This course will examine the work of contemporary American filmmaker Terrence Malick. While taking into account technical aspects (cinematography, music), ours will be a largely thematic discussion, looking at recurring themes such as good vs. evil, nature vs. culture and spirituality. Selected critical essays will deepen our conversation and reveal some of the myriad literary, philosophical and theological texts that serve as the conceptual underpinnings of Malick's films. We will also discuss why these films, especially The Tree of Life (2011), have proved so polarizing, provoking intense and vehement reactions, both positive and negative, on the part of spectators around the world.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: History and Bollywood - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; History 101)

This course will concentrate on the relationship between Bollywood (or the Bombay Film Industry) and history. How do Bollywood films produce the past? What historical moments are they interested in capturing? How do these images and narratives compare to those produced by historians? The purpose of this course is to introduce students to South Asian history, to challenge them to think critically about film production, and to test and strengthen their writing skills.

(Fall) Introduction to Film

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course teaches the basic concepts, vocabulary, and critical skills involved in interpreting film. Through readings and lectures, students will become more informed and sophisticated observers of the cinema, key examples of which will be screened weekly. While the focus will be on the form and style of narrative film, documentary and avant-garde practices will be introduced. The class will also touch upon some of the major theoretical approaches in the field.

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: The Moving Image in Contemporary Art
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 290)
This course will survey the rise of the motion picture as both subject and mode in art since 1960. The development of video art, from monitor and installation to projection and flat screen, opened up new channels for performance and sculpture. But the rising presence of 16mm film in galleries (Tacita Dean) as celluloid disappears from movie theaters amplifies a trend that also includes artists as feature filmmakers (Julian Schnabel and Cindy Sherman), Christian Marclay's use of cinema's past in The Clock (2010), and Matthew Barney's reliance on the Guggenheim as set and cinematheque.

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Transforming Visions: Homage to German Women Filmmakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231f-02)
Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (tragi)comedy in film.

(Fall) Film Genre: Film Genre and Gender - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204F-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.
This course examines the development of Hollywood film genres largely in the post-studio era, particularly the Western, the Melodrama, the Science Fiction and Horror film, and film noir. We will consider the evolution of these four genres in relation to changes in the film industry and in American society, especially in relation to gender.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; GERM 231)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
A study of such representative films from Germany's "Golden Age" as Wiene's Expressionist film noir, The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, Lang's sci-fi classic, Metropolis, and psycho-thriller, M., Murnau's Dracula film, Nosferatu, and Pabst's prostitution study, Joyless Street. Emphasis on investigating historical and sociological background; influence of Expressionist theater; advent of sound; the "New Woman"; genesis of horror, action, and utopian film; influence on New German Cinema and contemporary popular culture. Includes such "remakes" as Herzog's Nosferatu, the 2002 anime Metropolis, and music videos by Queen, Madonna, Lady Gaga. Includes discussion with specialists and students in the U.S. and Germany.

(Spring) Film Authorship: Cinephilia and the Auteur--Forests and Trees - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
In his review of Bitter Victory (1958), Jean-Luc Godard declared: "the cinema is Nicholas Ray," In his study The American Cinema: Directors and Directions 1929-1968, Andrew Sarris placed Ray just beneath the "Pantheon Directors" in a lovely named but secondary grouping he called "The Far Side of Paradise." This course will dive into this fascinating period of film criticism and cinephilia (the 1950s and 1960s). By examining the French response (Andre Bazin and Cahiers) to the American cinema (mainly of the 1940s and 1950s), and by looking at the films of directors like Ray, Howard Hawks, and Fritz Lang, we will explore the French influence on American and British critics.

(Fall) Film Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory through Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 221B-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
We will be reading a number of key feminist texts that theorize the construction of sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. We will study these shifts through the analysis of a few moving pictures, or, to put it differently: all you always wanted to know about feminism, but didn't think to ask filmmakers such as Almodôvar, Hitchcock, Jarman, Pasolini, Varda, and others.

(Spring) Film Theory: Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Philosophy 275-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.

(Spring) Production Seminar: Documentary Workshop: Advanced Video Production
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Preamble (for topics courses): An advanced course in the theory and practice of film/video production as an art form. Topics for the seminar will vary from year to year. In this class, we will take skills and insights gained in introductory production courses and develop them over the length of the semester through the creation of one short documentary project, 10 minutes long. We will explore the ethical questions and ambivalence inherent in this medium, seeking complex answers to difficult questions about representation and the often blurry lines between fiction and non-fiction. We will watch documentaries each week, films that introduce us to new ideas and information both in their content and in their form. This course has a Community-Based Learning Component.

Prerequisites: Beginning video production or its equivalent. Application and permission of instructor required. Application available through Film Studies Web site.

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged.

(Community-based learning course; Anthropology 310f-01)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 and 4 additional credits in department

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Montage: Millimeters or Miles - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Holli Frampton claimed that it was "from [Eisenstein's] montage that we, all of us, measure our distances, in millimeters or in miles." Frampton's "all" extends beyond those directly involved with the cinema, echoing Eisenstein who stated that he was "interested in everything besides the cinema," and who once began an essay with this epigraph from Goethe: "In nature we never see anything isolated, but everything in connection with something else which is before it, beside it, under it, and over it." This seminar will focus on Eisenstein's films and writings, pursuing their reverberations in Hollywood (e.g., Lang, Sirk) and the avant-garde (e.g., Brakhage, Sonbert, Child).
Prerequisites: 8 credits in film studies including 201 or 202 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre - *Not offered this year/term
(Theatre Arts 350b(01))
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Rundle

(Fall) Topics in Experimental Film: Home Movies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This course examines that strain of the American Avant-Garde that finds its raw material in the domestic and quotidian world of everyday life, which it shapes through various, often highly complex editing practices. The theoretical work for the course is centered on the notion of duration; some of the filmmakers to be considered include: Stan Brakhage, Marie Menken, Marjorie Keller, and Peggy Ahwesh.

(Spring) Topics in Experimental Film: Women Experimental Filmmakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or 203
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)

FLMST-360-01 - Film Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Film Genre: Expired Horror?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.
The horror film stands at the core of the body genres; however, in 2013 it may be hard for us to experience visceral impact from films made at a time that, in some ways, looked so different from our own. This course will survey the genre from 1896 to 1968, the year that the rating system was introduced in the United States. Yet our scope will be international, tackling not only Hollywood's Universal Horror, but the UK's Hammer Horror, Mexican Horror, Les yeux sans visage (1960), Italy's Mario Bava, and precursors to J-Horror.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and 1 screening (2 hours, 30 minutes)
Instructors: K. Eisenstein
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Bollywood : A Cinema of Interruptions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

(Latin American Studies 387s (03))

(In English) This seminar offers an interrogation of the ways in which Latinas and Latinos are represented in the cinema. We will explore early portrayals of Latinas and Latinos in film history and then move onto contemporary cinema with a focus on race, class, gender and sexuality in these representations. Employing multiple aesthetic and disciplinary approaches we will analyze commercial films alongside independent films with particular attention to the market-driven and political mandates of these projects. We will focus on films by both Latina/o filmmakers and non-Latina/o filmmakers interrogating the multifarious points of entry of these artists.

The relationship between colonizer and colonized is two-fold: on the one hand a visible, immediate (military, economic, and political) domination, and on the other, a more subtle, less visible (ideological) domination. These will be explored through texts (literature and films) representing both the metropolitan and the native, from the colonizer's point of view. This course will discuss first how, through its writers and filmmakers, France projected itself onto the imagination of colonized Africans and second, how, in response, Africans appropriated the pen and the camera to convey their perception of their French experiences with the metropolitan Other.

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Africa: The Last Cinema

(French 370)

With the rest of the world, in 1995 filmmakers from the whole African continent met in Ouagadougou, to celebrate the Century of world cinema. This also gave African filmmakers an opportunity to reflect on their 30 years of film practice. Today, only a year after most former French colonies in Africa have celebrated the 50th anniversary of their independence, African cinema is also entering its fifties. This course will introduce students to a half a century of African cinema with a special attention to its history and its search for survival and self identity within world cinema.

Prerequisites: Taught in French. 12 credits in French including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and instructor

Instructors: S. Gadjigo

Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Ousmane Sembene - *Not offered this year/term

Born in 1923 in Senegal, the writer/filmmaker Ousmane Sembène is one of the rare witnesses of the three key periods of contemporary African history: the colonial period; the period of struggle for political and economic independence; and the period of effort to eliminate neocolonialism through the rehabilitation of African cultures. This course is entirely devoted to the works of Ousmane Sembène and will explore the key moments of his life, his activism in European leftist organizations, his discovery of writing, and most of all the dominant features of his film work.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor

Notes: Taught in French. Component course for Film Studies

Instructors: S. Gadjigo

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Advanced Studies in Visual Culture: Memory (of) War - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340)
The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the repressive, right-wing military regime of Francisco Franco (1939-1975) have shaped contemporary thought and cultural production in Spain. Cinema in particular shows a persistent concern with war and memory. The films studied in this course raise a number of philosophical and political questions to this effect. How does the devastation of war register through the medium of film? How do censorship and propaganda condition memory, and how does the past return in a postdictatorship? What and why do people choose to remember or to forget? Films to be studied include both mainstream commercial features and experimental works, and range in genre.
Prerequisites: Spanish 221 or Spanish 240, or permission of instructor
Notes: taught in Spanish
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 331f (02))
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion, a reaction to "cinema de Papa," won an aesthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry.
Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor.
Notes: Taught in French
Instructors: C. Le Gouis
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Queer Kinship in Asian North American Literature, and Film - *Not offered this year/term
(English 334s(01))
This course examines alternative kinship formations in Asian North American cultural production. It will focus on the gender and sexual management of racial bodies since the nineteenth century—from the U.S. Page Law of 1875 that restricted Chinese women on the basis of their presumed sexual immorality to various forms of "racial castration" that mediate Asian masculinities. We will consider how alternative kinship arrangements and queer cultural projects expose and/or upset the narrative assumptions embedded in heteronormative scripts of nationalism.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English or film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours). Component course in Film Studies.
Instructors: I. Day
Expected enrollment: 15

FLMST-380-01 - Film Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Film Authorship: Henry James on Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 345f-(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
This seminar will examine the various screen adaptations of assorted novels by Henry James. We will read the novels against the films, exploring how James's texts translate—or do not translate—into film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English beyond 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: D. Weber
Expected enrollment: 15

FLMST-380-03 - Film Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Film Authorship: Natural's Not in It: Pedro Almodóvar - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema's favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or Spanish 221 or permission of instructor
Notes: Weekly evening screenings. Taught in English.
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 16

FLMST-380-81 - Film Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Shakespeare and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 312s)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
We will read plays by Shakespeare, watch films based on those plays, and study the plays, the films, and the plays-as-films. "Shakespeare" comes first, of course, both historically and as the source/inspiration for the films. Yet each film has its own existence, to be understood not just as an "adaptation," but also as the product of linked artistic, technical, and economic choices. Considering Shakespeare's plays as pre-texts (rather than prescriptions), we will look at early and recent films, both those that follow closely conventionalized conceptualizations of "Shakespeare," and those that tend to erase or emend their Shakespearean sources.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English beyond English 101, including English 211 or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Rodgers
Expected enrollment: 15

FLMST-390-01 - Film Studies - 2012-2013

(Spring) Topics in Film Theory: Queer Theory and Recent Queer Film in Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Spanish 320-08)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
In the 1990s GLBT liberation entered the public sphere as a major political force. Simultaneously, American academia produced and exported a new academic discipline: queer studies. As a consequence, the North American liberational model displaced cultural and theoretical models of sexuality of other countries. We will consider some of the key U.S. texts that have consecrated queer studies as a discipline and juxtapose them with theories and cinematic texts from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, and Mexico in order to recuperate cultural models under erasure in the wake of the U.S. mode's identity-focused and consumer-driven triumphalism.

(Fall) Intermediate Courses in Culture and Literature: Introduction to the Civilization of France
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): In order to explain the complexity of present-day France, this course will explore its most conflictual historical moments—feudalism, absolute monarchy, political and social revolutions. Students will learn the social and historical context of French art and architecture. Histoire et Patrimoine: While exploring decisive moments of France's past, students will examine the development of art and architecture, from the Middle Ages to the 20th century, and familiarize themselves with the mentality of each period (Medieval tapestries, Romanesque and Gothic cathedrals, Renaissance castles, Classic and Rococo art and architecture, and 19th Century schools of painting). Through a combination of movies, readings, pictures, and interactive links on the syllabus, students will prepare for oral presentations and essays. Course content can be found at http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/nvaget/.

(Fall) Period Courses: Topic: Le Moi féminin: fictions et vérités, 1100-1800
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.
A survey of the evolution of the woman’s voice, whether lyrical, spiritual or expository, from Héloïse to Mme de Staël, in comparison with their (often more famous) male contemporaries, both mentors and rivals. Other authors to include: female troubadours and trouvères, Marie de France, Marguerite Porete, Marguerite d’Oingt, Christine de Pizan, Permette du Guillet, Louise Labé, Marguerite de Navarre, Mme de Sévigné, and Françoise de Graffigny. All readings, discussion and papers in French, to consist in written responses and oral presentations (3 of each) with an individual choice of final paper or exam.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Notes: Note: Class format will involve introductory lectures for background, while students should expect to participate actively in open discussion of each text, to submit a midterm paper and somewhat longer final research paper.

Hugo's epic masterpiece, written in exile, has everything: ceaseless adventures, crimes and punishments, love, hate, obsession, heroes, villains, the battle of Waterloo, and civil war. The sympathetic everyman, Jean Valjean, condemned to hard labor for stealing bread and relentlessly pursued by the pitiless policeman Javert, encounters unforgettable characters. We will examine how Hugo situates Valjean's escapes within a framework of social injustice and good triumphing over evil, balancing his political and romantic ideas. Reading, discussion, film screenings.

(Spring) Period Courses: Molière in Context
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual perception of their French experiences with the metropolitan Other.

Viewing multimedia material of the digital age, we will approach vintage Molière's plays, and watch him go after the vices of his time: tyranny of fathers, hypocrisy of church people, absurdity of social and literary snobs. We will focus on women and servants, prime victims of absolutism. Context will be provided through films such as Molière, Le Roi Danse, Vatel, La Princesse de Cleves, The Rise to Power of Louis XIV. We will study Tartuffe, Don Juan, L'Ecole des Femmes, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Les Femmes Savantes. In this multimedia course students will achieve digital literacy, therefore the final project is a digital narration in iMovie. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: N. Vaget
Expected enrollment: 16

FREN-321-01 - French - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Topic: Don Juan, Valmont, Casanova: Iconic Latin Lovers
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.

If all is fair in love and war, are there rules for the game of power and seduction? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power in Spain, France, and Italy, will we witness a change for women? Students will explore such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, José Zorrilla, Molière, Beaumarchais, Goldoni; Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova's Memoirs. Students will be encouraged to explore works by major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods, and view relevant contemporary films such as The King is Dancing, and Goya's Ghosts. The final term project is a digital narration in the target language of the student.

Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French must read texts and write papers in French to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.

(Spring) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Topic: Le Roman d'initiation: Journeys to Maturity in the French Novel (post-1800)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon--an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode--relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.

In this course, we will study novels (and a few films) that chronicle and analyze the coming-of-age process of a principal character. In each case, we will travel with the character as she/he moves from ignorance to knowledge, from naiveté to sophistication, from inexperience to experience, from adolescence to adulthood. Comparing and contrasting a number of works from several different historical periods, we will define both the constants and the variables of the subgenre of the roman d'initiation and examine its corollary themes: the family, the individual and society, gender, sexuality, travel, education, egotism, and introspection.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: C. Rivers
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Courses in Francophone Studies: Topic: France Beyond the Mirror: The Image of France in Contemporary Francophone African Literature and Film
(Film Studies 370f(02))
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada. The relationship between colonizer and colonized is two-fold: on the one hand a visible, immediate (military, economic, and political) domination, and on the other, a more subtle, less visible (ideological) domination. These will be explored through texts (literature and films) representing both the metropolitan and the native, from the colonizer's point of view. This course will discuss first how, through its writers and filmmakers, France projected itself onto the imagination of colonized Africans and second, how, in response, Africans appropriated the pen and the camera to convey their perception of their French experiences with the metropolitan Other.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: S. Gadjigo
Expected enrollment: 16

FREN-361-01 - French - 2012-2013
(Fall) Courses in Advanced Language Study: Topic: Atelier de Traduction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses investigate the French language, past or present, and refine students' linguistics skills by focusing on nuances of written and spoken expression. Areas of study may include stylistics, translation, phonology, morphology, syntax, rhetoric, and dramatic art.
This course is designed to give students practical, hands-on experience in the translation, from French to English, of a literary work. We will begin the semester with readings in translation theory before moving on to the selection (by students) of a literary text. Students will work collaboratively in teams on a collective translation; teams will meet on a weekly basis with the professor for a detailed review of the work in progress. At the end of the semester, each team will submit the definitive version of their translation as well as a paper reflecting on the particular linguistic challenges encountered and their resolution thereof.
Prerequisites: Two of French 215, 219, 225, 230, and one 300-level course in French department.
Instructors: C. Rivers

(Fall) Advanced level seminar: Topic: Imagining Freedom: From Walls to New Worlds
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.
Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
Real and metaphorical confinement has inspired novels, plays, poetry, films, testimonials, and works of art in France and the French-speaking world. How have writers, filmmakers, and artists represented the experience of material, psychological and metaphysical constraints? How have they imaginatively transcended and transformed closed spaces such as prisons, convents, asylums, Romantic malaise, colonial rule, the “univers concentrationnaire,” illness, and the limits of the human condition? In what ways do the discourses of literature, art and cinema intersect with those of the laws and ideologies underlying institutions of social control? Works will span different centuries and cultures.
Prerequisites: 12 credits including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and instructor
Instructors: E. Gelfand

Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.
Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
With the rest of the world, in 1995 filmmakers from the whole African continent met in Ouagadougou, to celebrate the Century of world cinema. This also gave African filmmakers an opportunity to reflect on their 30 years of film practice. Today, only a year after most former French colonies in Africa have celebrated the 50th anniversary of their independence, African cinema is also entering its fifties. This course will introduce students to a half a century of African cinema with a special attention to its history and its search for survival and self identity within world cinema.

