-1950. Principal concerns of the course are variations by time and place in each commodity's technologies, labor systems, farm sizes, and social structure; the political dynamics associated with each type of farming; and the problematic features of capitalism in agriculture, or, how and when do peasants become farmers and farming agribusiness? Readings in English on cases drawn from throughout the Americas.

MATH-103-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Accelerated Calculus
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An intensive, fast-paced course for students with strong mathematical interests and background. Topics include differentiation, integration, summation of series, and solutions of differential equations.
Prerequisites: strong precalculus background
Notes: 2 meetings (1 hour, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver

MATH-110-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Explorations in Algebra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Uses examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.
Prerequisites: 4 admission units or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes)
enrollment limited
Instructors: The department

(Fall) Explorations in Geometry: Geometry and Cosmology
Geometry and cosmology. The astronomical models devised by Greeks in the period 600-300 B.C. held sway until the Renaissance, when great improvements in understanding were achieved--and yet a geocentric bias persisted among cosmologists well into the twentieth century. In this course we will endeavor to comprehend the geometric viewpoints of the distant past and the very significant evolution of understanding that occurred in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.
Prerequisites: 4 admission units or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (1 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. L. Senechal

(Spring) Explorations in Fractals and Chaos

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to fractals and chaos. Topics selected from the following: self-similar fractals, fractal dimension, iteration, the Feigenbaum diagram, Julia sets and the Mandelbrot set, strange attractors and applications.
Prerequisites: 4 admission units or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes); enrollment limited
Instructors: Mr. A. Durfee

MATH-151-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Calculus IA
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Intended for students who want to strengthen their quantitative and algebraic precalculus skills in order to learn calculus. Includes representation and interpretation of data, functions and their graphs, and rates of change. Features modeling of phenomena in the natural and social sciences. Students should plan to take 200s.
Prerequisites: 3 admission units or permission of department
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Chmutov

MATH-200-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Calculus IIA
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Continues 151. Topics include integrals and the varied processes that they can represent, accumulation and antidifferentiation, the several forms of the fundamental theorem, additional topics in differential equations with applications.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 151 or equivalent, permission of department
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes); Note: Credit may not be given for Mathematics 200 and 202.
Instructors: Mr. S. Chmutov

(Fall) Calculus II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include techniques of integration, periodic functions, dynamical systems, series and approximations, and probability.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101 or equivalent, permission of department

MATH-203-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Calculus III
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differential and integral calculus of functions of several variables.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 103, 200
Notes: or 202 or equivalent, permission of department; 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Durfee

MATH-203-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Calculus III
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differential and integral calculus of functions of several variables.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 103, 200
Notes: or 202 or equivalent, permission of department; 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Peterson

MATH-211-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Linear Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include elements of the theory of matrices and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: any 100-level mathematics course
Instructors: Mr. S. Chmutov

MATH-211-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Linear Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include elements of the theory of matrices and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: any 100-level mathematics course
Instructors: Mr. A. Durfee

(Spring) Discrete Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies some aspects of discrete mathematics. Topics may include sets, functions, elementary probability, induction proofs, recurrence relations, and matrices.
Prerequisites: any 100-level mathematics or computer science course, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver

MATH-251-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 200 or 202 or equivalent, or permission of department
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); Offered every spring and in alternate falls; Offered fall 2001
Instructors: Ms. M. Robinson

(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

MATH-301-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Real Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include the real number system, convergence of sequences and series, power series, uniform convergence, compactness and connectedness, continuity, abstract treatment of differential and integral calculus, metric spaces, and point-set topology.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 251 or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. G. Davidoff

MATH-302-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Complex Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differentiation and integration of functions of a complex variable, the Cauchy integral formula, residues, conformal mapping, and applications to physical science and engineering.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 or Physics 303
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; Offered at Mount Holyoke fall 2000
Instructors: Mrs. M. Robinson

(Spring) Topics in Analysis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics to be announced.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, 211
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes)
Instructors: The department

MATH-311-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Algebra I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include algebraic structures: groups, rings (including some elementary number theory), fields, and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211 and another 200-level mathematics course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 meeting (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. H. Pollatsek

MATH-319-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Topics in Algebra: Lie Groups
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The study of Lie groups (named for the Norwegian mathematician Sophus Lie) provides rich connections to many parts of mathematics and important applications to physics and chemistry. Topics include symmetry groups, linearization, one parameter subgroups and the exponential map, Lie algebras and adjoint maps, and classical matrix groups.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, Mathematics 311 helpful but not necessary
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; Offered at Mount Holyoke spring 2001
Instructors: Ms. H. Pollatsek

MATH-322-01 - Mathematics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Differential Geometry - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Topics selected from the following: spherical geometry, Euclid's theory of parallels, the development of non-Euclidean geometry; plane curves, curvature; some famous plane curves (cycloids, lemniscates, cardioids, the cissoid of Diocles, the tractrix, etc.); curves in space and their curvature, knots and tubes; surfaces, various types of curvature for surfaces, the theorem egregium and the Gauss-Bonnet theorem; map projections (stereographic, central, Mercator, Lambert's cylindrical projection, azimuthal, etc.).

Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, 211 (may be taken concurrently)

Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes)

Instructors: The department

(Fall) Topics in Geometry

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

The Topology and Differential Geometry of Geometrical Objects:
The sphere and the torus are different surfaces, but how should we describe their differences? We can do so from a variety of viewpoints, all of which are valuable for understanding geometry. There are some significant surprises, and the progress made in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries holds great interest for mathematicians, physicists, and cosmologists.

Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and Mathematics 211 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes);

Instructors: Mr. L. Senechal

(Spring) Differential Equations

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

This is an introduction to differential equations for students in the mathematical or other sciences. Topics include first-order equations, second-order linear equations, qualitative study of dynamical systems, and first- and second-order linear partial differential equations.

Prerequisites: Mathematics 200 or 202

Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes); Offered alternate years

Instructors: Mr. S. Chmutov

Medieval Studies

(Fall) Medieval Culture and Society:
Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; engl 101 06)

Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar's topics offer a foundation for inquiry into medieval culture. Using readings in literature, art, music, history, politics, philosophy, and sciences to interpret the Middle Ages, a student sharpens her awareness of language and imagery as means of communicating experience and improves her skills of attentive reading and persuasive writing. The 101F-102S seminar sequence offered in 2000-2001 is designed to be a yearlong course, but students may take one semester without the other.

How did medieval people think about themselves and how did they imagine, move in, and represent the physical world? This course explores the various ways medieval culture created and crossed significant geographical, emotional, and conceptual boundaries in the areas of art, literature, religion, mathematics, and science. Texts will include medieval maps, travel literature such as Mandeville's Travels, letters of Heloise and Abelard, romances such as Floris and Blancheflor and Malory's Morte D'Arthur, manuscript illuminations, and selected material from late medieval theories of love, medicine, astrology, and mathematics.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette
Expected enrollment: 17

(Spring) Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive; hist 101 (02))

Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar's topics offer a foundation for inquiry into medieval culture. Using readings in literature, art, music, history, politics, philosophy, and sciences to interpret the Middle Ages, a student sharpens her awareness of language and imagery as means of communicating experience, and improves her skills of attentive reading and persuasive writing. The 101F-102S seminar sequence offered in 2000-2001 is designed to be a yearlong course, but students may take one semester without the other.

The boundaries to be examined include those separating Christians, Jews, Muslims, and various "Others" in Europe, but the class will also investigate encounters across new boundaries separating--and constructing--Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Texts central to this inquiry will include, from c.1250 the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonso X; c.1400, Christine de Pisan's The Book of the City of Ladies; and c.1600, Holy Wednesday: A Nahua Drama from Early Colonial Mexico.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 15

MEDST-200-01 - Medieval Studies - 2000-2001
(Spring) Special Topics in Medieval Studies: A Medieval "Room of One's Own": Christine de Pizan and Her World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; fren 220)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed to address themes and historical periods in an interdisciplinary framework. Topics will bring together the study of art, literature, and history to heighten awareness of the complex interaction of cultural and political forces in medieval society. Issues will be explored through the methods of different disciplines in order to develop the student's analytical and critical skills.

The patriarchal society in which Christine lived was a difficult place to find work when her husband died and she became the sole support of her children. Her was a troubled world: the late fourteenth and early fifteenth centuries saw political, social, and economic crises in France. The course will examine how Christine made a place for herself amidst personal and political turmoil. It will provide a broad canvas of late-medieval literary and historical transformations, including the stunning appearance of Joan of Arc. Study of Christine's works, of texts by other authors, and of manuscript illumination will give a rich sense of the period.

Prerequisites: Course taught in English; open to all students. Students who wish to obtain 300-level credit in French and have the necessary prerequisites must have the permission of the instructor.

MEDST-300-01 - Medieval Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Medieval Monasticism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(hist 351)
Preamble (for topics courses): Study of a specific period, topic, problem of inquiry, theme, or comparison of major figures or works of the medieval period in Europe and the Near East.
This survey of Western monasticism from its origins in the Egyptian desert to the mendicant orders of fourteenth-century Europe seeks to understand what motivates men and women to define perfection as abnegation of food, sex, wealth, success, and even laughter—all that we now consider valuable in life. Topics: fasting, virginity, voluntary poverty, monastic rules, and reform movements (e.g., Celtic, Benedictine, Cistercian, Franciscan, etc.). Also various saints' lives, mysticism, and women's spirituality. Course includes a stay at the Abbey of Regia Laudis.
Prerequisites: written application and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. C. Straw
Expected enrollment: 15

MEDST-300-01 - Medieval Studies - 2000-2001
(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Gender, Language, and Power, 1300-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; hist 351; womst 333 (02))
Preamble (for topics courses): Study of a specific period, topic, problem of inquiry, theme, or comparison of major figures or works of the medieval period in Europe and the Near East.
This course explores how some women expressed their understanding of the social, ideological, and political struggles between the early fourteenth and late seventeenth centuries. It asks what roles they played in the construction of public discourse and the state, the reshaping of the family, the reconstruction of Christianity, and the change from medieval feudal estates to early modern agrarian capitalism. Readings will include the works of such writers as Christine de Pisan, the Paston women, Anne Askew, Lady Mary Wroth, Elizabeth Carey, Lady Eleanor Davies, as well as records of Elizabethan coronation pageants, public ceremonies, household accounts, and diaries.
Prerequisites: written application and permission of instructor

Music

MUSIC-100-01 - Music - 2000-2001
(Fall) Basic Musicianship
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Explores the ways sound is organized into musical structures. Topics include the physical properties of sound; the basic vocabulary of Western music (scales, key signatures, intervals, triads, rhythm, meter); and an introduction to musical form and analysis. Includes extensive practice in music reading, sight singing, ear training, and critical listening.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 2 labs (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. Bonde
Section Instructors: 01 | 02 |

(Fall) Music In (and Out of) Context - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of ways in which music helps to shape, and is shaped by, the environments in which it is created, performed, and received. Previous topics included Stravinsky's Rite of Spring, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Kubrick's A Clockwork Orange. Absolutely no prior knowledge of music is necessary. Discussion/lab sections will teach some of the elements of the language of music as well as the ability to follow a musical score.

(Spring) Music In (and Out of) Context
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of ways in which music helps to shape, and is shaped by, the environments in which it is created, performed, and received. Topics this semester will draw on the works of various women composers from antiquity to the present day, including Hildegard von Bingen, Clara Schumann, Fanny Hensel, Mrs. H.H.A. Beach, Helen Hopekirk, and Tania Leon, among others. Compositions will be examined with emphasis on the changing roles of women composers and society's changing attitudes toward them. Absolutely no prior knowledge of music is necessary. Discussion/lab sessions will teach some of the elements of the language of music as well as the ability to follow a musical score.

MUSIC-103-01 - Music - 2000-2001
(Fall) History of Jazz
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will follow the origins and evolution of jazz from the late nineteenth century to the present, with emphases on prominent stylistic trends and significant individuals. Along with some analysis of the musical language, jazz employs, the music will be examined in its relation to the social contexts that helped produce and shape it. The ability to read music is not a requirement for this course.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Sanford
(Fall) Introduction to Composition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Introduces musical composition through the writing of original pieces, emphasizing twentieth-century techniques. Includes demonstrations of various musical instruments, readings of student compositions in class, and consideration of the "creative process." Includes a class recital of final compositions.
Prerequisites: Music 100 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Bonde
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Theory I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Studies basic diatonic theory, including triads and period forms. Includes part writing, analysis, ear training, and keyboard harmony.
Prerequisites: Music 100

Philosophy

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course we will examine such questions as: How is the mind related to the body? How are the categories of "race," gender, sexuality, and class relevant for our identities? What is freedom, and what is oppression? What should I do for others? Through contemporary and historical texts, we trace philosophical approaches to these questions.
Instructors: Ms. A. Curran, Mr. E. Eze
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC |

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is an introduction to ancient Greek philosophy from the pre-Socratic period through to the Hellenistic period. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the cosmos? What is death? What is the soul? What is happiness? Does fate rule our lives? Through discussion of primary texts in translation, as well as class "debates" between the different schools of thought, we will use the ancient Greeks to frame our own responses to these questions.

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Spinoza, Leibniz, Berkeley, Hume, and Kant. Focuses on the impact of modern scientific thought on the philosophical tradition's understanding of the place of the human being in the world. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, and the possibility of human freedom.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Does money make life meaningful? Would you rather be free or happy? Are friends necessary for a good life? Would you rather be a satisfied pig or a dissatisfied student? These questions illustrate some of the issues that will be raised by the ancient and modern ethical philosophers we shall explore in this course, looking at sources as varied as novels, canonical philosophical texts, and even children's stories. Our goal in this class is to respond to a Socratic insight, "the unexamined life is not worth living."

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 discussion (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Inness

PHIL-206-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course provides students with an introduction to philosophy based upon the philosophy of science. Questions to be discussed include: What is the nature of scientific reasoning? What are scientific theories, and how are they tested? How are scientific concepts and explanations used? The social aspects of scientific inquiry will be addressed, as will some feminist criticisms of science. The idea of scientific progress will also be given extended treatment.

Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of its associations and buzzwords.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell
PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(relig 226)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the works of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.
Prerequisites: Soph, Jr. Sr or fy with Religion 100
Instructors: Mr. J. Grayson

(Fall) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

PHIL-235-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral problems.
We will be discussing a variety of them. Possible topics include: What are the justified uses of genetic technology and cloning? How much medical resources should be devoted to alleviating infertility or saving significantly premature babies. We will also discuss other long-standing issues, such as euthanasia.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Barnes

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Nature/Culture/Values - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Is nature to be controlled through applying technological expertise? Or is Thoreau correct in his suggestion that we must immerse ourselves in nature to discover who we truly are? Might the value of nature extend beyond its utility for humans? Students have the opportunity to explore these questions, challenging widespread assumptions about nature, culture, and values.

PHIL-241-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Issues in Contemporary Moral Theory; Spring 2001: The Ethics of Architecture and Space
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course explores questions and texts relevant to contemporary ethical philosophy. Topics vary from year to year. What is the difference between an old European farmhouse and a contemporary shopping mall? Do buildings express ethical values? Do the places we occupy shape who we become? Is space something produced? These are some of the intriguing questions we shall explore in this course, reading texts by such authors as Thoreau, Heidegger, Bachelard, and Lefebvre.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 205 or per I
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Social and Political Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is a survey of influential works in the history of political thought, along with some contemporary works. Classical readings will include Plato, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Hume, Mill, and Marx. Modern authors will likely include Susan Okin, John Rawls, Marilyn Frye, Jean Hampton, and Allison Jagger. Our central question will be "What gives a government legitimate authority over its citizens?"
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The course examines philosophical themes in literature and also looks at philosophical questions about literature. Can literature give us knowledge about the world? How do we determine the meaning of a work of literature? Are the author's intentions relevant to interpretation? Can works of literature lead us morally astray? Is writing "raced?" Is gender relevant to reading literature? We will examine these issues through readings from philosophy, literature, cultural studies and literary criticism.
Instructors: Ms. A. Curran

PHIL-248-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
(Writing, speaking, and community-based learning course) This course is an introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race"? Does science construct "race"? What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Class readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Eze

PHIL-249-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Women and Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Do we all dress in drag? Should women strive to be less emotional? Is sexuality socially constructed? Is popular culture harmful to women? This course focuses on philosophy that explores women's understanding of reality. By studying the work of various twentieth-century feminist philosophers as well as films and stories, we shall explore a number of crucial philosophic concerns including truth, the self, and morality. Our aim is to become philosophers ourselves, thinking deeply about issues of fundamental importance to our lives.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Inness

PHIL-250-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: Fall 2000: African Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
African philosophy by its very existence is a response to a number of challenges, including the claim that true philosophy is universal and cannot be limited by geography, race, and culture, and the opinion that Africa may have belief systems and communal systems of thought but not proper philosophy. This course introduces students to the fields and functions of philosophy while exploring the historical meanings attached to Africa. The course shows how philosophers who think about Africa and African cultures are refashioning philosophy and philosophy's history and establishing in the process new traditions of thought that put into question uncritical concepts of both philosophy and Africa.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Eze

PHIL-250-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Spring 2001: Mind and Action
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Have you lost your mind? Where did you last see it? Indeed, does anyone have a mind (or a soul) in the first place? We'll be discussing at least the third of these questions, as well as other questions, such as: Do you and I see the same color when we both look at the grass, and how could we know? We say that our reasons cause our actions, but how do mental thoughts cause physical behavior? And if our actions are caused by something, then how can we have free will? Finally, even if your will is free, it is not always strong, but what does it mean to say that one has a weak will? After all, when you eat that last slice of cake, you are simply doing what you most want to do.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Barnes

PHIL-253-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Asian Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course introduces students to the traditional systems of thought in Asia, concentrating on Hinduism in India; Taoism in China; and Buddhism in China, India, and Japan, with occasional reference to other systems. Secondary and primary texts are read, along with some literature inspired by these philosophies. Cross-cultural explorations—and considerations of gender, caste, and elitism—are encouraged.

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Franz Kafka, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, Franz Fanon, and Samuel Beckett.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-257-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Continental Philosophy: Ideology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore and trace the development of the concept of ideology in the works of continental philosophers beginning with Marx. We will examine how "ideology" has been conceived and how the concept of ideology has functioned in different theoretical and social contexts. The course leads up to a consideration of claims in contemporary cultural theory that some notions of ideology must be abandoned. Readings may include works by Karl Marx, George Lukacs, Antonio Gramsci, Karl Mannheim, Louis Althusser, Theodor Adorno, Slavoj Zizek, and Seyla Benhabib.

PHIL-263-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy of Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Biology gives rise to many interesting philosophical questions. For example: How could there be evidence for evolution when we can't predict new species? How could adaptations be intended for some purpose? Are individuals selected by natural selection or could groups be selected too? How does evolution add light on human behavior, if at all? In this course we will consider these issues. Designed to be accessible to those with backgrounds in either philosophy or biology.
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Philosophy of Mind - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to the mind/body problem and the way that it shapes our view of ourselves, this course emphasizes work in cognitive science, an interdisciplinary approach that draws together artificial intelligence, neurobiology, linguistics, philosophy, and cognitive psychology. Readings are from these areas and from classical philosophical sources.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-270-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Epistemology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Issues in epistemology (the theory of knowledge) are fundamental to nearly all fields of study. This course uses both historical and contemporary texts to consider traditional questions in the theory of knowledge. Included are the following questions: Can I have knowledge of anything outside of my mind, for example, physical objects or other minds? Can we answer the skeptic's challenge that we are not justified in any of our beliefs? What is knowledge, and how does it differ from belief? Does our knowledge have a foundation or is it unavoidably circular? Is all knowledge derived from experience or is some innate?
PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Whorf, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Philosophy of Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
(Writing, speaking, and community-based learning course) Could a pile of bricks be art? Does life imitate art or does art imitate life? How can we know the real meaning of a work of art? Can art be a bad moral influence? Is "activist art" art? This class draws on a variety of media, including visual art, literature, film, dance, and music, to examine these questions. The class will also study the creation of a local "public art" statue in honor of onetime resident Sojourner Truth.

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy and Film: Fall 2000: Theory/Interpretation/Criticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film.
Is King Kong a racist film? Is film motion real or illusory? What makes a film interpretation philosophic? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. Readings will be drawn from a variety of sources: philosophy, film and cultural theory, film criticism. There will be weekly film screenings.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-290-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Meaning, Time, and Beauty: Philosophy in Dialogue
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Does life have meaning? Is time real? Must art be beautiful? Philosophers have had radically different solutions to these fundamental questions. The aim of this course is for students to develop their own answers to each of these questions through discussion and dialogue. Emphasis on developing oral and written skills. This course is recommended for all sophomores thinking of majors or minors in philosophy and is required for the major.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, 4 credits in department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell, Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-310-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Twentieth-Century Analytic Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to the history, themes, and methods of analytic philosophy, the dominant movement in twentieth-century English-speaking philosophy. Analytic philosophy uses logic and a careful analysis of language to solve philosophical problems. We will study most of the major figures of this movement, including Frege, Russell, Carnap, Ayer, Quine, Kripke, and Putnam. Topics addressed will include the logic of numerical identity, reference and existence, Quine's criticisms of logical positivism, and the meaning of necessity.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-315-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Topics in Ancient Greek Philosophy: Ancient Greeks on Perplexity - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
When the ancient Greek thinker Socrates reflected on the world around him, he found it to be a very puzzling place. What is death? What is the soul? What is the best life to live? Western philosophy came into existence to respond to these perplexities. Just how does philosophy do this? Who and what is a philosopher? Should philosophy resolve our perplexity or leave us perplexed? This class explores these questions with readings from Plato, Aristotle, and the Hellenistic philosophers.
Prerequisites: 8 units in the department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Curran

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This seminar attempts to investigate carefully the broad relationship between language and the world by focusing on issues of realism and idealism: Does language merely attach labels to things (and kinds of things) that exist independently of our thought? Or do we contribute to the construction of the world by developing a conceptual scheme for describing or representing it? The seminar will focus on the work of two pivotal figures in the philosophy of language: Wittgenstein and Chomsky.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

PHIL-347-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Developments in Feminist Philosophy: Rethinking the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What makes a body sexy? Is heterosexuality natural? What is "sex"? Feminist philosophy is in the midst of a revolutionary transformation. Rather than remaining content with the task of indicating the shortcomings of the philosophical canon, feminist philosophers are constructing their own distinctively feminist version of philosophy. In this course, we shall explore what contemporary feminist philosophers have written about the nature of sex and sexuality.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Inness

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Philosophy and Politics of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Nations and cultures are required to develop - hence the normativity in the terms "developed," "developing," and "underdeveloped" worlds. But is there a consensus about a universal model of human development which all nations must accept? Philosophy contributes to the debates by analyzing the problems of cultural universalism and cultural relativism. This course surveys development literatures in the past ten years in order to examine the discourses and practices of international development in developed countries of North America and Western Europe and in developing parts of South America, Africa, Asia, and Eastern Europe.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor or background in international relations or politics
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours 50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Eze

PHIL-352-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Nineteenth-Century Continental Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
During the nineteenth century, a distinctive mode of philosophizing arose, now known as Continental Philosophy, that placed the issue of human alienation squarely on the philosophic agenda. We will investigate how this topic achieved such importance through careful reading, analysis, and comparison of works by Hegel, Kierkegaard, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. We will explore how these philosophers understood the potentials of human life as well as how they saw society limiting them.
Prerequisites: 8 cr in D

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Spring) Philosophy of Art: Spring 2001: Art and the Emotions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues arising concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
This class examines the role of emotion in the interpretation and experience of art. Can a film or play be good and leave us feeling cold? Is an emotional response to art incompatible with a critical intellectual response to the work? Can our emotional responses to artworks lead us morally astray? Drawing on historical and contemporary authors we will study the role of emotion in our response to theater, film, music, literature, and visual art.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: Ms. A. Curran

PHIL-375-01 - Philosophy - 2000-2001
(Fall) Philosophy of Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Philosophers tend to see films as works of art, whereas film theorists tend to emphasize the economic, cultural, and ideological context of their production. This course will examine the differences between these two approaches to film, seeking to determine the distinctive aspects of each. Readings will be drawn from a variety of sources including contemporary philosophers of film, feminist philosophers and film theorists, and aestheticians.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or in film studies or permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHYS-102-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Galileo
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The life and work of Galileo will be explored both historically and scientifically, including much from his own writings. Classical background, contemporary controversies, and repercussions down to the present time will be included as time permits. Laboratory exercises will follow Galileo's own investigations, including such topics as vibrating strings, buoyancy, optics, astronomy, clocks, scaling laws in biology, motion, and the principle of relativity.

Instructors: Mr. M. Peterson
Section Instructors: 01 LAB
Expected enrollment: 12
PHYS-103-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Surveys some of the theories and methodologies of physics (including Newton's laws), particularly those involved with motion and waves. Develops the concepts of energy and momentum and their related conservation laws. Emphasizes the interplay between intuition, experiment, and analysis in the understanding of a physical theory.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

PHYS-216-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Heat, Waves, and Electromagnetism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Briefly introduces thermal physics and wave phenomena. Topics include electromagnetism, emphasizing fields and energy; electrostatics; electric circuits; magnetism; induction; and electromagnetic radiation.

Prerequisites: Physics 115, Math 202 or concurrent enrollment
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Hudgings
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

PHYS-231-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Techniques of Experimental Physics
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides training in the techniques employed in the construction of scientific equipment.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, major
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) for 8 weeks

PHYS-295-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | 03 LEC | 04 LEC | 05 LEC | 06 LEC |

Prerequisites: soph

PHYS-300-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Five College Advanced Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Each of the Five Colleges offers a set of advanced experimental modules in one or more of the areas of optics, atomic physics, nuclear physics, particle physics, statistical physics, and condensed-matter physics. Students may choose experiments from among those available at any of the Five Colleges. Credit is based on the number of modules completed, up to a maximum of 4 credits per semester and 8 credits total. The number of meetings depends on the module; modules are completed within one month.
Prerequisites: Physics 301 or 308 and permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. C. Sutton

PHYS-301-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Waves and Particles
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, X-ray and electron diffraction, the wave nature of particles, the uncertainty principle, and Schroedinger's equation in one dimension.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303, or concurrent enrollment
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. Peterson
PHYS-302-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The application of quantum mechanics to selected systems. The hydrogen atom and multi-electron atoms are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli exclusion principle. Principles developed are then applied to other systems, such as molecules, Bose and Fermi gases, condensed matter, nuclei and elementary particles, chosen according to the interests of the class and the instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Sutton

PHYS-303-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 or concurrent enrollment
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Sutton

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is a more detailed study of the techniques developed in 115 and 216, leading to an examination of the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations of mechanics.
Prerequisites: Physics 303
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics, such as special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, the algebra of vector spaces, solution of partial differential equations, Green's functions, integral transform methods, and probability and statistics. Topics selected according to class interests.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Hudgings

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.
Prerequisites: Physics 301, 315, or 324
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: S. Tewari

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Statistical Physics and Condensed Matter
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include: the development of the general problem of many-particle systems and the laws of thermodynamics from fundamental quantum and probability concepts; applications to ideal gases, paramagnetism, and black-body radiation; and an introduction to the physics of the solid state, including crystal structure, free electron and band theory of metals, lattice vibrations, and specific heats of solids.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes). One or both of courses 326 and 336 will normally be offered each year, depending on the needs and interests of the students.
Instructors: Ms. S. Tewari

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Advanced Physics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 302
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Quantum Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; physics and perturbative methods.
Prerequisites: Physics 302, 324 or 325
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes). One or both of courses 326 and 336 will normally be offered each year, depending on the needs and interests of the students.
Instructors: Ms. J. Hudgings

Politics
POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introductory Seminars in Politics: Blacks and Whites in the American Political Process - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars introduce students to politics through intensive study of a particular topic.
Analyzes the American political system in terms of black and white political activity over time, the effectiveness of various types of black and white political leadership, and styles of political action. Focuses on identifying social forces that serve to determine the relative positions of the races in American society; the impact of stereotypical legitimations on maintaining the status quo; the interrelationships of black political activity and the larger political system in the United States; prospects for change.
Instructors: Mr. W. Stewart

POLIT-101-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Fundamentals of Politics: Concepts and Controversies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course examines three contrasting conceptions of freedom and of what threatens or denies or enhances freedom, in light of selective controversies in American politics and society. We explore concepts related to "freedom" such as "community," "equality," and "the common good"; and we acquaint ourselves with competing political perspectives on contemporary America. We also consider some pressing issues such as the role of government and the future of public goods; the social limits to economic growth; the character and ramifications of economic inequality; racial, ethnic, and gender discrimination; and affirmative action.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); Conducted in small sections, with students submitting short essays throughout the semester.
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-104-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) American Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers an overview of the American political system and the theories of those who celebrate it and criticize it. Focuses on the institutions of American politics, including the Constitution, the presidency, Congress, the courts, parties and elections, interest groups, and movements seeking political change. Also includes a theoretical focus: a critical examination of the notions of liberalism, pluralism, and democracy that inform the practice of American politics.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Amy, Mr. C. Pyle, Mr. P. Smith
Section Instructors: 01 | 02 |

POLIT-106-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Comparative Politics
Introduces the study of comparative politics, with particular focus on democratization, economic development, globalization, states, and civil society. Comparison of political institutions, parties, gender systems, and national and ethnic conflicts. Relevant case studies.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. P. Gill
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-107-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Poverty in the United States
Credits/PE Units: 0; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Complex Organizations 107s)

(Spring) Introduction to African American and African Studies
(afram 101)
Instructors: Mr. P. Smith

(Fall) Nomads, Steppes, and Cities: Introduction to the Peoples and Cultures of Russia and Eurasia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(russst 131)

POLIT-112-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War
(Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others' presentations.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. V. Ferraro

POLIT-116-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) World Politics
(intrel 116)
This course is a survey of contending approaches to the study of conflict and cooperation in world politics. Examines key concepts—including balance of power, imperialism, collective security, deterrence, and interdependence—with historical examples ranging from the Peloponnesian War to the post-Cold War world. Analyzes the emerging world order.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. V. Ferraro, Ms. K. Khory, Mr. S. Hashmi

(Spring) Minorities and the Law - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Focuses on the interrelationship of law and the distribution of political power as they impinge on members of disadvantaged ethnic and racial minorities. Examines the legal status of Native Americans, African Americans, Chinese, Japanese, and Latino/Hispanic groups in historical perspective together with the impact of ethnic and racial stratification on the contemporary exercise of police and the operation of jails as social institutions. Assesses the contemporary status of minority groups under the U.S. Constitution in the areas of "equal protection" and "due process," and legislation purporting to eliminate racial discrimination in housing, banking, and employment.