(Spring) Introduction to Gender Studies - *Not offered this year/term
This course examines the social and historical construction of gender from cross-cultural and interdisciplinary perspectives. The intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in various contexts, past and present, will be central to our inquiry. Topics will include the politics of appearance, women's economic status, sexual violence, racism, legacies of colonialism, the challenges of transnational feminist activism, and strategies for change. We will examine the development of feminist theory and its practices in various local and transnational contexts.

(Spring) Methods and Practices in Feminist Scholarship
How do scholars produce knowledge? What can we learn from differences and similarities in the research process of a novelist, a biologist, an historian, a sociologist, and a film critic? Who decides what counts as knowledge? We will examine a range of methods from the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, including visual analysis, archival exploration, interviewing, and ethnography, as we consider the specific advantages (and potential limitations) of diverse disciplinary approaches for feminist inquiry. We will take up numerous practical questions as well as larger methodological and ethical debates. This course provides a foundation for advanced work in the major.

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly: Women in the Spanish Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 230f (01))
During the Spanish Empire (sixteenth-eighteenth centuries), witches, prostitutes, transvestite warriors, and daring noblewomen and nuns violated the social order by failing to uphold the expected qualities of the ideal good woman and/or the expected sexual morality of the time. They were criticized, punished, and even burned at the stake. Students will study contradictory discourses of good and evil and beauty and ugliness in relation to women and their place in history. We will analyze historical and literary examples of so-called "bad" women in the Spanish Empire, such as Celestina, María de Padilla, Catalina de Erauso, and Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Notes: Taught in Spanish
Instructors: N. Romero-Díaz

GNDST-204-01 - Gender Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Gender and Animality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 204)
Are animals persons? Subjects? Do they have gender? Important shifts in public opinion have taken place concerning the moral, legal, and affective status of animals, yet liberal Academia still marginalizes the "animal question." In this course, we will draw on feminism's engagement against speciesism to chart diverse forms of human/non-human companionship. The analytic categories of gender and species will be examined side by side for their usefulness in understanding a world in which we no longer approach the human as the great exception. We will consider theory, fiction, films, art work, and the internet in approaching post-human concepts of life, personhood, and subjectivity.
Prerequisites: Gender Studies 101
Instructors: C. Gundermann
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Double Takes: Women's Artistic Production in Contemporary Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Spanish 240f(01))
As women perform gender, so too do they perform culture. In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays as part of the course.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Sexuality and Women’s Writing - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 286f-01)
An examination of how U.S. women writers in the twentieth and twenty-first centuries represent sexuality in prose. Topics to include: lesbian, queer, and homoerotic possibilities; literary strategies for encoding sexuality; thematic interdependencies between sexuality and race; historical contexts such as the "inversion" model of homosexuality and the Stonewall rebellion; and theoretical issues such as the "heterosexual matrix" and the "epistemology of the closet." Authors studied may include Allison, Bechdel, Brown, Cather, Gomez, Larsen, McCullers, Moraga, Nestle, Pratt, Stein, and Woolson; theorists may include Butler, Lorde, Rich, and Sedgwick.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Androgyny and Gender Negotiation in Contemporary Chinese Women’s Theater
(Taught in English; Asian Studies 215, Theatre Arts 234)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China’s social changes and the women’s movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

Eighteenth-century England witnessed the birth of the novel, a genre that in its formative years was both lauded for its originality and condemned as intellectually and morally dangerous, especially for young women. We will trace the numerous prose genres that influenced early novelists, including conduct manuals, epistolary writing, conversion narratives, travelogues, romance, and the gothic. In doing so, we will concomitantly examine the novel’s immense formal experimentation alongside debates about developing notions of gender and class as well as the feeling, thinking individual. Authors may include Richardson, Fielding, Sterne, Walpole, Fielding, and others.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; German 223)
As an extreme, but common experience, war creates, shapes, and contests normative constructions of masculinity, femininity, and gender relations in general. This seminar explores the concept of war, its causes, and its representation in memoirs, fiction, art, and photography within German-speaking realms with an emphasis on World War II and its aftermath. What impact does war have on gender relations within a matrix of other categories of identity, such as race, class, and sexuality? Materials include texts by Bachmann, Brecht, Celan, and other German writers and films such as Triumph of the Will and Das Boot.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement (History 275)
Introduction to major themes in U.S. history through the lens of women's history. Located both near the centers of power in American society and at its margins, the history of women as a social group is one of conflict and diversity. While women do not make up a coherent group, all share the unique experience of being "women" in class, racial, and religiously specific ways. Themes include Native American and Hispanic women during European contact and settlement; the impact of the American Revolution; benevolent women and the "fallen" women they hoped to help; enslaved women and the plantation mistress; women in the multicultural west; women's involvement in the Civil War and Reconstruction.

This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories, and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional fourth hour discussions.

Memory has a wide range of meanings and applications in many different contexts. What, for example, is the difference between artificial intelligence and human memory? How are national identities constructed around the commemoration of great events? What is the importance of memory in relation to concepts like justice and progress? How do rituals and performances work to determine gender and other identities? How can we understand the differences in episodic, implicit, long term, short term or working memory? For individuals and societies, what are the implications of the absence of memory? In this course, we examine psychological, social, political, and cultural approaches to memory.

(Fall) Feminist Theory: Introduction to Feminist Theory
This course will introduce students to concepts, figures and debates in feminist theory. What and who are the subjects of feminist theory? Who produces theory? In what forms does it appear? Following an interdisciplinary approach, we will explore feminist theory in relation to topics such as bodies, sexualities, citizenship, media, and science. By engaging feminist theory - past and present - alongside discussions of contemporary issues, we will also aim to achieve critical and experiential understandings of how societal norms, transformations and constraints inform feminist theorizing and feminist theoretical interventions.

(Spring) Feminist Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
We will read a number of key feminist texts that theorize sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. The postcolonial critique of feminism is a fourth vector we will examine, as well as anti-racist and postcolonial intersections with queerness. We will also study trans-theory and its challenge to the queer paradigm.

In the last 30 years, Latin America has seen the emergence of a large array of social movements that have shaped the political and economic processes in the region. From human rights to peasants' movements, from indigenous to unemployed movements, women have been increasingly involved in political activism. What has been the role of women in these movements? How have traditional women's roles been at the same time useful and an obstacle to their activism? How have women influenced the repertoires, frames, identities and strategies of these movements? We will answer these questions through the exploration of case studies in the region using academic readings, testimonies, and documentaries.

(Spring) Feminism and Capitalism - *Not offered this year/term
(Writing-intensive; Politics 271s)
This course will explore the relationship between feminism and capitalism in a contemporary context, particularly the way they reinforce and contradict one another. Examining this question through Marxist, liberal, post-structuralist, and post-colonial feminist theory, as well as the recent history of feminist and anti-capitalist movements, we will consider the economic and political underpinnings of feminist thinking and practice. Do certain feminisms carry implicit anti-capitalist commitments? To what extent are particular feminisms, especially liberal feminism, reliant upon capitalist structures and processes? What stakes might feminists have in preserving or uprooting capitalism?

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Disease, Destruction, and Death: The Figure of the Femme Fatale in French Narrative Fiction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 351s)
(Taught in French) An examination of vivid literary incarnations of the femme fatale, female characters eerily and inextricably linked to untimely, unseemly, or tragic death. Characters fall roughly into two categories: women who directly or indirectly bring about someone else's death; or women who serve as scapegoats, whose symbolically sacrificial death, at the conclusion of the novel, allows the other characters to continue their own lives. We will discuss these works as expressions of misogyny and fear of female sexuality while also attempting to reach broader conclusions about the implications of both individual texts and the femme fatale novel as a sub-genre.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women’s Autobiographical Narrative in French - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself. Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women Writers: Early Feminisms - Not offered this year/term

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 330f-01)

This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erauso, and María de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women Experimental Filmmakers - Not offered this year/term

(Film Studies 340s(01))

This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Sociology of Gender - *Not offered this year/term

(Sociology 350F-01)

This course focuses on the social production of gender relationships across a range of institutional, interactional, intellectual, and cultural contexts. The syllabus is structured around selections from major social, political, economic, and cultural theories of gender in addition to several exemplary empirical studies. Weekly topics include kinship and socialization, the contemporary moral orders of masculinity and femininity, family organization, legal systems and nation-states, war and rape, and the gendered organization and deployment of expert authority in a range of social settings.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Poetics: The Poetess, Prophet, and Revolutionary - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive; English 377s-01)

This seminar will explore innovations in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century women's verse. By investigating experiments with narrative, genre, stanza form, meter, and figurative language, we will contemplate what political, social, and ideological problems women writers attempted to present and perhaps solve through linguistic creativity. Larger questions include how to define "feminist poetics" and what potential such a project might afford poets and thinkers today. To this end, we will read selections of poetry in conversation with contemporary feminist theory as well as representations of women's incantation, prophecy, and singing by male poets and novelists of the day.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women and Gender in South Asia - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive; History 301F-04)

This colloquium will explore the history of South Asia as seen from women's perspectives. We will read writings by women from the ancient period to the present. We will focus on the diversity of women's experiences in a range of social, cultural, and religious contexts. Themes include sexuality, religiosity, rights to education and employment, violence against women, modernity and citizenship -- in short, those issues central to women's movements in modern South Asia. In addition to the textual sources, the course will analyze Indian popular film and the representation of women in this modern visual genre.

Anthropology 316f-01

This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Gender and War - *Not offered this year/term

English 372s-01

This seminar will focus on depictions of war in the context of gender. When asked how we might prevent war, Virginia Woolf suggested that we must invent new language and methods rather than follow the path of the traditional "procession of educated men." What language emerges in works about the effects of war? Texts will include essays and films as well as selected works by writers such as Alcott, Whitman, Crane, Twain, Hemingway, Woolf, Silko, Morrison, and O'Brien.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Beyond Logocentrism - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 350s-01)

Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Bodily Desires: Sexuality in the U.S. from 1900 to the Present - *Not offered this year/term

(History 301)

In this seminar, we will study the history of sexuality, desire, and bodies. The premise of this interdisciplinary seminar is that sexuality is both historically constructed (fluid and changing over time and culture) and embodied and lived (experienced for many as essential and unchanging). We will study experts who set out terms and frameworks for understanding modern sexuality; how in different ways and in different times communities of sexual minorities strategically used selected elements of expert discourse to forge their own narratives of self and desire. Students will examine sexual classifications--mainstream and "normal" or subcultural and "deviant"--as mutually constructed.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315, European Studies 315)
A gift of a voluminous scrapbook by an alumna (1909) studying German at MHC serves as the basis for this hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era when women in Europe pushed open all doors to higher education (1908); when women scientists, artists, and public leaders achieved prominence. Key question: how did women’s education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness? Research outcome: bilingual media project.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201; required online application, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html
Notes: Taught in German. Students with interest in this topic and in global and European studies, but insufficient or no prior knowledge of German, should enroll in German Studies 330 (2 cr.) taught in English.

(Latin American Studies 387f)
This seminar offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriqueñas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centroamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Theologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 323f)
Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Race, Gender, and Empire: Cultural Histories of the United States and the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 301f-04)
Recent cultural histories of imperialism—European as well as U.S.—have illuminated the workings of race and gender at the heart of imperial encounters. This course will examine the United States' relationship to imperialism through the lens of such cultural histories. How has the encounter between Europe and America been remembered in the United States? How has the cultural construction of "America" and its "others" called into play racial and gender identities? How have the legacies of slavery been entwined with U.S. imperial ambitions at different times? And what can we learn from transnational approaches to "the intimacies of empire?"

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Asian Studies 340f)
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women's supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieu of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly: Women in the Spanish Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
During the Spanish Empire (sixteenth-eighteenth centuries), witches, prostitutes, transvestite warriors, and daring noblewomen and nuns violated the social order by failing to uphold the expected qualities of the ideal good woman and/or the expected sexual morality of the time. They were criticized, punished, and even burned at the stake. Students will study contradictory discourses of good and evil and beauty and ugliness in relation to women and their place in history. We will analyze historical and literary examples of so-called "bad" women in the Spanish Empire, such as Celestina, María de Padilla, Catalina de Erauso, and Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz.

(Spring) Political Geography
Systematically studies political phenomena and their geographic expression, at a variety of spatial scales - national, regional, and international. Major themes include nation-state formation, boundary, territory, and ethnic issues, regional blocs and spheres of influence, and conflicts over access to and use of resources.

(Fall) Global Movements: Migrations, Refugees and Diasporas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The voluntary and involuntary movement of people around the globe is the focus of this course on migrations, refugees, and diasporas. Questions of borders, nativism, transnationalism, the global economy, and legality thread through this course as we consider the many social, cultural, environmental, economic, and political factors shaping decisions to leave a home or homeland. Historical and contemporary case studies, compelling theoretical texts, and geographic perspectives on these topics collectively animate our discussions.

(Spring) The Political Economy of the Middle East and North Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course, the Middle East and North Africa are studied in terms of their physical, cultural, economic, and political geography. Emphasis is placed on the environmental conditions and ecological evolution, population and demographic characteristics, the resource base and major problems in the social, political, and economic transformation of the region.

GEOG-217-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Spring) The African Environments
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The course provides an integrated analysis of biogeography, environmental change, and hydrology within each of the biomes found in the African continent: forest, savanna, desert, coast, wetland, mountain, and Mediterranean environments. It also discusses the impact and significance of human activity on African environments by exploring debates about soil erosion, desertification, biodiversity and depletion, and conservation and development.

(Fall) Atmosphere and Weather - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In this course we will learn weather forecasting skills. This will involve examining weather observations, satellite and radar images, surface and upper-air weather charts, and predictions made by computer models. We will have an opportunity to learn atmospheric dynamics and gain an understanding of the Earth's radiation budget. Topics will include severe storms, hurricanes, and winter weather.

GEOG-225-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Spring) People and Forests - *Not offered this year/term
Unplanned deforestation, which is occurring at unsustainable rates in many parts of the world, can cause significant hardships for rural communities by destroying critical stocks of fuel, fodder, food, and building materials. It can also have profound regional and global consequences by contributing to biodiversity loss, erosion, floods, lowered water tables, and climate change. This course explores the complex interactions between local communities and their forests. Case studies are used to illustrate policy options and provide a better understanding of the linkages between residents, local institutions, and forest health.

(Spring) Regional Planning - Special Topics - *Not offered this year/term
This course examines the post 2nd World War transition of US urban communities to suburban communities. The first part of the semester will survey urban design and planning efforts from the early 1900s through the 1940s and the abrupt change in focus during the post war suburban sprawl period. The second half of the semester will focus upon future urban and suburban development paradigms in the absence of cheap energy and a weakening economy.
Prerequisites: Any 200-level geography course
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOG-311-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminars - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in department and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200 level
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-312-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminars: Geographies of Racial Mixing and Multiraciality
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
The growing racial diversity of the United States is evident at all spatial scales, from the individual body, to the household, neighborhood, city, and state. This course examines this topic by first exploring the instability and power of racial categories and the spatiality of racial identities and privilege. We then focus our attention on historical and contemporary patterns of racial mixing, mixed-race partnerships, and multiraciality and think through the challenges that race poses.
Prerequisites: jr, sr and 4 credits from the department and four 200-level related social science credits
Instructors: S. Houston
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOG-313-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Fall) Third World Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers an interdisciplinary perspective on social, economic, and political features of contemporary development in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, regions referred to as the Third World or the South, and provides an introduction to theoretical origins and definitions of economic growth, development, and underdevelopment. It then addresses more specific aspects of development such as trends in population growth, migration, and urbanization; agrarian change; livelihood strategies and aspects of social welfare such as health, education, and shelter; poverty and the environment; and external economic relationships. The latter part of the course draws extensively on selected case studies.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in Geography and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200-level

Instructors: G. Kebbede

Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-319-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Spring) Africa: Problems and Prospects
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This course intends to offer an interdisciplinary perspective on selected contemporary development problems in Africa south of the Sahara. Central to the course will be an examination of the social, economic, and political consequences of colonialism, the physical resource base and ecological crisis, agrarian systems and rural development, gender relations and development, urbanization and industrialization, and the problems and prospects of regional cooperation and integration.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, soph with permission of instructor; 4 credits in department and 4 credits at the 200 level in geography or related social science.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-320-01 - Geography - 2012-2013
(Spring) Research with Geospatial Technologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Geographic Information Systems (GIS) and remote sensing are essential tools for geographic analysis in both the biophysical and social sciences. This course uses a semester-long project that includes field and laboratory instruction to allow students to develop hands-on skills with spatial data and analysis software. Students will be able to present potential employers with a portfolio containing examples of their ability to develop and execute a GIS/remote sensing application project.
Prerequisites: Geography 205
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 15

Geology

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Physical Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From earthquakes to landscapes, deserts to glaciers, landslides to limestone, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Learn to interpret the geology of your surroundings when traveling to new places and understand how geologic setting influences how people live. Lectures focus on exploring and explaining geological features and processes using concept sketches. Labs focus on mineral and rock identification, map reading, and local field trips.
Notes: Preference given to first- and second-year students during the first week of registration. Juniors and Seniors should check ISIS after that for availability.

GEOL-101-01 - Geology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Environmental Geology with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment. The labs covers selected geologic topics including methods for recognizing and interpreting environmental hazards, and developing strategies to address environmental problems.
Prerequisites: 4 credits; 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours), field trips.
Notes: Preference given to first- and second-year students with 25 spaces held for first-year students. Junior and seniors should register at the academic fair on a first-come, first-served basis. The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for GEOL 107.

GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2012-2013
(Fall) History of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Life forms have inhabited the surface of our planet for most of its history. Earth, as a result, has a unique geology that is unlike that of any other planet. In this course we will examine the interrelations between life processes and Earth's crust and atmosphere and how they work together to create the geology of the planet. Using both the rock and fossil record, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips will emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

(Spring) Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Because more than seventy percent of our planet is covered by oceans, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. We will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to affect weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to resources.
Instructors: A. Werner

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Art in Paleontology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Paleontological art brings ancient organisms back to life. In this course we will consider the role that art itself plays as a mode of scientific discovery. We will examine how artists can uncover key information about prehistoric life well in advance of its recognition by the scientific community. Our primary text will be Charles R. Knight: The Artist Who Saw Through Time. In a collaborative class project, we will identify the best and most representative works for a proposed exhibition at the Mount Holyoke College Museum of Art. For individual final class projects, students may choose between a research paper and presentation, and their own paleontological artwork in any visual medium.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Emergence of Animals

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

The origin of animals was one of the most important events in the history of earth. In this course we will review the history of the planet, learn basic geology, and then examine the problem of the origin of animals by studying Mount Holyoke's unequalled collection of Precambrian and Cambrian fossils. The emergence of animals has been called the Cambrian Explosion. We will examine what this means for our understanding of evolutionary theory.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Introduction to Climate Change

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar

Climate change is one of the most significant and hotly debated issues of our time. This course examines the causes of natural climate change over geologic time scales and recent (and projected) changes in the climate system. By studying archives of past climate records, we know that the Earth's climate has changed wildly in the past - how can we be so sure that current warming is caused by human activity? What can we expect in the future and what should we do now to avoid potentially devastating consequences?

(Fall) Rocks and Minerals

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course you will learn to recognize the common rock-forming minerals and principal rock types, and to understand their origins, properties, associations, and geological significance. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on field trips. Students must have a one-year high school earth science class or any 100- or 200-level geology course or Geography 107.

(Fall) Surface Processes

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The surface of the Earth is a history book of past environmental change. Every hill and valley, every erosional feature and every deposit is the result of processes acting at the Earth's surface. In this course we study these processes (e.g., glaciers, rivers, slopes, coastlines, windblown sand, frozen ground, cave formation, soil development) to better understand how they work and to understand the resulting landforms and deposits. With this understanding we can then observe different landforms and deposits and infer past processes (environments of deposition). Fieldwork and trips allow students to explore firsthand the processes that have created and modified the Earth's surface.

(Fall) Plate Tectonics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Speaking- and writing-intensive

Plate tectonic theory explains the origins of volcanoes and earthquakes, continental drift, and the locations of mountain belts and oceans. This course focuses on the geometry of plate tectonics. Topics include mid-ocean ridge systems, transform faults, subduction zones, relative plate motion, earthquake analysis, triple point junctions, and stereographic projection. Work includes individual research projects on active plate boundaries.

Notes: Comfort with geometry and trigonometry required.

(Spring) Paleontology-Stratigraphy

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
This course provides an intensive study of fossils, fossil preservation, relationships between major groups of organisms, depositional environments, sediments, sedimentary rocks, and the processes of sedimentation. We will employ the principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation to interpret ancient environments and paleoclimate, reconstruct paleogeography, and probe the characteristics of sedimentary basins. Laboratory exercises and field trips will introduce a variety of analytical techniques used to study sedimentary rocks.

(Spring) Groundwater - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major environmental concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we will cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students are required to prepare weekly problem sets, a term paper, and an oral presentation.

(Spring) Igneous and Metamorphic Petrology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Studies mineralogical and chemical compositions, classification, genesis, and mode of occurrence of igneous and metamorphic rocks. Special attention paid to the relationships between rock-forming processes and global plate tectonics. Laboratory study of representative rock suites in hand specimen and thin section, introduction to analytical techniques, including mineral optics, and one or more field trips.

(Spring) Seminar: Global Change - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

The Earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change and the prospects of a warmer world.

(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology and structural analysis: field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock strength, deformation mechanisms, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Most labs are field trips that involve data collection. Weekly writing assignments focus on presenting original research and distinguishing between observations and interpretations. During the final weeks of the semester, oral presentations and a final paper emphasize fluency in the published literature of structural geology.

(Fall) History of the Earth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the evolution and interaction of life, rocks, oceans, and air during the past 4 billion years of earth history. Some topics covered are: ice ages and greenhouse atmospheres, continental drift, extinctions and radiations of flora and fauna, the early evolution of earth, absolute and relative dating of rocks, and the geologic time scale. Labs teach geologic map interpretation and computer modeling of earth systems. Writing and speaking assignments focus on critical analysis of recently published research, proposal writing and the design and testing of earth science hypotheses.
Prerequisites: Any one of the following courses: Geology 100, 101, 201, 203, 224, Biology 223, 226 or Environmental Studies 200

(Fall) Seminars: Water Resources Evaluation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
The hill town of Shutesbury, Massachusetts, is concerned about its water resources. Simply put, the town needs to know if there are limitations regarding water supply or water quality that should influence decisions of development and zoning. This lab and field based course will collect samples and gather (from existing town records) data in order to provide a better understanding of the hydrologic conditions in the town. Weekly meetings will involve field sampling and laboratory analysis of water samples and the mapping of soil and bedrock hydrologic properties. Each student will pursue her own research project and present their results in a final report.
Prerequisites: Geology 203 or Geology 227 or Environmental Studies 200 and permission of instructor.

(Spring) Seminar: Uranium
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
Consult the department for information about future seminars.
Uranium (U) series dating has revolutionized our understanding of geologic time. U and its radiogenic daughters, like lead (Pb) and Thorium (Th), have provided us with dates for events as disparate as the formation of our solar system and the rise and fall of sea level in response to geologically recent climate and tectonic events. This seminar will survey the U-Pb, Th-Pb, and Pb-Pb methods; the common lead method; U/Th series disequilibria; and fission track dating. We may also cover Plutonium production and the mining and enrichment of Uranium for nuclear power and weapons. This seminar will meet most Friday afternoons.

German Studies

GRMST-100-01 - German Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Representations of the Holocaust
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
We explore public and personal narratives surrounding the Holocaust. What role do written and visual representations play in our understanding of the topic? Are there discrepancies between personal stories and public histories and what are they? With an emphasis on concentration camps, we investigate who has the authority to decide what happens on the grounds of the camps today. In addition, we will investigate how memorial sites, museums, and films communicate the Holocaust. A brief introduction into German history (1933 to 1945) looking at perpetrators, victims, and resistance groups will complement the discussion. We will take part in organizing an exhibition at Mount Holyoke.

Two semesters in one. Practice in speaking, reading, and writing German. Cultural and literary readings together with frequent use of Internet resources dealing with everyday situations and experiences in the German-speaking countries sensitize students to the cultural context in which the language is used. Online grammar and listening comprehension exercises, as well as weekly conversation sessions with peer assistant from Germany supplement class work.
Notes: 4 meetings (75 minutes) plus required conversation session (50 minutes)
Instructors: D. Van Handle
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) German Culture Today: Stories and Histories
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines historical, cultural, and political developments that continue to frame debates surrounding the twentieth century, WWII, the former GDR, and German unification. Thematic focus helps students develop accuracy, fluency, and complexity of expression. Reading, writing, and speaking are consistently integrated. Special emphasis placed on text organization toward expanding students' language abilities, with a gradual movement from personal forms of expression to written and public discourses.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: German Culture from 1800 to 2000 Visions and Discoveries That Transformed the Present: Voices of Makers and Filmmakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; European Studies 223)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic in the German tradition and its interconnections to larger transnational context. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.
The "long nineteenth century," with the political explosion of the French Revolution and scientific explosion of the steam engine, burst into modernity, defining itself and the "short twentieth century" in manifold areas: science, economics, politics, art, literature, education. Controversial values are attributed to concepts like secularization, nation-building, industrialization, and democratization. We will analyze representations in film and text of such discoveries and visions, e.g., in bacteriology, environmentalism, political and social upheaval, the concept of a democratic nation state, Marx's theories; Bismarck's German unification, the social-security system; and women's movements.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224). The 224 tutorial will stress film visions by women directors, along with working on revising written work from 223. 323 students are not expected to enroll in 224. 223 and 323 students share one class meeting; for the second weekly session, each group meets separately. (Spring) Topics in German Studies: The Art and Science of Revolution in German Cultures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; European Studies 223s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic in the German tradition and its interconnections to larger transnational context. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.
Revolutions are deeply embedded in cultural, economic, political, and environmental structures. Some are violent, some are peaceful; some evolve out of historical processes over long periods of time; and others emerge spontaneously without warning. Still others are material in nature, such as the industrial revolution or the end of the Berlin wall. The seminar explores the causes, forms, and impact of major revolutions in German cultures from the invention of the printing press to the most recent "Wende," that led to unification. Other revolutions include the French Revolution, the German Revolution of 1848, the founding of the Weimar Republic, and the student movement in 1968.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224).
Instructors: K. Remmler

(Fall) German Literature and Culture in European Context: Introduction to Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Critical Social Thought 250)
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century with emphasis on their relevance for contemporary issues. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, W.E.B. Du Bois and Franz Kafka focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life. Case studies of contemporary issues with attention to the impact of 19th century thinkers on critical theory in the 20th and 21st centuries also round out the course.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: Students with one or more years of college-level German may opt for German 232, a tutorial in close reading and translation of the German texts related to the material in 231. Students with no previous study of German are encouraged to take German 101 or 103 to complement this course.

(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 220f-03)
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.
Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (tragi)comedy in film.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Europe, and Germany, are poised at a crossroads to decide Europe's future. One group proclaims the "death of multiculturalism" and the staunch belief in a "Christian heritage" of the European Enlightenment, another calls for a vocal and violent rejection of all that is deemed "Western" and "immoral". The paths they would choose, paradoxically, might turn out the same road to intolerance and destruction of the perceived "other." This course emphasizes, in word and film, the voices of immigrant and Islamic-heritage citizens; it focuses on such key issues as human rights vs. freedom of religion; constructions of cultural and national identities; and the (dis)integrative role of language.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: majors/minors in the department should simultaneously enroll in both German Studies 232 (taken for 300-level credit) and GRMST-315 to receive major/minor credit, and read, write about, and discuss selected materials from GRMST-315 in German.

(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Faust vs. Mephisto: The Struggle for the "Western Soul" - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; European Studies 316)

Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms of "culture" and "civilization?" Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.

Faust is often called "the epitome of Western 'man'"; but the Faustian is tied to the struggle with the Mephistophelian, thereby signifying the dualism characteristic of the Western worldview. We will investigate the Faust topos from early sixteenth-century historical records to the present, including Spies's Faustbuch, Marlowe's The Tragical History of the Life and Death of Dr. Faustus, Goethe's Faust and Peter Stein's contemporary stage rendition, Lasker Schüler's female Faust, renditions by Th. Mann and Bulgakov, Gounod's opera, and the popular rock opera. In addition, we will probe into the social and cultural issues surrounding Klaus Mann's Mephisto and its censorship scandal in 1968.

Notes: Note: language requirement in German met only if seminar is taken in conjunction with 2-credit tutorial (German Studies 332) taught in German. For credit toward minimum major or minor in German Studies, students must also complete the 2-credit German Studies 332 tutorial, in German, this semester.

HIST-101-02 - History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Foundation: How Wars End
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
What social processes and institutions are necessary to bring an end to war? Do the efforts of citizens make a difference? What is the role of beliefs regarding identity? What about access to resources? What is the role of visible forms of restorative or retributive justice? This first year seminar focuses primarily on small, regional conflicts in Africa to explore the social processes and institutions which facilitate the resolution of conflict. We will begin in the late 19th century, but concentrate on more recent events. Course assignments are designed to develop skills in academic writing, historical research, and collaborative learning.

(Spring) Foundation: Gossips, Liars, Preachers, Truth-Tellers: Information Networks and (Mis)Communication in early America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
Social networks, multimedia, the rapid transmission of information across cultural boundaries and geographic distances: the twenty-first century can seem like a brave new world for communication. Yet the peoples of the Americas have long been involved in creative ways of connecting with each other. This course surveys the history of communication in early America, from wampum beads to oral traditions, speeches to incendiary political pamphlets, comets to newspapers, inscribed rocks to Neoclassical poetry.

HIST-101-03 - History - 2012-2013
(Fall) Foundation: The Country and the City
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
This first year seminar explores the history of the country and the city in modern Britain and asks how the conceptualization of these places has shaped our understanding of what it means to be modern. We will address topics such as industrial transformation, the city and country in fiction, rural political radicalism, preservation and recreation in the countryside, organic and environmental movements, and the contemporary politics of rural life. Through intensive reading, writing and discussion of these topics we will also practice the basic tools and techniques of liberal arts learning, from using a research library to formulating and crafting clear and coherent academic writing.

(Fall) Ancient Rome - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Classics 128)
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century with the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Roman Empire and those who came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean. Topics include their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics, and the Roman family. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.

(Fall) Modern East Asia, 1600-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
A comparative history of China, Japan, and Korea from the early seventeenth century to the present, with strong focus on regional interaction. After an introduction to early modern histories and cultures, we will examine the struggles of these countries to preserve or regain their independence and establish their national identities in a rapidly changing, often violent modern world order. While each of these countries has its own distinctive identity, their overlapping histories (and dilemmas) give the region a coherent shape. We will also look at how individuals respond to and are shaped by larger historical movements.

(Spring) Violence and Social Change in Modern Africa
This course examines processes of change that have shaped modern Africa. It seeks to provide both the information and the conceptual tools necessary for an informed interpretation of African affairs presented (and not presented) by popular media. Using fiction, historical narratives, and a wide range of interdisciplinary sources, the class examines nineteenth-century interactions of Africans and Europeans and the nature of colonial conquest, economic and social change during the colonial period, and the emergence of postcolonial African societies. A collaboration with recently arrived African immigrants is required of all participants.

(Fall) British Empire and Commonwealth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the expansion, consolidation, and eventual disintegration of the modern British Empire in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. We will examine this history with an eye to understanding the causes of empire, and its effects. Themes include formal and informal imperialism, the emergence of anti-colonial nationalism, the roles of gender and culture, and the legacies of British colonialism. We will discuss British attitudes and policies toward empire, and toward particular colonies, what role empire played in the growth of the British economy, in short, how colonial ideologies and practices were shaped and in turn affected vast regions of the globe.

(Fall) Strategies, Dark Secrets, and Dangers in the Writing of History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is about writing history, commonly called historiography. It examines some of the most successful works of historical writing from the ancient world to the present day. It investigates strategies historians use in interpreting the past, secrets of their trade, and the awful price not a few have paid for challenging orthodox versions of the past. Students will also analyze works of contemporary authors and apply their own hand to the historian's craft.

(Fall) The Romanovs: Triumph and Tragedy
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 205f(01))
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

(Spring) African Cities: Development Dreams and Nightmares in the Twentieth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
African cities demonstrate the failure of models of development with the aim and ideal of industrialization. This course examines the empty promises of modernity through the lens of African urban history using fiction, film, and city archives. Beginning with Timbuctu and Cairo, the course explores the emergence and decline of trade entrepots, the rise of colonial cities, and the dilemmas of postcolonial economies and polities. Dar es Salaam,
Nairobi, Kampala, Kinshasa, Harare, Johannesburg, Lagos, Accra, and Dakar are among the cities studied. Designed for those seeking only an introduction to development as well as those with further ambitions, it assumes no previous knowledge of Africa.