POLIT-211-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Sophocles (Antigone), Plato (Apology, Crito, and Republic), Aristotle (Nicomachean Ethics and Politics), Augustine, Aquinas, Beza, and Mornay. Recurring issues include the obligation to obey and disobey, tyrannicide, the role that different kinds of knowledge or reason ought to play in politics, distributive justice, who ought to rule and who ought not to rule, alternative classifications of political societies, and the uses of arguments by analogy in politics.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-212-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Modern Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The political writings of Hobbes, Locke, Mill, Rousseau, Burke, Hegel, and Marx in the context of a sustained critique of liberal individualism (natural rights and utilitarianism) and an examination of radical egalitarian, conservative, and revolutionary alternatives. Recurring issues include law and liberty, the fragility of the good life, "human nature" arguments in politics, contrasting understandings or justifications of "private" property, and the claims by Hobbes, Rousseau, Hegel, and Marx, after having dismissed all predecessors as mistaken or superficial or both, to have refounded and then completed the enterprise of political theory.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-216-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Spring) United States, Israel, and the Arabs - *Not offered this year/term
(afram 213)
Offers a comparative study of selected political systems, emphasizing political conflict in southern Africa. Examines African participation in regional and universal international organizations.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Stewart

POLIT-221-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Marx and Marxism - *Not offered this year/term
(intrel 222)
On theoretical and practical questions at the heart of the nineteenth- and early twentieth-century Marxist tradition. These questions include the master/slave relation, the movement of history, the inner logic of capital, alienation and mystification, and the making of the revolutionary subject. While focusing on Marx's own writings, we also inspect Marx's intellectual debt to Hegel, as well as Lenin's and Luxemburg's intellectual and political debt to Marx.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks

POLIT-225-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Taxation and the Values of Democracy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive; comorg 220)
Instructors: Mr. J. Fox

POLIT-226-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Middle East Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

POLIT-233-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Invitation to Feminist Theory - *Not offered this year/term
(womst 233)
On the complex ties and tensions between sex, gender, and power. We explore the overlapping dualities of the feminine and the masculine, the private and the public, the home and the world. We examine different forms of power over the body; the ways gender and sexual identities reinforce or challenge the established order; and the historical forces behind upheavals in sexual relations. Finally, we probe the cultural determinants of "women's emancipation."
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks

POLIT-234-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Spring) The United States and Iran
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

POLIT-235-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Constitutional Law: The Federal System - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the effect of U.S. constitutional law on the distribution of power. Topics include judicial review and congressional control of court jurisdiction; the rise of federal regulation of the economy; and the relative powers of the president, Congress, and the courts in national emergencies, foreign relations, and war. Case method.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

POLIT-236-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Civil Liberties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the federal Constitution and civil liberties. Topics include the authority of the courts to read new rights into the Constitution; equal protection of the laws (and affirmative action) for racial minorities, women, and others; and freedom of expression. Emphasis on the appropriateness of different methods of interpreting law.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

(Spring) European Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores domestic, regional, and international political issues in contemporary Europe, including an introduction to political institutions, political participation, and public policy in several European states. Special attention to the European and democratic transformation in Central Europe.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department, Politics 106 recommended
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. P. Gill

POLIT-240-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) International Political Economy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the political nature of economic relations in the world today. A treatment of the most powerful actors in the international system includes discussion of the countries of Western Europe, Japan, and the United States; the role of the multinational corporations; and the possible integration of the underdeveloped countries into the system. These relations are examined from the perspective of theories of imperialism, liberal theories of economic development, and theories of collective goods.
Prerequisites: Politics 116 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. V. Ferraro

POLIT-244-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Urban Politics and Policies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the political character of contemporary American cities, giving particular attention to the relationship between urban politics and policy making. The course investigates the historical, structural, and ideological factors—economic development, race, ethnicity, gender, governmental forms, federal aid, pluralism—that constrain policy making and shape the sharing and contesting of urban space. Case studies demonstrate the interplay of political and economic factors in urban development.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Smith

(Spring) Policy Making in America: Congress and the Bureaucracy - *Not offered this year/term
(comorg 245)
This course examines power, politics, and policy making in both Congress and the federal bureaucracy. The section on Congress focuses on such questions as the following: How is policy made in Congress? Are there political biases in congressional procedures? Which political groups exert the most influence? How? In the section on bureaucracy, we consider such questions as the following: Why is there so much bureaucracy in the modern state? How do administrators make decisions? What are the sources of bureaucratic power? What is an "iron triangle?" Can bureaucracies be made more responsive and democratic?
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Amy

POLIT-246-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Spring) American Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores limited government, popular sovereignty, representative institutions, checks and balances, republicanism, liberty, equality, democracy, pluralism, liberalism, and conservatism, and how these concepts have developed during three centuries of American politics and in contrast to European thought. The focus is not on the writings of the "great thinkers" but on the "habits of thought" of the American people and on ideas implicit in laws and institutions that affect the allocation of authority and power within the constitutional order.
Prerequisites: Politics 104, or History 170, 171, or 270, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

POLIT-247-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) International Law
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents international norms and institutions for regulating conflict including civil strife, promoting economic well-being, protecting human rights, exploring and using outer space, and controlling exploitation and pollution of the oceans. International agreements, problems of lawmaking, interpretation, and compliance; nationality and the status of foreigners and their investments; the principle of self-determination. Interests of postcolonial states as they impinge on the international legal order.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Stewart

POLIT-250-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Politics of Black Urban Reform
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines how African Americans have shaped, and been shaped by, the modern American metropolis. Explores the impact of migration, residential segregation, changing economic conditions, and political incorporation on black urban life chances. Investigates the efforts of African Americans to deal with cities through organizations, movements, and traditions of black reform.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Smith II

POLIT-252-01 - Politics - 2000-2001
(Fall) Topics in Urban Studies - *Not offered this year/term
This course draws on both historical and contemporary sources to address critical issues and problems facing cities. Topics are organized around the following questions: How have cities come to take their shape and character over time? How are economic and social inequalities mapped onto the urban landscape? How are differences of race, class, and gender negotiated through urban institutions and community struggles? Assignments for the course will utilize empirical data to explore conflict and change in a local city through different historical periods. This course will be taught simultaneously at two campuses. Students will be taught alternately by faculty from both institutions.

(Spring) South Asian Politics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
A comparative study of the governments and politics of the region. Consideration of the history, social structure, and cultural heritage of the region establishes the context for understanding the political framework of the seven South Asian states. Each faces critical problems of nation and state building, political participation, economic development, and resource distribution. Although the emphasis is on political and economic development within these states, we also examine regional relations and the involvement of outside powers in regional affairs.

(Spring) Church and State in U.S. Politics
This course will trace the evolution of church/state doctrine in U.S. history. We will explore the multiple manifestations of church/state relations in a variety of texts. Through these we will attempt to gain a fuller understanding of the changing relationship between church and state, from the Puritan’s theocratic community, to the adoption of the First Amendment, to the multiple ways in which the "anti-establishment" and "free exercise" clauses of that Amendment have been understood and implemented over time. Rather than deciding whether or to what degree church and state should be separate, we will focus instead on the political processes by which we address that question.

(comorg 367)
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?
Prerequisites: Politics 104, 245, 246, or permission of instructor, 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

(Fall) Topics in European Politics: Fall 2000: Europe and the European Union

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Writing-intensive)

Europeans of both west and east are intensifying their efforts to broaden and deepen European integration at the same time that there has been a startling revival of ethnic conflict and nationalist agendas. Voters in Scotland and Wales elect their own parliaments while civil wars rage in the Balkans; Central Europeans struggle to solidify democratic nation-states in a global environment where some claim the nation-state may soon be obsolete. How are these centrifugal and centripetal forces interrelated? A research seminar.

Prerequisites: Pereq. 8 credits in Politics, including 106, 237, or permission of instructor;

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

(Spring) Religion and Political Thought

This course will explore the relationship between the spiritual, inner life and the social, collective life. It will question both the impact of religion on society and government, and the role of political thought in the evolution of religious belief. How has religion been used to serve the ends of the state, and vice versa? How was the relationship of Christianity to the state transformed by the Protestant reformation? What is the place of religion in the modern, pluralistic state? The course will address these issues through a wide range of texts, from the spiritual ruminations of Augustine to the psychoanalytic thought of Freud to the political theory of William Connolly.

This course provides an introduction to the skills necessary for becoming good producers and consumers of experimental psychological research. Students learn to develop research questions, survey related literature, design rigorous and ethically sound experiments, and collect, analyze, and interpret data. Students are introduced to computer use in psychology and learn to read and critique original empirical journal articles. The course culminates in an original, collaborative research project and poster presentation.

Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110, and 201
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 2 labs (2 hours); Note: Students must take statistics (Psychology 201) before enrolling in this course. Students should sign up for the lecture course and one lab section
Instructors: Ms. Binder

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB | 04 LAB |

PSYCH-201-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Statistical procedures are powerful tools for analyzing and interpreting findings and are necessary for accurate reading and understanding of research findings. This course provides an introduction to the most frequently encountered techniques for describing data and making inferences in psychological research. A variety of computer applications are used.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 4th hour, 1 lab (2 hours).
Students should sign up for the lecture course and ONE lab section
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

PSYCH-210-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Social Psychology
Our behavior and experience as human beings are profoundly affected by the social worlds in which we live. This course surveys a range of topics within social psychology. How is our view of ourselves partly shaped through our interactions with other people? How do people perceive and come to know one another? How do attitudes develop and change? Under what conditions do people conform to, or deviate from, social norms? Student participation in group projects is an important part of the course.
Prerequisites: Psych 100 or 110
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. E. Kieschnick

PSYCH-211-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Psychology of Women
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
A multicultural feminist analysis of women's lives. Emphasizing the diversity of women's experience across ethnicity, social class, and sexuality, this course assesses the adequacy and scope of existing psychological perspectives on women. Students will examine women's lives through essays, autobiographies, memoirs, and fictional works.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-212-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(comorg 212)
PSYCH-213-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Psychology of Racism
(Writing-intensive; afram 215)
Examines the psychological causes and emotional reality of racism as it appears in everyday life. Through lectures, readings, simulation exercises, group research projects, and extensive class discussion, students have the opportunity to explore the psychological impact of racism on both the oppressor and the oppressed.
Prerequisites: Permission of Instructor. Preference given to sophomores
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. B. Tatum
Expected enrollment: 25

PSYCH-220-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Theories of Personality: Spring 2001: Personality Through Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will introduce students to basic theories of personality (with greatest emphasis on Freud and Jung), using literary texts to exemplify structure and dynamics across a wide range of personality types.
Prerequisites: Psych 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. G. Hornstein, Ms. L. Edwards

PSYCH-230-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Developmental Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Studies changes in cognitive, social, and emotional functioning including theory and research that illuminate some central issues in characterizing these changes: the relative contributions of nature and nurture, the influence of the context on development, continuity versus discontinuity in development, the concept of stage. Includes observations at the Gorse Child Study Center.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

(Fall) Educational Psychology
(Writing-intensive; educ 233)
What do we learn? How do we learn? Why do we learn? In this course, we will study issues of learning, teaching, and motivation that are central to educational psychology. We will explore the shifting paradigms within educational psychology, multiple subject matter areas, (dis)continuities between classroom and home cultures, students' prior experiences, teachers as learners, ethnic and gender identity in the classroom, and learning in out-of-school settings. Requires a field component in a community-based setting.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and prepracticum (2-hour block per week)
Instructors: Ms. B. Packard

(educ 234)

PSYCH-236-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Adolescent Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course offers a comprehensive introduction to human development during adolescence. It considers historical and cultural forces that contribute to adolescence as a distinct segment of the life span. Contemporary problems confronting adolescents—such as crime, violence, gender, race, eating disorders, substance abuse, and depression—are also examined.
Prerequisites: Psych 100 or 110.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: N. Robinson

PSYCH-240-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Visual and Auditory Perception
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why does the moon on the horizon appear so much bigger than when it is overhead, even though its distance from Earth is always the same? Why can't some people distinguish red socks from green ones? How do Magic Eye pictures work? This course examines physiological and psychological approaches to the study of visual illusions, color vision, depth perception, and many other perceptual phenomena. Although the emphasis is on vision, hearing and touch will also be covered.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Cohen

PSYCH-241-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110 or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. K. Binder

PSYCH-250-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior
(neuro 250)
This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.
Prerequisites: Psych 100 and 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard
PSYCH-251-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
*(Fall) Comparative Psychology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. K. Hollis

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent study programs are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-300-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in History and Systems of Psychology: Fall 2000: What Is Psychology and How Did It Get to Be Like This?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
A seminar designed for senior psychology and neuroscience majors to probe the competing definitions and history of their discipline. Among topics to be considered (others to be suggested by seminar members) are these: the philosophic bases of psychology and its emergence as a distinct field of study; the persistence of dualisms (mind/brain, individual/social, nature/nurture); the struggle between quantitative and qualitative approaches to research; the fragmentation of the discipline in America after World War II; gender and the meaning of difference. Intensive reading of primary source materials and weekly writing assignments.
Prerequisites: Senior psychology or neuroscience major or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-306-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Projects in Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Working individually or in small groups with a faculty sponsor, students conduct original research. The project involves searching the pertinent literature, constructing hypotheses, planning the procedure, and collecting and analyzing data. All students present their research to the department orally at the end of the semester and submit a final written report.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 100, 201, 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 min.)
Instructors: Mr. J. Buckingham
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Spring 2001: The Self
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
How we think and feel about ourselves is an important determinant of how we think about and relate to other people. In this seminar, we will examine factors that influence these thoughts and feelings. We will also examine the role of the self in social interaction, regulation of goal-directed behavior, and maintenance of psychological well-being. Student discussion and presentation of research articles will be an important part of the course.
Prerequisites: Psych 210 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Buckingham
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-320-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Concepts of Abnormality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is a study of how maladaptive patterns of thought and action are understood from a psychological viewpoint. Behaviors ranging from neurotic to psychotic are studied in terms of underlying character structure and origins in childhood experience. Competing psychoanalytic theories are brought to bear on these phenomena. Approximately six feature films will be seen outside of class time.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 230 recommended; 8 credits in the department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

PSYCH-322-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Psychoanalytic Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This extensive examination of Freud’s systematic psychology focuses on phenomena such as the effects of early experience, continuity and change in development, and similarities among and differences between individuals. Readings include selections from Sigmund Freud’s earlier work and from the sweeping revisions of the 1920s. Criticisms and revisions of Freud are discussed. Throughout, ideas from contemporary psychoanalysis are compared and contrasted with those of Freud.
Prerequisites: Psychology 230, 220 recommended
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality Research: Qualitative Methods - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory course focuses on the study of individual lives and explores interviewing as a qualitative research strategy for the understanding of human experience. The course aims to provide a forum to discuss the study of individual lives within the social sciences, to consider interviewing techniques and qualitative methods of data analysis, and to provide students the opportunity to conduct a study of their own using this methodology.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, 220, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-324-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
*(Spring) Laboratory in Personality Research: Quantitative Methods - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Personality-relevant constructs such as attachment, adjustment, achievement motivation, communality, dominance, sociality, and others are usually studied among adults using questionnaires and inventories. A single large class research project will be conducted, with all students participating in all phases of the research.
Prerequisites: Psych 200 and 201, and either 210 or 230 and permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Next offered 2001-2002
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
*(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Prerequisites: Psychology 220 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. G. Hornstein.

*(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of research methods in developmental psychology, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques for studying young children, adolescents, and adults. It encourages the student to think about the basic issues of developmental psychology research: the conceptualization of problems, design of research, choice of methods to be used, and ethical questions that might arise. Students complete a major research project.
Prerequisites: Psych 200, 201, 230
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours)
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001

(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Child Study Center. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.
Prerequisites: Psych 230 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours), 2 labs (3 hours each) at Gorse Child Study Center
Instructors: Mrs. P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-332-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Laboratory in Psychological Assessment

Credits/PE Units: 8; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Historical development, theoretical bases, and critical evaluation of tests used to describe adult cognitive and personality functioning. Supervised practicum in test administration, scoring, and interpretation.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; and 230 or 320 and permission of instructor.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Note: students must submit a written request to be admitted to the course, outlining their satisfaction of the requirements for the course and their reasons for wanting to take it. They must also schedule an interview with the instructor during the advising week.

Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-337-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in Educational Psychology: Fall 2000: Motivation

(Speaking-intensive)

(Community-based learning course) What influences our desire to learn, to participate in certain activities, or to become particular kinds of people? We will examine the topic of "motivation" using several perspectives, across age levels and in various settings. Drawing from a variety of resources, including autobiographies, research studies, and videos, we will target our own motivation through reflection and action and the motivation of others through active coaching and mentoring in a community-based setting.

Prerequisites: Psychology 233 or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Requires a field component in a community-based site (2-hour block per week)

Instructors: Ms. B. Packard

Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-339-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: First Love: Attachment Theory and Research - *Not offered this year/term

The relationship with the infant's primary caretaker, usually the mother, develops in a complex way during the first year after birth. We will study what is now known about this relationship, how we know about its importance to the infant, and the variation in types of such relationships early in life. The importance of this first love for later development, in childhood, adolescence, and adult life will be considered. Methods of research will be emphasized and students will be expected to give class presentations.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 230 and permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Next offered fall 2001
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Fall 2000: Cognition and Literacy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course) Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.
Prerequisites: Psych 100, 201, 200 and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-349-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar in Perception and Cognition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Inhibition, as an explanatory construct, is clearly on the rise in cognitive psychology. As with most other "hot" topics, researchers who use this construct don't think about how the term inhibition as used by a cognitive psychologist might be similar to that term used by people who work on basic learning, sensory physiology, personality, or psychopathology. We will cover the ranges of uses of the term inhibition with obvious emphasis on how it is used today in cognitive psychology.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110, Psychology 200 and 201
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisite: Psychology 200, 250, and permission of instructor. Seniors and majors have priority.
Notes: 2 labs (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-351-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Laboratory in Animal Learning and Animal Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Several projects within such areas as feeding, aggression, reproduction, and learning are researched by students working in small groups. The course stresses the acquisition of research skills required for naturalistic and laboratory observation in the study of animal learning and behavior.
Prerequisite: Psychology 200
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: B. Thomas
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-352-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Laboratory in Sensory Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory course offers a detailed examination of selected topics in vision research, emphasizing the interrelations of anatomical, physiological, and behavioral data. Laboratory demonstrations and experiments introduce behavioral methods of study of sensory systems. Principles of function generally applicable to all sensory systems are discussed.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 240 or 250
Notes: 2 meetings, 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Cohen

PSYCH-359-01 - Psychology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior - *Not offered this year/term
Charpentier, a French scientist of the 1940s, unwittingly discovered a chemical that was to alter dramatically our understanding of madness. The chemical, chlorpromazine, has been widely used for the treatment of psychoses. Of interest is neuropsychopharmacology—the science and the technology. The principles of pharmacology are discussed and precede the examination of applications of the technology to psychopathology (for example, schizophrenia, depression, anxiety, and violent behavior).

Prerequisites: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333. Seniors and majors have priority.

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 12

This seminar will consider studies of behavioral and brain plasticity from infancy to adulthood. We will explore the role of experience in maintaining normal perceptual, cognitive, and social behavior during sensitive periods of development and the accompanying changes in brain structure and activity. We will examine evidence for brain plasticity when humans are deprived of sensory or social experience, when they learn or remember, when they recover from injuries to the brain, and when they are mentally ill.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Cohen
Expected enrollment: 15

This seminar is designed to promote communication of research activities among students in the department and to encourage students to share knowledge and resources in the solution of problems encountered in all stages of research. Graduate students and students engaged in independent research (Psychology/Neuroscience and Behavior 395) are encouraged to participate.

Notes: 1 meeting (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. K. Hollis

(Spring) Following Jesus: Investigation into the Ethical World of the New Testament
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
What does Jesus demand of his followers? What does he teach about the conduct of those who claim to love God, about their relationship to other people and to creation as a whole? This course will address primarily the teachings of Jesus recorded in the Gospels, both his direct teachings and his parables. Later in the term, the teaching of other New Testament texts, especially the letters of Paul, will be drawn into the discussion. We will assess the teachings of Jesus and his early followers as given in the first century and consider those teaching for the twenty-first century. Topics include use of money, engagement in war and politics, sexual relations, prejudice, and ecology.

(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
(phil 226)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the work of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.

(Fall) Spirituals and the Blues
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course examines and analyzes African American music as a primary textual source for understanding philosophical and religious language within that community. It addresses various questions: What are the central philosophical and religious themes expressed within the text? How are these themes reflected in the music? What is the intrinsic character of the spirituals and the blues? Is there such a thing as a "music of oppression?" In what way(s) does the black experience contribute to philosophical and religious understanding, as well as the use of language? What does this material suggest about the connections among art, literature, and experience?

(Spring) Seminar in New Testament Theology: Paul: Early Struggles between Jews and Gentiles
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar explores theological patterns in early Christianity as reflected in the literature of the New Testament. In any given semester, it is organized around a particular theme (e.g., eschatology, christology, ethics, soteriology) or it may be organized around a particular person or literature (such as Pauline thought, Johannine thought). Topics are announced in advance of the semester in which the course is to be given.
One of the earliest tensions within the nascent Christian community was the relationship between Christians of Jewish and those of Gentile origin. Response to this tension is a major feature of the letters of Paul, which tell the history of the earliest Christians and the story of how the Gentiles came to be included in the preaching mission of the Jesus movement. The question inevitably takes us with Paul on his personal journey from learned Jew to Christian preacher to advocate for Gentile Christians. To see how Paul resolved the conflicting claims of early Christians and Jews over the inheritance of Israel takes us ultimately to the relationship between Judaism and Christianity.

(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Theology: Fall 2000: Feminist Theologies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Writing-intensive; women's 333 (04))

Preamble (for topics courses): A study of various theological movements since the early 1960s: liberation, feminist, process, death of God, new-evangelical, new-oriental, charismatic religions, theological hermeneutics. This course will cover the genesis, historical development, and contemporary settings of these movements.

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Naomi Goldenberg, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Topics in the Study of Islam: Spring 2001: Muhammad in Muslim Tradition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Topics will include issues that have a particular bearing on Islamic religious traditions.
From the earliest Muslim biographies of the Prophet to the fiction of Salman Rushdie, portrayals of Muhammad offer us a window into the most important themes in Islamic thought. In this seminar we will inquire into the place of prophecy in Muslim thought and culture by analyzing historical sources for the life of Muhammad, traditional and revisionist biographies, and depictions of the Prophet in poetry, art, and literature. Topics include Muhammad as an historical problem, Muhammad through European eyes, representations of the Prophet in the traditions of Islamic theology, philosophy and mysticism, and portrayals of Muhammad in modern film and fiction.

(Fall) Images of Women in Russian Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In the first half of this course we will study portraits of women created by male writers who are central figures in the largely patriarchal literary canon. What are the limitations imposed on women in the male fictional worlds? What are the consequences of the conventions that inform the these texts? Do these gender patterns change over time? In the second half of the course we will resurvey the same time span from the perspective of women writers, their lives and their art. How is the alienation of women, their exclusion from the dominant literary tradition, expressed? What is different about women's conceptual and symbolic worlds? How do women's fictional concerns change over time?
Notes: 2-75 minute meetings.

(Fall) Texts and Contexts: Introduction to Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Through focus on a specific theme or idea, we will study a variety of texts and set them into the cultural context that marks them as distinctly Russian. Texts will be selected from a broad range of genres and sources. Introduction to basic bibliography and sources for research in Russian. Readings, discussions, short oral and written reports. Specific topics will vary with each section and semester. Taught in Russian.
Fall 2000: Sofia Petrowna.
Lydia Chukovskaya's brilliant short novel documents the tragedy of a family--and a nation--caught up in the purges of the 1930s. With irony and humor Chukovskaya draws a vivid portrait of the struggle between the individual and the state during the Stalinist era. We will supplement our reading of this novel with attention to its cultural context.

(Spring) Crime, Punishment . . . and Redemption?: The Great Crime Novels of Fyodor Dostoevsky
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Perhaps no other novelist has delved as deeply into the social, psychological, political, and metaphysical dimensions of criminal transgression as the great nineteenth-century Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky. This course will be devoted to reading his two great murder novels: Crime and Punishment (1866) and Brothers Karamazov (1879-80). Why should crime be a privileged avenue of access into the human interior? What does "psychology" really mean? Is it tied to a metaphysical aspect of human existence? We will also look at Dostoevsky's achievement in relation to other crime stories by Sophocles, Euripides, E.T.A. Hoffman, Arthur Conan Doyle, and Edgar Allen Poe.

(Fall) Masterworks of Russian and Soviet Cinema (1915-1995) - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Early Russian cinema (Eisenstein, Dovzhenko, Pudovkin, Vertov) created a revolutionary art form for the brave new world of communist Russia. That early inventiveness of language and form reverberated throughout the cinematic world. A survey of this rich film heritage gives strong visual resonance to the cataclysmic history of Russia and the Soviet Union (Kalatozov, Tarkovsky, Shepitko, Muratova) and to the creation of an independent and uncensored cinema in the post-Soviet world (Mamin, Bodrov, Lungin).

(Spring) Making the Chekhov Play - *Not offered this year/term
(thet 265)
Transcending the time and culture that gave them birth, Chekhov's plays pose fundamental questions about the human condition and resonate with a flawless mastery of theatrical art. How does Chekhov do that? What actually happens in a Chekhov play? How does it happen? To answer these questions we will study Chekhov's plays in performance, from The Seagull staged by the The Moscow Art Theatre, to the acclaimed film Vanya on 42nd Street. We will then compare how playwrights from Chekhov to Wendy Wasserstein have fashioned plays from his short stories. Finally, as a synthesis of our study of Chekhov's drama, each student will adapt a Chekhov story into a play.

(Spring) Studies in Russian Culture II: Spring 2001: Bulat Okudzhava
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A course designed for advanced students to increase their speaking and listening skills, solidify grammatical and idiomatic expressions, and increase their writing ability.
Singer, songwriter, poet, novelist, Bulat Okudzhava gives powerful voice to the preoccupations of his Russian homeland. At first "underground," and later legally, Okudzhava's songs and fiction speak of the mind and the heart, of dignity and courage in the face of adversity. They are full of humor and affection, even when their theme is war, which helps explain Okudzhava's enduring popularity. We will read his autobiographical novella Bud' zdorov, shkoliar, a few shorter works, including "Devushka moei mechty" and study several of his recorded songs. We will also watch documentary films about his life and work.

RUSSST-125-01 - Russian Studies - 2000-2001
(January) History, Politics and Culture in the Republic of Georgia
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Three weeks in the Republic of Georgia. Students will attend a series of lectures in English on historical and contemporary issues in Caucasia and will be allocated short internships according to their interests (e.g. NGOs, Parliament, hospitals, the Foreign Ministry). There will be a number of cultural excursions to historical sights with local guides. Students will stay with families and be expected to write a short report on their internship as well as a paper about some aspect of Caucasian history or politics. Meetings and events take place in the Republic of Georgia January 3-24. Fees: $1750 for travel and accommodation.

Instructors: Mr. M. Chkhenkeli

(Spring) The Romanovs: Triumph & Tragedy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them; in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important question about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

(Fall) Princesses, Revolutionaries, and Housewives: Women, Life, and Politics in Russia
Over the last 200 years, women in Russia have experienced massive changes in their lives and status. We will study four distinct periods in the women's movement in Russia: the first gains of limited emancipation in late tsarist Russia; the emergence of revolutionary heroines in the brave new world of Soviet Russia; the significant social status of women during World War II followed by the rapid collapse of feminism; and, finally, the "second feminist revolution," which began with the breakup of the Soviet Union in 1991. Texts include fiction, memoirs, film, and contemporary documents.

(Spring) Coming to America: Russian Baptists and Evangelical Christians in Western Massachusetts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course) Recent Russian Baptist and Evangelical Christian immigrants to western Massachusetts will be the focus of this course. All students will work with Russians studying at the Brookings School in Springfield. In addition, each student will meet regularly with immigrant families and will select an aspect of their experience to study as a semester project. Possible topics for projects include: religious persecution in the former Soviet Union; the Russian immigrant experience in America; personal histories; problems of bilingual education in local schools. Knowledge of Russian is helpful but not required.

(Spring) The Silk Road: From Silk and Gold to Oil and Telecommunications
Beginning in the Middle Ages, the Silk Road created strategic links between Europe and Asia, stimulated the transfer of technology, commerce, religion and art, and influenced migration patterns and interconnections between peoples of very different cultures. The recent revival of the Silk Road as an energy corridor is once again creating complex interactions between Russia and its pan-Eurasian neighbors, including Turkey, China, Iran, and the Central Asian states. We will study the past and present of the Silk Road with an eye to the future of this critical geographical intersection between cultures, economies, and states.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics, international relations, Russian studies or permission of instructor.

(Fall) Nationalism - *Not offered this year/term
(polit 308)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?
Prerequisites: Russian Studies 110 or 8 credits in politics, international relations, or Russian studies
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours); Next offered 2001-2002.

(Fall) The Impacts of War: The Russian Case
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Russia, unlike the United States, has frequently fought wars on its own soil. How does this affect society, change people's thinking, and influence those who govern? Through the lens of Russia at war, we will study the effects of war. We will explore the different impacts of victory and defeat; the connections between war, revolution and nationalism; the economic and social consequences of militarism; and the technological changes that war brings in its wake. We will study the Napoleonic wars (1805-15), the Crimean War (1853-55), the Russo-Japanese War (1904-05), the two World Wars (1914-18 and 1939-45), the war in Afghanistan (1979-89), and the ongoing conflict in Chechnya.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Politics, International Relations, Russian Studies or permission of instructor.

(Spring) Revolutions - *Not offered this year/term
(polit 350)
Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia's early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Fall) Social Structures, Social Roles, and the Self
Introduces the symbolic interactionist approach to the study of the relationship of individuals and society. This approach stresses the priority of interaction between the individual and social structure through role taking and the importance of the individual as an active participant in a social process. Students focus on selected social arrangements within modern industrial societies: those of class, work, school, and family.

(Spring) Issues in Sociology: Sociology of Popular Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will focus on significant issues in the field of sociology not covered in other courses in the sociology curriculum. Topics will vary.
One of the aspects of social life that we may take for granted is the realm of ‘popular culture.’ But what defines the sociological terrain of cultural studies? Does popular culture have political significance? In this class, we will discuss the powerful processes at work in distinguishing types of culture. By raising issues that cross class, racial, gender, and nationalistic boundaries, we will contest the idea of an ‘American’ culture.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Blackstone

SOCI-223-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Development of Social Thought
This course examines the origins and development of sociological theory in the nineteenth century. Focusing on the three most important representatives of the classical tradition in sociology—Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim—we consider in detail the ideas of each, compare their perspectives on emerging industrial society, and assess their contemporary significance.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr

SOCI-224-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Practicing Sociology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
This course in archival and field research methods uses a sociological lens to magnify issues in research design for nonquantitative data. In this community-based learning experience, students will use resources from their own "community" to describe and contextualize some central theoretical issues in sociology, such as: What is a community? How is a community different from a statistical population, an organization or an institution? How are communities represented, measured, and studied? There will be hands-on experience with primary documents from the Mount Holyoke Archives, as well as interview material that students will collect, transcribe, and analyze themselves.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology
Notes: Community-based Learning course; 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. E. Townsley

SOCI-225-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Survey Research and Data Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
Introducing the logic and methods of social research, this course is concerned with a review of social science methodology; questions of measurement, design, and general research strategies; and specific discussion of sample survey techniques and the logic and practice of data manipulation and statistical analysis.
Prerequisites: Prereq. soph, jr, sr and 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Social Inequality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is a critical survey of theoretical and empirical research on social inequality, stratification, and mobility. The central focus is class, race, and gender inequalities as they have changed during the post-World War II period in the United States (although we will look briefly at stratification regimes in other cultures and time periods). The concepts and methods of social stratification have wide application in sociology, economics, public policy, and administration contexts. As the course progresses, we will explore some of these applications as we wrestle with several policy issues currently confronting U.S. society.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. E. Townsley

SOCI-231-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Fall) Criminology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course emphasizes the historical and theoretical development of the various approaches to the study of crime. Crime represents a handle by which we hope to grasp the more enduring problems and issues of human behavior.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran

SOCI-234-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Social Problems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This is a course on the social construction of social problems. It devotes almost exclusive attention to how a "problem" becomes a social problem; examining how atypical cases become regarded as typical; how definitions are expanded to inflate statistics; and how claim makers and advocacy groups manipulate the media to market social problems and solutions to the public.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran

SOCI-236-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Social Structure of Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
(comorg 236)
This course examines the historical development of the modern bureaucratic organization and analyzes structural and individual factors affecting the operation of complex organizations within the context of modern society. Topics include formal and informal group processes, leadership and supervisory styles, decision-making theories and strategies, and the articulation of organizations to their larger social and cultural orders. Some focus on comparative studies.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Bruce

SOCI-240-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Collective Behavior and Social Movements
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course examines certain forms of human conduct that tend to escape the usual organizational analysis in the field of sociology because they appear to be exceptions to the order and consistency we often ascribe to social systems. We examine various forms of relatively ephemeral, unstructured, and large-scale collective behavior. Examples of these social interactions include demonstrations, riots, and social movements.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. K. Tucker

(Spring) Sociology of Gender - *Not offered this year/term
(Writing-intensive; womst 333 (04))
This course focuses on the social production of gender relationships across a range of institutional, interactional, intellectual, and cultural contexts. The syllabus is structured around selections from major social, political, economic, and cultural theories of gender in addition to several exemplary empirical studies. Weekly topics include kinship and socialization, the contemporary moral orders of masculinity and femininity, family organization, legal systems and nation-states, war and rape, and the gendered organization and deployment of "expert" authority in a range of social settings.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. E. Townsley

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology

SOCI-316-01 - Sociology - 2000-2001
(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Democracy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.
This course presents a sociological survey of contemporary debates about democracy and public life. Sociologists who study democracy are less interested in political decision-making and elections, and more concerned with how individuals and groups use "civil society" to resist subordination and demand inclusion. Topics will include public opinion formation and the public sphere, voluntary associations and civic engagement, social movements, racial crisis, multiculturalism, globalization, and the social role of mass media.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Jacobs

(Fall) The Sociology of Criminal Law and Justice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines sociologically the criminal justice system that has developed to process law violators. Special attention goes to the formation of criminal codes; the purpose of penal sanction; the development and operations of the police, including corruption and brutality; the adult and juvenile court system; the prison; the prison hospital; and the future of imprisonment and crime control.
Prerequisites: Sociology 231 and senior major in department, senior major in other social sciences with 8 credits in sociology, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran

(Spring) Contemporary Social Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this critical survey of the main theoretical perspectives in contemporary sociology, we focus specifically on structural functionalism, symbolic interactionism, critical theory, feminism, and postmodernism. Besides gaining familiarity with these alternative perspectives, we try to identify the main axes of theoretical dispute in sociology and discuss the problems of evaluating and resolving conflict between theories.
Prerequisites: Sociology 223, 8 credits in department, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. K. Tucker

(Spring) The Sociology of Medicine - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides a sociological interpretation of various aspects of the field of medicine. Topics include measurement of variations in rates of disease and their relationship to social characteristics and social structure, systems of care and hospitalization, and sociological theories concerning why people differ in their perception and response to illness and disease.
Prerequisites: sr major in social science or 8 credits in department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Spring) U.S. Latino/a Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
After centuries of invisibility and marginalization, Latino culture and literature exploded on the American scene in the 60s. Chicanos, Cubans, Nuyoricans, and lately Dominicans and Central Americans have all contributed to create a diversified body of literature characterized by its bilingualism, biculturalism, and hybridity. This course will center on how U.S. Latino/a literature bears witness to identity formation, self representation, and celebration of Latino culture and its people. It will explore a series of critical issues that define "latinidad" in the U.S. The course is taught in English.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr or fy with permission of department

(Fall) Colonial and Nineteenth-Century Latin American Literature: Fall 2000: Early Spanish American Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the colonial period and/or the nineteenth century. The study of the colonial era will focus on different aspects of the encounter between European and indigenous civilizations and the formation of a literary discourse (i.e., chronicles and the novel). The nineteenth-century component will explore the process of nation building through literature, the development of literary genres, and the emergence of women's voices. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
In this course you will become acquainted with the writing of some real wild women of colonial and postindependence Spanish America. We will look at a conquistadora (Isabel de Guevara); a transvestite nun (Catalina de Erauso); Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz, the greatest writer of the Colonial era; a mystic nun (Madre Castillo); a Cuban firebrand and poet (Gertrudis Gómez de Avellaneda); three friends in Lima (Juana Manuela Gorrini, Mercedes Cabello de Carbonera, Teresa González de Fanning); and Soledad Acosta de Samper from Colombia, who wrote a novel about a beautiful young woman who contracts leprosy.
Prerequisites: 235, 237, 244 or 246 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: N. Scott

SPAN-332-01 - Spanish - 2000-2001
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): In this course, students will study a topic drawn from Spanish literature of the twelfth through the seventeenth centuries. The period includes such prose masterpieces as El inocente Lucanor, Libro de buen amor, La Celestina, Amadís de Gaula, Lazarillo de Tormes, El buen soldier, and Don Quijote de la Mancha; the Poema de Mío Cid, the poetry of Berceo, Garcilaso de la Vega, and Góngora; the Spanish mystics Santa Teresa and San Juan de la Cruz; the theatre of Lope de Vega and Calderón de la Barca. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
This course will explore the political, religious, and cultural relations between Arabs, Jews, and Christians in early modern Spain. The topics we will study include the cultural sophistication of the Judeo-Arabic court society of Al-Andalus; the legal status of Jews, racial and cultural stereotyping as strategies for conversion or conquest, and the meaning and myths of coexistencia and reconquista. Our approach will be literary, historical, and legal. We will also consider other examples of relations between the three cultures, such as music, architecture, and food.
Prerequisites: 235, 237, 244 or 246, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. Romero-Díaz

(Fall) Contemporary Latin American Literature: Fall 2000: Contemporary Literature of the Hispanophone Caribbean
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernismo to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
Readings and critical exploration of the poetry and prose produced by selected contemporary writers from Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Dominican Republic. Those whose work we will have occasion to examine include Miguel Barnet, Rosario Ferré, Nicolás Guillén, Pedro Mir, Olga Nolla, Edgardo Rodríguez Julia, Viriato Sencién, Ana Lydia Vega, and Marcio Veloz Maggiolo.
Prerequisites: 235, 237, 244 or 246 or permission of instructor

(Fall) Spanish Literature: Twentieth Century: Fall 2000: Franco and After
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): In the twentieth century, various crises mark the history of Spain and profoundly affect its literature: the Spanish American War (1898), the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939), Franco’s dictatorship, and the transition to democracy. This course will cover the literary genres and aesthetic movements of these historical moments. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.