(Fall) History of Global Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Why are some nations so much richer and more powerful than others? This course demonstrates that global inequality is not natural; it has a history. Exploring patterns of exchange that developed among regions of the world over the past 600 years, we will ask about the role of power in the establishment of practices of production and exchange. We will explore how cross-regional productive systems benefited some participants at the expense of others. Having traced the consequences of unequal exchange over several centuries, we will ask how global trade and production would have to change for all participants to benefit equally. The course includes a community-based learning component.

(Fall) Muslim Politics in Modern South Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Taken together, Muslims in South Asia constitute the largest population of Muslims worldwide. This course will serve as an introduction to the political history of this diverse group of people. We will begin by considering religious conversion and the rule of Muslim kings in the premodern period. The bulk of the course will, however, concentrate on the modern history of the subcontinent, and especially on events and themes that continue to influence the countries and peoples of South Asia in the present, such as Muslim social reform, the rise of communalism, the partition of the subcontinent, and the influence of religion on contemporary politics.

(Spring) Athenian Democracy and Its Foes - *Not offered this year/term
(Classics 225)
Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.

(Fall) Native American History through 1865
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course surveys Native American history from ancient times through the U.S. Civil War, tracing the ways that tribal communities have shaped North America. Beginning with the diverse indigenous societies that inhabited the Americas millennia before Columbus's arrival, it discusses the cultural complexity of Native peoples, nations, and worldviews rooted in particular ecosystems and homelands. It moves through the early modern era of European scientific exploration and "discovery" of a New World, and the pivotal violences of the "Indian Wars" of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and early nineteenth centuries.

(Spring) Disturbances: War, Violence, and the Aftermath of Conflict in Early North America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What are the origins of violence? What counts as violence: outright bloodshed, or more subtle forms of coercion and domination as well? This course extends the definition of violence beyond conventional military engagements, and discusses "Indian War" captivities, Native slavery, ritual torture, persecution of Quakers and witches, and the mass-scale deaths and dislocations caused by the transatlantic slave trade. The course concludes with the American Revolution and moral arguments for the just use of force, and an assessment of the complexities of waging peace.

(Spring) Science, Revolution, and Modernity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Critical Social Thought 248)
Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as 'revolutionary'? How are scientific developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?

HIST-250-01 - History - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Comparative Empires
(English 250)
This course probes the characteristics of imperial rule, as well as the differences between one empire and another. The course asks: What are empires, and what animates them - economic exploitation, power politics, and/or cultural commitments? How do empires impose and maintain their authority, and what is their impact on centers and provinces, and on elites and the common people? How do empires deal with the heterogeneous peoples, religions, races, and cultures they conquer and incorporate into their fold? Who is driven to resist imperial power, how do they resist, and what other forces lead empires to dissolve? Finally, what is the relation between empire and the modern nation state?

(Fall) American Women’s History, From Settlement to Reconstruction - *Not offered this year/term
(Gender Studies 206(01))
Introduction to major themes in U.S. history through the lens of women’s history. Located both near the centers of power in American society and at its margins, the history of women as a social group is one of conflict and diversity. While women do not make up a coherent group, all share the unique experience of being “women” in class, racial, and religiously specific ways. Themes include Native American and Hispanic women during European contact and settlement; the impact of the American Revolution; benevolent women and the “fallen” women they hoped to help; enslaved women and the plantation mistress; women in the multicultural west; women’s involvement in the Civil War and Reconstruction.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course explores ecological thinking and changes in landscape through human intervention and natural processes, primarily from the eighteenth century to the present. Our survey of thinking will include Europeans such as the founder of modern ecology, Ernest Haekel, and Americans Henry David Thoreau, John Muir, and Frederick Law Olmsted. Our study of historical landscapes will center on land use practices and water resources and river basins--the Merrimack, the Charles, and the Connecticut; on the interplay of agriculture, forests, and water power in industrialization; and on the Boston Fens designed by Olmsted and our own backyard, the Connecticut River Valley.

(Spring) Education and Capacity in African History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
How have Africans organized education? Who had access, and what did they learn? We explore the nineteenth and twentieth century transformation of African systems of education, including the significant involvement of African American educational reformers. A focus of the course will be developing the capacity to carry out historical research with written and oral sources. Our topics will include approaches to archival research, ethical research design, and strategies for participant-observation and interviewing. Students must commit to a semester-long collaboration with Springfield's Renaissance School.

*(Spring) Women in History: African Women: Food and Power - Not offered this year/term
(Gender Studies 206)
This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional 4th hour discussions.

(Fall) Colloquium: Homelands and New Worlds: Landscapes of Encounter in the Native Northeast and Colonial New England
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines Native and colonial understandings of “place” in the region today called New England. Beginning with indigenous homelands, it investigates Algonquian Indian ancestral and mythic landscapes that rooted Native communities in particular ecosystems. It moves through the colonization period, tracking how European arrivals transferred Old World ideas, agendas, and organisms into new environments. It examines colonists' strategies for exploiting natural resources of the rivers, forests, and coasts, and for developing built environments that made the New World feel like home.

(Spring) Colloquium: Women and Gender in Modern South Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 333-N)
This colloquium will explore the history of South Asia as seen from women’s perspectives. We will read writings by women from the ancient period to the present. We will focus on the diversity of women’s experiences in a range of social, cultural, and religious contexts. Themes include sexuality, religiosity, rights to education and employment, violence against women, modernity and citizenship—in short, those issues central to women's movements in modern South Asia. In addition to the textual sources, the course will analyze Indian popular film and the representation of women in this modern visual genre.

(Fall) Colloquium: Martyrdom as Social Protest: Resistance and Honor in Antiquity and the Middle Ages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We find martyrs in times of crisis, under tyranny and persecution. Yet not all victims of tyranny and persecution become martyrs, nor are all martyrs victims of tyranny. What social and political conditions have in the past fostered the choice of martyrdom? What cultural values drive this form of self-immolation? What's worth dying for? In antiquity, the word "martyr" meant an active "witness"; today it can mean a "passive victim." Our approach uses cross-cultural historical comparisons to help understand how martyrdom shaped history and culture from the ancient world of the Mediterranean and of Europe to the early modern period.

(Spring) Colloquium: Reading the New York Times: Journalism, Power, History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines the political and cultural power of the New York Times in the American past and present. Students will analyze the NYT today through daily reading, study its evolution as an institution, and research its coverage of critical historical events over the past century. We will also explore several larger issues: the history of news and newspapers; the relationship between journalistic practice and writing history; tensions between news organizations and government; the blurred boundaries between news and entertainment; the emergence of various ideological critiques of "the media."

(Fall) Colloquium: Race, Gender, and Empire: Cultural Histories of the United States and the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 333G)
Recent cultural histories of imperialism—European as well as U.S.—have illuminated the workings of race and gender at the heart of imperial encounters. This course will examine the United States’ relationship to imperialism through the lens of such cultural histories. How has the encounter between Europe and America been remembered in the United States? How has the cultural construction of "America" and its "others" called into play racial and gender identities? How have the legacies of slavery been entwined with U.S. imperial ambitions at different times? And what can we learn from transnational approaches to "the intimacies of empire?"

(Spring) Colloquium: History of Money and Finance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This seminar explores the history of money and finance in modern Britain, from the seventeenth century to the mid-twentieth. It addresses this history not from the perspective of classical economics or political economy, but rather from that of cultural history. Using a variety of primary and secondary source readings, students will learn how such things as coins, bills of exchange and the Bank of England relate to questions of virtue, respectability, and the modern self, and they will consider how Britons crafted new identities and negotiated changing social relations using the objects and practices of monetary and financial exchange.

(Spring) Colloquium: World War I and the Making of the Twentieth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
World War I (1914-1918) was arguably the transformative event of the twentieth century. It destroyed four empires, enabled the Russian Revolution, reconstructed the political geography of Central Europe, strengthened independence movements in European possessions overseas, and facilitated the rise of fascism and a second world war (1939-1945). This course explores this history by examining the war's origins, nature, and manifold consequences from 1880s to 1939 in Europe and in global perspective. Materials for historical study and discussion include memoirs by women and men, civilians, nurses, and soldiers; newspapers and magazines, images, films, poetry.

(Spring) Late Antiquity: The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

In his masterpiece, The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Edward Gibbon catalogued the end of the classical era, "during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous." We shall reexamine the various factors and forces Gibbon blamed for decline in light of modern research: barbarian invasions, the rise of Christianity, economic decay, and social dislocation, as well as investigating new discoveries and modern interpretations of the "transformations of Late Antiquity."

(Spring) Asian History: The Meiji Revolution: Late Nineteenth-Century Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
A research seminar on the late-nineteenth-century transformation of Japan from a feudal state ruled by hereditary warriors into a modern nation-state ruled by a cabinet, a legislature, and a professionalized bureaucracy under the symbolic sovereignty of a sacred monarch. A turning point in East Asia's modern history, this revolution shaped the following century throughout the region and remains a subject of intense scholarly and popular interest. We will begin with secondary readings—social and political history, biography, and cultural history—then each student will identify a research question and discover her own sources to answer it in a 20-page final essay.

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
This seminar examines the causes and the course of the Civil War, its social, economic, and political results during Reconstruction, and the early roots of both de jure segregation and the civil rights movement. It will examine the process of emancipation from the perspective of social history. Violent conflicts over free labor, the establishment of sharecropping, and the political and economic policies pursued by various groups - freedpeople, ex-masters, northern policymakers, wage laborers, and African American women, for example - will be covered. African American viewpoints and histories will receive particular emphasis.

(Fall) Recent American History: American Labor History Since the Gilded Age - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

This seminar uses primary and secondary sources to explore relationships among capital, labor, and the state in three distinct periods: the non-union era (c.1870s-1920s) the union era (c.1930s-1970s) and the era of global capital and non-union labor (c.1980s-present). We will analyze defining documents and leading historiographical interpretations, devoting special attention to labor reformers--on both sides of the union divide--across time and space. Students will be required to participate in class discussion and produce a research paper on some aspect of American conservatism.

(Fall) International Human Rights - *Not offered this year/term
This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.

(Spring) Transnational Social Movements in World Politics
How do multinational corporations, interest groups, NGOs, and social movements engage in world politics? In exploring this question, this course provides an introduction to the study of transnationally operating non-state actors and transnational social movements. First, we will look at the influence of movements on inter-state relations and on inter-national organizations. Second, we will investigate their increasing involvement in global governance. The class concludes with recent debates on the global economic crisis and conflict resolution and on global immigration, politicization, and democratization through social movements and new media.

(Spring) International Society - *Not offered this year/term
An intensive reading course in theories of international society: the idea that states and peoples are or should be linked to each other through a web of shared values and institutions. It focuses on the work of Hedley Bull, Immanuel Kant, and John Rawls. How did these three men understand international society? What are or should be the values and institutions that give rise to it and support it? What implications do their visions of international society have for war and peace, state sovereignty, religion, democracy, capitalism, distributive justice, human rights, and international law? What responses and criticisms have their arguments engendered?

(Fall) The Changing Role of Diplomacy in the Twenty-first Century
This seminar examines changes in the way U.S. foreign policy is implemented since the end of the Cold War. During the Cold War, U.S. foreign policy was made and implemented within established parameters of negotiation procedures with known international players. Today, it is adapting to more creative interactions with a range of new actors. This course analyzes specific challenges to U.S. foreign policy, such as dealing with ethnically driven conflicts and creating "coalitions of the willing" to respond to crises. Classroom simulations of interagency/international policy procedures are important course components.

(Fall) Liars, Pranksters, and Jesters on the Italian Stage
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Can serious artists play cruel jokes? Who laughs at Dante? This course explores the role of lies and practical jokes in Italian literature and the way the concept of humor has changed over time. We will investigate the intimate connection among power, religion, and laughter by reading some of the funniest (and politically charged) works of Italian theatre. Our authors will take us through the streets of Renaissance Florence, eighteenth-century Venetian canals, as well as the improvised "factory theaters" of the seventies. Readings will be paired with stage performances and will include Dante, Machiavelli, Goldoni, Puccini, Fo, De Filippo, and Umberto Eco.

(Spring) A Different Language Is a Different Vision of Life: Contemporary Italy through Cinema
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Film director Federico Fellini said that a "different language is a different vision of life." How has the Italian "vision of life" changed from Mussolini's dictatorship to Berlusconi's government? From the birth of the Republic in 1946 to the debate ignited by Roberto Saviano's bestseller Gomorrah, this course traces transformations in modern Italian society. Through historical and literary readings, films, and the media, this course explores the difficult path towards modernity Italy has traveled in the last five decades. We will explore contemporary popular culture and films that reflect these transformations and analyze family, religion, gender, sexuality, and class conflict.

(Taught in English; Spanish 360, RLL 375, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student’s choice.

*If all is fair in love and war, are there rules for the game of power and seduction? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power in Spain, France, and Italy, will we witness a change for women? Students will explore such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, José Zorrilla, Molíère, Beaumarchais, Goldoni; Mozart’s opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangereux Liaisons and Casanova’s Memoirs. Students will be encouraged to explore works by major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods, and view relevant contemporary films such as The King is Dancing, and Goya’s Ghosts. The final term project is a digital narration in the target language of the student.

Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.

JWST-212-01 - Jewish Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Judaism

(Religion 212)

Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term

(Religion 215s)

Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Speaking-intensive; Religion 222-01, Gender Studies 210-01)

This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies; opportunities to become rabbis; new approaches to God, theology, and social issues; the Jewish lesbian movement; women's writing and documentary filmmaking.

(Spring) Cicero and the Enemies of the Roman Republic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
The career of the Roman orator and statesman Marcus Tullius Cicero spanned the last generation of the Roman Republic, a period of political instability and civil war. As the leading orator of his day, Cicero often used his rhetorical skills to thwart those who he believed were bent on the destruction of the Roman Republic. In this course, we will examine the role of public oratory in the political process in this period with a close reading of Cicero's speeches and letters concerning one of his political enemies (Catiline, Clodius, or Mark Antony).
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 18

LATIN-307-01 - Latin - 2012-2013
(Fall) The Slender Muse - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the highly romantic poetry that launched a revolution in Latin literature, including such works as Catullus's epyllion on Peleus and Thetis and Vergil's Eclogues and Georgics, with attention to the new understanding of poetry shown in these poems and to their commentary on the social turmoil of the last phase of the Republic.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: B. Arnold
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Lucretius
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Instructors: B. Arnold
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Ovid: Metamorphoses
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A study of Ovid's ambitious epic celebrating change and transformative forces, with attention to the challenges it poses to traditional Roman values and to conventional Roman notions of the work appropriate to a poet. In particular, consideration will be given to the way Ovid's poem subversively responds to Vergil's work.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: B. Arnold

LATIN-313-01 - Latin - 2012-2013
(Fall) Myth, Memory, and History: Writing the Past in the Roman Republic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Livy and Sallust, the best known historians of the Roman Republic, viewed history writing as a moral enterprise, presenting events from the past as exemplary tales to inform and enlighten the lives of their readers. Their narratives thus are highly rhetorical, combining myth, memory, and history to reconstruct the past. Close reading of selections from Livy's Ab Urbe Condita and/or Sallust's monographs—the Bellum Catilinae and Bellum Jugurthense—will lead to discussions about how Romans viewed their past and how they wrote about it.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 18

LATIN-318-01 - Latin - 2012-2013
(Spring) Views on Augustus - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Augustus came to power after a long period of civil unrest. He restored order and stability and established a peace that would endure for more than two centuries. As Rome's savior and its first emperor, his accomplishments were the subject of biography, history, and even poetry. He is a complex historical figure who eludes simple interpretation. Yet we will try in this course to understand Augustus' character and accomplishments through a variety of sources, including Suetonius, Horace, and Augustus himself.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: M. Landon
Expected enrollment: 18

LATAM-105-01 - Latin American Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Politics of Inequality: Social Movements in the U.S.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
The course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the twentieth century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: The History of Latin America in 50 Objects
First-year seminar (History 101s-01)
Examines the confrontation, assimilation, and transformation of Amerindian, African, and European cultures in Latin America from the sixteenth century to the present. Focuses on the processes in which distinctive self-images emerged in the region and how these images have been challenged and changed over time. Uses films, literature, and folk traditions to complement scholarly analysis of the emergence of a New World mentality.
Instructors: J. Rosenthal
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Introduction to Latina/o Studies: Structural Inequalities
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.
The course provides an overview of current and past social conditions of Latinas and Latinos within the U.S. We will address laws, policies and institutions that shape the complexity of Latinas/o's social location and serve as critical sites of resistance. The course addresses legal constructions of race and citizenship, nomenclature, border politics, public health, education, and labor. We will consider the critical intersections of class, gender and sexuality as well as inequality in relation to other persons of color. Students will develop a firm sense of the importance and breadth of the Latina/o political agenda and acquire skills to think across social issues.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.
This course offers transnational approaches to the theory and political practice of performance in the Americas with a focus on work by Latinas in the United States and women in Latin America. We will interrogate the ways in which race, sexuality, class, gender, indigenous and diasporic identities inform the methodological and aesthetic mandates of an array of artists from across disciplines. Employing multiple modes of performance from theater, dance, performance art, ritual, visual art, and folkloric music, we will explore how these practices have functioned and continue to allow for politically subversive or resistant transformation.