The study of selected works of narrative fiction (novel and short story) produced in the period following the Spanish Civil War, including examples of the neorealism of the 1950s, the novel of dictatorship, the female bildungsroman, the boom in writing by women, the rise of detective fiction, and innovative fictional representations of various aspects of contemporary Spanish life.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on a specific writer, movement, genre, theme, or literary phenomenon. Students will do close textual readings, prepare reports, do extensive research, and write substantial papers. The seminar will challenge students to demonstrate an understanding of literary analysis, critical skills, and theoretical approaches at an advanced level. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.

This course explores the different ways in which regional landscapes and borderlands become personal and political markers of identity during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Readings will include texts by authors from Argentina, Colombia, Venezuela, and Mexico.

STAT-140-01 - Statistics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables, analysis of variance, and regression.
Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Gifford

(Spring) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.
Prerequisites: Interdepartmental 100 or any 100-level course in mathematics or statistics
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Gifford

(Fall) Independent Study - *Not offered this year/term

(Writing-intensive; biol 334)
Notes: After spring 2000, this course will be offered in alternate years.

(Fall) Applied Regression Methods
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course includes methods for choosing, fitting, evaluating, and comparing statistical models; introduces statistical inference; and analyzes data sets taken from research projects in the natural, physical, and social sciences.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211 or any statistics course
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes); offered every fall
Instructors: Ms. J. Gifford
STAT-341-01 - Statistics - 2000-2001
(Spring) Linear Statistical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Mathematical concepts from linear algebra and n-dimensional Euclidean geometry, together with statistical concepts of estimation and hypothesis testing, are developed and used to construct a unifying theory for two classes of applied methods: analysis of variance and regression analysis. The theory is developed in three stages: least squares and orthogonal projections; moment assumptions and the Gauss-Markov theorem; and the normal distribution and F-tests.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, Statistics 240 and 340
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes); offered alternate years
Instructors: The department

(Fall) Probability
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course presents methods of calculating probabilities based on symmetry and counting; mathematical models for rare events and for measurement errors (the Poisson and normal distributions); the central limit theorem and laws of large numbers; random walks and Markov chains; and computer simulation and computer study of concepts from probability theory.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; Offered at Smith College fall 2000
Instructors: Y. Chen

(Spring) Mathematical Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to the mathematical theory of statistics and to the application of that theory to the real world. Topics include probability, random variables, special distributions, introduction to estimation of parameters, and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, 203 and 342 recommended
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered every spring semester alternately at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; Offered at Smith College spring 2001
Instructors: Mr. Y. Chen

(Spring) Seminar in Statistics and Scientific Research
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is a study of statistical principles and practice as applied to the analysis of a variety of research projects in the natural, physical, and social sciences. It emphasizes the factors that influence the choice of statistical methods and evaluates these methods as tools for research.
Prerequisites: Statistics 340 or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes); Offered alternate years
Instructors: Mr. G. Cobb

Theatre Arts
THEAT-100-01 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001
(Fall) Introduction to Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
A study of how theatre represents and interprets social reality. Topics include key examples of performance art throughout history and across cultures. Students will learn firsthand the work of directors, actors, and designers by studying about and taking part in current productions in the department.
Close analytical readings of play texts and critical/theoretical essays will be supplemented by workshops in the various stagecrafts, by attending live and recorded performances, and by staging students' own theatrical work.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and crew
Instructors: Ms. A. Smith-Howard

(Spring) Introduction to Performance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to performance through physical, vocal, and improvisational exercises selected from a variety of actor-training methods. Students learn traditional approaches to acting from Russia and the United States and contemporary, experimental methods from France and Japan. The curriculum includes critiques of both professional and college theatre productions, selected readings, and a final performance project.
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Devlin
Expected enrollment: 18

(January) The Professional Audition: Getting Cast
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
With a working professional, you will choose, prepare and present two contrasting theatre audition monologues that are right for you. Rehearsed in class, these monologues become the final project and will be presented and critiqued before professional casting directors. Student evaluations also include assuming the role of casting director in order to provide a written critique of each other's work. Additional topics to be covered include photos, resumes, interviews, cold readings, and callbacks.
Prerequisites: .

THEAT-206-01 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001
(Spring) Introduction to Screenwriting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Screenwriting is visual storytelling. This course provides the student with the necessary tools for script construction and storytelling in pictures. An emphasis on structure and character will prepare the student for the step outline of a feature-length film. Writing exercises and script analysis are included.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (three hours)

(January) Broadway and Beyond: A short survey of practice, policies and productions of current theatre in New York.
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Focusing its attention on a small cross-section of current offerings in New York, this course will consider the current state of theatre in America — practice, policies and production. Our preliminary work on campus will consist of lecture and discussion sessions on dramatic theory and textual analysis.

Following this introduction, we will spend four (4) days in New York City attending a range of performances: The Metropolitan Opera, a Broadway musical, an off-Broadway production and a fringe performance. Our theatre visits will be complimented by back-stage tours, discussion sessions with designers, producers and other artists, as well as visits to major art galleries/museums.

Prerequisites: 100 and permission of instructor/interview

Notes: Field trip component - New York City. Students required to cover own expenses - housing accommodations, food, price of theatre tickets and transportation.

Instructors: Ms. A. Smith-Howard

THEAT-210-01 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001

(Fall) Acting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

A study of acting, with an emphasis on the actor's relaxation, focus of attention, concentration, imagination, projection, sense memory, characterization, and sense of play. Concentrating on a contemporary understanding of the Stanislavski method, students will apply their techniques to monologues, scenes, and performance projects. Readings will be selected from works by Uta Hagen, Michael Shurtleff, and others.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours) and crew; $5 lab fee

(Speaking-intensive)

An interdisciplinary course for actors, musicians, dancers, directors, and visual artists interested in performance and in performing. Using dramatic texts, music, dance, and the visual arts, students will develop a series of performances for the local community. Performances will take place in theatre and nontheatre spaces, including the library, Blanchard, and the Village Commons.

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours)

Instructors: Ms. J. Devlin

THEAT-211-02 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001

(Fall) Topics in Performance: Acting Shakespeare: Fall 2000: Acting Shakespeare
An introduction to Shakespearean performance, studying both historical and recent approaches. Class will culminate in informal staging of selected scenes.

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); crew; limited enrollment
Instructors: Ms. A. Smith-Howard

(Fall) Scene Design: Visual Dramaturgy and Theatrical Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of design as an integral part of the dramaturgical process. Students will learn how to read a text from a designer's perspective and also to develop a designer’s conceptual process of thinking. The course is based on research developed by the Latin American School of Theater (Mexico), and looks at the social implications of theater as an instrument to develop and change the social environment. An interdisciplinary approach integrating visual art, dance and body expression, textual analysis, and anthropological research.
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours) and crew
Instructors: Mr. L. Soto
Expected enrollment: 10

(Spring) Lighting Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Study of light as a design medium using color, intensity, distribution, and movement. Formulation of lighting designs with plots, sections, and control charts. Practical application in theatre productions.
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); crew;
NOTE: Purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: Mr. J. Howard
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-228-01 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001
(Fall) Topics in Design: Scene Painting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

THEAT-265-01 - Theatre Arts - 2000-2001
(Spring) Making the Chekhov Play - *Not offered this year/term
Transcending the time and culture that gave them birth, Chekhov’s plays pose fundamental questions about the human condition and resonate with a flawless mastery of theatrical art. How does Chekhov do that? What actually happens in a Chekhov play? How does it happen? To answer these questions we will study Chekhov’s plays in performance, from The Seagull staged by the Moscow Art Theatre, to the acclaimed film Vanya on 42nd Street. We will then compare how playwrights, from Chekhov to Wendy Wasserstein, have fashioned plays from his short stories. Finally, as a synthesis of our study of Chekhov’s drama, each student will adapt a Chekhov story into a play.

(Fall) Theatre Practicum: Yerma

Credits/PE Units: 2-4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): A laboratory course based on the creation and performance of a department production, involving dramaturgical research and rehearsal, the intersection of theory and practice. Each practicum will include various production-related responsibilities—developing scripts, designing and preparing the show, participating in the cast or crew, writing postproduction critiques. The nature of the practicum (and the amount of credit) will depend on each faculty director’s particular intentions for a given production. Rehearsal and production of Lorca’s Yerma. Presented November 2000.

(Spring) Women in History: African Women's Work 1880-1980

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Writing-intensive; hist 296)

Transformations in gendered divisions of labor and in women's access to resources are fundamental to understanding contemporary African societies. We explore how African women have created contexts for productivity using strategies such as marriage, pledged female friendship, and voluntary dependency. We investigate the loss of women's work of governing in the colonial period, and the consequences for women's wealth and productivity of incorporation into a global market economy. Texts include recorded life histories, autobiography, fiction, and film, and primary sources such as the testimony of participants in the Ibo Women's War of 1929.

(Fall) Women in History: U.S. Women Since 1890
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines the history of women and the cultural construction of gender in the United States since the end of the last century. How have class, race, and ethnicity shaped the history of women's work, debates over female sexuality, women's attempts at social change, and representations of women in cultural and political contexts? In what ways has gender contributed to racial consciousness and class formation in the United States? Using primary and secondary material, we will examine women's experiences in the realms of work, politics, sexuality, and reproduction.

(Fall) Women in History: Women, Spirituality, and Power: A Cross-Cultural Comparison
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
How are the changing and varied experiences of women related to notions of the sacred? How are the very distinctions between "women" and "men" affected by such notions? In what ways is spirituality a source of power for women or a limit to their power? Case studies include European women during the transition from medieval to modern society, African women during early encounters with European Christians as well as in the period after "independence," and women of the African diaspora.

(Fall) Feminist Approaches to Literature: Women Writers: Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winnemucca.
Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor

(Spring) Interdisciplinary Seminar: Feminist and Queer Theories

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Questions of power, agency, structure, materiality, bodies, subjectivities, and discursive practices have been central to both feminist and queer theories. We will focus on these issues, exploring the tensions between poststructuralist, Marxist, and materialist approaches. In analyzing contemporary theories of gender and sexuality, we will pay particular attention to issues of race, class, ethnicity, nationality, and globalization. Key problematics include the nature and operation of power, the relationship between materiality and discourse and between theory and practice.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Women's Studies beyond WS 101 or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

(Spring) Interdisciplinary Seminar: Gender, Language and Power

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; hist 351)

This course explores how women expressed, in writing and by other actions, their understanding of the social, ideological, and political struggles in which they were engaged between the early fourteenth and late seventeenth centuries. It asks what roles they played in the construction of public discourse and the state, the reshaping of the family, the reconstruction of Christianity, and the change from medieval feudal estates to early modern agrarian capitalism. Readings will include works by such writers as Christine de Pisan, the Paston women, Anne Askew, Lady Mary Wroth, Elizabeth Carey, Lady Eleanor Davies, as well as records of Elizabethan coronation pageants and public ceremonies.

Prerequisites: written application and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

WOMST-333-04 - Women's Studies - 2000-2001
(Fall) Interdisciplinary Seminar: Feminist Theologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive; relig 325)
Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Naomi Goldenberg, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

A theoretical examination of the cultural economy of race. Investigations center on the ways African Americans practically develop and contest "meaning" through their own readings of and uses for cultural products. Three problematics will be emphasized: representation, subjectivity, social inequality. What is at stake in various representations of blackness? What are the material effects of those representations? What are the social inequalities produced by race, gender, class, etc. processes? How are inequalities regulated and resisted in and through culture? What are the changing historical conditions under which agents produce (are produced by) race knowledges and black cultural politics?

Examines the causes of and proposed solutions to "the Negro problem" in post-Civil War American social policy. Focuses on the life, work, and legacies of DuBois. Drawing on domestic and diasporic fictional and nonfictional depictions of black life in the "DuBoisian century" the course considers different responses to his 1903 question, "How does it feel to be a problem?" Review of theories and policies targeting blacks and their environment allows us to critique black modernity as "exceptional" and/or "damaged", assess the changing role of black intellectuals in society, evaluate "race theory" and consider dominant and marginal attempts to analyze and overcome the "color line" in America.

(Fall) The Caribbean in American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
(English 370f)
This seminar uses the interdisciplinary methods of American studies to explore the role migrants from the English-speaking Caribbean have played in the United States. We will examine Caribbeans' images of themselves in literature and popular culture to understand the various ways they have (re)defined what it means to be "American" and "African American" in the twentieth century. A major theme will be the intersections of race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality in Caribbean American identity. North American perceptions and constructions of the Caribbean will also be central. Readings include Lorde, Hughes, Hurston, Marshall, Cliff.

(Spring) Perspectives in American Studies: Crisscrossing the Americas: Comparative Perspectives on Cultures of the United States and Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Latin American Studies 202s; Spanish L351s)
Preamble (for topics courses): Drawing on the diverse fields represented by the American studies faculty, this course introduces students to a variety of perspectives and approaches to the study of American culture and society. How can a multiplicity of perspectives enrich our understanding of the United States both in the past and the present? What questions do individual disciplines ask about a culture? How does the project of American studies build on these questions to forge its own mode of interdisciplinary inquiry? These are some of the questions raised by this team-taught course. What is "America"? ¿Qué es "América"? Does the name refer to a nation, a continent, or a hemisphere of diverse nations, peoples, and cultures? Who defines the meaning of "América" and in what context? This course explores the history and consequences of these conflicting meanings, from Latin American, Caribbean, and North American perspectives. Within a comparative approach, the course focuses on topics such as colonial encounters, slavery and race, nation and empire, and mass media stereotypes. Using films, literature, documents, and images, we discuss the construction of ethnic, national, and transnational identities across borders as these issues resonate today.

(Spring) Exploring Asian Americas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The concept of "Asian America" developed in the 1960s in conjunction with the broader civil rights movement. Since the 1960s, new migration has dramatically changed the composition of Asian America, and new theoretical perspectives challenge us to reexamine the concept itself. While a clear division between Asia and the U.S. was inherent in the original concept of Asian America, more recent theories of hybridity, diaspora, and transnationalism blur such clear-cut boundaries around national, ethnic, and racial formations. In this course, we will examine these empirical changes in migration and ethnic identification as well as the shifts in theoretical paradigms for understanding them.

(Fall) Anthropology of Modern Japan - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as mysterious and fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will read key texts in Japanese studies, some of which attempt to bridge this gap by presenting Japanese people as individuals with understandable motivations for their behavior, others of which attempt at a more general level to explicate underlying social structures, psychology, religion, and aesthetics. We will then turn to several more recent anthropological studies of different aspects of Japanese society.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Asian Studies 237f)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines anthropological debates about matriarchy cross-culturally. In dialogue with feminist scholarship and using ethnographic studies, we ask: are the female warrior burials of the Eurasian Steppes or the female soldiers of Dahomey signs of ancient matriarchal societies? We delve into contemporary social organization with primatological studies of bonobos and new ethnographies of matriarchies in Indonesia and Papua New Guinea. We will assess the validity of these works to understand gender roles cross-culturally.

(Fall) Issues In Anthropology: Cultures of the Goddess in South Asia: Temples, Texts, Traditions, and Televisions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Asian Studies 214s)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
This course explores the culture of devotion to the divine feminine in South Asia. Using a variety of ethnographic sources, we look at human relations with the Goddess in her diverse guises, including fierce and peaceful aspects, HIV and smallpox Goddesses, androgynous Goddesses, and incarnate living Goddesses. Currently, Goddesses are found in a variety of places: from the Himalayas to Sri Lanka, from temples to texts, from snake cults to sacrifices, from villages to cities, from television to comic books. We examine how South Asians relate to the Goddess and how worship provides a framework for making meaning, organizing the cosmos, and both reinforcing and undermining the social order.

(Spring) Language in Culture and Society - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Every society is held together by systems of interpersonal and institutional communication. This course examines the nature of communication codes, including those based on language (speaking and writing) and those based on visual images (art, advertising, television). To understand communication in its social and historical dimensions, we study the psychological and cultural impact of media revolutions and then look at ways communication systems manipulate individual consciousness. Illustrative examples are drawn from Western and non-Western societies.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Health in the Andes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
This seminar uses a biocultural approach to understanding contemporary human health and disease in the Andean region of South America. Topics include high altitude adaptations, ethnomedical systems, patients and healers and the intersections of biomedicine and traditional healing, women's health and birthing practices, environmental health, the politics of water, and disease control efforts. Using ethnographic texts and films, we will explore current debates in public health and anthropology about how to assess, describe, and improve the health of Andean populations.
Prerequisites: junior or senior status and 8 credits in anthropology, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Feminist Ethnographies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
Is there a feminist ethnography? Is this a methodological or theoretical question? Does it refer to relationships between ethnographers and their subjects/collaborators? Or is it an issue of application? Perhaps it means "woman centered?" Or, maybe, this is a purely speculative endeavor. And, what does any of this have to do with contemporary anthropological fieldwork, theory, and writing? Through the works and words of anthropologists, feminists, cultural studies scholars, and activists, this course explores these topics (and their inherent power relations) in past and present ethnographies in a variety of cross-cultural contexts.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in anthropology or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Thompson

ANTHR-316-03 - Anthropology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Manufacturing Knowledge
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course covers significant problems in the field of anthropology, with group meetings and reports.
The facts of experimental science, the decisions reached in corporate board rooms, the experience of bureaucratic indifference, or the difficulties with the transfer of new technologies are some of the topics explored in this seminar on the micropolitics of truth claims in "modern" and usually complex settings. We will explore the scholarly debates that have emerged in the social studies of science and technology and take a close look at how information is actually produced, disseminated, and used in a world increasingly dominated by international organizations and mediated through information technologies.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in anthropology or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Lass
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Anthropology and Sexualities
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Women's Studies 333F (01))
This seminar focuses on contemporary anthropological scholarship concerned with the varieties of sexual expression in diverse cultural settings. We will read ethnographic accounts of sexual ideologies and the politics and practices of sexuality in Brazil, Japan, Native North America, India, and elsewhere. We will examine anthropological theories of sexuality with an emphasis on contemporary issues, including performance theory, "third gender" theories, sexual identity formulation, and techniques used by various societies to discipline the body.
Prerequisites: senior major in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Morgan

(Fall) Anthropology of History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this seminar we question the distinction between myth and history and consider the possibility that historical consciousness is not dependent on the invention of writing. We then examine the relationships among literacy, art, nationalism, and the invention of tradition and test the limits of ethnohistory. Finally, we look at the ways in which relics, museums, and tourism have all helped make history--as fact, experience, or commodity--possible.

(Spring) Bringing It All Back Home: Anthropology of Contemporary United States and Britain - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Anthropologists are increasingly recognizing the epistemological and political difficulties of regarding non-Western peoples as "others"--as objects for social scientific consumption. Some have responded by focusing attention on their own sociocultural circumstances. This course examines both the theoretical basis of the anthropological turn from "exotic" fieldwork and the results of the new research about the United States. Topics include youth subcultures, class, race, and suburban and inner-city lives.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Image and Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture from ancient times to the present. In six focused units, we will explore themes of power and faith, life and death, and person and society as they were expressed visually in the arts of ancient Greece, medieval France, Islamic Asia, Renaissance Italy, modern Europe, and America. Lectures will be complemented by small discussion sections, which will sometimes be held in the College's art museum.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Staiti, Ms. B. Bergmann, Mr. M. Davis

(Fall) Arts of Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Asian Studies 107f)
This course introduces the rich and varied artistic heritage of East and South Asia. Themes explored include landscape painting and gardens; narrative literature; women and society; and the religious art and iconography of Buddhism and Hinduism in the context of the major cultural traditions of India, China, and Japan.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Sinha

ARTH-110-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Fall 2001: Films in the Aura of Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The best films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination in part because of their artistry and the way they tell stories visually. This seminar closely examines a selection of those films from around the world that can be considered serious art and understood as events taking place in particular cultures. Among them are Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Pierrot le Fou, The Bicycle Thief, Days of Heaven, Ugetsu, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, and Heat.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Staiti

ARTH-211-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Classics 102s)
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

ARTH-216-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Art and Spectacle in Ancient Rome
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Much of Roman art and architecture was created to enhance and commemorate religious, political, and social rituals. The course explores themes of triumph, marriage, death, and sport by discussing buildings and objects within their public and private contexts of action. Beginning with Rome’s legendary origins in the eighth century B.C.E. and ending with its demise as a capital in the fourth century C.E., the course focuses on an especially creative period, the formation of the empire under Augustus.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. B. Bergmann
ARTH-222-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Age of the Cathedrals: The Art of Gothic Europe, 1100-1500
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A historical survey of the architecture, monumental sculpture, and painting of France, England, Germany, and Italy. The course concentrates on the cathedral as a total work of art, on the meaning of its imagery, and on the role of art in contemporary society.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Davis

ARTH-230-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Italian Renaissance Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey explores the development of painting, sculpture, and architecture in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy with emphasis on Florence, Rome, and Venice as discrete cultural contexts for the work of Botticelli, Leonardo, Raphael, Michelangelo, and Titian.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Varriano

ARTH-241-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nineteenth-Century European Art: Neoclassicism to Impressionism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces major developments in European painting during the periods traditionally designated by the terms neoclassicism, romanticism, realism, and impressionism. Through a chronological survey focusing primarily on French art, it explores themes such as the training and production practices of artists; the exhibition and criticism of art; the notion of modernity; artists’ engagement with history, the exotic, nature, domesticity, and urban experience; the role of gender and class in the formulation of artistic subjects; and the relationship between painting and other pictorial media such as printmaking and photography.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Hellman

ARTH-243-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; fy only with permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Davis

ARTH-250-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) American Painting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey of eighteenth-, nineteenth-, and early twentieth-century art emphasizes the work of individual artists and the cultural environments in which art was produced and viewed. Topics include the colonial portrait, landscape painting, images of American life, impressionism, expatriatism, modernism, and the machine age. Copley, Cole, Church, Eakins, Homer, Whistler, Sargent, Cassatt, O’Keeffe, and Hopper are some of the artists to be discussed.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Fall 2001: Art and Architecture in Eighteenth Century Europe

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course examines the nature of visual and spatial representation during a crucial but often overlooked century in the history of European art. Focusing on England, France, Germany, and Italy, it emphasizes the ways in which images and buildings both contributed to and were shaped by aesthetic, social, political, and intellectual preoccupations. Particular attention will be paid to themes such as the training of artists; modes of engagement with antiquity; the relationships between art, industry, and commerce; the role of art in the French revolution and the cultural transformation known as the Enlightenment; and the development of art criticism and art history as discursive practices.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. M. Hellman

ARTH-300-01 - Art History - 2001-2002

(Fall) Senior Seminar in Theory and Interpretation

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar is intended for senior art majors and other upper-level students with a strong background in art history. The course will address critical issues related to the creation and interpretation of works of art, through history and across cultures. Social history, gender, and postmodern discourses will be considered along with traditional theories of iconography, connoisseurship, and formalism.

Prerequisites: sr with 8 credits in art history or permission of instructors

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. M. Hellman, Mr. A. Sinha

ARTH-301-01 - Art History - 2001-2002

(Fall) Topics in Art History: Fall 2001: Utopia: Visionary Art, Architecture, and Theory

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course examines utopia in modern art and architecture. Expressed in buildings and plans, literature and film, utopian schemes offer projections about life in the future as well as harsh criticisms of the present. We explore how real and imagined spatial constructions can affect the relationship of the individual to the community. Looking at actual attempts at utopian communities (Shaker villages, the kibbutz, or Walt Disney's Celebration, Florida) reveals the different approaches to design and the relationship of theory to practice. Our discussion concludes with contemporary sensations of dystopia and chaos and considers whether utopian design is applicable to the twenty-first century.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. K. Koehler

(Spring) Seminar in Baroque Art: Spring 2002: Versailles: From the Sun King to Marie Antoinette
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar explores the architecture, decoration, landscaping, social usage, and symbolic meaning of the palace of Versailles between the mid-17th century and the French Revolution. Particular attention will be paid to the ways in which the changing design of the palace and its grounds during the reigns of Louis XIV, Louis XV, and Louis XVI both expressed and actively shaped the persona of the king, the relationships between the king and his family, mistresses, and courtiers, and the cultural and political image of France itself.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Hellman

ARTh-342-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Critical Texts in American Art, 1945-Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar will consider both the intersections and divergences between critical writing and artistic statements that pertain to American art from 1945 to the present. By examining key texts such as Clement Greenberg's "Avant-garde and Kitsch," and Harold Rosenberg's "American Action Painters" along with interviews and essays by Jackson Pollock, Mark Rothko and Barnett Newman, and others, a complex rather than unified history and telling of post-war American art unfolds, one that stratifies art and its reception for the past five decades or so.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. D. Balken

ARTh-350-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in American Art: Fall 2001: The Gilded Age
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar focuses on issues of class, gender, power, and progress in American art and culture between the Centennial and World War I. Painting, sculpture, architecture, and some literature will be used to study the themes of the era: country life, reform, the "new woman," illusion, the metropolis, the future, nostalgia, and individualism. Among the works of art to be encountered are the paintings of Winslow Homer, Thomas Eakins, and George Bellows, the architecture of Frank Lloyd Wright, the photography of Jacob Riis, and the World's Fair of 1893.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Staiti

ARTh-350-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Seminar in American Art: Spring 2002: Frank Lloyd Wright
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The Robie House, "Falling Water," the Guggenheim Museum: Frank Lloyd Wright designed some of the most charismatic buildings in America in a career that spanned seven decades. This seminar will explore Wright's work through analysis of major buildings and investigation of his writings and life. We will consider the personal, philosophical, and aesthetic factors that shaped Wright's vision and the impact of his theories and designs on our concepts of the built environment in America.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. Davis

ARTh-360-01 - Art History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Seminar in Asian Art: Spring 2002: Indian Films
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar will examine a selection of films in relation to India's urban culture in the twentieth century. We will screen old and new films, those belonging to the commercial industry--the Bollywood--and those made by directors who remain outside that industry. Our challenge will be to develop possible ways to understand the many facets of film culture in India. Using critical essays, class discussions, and research, we will explore the relationship of film to national politics, examine the global circulation of Indian films, analyze how films reflect the desires and fantasies of their audiences, and evaluate India's place in the history of world cinema.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor; 8 credits in art history or film studies, including Film Studies 201, Introduction to Film or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Sinha

Students who have had previous training in Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, or Sanskrit should arrange for placement in appropriate courses by contacting Mr. Jiyad for Arabic, Ms. Wang for Chinese, Ms. Nemoto for Japanese and Ms. Peterson for Sanskrit.

Introduction to Sanskrit, the classical language of India. Related to other Indo-European languages (including English) and the ancestor of most of the 16 major Indian languages (e.g., Hindi), Sanskrit is the medium of the literary classics, as well as of the texts of the Hindu, Buddhist, and Jain religions.
The first-semester course covers Sanskrit grammar. The emphasis is on sentence construction, recognition and production of grammatical forms, and translation. Attention is also given to script, chanting, and pronunciation. The goal is proficiency in reading sentences and sustained passages in Sanskrit, in preparation for reading authentic texts in the second semester.

Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes); credit is contingent upon completion of both the first and second semesters
Instructors: Ms. I. Peterson

ASIANS 142: Elementary Sanskrit II

(Spring) Topics in Astronomy: Astronomy and Public Policy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Astronomical issues that impact our society will be explored in a seminar format. The approach for each issue will be to pose a question based on a body of scientific evidence with potential consequences for human society. The answers to these questions will be investigated both on scientific and societal grounds. Scientific issues include the potential threat of collisions between the earth and other solar system bodies and the potential existence of extraterrestrial life.

Topics for Spring 2002: Killer Asteroids and the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence.

Prerequisites: one course in a physical science; enrollment by permission of instructor (send e-mail to sedwards@smith.edu)

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours); Smith College

Instructors: Ms. S. Edwards, Mr. S. Hameed

The answers to these questions will be investigated both on scientific and societal grounds. Scientific issues include the potential threat of collisions between the earth and other solar system bodies and the potential existence of extraterrestrial life.

Topic for Spring 2002: Could life exist elsewhere in the universe? This course examines astronomical and biological constraints that likely govern the possibility of extraterrestrial life.

Prerequisites: one course in a physical science

Notes: 2 meetings (80 minutes); Smith College

Instructors: Mr. E. Rubenstein

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(geol. 223f)
An introductory course for physical science minors and majors. Topics include origin and evolution of the planets; planetary orbits, rotation, and precession; gravitational and tidal interactions; asteroids, comets, and planetary rings; meteorites; interiors and atmospheres of the Jovian and terrestrial planets; geology, tectonics, and mineralogy of the terrestrial planets and satellites; new data from Mars Pathfinder, Lunar Surveyor, and current NASA missions.

Prerequisites: any physical science course

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. D. Dyar

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Planetary Science - Not offered this year/term

ASTR-224-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Stellar Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

The basic observational properties of stars will be explored in an experimental format relying on both telescopic observations and computer programming exercises. No previous computer programming experience is required.

Prerequisites: Physics 115, Math 101 or equivalent

Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours and 45 minutes). Offered at Smith during fall 2002.