(Spring) Modern Mexico
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

An analysis of the modern Mexican nation-state organized around three major themes: the conflictive yet symbiotic relationship with the United States, from the war of the 1840s through NAFTA most recently; the succession of reformist and revolutionary upheavals in 1810-1821, 1856-1867, 1910-1917, the 1930s, and again today, seeking to resolve both problems of the colonial past and new conflicts traceable to the very reforms generated by earlier political and social struggles; and the meaning of Mexican nationality from different ethnic, gender, and class perspectives. Readings include autobiographical and literary works, historical studies, and films.

(Spring) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.

(Fall) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: Latino Immigration
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.

(Spring) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: Disposable People: A History of Deportation from the U.S.
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
The course examines U.S. deportation campaigns targeted at Latina/o workers, residents, and U.S.-born citizens. We will address the development of deportation policies and their deployment throughout the nation's history. The course will also examine the criminalization of Latina/o immigrants, police and military tactics of the federal government, and administrative and legal mechanisms and institutions that have been created to facilitate deportation. Ultimately, the course aims to provide students with a grounded knowledge of U.S. deportation history in order to contextualize the broader national debate about immigration reform that is occurring today.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.

This seminar offers an interrogation of the ways in which Latinas and Latinos are represented in the cinema. We will explore early portrayals of Latinas and Latinos in film history and then explore contemporary cinema with a focus on race, class, gender and sexuality in these representations. Employing multiple aesthetic and disciplinary approaches we will analyze commercial films alongside independent films with particular attention to the market-driven and political mandates of these projects. We will focus on films by both Latina/o filmmakers and non-Latina/o filmmakers interrogating the multifarious points of entry of these artists.

(Spring) Explorations in Algebra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.
MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
We will cover the arithmetic of whole numbers and of prime numbers, in particular, examining some of the earliest questions in mathematics from a modern perspective, finding whole number solutions to equations with several variables, deciding whether or not such solutions exist and if so, determining whether the solution set is finite or infinite. Topics include the theory of “finite arithmetic,” converting questions about the infinite set of whole numbers to those involving just a small set of primes, using computers to examine problems numerically.
Prerequisites: a good grasp of arithmetic
Instructors: G. Davidoff

MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Using examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.

MATH-120-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Explorations in Geometry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The system of geometry devised by the ancient Greeks was immutable until the nineteenth century, when it was put in a broader framework better able to accommodate the varied interests of physical science and mathematics. In this course, we begin by a careful and close observation of what we can see and physically construct, reasoning informally about those observations. We will then explore a selection of geometry from the time of Euclid to the recent past, including curved surfaces and the hyperbolic plane.

(Fall) Making Meaning for Operations/Reasoning Algebraically about Operations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Ed) 256
This course will draw on two modules of the Developing Mathematical Ideas (DMI) series. DMI is a curriculum designed to help think through the major ideas of K-8 mathematics and examine how children develop those ideas. The first four sessions will parallel the first four sessions of Making Meaning for Operations. The remaining nine sessions will be based on the Reasoning Algebraically about Operations module. This module focuses on how children's study of operations leads into articulation of generalizations in the number system and justification of such generalizations. Participants will explore and understand how such work in the early grades relates to algebra studied in later grades.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Flynn

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: From Alexandria to the Internet - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
We will cover the arithmetic of whole numbers and of prime numbers. In particular, we will examine some of the earliest questions in mathematics from a modern perspective, finding whole number solutions to equations with several variables, deciding whether or not such solutions exist and if so, determining whether the solution set is finite or infinite. Topics include the theory of "finite arithmetic," converting questions about the infinite set of whole numbers to those involving just a small set of primes, and using computers to examine problems numerically.

Prerequisites: f5, a good grasp of arithmetic

Instructors: G. Davidoff

Expected enrollment: 15

MATH-202-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Calculus II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Most students who have taken calculus in high school begin with Calculus II. In particular, if you have studied the derivative and its applications and have been introduced to the definite integral, you will be prepared for Calculus II. Please read the "Beginning the Study of Mathematics" section.
Topics include techniques of integration, applications of integration, differential equations, sequences, series, and Taylor series.
Instructors: D. Shepardson

(Fall) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation — Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.
Prerequisites: 4 credits from the department or permission of instructor

MATH-301-01 Mathematics 2012-2013
(Spring) Real Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include the real number system, convergence of sequences and series, power series, uniform convergence, compactness and connectedness, continuity, abstract treatment of differential and integral calculus, metric spaces, and point-set topology.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and two chosen from Mathematics 211, 232 and 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Lee
MATH-302-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Complex Analysis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differentiation and integration of functions of a complex variable, the Cauchy integral formula, residues, conformal mapping, and applications to physical science and number theory.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 or Physics 303
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges
Instructors: The department

MATH-311-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Abstract Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include algebraic structures: groups, rings (including some elementary number theory), fields, and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, and one chosen from Mathematics 232 or 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Robinson

MATH-329-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Geometry and Topology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topological spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit
Instructors: G. Davidoff

(Spring) Mathematical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include specific examples of mathematical models that have been formulated to deal with problems arising in various applications, together with an outline of the development of particular mathematical tools and techniques used in these models.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211
Instructors: The Department
Expected enrollment: 30

MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Mathematical Finance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include: interest rates, forwards and futures, options, payoff diagrams, binomial trees, risk-neutral valuation, geometric Brownian motion, stochastic calculus, Ito's lemma, Black-Scholes, volatility smiles, exotic options, the Greeks, Monte Carlo methods and statistical analysis of NYSE stock data.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211 or permission of the instructor
Instructors: A. Durfee

MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Optimization
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Mathematical optimization involves finding the best solution to a problem from a set of feasible solutions defined by mathematical constraints. It has an elegant theory and applications in fields like management, economics, engineering, and computer science that require decision making under constraints on time or other resources. We will begin by studying linear optimization, including duality, the simplex algorithm, and the geometry of linear programming. Other topics will include discrete optimization, network optimization, and nonlinear optimization.

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: The Matter of Britain: the Grail in Arthurian Myth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 316s(01))
This course focuses on the various forms the story of the grail takes in Arthurian legends from the twelfth to the twentieth centuries in the literature of England, France, and Europe. Centered in medieval English versions of the Arthurian myth, the course considers the political and cultural forces that helped shape the grail legend after the fall of Jerusalem in 1187, and over the course of the later Middle Ages, into the twentieth century. Reading from Malory, Tennyson and contemporary fiction as well as chronicles and romances.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Medieval Studies 101, or 8 credits in English or Medieval Studies and permission of instructor; online &nbsp;application required

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Chaucer: Stories of Cupid's Martyrs - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 311)
This course begins with a close reading of Chaucer's great love story Troilus and Criseyde together with The Legend of Good Women, taking into consideration the multiple cultural contexts a late medieval audience would have brought to both poems along with such topics as honour, love, trouthe, and betrayal. We will conclude by comparing Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida with Chaucer's work as a way of understanding the continuities and changes between a late medieval and early modern understanding of men and women in love and war.

MUSIC-100-01 - Music - 2012-2013
(Fall) Basic Musicianship
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Explores the ways in which sound is organized into musical structures. Topics include the physical properties of sound; the basic vocabulary of Western music (scales, key signatures, intervals, triads, rhythm, meter); and an introduction to musical form and analysis. Includes extensive practice in music reading, sight singing, ear training, and critical listening.
Instructors: G. Steigerwalt

(Spring) Music and Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: I The Performer: Stage Fright, Foe or Friend?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
This course will address the questions: What is performance? What is stage fright? How does stage fright manifest itself? What fields and activities benefit from mastery of stage fright? What tools and methods exist to harness the effects of stage fright? Students will research performance and performers, as well as remedies for stage fright in all fields. Weekly performances will afford the opportunity to practice skills.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Women Composers of New England - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
This course will explore women composers of the Second New England School, a loosely associated group of male and female musicians flourishing in the Boston area in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The careers of Helen Hopekirk, whose compositions reflected song literature of her native Scotland, and Amy Beach, who wrote prolifically in genres ranging from art song to symphony, will be featured. Through primary sources such as personal correspondence, reviews, interviews, diaries, and autograph scores, we will investigate the ambitions, achievements and frustrations of these and other women composers within the social and political contexts in which they lived and produced.
Notes: The ability to read music is not required. Basic concepts of music notation and theory will be included in the course.
Instructors: G. Steigerwalt

(Fall) The Hyperbolic World of Opera in 25 Episodes -- An Introduction to Western Classical Opera from the Renaissance to the Present Day
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course begins with the birth of opera at the end of the Renaissance Period, and ends with some of the most successful operas in the past decade. Our investigation includes operas in English, French, German, Italian and Russian. Alongside an introduction to the materials of opera, from vocal fachs, forms, and styles, to vocal virtuosity, the course situates opera as a cultural phenomenon by considering the unique set of historical, intellectual, social, political and economic conditions of each work of art. The course includes some opera projections; each one is preceded by an introduction of the period in which it was first performed and is followed by class discussion.

(Writing-intensive)
This course is a survey of selected musical traditions from different parts of the world, including Africa, Indonesia, Indian, the Caribbean, and the United States. The course adopts an ethnomusicological approach that explains music as a cultural phenomenon, and explores the social and aesthetic significance of musical traditions within their respective historical and cultural contexts. It examines how musical traditions change over time, and how such changes reflect and relate to social and political changes within a given society. Weekly reading and listening assignments provide the basis for class discussions. Students are expected to undertake a final project in music ethnography.
Instructors: O. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 30

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines selected genres and their relationships to the political and social dynamics of their respective national origins. Regional examples like highlife, soukous, chimurenga, and Fela Anikulapo-Kuti's Afro-beat will provide the basis for assessing the significance of popular music as a creative response to the African colonial and postcolonial environment. The course also discusses African hip-hop music by exploring how indigenous cultural tropes have provided the basis for its local appropriation. Themes explored include music and identity; music, politics, and resistance; interaction of local and global elements; and political significance of musical nostalgia.

(Spring) Psychology of Music
(Psychology 245)
Every culture in the world has some form of music, but why did music evolve, and what function does it serve? In this course, we will explore the cognitive and neural processes that underlie music perception and production to ask the following questions: Does music have universal features that cross cultures? How does music convey emotion? What do infants know about music? Is music specifically human? And finally, what are the parallels between music and language? Through these questions, we hope to discover something about the origin of music and what makes it such an integral part of our daily lives.
Prerequisites: 100 level course in Psychology or permission of instructor
Notes: Does not count towards the music major or minor or distribution in Humanities. Formal music training not required.

Neuroscience and Behavior
NEURO-100-01 - Neuroscience and Behavior - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to Neuroscience and Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This comprehensive survey course explores the brain and the biological basis of behavior. We will examine the anatomy of the nervous system and the unique properties of the cells that make up the brain. We will discuss the mechanisms by which individual brains cells communicate with each other, and how small networks of cells underlie more complex processes such as perception, learning, and behavior. In labs, students will perform experiments that expand upon and reinforce these ideas through hands-on exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission from Gary Gillis
Instructors: K. Colodner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB K Colodner | 02 LAB K Colodner |

Philosophy

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will discuss questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-101-02 - Philosophy - 2012-2013

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: God, Morality, and Freedom
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will introduce students to philosophy and its methods by looking at what philosophers, past and present, have said about three important and interrelated topics: God, morality, and freedom. We will ask questions such as: Does God exist? Is it rational to believe in God? What should I do if I want to do the right thing? When is it ok to criticize other cultural practices? How much do I owe to others? Do we have free will? Can we ever be held responsible for anything? The hope is that students will emerge from this course better thinkers, better writers, and better equipped to tackle difficult questions like these with rigor and care.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 16

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will focus on classic and contemporary work on central topics in ethics. The goal will be to see whether there is anything to be said in a principled way about what to do and how to live. The core of the course will be an examination of the central traditions in moral philosophy in the West, typified by Aristotle, Kant, and Mill. We will also examine vexing contemporary moral issues with an eye to whether moral theories can give us practical guidance. Finally, we will step back and ask whether any of the moral theorizing we have been engaging in is really capable of uncovering objective moral truths.
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Knowledge and Reality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory "good"? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? In what ways does science in practice depart from scientific ideals? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 226-01, Critical Social Thought 250f-01)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in Schleiermacher's Speeches. Finally, we focus on the idealistic and pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion.
Instructors: J. Grayson
Expected enrollment: 35

PHIL-232-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Complex Organizations 232)
There is much talk recently of the need for increased attention to "ethics" in organizational life. This course examines the basis for this concern and the underlying beliefs and structures that give rise to ethical issues, with the goal of helping students to clarify their own positions. Topics addressed will include profit, governance, consumption, distribution, and the social contract. Readings will draw on philosophy, religion, economics, history, literature, management theory, and current events
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: The department

PHIL-235-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Medical Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral and philosophical problems. Topics discussed include: What is the distinction between health and illness? How should limited health care resources be distributed? How are medical problems related to larger social problems (e.g., gender inequality)? What are the responsibilities of medical researchers toward their research subjects? What moral reasons do we have to be concerned about the growth of technology in medicine? Are the basic institutions of medicine and medical education just?
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Environmental Ethics: Nature/Culture/Values - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Should we control nature by applying scientific and technological expertise? Or should we strive for noninterference and preservation of the wild? How do we balance the pressing needs of people for food, energy, and other resources with the needs of other species or whole ecosystems? Students will explore these questions and issues in the classroom and in community-based learning or other experiential projects that put ideas into action.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-241-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Issues in Contemporary Moral Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Do we need to develop virtues to lead a good life? Is morality founded on freedom or happiness? What does it involve for an individual to be just? What is the relationship between morality and power? This course explores questions and texts relevant to contemporary ethical philosophy. We will read a mix of contemporary and historical texts examining some of these questions in detail.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Social and Political Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An examination of a variety of topics in social and political philosophy, drawing from historical as well as contemporary sources. We will examine questions such as the following: What is the nature and scope of political authority? Do citizens have a duty to obey the laws of their state? What duties do we have to oppressed and marginalized groups? How do race, class, gender, and sexual orientation matter to political freedom and authority?
How should we balance political liberties against the public good? Attention will also be given to the application of these questions to particular contemporary social and political issues.

Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophy and Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines philosophical themes in literature and philosophical questions about literature. Can literature yield knowledge about the world? What is the meaning of a work of literature, and how can we know it? Are the author's intentions relevant to how a work is to be interpreted? Can works of literature be immoral? How is the identity of the reader relevant to the understanding of a literary work? What is the difference between philosophy and literature - can a work of literature also be a work of philosophy?
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-248-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race"? Does science construct "race"? What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.

PHIL-249-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Women and Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210s(01))
This course will focus on three topics to which feminist thinking has made important philosophical contributions: pornography, objectification, and consent. We will draw on a variety of philosophical resources, ranging from liberal and feminist political theory, to speech act theory. We'll be looking at work by Simone de Beauvoir, Ronald Dworkin, Sally Haslanger, Rae Langton, Catharine MacKinnon, Martha Nussbaum, and others. The goal will be to see how careful philosophical thought can help us with pressing issues of gender.
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-252-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Nineteenth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the ways the nature, possibility, and extent of human freedom were conceptualized by German philosophers in the nineteenth century. Readings are drawn from the work of Hegel, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. Specific topics include Hegel's metaphysics of spirit, Feuerbach's critique of religious and philosophical mystification, Marx's analysis of alienation, and Nietzsche's ideal of the "Over-Man."

PHIL-253-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Critical Race Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(See Critical Social Thought 253f(01), Afram-208f(01))
This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but not required, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Wilson, L. Pasquerella
Expected enrollment: 25

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Existentialism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.

Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Philosophy of Mind - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-265-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Controversies in Public Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Biology 265)
This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to the discussion of public health issues. The class will be co-led by a philosopher and a biologist, with additional guest experts offering a variety of disciplinary and professional perspectives on some of the most complex and vexing current public health issues. Topics may include: the hazards and benefits of vaccination programs; effective responses to and prevention of natural disasters; obesity, food policy, nutrition, and health; the controversy over hygiene and the rise of allergic and chronic diseases; or the impact of public policy and ethics on reproductive rights. Selected topics will be scrutinized through both a biological and a philosophical lens, with the intersections and divergence of those perspectives highlighted.
Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for sophomores
Notes: Some attendance at college speaking events will be required.
Instructors: J. Harold, S. Stranford
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophy of the Arts - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Can a pile of bricks be art? What is the difference between a musical work and a bunch of random noise? What makes a Marx Brothers movie funny? Othello a tragedy? Should art appeal to the masses?
Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Film Studies 290s
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or in film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (1.5 hours)
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 12

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
How do words come to mean things? Frege introduced two aspects of meaning: reference, that is, whatever expressions pick out in the world, and sense, a publicly accessible means by which expressions pick out their references, which must be grasped by all speakers. This course is an extended examination of the concept of sense, the uses to which it has been put, and the criticisms that have been lodged against it. We'll look at Frege's work, the complaints made by Quine and Kripke, Davidson's theory of meaning, and Dummett's defense of sense.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-327-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Advanced Logic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Mathematics 327)
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of Gödel's incompleteness results. It includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in philosophy or mathematics, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-328-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Non-Classical Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course looks at the recent flowering of non-classical logics. The most prominent are modal logics concerning necessity and possibility, which have come to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. Conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have also become important. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy but also are interesting in their own right.
Prerequisites: One course in Logic, Mathematics, Computer Science or Philosophy 209
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-334-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Ethics: Moral Epistemology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will focus on a handful of epistemic challenges to morality. We will consider questions such as: How is moral knowledge possible? Can we gain moral knowledge from testimony? What are the implications of the prevalence of moral disagreement? Do our evolutionary origins pose a challenge to our moral beliefs?

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: The Ethical Theories of Aristotle and Mengzi
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will be an examination of the ethical works of two philosophers working on different continents at approximately the same time, the fourth century BCE: Aristotle and Mengzi. We will mainly study two texts: Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics, and the work eponymously called Mengzi. Each of these philosophers is attempting to set out and defend a particular view about virtue (for Aristotle, aretê; for Mengzi, dé). What makes for virtuous action, or character? How does one become (or fail to become) a virtuous person? We will critically examine Aristotle and Mengzi's answers to these and other questions.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in the department or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-351-02 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Fall) Systematic Study of One Philosopher - *Not offered this year/term

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophy of Art: Illustration
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Art Studio 280(01))
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
Illustrations are all around us, in picture books, scientific texts, fine art editions of books, magazines, and in the pockets of airline seats. Yet there is little philosophical discussion about what constitutes an illustration. In this seminar, we will approach the topic of illustration through both theory and practice. There will be readings, viewings, and studio sessions. Participants will be expected to take part in this approach, producing both theoretical and studio work. Our approach will be eclectic, hoping to educate our eyes, minds, and bodies about this important use of images.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, B. Moser
Expected enrollment: 10

PHIL-375-01 - Philosophy - 2012-2013
(Spring) Philosophy of Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 390-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): An examination of different theoretical issues concerning the nature of film and film viewing. Topics vary yearly.
Recently, philosophers have argued that films resemble philosophy in their use of thought experiments. But the role of thought experiments in philosophy is itself contested. The seminar will investigate how thought experiments are used in science and philosophy in order to determine whether films and, more generally, art can legitimately claim that their presentation of thought experiments connects them to philosophy. Some previous acquaintance with philosophy highly recommended.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or in film studies or permission of instructor
Notes: There will be film screenings in addition to the regular class meeting times
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 19

PE-117-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2012-2013

(Spring) Bon Odori (Japanese Spiritual Dance)
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course focuses on a Japanese Buddhist folk dance performed outdoors and danced in a concentric circle around a raised platform. It is celebrated as a reminder of the gratefulness one should feel toward one’s ancestors. From this dance of joy comes Bon Odori, a time in which ancestors and their sacrifices are remembered and appreciated. Through studying the dance, students will understand its intentions: remembering and appreciating who you are and where you come from. Because the dance is closely related to Buddhism, this course will provide an opportunity for the students both to exercise through dancing and to calm their minds.

Physics

PHYS-100-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.

PHYS-104-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Environmental Studies 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.

PHYS-105-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Science in the Media - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar
Popular coverage of science ranges in depth and accuracy, and many scientists do not see the importance of communicating their work, or their excitement, to the general public. Scientific breakthroughs contribute to everyone's quality of life, but the process is poorly understood by many, leading to misunderstandings and misgivings that can affect public policy. This course will look at newsworthy results from current scientific research, exploiting topics to better understand the science, ideas such as scientific consensus and repeatability, and examining the tension that may exist between the scientists and the public. Topics will be pulled largely from the physical sciences.

(Spring) Phenomena of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, including thermodynamics, acoustics, wave optics, electricity, magnetism, and nuclear phenomena. As in Physics 103/100, the applicable mathematics is geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis.
Prerequisites: Physics 103/100 or 115/110
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 32

PHYS-190-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Electromagnetism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Topics include: electromagnetism, emphasizing fields and energy; electrostatics; electric circuits; magnetism; induction; and electromagnetic radiation. Additional topics chosen according to the interests of the class and instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 115/110; Mathematics 202
Instructors: A. Arango

PHYS-200-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series. The course includes a brief introduction to Mathematica and Matlab, in addition to a traditional emphasis on analytic solutions.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190 or concurrent enrollment
Instructors: A. Arango
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The Department | 02 LAB The Department |
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-210-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Waves and Optics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement.
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interfereometry, diffraction, and special relativity.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190 and either 303/200 or concurrent enrollment in 200
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 30

PHYS-211-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Gender in Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 241)
This course examines explanations for the underrepresentation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-220-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Intermediate Lab in Physics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This lab-based course is an introduction to modern, investigative, experimental physics. The course is intended as a bridge between the structured introductory lab experience and independent research. Students will engage in a semester-long experimental project, participating in experimental design, construction, debugging and implementation. Students will practice presenting and interpreting experimental results and will be encouraged to develop follow-up experimental questions of their own. This course will also introduce students to scientific communication skills, and is speaking- and writing-intensive.
Prerequisites: Physics 303/200 and 301/210, or Physics 303/200 and concurrent enrollment in Physics 210
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 24

PHYS-222-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement.
(Biological Sciences 322)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: Physics 115/110 and permission of the instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours) with 12 per lab
Instructors: G. Gillis

PHYS-250-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 301/210 and 303/200
Instructors: N. Abraham
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-290-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Laboratory Practicum
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course is a hands-on practicum, intended to introduce students to the practice of modern physics research. Depending on student interest, topics include external research seminars by practitioners in the field, training in oral and written scientific communication, presentation and interpretation of research results, scientific modeling, and hands-on experimental skills. Research projects are an integral part of this course; credit will be apportioned in relation to the intensity of the project.
Prerequisites: Permission of department
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2012-2013

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
(Spring) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined)
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Newton’s great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.
Prerequisites: Physics 303/200
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 22

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 324c)
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green’s functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Physics 216/190, 303/200
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell’s equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.
Prerequisites: Physics 303/200
Instructors: J. Burciaga
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solid; the specific heat of solids.
Prerequisites: Physics 303/200 and 302/250 or permission from department
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2012-2013

Politics

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2012-2013
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others' presentations.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: V. Ferraro
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Family Ties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

In this course, students will engage a number of classic works of literature and philosophy, as well as contemporary works, in order to reflect on the ways the family shapes private and public life and is, in return, shaped by them. We will cover such questions as: how does the family create and then influence the individual? What does it mean to be part of a family? What do individuals owe their families and are those obligations fair? How do we form families? Can the family insulate individuals from politics and society—in good ways and bad? Is political order like familial order? Are the state and society a threat or support for the family? How have these understandings changed over time?

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Confessions, Novels, and Notebooks: The Self and Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 100 (02))

What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.

(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Black Metropolis: From MLK to Obama

First-year seminar

"Black Metropolis" refers to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King’s failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson’s urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: The Politics of Food - *Not offered this year/term

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

A critical examination of the political and economic forces informing the production, distribution, marketing, and consumption of food in the United States. We will look at the power relations and institutional arrangements that inform what we eat. Topics include the industrialization of food production and its impact on workers, public health, and the environment; animal welfare, veganism, and other ethical issues; the marketing of unhealthy diet choices; and corporate influence over agricultural policy and food regulation. We will also consider various individual, cultural, and policy solutions to the problems surrounding food and diet in America.

(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Politics and Truth - *Not offered this year/term

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors’ perspectives on these questions.

(Fall) American Politics

Offers an overview of the American political system and the theories of those who both celebrate and criticize it. Focuses on the institutions of American politics, including the Constitution, the presidency, Congress, the courts, parties, elections, interest groups, and movements seeking political change. Also includes a theoretical focus: a critical examination of the varieties of liberalism, conservatism, pluralism, and democracy that inform the practice of American politics.

(Fall) Comparative Politics
This is the basic introductory course to the subfield of Comparative Politics. Over the semester we will engage a variety of issues central to comparative politics, including state formation, nationalism and ethnic conflict, regime types and changes, political and electoral systems, and social movements and revolutions. These issues will be illustrated by cases from around the world. In addition, we will examine the major methods and theories behind research in comparative politics.

(Spring) Politics of Minority Rights - *Not offered this year/term
This course examines the politics surrounding minority rights in the US since World War II, with special emphasis on the politics of race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship/immigration. Our aim will be to trace the accomplishments and limitations of the American state in offering full democratic inclusion to all members of the polity. Through readings, lectures, discussions, and film screenings, we will analyze several public debates related to contemporary minority inclusion. In the process, we will evaluate such behemoths of minority politics as affirmative action, same-sex marriage, and the Americans with Disabilities Act (1990).

(Spring) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Through the works of the ancient tragedians and comedians, Thucydides, Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Augustine, Aquinas, and Pizan, this course explores themes in ancient and medieval political thought. In alternating years, the course will be taught as either a survey of a wide array of authors or as a more thematically focused study of just a few writers. In either format, we will pay particular attention to the ways these writers characterized the relationship between the individual and community; the roles knowledge, reason, emotion, and rhetoric play in political life; the link between gender and citizenship; and the various forms political community can take.

Fall Classics in Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term

(Critical Social Thought 250)

An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, and Fyodor Dostoyevsky, focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, and first-year with permission of instructor

(Spring) Nationalism
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 330)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multietnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments’ responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in Politics, International Relations, Russian and Eurasian Studies, or History
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Democratization and Civil Society in East Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the dramatic emergence of democratic institutions and civil society in East Asia. The primary aim of the class is to help students understand and analyze the process of democratic unfolding in Japan, Korea, and Taiwan. We will also evaluate China's recent, albeit limited experiments with democratic practices. We will begin by contrasting Western perspectives of democracy with both traditional and more contemporary Asian understandings of democracy. We will then focus on the actual processes of democratic consolidation in each of the cases, especially the developments that precipitated political crisis and ultimately, political change.

(Spring) Politics and Rhetoric
(Writing-intensive)
People have long accused politicians of using rhetoric to pander to audiences and get what they want regardless of the truth. But democratic politics depends on communication to persuade and motivate others. In this course, we will analyze classical writings on rhetoric, contemporary democratic political theory, and hear from professionals in order to probe the relationship between rhetoric and politics. Students will also engage in an extended campaign simulation, in which they devise, implement, and react to campaign rhetorical strategies. In addition to our weekly seminar meeting, there is a required fourth hour. Prior work in political theory is required and prior work in American Politics is strongly recommended.
Prerequisites: jr. sr. with permission of instructor. 8 credits in politics, including at least one theory course required.
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Decision Making
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?

(Spring) Pivotal Political Ideas: Political Violence - *Not offered this year/term
Societies pride themselves on being civilized when they transcend rule by violence and implant rule by law. Civilized societies pride themselves on being liberal democracies when they recognize the political equality of all citizens, represent the interest of those citizens in government, and make decisions through peaceful deliberation and compromise. But what exactly is violence, and what is wrong with it? Does it entail physical force, or can violence be present when bloodshed is absent? Is violence a means to power, an expression of powerlessness, or both? Is justice always served by the exit of violence from social life? Are liberal democracy and violence truly antithetical?

This course will be an in depth examination, from a social psychological perspective, of how stereotypes are formed, how stereotypes influence prejudice and racism, and how stereotypes, prejudice, and racism influence our relationship with others. Classic and contemporary research will be examined. Students will be expected to write brief reaction papers to weekly readings, as well as complete a final paper and presentation on a topic of their choosing.
Instructors: T. Cain
Expected enrollment: 16

PSYCH-110-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introductory Seminars in Psychology: Understanding Mental Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Why do some people have serious mental health problems while others don't? What explains the racial/ethnic differences in the diagnosis of psychiatric disorders that emerge from cross-cultural research? How do current debates about treatment affect research and clinical practice? Are there parallels between physical and mental health? We will consider these and many related questions, through readings, textual analysis, debates, and oral presentations.

Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 14

PSYCH-110-02 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introductory Seminars in Psychology: Brain/Mind - Not offered this year/term

First-year seminar
What are the relationships between the structure and activity of our brains and how we think, feel, perceive, remember, and communicate? How does experience shape both our brains and our development as unique individuals throughout our lives? In discussing such questions, we will explore how the brain functions; the role of conscious and unconscious processes in determining our behavior; and how neurodegenerative disease or traumatic injury to the brain can fundamentally alter a person's abilities and sense of self.

Instructors: J. Cohen
Expected enrollment: 16

PSYCH-200-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Research Methods in Psychology

This course provides an introduction to the skills necessary for becoming good producers and consumers of psychological research. Students learn to develop research questions, survey related literature, design rigorous and ethically sound studies, and collect, analyze, and interpret quantitative and qualitative data. Students build on their computer skills relevant for psychological research and learn to read and critique original empirical journal articles. The course culminates in an original, collaborative research project, a final paper, and an oral presentation.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology AND Psychology 201 or Statistics 240

Notes: students must take statistics (Psychology 201) before enrolling in this course; students should sign up for the lecture course and one lab section

Instructors: K. Binder

PSYCH-210-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course surveys a range of topics within social psychology. How do other people influence us? How do people perceive one another? How do attitudes develop and change? Under what conditions do people conform to, or deviate from, social norms? We will survey concepts across several areas of social psychology with an emphasis on empirical research evidence.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: J. Salvatore
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-211-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Psychology of Women
Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 212f-01)
A multicultural feminist analysis of women's lives around the world. Emphasizing the diversity of women's experience across ethnicity, social class, and sexuality, this course examines existing psychological theory and research on women. In the fall, the course will have a strong international emphasis.
Prerequisites: 100 level course in psychology
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-212-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Spring) Psychology of Racism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
How do the theories of race and racism correlate with the lived experiences of people of color? In what ways are whites affected by a system that privileges whiteness? This course will explore the mind, behavior, and impact of racism on targeted and privileged racial groups and the subsequent movements of liberation from historical, conceptual, intrapersonal, and interpersonal levels. We will mine the subjective experiences of the authors, looking both for damage and resilience, and we will use this data to help us understand racism's impact on the psyches of those whom it targets and benefits.
Prerequisites: Soph, jr or sr
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PSYCH-220-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Theories of Personality
Speaking-intensive)
How do theorists' ideas about personality relate to their own life experiences? Does the gender of a theorist affect the claims they make about women's and men's personalities? Autobiographical writings of key theorists (Freud, Jung, Horney, Deutsch) are read in conjunction with their classic works, with an eye toward exploring how people are similar to, and different from, one another and how childhood experiences shape adult behavior.
Prerequisites: soph, jr or sr & Psychology 100,101 or 110
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-222-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Abnormal Psychology: Perspectives on Disorders
Gender Studies 212 (02)
This course will provide an overview of psychological disorders and research on the etiology and treatment of these disorders. The course will consider and evaluate the concept of "abnormality," with particular emphasis on intersections of mental health and disorders with culture, race, class, and gender.

Prerequisites: 100-level psychology course; soph. jr. sr.
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-225-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Spring) Psychoanalytic Theory
(Speaking-intensive; Critical Social Thought 251)

An introduction to the contested terrain of psychoanalytic theory, which has so hugely influenced twentieth-century thought. Reading widely across Freud's work and that of his colleagues, we will situate key ideas--repression, desire, masochism, neurosis, sublimation, feminine/masculine personality, etc.--within a range of interpretive frameworks. Intensive class discussions, oral presentations, and small group projects will allow students to analyze the varied implications of psychoanalytic theory for contemporary thinking about individuals and society.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr and one course in either psychology or critical social thought
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-230-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Fall) Developmental Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog. etc. requirement

Examines changes in cognitive, social, and emotional functioning, including theory and research that illuminate some central issues in characterizing these changes: the relative contributions of nature and nurture, the influence of the context on development, continuity versus discontinuity in development, and the concept of stage. Includes observations at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook.

Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: K. Haydon
Expected enrollment: 40

(Fall) Educational Psychology
(Community-based learning course; Education 233fs)

What do we learn? How do we learn? Why do we learn? In this course, we will study issues of learning, teaching, and motivation that are central to educational psychology. We will explore the shifting paradigms within educational psychology, multiple subject matter areas, (dis)continuities between classroom and home cultures, students' prior experiences, teachers as learners, ethnic and gender identity in the classroom, and learning in out-of-school settings. Requires a prepracticum in a community-based setting.