Instructors: Ms. S. Edwards

Instructors: The department

ASTR-226-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Cosmology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at cosmological models and the relationship between models and observable parameters. Topics in current astronomy that bear upon cosmological problems, including background electromagnetic radiation, nucleosynthesis, dating methods, determinations of the mean density of the universe and the Hubble constant, and tests of gravitational theories. Discussion of some questions concerning the foundations of cosmology and its future as a science.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101 and a physical science
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Offered at UMass during fall 2002.
Instructors: Mr. G. Greenstein

ASTR-242-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Light, the Universe, and Everything
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Interdepartmental 242s)
Prerequisites: Interdepartmental 142/Astronomy 142
Notes: continuation of Interdepartmental 142/Astronomy 142, replacing Astronomy 101 for 2001-2003
Instructors: Mr. T. Dennis, Ms. K. Dorfman, Mr. R. Zissell

ASTR-330-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Devoted each year to a particular topic or current research interest, this course will commence with a few lectures in which an observational and a theoretical problem is laid out, but then quickly move to a seminar format. In class discussions a set of problems will be formulated, each designed to illuminate a significant aspect of the topic at hand. The problems will be significant in difficulty and broad in scope: their solution, worked out individually and in class discussion, will constitute the real work of the course. Students will gain experience in both oral and written presentation.
Topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: Astronomy 224, 351 or 352
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

ASTR-335-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Modern Astrophysics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
How do astronomers determine the nature and extent of the universe? Following the theme of the "Cosmic Distance Ladder," we explore how our understanding of astrophysics allows us to evaluate the size of the observable universe. We begin with direct distance determinations in the solar system and nearby stars. We then move on to spectroscopic distances of stars; star counts and the structure of our Galaxy; Cepheid variables and the distances of galaxies; the Hubble Law and large scale structure in the universe; quasars and the Lyman-alpha forest.
Prerequisites: Physics 115 and one prior physics or astronomy course at the 200-level or above
Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Schneider

ASTR-337-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Observational Techniques in Infrared and Optical Astronomy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the techniques of gathering and analyzing astronomical data, particularly in the optical and infrared. Telescope design and optics; instrumentation for imaging, photometry, and spectroscopy; astronomical detectors; computer graphics and image processing; error analysis and curve fitting; data analysis and astrophysical interpretation, emphasizing globular clusters.
Prerequisites: Astronomy 224-225, Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 evening lab (3 hour)
Instructors: The department

ASTR-338-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Techniques of Radio Astronomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to radio astronomy equipment, techniques, and the nature of cosmic radio sources. Radio receiver and antenna theory; radio flux, brightness temperature, and the transfer of radio radiation in cosmic sources; effect of noise, sensitivity, bandwidth, and antenna efficiency; techniques of beam switching, interferometry, and aperture synthesis; basic types of radio astronomical sources: ionized plasmas, masers, recombination and hyperfine transitions; nonthermal sources; applications to the sun, interstellar clouds, and extragalactic objects.
Prerequisites: two semesters of physics and two semesters of calculus
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and observation sessions
Instructors: R. Snell

ASTR-351-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Astrophysics I: Stars and Stellar Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course looks at physical principles governing the properties of stars, their formation and evolution: radiation laws and the determination of stellar temperatures and luminosities; Newton's laws and the determination of stellar masses; hydrostatic equilibrium and the thermodynamics of gas and radiation; nuclear fusion and stellar energy generation; physics of degenerate matter and the evolution of stars to white dwarfs, neutron stars, or black holes; nucleosynthesis in supernova explosions; dynamics of mass transfer in binary systems; viscous accretion disks in star formation and X-ray binaries.
Prerequisites: 2 300-level physics courses
Notes: 3 meetings (80 minutes)
Instructors: The department

ASTR-352-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Astrophysics II: Galaxies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course applies physics to the understanding of astronomical phenomena. Physical processes in the gaseous interstellar medium; photoionization in HII regions and planetary nebulae; shocks in supernova remnants and stellar jets; energy balance in molecular clouds. Dynamics of stellar systems; star clusters and the virial theorem; galaxy rotation and the presence of dark matter in the universe; spiral density waves. Quasars and active galactic nuclei: synchrotron radiation; accretion disks, supermassive black holes.
Prerequisites: 2 300-level physics courses
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: J. Lowenthal

ASTR-395-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Instructors: The department

ASTR-395-01 - Astronomy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Instructors: The department

Biochemistry

BIOCH-295-01 - Biochemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.
Notes: Students conducting an independent lab research project for credit in a department, program, or lab covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training.
Instructors: The department

BIOCH-311-01 - Biochemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 311f; Chemistry 311f)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways.
Biological Sciences

BIOL-100-A - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Science of Life - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Description to come; refer to course catalogue supplement for more information.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); sign up in biology office or via email at biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | X1 LAB | X2 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Advances in Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Will serve as a general introductory biology course for Biological Science majors as well as non-majors. This course is acceptable as an alternative to Biol. 150 and will count as a prerequisite for Biol. 200.
Recent advances in Biotechnology have led to dramatic changes in our understanding of living things and in our ability to analyze and manipulate genetic information. These developments in research and technology will be used as a vehicle to explore basic biological processes. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.
Notes: lecture enrollment limited to 24 students per section; lab enrollment limited to 12 students per section
Instructors: Mr. C. Woodard, Ms. S. Stranford
Section Instructors: A LEC | A1 LAB | A2 LAB | B LEC | B1 LAB | B2 LAB |

BIOL-150-A - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Form and Function: Physiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Living on earth poses physical and chemical challenges for organisms. In this section, we will study how living organisms (mostly animals but also plants) meet the challenges of respiration, communication, sensing the world, reproduction, and the coordination of complex functions in the body.
Notes: A liberal arts introduction to biology, open to any student; required for potential majors in biology, biochemistry, and neuroscience
Instructors: Ms. S. Barry, Ms. S. Bacon

BIOL-150-B - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Form and Function: Biodiversity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
An overview of the designs of organisms, connected to size, shape, and the materials they use to build their bodies. We will examine the plants, animals, and microbes on campus, and use them to provide a context for the model organisms used in biological research (such as fruit flies, zebrafish, yeast, and corn).
Notes: A liberal arts introduction to biology, open to any student; required for potential majors in biology, biochemistry, and neuroscience
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin, Ms. D. Kelly

BIOL-200-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Introduction to Biology II: How Organisms Develop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchin), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 150
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. R. Fink, Ms. A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | 02 LEC | X1 LAB | X2 LAB | X3 LAB | X4 LAB | X5 LAB |

BIOL-206-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Local Flora
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Offers plant identification and natural history, emphasizing trees, native and introduced, and wildflowers. On- and off-campus field trips.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), including field trips; sign up in biology office or via email at biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period
Instructors: Ms. A. Frary
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-208-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Ornithology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Introduces the study of birds, especially the local avian fauna, emphasizing fieldwork.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours), including field trips
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Offers a comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance, and population genetics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 150 and 200, Chemistry 101
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Knight, Mr. C. Woodard

BIOL-213-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Ecology and Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course looks at the complexity of the living world—the ecological interactions and mechanisms of evolutionary change within a population, and between species, in the context of the physical world that organisms have helped to shape; the nature of biological diversity and the origin of adaptations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 150, 200, and 210/orES200
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin

BIOL-220-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Undertakes an integrated study of the processes and structures that define life at the cellular level. Considers the molecular and supramolecular organization of membranes, cytoskeleton, and organelles in the context of the physical and chemical principles governing their assembly, and their participation in phenomena such as the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, transport, motility, signal transduction, and maintenance of cytoplasmic organization. The laboratory illustrates and analyzes these phenomena through selected optical and biochemical approaches.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 150 and 200, Chemistry 202
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. F. DeToma, Ms. S. Gruber

BIOL-239-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Sense of Biological Signals
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 239)
How do you analyze sound waves, electrocardiograms, brain waves, and patterns of nerve impulses? We will record many of these signals ourselves. To interpret the recordings, we will introduce methods of signal analysis such as Fourier analysis and autocorrelation.
Prerequisites: Calculus MA 101 or MA 151
Notes: 1 two-hour meeting to include lecture/lab
Instructors: Ms. S. Barry, Mr. M. Peterson, Ms. M. Robinson
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph and permission of instructor
Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College’s chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training. See department for requirements.

BIOL-295-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: soph and permission of instructor
Notes: Note: Any student conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College’s chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Instructors: The department

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 meeting (50 minutes); 1 3-hour lab
Instructors: Mr. J. Knight
Section Instructors: 01 LEC | X1 LAB |

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement (Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interactions in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formations. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210 with 220 strongly recommended
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. R. Fink
Section Instructors: X1 LAB | X2 LAB |

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (Writing-intensive; History 361s (01))
This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin's theory of evolution--his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended. This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement in biology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213, History 151, 161, or 255, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LEC |

BIOL-309-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Vertebrate Biology - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A study of vertebrates with emphasis on structural adaptations for functions such as feeding and locomotion, and on natural history. Some morphology and field identification involved in laboratory work.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith
BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals, in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove, and disprove, biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 213
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin
Section Instructors: 01 LEC  | X1 LAB  |

BIOL-311-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 311f; Chemistry 311f)
Instructors: Ms. E. Wiley

BIOL-314-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 314s; Chemistry 314s)
Instructors: Ms. E. Wiley

BIOL-315-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Ethology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies the biology of animal behavior, including both invertebrates and vertebrates. Topics include sense organs and communication; circadian and other rhythms; orientation and navigation; and the evolution and ecology of social systems. Laboratories involve an individual project.
Prerequisites: two of the following: Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213, or permission of instructor
Instructors: Ms. S. Smith

BIOL-316-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Scanning Electron Microscopy
(Geology 316f)
Includes theory and operation of the scanning electron microscope and preparation of biological and geological materials for observation. The versatile use of the microscope will be emphasized and will include low magnification, high resolution, and back scattered (reflected) electron modes of operation. Energy dispersive X-ray microanalysis will be introduced. Students may elect the course for 4 credits for further experience in energy dispersive microanalysis, including quantitative analysis and element mapping.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor and a 200-level course in biological sciences or geology. Geology 220 if electing 4-credit option
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours), 1 lab (3 hours), 1 additional meeting (50 minutes) for 4-credit option; satisfies Science and Math II-B requirements if taken for 4 credits
Instructors: Ms. S. Gruber, Ms. M. Rice

BIOL-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) An Introduction to Immunology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course presents the elements of immunochemistry and immunobiology. Topics include the anatomy, genetics, and biochemistry of the immune response; antibody structures and functions; the allergic response; autoimmune diseases; and the applications of immunology to research and clinical problems.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Stranford
BIOL-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Studies with the Electron Microscope
Credits/PE Units: 2-4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduction to the transmission electron microscope and its potential contributions to the biological sciences, through semester-long investigations of students' choosing. Projects may range from the molecular to the cellular/organismal levels and draw upon a variety of preparation techniques. Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently. The 2-credit option will focus primarily on the laboratory component. The 4-credit option will emphasize, in addition, discussion of relevant literature.
Prerequisites: 220 or permission of instructor
Instructors: Ms. S. Gruber
Section Instructors: 01 LAB

BIOL-321-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Chemical Communication in Vertebrates
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In this course we listen in on chemical conversations between cells, organs in the body, and individuals in a species. From classical endocrine hormones to neurotransmitters to pheromones, we will look at signalling molecules, the cells that send them, the receptor and membrane physiology that make their messages interpretable, and the social or physiological contexts in which they are important.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in biology
Notes: 1 3-hour meeting. Student must sign up in the biology office or email biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period; preference will be given to seniors and juniors.
Instructors: Ms. S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 SEM | X1 LAB
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-321-02 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Comparative Vertebrate Anatomy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course examines vertebrate anatomy from a broad comparative perspective. We will dissect a wide range of vertebrates, from fish to mammals, and focus on their specific anatomical adaptations for support, movement, food processing, internal transport, sensing and reproduction.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 213
Notes: 1 1-hour meeting; 1 1-hour discussion, 1 3-hour lab. Students must sign up for course in biology office or email biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period; preference will be given to seniors and juniors.
Instructors: Ms. D. Kelly
Section Instructors: 01 LEC
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-03 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Conference Courses in Biology: Comparative Biomechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
How do organisms cope with their physical environment? This course examines the mechanical engineering of organisms, focusing on properties of biological materials, their arrangement into working structures, and ways that organisms live in air and water.
Prerequisites: Biol 213, or calculus or physics
Notes: 2 75-minute meetings, 1 3-hr lab. 4 credits towards the Biology major
Instructors: Mrs. D. Kelly
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-03 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Benthic Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Ninety-eight percent of known marine species are associated with the benthos (on the bottom), and recent studies of deep sea sediments suggest that some benthic communities may be among the oldest and most diverse on earth. In this course, students will conduct literature reviews and prepare presentations on community properties, species interactions, benthic-pelagic coupling, biogeochemistry, and groundfish and shellfish resources.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213
Notes: Sign up in the Biology Office or e-mail biology@mtholyoke.edu during the advising period.
Instructors: Mr. K. Moody
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-321-04 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Animal Cloning: Past, Present and Future
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
When Dolly the lamb was born, the world changed. Developmental biologists have been cloning organisms for decades—why the intense emotion over a sheep? This course will focus on the history of animal cloning, exploring both conceptual and technical advances over time. We will look at the current state of mammalian cloning, including the national debate about human stem cell research, reading from primary literature. While the emphasis will be on the biological phenomena involved, we will also discuss the legal, ethical and moral implications of human cloning.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 220
Notes: Sign up in the Biology Office or e-mail biology@mtholyoke.edu during advising period listing biology courses taken.
Instructors: Ms. R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-323-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Physiology and Anatomy of Plants: Growth Regulation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of the higher plant, its structure and organization, including factors influencing the placement of leaves, branching, and the production of flowers. Emphasizes recent advances concerning mode of action of plant growth regulators, protoplast and tissue culture, photomorphogenesis, and molecular controls.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210, 213 or 220
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Frary

BIOL-324-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Plant Biology--Symbiosis
Credits/PE Units: 2-4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This seminar course will highlight a recurring theme in which photosynthetic land plants and algae associate with animal, fungal, or bacterial partners, usually to the benefit of both. We will survey the spectrum of such existing relationships, and consider how ancient endosymbioses may have given rise to chloroplasts.
Prerequisites: Biol. 200 and one additional 200-level Biology course
Notes: 2 credits - 1 meeting (2 hours); 4 credits - 1 meeting (2 hours) plus additional work, unarranged
Instructors: Mr. P. Gruber

BIOL-325-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Evolutionary Survey of the Plant Kingdom - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of the following: Biological Sciences 200, 210, 213, or 220, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); Offered alternate years
Instructors: Ms. A. Frary

BIOL-327-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Microbiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 and either 210 or 213
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Knight
Section Instructors: X1 LAB  | X2 LAB |
BIOL-328-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Regulatory and Integrative Human Physiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A consideration of the physiological processes involved in the control of human body functions. We will study the mechanisms for regulating individual organ systems and how these mechanisms respond to changing needs of the individual. Our examination of the physiological controls will include an analysis of the underlying cellular and molecular processes that drive the mechanisms and integrate the activities of the different systems.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 220
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours); lab enrollment limited to 12 students per section
Instructors: Ms. S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ecology Seminar - *Not offered this year/term
(Write-intensive)
Patterns of distribution and abundance of organisms and ecosystem structure and function are studied using experimental approaches, mathematics, and computer modeling. Readings and data from the primary scientific literature, along with results of student-run field and laboratory experiments will be used to develop and explore predictive models of ecological phenomena.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213 and one course in calculus or Statistics 240, and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Ellison
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Fall) Macroevolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Although whole organisms are emphasized, there are several excursions into molecular biology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 213 and 210
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Rachootin.

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Neurobiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Topics include the physiology of nerve and muscle, synaptic transmission, the human brain, the senses, and movement control.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in chemistry or physics, and Biological Sciences 200, and 210 or 220
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Barry
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

BIOL-334-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
(Spring) Biostatistics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement (Statistics 334)
Introduction to statistical techniques used most commonly in biological and medical sciences. Emphasis will be on hypothesis testing, regression, analysis of variance, statistical power, comparisons of confidence intervals, time-series analysis, spatial analysis, and Bayesian inference. Examples and datasets will be drawn from student independent projects.
Prerequisites: one of the following: Biological Sciences 210, 213, 331, calculus, Statistics 240, and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours); Offered alternate years
Instructors: Mr. A. Ellison

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002
Spring Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics

This course will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (particularly breast cancer), animal development, and programmed cell death. We will also take a detailed look at the science behind the Human Genome Project. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles, and we will often use a case-method approach.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. C. Woodard

---

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002

(Fall) Independent Study

Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Prerequisites: Jr, Sr, and permission of department; must complete application in department office

Notes: Note: See safety training restrictions, Biological Sciences 295fs, above

Instructors: The department

BIOL-397-01 - Biological Sciences - 2001-2002

(Spring) Teaching Biology: Middle and Secondary School

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Teacher Licensure: Students interested in pursuing licensure in middle and secondary schools can combine the major with a minor in education. For specific requirements, refer to "Teacher Licensure" in this catalogue and consult Ms. Lawrence in the psychology and education department. Licensure also requires a passing score on the literacy and specific subject area sections of the Massachusetts Educators Certification Test. In the case of biology, this includes cells and cell theory, characteristics or organisms, human biology, principles of heredity and the evolution of life, matter and energy in ecosystems.

CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002

(Fall) General Chemistry I

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. M. Campbell

Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002

(Spring) General Chemistry I

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.

Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

Instructors: The department

CHEM-200-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Environmental Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is designed to use chemical principles to understand issues surrounding our environment. The concepts of bonding, equilibria, acidity, basic organic chemistry, and reaction mechanisms will be applied to such topics as water pollution and acid rain, fossil fuels and alternative energy sources, atmospheric chemistry including smog formation and stratospheric ozone depletion, and herbicides and pesticides in the environment.
Laboratory work will concentrate on both qualitative and quantitative methods of analysis.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 biweekly lab (3 hours); Offered once every three years
Instructors: The department

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds.
Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 (or Chemistry 150 for Classes 2001-2002) or PI, and Mathematics 101 (or concurrently)
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. D. Cotter
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds.
Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 (or Chemistry 150 for Classes 2001-2002) or PI, and Mathematics 101 (or concurrently)
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: The department

CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry; nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions; the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers; and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis; practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography; molecular modeling; and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101, advanced placement, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Browne
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB | 04 LAB |

CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Laboratory work includes synthesis; practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography; molecular modeling; and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 101, advanced placement, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), lab schedule to be announced
Instructors: The department
CHEM-210-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Biotechnology: Science, Culture, and Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
The development of a molecular understanding of the basis of life, and the application of this knowledge to alter and engineer living organisms, is an ongoing scientific revolution with far-reaching social and ethical considerations. This course introduces the science of the biotechnology revolution within its historical and social context; a description of the fundamental chemistry and molecular biology underlying these technologies is integrated with exploration of their social and ethical impacts. Topics to be covered include the structure of DNA, the human genome project, genetic engineering in agriculture, and cloning.
Prerequisites: Chem 101 or Bio 151 or Unity of Science or permission of instructor
Notes: Offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur

CHEM-295-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training
Instructors: The department

CHEM-295-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: 2 lectures (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), 1 lab (4 hours)
Instructors: Mr. D. Hamilton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: 2 lectures (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes), lab schedule to be announced
Instructors: Ms. S. Browne

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Chemical Thermodynamics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Chemistry 202, Mathematics 101, Physics 103 and 204, or 115

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. W. Chen

CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 311f; Biological Sciences 311f)

CHEM-314-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 314s; Biological Sciences 314s)

CHEM-315-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Experimental Methods I
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Experimental Methods I uses extended, research-style projects to introduce advanced techniques in physical measurement (e.g., high-resolution spectroscopy, calorimetry, electrochemistry), separation and analysis (e.g., gas- and liquid-phase chromatography, mass spectrometry), and chemical synthesis (e.g., catalytic and enantioselective methods, biomolecules, polymers). Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308 (pre- or corequisite for 315f, or permission of instructor)
Instructors: The department

CHEM-316-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Experimental Methods II - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Experimental Methods II uses extended, research-style projects to introduce advanced techniques in physical measurement (e.g., high-resolution spectroscopy, calorimetry, electrochemistry), separation and analysis (e.g., gas- and liquid-phase chromatography, mass spectrometry), and chemical synthesis (e.g., catalytic and enantioselective methods, biomolecules, polymers). Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308 (pre- or corequisite for 316s, or PI)
Instructors: The department

CHEM-317-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Principles of Polymer Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 discussion (50 minutes); Offered once every three years
Instructors: Ms. W. Chen

CHEM-325-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, 202, Mathematics 202, Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. W. Chen
CHEM-331-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Organometallic Chemistry and Catalysis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An examination of the chemistry of compounds containing direct metal-carbon bonds, emphasizing the role of these compounds in chemical catalysis. After introducing the nature and scope of catalysis by organometallic compounds, the course will concern itself with principles of structure and reactivity. Analysis of the elementary reaction steps in organometallic chemistry (e.g., oxidative addition, reductive elimination, migratory insertion, transmetalation) culminates in the construction of catalytic cycles and an introduction to rational catalyst design.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Cotter

CHEM-332-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Spectroscopy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The application of NMR spectroscopy to the determination of the configurations and conformations of molecules is studied. The fundamental principles of NMR; the operation of CW, Fourier transform, and high-field spectrometers; magnetic resonance imaging; and the vast array of modern experimental methods are discussed. Primary emphasis is placed on the use of NMR spectroscopy to solve specific structural and dynamic problems that arise in organic and biochemical research. A course in physics is desirable but not required.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered once every three years
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur

CHEM-333-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Protein Structure and Function
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces the subject of how the three-dimensional molecular structures of proteins determine and modulate their function. Topics will include fundamentals of protein chemistry and structure, comparisons of various structural motifs, and a survey of a wide range of protein functions. Examples will be drawn from the current literature on enzyme mechanisms, photosynthetic systems, motor proteins, ion channels, and topics of student interest.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. S. Decatur

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 discussion (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Cotter

CHEM-336-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Organic Synthesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is examined. A general strategy for the synthesis of complex molecules is also presented.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mr. D. Hamilton
CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Physical Organic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.
This course does not satisfy a distribution requirement.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Mrs. S. Browne

CHEM-344-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Advanced Physical Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to topics in molecular spectroscopy and group theory.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered once every three years
Instructors: Ms. H. Leung

CHEM-345-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Physical Biochemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes the wealth of information that can be gained by physical measurements on substances of biological importance, such as proteins, nucleic acids, and model compounds for these substances. Applications of X-ray diffraction, measurement of thermodynamic parameters, spectroscopic methods, and hydrodynamic measurements to biological systems. Specific topics are chosen according to the interests of each class, with special emphasis on readings from the recent literature.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 325
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); offered every other year
Instructors: Ms. M. Campbell

CHEM-395-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Notes: Note: See safety training restrictions, Chemistry 295fs above
Instructors: The department

CHEM-395-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department
Notes: Note: See safety training restrictions, Chemistry 295fs above
Instructors: The department

CHEM-399-01 - Chemistry - 2001-2002
(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.
Prerequisites: sr
Notes: 1 meeting (90 minutes)
Instructors: The department

Classics

CLASS-211-01 - Classics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Art History 211s)
Preamble (for topics courses): Replaces Classics/Art History 102 and satisfies Ancient Studies major requirement.
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. B. Bergmann, Ms. P. Debnar

CLASS-226-01 - Classics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Sport, Society, and Politics in the Roman World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; History 226s)
The Colosseum, a symbol of the grandeur of Rome, was also the arena for gladiatorial combat that was often bloody and violent. Gladiators and charioteers were at once celebrities and social outcasts. This course examines Roman sport--its inherent contradictions, its use as a form of social control and as a forum for the dissemination of propaganda and political symbols—against a backdrop of social institutions and practices (including the family, women, religion, and slavery).

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); satisfies either Humanities I-A or I-B requirements. May be taken at the 300 level with permission of the instructor.

Instructors: Mr. G. Sumi

CLASS-228-01 - Classics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Women in Antiquity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Women in the ancient world experienced varying degrees of oppression and devaluation, or of freedom and higher status, depending on their social class, the prosperity of the community, and the predominant philosophical, religious, and scientific thought of a given period in antiquity. Paradoxically, they frequently managed to carve out meaningful and powerful lives within a system that appeared certain to deny them just this. In this course, we will examine women's lives in antiquity in the context of the interplay of these various factors.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); satisfies either Humanities I-A or I-B requirement

CLASS-231-01 - Classics - 2001-2002
(Fall) The City of Athens from Theseus to Alaric
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

A detailed survey of the principal surviving monuments and the overall architectural development of the city of Athens from its origins in the Bronze Age to the end of the 4th century C.E. The archaeological evidence will be discussed against a broader cultural and historical background, with an emphasis on the specific people and events that helped to shape the city and the general social and political circumstances that gave the monuments meaning.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. M. Landon

Complex Organizations

COMOR-107-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Spring) Poverty in the United States
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement (Politics 107s)
Why do so many people live in poverty in the most affluent of nations? This course will attempt to sort myths from realities in debates over the morality and feasibility of measures that might narrow the gap between rich and poor and expand opportunities, especially for the 20 million children living in poverty. Students will explore how poverty is related to class, race, sex, family structure, and economics, and how it is affected, for better and worse, by governmental programs involving housing, education, crime, welfare, and taxation.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Fox, Mr. C. Pyle

COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Spring) Labor Economics: Women and the United States Economy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Economics 205s)

COMOR-206-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Fall) Economics of Health Care and Health Service Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Economics 206)

COMOR-212-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
(Psychology 212)
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations—especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a manager; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Butterfield

COMOR-215-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Fall) Economics of Corporate Finance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Economics 215)

COMOR-220-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Fall) Taxation and the Values of Democracy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Politics 225f)
This seminar examines federal tax history and policies, from the Constitution to the present. We focus on income, estate and gift, and Social Security taxes. Tax laws represent the most comprehensive expression of official public values. For example, our income taxes depend upon marital status, family size, whether we own or rent our home, fringe benefits at work, retirement planning, investment choices, charitable behavior, access to professional advice, and more. The laws produce winners and losers. They often operate unfairly, are needlessly complex, and unnecessarily constrain economic growth. We study how and why, and possible reforms.
Prerequisites: History 171, Politics 104, Economics 103 or 104, or permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. J. Fox

COMOR-232-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Spring) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
(Philosophy 232s)
This course examines ethical issues that arise in organizational contexts and helps students develop techniques for resolving ethical problems. Issues treated include whistle-blowing, conflicts of interest, employee privacy, affirmative action, and corporate social responsibility. There is considerable use of case studies.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: The program

COMOR-236-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Spring) Social Structure of Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term

COMOR-299-01 - Complex Organizations - 2001-2002
(Spring) Leadership and the Liberal Arts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
An interdisciplinary approach to the nature, operations, and directions of complex organizations; an investigation of the position of women and men in organizations, with a consideration of the nature and styles of leadership and of the value of a liberal arts degree in organizational interaction; and with an exploration of issues affecting organizations (ethics, competition, legal rights, authority, socialization). Required for the minor in complex organizations.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. F. McGinness

Computer Science

COMSC-100-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) An Introduction to Computer Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to basic computer science concepts and issues. Topics will be chosen from: origins of computers, data representation and storage, computer architecture, assemblers and compilers, operating systems, networks and the Internet, distributed systems, information retrieval, data organization, graphics, artificial intelligence, robotics, the theory of computation, and trends in internet commerce and use. Laboratory assignments will offer some experience with programming and the use of application software.
Prerequisites: none (students should not take this course after 101).
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver
Section Instructors: 01 LAB  |  02 LAB  |  03 LAB  |
Expected enrollment: 60

COMSC-100-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002

COMSC-101-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Problem Solving and Structured Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Introduces the C language and the use of structured programming techniques. Emphasizes the solution of complex computational problems by their analysis into smaller subproblems that can be solved independently and then combined to form a complete solution. Introduces other topics relevant to computer science. Assumes no previous study or use of computers. This course is programming intensive.
Notes: 2 lectures (75 minutes), 1 lab (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. P. Dobosh
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 50

COMSC-211-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Data Structures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Using C++. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance.
This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Dobosh

COMSC-221-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Computer Systems and Assembly Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course looks at the inner workings of a computer and computer systems. It is an introduction to computer architecture, software engineering, and the fundamentals of operating systems. Specific topics include assembly language programming, memory and I/O issues, and the techniques of software design, implementation, and testing as a group. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 101
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Ballesteros

COMSC-221-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002

COMSC-311-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Theory of Computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101 and Mathematics 232 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Spring) Operating Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection, and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and 221 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Strahman

COMSC-324-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Computer Architecture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The goal of this class is to provide the student with a working knowledge of how computers operate and the general principles that affect their performance. New developments in hardware render current technologies obsolete within one to three years. Rather than focusing on specific technology, we cover the fundamentals that allow your understanding of technology to grow with future developments. You will also gain a better appreciation of the cost/performance trade-offs encountered in designing a computer system.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and 221
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Ballesteros

COMSC-325-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Computer Networks
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to computer networks, the mechanisms used in their construction, and the factors that affect their performance. Topics include network architecture, data transmissions, network protocols, error and connection management, internetworking, the Internet, client-server programming, examples, and applications. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, 221, and 322 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Strahman

COMSC-327-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Distributed Systems - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
In decentralized systems, users often solve large problems by spreading effort over groups of computers. Problems involving information, computation, and hardware distributed at various locations must be solved. A distributed system of computers may not share a common memory or a clock. Therefore, efforts to work together require explicit communication and synchronization mechanisms. We will look at issues of problem solving with multiple processors, distributing workload, and providing access to shared resources such as I/O and storage devices and file systems; centralized and distributed methods for control of parallel activities and for detection; and resolution of conflicts.
Prerequisites: Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, 221, and 322 or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Strahman

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Spring) Computer Graphics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Mathematics 331s)
The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include: drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 211, 221, and at least one of Mathematics 203, 211, 232, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Weaver

COMSC-334-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Fall) Artificial Intelligence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to AI research issues and models of intelligence. Topics include AI history, philosophical and research questions, LISP, state space representation, search, heuristics, connectionism, learning, and an introduction to advanced AI fields such as Natural Language Processing and Computer Vision. Course emphasis understanding AI model development and how it relates to the theoretical issues. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211, 221 and Mathematics 232, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

COMSC-335-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Spring) Introduction to Computer Vision and Robotics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
An introduction to theories that suggest how to provide a computer with the ability to "see" and how to use that ability to control the actions of a robot. The potential role that robot actions can play in making computer vision possible is also discussed. Specific topics include: the physics of vision, image processing, pattern recognition, image understanding, representations, planning, robot control, architectures, and applications. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 334 and Mathematics 202 or permission of instructor.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. C. Fennema

COMSC-336-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Spring) Intelligent Information Retrieval
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Introduces the basic concepts, methodologies, and research findings in information retrieval. Special topics include web searching, cross-language retrieval (query in one language, retrieve documents written in many languages), data mining (automatically identifying hidden relationships from large amounts of information), and data extraction (identifying pre-specified types of information).

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211
Notes: mistakenly published as Computer Science 333s in the printed course catalogue.
Instructors: Ms. L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-341-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics: Complexity of Computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Complexity theory is the mathematical study of the resources needed to solve computational problems. We define models of computing and resource measures, and study the classes of problems that are solvable under various resource constraints. For sequential computing we use the model of Turing machines and the resource measures of time and space. For parallel computing the model is boolean circuits and the resources are circuit size and depth. We also consider variant modes of computing such as randomized algorithms and probabilistically checkable proofs.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 311
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Barrington

COMSC-395-01 - Computer Science - 2001-2002

Critical Social Thought

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the influential ideas of these thinkers, the style as well as substance of their works, the circumstances that provoked them to write, and the circumstances that their writings helped provoke. We will focus on such figures as Marx, Nietzsche, Freud, and Dostoyevsky. Required of all critical social thought majors.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks

CST-251-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2001-2002
(Spring) Introduction to Critical Social Thought II
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the twentieth century. We will explore the influential ideas of these thinkers, the style as well as substance of their works, the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. We will focus this semester on novelists, reading works of such figures as Hesse, Kafka, Borges, Camus, Wright, and Eco. Required of all critical social thought majors.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pleshakov
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-295-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2001-2002
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

CST-350-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive; History 301f (03))
A seminar for juniors and seniors in which both participating faculty and students present their independent research and lead discussions on relevant secondary readings. Every student will be expected to produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought by the end of the semester; students will be encouraged to cultivate an agility in speaking, arguing, and writing. Required of all critical social thought majors. In fall 2001, the seminar will be limited to senior majors.
Prerequisites: In fall 2001, the seminar will be limited to senior majors in critical social thought.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Garrett-Goodyear

Dance

DANCE-011-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Fall) *AC TH/DA Language of Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Notes: Offered at Amherst College
Instructors: Ms. W. Woodson

DANCE-054-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Spring) *AC TH/DA Performance and Video - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
We will explore the connections between choreography/performance and video/film. The emphasis will be experimental—to learn by doing. We will work with cinematographic and choreographic terms and languages to discover similarities and differences. Encouraging reciprocity and dialogue between choreography and video/film will be the principle spirit that animates the course. Studio practice with choreography and the camera (primarily video hi 8), class discussions, viewing of videos and films, basic editing techniques, and assigned readings.

Prerequisites: previous experience in choreography, directing, or video/film useful but not required, admission with permission of instructor

Notes: Offered at Amherst College

DANCE-104-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Spring) Conditioning For Dancers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Pilates provides a safe and energetic workout for all ages and physical conditions. It is a full-body exercise that encourages muscular strength, balance, skeletal alignment, coordination, and flexibility. Groups are tailored to individual needs. Evaluation will depend on attendance, commitment, and retention of the material.

Expected enrollment: 35

DANCE-113-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Fall) Modern I
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

An introduction to the basic principles of dance movement: body alignment, coordination, strength and flexibility, basic forms of locomotion. No previous dance experience required.

Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes)

DANCE-114-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Fall) Modern II - *Not offered this year/term

Advanced beginning modern technique. The course will concentrate on aspects of strength, flexibility, and anatomical integration in order to improve technical skills. Improvisation as well as various body therapies will be included in the class format.

Notes: 2 meetings (90 minutes); Offered at Hampshire College, Smith College

DANCE-119-01 - Dance - 2001-2002
(Spring) Contact Improvisation

ECON-105-01 - Economics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): The Department of Economics does not offer a business major. However, we do offer an accounting course that will be of interest to students interested in business. The accounting course does not serve as an introduction to economics or as a part of the major.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+,-,*,/) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested. See http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/kljohnso.
Prerequisites: Not recommended for first-year students

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar is designed to prepare students to do independent research in economics. It is meant especially, but not exclusively, for students who are considering writing a thesis in economics during their senior year. The course is a study of how to do research in economics. The topics include how to find a suitable research topic, how to find literature and data relating to the topic, how to read professional economic work, how to work with theoretical economic models, and how to devise and evaluate empirical tests of a hypothesis. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Prerequisites: jr
Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour)
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Memories of Home
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores the symbolism, evolution, and politics of "home." The sites that we consider will range from an individual's place of birth to locations associated with cultural or racial origins, spiritual consciousness, or symbolic rebirth. How do people honor, romanticize, forget, or destroy these locations and their connections to them? We will read works by writers such as Allende, Brooks, Millay, and Wright as we consider how tradition, domesticity, community expectations, exile, and return affect an individual's sense of "home."
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Brown
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-101-04 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Reading Trauma in the Twentieth-Century Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
In this class we will read four novels in which characters attempt to come to grips with the aftermath of traumatic events resulting from war, slavery, abandonment, and accident. The project of rendering traumatic events into narrative produces particularly interesting experiments in structure and voice. We will examine each of these novels closely, and use this work to discuss the writing process more broadly. Assignments will include formal essays, response papers, editing workshops, and student presentations. Texts include Woolf, Mrs Dalloway; Robinson, Housekeeping; Ondaatje, The English Patient; and Morrison, Beloved.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Callanan
Expected enrollment: 17

(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: A Little Learning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Instructors: Mr. R. Shaw
Expected enrollment: 17
ENGL-101-06 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Envisioning Justice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course will examine concepts of justice and injustice as represented in literature and films from a variety of geographical and historical contexts. How do writers and artists conceptualize ideal justice? How do they represent the limits of justice as enacted through law? How do ideas of difference, such as race, gender, and class, disturb ideas of justice that rely on the logic of equality or homogeneity? To explore these questions, we will engage with literature of various genres, as well as films, theatrical productions, and music. Writers will include Head, Kafka, Yeats, Lee, Besant, Chesnutt, O'Connor, Forster, and Arenas.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 17

ENGL-101-07 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: The Performance of Race and Identity in American Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Through the use of film, literature, and other expository writings, we will explore the various ways in which notions of race and other identities are socially constructed performances. What does it mean to act, talk, be black, white, or multiracial? Masculine or feminine?
How do these identities relate to one's socioeconomic status or do they? Can socioeconomic status be performed as well? Finally, when are these social constructions of identity fluid, interchangeable, temporary, or permanent? Students will experiment with several different types of expository writing styles that will address the ways in which identities are performative.
Prerequisites: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. T. Vaughn

(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Medieval Studies 101f)
How did medieval people think about themselves and how did they imagine, move in, and represent the physical world? This course explores the various ways medieval culture created and crossed significant geographical, emotional, and conceptual boundaries in the areas of art, literature, religion, mathematics, and science. Texts will include medieval maps, travel literature such as Mandeville's "Travels," letters of Heloise and Abelard, works of Christine de Pisan, Malory's "Morte D'Arthur," manuscript illuminations, and selected material from late medieval theories of love, medicine, astrology, and mathematics.

ENGL-101-09 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminars in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: American Borders
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
How does geography, and travel, shape our "American" identities? How do our concepts of "home" change as we migrate into, out of, and across America? Our movements often require the crossing of borders both physical and imagined; borders of landscape and terrain, borders of race, class, and sexuality. This seminar explores various "moving narratives" of American identity—the stories we tell to define ourselves and the places we are moving through. Texts will include maps, personal narratives and essays, border stories, poetry and fiction, travel literature, films and moving images.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Stephens
Expected enrollment: 17

ENGL-207-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Writing about Science from the Inside Out - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course, a variation of 206, is especially for students with a keen interest in the natural sciences, not only traditional physical and biological sciences but mathematics and computing, psychology, and neuroscience. Its focus is on writing about science or issues raised by science for nonspecialized readers, either the educated nonscientist or scientists from disciplines other than those being written about. It will not try to teach students how to write technical scientific papers; rather, by reading some excellent nonspecialized writing about science, we will concentrate on gaining clarity, liveliness, and broad accessibility in writing for general audiences.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr; fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes).

A survey of great works in the African American literary tradition, this course will focus on representations of Africa in African American literature. We will read some of the earliest writing in the tradition, as well as more contemporary novels and narratives of the African American experience going back to Africa. Our readings will be in a variety of genres--poetry, novels, narratives, short stories, and appeals--and we may watch several films. Authors may include, among others, Equiano, Gronniosaw, Douglass, Hughes, Cullen, Johnson, McKnight, Butler, Walker, and Marshall.
ENGL-251-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Literature of the Black Empire - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces the development of a diasporic sensibility in African American literature and culture by examining narratives of an imagined "black" or "African empire" from the late nineteenth through the twentieth century. The trope of a "dark empire" gave black writers the opportunity to represent nationally independent black communities and yet to imagine these communities as part of a larger black cultural world. These writers helped develop a 'pan-Africanist' sensibility that challenged borders between culture, or literature, and politics. Authors include Delany, Du Bois, Cesaire, Conde, Hurston, and McKay.
Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Brown

ENGL-253-01 - English - 2001-2002

(Spring) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 267s)
Most people are on the world, not in it."---John Muir. An introduction to reading and writing about nature. This seminar will attempt an exchange across what are considered distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as Momaday, Thoreau, bell hooks, Austin, Lopez, Stegner, and Dillard; frequent field trips; and writing projects--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers and personal essays.
ENGL-270-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Women Writers: Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winnemucca.

ENGL-271-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Women Writers: Twentieth-Century American Women Writers - *Not offered this year/term

ENGL-282-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Reading and Writing About Poetry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Writing-intensive)
An introduction to reading poetry, focusing on its formal varieties and on developing a vocabulary for discussing them. What distinguishes rhythm from meter, or tone from voice? And how does the poet--or the student--write prose about poetry? All periods of poetry, but an emphasis on such twentieth-century poet-critics as Eliot, Auden, Jarrell, Wilbur. Recommended as background for other courses in the department that feature poetry.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Salter

ENGL-283-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Light Verse, Comic Verse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This is "light verse" in a broad sense; parodies, nonsense verse, children's verse, song lyrics. Students will be introduced to a broad range of poetic forms and the vocabulary of versification. Older readings to include Shakespeare, Pope's Rape of the Lock, Byron's Don Juan, Lewis Carroll, Edward Lear. Twentieth-century readings to include: Eliot's Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats, Auden's Letter to Lord Byron, Robert Frost, Ogden Nash, Elizabeth Bishop. Song lyrics will extend from Campion and Dowland to W.S. Gilbert and some lyricists from Broadway and Tin Pan Alley: Cole Porter, Ira Gershwin, Stephen Sondheim.

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2001-2002

(Fall) Nonfiction Writing: Writing the Self
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course will explore the intriguing, vexing issue of self-presentation in fictional and nonfictional form. We will read various works of memoir and "life-based" fiction in order to question what assumptions underlie our various readerly attributions. As this is a writing-intensive course, regular assignments will call upon students to venture their own versions of self and to write reflectively about what they discover.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including 201, 202, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Birkerts
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-316-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Late Medieval Literature: King Arthur and Joan of Arc: From Medieval to Modern
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Medieval Studies 306)
Beginning with medieval stories and documents about these two figures, this course traces the growth of the myths of King Arthur and Joan of Arc in nineteenth- and twentieth-century English literature and film. Through close reading and analysis of medieval and modern texts as well as selected films, the seminar will inquire into how different cultures and periods have used these two medieval figures to reflect their own hopes and anxieties. Readings will include Arthurian works from the Middle Ages, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries, court records, contemporary medieval literary references concerning Joan of Arc, as well as nineteenth- and twentieth-century plays and novels.
Prerequisites: Jrs. and Srs. only. Medieval Studies 101 or English 210, or permission of instructor. Permission of the instructor needed during pre-registration period for admission to the class.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette

(Fall) History of the English Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course is a study of the development of the language from its origins to the present day, with illustration of this development through readings in English prose and verse, public and private letters, and contemporary assessments of the language from different periods. Brief introduction to linguistics, with attention to the effect of linguistic changes on literary style and achievement. Readings, ranging from the Old English period to the present, chosen from writers such as King Alfred, Chaucer, Sidney, Swift, Johnson, Austen, Forster.
Prerequisites: English 210 or permission of the instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette, Mr. A. Famham

ENGL-320-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) The Eighteenth Century: Jane Austen: Readings in Fiction and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A study of Austen's six novels through the lenses of Regency culture and of twenthieth century filmmakers. How do these modest volumes reflect and speak to England at the end of world war, on the troubled verge of Pax Britannica? What do the recent films say to and about Anglo-American culture at the millennium? What visions of women's lives, romance, and English society are constructed through the prose and the cinema?
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 cr. in English/film studies beyond 101; prior work in eighteenth- to nineteenth-century literature, history or film strongly recommended; students should have read at least two Austen novels
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) plus screenings
Instructors: Mr. J. Lemly
Expected enrollment: 20

ENGL-321-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Studies in Nineteenth-Century British Literature: Colonialism and Imperialism in Victorian Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course, we will read a variety of texts of British culture in order to examine the ways in which the projects, histories, and imperatives of colonialism and imperialism were represented in and are shaped by British literature and popular culture. We will pay particular attention to representations of colonized peoples and cultures as they relate to British nationalism and national identity. Authors include Carlyle, T. Davis, M. Taylor, Mill, Kipling, Eliot, E. Bronte, C. Bronte, Haggard, Arnold, and Conrad.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including two of the following: English 200, 210, 220, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 18

ENGL-322-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nineteenth-Century Poetry and Prose II: Victorians and their "Others": Negotiating Difference in the Victorian Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores constructions of subjectivity in a series of novels written during the Victorian period. The nineteenth century saw the vast proliferation of capitalist, industrialist, and imperialist structures that eventually brought the English into more frequent contact with nonwhite... populations. At home, working class protests, early feminism, and political radicalism began to transform social identities in the metropolis. This class examines how a sampling of novelists represented and responded to these changes. Students will do presentations on historical topics such as Chartism, "the Jewish Questions," and "the Scramble for Africa."

Prerequisites: jr, sr, in department beyond 200, including two of 220, 230, 204, 321, or permission of instructor.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. L. Callanan

ENGL-323-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) The English Novel in the Nineteenth Century: Gender and Class in the Victorian Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Works read will include novels by Austen, Dickens, Eliot, A. Bronte, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Also readings in Victorian popular culture.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. A. Martin

ENGL-324-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Seminar in British Literature: Chariots of Fire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Through readings in the poetry of Blake, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Shelley, Keats, and in some of their critical prose, exploration of whether these very distinctive poets share something legitimately identifiable as the "Romantic" spirit, attempt, vision.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including at least one of the following: English 204, 210, 304, 313, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

ENGL-326-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) The British Woman's Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
From the earliest emergence of the novel women have had a central relationship to the genre as readers, producers, and subjects. In this course we will read a representative survey of the novels produced by British women from the late seventeenth century to the late twentieth century. Our discussions will focus on drawing conclusions about this tradition in terms of form, style, themes, and attitudes. Novelists will include Belin, Austen, C. Bronte, Shreiner, and Winterson. Brief secondary source articles will supplement our reading of the primary texts. Assignments will include response papers, student presentations, and a longer research paper.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. L. Callanan
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) American Literature III: Studies in American Modernism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

In this survey of American prose (and some poetry) between the first and second world wars, we will examine literary artists' responses to some of the pressures of modernity, a period characterized by its various "masses": mass destruction, mass production, mass urbanization, mass immigration, mass poverty, mass culture. We will consider how American writers retreated--to Europe, to art, and to various regionalisms where old simplicities might be recovered--as well as how they engaged their society through social and political protest. Authors may include Faulkner, Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Cather, Wright, Stein, and West. Poetry by Eliot, Pound, Williams, Hughes, and Moore.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department, including English 240, 241, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. J. Insko

ENGL-342-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) The American Novel

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course explores the way narrative forms both deploy and challenge social discourses of race and gender to create contested visions of American national identity. Readings include novels from the nineteenth century to the present by Stowe, Melville, Twain, Hopkins, Chesnutt, Cather, Faulkner, Morrison, and works of theory and criticism.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 240, 241, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. A. Kaplan

(Spring) Studies in American Literature: Seminar on Emily Dickinson
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar in which Emily Dickinson's poems and letters, as well as selected commentary by critics from her first publication to the present, will be read. Students will gain insight into her literal place (Mount Holyoke College; Amherst; nineteenth-century New England) as well as her figurative place in American literature. A mystic and a skeptic, a poet of traditional meters and a herald of modernism, Dickinson is a paradoxical figure whose work consciously embraces paradox, riddle, and mystery.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 200 or permission of the instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Salter
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-350-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Studies in African American Literature: The Splendor of the Harlem Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
An intensive study of the literature, music, and visual art produced during the Harlem Renaissance. We will also explore the philosophical and cultural critiques offered by the African American intelligentsia of the period. This course will introduce all of the major male figures of the Harlem Renaissance: DuBois, Locke, Johnson, Garvey, Hughes, Cullen, McKay, Toomer, Schuyler, and others. However, a large part of the seminar will focus on the rich tradition of artistic production left by the women of the Harlem Renaissance; Hurston, Larsen, Faust, West, Spencer, Douglas-Johnson, Dunbar-Nelson, Bennett, and several other lesser known female writers, poets, and artists.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including at least one of the following: English 240, 241, 250, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. T. Vaughn
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-351-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) Toni Morrison
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will focus on Toni Morrison and the extensive literary criticism generated in response to her writings. As we read such works as The Bluest Eye, Sula, Beloved, and Paradise, we will discuss Morrison’s evolution as a writer, the ways in which she critiques and reconstructs American communities, her authorial agendas, and her critical reception. We will consider Morrison in relation to her contemporaries and the African American and American literary traditions. Discussions will take up questions about the roles and responsibilities of the African American author, the genres of historical fiction and romance, and redefinition of black womanhood.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including one of the following: English 240, 241, 250, or permission of instructor; previous course work in African American literature recommended
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Brown

(Spring) Mourning and Memory in American Literature and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(American Studies 301s)
This course explores the intersections of private expressions of loss and public occasions of mourning in recent American literature. Starting with nineteenth-century precedents, our readings center on responses to World War II, the Vietnam War, and the AIDS epidemic. We will explore the interaction between mourning and historical memory, the ways representations of loss involve wrestling with the past for individuals, communities, and nations. Readings will be framed by theoretical debates about psychoanalysis, public memorials, trauma, and nationalism and will include fiction, poetry, memoir, and drama by Mason, O’Brien, Silko, Kogawa, Morrison, Spiegelman, Doty, and Kushner.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond 101 and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Kaplan

(Spring) Coming-of-Age in Asian America: An Examination of Asian American Novels - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar focuses on Asian American coming-of-age novels by addressing questions of identity formation. Themes pertinent to our discussion include the influences of family, class, sexuality, violence, and history in the maturation process of Asian American protagonists. We will also question definitions of Asian American ethnic identity, the phrase "coming-of-age," and the concept of "Asian America." Novels by Gish Jen, Nora Okja Keller, Milton Murayama, Lan Cao, Mei Ng and screenings of two to three films will be used as primary texts.
Prerequisites: any Asian American Studies course or permission of instructor
Instructors: Ms. J. Ho

ENGL-358-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Studies in Asian American Literature: Crossing Borders in Asian American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
From the mid-nineteenth century, when Chinese laborers came to California to work in the gold mines and on the railroad, to current waves of immigrants, Asians have been crossing borders to come to the United States. Using Lisa Lowe's groundbreaking text Immigrant Acts as a touchstone, this course will read tales of Asian American immigration, examining the subthemes of intergenerational conflict, assimilation, and interracial alliances. Texts will include but are not limited to Bulosan's America is in the Heart, Lee's China Boy, Choi's The Foreign Student, and Ozeki's My Year of Meats.
Prerequisites: 8 cr. in department, including English 200 (or appropriate courses) or permission of the instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Ho
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-370-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) The Caribbean in American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(African American and African Studies 370f)
This seminar uses the interdisciplinary methods of American studies to explore the role migrants from the English-speaking Caribbean have played in the United States. We will examine Caribbean images of themselves in literature and popular culture to understand the various ways they have (re)defined what it means to be "American" and "African American" in the twentieth century. A major theme will be the intersections of race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality in Caribbean American identity. North American perceptions and constructions of the Caribbean will also be central. Readings include Lorde, Hughes, Hurston, Marshall, Calif.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in beyond English 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (1 3/4 hours), plus screenings
Instructors: Ms. M. Stephens

ENGL-372-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Fall) The Literature of Exile
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This seminar explores shifting means of exile over the course of the twentieth century. Are exile from home and alienation from society ideal conditions, or states of dread? How has the history of European exploration and colonialism shaped the discourse of exile? What does exile look like today in a transnational age of porous national borders? Some of the themes we will consider are: questions of belonging, the relationship between internal and external exile, exile as geographic, psychological, aesthetic, and political; identity formation and exile. Readings may include Baldwin, Camus, Conrad, Hemingway, Morrison, Said.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101 and/or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Stephens

ENGL-373-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nature and Gender: "A Landscape of One's Own"
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Subjects: Women's Studies 333s (02))
Using a case-studies approach to learning about the lives of women at the turn of the century, this seminar will focus on how women told their life stories in contexts of the islands, prairies, forests, and deserts of the United States. Writers will include Thaxter, Freeman, Jewett, Stewart, Sa, Austin, and Cather; texts will include a combination of autobiographical essays and narratives, biography, fiction, and poetry.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 240, 241, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Studies in African Literature: The Political Imagination in Contemporary South Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar examines the variety of literary and cultural expression in South Africa since 1950, focusing on the relations between art and political struggle. Among the topics to be discussed are the imagination of history in South African literature, the emergence of the Black Consciousness movement (and its legacies), the role of theater and poetry in the anti-apartheid movements, the question of language(s) and cultural critique. Among the authors to be studied are Gordimer, Coetzee, Fugard, Ndebele, Wicomb, Tlali, along with a number of contemporary poets, playwrights, and filmmakers.
Prerequisites: English 200 or equivalent; 8 credits in English (or appropriate courses) at the 300 level or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. D. Weber

ENGL-380-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Criticism and Theory in Practice - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this seminar we will explore major critical schools, theories, and practitioners by focusing on a few works of literature that are the focus of important critical and theoretical discussion and controversy. Readings will probably include a play such as Shakespeare's Macbeth or The Tempest, an extended prose work like Swift's Gulliver's Travels, a novella like Melville's Billy Budd or Conrad's Heart of Darkness, a selection of lyric poems like Blake's "Songs of Innocence and Experience," or Keats' "Odes," and a critical work like Brooks' Well-wrought Urn or Empson's Seven Types of Ambiguity.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101; English 280 recommended
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) or tutorial groups
Expected enrollment: 15

ENGL-381-01 - English - 2001-2002
(Spring) Film Melodrama and Horror - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will analyze two important film genres, melodrama and horror, through the lenses of contemporary theories of gender, race, and sexuality. Topics of particular interest: feminist analyses of gender and genre; racial difference and "whiteness"; normative and alternative sexualities; masculinity; identification and spectatorship; recent revisions of these genres. Directors may include Cronenberg, Dash, DePalma, Hitchcock, Omuruah, Ray, Romero, Sirk, Vidor, and Whale.
Prerequisites: course work in film or permission of the instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and screenings; enrollment may be limited.
Instructors: Ms. E. Young

(Spring) Seminar in Narrative and Critical Theory: George Eliot and James Joyce - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar will focus on the work of two of the greatest novelists in English, George Eliot and James Joyce, pairing texts from various phases of their careers. Beginning with Eliot's Scenes of a Clerical Life and Joyce's Dubliners, we will go on to read The Mill on the Floss and A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man. The seminar will examine the aesthetics of narrative realism, focusing on Eliot and Joyce as exemplary figures of their respective literary and cultural spheres. Primary reading will be complemented by readings in contemporary narrative theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in the department including English 200 or permission of the instructor; English 280 and 360 highly recommended

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course) This course introduces students to the complexity of selected environmental problems, attempts to foster an understanding of their origins, and discusses potential solutions. In addition, it introduces basic ecological principles; economic, political, and cultural concepts; and their importance to understanding and solving environmental problems.
Instructors: Mr. T. Millette

ENVST-200-01 - Environmental Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Community-based learning course) Most of our society's environmental problems are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. Environmental science is a course designed to teach integrative thinking, the "scientific method," and problem solving. Lectures will be drawn from a variety of scientific fields including ecology, hydrology, chemistry, geology, and biology with an emphasis on ecosystems and biogeochemical cycles. The course will use case studies of regional environmental problems, practical hands-on problem solving, and landscape analysis. Training in field and laboratory techniques is an integral part of the course. Priority given to environmental studies majors.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100 is required; one course in statistics is recommended
Instructors: Ms. A. Wibiraltske

(Spring) Approaches To Environmental Problem Solving
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Most environmental problems are not as clear, unambiguous, and straightforward as they are portrayed in the news media, by politicians, scientists, or environmental groups. In this course we explore several current environmental issues from multiple perspectives and evaluate the merits and limitations of different approaches to addressing these problems. This course focuses on developing an appreciation for the interdisciplinary nature of environmental problems and developing the critical analysis skills necessary to devise solutions to these problems.
Prerequisites: ES 100 or 200, or per I
Notes: 2 75-min mtgs
Instructors: Ms. A. Wibiralske

(Fall) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Contaminants in the Environment
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
This course is designed to be an introduction to the toxicology of several important environmental contaminants, including PCBs, dioxins, DDT, and mercury. We will cover, where appropriate, the history, chemistry, route(s) of exposure and biological effects of these contaminants on both wildlife and humans. Class projects will focus on developing case histories for selected contaminants. Enrollment limited to 15 students
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 200, a course in chemistry or biology, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mrs. E. Monosson

ENVST-321-01 - Environmental Studies - 2001-2002
(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Sustainable Agriculture and Agroecosystems
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
(Community-based learning course) This course explores issues of sustainable agriculture through the lenses of environmental studies and ecology. Starting with an analysis of conventional agriculture, the course then examines such topics as natural systems agriculture, agroecology, organic farming, and community-supported agriculture, drawing on examples from both temperate and tropical regions. Laboratory and field trips explore the application of ecological principles to agricultural practices with an emphasis on local approaches to sustainable agriculture.

Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100, 200, or permission of instructor

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

In this seminar we examine scientific, economic, and political aspects of marine resource exploitation in offshore, nearshore, and coastal environments. Issues of interest include land and waterway development, marine fisheries and aquaculture, undersea oil drilling and ocean mining, coastal dumping and marine pollution, and international marine law and economic exclusion zoning.

Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 200, Geology 226, or permission of instructor

Instructors: Mr. K. Moody

ENVST-321-03  -  Environmental Studies  -  2001-2002
(Spring)  Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.

Conservation Biology focuses on protecting the earth’s biological diversity. As a goal driven discipline, the work of conservation biologists is often value laden. This creates a tension between those concerned with basic scientific information regarding biodiversity and those who implement policies in a crisis driven environment. This seminar will explore the basic concepts of conservation biology and the inherent tension between applied and basic science by examining a number of case studies.

Film Studies

FLMST-201-01 - Film Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course teaches the basic concepts and critical skills involved in interpreting film. Through lecture, reading, discussion, and screening of films both in and outside of class, the student will become a more informed and sophisticated observer of the cinema. During the first half of the semester, the class will study form and style in narrative film as well as in nonnarrative practices such as avant-garde and documentary filmmaking. For the remainder of the course, the class will examine some of the major critical approaches in the field.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours); enrollment may be limited
Instructors: Ms. R. Blaetz

(Fall) History of Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an historical survey of the cinema as a developing art form and a means of communication. We will consider the national, economic, and social conditions of an international medium that has existed for over a century. The national and thematic focus of the course shifts through the semester. For example, we will focus on U.S. film in studying the earliest developments in film technology and narrative; Soviet and
French films to study the formal and social experimentation of the 1920s; and films made in Cuba and Brazil to elucidate political filmmaking in the 1960s. The course provides a background for understanding film history and pursuing further studies in the field.

(Spring) Production Seminar on the Moving Image
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): An advanced course in the theory and practice of film/video production as an art form. Topics for the seminar will vary from year to year.
Continues to explore the moving image as an art form, focusing on three specific components: structure, sound, vision. The first segment of the course will explore films whose structure makes them most memorable. The second segment will examine innovative ways in which sound is used in film. The final segment of the course will focus on films in which the visual element predominates. Emphasis will be placed on the technical/aesthetic aspects of media art production. Students will be expected to create their own video/audio work. Weekly screenings will be supplemented with readings offering a theoretical/historical context in which to think about independent cinema and video art.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 210, equivalent, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours); a lab fee may be charged

(Spring) Topics in Film Studies: Feminist Avant-Garde Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 320 provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This seminar examines contemporary experimental cinema made by women. Although the course begins with a review of the work of Germaine Dulac (1920s) and Maya Deren (1940s), the class concentrates on films that were made or received in relation to feminist film theory written after 1970. Some of the filmmakers to be studied are Yvonne Rainer, Leslie Thornton, Su Friedrich, and Trinh T. Minh-ha. The class meets for one extended session per week in which several films are screened and discussed in relation to outside reading. There are occasional screenings of longer films.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Film Studies or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 3-hr meeting + 1 2-1/2 hour screening

(Spring) Elementary French
Credits/PE Units: 8; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of French 101—an introduction to understanding, speaking, reading, and writing French. The videotape-based method "French in Action" provides a lively story line and cultural context for the acquisition of basic grammatical structures with a conversational focus. The course includes frequent composition writing and a varied laboratory program.
Prerequisites: French 101; no credit is given for first semester alone; full credit is awarded for two semesters of work
Notes: NOTE: completion of French 101 and L102 fulfills language requirement only for students with no previous study of French; 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Rivers

FREN-103-01 - French - 2001-2002
(Spring) Intensive Elementary French
Credits/PE Units: 8; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Two semesters in one: A comprehensive introduction to French language and culture based on the "French in Action" video series. Daily use of the video and a diverse laboratory program promote proficiency in understanding and speaking French. Reading and writing skills are also developed by means of frequent compositions and interaction with a variety of texts. The class is supplemented by small, weekly conversation sessions with native speakers.
Notes: 4 meetings (75 minutes) plus 1 lab (50 minutes); fulfills language requirement only for those students with no previous study of French
Instructors: Ms. N. Holden-Avard
Expected enrollment: 15

FREN-199-01 - French - 2001-2002
(Fall) Elementary to Intermediate French
Credits/PE Units: 0; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An integrated two-semester course in language and culture, based on the video series "French in Action," for elementary-level students with prior study of French. The first semester consists of a thorough review of beginning grammar and the development of listening and speaking skills. The second semester continues the emphasis in these areas, adding more sophisticated grammatical concepts. Throughout the course we concentrate on vocabulary building, writing, and developing ease and competence in spoken French.
Prerequisites: placement test
Notes: fulfills language requirement after completion of French L200; 8 credits for two semesters of work; 3 meetings (75 minutes) or 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. C. LeGouis, Ms. N. Vaget, Ms. G. Vatan

(Fall) Period Courses: Topic: La Vie intime: Education and Domesticity in Eighteenth-Century France (pre-1700/1800)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Many period courses treat specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.
In this seminar, we will examine the theme of private life in the pre-Revolutionary period of the French eighteenth century (1715-1789). Through the three major themes of family, education, and private versus public life, we will analyze literary, cinematic, and artistic depictions of this era. Authors to be studied include Rousseau, Mme. de Lambert, Laclad, and Diderot; artists include Gouze, Chardin, and Fragonard.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Hull

FREN-311-01 - French - 2001-2002
(Spring) Period Courses: Topic: Love for Sale: The Figure of the Prostitute in French Literature and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Many period courses treat specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.
The course will explore the figure of the prostitute, and the theme of prostitution, primarily in French novels of the nineteenth century (Balzac, Flaubert, Zola). We will examine the ways in which the figure of the prostitute serves as a reflection of broader social and literary questions: female sexuality, the link between sex and money, the question of realism in narrative fiction, et al. In addition to literary texts, we will also study paintings from the period (Degas, Manet) and secondary sources that place French prostitution in its historical and cultural context. Some films may be included as well.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Rivers

FREN-321-01 - French - 2001-2002
(Fall) Genre Courses: Topic: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses focus on the creative forms and genres of French expression (poésie, théâtre, roman, cinéma, essai, maximes, autobiographie, formes orales, textes limites). Courses may examine, for example, the singular qualities of a genre at a specific historical moment; the evolution of a particular genre across centuries; or different generic treatments of the same theme.
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, known as rats de cinématique, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion won an esthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry that still echoes today, from Spain to Japan, from Eastern Europe to Africa, and from Scandinavia to the United States.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230

(Spring) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: The Sorrow and the Pity: War in France from 1939 to 1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon — an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode — relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.
This multimedia course on film, literature, and technology deals with France during World War II: defeat, collaboration, resistance, liberation, and the emergence of a new European identity. Historians, filmmakers, novelists, and poets have attempted to revive and analyze the circumstances that led some French people to collaborate with the Nazis while others heroically resisted. We will examine the historical context using documentary videos, literary works by Aragon, Marcel Aymé, and Jean-Paul Sartre, and films by Chabrol, Louis Malle, Marcel Ophuls, Alain Resnais, and François Truffaut. Technological training will be provided for students who wish to create a multimedia project.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. C. LeGouis

(Spring) Courses in Francophone Studies: Afrique/Europe: Heurs et Malheurs d’une Rencontre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.
Depuis le dix-septième siècle, les côtes du continent africain ont vu l’arrivée d’explorateurs, de commerçants et de conquérants venus d’Europe. A partir de 1884, à la suite de la conférence de Berlin qui a consacré le partage de l’Afrique entre puissances européennes, ces contacts sporadiques font place à une “présence” plus ou moins prononcée de l’Européen dans les colonies africaines. Comment les populations indigènes africaines ont-elles ressenti cette présence et comment y ont-elles réagi? Nous examinerons cette question du contact Europe-Afrique dans la fiction romanesque africaine produite de la fin de la première guerre 14-18 à la première décennie après les indépendances de 1960.
Prerequisites: French 215 and one of the following courses: French 219, 225, 230

(Spring) Courses on Women and Gender: Topic: Lifeprints: The Ages of Women
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses explore cultural, literary, and social issues relating to women and gender identities in France and French-speaking countries. Topics may include women's writing, writing about women and men, the status of women, feminist criticism, and theories of sexuality and sexual difference.
Women's lives have traditionally been structured around important social and personal passages: childhood, adolescence, marriage, motherhood, middle age, and old age. This course will examine women's narratives (fiction and nonfiction) from France and French-speaking cultures that represent these life stages. Central questions will include: How does the conception of a female life pattern vary across time and French-speaking cultures? With what social, political and psychological issues have women's stories engaged? What forms and techniques have they used? Possible authors: C. de Pizan; LaFayette; Sand; Colette; Beauvoir; Duras; Wittig; Roy; Schwarz-Bart; Conde; Diallo; Memissi; Sebbar.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230

(Fall) Seminar: Topic: Exploring French and Francophone Cultures: Major Exemplars of Diverse Traditions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies. Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course. Examination of the cultural legacies of French and Francophone civilizations through collaborative discussion of selected works, emphasizing both their differences and their continuing connections. What are the roots of these civilizations? What issues and artefacts have been particularly characteristic of their development? How do they enter the twenty-first century? A core set of texts will be selected in advance; further selections based on the interests of the students enrolled will encourage individual participation. Students will formulate their own research paper topics and at the close of the semester present their findings orally to the class as well as in writing.
Prerequisites: two courses at the advanced level, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Gadjigo, Ms. E. Gelfand, Mrs. M. Switten

(Spring) Seminar: Topic: Medieval Romance, Modern Novel: What's Love Got to Do with It? (pre-1700/1800)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies. Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course. Study of love as subject and structuring technique in the creation and elaboration of the roman, proceeding by direct comparison of medieval and modern: how do interpersonal relationships determine narrative strategies? why is the novel so often a vehicle for examining the self in relation to others? the self in opposition to society? women and gender? Works: Arthurian romances of Chrétien de Troyes; brief glance at Tristan et Iseut; Proust, Un Amour de Swann; Marguerite Duras, Moderato Cantabile. Concluding reading of Flaubert’s Madame Bovary summarizes seminar findings. Manuscript illuminations and films. Oral reports and a final research paper.

(Fall) Geography of Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The human geography of Western Europe has changed substantially since the 1960s. Enlargement of the European Union (EU) symbolizes a greater sense of European identity, but at the same time important regional differences have reemerged and strengthened. Evaluating the viability of the EU first requires understanding the physical, economic, and political geography of the member states. This course offers the opportunity to focus on the common characteristics and shared problems of the member countries to better assess the future prospects and problems of the community.

(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 225f)
The landscapes of Earth are the result of complex processes and have evolved dramatically since the planet's formation over 4.5 billion years ago. In this course we examine the geologic evolution of the North American continent and its natural features. Using narrative descriptions, scientific articles, maps, photographs, and videos, in addition to the texts, we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We then consider how the geologic setting or physical environment influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent.

(Fall) Ethnoarchaeology and Geology of the Ancient Southwest - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 290f)
The American Southwest is a geologically and culturally striking landscape that has been continuously inhabited by indigenous peoples for thousands of years. Co-taught by an earth scientist and bioarchaeologist, this interdisciplinary course examines the complex interrelationships between geological and ecological processes, and human culture and biology of the ancestral Pueblo people in the Southwest. A key feature is a group field trip (fall break) to the Southwest where we consider questions on the nature of changing landscapes, environmental constraints, and biocultural processes for both ancient and modern Pueblo people.

(Fall) Seminars: Native American Lands and Environments

Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.