Prerequisites: soph, jr or sr
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: A. Grillo

PSYCH-241-01  - Psychology  - 2012-2013
(Fall) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-245-01  - Psychology  - 2012-2013
(Spring) Psychology of Music
(Music 245)
Every culture in the world has some form of music, but why did music evolve, and what function does it serve? In this course, we will explore the cognitive and neural processes that underlie music perception and production to ask the following questions: Does music have universal features that cross cultures? How does music convey emotion? What do infants know about music? Is music specifically human? And finally, what are the parallels between music and language? Through these questions, we hope to discover something about the origin of music and what makes it such an integral part of our daily lives.
Prerequisites: a 100 level course in Psychology or permission of instructor. Formal music training is not required for the course
Instructors: M. Breen
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-250-01  - Psychology  - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to the Biological Bases of Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Neuroscience and Behavior 250s)
This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.
Prerequisites: Psychology 100; Biological Sciences 145 or 160 recommended
Notes: This course is not appropriate for students who have already taken Neuro 100.
Instructors: S. Tershner
Expected enrollment: 50

PSYCH-251-01  - Psychology  - 2012-2013
(Fall) Animal Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology; soph. jr. sr. or permission of instructor
Instructors: K. Hollis
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-300-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in History and Systems of Psychology: Controversies in Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Why can't psychologists agree on basic assumptions? Why is so much of the field still controversial after more than a century? This seminar gives advanced psychology and neuroscience students a broad conceptual and historical overview of their discipline through an analysis of its enduring disputes. We will analyze primary source materials (both historical and contemporary) on several sides of major controversies such as: Are there racial differences in intelligence? Is madness rooted in faulty biology? Do women's brains differ from men's? Is violence innate or learned? Each student will have the opportunity to research a controversy of particular interest to her.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in Psychology, 200, 201, plus 8 additional credits in the department. Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor. Students must email Prof. Deutsch during advising week to explain why they want to take the course
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Lab in Social Psychology: Psychology of Attraction and Close Relationships
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides an introduction to research methods in social psychology, with an emphasis on the psychology of attraction and close relationships. Students will learn how to develop research questions and hypotheses, conduct literature reviews, design studies, collect and analyze data, and interpret and report research results. In addition, students will learn about topics such as relationship initiation, attachment, interpersonal conflict, and relationship quality, as well as develop and practice critical thinking, reasoning, and communication skills.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 201 and 200
Instructors: L. Beck
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Gender Studies 333s(04))
This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students must meet with instructor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.

Instructors: F. Deutsch

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Laboratory in Qualitative Research

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This course offers a hands-on introduction to methods of psychological research that focus on the qualitative description and analysis of human experience. Students learn a variety of techniques of data collection (interviewing, intensive observation, archival research) and methods of analyzing textual sources -- from historical accounts to blogs, memoirs, observational narratives, and interview transcripts. Readings focus on specific methodological practices as well as on the history and philosophy of science differentiating qualitative methods from other approaches to psychological research. Students work both collaboratively and individually on projects throughout the course.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with Prof. Hornstein during advising week.

Notes: This course also counts in the Social area of psychology.

Instructors: G. Hornstein

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

*(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology - Not offered this year/term

This course is an introduction to research methods in abnormal and personality psychology. Students will work as a class to collect data using quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Students will be expected to collect survey- and questionnaire-based data as well as engage in some interviewing projects. We will consider the various stages of research including literature review, design, ethical considerations, data collection, and analysis (qualitative and quantitative), and consider the statistical inference or implications of our findings. The course focuses on the impact of stress and coping on the lives of individuals, identity, their relationships, and psychological adjustment.

Prerequisites: Jr. sr., Psych 200, 201; one course in the personality/abnormal area preferred, and permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Douglas

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-328-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Spring) Depression and Anxiety

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This seminar will take a largely clinical perspective on the mental health problems of depression and anxiety. We will examine the traditional definitions of these diagnoses from the DSM and raise questions about the nature of diagnosis and the way diagnoses change over time. We will look at how differently depression and anxiety are understood and treated given differences in gender, race, culture and age. Finally, the course will touch on past and present treatment of depression and anxiety. Theoretically we will focus on the psychoanalytic and cognitive behavioral understanding and treatment of depression and anxiety. Case studies will help us make sense of theoretical insights.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, and Psych 220 or Psych 222

Instructors: M. Fingrut

Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Psychology of Trauma

(Gender Studies 333P(C))

What happens after a traumatic event? Why do some people develop psychological disorders and others do not? This course will explore the psychological theories and research on trauma and stress. Topics covered will include childhood abuse, domestic violence, combat violence, community violence, and interpersonal violence. The seminar will explore psychological dysfunction, disorders, as well as adaptation and coping following exposure to traumatic stress. In addition, the course will explore the concept of "cultural trauma."

Prerequisites: 100 level psychology course; Psychology 200; jr or sr. A course in abnormal psychology preferred

Instructors: A. Douglas

Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Adoption

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Adoption has become a common way to create families in the United States and many other countries. The experience of adoptees, birth parents, and adoptive families raise many questions about family relationships, identities, and community membership. In this course we will look how adoption has been studied, with a particular focus on the experiences of adoptees and their adoptive parents. Students will develop research questions, consider different methods and related ethical issues, and analyze survey and interview data.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; and 230 or 236.
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-02 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Laboratory in Romantic Development: Observational Coding Methodology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Students will work in teams to code videotaped observations of romantic conflict discussions. Students will learn to code emotion expressions, conflict engagement and resolution strategies, attachment behaviors, and relationship quality at both the dyadic and individual levels. Students will also write their own coding scales to apply to these observations. Issues of coding bias, construct validity, and intercoder reliability will be addressed. Emphasis will be on conceptual and methodological aspects of developing, coding, and analyzing observational data for individuals and individuals nested within dyads.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; 230 or 236 and permission of instructor.
Notes: During advising week students must submit a statement to the professor saying why they want to take the course.
Instructors: K. Haydon
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 labs (3 hours each) required at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook
Instructors: A. Grillo
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013

(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: Close Relationships across the Lifespan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will cover developmental implications of close relationships from infancy through adulthood with a focus on parents, friendships, and romantic partners. The goal is to examine normative developmental processes through a relational lens.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and Psychology 230
Instructors: K. Haydon
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy
(Community-based learning course)
Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with the professor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.
Notes: 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield is required.
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Speech
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents an overview of laboratory methods in cognitive psychology, including research design, methodology, data analysis, and statistical inference. We will explore these issues through the lens of human communication; specifically, speech. Students will design and complete a research project in which they record and analyze speech to explore questions about how meaning is expressed through spoken language.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201
Instructors: M. Breen
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-349-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Perception and Cognition: Language and Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Languages differ in the way they describe the world. For example, the noun for bridge is feminine in German, but masculine in French. Russian has two words for blue, while English has only one. The Piraha (an Amazonian hunter-gatherer tribe) arguably have no number words. In this course, we will be asking to what extent these cross-linguistic differences are reflected in thought. That is, do German speakers think bridges are more feminine than French speakers do? Can Russian speakers discriminate different shades of blue better than English speakers? Can the Piraha count? In exploring these questions, we hope to discover how tightly linked language and thought are.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 241
Instructors: M. Breen
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2012-2013
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.

(Fall) Making Meaning for Operations/Reasoning Algebraically about Operations

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course will draw on two modules of the Developing Mathematical Ideas (DMI) series. DMI is a curriculum designed to help think through the major ideas of K-8 mathematics and examine how children develop those ideas. The first four sessions will parallel the first four sessions of Making Meaning for Operations. The remaining nine sessions will be based on the Reasoning Algebraically about Operations module. This module focuses on how children's study of operations leads into articulation of generalizations in the number system and justification of such generalizations. Participants will explore and understand how such work in the early grades relates to algebra studied in later grades.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor

(Spring) The Process of Teaching and Learning: Developing Literacy in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Through a balanced and integrated approach students will learn to develop literacy in early childhood/elementary schools. Class members will learn about emergent literacy, diagnosing language needs, integrating phonics skills in a literature-based program, the teaching of process writing, children's fiction and nonfiction literature, and the use of portfolios for assessment. Course required for spring semester practicum students. Course evaluation is based on written and oral work done individually and in groups. Requires a prepracticum.

Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Limited to students accepted to the practicum year program

Notes: Prepracticum required
Students are expected to complete a supervised field experience full-time every day during the January Term in an inclusive classroom in a school setting. Placements can be located within or outside of the Five College area. In addition to the field experience component, students attend three course meetings (detailed below). Reading and writing assignments focus on a survey of learning disabilities, descriptions of special education programs, understanding Individualized Education Programs, and planning curriculum for inclusive classrooms.

Prerequisites: One of the following: Psychology 230, 233, 236, Education 205, Educational Studies 215 or permission of instructor. Three mandatory meetings (2 hours each): two in November and one in Feb. Prepracticum: five days a week for three weeks in January; permission to participate in prepracticum experience for credit is contingent upon attendance at the meetings in November. Consult Ms. Lawrence or Ms. Carlisle in October for exact dates of the November course meetings.

Notes: This course is required of all students pursuing teacher licensure. Graded on a credit/no credit basis.

RELIG-210-01 - Religion - 2012-2013
(Fall) Religious Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the ethical implications of religious convictions, particularly implications relevant to personal decisions. It introduces ethical principles through an examination of scriptural sources, a selection of major moral thinkers, and illustrative moral dilemmas. Among the concerns of the course are the components and motives of personal decision, the values and liabilities of fixed norms and principles, and the nature of personal responsibility.

RELIG-212-01 - Religion - 2012-2013
(Spring) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

RELIG-213-01 - Religion - 2012-2013
(Spring) Religion and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 220 (02))
This course is an investigation of the intersections between film and religion. In it, we will examine how the cultural phenomenon of religion is represented in film and how religion, understood critically and theoretically, can be a useful means to interpret film. We will learn the basic issues inherent in the interpretation of this art form (e.g., How do the visual, aural, and narrative components of film work together to create meaning?), and we will critically investigate the concept of religion as a means to better understanding the significance of cultural practice (e.g., What is religion? What are the myriad ways it is made manifest in culture?).

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 215)
Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Fall) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Jewish Studies 235)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Sohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

In the first millennium, Christianity thrived throughout the Middle East. Because Roman Catholic and Protestant churches later declared many of these Christians to be heretics, their stories have often been excluded from the history of Christianity. This course challenges the assumption of Christianity as a "Western" religion and asks how our understanding of global Christianity changes when we include the history and perspective of Eastern Christians. We will read such sources as the tale of a transvestite nun, a letter allegedly written by Jesus, ancient Christian hymns, the story of a demon-possessed monastery, and the first Christian writings on Islam.

This course explores in a comparative way, metaphysical reflections on violence and nonviolence. Sacred and classical texts that have informed social consciousness on the necessity of 'Duty' and its implications for the body, as well as offering a distinctive view of Reality will serve as the primary readings for this class; they include the Bhagavad-Gita, the Phaedo, the Bible, the Koran, and Douglass's My Bondage and My Freedom. Modern case studies involving Gandhi, King, Cleaver, and suicide bombers will be compared against the metaphysical premises of these sacred and classical texts.

This course explores women and Buddhism during different historical periods and in different cultures. Through a variety of sources, this course will illuminate Buddhist concepts of gender and sexuality, views of women's spiritual capacities, the diversity of women's images, roles, experiences, concerns, and contributions in Buddhist societies, and scholarly approaches to women in Buddhism. Special attention will be given to how gender is constructed in each cultural and religious context encountered, with particular emphasis on Buddhist women in Southeast Asia. We will look into the reasons why texts on religion have not always included the voices of women, and we will investigate ways to uncover them through research techniques and alternative hermeneutical strategies.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 333-F)

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and inceptive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Creation vs. Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

A distinctive mark of Western thought in the nineteenth century was its fascination with "the origin of things." The origin of the species and the origin of the universe are two prime examples. These two concerns, in particular, had a decisive impact on how religion and science came to be understood and expressed in the twentieth century. As a consequence of the ensuing public debate, this question of "origins" presented a direct challenge to the received theory of creation, the meaning of miracles, as well as the nature of biblical inspiration.

ROMLG-105-01 - Romance Languages and Literatures - 2012-2013
(Fall) First Year Seminar: Sex and the City: Gender-Power Relations in Early Modern Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English; Spanish 105(02))

Preamble (for topics courses): Seminar in Reading Writing and Reasoning taught in English

Political, social, and economic life was radically changed by growth of Europe's cities between medieval and modern times. These changes were debated in sexual terms as conflicts between men and women. As we study short stories from Early Modern France (Madame de Lafayette), Italy (Giovanni Boecacio), and Spain (Miguel de Cervantes and María de Zayas), and place them in their historical contexts, we will ask questions such as: To what extent do these works challenge or reinforce dominant models of gender relations and negotiate concepts and institutions such as marriage, honor, patriarchy, and blood purity? How do those topics apply to us today?

Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor

Instructors: N. Romero-Díaz

Expected enrollment: 16

ROMLG-375-01 - Romance Languages and Literatures - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures:
Topic: Don Juan, Valmont, Casanova: Iconic Latin Lovers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
If all is fair in love and war, are there rules for the game of power and seduction? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power in Spain, France, and Italy, will we witness a change for women? Students will explore such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, José Zorrilla, Molière, Beaumarchais, Goldoni; Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova's Memoirs. Students will be encouraged to explore works by major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods, and view relevant contemporary films such as The King is Dancing, and Goya's Ghosts. The final term project is a digital narration in the target language of the student.
Prerequisites: For language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.
Instructors: N. Vaget

(Fall) The Romanovs: Triumph and Tragedy
(Taught in English; History 205)
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fall when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?
Instructors: C. Pleshakov

RES-210-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union’s success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy? How has Russia’s transformation affected ordinary people and Russia’s relationship to the West?

(Spring) Russia and the West
(Taught in English; Politics 264f)
Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West’s policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without the study of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and, following the collapse of the USSR in 1991, the role played by Russia and Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex and multipolar "New World Order." What should U.S. policy be toward the emerging new states of the Baltics, Central Asia, and Caucasus?

(Spring) Oil and Water Don’t Mix: Geopolitics, Energy, and the Environment - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West’s strategic energy interests?

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: Red Star Over Russia: The Totalitarian Regime of Lenin and Stalin, 1917-1953 - *Not offered this year/term
 Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 260(03))
The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 marked the coming of totalitarianism to Russia. Led first by Lenin and then by Stalin, the country went through the most brutal civil war, purges, World War II, and the first stages of cold war. This period also saw immense social change and sweeping economic transformation. What were the causes of totalitarianism in Russia? How did the regime function? What were the major landmarks of Russian history in the period 1917-1953?

RES-251-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2012-2013
(Fall) Advanced Russian Language: From Reading to Speaking
 Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): We will study a variety of texts and set them into the cultural context that marks them as distinctly Russian. Texts will be selected from a broad range of genres and sources. Readings, discussions, short oral and written reports. Special attention to complex grammatical constructions and vocabulary building. Taught in Russian.
This course aims at expansion of students' vocabulary and improvement of both writing and speaking skills. The course is intended for students who have completed at least four semesters of Russian or the equivalent. Heritage learners of Russian (those who speak the language) will also benefit from the course. With a strong emphasis on integrating vocabulary in context, this course aims to help students advance their lexicon and grammar, increase fluency, and overcome speaking inhibitions. We will read and discuss a variety of texts including short stories, films, and articles.

Prerequisites: Russian & Eurasian Studies 202 or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Dengub
Expected enrollment: 10

RES-252-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Russian Film and Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Students will read and discuss short stories and other works by Anton Chekhov in Russian and view films based on his works. They will continue to work on oral and writing skills, and vocabulary. This course prepares students to express opinions, ideas, points of view, and critiques on prose and films, social issues and cultural phenomena using more complex and rich language.
Prerequisites: Russian and Eurasian Studies 251 or the equivalent, or permission of the instructor
Notes: Taught in Russian.

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Spring) Nationalism
(Taught in English; Politics 308)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Spring) Origins of Terrorism
(Taught in English; Politics 243s)
Russia was the first nation in the world to face political terrorism. In Russia, the era of terrorism lasted from the 1860s, when the People’s Will group launched the hunt on the tsar Alexander II, until 1918, when the Socialist Revolutionary Party attempted to assassinate Lenin. A case study of terrorism in Russia will help us to answer a number of questions highly relevant today. What are the causes of terrorism? What are its goals and methods? What can governments do to cope with it? What is the impact of terrorism on society?

(Fall) Revolutions
(Taught in English; Politics 350f)
Revolution is far from over. First came the explosion in Eastern Europe, the collapse of the USSR, the rise of the Taliban in Afghanistan, bloodless overthrows of old elites in Indonesia and the Philippines, and what Hugo Chavez calls the Bolivarian revolution in Venezuela. The goal of revolutions may no longer be socialism, it may not even be directed at greater liberty. But revolutions continue to affect millions of people’s lives and reflect states’ responses to global change and social dislocation. They are still with us as the Arab Spring so clearly demonstrated. We will examine revolutions, their beginnings, their victories, and their ends.