This seminar examines transformations in the cultural and political geography of Native Americans over the last 500 years. It will focus on changes in the lands and natural resources under Native American control, tracing the geographical effects of Euro-American efforts to assimilate and dispossess Native Americans of their lands and resources. Emphasis is placed on the importance of law, legislation, and court decisions. Topics will include: colonialism, treaty rights, legal definitions of the reservation, water rights, environmental hazards, environmental protection, land claims, mining, and nuclear waste.

GEOG-312-01 - Geography - 2001-2002

(Spring) Seminars: Environmental Justice

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.

Examination of class, gender, and racial disparities in exposure to environmental hazards. Focus on the causes of adverse environmental impacts on people of color and low-income communities. Domestic and international case studies will illustrate: why people of color have not traditionally participated in the mainstream environmental movement; minority and low-income community environmental activism; and governmental policy development and implementation. Students will gain an understanding of how race, class, and gender affect environmental experiences and the construction of environmental discourses.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. S. Silvern

GEOG-312-02 - Geography - 2001-2002

(Spring) Seminars: Africa: Environment and Development Prospects

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.

This seminar examines the environmental and developmental problems confronting Africa. The course examines various perspectives of environment and development within the evolving context of the relations between people, societies, and nature. Using Africa's major biomes as entry points an examination of the environmental implications of social and ecological change will be made. The seminar's core themes include relationships of the environment to patterns of political change, contributions and responses to recent economic and environmental crises, and the idea of sustainable development.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: Mr. D. Gumbo

GEOG-317-01 - Geography - 2001-2002

(Fall) Perspectives on American Environmental History

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Geology 317f)

Explores the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration colonization and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2001-2002

(Spring) Physical Geology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From earthquakes to landscapes, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Topics are plate tectonics, minerals and rocks, volcanoes, rivers, glaciers, oceans, geologic time, energy resources, and landscape evolution. Labs focus on plate tectonics, rocks and minerals, maps, and field trips.

GEOL-101-01 - Geology - 2001-2002

(Fall) Environmental Geology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Our existence is greatly affected by changing environmental conditions. Some of these changes are "natural" (floods, earthquakes), but many directly result from human mismanagement (groundwater contamination, acid rain, the greenhouse effect). Although some of these problems are of local concern, an increasing number are of global scale. In this course, students develop an appreciation for the way the Earth's environment affects our lives. In the laboratory, students learn techniques to recognize and interpret environmental hazards and develop strategies to address environmental problems.

GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) History of Life - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course focuses on the interactions between life processes and Earth's crust and atmosphere. Using both body fossils and trace fossils, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

GEOL-103-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Exploring the Dynamic Earth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Earth is a dynamic and ancient planet. The study of Earth is concerned with understanding how the natural world operates as well as realizing its impact on society. In this field- and project-oriented course, we evaluate the history and composition of the planet, and earth-shaping processes such as earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, mountain building, glaciation, and erosion. Lectures and weekly field and lab projects introduce the major concepts and techniques of geology. No previous knowledge of geology is required.
Prerequisites: fy, soph, and permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-201-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Rocks and Minerals - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is designed to help students recognize common minerals and their properties and occurrences, and the principal rock types and their origins, associations, and tectonic significance. Mineral characteristics and identification are covered mainly in the context of the common rocks in which they occur. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on several field trips.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn

GEOL-202-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Spring) History of Earth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Subjects covered include geologic time, principles of stratigraphy and correlation, evolution and the fossil record, a review of plate tectonics, eustasy and isotasy and the geologic evolution of the Earth with emphasis on the geologic history of North America.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. Leckie

GEOL-203-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Surface Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this field- and project-based course we examine the processes operating at earth's surface, and we consider how the resulting landforms and deposits can be used to infer environmental change. For example, we study why landslides occur, rivers meander, and coastlines erode. Fieldwork (and trips) are a vital aspect of this course, allowing students to explore firsthand the processes that have created and modified Earth's landscapes and environment.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Werner

GEOL-204-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Human Dimensions of Environmental Change
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Geography 204s)
Using case studies from Africa, Asia, North and South America, and Europe, this course examines the interactions between human institutions (such as political and economic structures, science and technology, class and gender systems, and cultures) and the environmental/earth systems that provide their contexts and have been impacted upon them. The course will provide a forum to analyze the environmental consequences of a variety of land-use systems, resource use, and development projects, and explore possible alternative strategies of human-environment relations that could create a balance between human needs and environmental constraints.

GEOL-220-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Mineralogy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Offers fundamentals of crystallography, crystal, chemistry, and systematic mineralogy. Introduces mineral associations, occurrences, genesis, phase relations, and optical properties. Laboratory emphasizes mineral properties, identification, and analytical methods.
Prerequisites: any 100-level Geology course or Chemistry 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (1 hour), 1 lab (3 hours)

GEOL-223-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Astronomy 223f)
A first-year introductory course for physical science minors and majors. Topics include origin and evolution of the planets; planetary orbits, rotation, and precession; gravitational and tidal interactions; asteroids, comets, and planetary rings; meteorites; interiors and atmospheres of the Jovian and terrestrial planets; geology, tectonics, and mineralogy of the terrestrial planets and satellites; new data from Mars Pathfinder, Lunar Surveyor, and current NASA missions.
Prerequisites: any physical science course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Dyar

GEOL-225-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geography 225f)
The landscapes of Earth are the result of complex processes, and have evolved dramatically since the planet's formation over 4.5 billion years ago. In this course we examine the geologic evolution of the North American continent and its natural features. Using narrative descriptions, scientific articles, maps, photographs, and videos, in addition to the texts, we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We then consider how the geologic setting or physical environment influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. L. Savoy
GEOL-226-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Because more than 70 percent of our planet is covered by ocean water, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. Along the way, we will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to control weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to valuable resources. Field trips will augment the other course activities and materials.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. K. Moody

GEOL-227-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Groundwater - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major societal concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students prepare weekly problem sets, a term paper, and an oral presentation. Many of the homework problems involve computer applications.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-240-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Geological Resources and the Environment - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is a survey of the geology of important mineral deposits and energy resources, the factors that govern the economics of their production, and the environmental implications of their exploitation.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Dunn

GEOL-250-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Spring) The Biosphere - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The biosphere has a pronounced geochemical influence on the Earth; indeed, life has been called the greatest geological force. In this course, we will study the chemistry of life through geologic time and examine its influence on the formation and weathering of rocks, on the composition and temperature of the atmosphere, on the accumulation of gas hydrates and other hydrocarbon resources, and its role in the initiation of naturally occurring, water-mediated nuclear reactors. We will also take a close look at the Biosphere concept of Vladimir Vernadsky, the Gaia hypothesis, and Hyperser theory, and the ways in which these concepts inform our understanding of life's geological impact.
Instructors: Mr. M. McMenamin

GEOL-290-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ethnoarchaeology and Geology of the Ancient Southwest - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geography 290f)
The American Southwest is a geologically and culturally striking landscape that has been continuously inhabited by indigenous peoples for thousands of years. Cotaught by an earth scientist and bioarchaeologist, this interdisciplinary course examines the complex interrelationships between geological and ecological processes, and human culture and biology of the ancestral Pueblo people in the Southwest. A key feature is a group field trip (over fall break) to the Southwest where we consider questions on the nature of changing landscapes, environmental constraints, and biocultural processes for both ancient and modern Pueblo people.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor

(Fall) Stratigraphy-Sedimentology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is an interpretive study of sediments, sedimentary rocks, and processes of sedimentation. Principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation of sedimentary sequences are presented, as are interpretations of modern and ancient environments, paleogeography, and paleoclimate. A variety of techniques are introduced in laboratory exercises and field trips.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level Geology course or permission of instructor

(Spring) Seminar: Global Change
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change, the prospects of greenhouse warming, and the environmental impact of a warmer world.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level geology course or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. A. Werner

GEOL-333-01 - Geology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology, structural analysis, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Lectures concentrate on field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock rheology, the relation between rock deformation and metamorphism, isotopic systems and thermal histories of rocks, and geological activity at plate boundaries. Of nine labs, five are field trips that involve collection of original data. Short problem sets emphasize quantitative skills. During the final weeks of the semester, students research the Moine thrust fault in Scotland.
Prerequisites: any 200-level Geology course or permission of the instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

(Spring) Creation and Production of a German Play
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Students write and stage an original one-act play in German. Students develop proficiency in the language through reading several short stories by such authors as Friedrich Dürrenmatt, Bertolt Brecht, and Doris Dörrie, as well as theoretical writings on the theater; students will then write one of the short stories as a play. Drafts of the play will be critiqued by German students who will communicate with the class via email. Students write a substantial essay describing how they applied the specific theories of the theater to their original adaptation. The play will be performed at the German Theatre Festival and Competition hosted each spring by Mount Holyoke College.
Prerequisites: German L201 or permission of department
Instructors: Ms. D. Van Handle

(Spring) Senior Seminar: Sites of Memory and Cultural Identity: The Topography of Contemporary Berlin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization?" Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.
This course explores the meaning of built and natural environments, public and private spaces, and sites of memory in contemporary Berlin. Students will explore different approaches to the formation of space through architectural design, site construction, and urban planning. In addition to case studies of particular building projects in postwar East and West Berlin, we will draw from literary texts, film, and essays that portray the changing landscape of post-Wall Berlin. This course emphasizes interdisciplinary analysis and ongoing group presentations.
Prerequisites: senior, 12 credits including one 300-level course, nonseniors by permission of chair

(Fall) Foundation: Vietnam War and American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
American military involvement in southeast Asia between 1945 and 1975, focusing on the underlying causes of United States policy and the impact of the war in American society and culture. Sources include traditional histories of the conflict, veterans' memoirs, novels, films, and artistic statements. Requires oral presentations on the most controversial issues raised by the war (My Lai Massacre; role of antit war movement; meaning of Vietnam War Memorial).
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: The department

(Spring) Foundation: Family, Community, and Class
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This course offers a study of family and community life in different historical settings and periods. A peasant village, a colonial New England town, and a nineteenth-century industrial city are among the different types of communities that serve as contexts for investigating the varying ways men and women form households, raise children, organize their work and leisure, acquire individual and group identities, and engage in collective action--rebellion, protest, strikes. We study a variety of primary materials as well as secondary historical works to acquire an improved understanding of history as a mode of inquiry.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Schwartz
Expected enrollment: 15

HIST-101-02 - History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Foundation: The War to End All Wars: 1914-1918 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Known as "the Great War for Civilization," the 1914-1918 conflict marked the beginning of the end of European hegemony and the dramatic entrance of the United States onto the stage of international affairs. For those who survived--and nearly ten million did not--it was a watershed of global significance. This course will examine, among other issues, the origins of the war and the catalyst of the Balkans; propaganda and censorship; the work of women and men on home fronts and battlefronts; conflicts in Asia and Africa as well as in Europe; the Russian Revolution; the Treaty of Versailles; and the rise of fascism in the immediate postwar epoch.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. M. Burns

HIST-101-02 - History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Foundation: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Medieval Studies 102s)
The boundaries to be examined during this spring include those separating Christians, Jews, Muslims, and various "Others" in Europe; but the class will also investigate encounters across new boundaries separating--and constructing--Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Texts central to this inquiry will include, from c.1250, the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonso X; c.1400, Christine de Pisan's The Book of the City of Ladies; and c.1600, Holy Wednesday: A Nahua Drama from Early Colonial Mexico.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 15
HIST-101-03 - History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Foundation: Heroes and Heroines - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The great become godlike, but how are they transformed? Deeds of valor are one way, but violence is not the only road to the sacred. The courage of self-sacrifice and the vision of the philosopher are also ennobling. What social facts determine definitions of heroism? Are male and female heroism essentially the same or fundamentally different? Students investigate the core connection between free will, honor, and the divine to discern how ordinary people become extraordinary. Readings include The Iliad, the Odyssey, Iphigenia, Antigone, The Apology, the lives of saints and martyrs, Beowulf, Roland, and Lancelot.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Straw
Expected enrollment: 20

HIST-101-03 - History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Foundation: Talking About a Revolution: Intellectuals in Modern China - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Asian Studies 106 (03))
A study of the visions, plans, and frustrations of intellectuals taking part in the revolutionary changes of twentieth-century China. Beginning with the radical youth of the May Fourth Movement, the course will also include Confucian reactions to modernism, moderate constitutionalist solutions, and the anarchist and Communist movements. Topics for discussion will include the ideology and cultural biases of the historian/observer, the role of intellectuals in society, and the impact of European ideas--Marxism, Ibsenism, Darwinism, among others--on traditional Chinese culture.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Lipman
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Foundation: Imperialism and American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores the relationship between imperialism and American culture in the context of the United States' rise to world power. We will focus on U.S. intervention in selected areas of Africa, Latin America, the Caribbean, the Pacific, and North America itself, in the first half of the twentieth century. How did U.S. imperialism in these areas affect cultural expression in the U.S.? What were the implications of imperialism for racial, ethnic, and class relations at home? for the construction of gender and sexuality? for contests over national identity?
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Renda
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Foundation: Bonds of Intimacy in the Ancient World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
History is not only great individuals and events, it is also the silent and "secret" side of human lives. This course will make use of the art, poetry, laws, and plays of the period to recreate the private life of the ancient world (700 B.C.-A.D. 600). We will explore such topics as family relations, homosexuality, the role of women, childbirth, and marriage in classical Greece. We shall also investigate emerging Christian values, to include the ethic of virginity, attitudes toward sexuality, the education of women, and the role of marriage. Sources will include Plato, Euripides, Livy Petronius, St. Paul, and Jerome.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. C. Straw
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Foundation: Justice: Ideals and Practices in History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 102s)
A full-year course using historical case studies (e.g., a peasant's revolt in 1381 and a labor strike in 1912) as well as off-campus fieldwork to ask what "justice" has meant to women and men in Europe and America, how they have fought to achieve it, and why goals and practices have changed since the Middle Ages. Both analysis of documentary evidence in the fall and community-based learning in the spring will lead to critical reflection on how historical understanding may best inform and stimulate political and social action today.
(Spring) Foundation: African American Autobiographies and Biographies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will focus on the rich heritage of autobiographies and biographies that have distinguished African American letters since slavery. It will begin with an examination of some slave narratives, such as Equiano's Travels and Frederick Douglass's My Bondage and My Freedom, and conclude with selections from the recent past. Among our goals will be investigating why these idioms have been so characteristic of African American writing, analyzing the information they stress, uncovering their relationships to the past and the roles they have played in shaping it, and examining the political stakes involved in exploring individual lives.
Prerequisites: preference given to fy, soph, and history majors
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); students are expected to complete both semesters of this course; enrollment for only the second semester is not possible.
Instructors: Mr. H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 20

HIST-102-01 - History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Foundation: Justice: Ideals and Practices in History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 101f (05))
In the spring semester of this yearlong course, to further research on past struggles over justice, we shall add community-based projects that will challenge students to use contemporary institutions and social action to develop arguments proposed during the fall semester and to reflect on change in ideologies and institutions between 1381 and 2002. Past projects include Mass Commission Against Discrimination, a district attorney's office, a Labor Party campaign for educational reform, and Girls, Inc. in Holyoke.
Prerequisites: Students are expected to complete both semesters of this course (History 101f (05) and History 102s); enrollment for only the second semester is not possible
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Garrett-Goodyear

HIST-119-01 - History - 2001-2002
(Fall) German History in the Modern World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course pushes beyond cliches and simplistic images about Germans, into the world-shaping and humanity-stretching German past. Beginning with the Napoleonic Wars and the emergence of German nationalism, students will follow developments up to the present--using primary sources that range from sublime to depraved and that concern politics, literature, music, and more. Themes include the roots of Nazism and of German democracy and the responsibility of individuals for social outcomes.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. King

HIST-120-01 - History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ancient Greece and Rome
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Greece from the Bronze Age to Alexander, and Rome from the Tarquins to Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of these peoples; their art, philosophy, and religion; their democratic and imperialist politics; the social dynamics of their clans and families; technology and trade. Special emphasis on the city-state and its meaning in Western history. Sources include Homer, Thucydides, Plato, Livy, Tacitus, various plays, trials, and laws.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. F. McGinness

*(Fall) Modern Korea - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Assian Studies 135f)
An introduction to Korean history since the fourteenth century. After a brief introduction to geography and premodern cultural forms, the course will survey the evolution of the Yi dynasty (1392-1910) in the religious, intellectual, and socioeconomic realms. The second half will focus on Korea's interaction with the Euro-American powers and the rising Japanese empire (nineteenth and twentieth centuries). We will examine the devastating effects of imperialism, colonial occupation, civil war, and long-term division, which have also enabled rapid economic development since the 1960s.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Women in History: Women, Spirituality, and Power: A Cross-Cultural Comparison. - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed for in-depth exploration of women's experiences and their roles in various cultures and societies. How are the changing and varied experiences of women related to notions of the sacred? How are the very distinctions between "women" and "men" affected by such notions? In what ways is spirituality a source of power for women or a limit to their power? Case studies include European women during the transition from medieval to modern society, African women during early encounters with European Christians as well as in the period after "independence," and women of the African diaspora.

HIST-296-02 - History - 2001-2002
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed for in-depth exploration of women's experiences and their roles in various cultures and societies. Transformations in gendered divisions of labor and in women's access to resources are fundamental to understanding contemporary African societies. We explore how African women have created contexts for productivity using strategies such as marriage, pledged female friendship, and voluntary dependency. We investigate the loss of women's work of governing in the colonial period, and the consequences for women's wealth and productivity of incorporation into a global market economy. Texts include recorded life histories, autobiography, fiction, and film, and primary sources such as the testimony of participants in the Ibo Women's War of 1929.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. H. Hanson

(Spring) Colloquium: The Other Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
What was Stalinism in "Eastern Europe" during the 1940s and 1950s? What forms did national rebellions against Stalinism take, and what kinds of "soft dictatorships" emerged in the 1960s and 1970s? Why and how did Communism collapse? What next? Discussion will center on Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and their successor states; course materials will include fiction, film, autobiography, and additional primary sources.
Prerequisites: written application and permission of instructor

HIST-301-03 - History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Colloquium: Back to the Future - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is history a reliable form of prophecy? This course attempts to assess the likely developments in the domestic and foreign policy of the United States over the next century by looking backward at long-term historical trends and at historical patterns that have shaped early nations. Readings include John Keegan on war, Alexis de Tocqueville on democracy, Winthrop Jordan on racism, Paul Kennedy on imperial decline, Arthur Schlesinger on liberalism, and George Kennan on foreign policy.

HIST-301-04 - History - 2001-2002
(Fall) Colloquium: Martyrdom as Social Protest: Resistance and Honor in Antiquity and the Middle Ages - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Not all victims of tyranny and persecution become martyrs, nor are all martyrs victims of tyranny. What social and political conditions foster the choice of martyrdom? What cultural values drive this form of self-immolation? What's worth dying for? In antiquity, the word "martyr" meant an active "witness." Today, it can mean a passive "victim." Our approach uses cross-cultural comparisons and psychoanalytic theory to help understand how martyrdom shaped the history and culture of antique Europe and Japan. Subjects: Imperial suicides, child sacrifice, political martyrs, gladiators, Samurai and kamikaze, women martyrs, soldiers, and virgins.

(Spring) Colloquium: Nationalism and Nation-Building in East Asia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Asian Studies 331s (02))
China, Japan, and Korea were all well-organized states and societies in the nineteenth century, when the full impact of Euro-American imperial power arrived in East Asia. From that time until the present, all three have gone through painful and conflicted transformations to establish themselves as modern nation-states. This colloquium will focus on the current secondary literature on nationalism and nation building within an explicitly comparative framework, using material from all three East Asian cultures.
Prerequisites: written application and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Lipman

HIST-301-05 - History - 2001-2002
(Spring) Colloquium: Money in History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What is the power of money in human interactions? Do money and markets determine the shape of social institutions? We examine the process through which societies in Africa, Europe, Latin America, and the Pacific replaced patterns of exchange based on forms of mutual obligation with patterns of exchange based on money. What changed, what did not change, and why? We will consider some of the ways that social theorists and economic anthropologists have answered these questions and decide whether the evidence from our case studies supports or disproves their theories.

(Spring) Late Antiquity: Pagans and Christians: The World of Late Antiquity - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

As the Roman Empire declined, violence intensified and superstition rose. Gladiators, dream interpreters, and sorcerers multiplied, while pagan philosophers and rhetoricians sought to answer the criticism of Christians that theirs was a depraved society bound for hell. Readings include: Petronius, The Satyricon; Seneca, On Suicide; Artemidorus’s Dreambook and curse tablets; moral treatises by Christians on such topics as virginity and fasting; finally, reflections on the decadence of Roman society by historians such as Suetonius and Tacitus.

(Fall) The Middle Ages: Medieval Monasticism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Medieval Studies 300f)

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

This survey of Western monasticism from its origins in the Egyptian desert to the mendicant orders of fourteenth-century Europe seeks to understand what motivates men and women to define perfection as abnegation of food, sex, wealth, success, and even laughter—all that we now consider valuable in life. Topics: fasting, virginity, voluntary poverty; monastic rules and reform movements (e.g., Celtic, Benedictine, Cistercian, Franciscan, etc.). Also various saints’ lives, mysticism, and women’s spirituality. Course includes a stay at the Abbey of Regia Laudis. (p)

(Fall) Modern Europe: The Twentieth Century: Central Europe under Hitler and Stalin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Between 1933 and 1953, the Nazi, then Soviet party-states transformed Germany and its neighbors to the east. Borders and economies changed dramatically and millions died—in purges, war, and programs of mass murder. What do fascist and communist regimes have in common, and what distinguishes them? To what degree did new societies emerge from the upheaval? Students will discuss core issues together, as well as undertake individually an in-depth written exploration of a particular topic.

HIST-372-01 - History - 2001-2002

(Spring) The History of Race in the U.S.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This seminar examines the history of race and race-thinking in the U.S. from the 18th century through the present. It traces the evolution of race-thinking from early colonial period theories grounded in the Bible to the late 20th century discourses about race, identity and postmodernity. Debates surrounding affirmative action, immigration, the census, and racial profiling indicate that race thinking is as great an issue today as it has ever been. Special attention will be given to the liminal status of Asian Americans and their place between the racial binary of "black" and "white." The seminar will conclude by comparing the history of race in the U.S. with that of South Africa.

(Fall) Recent American History: World Views of Uncommon Women - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

In this research seminar we explore the place of individuals in a culture using the collections of personal papers in the Mount Holyoke College Archives. How did women in late nineteenth-century New England perceive themselves and their world? Were they products of their time, creators of their time, or both? How can we understand their aspirations and efforts towards social transformation? We will find tools for analyzing people's thoughts and lives in the works of Bourdieu, Gramsci, Saied, and others. Each student will produce a research paper using archival sources and assist in the production of a Web site.

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
This seminar explores the ways that gender shaped and was shaped by the politics and culture of Cold War America between 1945 and 1963. What was the "feminine mystique?" Where did it come from and how did it affect different groups of women? Was there a similar phenomenon influencing men and, if so, which groups of men? What role did the dominant ideas about femininity, masculinity, and sexuality play in the U.S.'s responses to communism at home and abroad? What forms did feminist activism take during this period when domesticity and conformity prevailed in the U.S.? Students will be expected to write a substantial essay based on original research.

Helps students recognize, evaluate, and use forms of quantitative argument. Introduces basic concepts from statistics and calculus through three case studies: witchcraft in seventeenth century New England; education, occupation, salary, gender, race and ethnicity in the United States; global population and resources. Using real data in a Macintosh computer laboratory, students observe and summarize relationships, formulate and test hypotheses, and study connections among hypotheses, formal models, predictions, and actual results. Laboratory reports on each case study culminate in a paper.

I-104-01 - Interdepartmental Courses - 2001-2002
(January) Not Your Grandma's Grammar: An Introduction to Language as a System
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Grammar is not a pleasant thought for most non-linguists. It evokes images of drudgery, pain, and unsmiling English teachers. This is the perception; the reality is that grammar is a manifestation of one of the most amazing and liberating systems ever conceived by the human mind. In this course we shall read essays on language, examine the structures of English and other languages, and analyze examples of the power and beauty of grammar in action.

(Spring) The Rhetoric of Grammar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A functional analysis of grammatical rules and concepts with an emphasis on their application to issues in student writing. Through writing extensively and reading the work of various theorists on grammar, rhetoric and style, students will learn how to assess their own writing and make choices that improve the clarity and effectiveness of their ideas.
Instructors: Ms. D. Friedman

(Fall) Pasts and Presences: An Introduction to the Humanities in the West
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Through the study of works from antiquity to the present, this yearlong interdisciplinary course offers a critical introduction to some of the core humanistic traditions that have shaped--and continue to shape--Western culture, and to the controversies about changing conceptions of that tradition.
General focus for 2001-2002: "Heroes, Heroines, and Society." Readings for the fall semester will include Greek plays, selections from the Hebrew Bible (Old Testament), including the story of David; and Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part I and Henry V.

Notes: This year-long course satisfies two distribution requirements in humanities: one in arts, language and literature, and one in history, philosophy and religion. 2 meetings (75 minutes), films or lectures Monday evenings as needed.

(January) Covering the Campus

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course will look at the world and culture of the academy through the prism of the news media, with the goal of helping journalism and writing students "get the real story." The first half will be devoted to surveying and analyzing in-depth pieces on college life, both institutional and personal. During the second half, students will develop their own stories in a workshop format. Students will learn to find, investigate, and "work up" narrative approaches for long form (2500-plus words) writing assignments.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Astronomy 142f)

Beginning with the phenomena—on both sides of the eye—that give rise to visual sensation, we examine cosmic structure on all levels: from the subatomic, molecules and cells, organisms and species, and up to planets, stars, and galaxies. This structure exists in time as well as space, so that we can "see" evolution from the earliest microseconds into the present-day complexity. We pay particular attention to the mechanisms whereby life operates within the cosmic hierarchy: how it obtains energy and material, stores information, and ultimately has the capacity to look into time and space to read this story.

(Fall) Interdepartmental Topics: Debate - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
The focus of the class will be improving public-speaking skills, especially under circumstances when one's position is being actively challenged. To accomplish this, students will learn three of the most popular styles of competition debate: Policy Debate, Lincoln-Douglas Debate, and Parliamentary Debate. Each student will participate in two debates in each style of debate during the course of the semester, as well as evaluating other students' debating. These debates will be scheduled outside of regular class time at the convenience of the participants. Topics for the debates will likely concern domestic and international policy, morality, politics, and the law.

(Fall) Problems of International Peace and Security - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Politics 311f)
This research-oriented seminar on critical problems of international peace and security in the 1990s is intended for students who seek to enhance both their research skills and their understanding of current world security affairs. Most recently, the course focused on problems of regional conflict in the third world and on problems arising from the flow of advanced military technologies (nuclear, chemical, and conventional) from the industrial powers of the "North" to the emerging regional powers of the developing world. The course begins with presentations on particular themes by the instructor, along with a discussion of research principles and methods.

ITAL-321-01 - Italian - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Modern Italian Literature: Spring 2002: Modernism and Postmodernism in Italian Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course is a study of the major literary genres of modern Italian literature: poetry, novel, drama. Conducted in Italian.
World War I, the rise of Fascism, World War II, the establishment of a new republic, il miracolo italiano (the economic "boom"), gli anni di piombo ("the years of lead," i.e. terrorism), the post-Cold War, and the reconfiguration of the political landscape shaped the cultural life of Italy (unified only in 1860) in the twentieth century. This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to modernist and postmodernist Italian fiction (Svevo, Bontempelli, Calvino), poetry (Ungaretti, Pasolini, Rosselli), theory (Marinetti, Vattimo), painting and sculpture (Balla, Boccioni, Severini, De Chirico, Morandi), architecture (Sant'Elia, Rossi), drama (Pirandello), and cinema (Pasolini).
Prerequisites: Italian L221 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Jewish Studies

JWST-104-01 - Jewish Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 1046)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Fall) Texts and Readers: Introduction to the Religious Classics of Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 208fs)
The study of a religious textual tradition that is thousands of years old is like an archaeological dig. One uncovers layer upon layer of cultural meaning. This course surveys the most important and influential layers of Jewish textual tradition: Biblical narrative and law; rabbinic theology and law; medieval mysticism, philosophy, ethics and poetry; and examples of modern Jewish thought. How does one layer build upon those prior to it? What is the role of various historical communities in the process of interpretation and innovative reading?

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 215s)

Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Fall) Engendering Judaism: Women and Jewish Tradition - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Speaking-intensive; Religion 222f)

This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women’s religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies, opportunities to become rabbis, new approaches to God, theology, and social issues, the Jewish lesbian movement, women’s writing and documentary filmmaking.

(Fall) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 235f)

Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Zohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of Eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Fall) The Quest for Meaning after the Holocaust - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 245fs)

The destruction of European Jewry by the Nazis during the Second World War was the most devastating tragedy in all of modern Jewish history and perhaps of the twentieth century as a whole. The Holocaust poses fundamental questions for all people about what it means to be human, the nature of social community, and about religious faith and tradition. This course explores significant attempts to come to grips with these moral and philosophical questions through literature, religious thought, and film, including the work of Paul Celan, Primo Levi, Elie Wiesel, Aharon Appelfeld, Arthur Cohen, Richard Rubenstein, Jean Amery, Claude Lanzmann, Eva Fogelman, and Pierre Sauvage.

(Spring) Making Americans: Jewish Writing and Ethnic Identity in the United States
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course concentrates on Jewish writing in twentieth century America, and specifically on the "life story" as a preferred form of fiction for Jewish-American writers. How do these texts address the problems of ethnic identification and Americanization? Are there certain conventions that mark the "typical" Jewish-American life story? How do some of these fictional life stories play with or critique these conventions? We will also consider what might be called the dilemma of modernity in these texts: the ways in which they all confront, in some way, the anxieties associated with modern life.

(Spring) Latin American Thought: Spring 2002: Crisscrossing the Americas: Comparative Perspectives on Cultures of the United States and Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(American Studies 215s; Spanish L351s)
Preamble (for topics courses): How does Latin America think about itself? The purpose of this course is to introduce students to different ways in which Latin Americans have approached the problems of self-definition and cultural identity. Readings will explore how various authors have addressed such complex issues as colonialism, mestizaje, literacy, regionalism, and feminisms, among others. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once. This course may be applied towards the Spanish major if written work is done in Spanish.
What is "America"? ¿Qué es "América"? Does the name refer to a single nation, a continent, or a hemisphere of diverse nation, peoples, and cultures? Who defines the meaning of "America" and in what contexts? This course will explore the history and consequences of these conflicting meanings, from Latin American, Caribbean, and North American perspectives. Within a comparative approach, the course will focus on specific topics, such as colonial encounters, slavery and race, nation and empire building, and mass media stereotypes.
Prerequisites: Spanish L235, L237, L244, or L246 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. N. Gerassi-Navarro
LATAM-272-01 - Latin American Studies - 2001-2002
(Spring) Studies in Caribbean Literature: The Anglophone West Indian Novel - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Representative readings from the fiction produced in the cultural region made up by Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, Guyana, Grenada, Saint Lucia, and the other former British colonies in the Caribbean. Special attention will be paid to the wider context out of which it emerges, the specific characteristics (of form, content, and expression) that define its Antillean peculiarity, and the important stages of development of a distinctly West Indian novel. Among the writers whose work will come under discussion are: Edgar Mittelholzer, Roger Mais, John Hearne, V. S. Reid, George Lamming, Samuel Selvon, V. S. Naipaul, and Caryl Phillips.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr in Latin American Studies, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Puerto Rican Literature and Society: Borinquen to El Barrio
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
An examination of the rise of national society in Puerto Rico and the literary forms in which it finds expression. Emphasis is on the historical context, artistic evolution, forms, moods, settings, and characteristic concerns of that expression, including a probe of the impact on and changes in literary utterance effected by annexation to the United States. The emergence of a uniquely Puerto Rican literature within the American metropolis, its distinctive character, voice, texture, and cultural singularity will thus be an important part of our concern.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Márquez

(Fall) The Fiction of History: Historical Truth and Imaginative Invention in the Latin American Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Examination of the scope, reach, and limits of the Latin American variant of the Historical Novel as a narrative form. The variety of ways in which it fictionally strives to recreate "certain crisis in the personal destinies of a number of human beings [which] coincide and interweave with the determining context of an historical crisis," the historical vision each writer brings to the work, will be given particular attention.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr or permission of the instructor
Instructors: Mr. R. Marquez

LATAM-287-01 - Latin American Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in Latin American Studies: Latina Activism and Feminist Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who have had an introduction to Latin America through 180 or 181 or a course on Latin America in some other discipline (anthropology, history, literature, or politics, for example), this course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.

This course examines the ways in which Latinas have participated as actors and subjects in various twentieth-century social and political struggles. It grows out of the realization that the history of women's activism and struggles must be taught in a dialectical relationship with the theory emerging from those struggles. Using different moments of participation as a point of departure, students interrogate the feminist theories that emerged in relation to these struggles and map out how "Latina" as a salient, ever-changing political, social, and cultural category is still being constructed, providing a window onto the interplay between theory and history, nation and nationality.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in Latin American Studies
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. D. Cohen

LATAM-287-01 - Latin American Studies - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Gender in Latin American History: Motherhood, Masculinity, and the Nation State
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who have had an introduction to Latin America through 180 or 181 or a course on Latin America in some other discipline (anthropology, history, literature, or politics, for example), this course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.

This course introduces you to the study of gender and women's history in Latin America by exploring the connections between gender, social movements, and state formation. Using a set of key theoretical selections and rich case studies, we look at the intersections of gender with other social structures such as race, class, and political beliefs considering the following topics: movements of ideas, people, and capital. We investigate the ways in which the struggles of people, and especially women, consigned to the margins of formal political systems have, in fact, shaped state formation in the region. Materials include first-person accounts, scholarly studies, film, visual art, and music.

(Spring) Slavery in the Americas - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

A course, organized topically rather than geographically or nationally, that offers a comparative analysis of African American slavery as a dominant social system in Brazil, the Caribbean, and the U.S. South. Topics include: why slavery?; sugar and slavery; historical demography; culture and the law; kinship and family; long-run economic development; patterns of race relations; master class and racist ideologies; resistance to slavery; and abolition and its aftermath. Readings include historical and anthropological studies, as well as a major documentary collection on slavery in Brazil.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, 4 credits in Latin American studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Spring) Studies in Comparative Caribbean Culture: Contemporary Caribbean Writers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A sustained, comparative study of the developing canon of at least three major contemporary writers from the Caribbean, representing the region’s Spanish-, English-, and French-speaking cultural zones. Articulates the evolution, contours, and scope of each author's unique perception of the New World and, especially, the broadly defining features of what Welsh cultural historian Raymond Williams would have called their peculiarly Antillean "structure of feeling."

LATAM-375-01 - Latin American Studies - 2001-2002
(Spring) Paradigms of New World Thought: History, Race, Class, and Nationality - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

This sustained study of the work of at least two representative New World thinkers emphasizes the national context, distinct intellectual evolution, influence, ideological importance, and wider implications of that work. We will be especially interested in the ways their work engages the drama of history, race, and class as part of a larger notion of nation and against the backdrop of specific historical circumstances. Since the authors studied will change each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.

(Fall) Foundations of the Colonial Enterprise in the Americas - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

Exploration of the historic roots of colonialism, from its antecedents in the Crusades, and the emergence of Columbus' Enterprise of the Indies to the establishment of a multinational constellation of European New World colonies more than two centuries after his fateful voyage. Emphasis is on the ways in which the world before and immediately after Columbus set in place the particular terms, character, and contradictions of modern colonialism, reshaping our conception of the world and laying the foundations for the continuing importance of a variety of dramas still central to our own time.

(Spring) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.

LATAM-387-01 - Latin American Studies - 2001-2002
(Spring) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: Border Cultures

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.

The course centers "the border" as a physical, spatial, and cultural entity. The border is "not just a place on the map," as Adrienne Rich has suggested, but also "a place in history." In examining this "place," we explore the border as a site of transformative possibilities, one which opens up, complicates, and makes visible certain social tensions and intercultural exchanges, in other words, the border as process. The course investigates different aspects and moments of this exchange beginning with theoretical and conceptual readings that outline the themes guiding my approach to "the border," giving primary emphasis to works that locate these issues in historical time and space.

(Fall) Postmodernism and Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 388f)
For many the "discovery" of America opened the modern era. Its closing may also have been foretold in Latin America's confounding of diverse theoories of modernization and development in recent times. This seminar will introduce the student to a number of both classic and more recent works on Latin America (in English) that advance along postmodernist lines, ranging from cultural contact and conflict, language, meaning, and power in the sixteenth century, to the invention of national identities in the nineteenth century, to discourses of ethnicity, class, gender, and reason in the twentieth century.

(Fall) Agrarian America: Sugar, Cotton, Coffee, Wheat - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English)
This course explores the structure and variety of societies generated in North, Central, and South America by four widely distributed export crops. Although not bound by rigid chronology, our focus will be primarily on the period 1750-1950. Principal concerns of the course are variations by time and place in each commodity's technologies, labor systems, farm sizes, and social structure; the political dynamics associated with each type of farming and the problematic features of capitalism in agriculture, or, how and when do peasants become farmers and farming agribusiness? Readings in English on cases drawn from throughout the Americas.

MATH-103-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Accelerated Calculus
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An intensive, fast-paced course for students with strong mathematical interests and background. Topics include differentiation, integration, summation of series, and solutions of differential equations.
Prerequisites: strong precalculus background
Notes: 2 meetings (1 hour, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. G. Davidoff

MATH-110-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Explorations in Algebra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Uses examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.
Prerequisites: 4 admission units or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Robinson

(Fall) Explorations in Geometry: Geometry and Cosmology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The astronomical models devised by Greeks in the period 600-300 B.C. held sway until the Renaissance, when great improvements in understanding were achieved—and yet a geocentric bias persisted among cosmologists well into the twentieth century. In this course we will endeavor to comprehend the geometric viewpoints of the distant past and the very significant evolution of understanding that occurred in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

MATH-125-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Explorations in Fractals and Chaos
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
An introduction to fractals and chaos. Topics selected from the following: self-similar fractals, fractal dimension, iteration, the Feigenbaum diagram, Julia sets and the Mandelbrot set, strange attractors and applications.
Prerequisites: 4 admission units or permission of instructor
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes); enrollment limited
Instructors: The department

MATH-151-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Calculus IA
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Intended for students who want to strengthen their quantitative and algebraic precalculus skills in order to learn calculus. Includes representation and interpretation of data, functions and their graphs, and rates of change. Features modeling of phenomena in the natural and social sciences. Students should plan to take Mathematics 200s.
Prerequisites: 3 admission units or permission of department
Notes: 3 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: The department

MATH-200-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Calculus IIA
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Continues Mathematics 151f. Topics include integrals and the varied processes that they can represent, accumulation and antidifferentiation, the several forms of the fundamental theorem, additional topics in differential equations with applications.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 151 or equivalent, permission of department
Notes: Note: Credit may not be given for Mathematics 200 and 202; 3 meetings (75 minutes)

MATH-232-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Discrete Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies some aspects of discrete mathematics. Topics may include sets, functions, elementary probability, induction proofs, recurrence relations, and matrices.
Prerequisites: any 100-level Mathematics or Computer Science course, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Barrington

MATH-239-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Making Sense of Biological Signals
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Biological Sciences 239f)
How do you analyze sound waves, electrocardiograms, brain waves, and patterns of nerve impulses? We will record many of these signals ourselves. To interpret the recordings, we will introduce methods of signal analysis such as Fourier analysis and autocorrelation.
Prerequisites: a 100-level calculus course or high school calculus
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Barry, Ms. M. Robinson, Mr. M. Peterson

MATH-251-01 - Mathematics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 200 or 202 or equivalent, or permission of department
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); offered every spring and in alternate falls
Instructors: M. Peterson

Medieval Studies

(Fall) Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 101f (08))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a foundation for inquiry into medieval culture. Using readings in literature, art, music, history, politics, philosophy, and sciences to interpret the Middle Ages, a student sharpens her awareness of language and imagery as means of communicating experience and improves her skills of attentive reading and persuasive writing. The 101f-102s seminar sequence offered in 2001-2002 is designed to be a year-long course, but students may take one semester without the other.
How did medieval people think about themselves and how did they imagine, move in, and represent the physical world? This course explores the various ways medieval culture created and crossed significant geographical, emotional, and conceptual boundaries in the areas of art, literature, religion, mathematics, and science. Texts will include medieval maps, travel literature such as Mandeville's Travels, letters of Heloise and Abelard, works of Christine de Pisan, and Malory's Morte D'Arthur, manuscript illuminations, and selected material from late medieval theories of love, medicine, astrology, and mathematics.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mrs. C. Collette
Expected enrollment: 15

The boundaries to be examined include those separating Christians, Jews, Muslims, and various "Others" in Europe, but the class will also investigate encounters across new boundaries separating—and constructing—Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern."

Texts central to this inquiry will include, from c.1250 the Cantigas de Santa Maria of Alfonso X; c.1400, Christine de Pisan's The Book of the City of Ladies; and c.1600, Holy Wednesday: A Nahua Drama from Early Colonial Mexico.

(French 228s)

Study of medieval life: social structures, gender issues, tensions between courtliness and eroticism, religion, perceptions of the "other," as represented in vernacular texts (in translation) and manuscript illuminations. Texts may include: The Song of Roland (epic); Chrétien de Troyes, Yvain (Arthurian romance); Renard the Fox (animals as knights and ladies); Etienne de Fougères, The Book of Comportment (social orders); Guillaume de Machaut, Remede de Fortune (a story of "courly" love); miracles of the Virgin, such as the Cantigas de Santa Maria by Alfonso X of Castile and León; lyric poetry. Resources will draw on CD-ROMs and the Web.

Prerequisites: Course taught in English; open to all students. Students who wish to obtain 300-level credit in French and have the necessary prerequisites must have the permission of the instructor.

(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Medieval Monasticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 351f)

This survey of Western monasticism from its origins in the Egyptian desert to the mendicant orders of fourteenth-century Europe seeks to understand what motivates men and women to define perfection as abnegation of food, sex, wealth, success, and even laughter—all that we now consider valuable in life. Topics: fasting, virginity, voluntary poverty, monastic rules, and reform movements (e.g., Celtic, Benedictine, Cistercian, Franciscan, etc.). Also various saints’ lives, mysticism, and women's spirituality. Course includes a stay at the Abbey of Regia Laudis.

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: King Arthur and Joan of Arc: From Medieval to Modern
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 316s)
Beginning with medieval stories and documents about these two figures, this course traces the growth of the myths of King Arthur and Joan of Arc in nineteenth- and twentieth-century English literature and film. Through close reading and analysis of medieval and modern texts as well as selected films, the seminar will inquire into how different cultures and different periods have used these two medieval figures to reflect their own hopes and anxieties. Readings will include Arthurian works from the Middle Ages and nineteenth and twentieth centuries; court records; contemporary medieval literary references concerning Joan of Arc; as well as nineteenth- and twentieth-century plays and novels.

Philosophy
PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course we will examine such questions as: How is the mind related to the body? What is freedom, and what is oppression? What should I do for others? Through contemporary and historical texts, we trace philosophical approaches to these questions.
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell, Ms. J. Rosner
Section Instructors: 01 LEC  | 02 LEC  |

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this course we will examine such questions as: How is the mind related to the body? How are the categories of "race," gender, sexuality, and class relevant for our identities? What is freedom, and what is oppression? What should I do for others? Through contemporary and historical texts, we trace philosophical approaches to these questions.
Instructors: Ms. J. Rosner
PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) First-Year Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Who or what am I, and what makes me what I am? How am I different from a very sensitive robot, or a very clever dog? Am I a single changing person throughout my life, or a series of unchanging ones? What will connect my past to my future? This is the cluster of philosophical worries that will occupy the center of this course. In the process of addressing them, we will work to develop methods for resolving problems that appear beyond solution.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) First-Year Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We, humans, are social creatures. We want to form relationships with others. But, how should we structure these relationships? Through films, literature, and philosophical texts, we will answer this question by exploring our relationships with God, friends, family, animals, and society.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Inness
Expected enrollment: 20

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is an introduction to ancient Greek philosophy from the pre-Socratic period through to the Hellenistic period. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the cosmos? What is death? What is the soul? What is happiness? Does fate rule our lives? Through discussion of primary texts in translation, as well as class "debates" between the different schools of thought, we will use the ancient Greeks to frame our own responses to these questions.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Spinoza, Leibniz, Berkeley, Hume, and Kant. Focuses on the impact of modern scientific thought on the philosophical tradition's understanding of the place of the human being in the world. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, and the possibility of human freedom.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
If you do the right thing for the wrong reason, are you a good person? Should you steal from the wealthy to help the less fortunate if you can get away with it? We will try to answer these questions, and others, by surveying some of the major attempts to answer the fundamental questions of moral theory. We will read a variety of classical and contemporary philosophical texts, as well as some literary texts.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Inness

PHIL-206-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course provides students with an introduction to philosophy based upon the philosophy of science. Questions to be discussed include: What is the nature of scientific reasoning? What are scientific theories, and how are they tested? How are scientific concepts and explanations used? The social aspects of scientific inquiry will be addressed, as will some feminist criticisms of science. The idea of scientific progress will also be given extended treatment.
PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of its associations and buzzwords.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Bowie

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. L. Bowie

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Religion 226f
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God’s existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the work of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with Religion 100
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Grayson

PHIL-232-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Complex Organizations 232s

PHIL-235-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral problems. We will be discussing a variety of them. Possible topics include: What are the justified uses of genetic technology and cloning? How much medical resources should be devoted to alleviating infertility or saving significantly premature babies? We will also discuss other long-standing issues, such as euthanasia.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Barnes

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Nature/Culture/Values
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Is nature to be controlled through applying technological expertise? Or is Thoreau correct in his suggestion that we must immerse ourselves in nature to discover who we truly are? Might the value of nature extend beyond its utility for humans? Students have the opportunity to explore these questions, challenging widespread assumptions about nature, culture, and values.
PHIL-241-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Issues in Contemporary Moral Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course explores questions and texts relevant to contemporary ethical philosophy. Topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 205 or per I
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Social and Political Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is a survey of influential works in the history of political thought, along with some contemporary works. Classical readings will include Plato, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Hume, Mill, and Marx. Modern authors will likely include Susan Okin, John Rawls, Marilyn Frye, Jean Hampton, and Allison Jagger. Our central question will be "What gives a government legitimate authority over its citizens?"
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-243-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ethics, Political Theory, and Public Debate
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Moral and political theories are directly relevant to major modern problems. These theories take an exciting dimension when you apply them to contemporary controversies like affirmative action and hate speech codes. And things get really fun when you not only learn about these issues, but you also get to teach others how to debate about them.
This is a community-based learning course in which students meet once a week for two hours at MHC and travel to a Springfield public high school approximately seven times during the semester to work after school with teachers and students there.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: Mr. E. Barnes

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Philosophy and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The course examines philosophical themes in literature and also looks at philosophical questions about literature. Can literature give us knowledge about the world? How do we determine the meaning of a work of literature? Are the author's intentions relevant to interpretation? Can works of literature lead us morally astray? Is writing "raced?" Is gender relevant to reading literature? We will examine these issues through readings from philosophy, literature, cultural studies and literary criticism.

PHIL-248-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
(Community-based learning course) This course is an introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race?" Does science construct "race?" What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Class readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-249-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Women and Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Do we all dress in drag? Should women strive to be less emotional? Is sexuality socially constructed? Is popular culture harmful to women? This course focuses on philosophy that explores women's understanding of reality. By studying the work of various twentieth-century feminist philosophers as well as films and stories, we shall explore a number of crucial philosophic concerns including truth, the self, and morality. Our aim is to become philosophers ourselves, thinking deeply about issues of fundamental importance to our lives.
PHIL-250-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: Fall 2001: Philosophy of Law
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Laws are constantly imposed on our most intimate relationships. If two people want to get married, what right does the government have to stop them? Should women be allowed to do any job they want? What about prostitution? What justifies us in forcing people to wear clothes at all, or to refrain from having sex in public? We will examine fundamental issues in the philosophy of law, such as the nature of law, the source and proper limits of governmental authority, and theories of constitutional interpretation. We'll discuss these issues through examples like polygamous and homosexual marriage, prostitution and pornography, and the death penalty.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. E. Barnes

PHIL-253-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Asian Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course introduces students to the traditional systems of thought in Asia, concentrating on Hinduism in India; Taoism in China; and Buddhism in China, India, and Japan, with occasional reference to other systems. Secondary and primary texts are read, along with some literature inspired by these philosophies. Cross-cultural explorations—and considerations of gender, caste, and elitism—are encouraged.

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Existentialism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Franz Kafka, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, Franz Fanon, and Samuel Beckett.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-257-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Continental Philosophy: Ideology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore and trace the development of the concept of ideology in the works of continental philosophers beginning with Marx. We will examine how "ideology" has been conceived and how the concept of ideology has functioned in different theoretical and social contexts. The course leads up to a consideration of claims in contemporary cultural theory that some notions of ideology must be abandoned. Readings may include works by Karl Marx, George Lukacs, Antonio Gramsci, Karl Mannheim, Louis Althusser, Theodor Adorno, Slavoj Zizek, and Seyla Benhabib.

PHIL-263-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Philosophy of Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Biology gives rise to many interesting philosophical questions. For example: How could there be evidence for evolution when we can't predict new species? How could adaptations be intended for some purpose? Are individuals selected by natural selection or could groups be selected too? How does evolution add light on human behavior, if at all? In this course we will consider these issues. Designed to be accessible to those with backgrounds in either philosophy or biology.

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Philosophy of Mind - *Not offered this year/term
An introduction to the mind/body problem and the way that it shapes our view of ourselves, this course emphasizes work in cognitive science, an interdisciplinary approach that draws together artificial intelligence, neurobiology, linguistics, philosophy, and cognitive psychology. Readings are from these areas and from classical philosophical sources.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-270-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002

(Fall) Epistemology - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Issues in epistemology (the theory of knowledge) are fundamental to nearly all fields of study. This course uses both historical and contemporary texts to consider traditional questions in the theory of knowledge. Included are the following questions: Can I have knowledge of anything outside of my mind, for example, physical objects or other minds? Can we answer the skeptic's challenge that we are not justified in any of our beliefs? What is knowledge, and how does it differ from belief? Does our knowledge have a foundation or is it unavoidably circular? Is all knowledge derived from experience or is some innate?

Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002

(Spring) Philosophy of Language - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Whorf, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.

Prerequisites: 1 course in department or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. L. Bowie

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002

(Spring) Philosophy of Art

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Speaking-intensive)

(Cooperative-based learning course) Could a pile of bricks be art? Does life imitate art or does art imitate life? How can we know the real meaning of a work of art? Can art be a bad moral influence? Is "activist art" art? This class draws on a variety of media, including visual art, literature, film, dance, and music, to examine these questions. The class will also study the creation of a local "public art" statue in honor of onetime resident Sojourner Truth.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. A. Curran

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002

(Fall) Philosophy and Film - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Are films art or entertainment? Do films have "authors"? Can popular films be socially critical? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. Readings will be drawn from a variety of sources: philosophy, film and cultural theory, film criticism. There will be weekly film screenings.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or in Film Studies, or permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (3 hours)

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002

(Spring) Philosophy and Film: Spring 2002: Theory/Interpretation/Criticism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Spring) Meaning, Time, and Beauty: Philosophy in Dialogue
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-and-writing-intensive)
Does life have meaning? Is time real? Must art be beautiful? Philosophers have had radically different solutions to these fundamental questions. The aim of this course is for students to develop their own answers to each of these questions through discussion and dialogue. Emphasis on developing oral and written skills. This course is recommended for all sophomores thinking of majoring or minoring in philosophy and is required for the major.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, 4 credits in department
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell, Mr. T. Wartenberg

(Fall) Topics in Metaphysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An examination of one of a cluster of topics: What is real? Are humans free? Do numbers exist? Are there immaterial souls? Specific topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
PHIL-312-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Metaphysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An examination of one of a cluster of topics: What is real? Are humans free? Do numbers exist? Are there immaterial souls? Specific topics vary from year to year.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

PHIL-315-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Ancient Greek Philosophy: Ancient Greeks on Perplexity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
When the ancient Greek thinker Socrates reflected on the world around him, he found it to be a very puzzling place. What is death? What is the soul? What is the best life to live? Western philosophy came into existence to respond to these perplexities. Just how does philosophy do this? Who and what is a philosopher? Should philosophy resolve our perplexity or leave us perplexed? This class explores these questions with readings from Plato, Aristotle, and the Hellenistic philosophers.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. A. Curran

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This seminar attempts to investigate carefully the broad relationship between language and the world by focusing on issues of realism and idealism: Does language merely attach labels to things (and kinds of things) that exist independently of our thought? Or do we contribute to the construction of the world by developing a conceptual scheme for describing or representing it? The seminar will focus on the work of two pivotal figures in the philosophy of language: Wittgenstein and Chomsky.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

PHIL-327-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Advanced Logic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Mathematics 327f)
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of Gödel's incompleteness results. Includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in department or in Mathematics and permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

PHIL-334-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies issues of current concern in contemporary moral theory, moral psychology, and foundations of ethics.
PHIL-347-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Developments in Feminist Philosophy: Rethinking the World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

What makes a body sexy? Is heterosexuality natural? What is "sex"? Feminist philosophy is in the midst of a revolutionary transformation. Rather than remaining content with the task of indicating the shortcomings of the philosophical canon, feminist philosophers are constructing their own distinctively feminist version of philosophy. In this course, we shall explore what contemporary feminist philosophers have written about the nature of sex and sexuality.

Instructors: Ms. J. Inness

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Teaching Children Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Prerequisites: per instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Limited to 15 students.
Instructors: Mr. T. Wartenberg

PHIL-350-02 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: Feminist and Queer Theories
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Women's Studies beyond 101 or permission of instructor

Questions of power, agency, structure, materiality, bodies, subjectivities, and discursive practices have been central to both feminist and queer theories. In this course, we will focus on these issues, exploring in particular the tensions among poststructuralist, Marxist, and materialist approaches. In analyzing contemporary theories of gender and sexuality, we will pay particular attention to issues of race, class, ethnicity, nationality, and globalization. Key problematics include: the nature and operation of power, the relationship between materiality and discourse, and the relationship between theory and practice.

Expected enrollment: 15

PHIL-350-02 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Science and the Body
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will examine scientific discourses on the body as well as feminist, queer, and antiracist approaches, interventions, and responses. Drawing on the literatures from cultural studies of science, technology, and medicine, gay and lesbian and queer studies, the history of science and medicine, anthropology, biology and feminist theory, we will consider such topics as scientific constructions of raced-sexed-gendered bodies (homo)sexualities, mainstream and counter-discourses concerning intersexuality, transgendered and cyborg bodies, and scientific constructions of disease and disabilities.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Women's studies beyond 101 or permission of instructor
Notes: Open to junior and senior science majors with permission of instructor
Instructors: Ms. K. Barad
Expected enrollment: 15

PHIL-351-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Fall 2001: Michael Dummett
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Michael Dummett is now probably the most influential living philosopher in the analytical tradition. His work focuses on questions of reality and metaphysics. It is dense and difficult to understand. This course attempts to provide an introduction to this profound and influential figure in contemporary philosophy. Students will be helped by some background in logic, although this is not required.
Prerequisites: 8 cr in department
Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour and 50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Mitchell

PHIL-352-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Nineteenth-Century Continental Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
During the nineteenth century, a distinctive mode of philosophizing arose, now known as Continental Philosophy, that placed the issue of human alienation squarely on the philosophic agenda. We will investigate how this topic achieved such importance through careful reading, analysis, and comparison of works by Hegel, Kierkegaard, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. We will explore how these philosophers understood the potentials of human life as well as how they saw society limiting them.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour and 45 minutes)

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2001-2002
(Fall) Philosophy of Art - *Not offered this year/term

The life and work of Galileo will be explored both historically and scientifically, including much from his own writings. Classical background, contemporary controversies, and repercussions down to the present time will be included as time permits. Laboratory exercises will follow Galileo’s own investigations, including such topics as vibrating strings, buoyancy, optics, astronomy, clocks, scaling laws in biology, motion, and the principle of relativity.

PHYS-103-01 - Physics - 2001-2002

(Fall) Foundations of Physics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Surveys some of the theories and methodologies of physics (including Newton’s laws), particularly those involved with motion and waves. Develops the concepts of energy and momentum and their related conservation laws. Emphasizes the interplay between intuition, experiment, and analysis in the understanding of a physical theory.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 meeting (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)

PHYS-231-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Techniques of Experimental Physics
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides training in the techniques employed in the construction of scientific equipment.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, major
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) for 8 weeks
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson

PHYS-295-01 - Physics - 2001-2002

PHYS-300-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Five College Advanced Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Each of the Five Colleges offers a set of advanced experimental modules in one or more of the areas of optics, atomic physics, nuclear physics, particle physics, statistical physics, and condensed-matter physics. Students may choose experiments from among those available at any of the Five Colleges. Credit is based on the number of modules completed, up to a maximum of 4 credits per semester and 8 credits total. The number of meetings depends on the module; modules are completed within one month.

Prerequisites: Physics 301 or 308 and permission of instructor

Instructors: Mr. C. Sutton

PHYS-301-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Waves and Particles
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, X-ray and electron diffraction, the wave nature of particles, the uncertainty principle, and Schrödinger's equation in one dimension.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303, or concurrent enrollment
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. M. Peterson

PHYS-302-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The application of quantum mechanics to selected systems. The hydrogen atom and multi-electron atoms are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli exclusion principle. Principles developed are then applied to other systems, such as molecules, Bose and Fermi gases, condensed matter, nuclei and elementary particles, chosen according to the interests of the class and the instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. J. Hudgings
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |

PHYS-303-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 or concurrent enrollment
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson
PHYS-310-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(January) The Geometry of Special Relativity
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 310j)
Introduction to special relativity: spacetime, Lorentz transformations, paradoxes, energy and momentum, electromagnetism. Emphasis on geometry: Lorentz transformations as hyperbolic rotations, unification of space and time.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and Physics 216 or consent of instructor
Notes: 9 meetings (75 minutes) over the course of J-Term
Instructors: Mr. T. Dray

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is a more detailed study of the techniques developed in Physics 115 and 216, leading to an examination of the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations of mechanics.
Prerequisites: Physics 303
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. H. Nicholson

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 324j)
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics, such as special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, the algebra of vector spaces, solution of partial differential equations, Green's functions, integral transform methods, and probability and statistics. Topics selected according to class interests.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. J. Durso

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.
Prerequisites: Physics 301, 315, or 324
Notes: 4 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Griffiths

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Statistical Physics and Condensed Matter
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include: the development of the general problem of many-particle systems and the laws of thermodynamics from fundamental quantum and probability concepts; applications to ideal gases, paramagnetism, and black-body radiation; and an introduction to the physics of the solid state, including crystal structure, free electron and band theory of metals, lattice vibrations, and specific heats of solids.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes). One or both of Physics 326 and 336 will normally be offered each year, depending on the needs and interests of the students.
Instructors: The department

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Advanced Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor.
Prerequisites: to be determined based on topics to be discussed
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: The department

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Quantum Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; physics and perturbative methods.
Prerequisites: Physics 302, 324 or 325
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes). Offered spring 2002 at Smith College.
One or both of Physics 326 and 336 will normally be offered each year, depending on the needs and interests of the students.
Instructors: Mr. D. Griffiths

PHYS-395-01 - Physics - 2001-2002

Politics

POLIT-101-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Fundamentals of Politics: Concepts and Controversies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course examines three contrasting conceptions of freedom and of what threatens or denies or enhances freedom, in light of selective controversies in American politics and society. We explore concepts related to "freedom" such as "community," "equality," and "the common good"; and we acquaint ourselves with competing political perspectives on contemporary America. We also consider some pressing issues such as the role of government and the future of public goods; the social limits to economic growth; the character and ramifications of economic inequality; racial, ethnic, and gender discrimination; and affirmative action.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes); Conducted in small sections, with students submitting short essays throughout the semester.
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-104-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) American Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers an overview of the American political system and the theories of those who celebrate it and criticize it. Focuses on the institutions of American politics, including the Constitution, the presidency, Congress, the courts, parties and elections, interest groups, and movements seeking political change. Also includes a theoretical focus: a critical examination of the notions of liberalism, pluralism, and democracy that inform the practice of American politics.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Comparative Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Introduces the study of comparative politics, with particular focus on democratization, economic development, globalization, states, and civil society. Comparison of political institutions, parties, gender systems, and national and ethnic conflicts. Relevant case studies.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. P. Gill

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
POLIT-111-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Confessions, Novels & Notebooks: The Self & Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
What is the relationship between personal experience and political theory? How do political thinkers grasp and articulate the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of three illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. This coming year those figures will be St. Augustine, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, and Simone de Beauvoir.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 20

POLIT-112-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others’ presentations.
Prerequisites: limited to first-year students
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. V. Ferraro
Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-116-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) World Politics
(International Relations 116fs)
This course is a survey of contending approaches to the study of conflict and cooperation in world politics. Examines key concepts—including balance of power, imperialism, collective security, deterrence, and interdependence—with historical examples ranging from the Peloponnesian War to the post-Cold War world. Analyzes the emerging world order.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. V. Ferraro, Ms. K. Khory, Mr. S. Hashmi

(Fall) Women and the Law - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an assessment, in terms of political power, of how the legal order impinges on women in American society, with an examination of the legal rights of women in a number of areas of substantive law: equal opportunity in education, employment, and credit; selected aspects of the law governing marital status, the family, and property.
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Stewart

POLIT-210-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Minorities and the Law - *Not offered this year/term
POLIT-211-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(F Writing-intensive)
Sophocles (<I>Antigone</I>), Plato (<I>Apology</I>, <I>Crito</I>, and <I>Republic</I>), Aristotle (<I>Nicomachean Ethics</I> and <I>Politics</I>), Augustine, Aquinas, Beza, and Mornay. Recurring issues include the obligation to obey and disobey, tyrannicide, the role that different kinds of knowledge or reason ought to play in politics, distributive justice, who ought to rule and who ought not to rule, alternative classifications of political societies, and the uses of arguments by analogy in politics.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-212-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Modern Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
The political writings of Hobbes, Locke, Mill, Rousseau, Burke, Hegel, and Marx in the context of a sustained critique of liberal individualism (natural rights and utilitarianism) and an examination of radical egalitarian, conservative, and revolutionary alternatives. Recurring issues include law and liberty, the fragility of the good life, "human nature" arguments in politics, contrasting understandings or justifications of "private" property, and the claims by Hobbes, Rousseau, Hegel, and Marx, after having dismissed all predecessors as mistaken or superficial or both, to have refounded and then completed the enterprise of political theory.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. S. Ellenburg

POLIT-213-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) African Political Systems - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers a comparative study of selected political systems, emphasizing political conflict in southern Africa. Examines African participation in regional and universal international organizations.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Stewart

POLIT-216-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) United States, Israel, and the Arabs - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Asian Studies 224s; International Relations 222s)

POLIT-225-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Taxation and the Values of Democracy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Complex Organizations 220f)

POLIT-226-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Middle East Politics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(International Relations 211f; Asian Studies 209f)

POLIT-233-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Invitation to Feminist Theory - *Not offered this year/term
(Women's Studies 233f)
On the complex ties and tensions between sex, gender, and power. We explore the overlapping dualities of the feminine and the masculine, the private and the public, the home and the world. We examine different forms of power over the body; the ways gender and sexual identities reinforce or challenge the established order; and the historical forces behind upheavals in sexual relations. Finally, we probe the cultural determinants of "women's emancipation."
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks

POLIT-234-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) The United States and Iran - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(International Relations 224s)

POLIT-235-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Constitutional Law: The Federal System
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the effect of U.S. constitutional law on the distribution of power. Topics include judicial review and congressional control of court jurisdiction; the rise of federal regulation of the economy; and the relative powers of the president, Congress, and the courts in national emergencies, foreign relations, and war. Case method.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

POLIT-236-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Civil Liberties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the federal Constitution and civil liberties. Topics include the authority of the courts to read new rights into the Constitution; equal protection of the laws (and affirmative action) for racial minorities, women, and others; and freedom of expression. Emphasis on the appropriateness of different methods of interpreting law.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

POLIT-237-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) European Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores domestic, regional, and international political issues in contemporary Europe, including an introduction to political institutions, political participation, and public policy in several European states. Special attention to the European and democratic transformation in Central Europe.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department, Politics 106 recommended
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. P. Gill

POLIT-244-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Urban Politics and Policies - *Not offered this year/term
This course examines the political character of contemporary American cities, giving particular attention to the relationship between urban politics and policy making. The course investigates the historical, structural, and ideological factors—economic development, race, ethnicity, gender, governmental forms, federal aid, pluralism—that constrain policy making and shape the sharing and contesting of urban space. Case studies demonstrate the interplay of political and economic factors in urban development.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Smith

POLIT-245-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Policy Making in America: Congress and the Bureaucracy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines power, politics, and policy making in both Congress and the federal bureaucracy. The section on Congress focuses on such questions as the following: How is policy made in Congress? Are there political biases in congressional procedures? Which political groups exert the most influence? How? In the section on bureaucracy, we consider such questions as the following: Why is there so much bureaucracy in the modern state? How do administrators make decisions? What are the sources of bureaucratic power? What is an "iron triangle?" Can bureaucracies be made more responsive and democratic?
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. D. Amy

POLIT-246-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) American Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores limited government, popular sovereignty, representative institutions, checks and balances, republicanism, liberty, equality, democracy, pluralism, liberalism, and conservatism, and how these concepts have developed during three centuries of American politics and in contrast to European thought. The focus is not on the writings of the "great thinkers" but on the "habits of thought" of the American people and on ideas implicit in laws and institutions that affect the allocation of authority and power within the constitutional order.
Prerequisites: Politics 104, or History 170, 171, or 270, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

(Fall) Topics in Urban Studies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course draws on both historical and contemporary sources to address critical issues and problems facing cities. Topics are organized around the following questions: How have cities come to take their shape and character over time? How are economic and social inequalities mapped onto the urban landscape? How are differences of race, class, and gender negotiated through urban institutions and community struggles? Assignments for the course will utilize empirical data to explore conflict and change in a local city through different historical periods. This course will be taught simultaneously at two campuses. Students will be taught alternately by faculty from both institutions.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, introductory course in American history or social sciences or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. P. Smith

(Spring) Decision Making
(Complex Organizations 367s)
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?
Prerequisites: Politics 104, 245, 246, or permission of instructor, 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. C. Pyle

POLIT-371-01 - Politics - 2001-2002

POLIT-379-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in European Politics: Europe and the European Union
A research seminar. Europeans of both west and east are intensifying their efforts to broaden and deepen European integration at the same time that there has been a startling revival of ethnic conflict and nationalist agendas. Voters in Scotland and Wales elect their own parliaments while civil wars rage in the Balkans; Central Europeans struggle to solidify democratic nation-states in a global environment where some claim the nation-state may soon be obsolete. How are these centrifugal and centripetal forces interrelated?

Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics, including Politics 106, 237, or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. P. Gill

Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-380-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) The Politics of Ethnic Conflict

This seminar explores the dimensions of ethnic conflict in severely divided societies. We examine the nature of ethnic identity, the sources of group conflict, and the forms and patterns of group conflict. Case studies are selected for their contemporary importance and the different lessons that can be learned from them. A variety of approaches to address ethnic conflict are assessed. Students have the opportunity to concentrate independently on problems or cases in which they may have a special interest.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, and 8 credits in department or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. K. Khory

POLIT-385-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Fall) International Security

This course focuses on the recasting of global security concerns after the end of the Cold War. It pays special attention to the problems of economic and ecological security; the relationship between security and democracy; ethnic, nationalist, and regional conflicts; weapons proliferation; and the role of nuclear weapons in the post-Cold War world. The course concludes with an examination of specific initiatives for achieving both common and comprehensive security.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including Politics 116

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

POLIT-391-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Contemporary Political Ideas - *Not offered this year/term

This course explores such contested political concepts as liberalism, democracy, power, freedom, identity, alienation, civil society, and the public sphere—as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of twentieth-century thought. Each year the course is taught, we will highlight a different conceptual theme; the theme for this year is "nationalism and cosmopolitanism."

Notes: Prereq: jr, sr, 8 credits in department or permission of instructor; 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)

Instructors: Ms. J. Cocks

POLIT-392-01 - Politics - 2001-2002
(Spring) Portraits of Political Thinkers

This course explores the life, affiliations, and ideas of a single political thinker who has made a special contribution to the self-understanding of our age. We will focus on writings by that thinker but also will read biographies, secondary commentaries, and selected essays by authors to whom he or she is indebted. The figure to be studied this semester is Edward Said, who writes at the end of the age of empire on orientalism, hybrid identity, exile, the role of the intellectual, and humanism; and who has been controversial in the West because of his engagement in the struggle for Palestinian national self-determination.

Notes: Prereq: jr, sr, 8 credits in department or permission of instructor; 1 meeting (2 hrs, 50 minutes)

Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-104-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(January) The Psychology of Subjective Experience
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course explores techniques of introspection or mindfulness and their role in the study of psychology. We'll inquire into the nature of mind, and the use of introspection as a means to insight. We will also examine the role of subjectivity in the history of psychology, and why it is difficult to use as a method of research. Grade will be based on reflection papers due in each class, class participation, and a final paper.
Prerequisites: Psych 100
Notes: This course will not count for either the major or the minor in psychology; it counts as elective credit toward graduation only.
Instructors: Ms. S. Burggraf
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-201-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Statistical procedures are powerful tools for analyzing and interpreting findings and are necessary for accurate reading and understanding of research findings. This course provides an introduction to the most frequently encountered techniques for describing data and making inferences in psychological research. A variety of computer applications are used.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 4th hour, 1 lab (2 hours). Students should sign up for the lecture course, the 4th hr. and one lab section.
Instructors: The department
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

PSYCH-210-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Our behavior and experience as human beings are profoundly affected by the social worlds in which we live. This course surveys a range of topics within social psychology. How is our view of ourselves partly shaped through our interactions with other people? How do people perceive and come to know one another? How do attitudes develop and change? Under what conditions do people conform to, or deviate from, social norms? Student participation in group projects is an important part of the course.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Burggraf

PSYCH-211-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Psychology of Women
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
A multicultural feminist analysis of women's lives. Emphasizing the diversity of women's experience across ethnicity, social class, and sexuality, this course assesses the adequacy and scope of existing psychological perspectives on women. Students will examine women's lives through essays, autobiographies, memoirs, and fictional works.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. P. Romney

PSYCH-211-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Psychology of Women: Fall 2001: Gender Issues in Mathematics and Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Historical and contemporary views of women's participation in math and science will be examined. This is a community-based learning course and students will be engaging in various relevant, off-campus activities, such as talking with girls and women in the surrounding communities about their aspirations regarding science and mathematics.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus community-based learning time outside of class
Instructors: Ms. C. Morrow

PSYCH-212-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Complex Organizations 212)

PSYCH-213-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Psychology of Racism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
African American and African Studies 214f
Examines the psychological causes and emotional reality of racism as it appears in everyday life. Through lectures, readings, simulation exercises, group research projects, and extensive class discussion, students have the opportunity to explore the psychological impact of racism on both the oppressor and the oppressed.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor; preference given to sophomores
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. B. Tatum
Expected enrollment: 25

PSYCH-220-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Theories of Personality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog. etc. requirement
Diverse theories of personality will be reviewed with emphasis upon the determinants of personality, the stability of personality, and the effects of cultural context.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. S. Burggraf

PSYCH-230-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Developmental Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog. etc. requirement
Examines changes in cognitive, social, and emotional functioning including theory and research that illuminate some central issues in characterizing these changes: the relative contributions of nature and nurture, the influence of the context on development, continuity versus discontinuity in development, and the concept of stage. Includes observations at the Gorse Child Study Center.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. K. Stansbury

PSYCH-236-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Adolescent Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course offers a comprehensive introduction to human development during adolescence. It considers historical and cultural forces that contribute to adolescence as a distinct segment of the life span. Contemporary problems confronting adolescents--such as crime, violence, gender, race, eating disorders, substance abuse, and depression--are also examined.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Burggraf

PSYCH-240-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Visual and Auditory Perception - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why does the moon on the horizon appear so much bigger than when it is overhead, even though its distance from Earth is always the same? Why can't some people distinguish red socks from green ones? How do Magic Eye pictures work? This course examines physiological and psychological approaches to the study of visual illusions, color vision, depth perception, and many other perceptual phenomena. Although the emphasis is on vision, hearing and touch will also be covered.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-241-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Van Der Wege

PSYCH-250-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Neuroscience and Behavior 250)
This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 and 4 credits in biological sciences
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard

PSYCH-251-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Comparative Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. K. Hollis

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

PSYCH-300-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Fall) Seminar in History and Systems of Psychology: What Is Psychology and How Did It Get to Be Like This? - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

A seminar designed for senior psychology and neuroscience majors to probe the competing definitions and history of their discipline. Among topics to be considered (others to be suggested by seminar members) are these: the philosophic bases of psychology and its emergence as a distinct field of study; the persistence of dualisms (mind/brain, individual/social, nature/nurture); the struggle between quantitative and qualitative approaches to research; the fragmentation of the discipline in America after World War II; gender and the meaning of difference. Intensive reading of primary source materials and weekly writing assignments.

Prerequisites: sr Psychology or Neuroscience and Behavior major, or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. G. Hornstein

Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (1 hour, 50 minutes) plus fourth hour

Instructors: Ms. F. Deutsch

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor

(Women's Studies 333s(01))

This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)

Instructors: Ms. F. Deutsch

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-320-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Spring) Concepts of Abnormality
This course is a study of how maladaptive patterns of thought and action are understood from a psychological viewpoint. Behaviors ranging from neurotic to psychotic are studied in terms of underlying character structure and origins in childhood experience. Competing psychoanalytic theories are brought to bear on these phenomena.

Prerequisites: jr., sr., 8 credits in the department, and Psychology 230 recommended.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Senior psychology majors will have first preference.

Instructors: Ms. S. Burggraf

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-322-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Fall) *Psychoanalytic Psychology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This extensive examination of Freud's systematic psychology focuses on such phenomena as the effects of early experience, continuity and change in development, and similarities among and differences between individuals. Readings include selections from Sigmund Freud's earlier work and from the sweeping revisions of the 1920s. Criticisms and revisions of Freud are discussed. Throughout, ideas from contemporary psychoanalysis are compared and contrasted with those of Freud.

Prerequisites: Psychology 230, 220 recommended

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Spring) *Laboratory in Personality Research: Qualitative Methods

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This laboratory course focuses on the study of individual lives and explores interviewing as a qualitative research strategy for the understanding of human experience. The course aims to provide a forum to discuss the study of individual lives within the social sciences, to consider interviewing techniques and qualitative methods of data analysis, and to provide students the opportunity to conduct a study of their own using this methodology.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, 220, or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: Ms. S. Lawrence

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-324-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Spring) *Laboratory in Personality Research: Quantitative Methods - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Personality-relevant constructs such as attachment, adjustment, achievement motivation, communality, dominance, sociality, and others are usually studied among adults using questionnaires and inventories. A single large class research project will be conducted, with all students participating in all phases of the research.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201, and either 210 or 230 and permission of instructor

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002

(Fall) *Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Topic to be announced.

Prerequisites: Psychology 220 or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Instructors: The department

(Fall) *Lab in Developmental Psychology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course is a study of research methods in developmental psychology, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques for studying young children, adolescents, and adults. It encourages the student to think about the basic issues of developmental psychology research: the conceptualization of problems, design of research, choice of methods to be used, and ethical questions that might arise. Students complete a major research project.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, 230

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. B. Packard
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Laboratory in Psychological Assessment - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Historical development, theoretical bases, and critical evaluation of tests used to describe adult cognitive and personality functioning. Supervised practicum in test administration, scoring, and interpretation.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; and 230 or 320 and permission of instructor.

Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Note: Students must submit a written request to be admitted to the course, outlining their satisfaction of the requirements for the course and their reasons for wanting to take it. They must also schedule an interview with the instructor during the advising week.

Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-337-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Educational Psychology: Motivation - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Community-based learning course What influences our desire to learn, to participate in certain activities, or to become particular kinds of people? We will examine the topic of "motivation" using several perspectives, across age levels and in various settings. Drawing from a variety of resources, including autobiographies, research studies, and videos, we will target our own motivation through reflection and action and the motivation of others through active coaching and mentoring in a community-based setting.
Prerequisites: Psychology 233 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes). Requires a field component in a community-based site (2-hour block per week).
Instructors: Ms. B. Packard
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-339-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: The Neurobiology of the Mother-Child Relationship
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Could smiling at your baby affect her immune system? Can an infant protect her mother from depression? Do infants with secure attachments develop stress-resistant brains? We will attempt to answer these and other questions by reading the latest research. We will review basic neuroendocrinology, and then work from the following hypothesis: the extreme neurophysiological immaturity of human newborns allows early maternal care to play a role in shaping the development of the human brain.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 230, 250, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. K. Stansbury
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-339-02 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: First Love: Attachment Theory and Research - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The relationship with the infant's primary caretaker, usually the mother, develops in a complex way during the first year after birth. We will study what is now known about this relationship, how we know about its importance to the infant, and the variation in types of such relationships early in life. The importance of this first love for later development, in childhood, adolescence, and adult life will be considered. Methods of research will be emphasized and students will be expected to give class presentations.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 230 and permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course) Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100, 201, 200 and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-349-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar in Perception and Cognition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Topic to be announced.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100 or 110, Psychology 200 and 201
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Van Der Wege
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 250, and permission of instructor. Seniors and majors have priority.
Notes: 2 labs (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 12
PSYCH-351-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Laboratory in Animal Learning and Animal Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Several projects within such areas as feeding, aggression, reproduction, and learning are researched by students working in small groups. The course stresses the acquisition of research skills required for naturalistic and laboratory observation in the study of animal learning and behavior.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) plus 4th hour
Instructors: Ms. S. Tershner
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-352-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Laboratory in Sensory Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory course offers a detailed examination of selected topics in vision research, emphasizing the interrelations of anatomical, physiological, and behavioral data. Laboratory demonstrations and experiments introduce behavioral methods of study of sensory systems. Principles of function generally applicable to all sensory systems are discussed.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 240 or 250
Notes: 2 meetings, 1 lab (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. J. Cohen

PSYCH-359-01 - Psychology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior - *Not offered this year/term

(Fall) The Process of Teaching and Learning: Developing Literacy in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Through a balanced and integrated approach students will learn to develop literacy in early childhood/elementary schools. Class members will learn about emergent literacy, diagnosing language needs, integrating phonics skills in a literature-based program, the teaching of process writing, children’s fiction and nonfiction literature, and the use of portfolios for assessment. Course required for spring semester practicum students. Course evaluation is based on written and oral work done individually and in groups. Requires a field placement.
Prerequisites: Enrollment limited to students accepted to the practicum year program
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and prepracticum (4 hours per week)
Instructors: Ms. A. Page
EDUC-323-01 - Psychology and Education - 2001-2002
(Spring) Student Teaching in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 14; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students participate in full-time teaching in early childhood and elementary classrooms. A weekly seminar is held in which students learn how to develop an integrated social studies unit that implements the State History/Social Studies Frameworks. During the weekly meetings, students will discuss the practicum experience and learn about effective behavioral and classroom management strategies, integrating special education students, legal obligations of the teacher, and relations between home and school. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Notes: 5 days a week for 12 weeks; full-time student teaching in school site (includes Mount Holyoke's spring break); enrollment limited to students accepted to the practicum year program
Instructors: Ms. A. Page

(Fall) Observing and Assisting in Early Childhood and Elementary Settings
Credits/PE Units: 1-2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Discussions and fieldwork provide the student with an opportunity to understand the classroom as a learning community. The tutorial includes several meetings focusing on the student's participant observations and assigned readings. Fieldwork includes a minimum of 20 hours on site, individually scheduled in early childhood (pre K-3) or elementary (1-6) settings. Assessment includes in-progress reports and a final project related to fieldwork. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: 1 credit (20 hours of fieldwork); 2 credits (40 hours or more of fieldwork)
Instructors: Ms. A. Page

(January) Observing and Assisting in Early Childhood and Elementary Settings
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
When electing this course as a January Term course (324j), students are expected to complete supervised fieldwork full-time every day during the January Term in a school site or other educational setting where daily supervised interaction with children is available. Fieldwork may be completed in sites near the campus or beyond the Five College area. This course is required of all students doing teacher licensure at the early childhood or elementary levels and must be taken in the junior or senior year. Graded on a credit/no credit basis.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: Arrangements for these placements must be discussed with the instructor and finalized in November before registering for the course. Check the College Street Journal (notices section) for specific details and the date of the first meeting.

EDUC-403-01 - Psychology and Education - 2001-2002
(Summer) Cognitive Processes in Mathematics Learning I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is a study of the teaching and learning of mathematics. Education 403 has three components: participants learn mathematics, reflect on their own learning, and consider the contexts in which learning occurs; analyze student thinking through viewing videotapes, reading articles that include examples of student discourse, and conducting one-on-one interviews; and, through a computer component, integrate technological tools and problem solving to teach mathematics. The course is graded on a credit/no credit basis.

Notes: For teachers of grades K-6 and grades 7-12; 5 meetings per week, 8 hours per day for 10 days (approximately 80 hours). Offered summer only
Instructors: Ms. V. Bastable, Ms. J. Lester

EDUC-413-01 - Psychology and Education - 2001-2002
(Summer) Cognitive Processes in Mathematics Learning II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Education 413 has three objectives: to challenge teachers to examine, develop, and extend their own theories of the learning process; to provide opportunities to explore mathematical concepts through problem solving; and to help teachers develop skills in creating classroom activities and environments that encourage exploration of ideas, student discourse, and conceptual understanding. The course is graded on a credit/no credit basis and can be taken twice for credit.

Prerequisites: Education 403,423,424,425,426, or 427
Notes: 5 meetings per week; 8 hours per day for 10 days (approximately 80 hours). Offered summer only
Instructors: Ms. V. Bastable, Ms. J. Lester

(Fall) Introduction to Judaism - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Jewish Studies 104fs)

Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Fall) Trajectories through the Bible: Reading the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course introduces students to the authoritative texts of Judaism and Christianity by following the trajectories of three themes in the Hebrew Bible and Christian New Testament. These three defining "moments," the Exodus, the establishment of Jerusalem Temple worship, and the Babylonian Exile, will be situated in the biblical history of Israel. Christianity appropriates and reinterprets these themes in the context of emerging claims about the life and work of Jesus. The second portion of the course will focus on these themes in the Gospels, Epistles and other writings of the Christian Scriptures and on their "afterlife" in earliest Jewish and Christian post-biblical writings.

(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Philosophy 226f)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the work of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.

(Fall) Spirituals and the Blues - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines and analyzes African American music as a primary textual source for understanding philosophical and religious language within that community. It addresses various questions: What are the central philosophical and religious themes expressed within the text? How are these themes reflected in the music? What is the intrinsic character of the spirituals and the blues? Is there such a thing as a "music of oppression?" In what way(s) does the black experience contribute to philosophical and religious understanding, as well as the use of language? What does this material suggest about the connections among art, literature, and experience?

RELIG-235-01 - Religion - 2001-2002
(Fall) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 235f)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Sohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Fall) The Quest for Meaning after the Holocaust - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 245fs)
The destruction of European Jewry by the Nazis during the Second World War was the most devastating tragedy in all of modern Jewish history, and perhaps of the twentieth century as a whole. The Holocaust poses fundamental questions for all people about what it means to be human, the nature of social community, and about religious faith and tradition. This course explores significant attempts to come to grips with these moral and philosophical questions through literature, religious thought, and film, including the work of Paul Celan, Primo Levi, Elie Wiesel, Aharon Appelfeld, Arthur Cohen, Richard Rubenstein, Jean Amery, Claude Lanzmann, Eva Fogelman, and Pierre Sauvage.

RELIG-323-01 - Religion - 2001-2002
(Fall) Topics in Contemporary Theology: Feminist Theologies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A study of various theological movements since the early 1960s: liberation, feminist, process, death of God, new-evangelical, new-oriental, charismatic religions, theological hermeneutics. This course will cover the genesis, historical development, and contemporary settings of these movements.
Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Naomi Goldenberg, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor

(Spring) Asian Religions: Sacred Narratives in the Hindu Tradition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course provides the opportunity for intensive study in Asian religious traditions. One of the traditions listed here is considered each time the course is offered. The student may therefore receive credit more than once.
I. The Islamic Tradition
II. History of Chinese Thought
III. Japanese Religious Traditions
IV. Hinduism
Telling, enacting, and listening to stories are essential modes of religious activity in the Hindu tradition. We will study the major types of sacred narrative in Hinduism, including creation myths, epic tales, stories of the gods, women's stories, and the lives of exemplary figures such as the saint-devotees of Shiva and Krishna. The tales will be examined from the perspectives of narrative structure and meaning in relation to forms of expression (e.g., the icon of the dancing Shiva, the Ramayana epic theater), and contexts (e.g., women's rites and the festival of the great Goddess).
Prerequisites: 200-level religion course or permission of instructor

(Fall) Seminar in American Religious History: The Shakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(American Studies 301f)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
This course will examine the historical and cultural creation of the Shaker society. The religious vision of an alternative society whose birth and development paralleled that of the new American nation; by contrast and by imitation, the separate Shaker route thus offers an intriguing critique of American society and its values, and an unusual laboratory for examining a religious community based on a dual godhead.

(Spring) Seminar in American Religious History: The Long Shadow of Anne Hutchinson
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(WS 333)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
When Anne Hutchinson was banished from Boston in 1638, allegedly for teaching "antinomianism," she left behind a number of unresolved practical and theological puzzles concerning the interplay between body and spirit, grace and works, religion and politics. This course will explore the Hutchinson legacy by examining the social, sexual, and institutional permutations developed by several of Anne Hutchinson's "daughters," including among others, Ann Lee, Mary Baker Eddy, and Dorothy Day, and by reading contemporary theorists who address the continuing questions of belief, practice, and ethics.

(Speaking-intensive)
To be offered at Amherst College as Russian 43. The great Russian poet Aleksandr Pushkin spent the fall of 1830 on the Boldino estate. Those three months proved to be one of the most prolific periods of his creative life. During his time at Boldino, Pushkin worked on a variety of genres. He completed the novel Eugene Onegin, wrote poetry, short fiction, dramatic works, criticism, and many letters. During the course of the semester, we will become acquainted with his work in each of these genres. The close reading of Pushkin’s work from Boldino will provide students with an understanding of why Russians consider him their greatest poet. Taught entirely in Russian.

RUSST-150-01 - Russian Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Small Gems of Russian Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Not all great works of Russian literature could double as paperweights or flower presses. In this course we will study the gems of short Russian fiction. Readings will include fairy tales, plus, from the nineteenth century, short works by Pushkin, Gogol, Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, and Chekhov. From the twentieth century, we'll study Mayakovsky, Khams, and a selection of stories from the Soviet and post-Soviet periods. Assignments will include response writing, formal essays, and in-class writing.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. S. Scotto
Expected enrollment: 15

RUSST-205-01 - Russian Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) The Romanovs: Triumph and Tragedy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

RUSST-210-01 - Russian Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

RUSST-230-01 - Russian Studies - 2001-2002
(Fall) Building A Culture On Film: Russian Cinema
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Early Russian cinema (Eisenstein, Dovzhenko, Pudovkin, Vertov) created a revolutionary art form for the brave new world of communist Russia. That early inventiveness of language and form reverberated throughout the cinematic world. A survey of this rich film heritage gives strong visual resonance to the cataclysmic history of Russia and the Soviet Union (Kalatozov, Tarkovsky, Shepitko, Muratova) and to the cinema in the post-Soviet world (Mamin, Bodrov, Lungin).

(Spring) Evenings on a Funny Farm Near Dikanka: The Creation of Nikolai Gogol
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Gogol was a strange creature, but genius is always strange. - Vladimir Nabokov. Nikolai Gogol is one of Russia's greatest and most enigmatic writers. Revered by Dostoevsky, he created an idiosyncratic literary universe that has lost none of its original power with the passage of time. This course will trace the development of Gogol's genius from his early Ukrainian stories, through his tales of Saint Petersburg, to his comic masterpiece, Dead Souls. Special attention to Gogol's deployment of the comic, the fantastic and the grotesque to confront the reality of tsarist Russia.

(Fall) The Foreign Policy of the Soviet Union and Its Successor States - *Not offered this year/term
(Politics 264f)
Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without the study of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and, following the collapse of the USSR in 1991, the role played by Russia and Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex and multipolar "New World Order." What should U.S. policy be toward the emerging new states of the Balkics, Central Asia, and Caucasus?

(Fall) Utopia and Anti-Utopia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The twentieth century has been largely shaped by several nations' ambitions to build utopian societies. Russia and China have attempted to realize the vast promises of communism while Nazi Germany aimed to construct a perfect racist world. Beyond political struggle, wars, and revolutions, recent extraordinary achievements in technology have contributed to the utopian mindset. Are political utopias dead in the new millennium? How do cyberspace and the global village contribute to utopian thinking? What will be the role of utopia in the twenty-first century?

(Spring) Nationalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Politics 308s)
Preamble (for topics courses): Courses in this section satisfy the distribution requirement in social sciences.
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims?
What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

SOCI-122-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Social Structures, Social Roles, and the Self - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Introduces the symbolic interactionist approach to the study of the relationship of individuals and society. This approach stresses the priority of interaction between the individual and social structure through role taking and the importance of the individual as an active participant in a social process. Students focus on selected social arrangements within modern industrial societies: those of class, work, school, and family.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Modernity and Its Discontents
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will focus on significant issues in the field of sociology not covered in other courses in the sociology curriculum. Topics will vary.
This course examines the historical emergence and current prospects of late-modern Western societies. It explores the processes by which these societies developed in the course of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and continue to transform themselves. Central themes include growth and changes in capitalism; the significance of the democratic, industrial, and postindustrial revolutions; the social impact of a market economy; the culture of individualism and its dilemmas; issues of race and ethnicity; and mass politics and mass society.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123 or a course in social or political theory
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: K. Tucker

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Globalization and Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will focus on significant issues in the field of sociology not covered in other courses in the sociology curriculum. Topics will vary.
This course will examine current debates regarding the effects of "globalization" on development, and the dilemmas faced by developing countries in the current phase of neoliberalism. We will look at a few cases in detail, including but not limited to, India, Mexico, Brazil, and South Africa. Among the issues that we will examine are: How does globalization affect poverty and inequality? How does it articulate with and transform gender relations? How much autonomy do states possess in the global context? And, what kinds of political struggles are emerging around globalization?
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

SOCI-223-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Development of Social Thought
(Anthropology 223f)
This course examines the origins and development of sociological theory in the nineteenth century. Focusing on the three most important representatives of the classical tradition in sociology--Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim--we consider in detail the ideas of each, compare their perspectives on emerging industrial society, and assess their contemporary significance.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123 or Anthropology 105, soph, jr, sr
SOCI-224-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Practicing Sociology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course in archival and field research methods uses a sociological lens to magnify issues in research design for nonquantitative data. In this community-based learning experience, students will use resources from their own "community" to describe and contextualize some central theoretical issues in sociology, such as: What is a community? How is a community different from a statistical population, an organization or an institution? How are communities represented, measured, and studied? There will be hands-on experience with primary documents from the Mount Holyoke Archives, as well as interview material that students will collect, transcribe, and analyze themselves.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Sociology
Notes: Community-based Learning course; 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. E. Townsley

SOCI-225-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Survey Research and Data Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Introducing the logic and methods of social research, this course is concerned with a review of social science methodology; questions of measurement, design, and general research strategies; and specific discussion of sample survey techniques and the logic and practice of data manipulation and statistical analysis.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr and 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. E. Townsley

SOCI-227-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Social Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a critical survey of theoretical and empirical research on social inequality, stratification, and mobility. The central focus is class, race, and gender inequalities as they have changed during the post-World War II period in the United States (although we will look briefly at stratification regimes in other cultures and time periods). The concepts and methods of social stratification have wide application in sociology, economics, public policy, and administration contexts. As the course progresses, we will explore some of these applications as we wrestle with several policy issues currently confronting U.S. society.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. M. Desai

SOCI-231-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Fall) Criminology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course emphasizes the historical and theoretical development of the various approaches to the study of crime. Crime represents a handle by which we hope to grasp the more enduring problems and issues of human behavior.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 3 meetings (50 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran

SOCI-234-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Social Problems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This is a course on the social construction of social problems. It devotes almost exclusive attention to how a "problem" becomes a social problem; examining how atypical cases become regarded as typical; how definitions are expanded to inflate statistics; and how claim makers and advocacy groups manipulate the media to market social problems and solutions to the public.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran
SOCI-240-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Collective Behavior and Social Movements
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines instances of organized collective action in social, historical, and empirical contexts, from the labor movement of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries to the new social movements of today. We also explore various forms of unstructured protest, such as riots and demonstrations.
Prerequisites: 4 credits at 100 level in Sociology
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Mr. K. Tucker

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Comparative/Historical Sociology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.
This course is intended as a survey of some exemplary works in comparative and historical sociology. We will evaluate the range of methods chosen by various authors to answer some of the most important historical questions of our time such as, why do revolutions occur? Why have some countries turned fascist while others have developed bourgeois democracy? What are the causes and consequences of peasant rebellion? In order to understand how authors answer these questions we will examine the methodological underpinnings of their work and address how they ask historical questions and how they answer them. This course is about how sociologists ask and answer historical questions.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Ms. M. Desai
SOCI-332-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Fall) The Sociology of Criminal Law and Justice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines sociologically the criminal justice system that has developed to process law violators. Special attention goes to the formation of criminal codes; the purpose of penal sanction; the development and operations of the police, including corruption and brutality; the adult and juvenile court system; the prison; the prison hospital; and the future of imprisonment and crime control.
Prerequisites: Sociology 231 and senior major in sociology, senior major in other social sciences with 8 credits in sociology, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours)
Instructors: Mr. R. Moran

SOCI-333-01 - Sociology - 2001-2002
(Spring) Contemporary Social Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this critical survey of the main theoretical perspectives in contemporary sociology, we focus specifically on structural functionalism, symbolic interactionism, critical theory, feminism, and postmodernism. Besides gaining familiarity with these alternative perspectives, we try to identify the main axes of theoretical dispute in sociology and discuss the problems of evaluating and resolving conflict between theories.
Prerequisites: Sociology 223, 8 credits in sociology, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: Mr. K. Tucker

SPAN-219-01 - Spanish - 2001-2002
(Fall) U.S. Latino/a Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
After centuries of invisibility and marginalization, Latino culture and literature exploded on the American scene in the 60s. Chicanos, Cubans, Nuyoricans, and lately Dominicans and Central Americans have all contributed to create a diversified body of literature characterized by its bilingualism, biculturalism, and hybridity. This course will center on how U.S. Latino/a literature bears witness to identity formation, self-representation, and celebration of Latino culture and its people. It will explore a series of critical issues that define "latinidad" in the U.S. The course is taught in English.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr or fy with permission of department

(Fall) Colonial and Nineteenth-Century Latin American Literature: Fall 2001: Recasting the New World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the colonial period and/or the nineteenth century. The study of the colonial era will focus on different aspects of the encounter between European and indigenous civilizations and the formation of a literary discourse (i.e., chronicles and the novel). The nineteenth-century component will explore the process of nation building through literature, the development of literary genres, and the emergence of women's voices. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
The purpose of this course is to explore how contemporary novels and films have recast the colonial world. Focusing on a number of sixteenth-and seventeenth-century chronicles, we will analyze how certain images of the New World emerged, generating extraordinary myths that still prevail today. Topics discussed will be the concept of civilization and the heroic vision of the conqueror, the silencing of the Indian, the role of violence and repression, and the use of irony to undermine the colonial discourse and imagery. Readings will include works by authors from Mexico, Cuba, Argentina, and Venezuela as well as films by C. Saura, W. Herzog, and N. Pereira dos Santos among others.
Prerequisites: Spanish L235, L237, L244 or L246 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. N. Gerassi-Navarro

SPAN-332-01 - Spanish - 2001-2002
(Spring) Spanish Literature: Medieval, Renaissance, and Golden Age: Spring 2002: ¿Quién mete a una mujer en esto?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): In this course, students will study a topic drawn from Spanish literature of the twelfth through the seventeenth centuries. The period includes such prose masterpieces as El conde Lucanor, Libro de buen amor, La Celestina, Amadís de Gaula, Lazarillo de Tormes, El bissión, and Don Quijote de la Mancha; the Poema de Mío Cid, the poetry of Berceo, Garcíaiso de la Vega, and Grógora; the Spanish mystics Santa Teresa and San Juan de la Cruz; the theatre of Lope de Vega and Calderón de la Barca. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
The goal of this course is to familiarize students with early modern Spanish women's writings in various genres: secular and religious poetry, short novels, and drama. Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models: choice of genre, thematics, topos, and imagery. We will also explore women's historical roles in the politics of the time. Readings include works of such authors as Leonor de Cordoba, Sta. Teresa de Jesús, Ana Caro, and María de Zayas. Part of the class will deal with the ways in which twentieth-century feminisms can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by early modern women.
Prerequisites: Spanish L235, L237, L244 or L246, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours, 50 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. N. Romero-Díaz

SPAN-341-01 - Spanish - 2001-2002
(Spring) Contemporary Latin American Literature: Spring 2002: The Mexican Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will concentrate on the various literary genres and cultural movements that have shaped Latin America from modernism to the present. Topics will focus on different genres and the expression of diverse ideologies through literature. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
This course will examine the impact of the Mexican Revolution (1910-1920) on the formation of culture and national identity in twentieth-century Mexico. We will explore how the armed conflict served both as a source of inspiration and as the object of fierce critique in the cultural revolution that followed the violent decade of the 1910s. Through an examination of novels, plays, and film, we will consider how the revolution raised questions about modernity, race, class, gender and sexuality, authenticity, corruption, and violence that continue to influence cultural production decades later.
Prerequisites: Spanish L235, L237, L244 or L246 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)

SPAN-351-01 - Spanish - 2001-2002
(Spring) Latin American Thought: Spring 2002: Crisscrossing the Americas: Comparative Perspectives on Cultures of the United States and Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(American Studies 2015, Latin American Studies 2026)
Preamble (for topics courses): How does Latin America think about itself? The purpose of this course is to introduce students to different ways in which Latin Americans have approached the problems of self-definition and cultural identity. Readings will explore how various authors have addressed such complex issues as colonialism, mestizaje, literacy, regionalism, and feminism, among others. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once. This course may be applied towards the Spanish major if written work is done in Spanish.
What is America? ¿Qué es “América”? Does the name refer to a single nation, a continent, or a hemisphere of diverse nations, peoples, and cultures? Who defines the meaning of “America” and in what contexts? This course will explore the history and consequences of these conflicting meanings, from Latin American, Caribbean, and North American perspectives. Within a comparative approach, the course will focus on specific topics, such as colonial encounters, slavery and race, nation and empire building, and mass-media stereotypes.
Prerequisites: Spanish L235, L237, L244, or L246 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: Ms. N. Gerassi-Navarro

SPAN-352-01 - Spanish - 2001-2002
(Fall) Spanish Literature: Twentieth Century: Fall 2001: From Buñuel to Almodovar: The Spanish Cinema
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): In the twentieth century, various crises mark the history of Spain and profoundly affect its literature: the Spanish American War (1898), the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939), Franco's dictatorship, and the transition to democracy. This course will cover the literary genres and aesthetic movements of these historical moments. Since the topic varies each time the course is offered, a student may receive credit more than once.
This course will study, from a variety of critical and aesthetic perspectives, major works by representative Spanish filmmakers, such as Luis Buñuel, Juan Antonio Bardem, Luis García Berlanga, Victor Erice, Pilar Miró, Josefina Molina, José Luis Garci, and Pedro Almodovar. Special attention will be given to understanding film in its cultural and historical context, as well as to the creative process of adapting literary works into film. Weekly screening of the films will be scheduled.