(Spring) Revolutions - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 350f)
Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia’s early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Sociology of Popular Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
There is little question that popular culture occupies a central role in the contemporary social world. For some scholars, popular culture serves a social function akin to traditional religion, acting as a form of social solidarity by promoting collective ideas, experiences, and identities. A more critical approach views popular culture as a form of ideological domination, promoting the interests of certain social groups at the expense of others. This course will examine these theories by exploring both the social factors that help influence the production and consumption of popular culture as well as the ways in which popular culture itself helps shape society.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Sociology
Instructors: B. McKernan

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Media
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides an overview of sociological research on mass media. Students will explore the social impact of mass media from several different scholarly perspectives, including the early Chicago School, the Columbia School tradition, the Frankfurt School tradition, field theory, and more recent work from cultural sociology. The relationship between democracy and the media will be a central theme throughout the semester. The course concludes with an investigation into the possible strengths and limitations of new media formats, including blogs and social media. To help gain a stronger understanding of mass media's social impact, students will develop their own research projects that analyze the manner in which a particular type of mass media covers a specific topic or issue.

(Fall) Development of Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the origins and development of sociological theory in the nineteenth century. Focusing on the three most important representatives of the classical tradition in sociology - Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim - we consider in detail the ideas of each, compare their perspectives on emerging industrial society, and assess their contemporary significance.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123 or Anthropology 105, soph, jr, sr
Instructors: K. Tucker

SOCI-231-01 - Sociology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Criminology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course focuses on the historical and theoretical development of the major approaches to crime and criminality. Criminology began in the second half of the nineteenth century when its pioneers asked the "big questions" pertaining to crime, society, and human nature. As criminology progressed, it narrowed its focus, concentrating on special areas, such as violent crime and property crime. As sociology began to dominate criminology, new theories were developed to explain the social facts gathered in the last 50 years.
Prerequisites: Sociology 123

(Spring) Social Problems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This is a course on the social construction of social problems. It devotes almost exclusive attention to how a "problem" becomes a social problem; examining how atypical cases become regarded as typical; how definitions are expanded to inflate statistics; and how claim makers and advocacy groups manipulate the media to market social problems and solutions to the public.

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Urban Sociology
This course examines the urban world through a sociological lens. The course begins with a discussion of the history of urban America and then moves into an exploration of many of the key aspects defining contemporary life in metropolitan areas today, including immigration, poverty, segregation, crime, suburbanization and urban culture. By reading and discussing sophisticated demographic research as well as rich ethnographies, this course demonstrates the strong contributions sociology makes to our understanding of these important topics.

(Spring) Class in the Black Community
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.

This course explores class in the black community from a sociological perspective. It focuses on how race fosters commonalities and how class fuels differences among blacks. We will examine the nature of these commonalities and differences within several contexts, such as neighborhoods, politics, work, and culture.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology

SOCI-327-01 - Sociology - 2012-2013
(Fall) Social Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course is a critical survey of theoretical and empirical research on social inequality, stratification, and mobility. The central focus is class, race, and gender inequalities as they have changed during the post-World War II period in the United States (although we will look briefly at stratification regimes in other cultures and time periods). The concepts and methods of social stratification have wide application in sociology, economics, public policy, and administration contexts. As the course progresses, we will explore some of these applications as we wrestle with several policy issues currently confronting U.S. society.

(Fall) First Year Seminar: Sex and the City: Gender-Power Relations in Early Modern Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English; Romance Languages 105)
Political, social, and economic life was radically changed by growth of Europe's cities between medieval and modern times. These changes were debated in sexual terms as conflicts between men and women. As we study short stories from Early Modern France (Madame de Lafayette), Italy (Giovanni Boccaccio), and Spain (Miguel de Cervantes and María de Zayas), and place them in their historical contexts, we will ask questions such as: To what extent do these works challenge or reinforce dominant models of gender relations and negotiate concepts and institutions such as marriage, honor, patriarchy, and blood purity? How do those topics apply to us today?

(Fall) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly: Women in the Spanish Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204-01
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
During the Spanish Empire (sixteenth-eighteenth centuries), witches, prostitutes, transvestite warriors, and daring noblewomen and nuns violated the social order by failing to uphold the expected qualities of the ideal good woman and/or the expected sexual morality of the time. They were criticized, punished, and even burned at the stake. Students will study contradictory discourses of good and evil and beauty and ugliness in relation to women and their place in history. We will analyze historical and literary examples of so-called "bad" women in the Spanish Empire, such as Celestina, María de Padilla, Catalina de Erauso, and Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz.

Who are we? This is the question that Latin American writers, artists, philosophers and politicians have attempted to answer through fiction, nonfiction, visual arts, and film. Through representative cultural texts from figures such as D. F. Sarmiento, José Martí, Gabriela Mistral, Marta Rojas, and Hugo Chávez, we will explore discourses of identity, different sociopolitical positions, and the representation of race and gender in the construction of "latinoamericanidad."

(Fall) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: Double Takes: Women's Artistic Production in Contemporary Latin America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 240-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

As women perform gender, so too do they perform culture. In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture, through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

When and how did the notion of "development" emerge and spread? Why does nearly every country now aspire to it? What stigmas and hierarchies does the term "underdevelopment" imply? Throughout the Spanish-speaking world, "development" has proved problematic not only as a material reality but also as a framework for understanding place, time, and selfhood. For that very reason, Latin American countries and Spain are ideal places from which to question commonly accepted understandings of "development" (and associated concepts such as "modernization" and "progress"). In this course, students rethink "development" through the study of a variety of writers and filmmakers from several countries.

(Spring) Concepts and Practices of Power: An Introduction: Fighting Words: Imperial Discourses and Resistance in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

In 1492, the Spanish conquest forever changed indigenous America and created a "new" world. European imperial discourses collided with resistance movements and the emerging voices of oppressed peoples, including indigenous communities, women, and mestizos. This course traces the tensions between imperialist and resistance discourses during both the colonial period and today. We will analyze the "fighting words" that consolidated the Spanish empire and later opened the path to Latin American independence. Tracing the impact of these struggles on the Americas today, we will examine how subaltern communities strive to make their voices heard in the global context.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 333D)
As democracy expanded in Latin America in the 1990s and 2000s, so did neoliberal policies that disproportionately affected Afro-descendant populations, particularly the lives of Afro-descendant women. This course will examine Afro-descendant social movements, the discourse of human rights, land tenure, cultural citizenship and identity politics through a variety of interdisciplinary texts. Particular emphasis will be placed on Afro-descendant women. Readings are required before the first day of class.
Prerequisites: Two 200-level courses above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Mosby
Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-330-02 - Spanish - 2012-2013
(Full) Advanced Studies in Identities and Intersections: The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly: Women in the Spanish Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 333-I)
During the Spanish Empire (sixteenth-eighteenth centuries), witches, prostitutes, transvestite warriors, and daring noblewomen and nuns violated the social order by failing to uphold the expected qualities of the ideal good woman and/or the expected sexual morality of the time. They were criticized, punished, and even burned at the stake. Students will study contradictory discourses of good and evil and beauty and ugliness in relation to women and their place in history. We will analyze historical and literary examples of so-called "bad" women in the Spanish Empire, such as Celestina, María de Padilla, Catalina de Erauso, and Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz.
Prerequisites: Two 200-level courses above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: N. Romero-Díaz
Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-340-01 - Spanish - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: Ahead of the Times: Transatlantic Theories of the Avant-Garde
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Are you avant-garde? To be "avant-garde" once meant to be "ahead of your time" or to be situated along the cutting edge of an artistic or political movement. In the first part of the twentieth-century, a cadre of artists in Europe as well as in Latin America put forward subversive critiques of art by considering innovative form and content as political tools for change. In this class we will read avant-garde artists from Spain and Latin America alike to explore the productive tensions between peninsular and Latin American trends as well as between art and activism, theory and practice. We will look at movements like Dadaismo, Modernismo, Surrealismo, and Indigenismo and consider the relevance of the avant-garde today.
Prerequisites: Two courses at the 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: T. Daly
Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-340-02 - Spanish - 2012-2013
(Spring) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: Memory (of) War
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the repressive, right-wing military regime of Francisco Franco (1939-1975) have shaped contemporary thought and cultural production in Spain. Cinema in particular shows a persistent concern with war and memory. The films studied in this course raise a number of philosophical and political questions to this effect. How does the devastation of war register through the medium of film? How do censorship and propaganda condition memory, and how does the past return in a postdictatorship? What and why do people choose to remember or to forget? Films to be studied include both mainstream commercial features and experimental works, and range in genre.

Prerequisites: Two courses in Spanish at the 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor

Instructors: J. Crumbaugh

SPAN-350-01 - Spanish - 2012-2013
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This Community-Based-Learning course examines how digital storytelling enables communities to express themselves and to gain social visibility through literary and media discourses. How do traditionally marginalized communities tell their own stories? Together with the Springfield-based Latino Youth Media Institute, students will research and produce digital stories on issues that affect the North End community in Springfield. Throughout the semester, students will alternate classroom instruction and fieldwork.
Prerequisites: two courses at the 200-level above 212 or permission of instructor
Notes: Transportation arranged by the College.
Instructors: R. Miñana

SPAN-360-01 - Spanish - 2012-2013
(Fall) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Topic: Don Juan, Valmont, Casanova: Iconic Latin Lovers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
If all is fair in love and war, are there rules for the game of power and seduction? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power in Spain, France, and Italy, will we witness a change for women? Students will explore such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, José Zorrilla, Molière, Beaumarchais, Goldoni; Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova's Memoirs. Students will be encouraged to explore works by major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods, and view relevant contemporary films such as The King is Dancing, and Goya's Ghosts. The final term project is a digital narration in the target language of the student.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level
Notes: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in the Language Resource Center.

Statistics

STAT-140-01 - Statistics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Introduction to the Ideas and Applications of Statistics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course provides an overview of statistical methods, their conceptual underpinnings, and their use in various settings taken from current news, as well as from the physical, biological, and social sciences. Topics will include exploring distributions and relationships, planning for data production, sampling distributions, basic ideas of inference (confidence intervals and hypothesis tests), inference for distributions, and inference for relationships, including chi-square methods for two-way tables and regression.

Prerequisites: 2 years of high school algebra

Instructors: J. Kim

STAT-240-01 - Statistics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Elementary Data Analysis and Experimental Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
A fundamental fact of science is that repeated measurements exhibit variability. The course presents ways to design experiments that will reveal systematic patterns while "controlling" the effects of variability and methods for the statistical analysis of data from well-designed experiments. Topics include completely randomized, randomized complete block, Latin Square and factorial designs, and their analysis of variance. The course emphasizes applications, with examples drawn principally from biology, psychology, and medicine.
Prerequisites: Any 100-level mathematics or statistics course or permission of instructor.
Instructors: P. Matheson

STAT-341-01 - Statistics - 2012-2013
(Spring) Linear Statistical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Mathematical concepts from linear algebra and n-dimensional Euclidean geometry, together with statistical concepts of estimation and hypothesis testing, are developed and used to construct a unifying theory for two classes of applied methods: analysis of variance and regression analysis. The theory is developed in three stages: least squares and orthogonal projections; moment assumptions and the Gauss-Markov theorem; and the normal distribution and F-tests.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211

STAT-342-01 - Statistics - 2012-2013
(Fall) Probability - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Mathematics 342f)
This course develops the ideas of probability simultaneously from experimental and theoretical perspectives. The laboratory provides a range of experiences that enhance and sharpen the theoretical approach and, moreover, allows us to observe regularities in complex phenomena and to conjecture theorems. Topics include: introductory experiments; axiomatic probability; random variables, expectation, and variance; discrete distributions; continuous distributions; stochastic processes; functions of random variables; estimation and hypothesis testing.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in fall 2013 and 2015.

(Spring) Mathematical Statistics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to the mathematical theory of statistics and to the application of that theory to the real world. Topics include probability, random variables, special distributions, introduction to estimation of parameters, and hypothesis testing.

Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and 342

Notes: offered every spring semester alternately at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges; offered at Mount Holyoke in spring 2014.

THEAT-120-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Spring) Topics in Design: Costume Construction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will take you through the theatrical process of creating clothing and accessories for the stage. Hand sewing techniques, fabric use and identification, and clothing alterations are covered. We will explore basic pattern drafting and draping, and some accessory construction will also be covered. We will work from costume renderings to build and alter clothing for our productions.
Notes: lab, project materials fee $45
Instructors: E. Bergeron
Expected enrollment: 10

THEAT-122-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Fall) Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set and costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how their work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of this process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, and models. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: lab; $30 materials fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: V. James, TBA
Expected enrollment: 30

THEAT-126-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Fall) Lighting Design I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and practice of lighting design (with some sound design) for the theatre. This course will cover the basics about light, lighting equipment and how to develop a design. Students will learn how to draft a light plot, focus lights, and build light cues.
Notes: lab; purchase of design supplies, materials, and theatre tickets is the responsibility of the student
Instructors: L. Dubin

THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Fall) What Is Performance? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 100f-03)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor

THEAT-205-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Spring) Acting II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of techniques developed in Acting I with a greater commitment to the culture of collaboration. Concentration is on scene work with realist playwrights, contemporary masters e.g. Churchill, Shepard, Wellman and Parks and with new work by contemporary playwrights. Actor training will involve the embodiment of physical behavior, the visceral use of language, and more intermediate composition work with Viewpoints to develop and refine awareness. Practical tools explored in class are intended to offer the student greater vocal, physical, and imaginative freedom and clarity, as well as text analysis skills.

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Latina Theatre and Performance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Latam287-03)
This course offers transnational approaches to the theory and political practice of performance in the Americas with a focus on work by Latinas in the United States and women in Latin America. We will interrogate the ways in which race, sexuality, class, gender, indigenous and diasporic identities inform the methodological and aesthetic mandates of an array of artists from across disciplines. Employing multiple modes of performance from theater, dance, performance art, ritual, visual art, and folkloric music, we will explore how these practices have functioned and continue to allow for politically subversive or resistant transformation.

(Spring) Topics in Theatre Studies: Queer Theory, Performance, and Public Practice - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 223s(01))
How are gender and sexuality constructed, rehearsed, and contested through performance? How can queer cultural production serve as a method of activist intervention in dominant culture? In this course, students are introduced to the central theories and debates in queer studies, with attention to the intersections among gender, sexuality, race, and class. Students also see, write about, and discuss performances that critically engage queer discourses. Additionally, this course asks students to put theory into practice: students stage scenes from selected plays, create original performances inspired by course readings, and experiment with other performative interventions in public culture.

THEAT-251-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Fall) Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Critical Social Thought 252f(01))
A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created--in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting--but also for whom, and why.

(Spring) Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Critical Social Thought 252)
A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to: the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.

THEAT-280-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Spring) Management: Stage Management - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine stage management techniques for academic, professional, and community theatre and explore the role of the stage manager in these various theatre environments. Each student will be required to stage manage a production. Students will also be required to see and evaluate theatrical productions in the area.
Notes: Theatre tickets, supplies, and materials are the responsibility of the student
Expected enrollment: 8

THEAT-281-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Fall) Shakespeare
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 211)
A study of some of Shakespeare's plays emphasizing the poetic and dramatic aspects of his art, with attention to the historical context and close, careful reading of the language. Eight or nine plays.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: S. Roychoudhury
Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-281-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Spring) Shakespeare
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; English 211)
A study of some of Shakespeare's plays, emphasizing both the poetic and the dramatic aspects of his art, with attention to the historical context and varieties of critical interpretations, including those of the twentieth century. Nine or ten plays.
Prerequisites: soph jr, sr or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Hill

Prerequisites: by audition or interview only
Instructors: B. O'Hara
Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-283-01 - Theatre Arts - 2012-2013
(Spring) Playwriting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course offers practice in the fundamentals of dramatic structure and technique. Weekly reading assignments will examine the unique nature of writing for the theatre, nuts and bolts of format, tools of the craft, and the playwright's process from formulating a dramatic idea to rewriting. Weekly writing assignments will include scenework, adaptation, and journaling. The course will culminate in the writing of a one-act play. Each class meeting will incorporate reading student work aloud with feedback from the instructor and the class. Students will listen, critique, and develop the vocabulary to discuss plays, structure, story, and content.

Prerequisites: an English writing course, one course in theatre arts, or permission of instructor

Notes: may be re-taken at 300 level with permission of instructor

Instructors: S. Oswald

AFCNA-100-01 - Africana Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: The Civil Rights Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; History 101)
We will examine the crusade for desegregation both within and beyond the South. Some attention will be given to the movement's Reconstruction precedents, but we will concentrate on the post-1954 period. Readings will cover how segregation was instituted; different phases of the movement; leaders, organization, and followers; the role of women and children; and post-movement history.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 15

AFCNA-100-01 - Africana Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: American Dreams, American Dilemmas: Race, Democracy, and Human Capability in the Twenty-First Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Dreams of full citizenship in North America for the descendants of enslaved African Americans have been overdetermined by dilemmas of racial inequality and racial conflict. After nearly 400 years in "the new world," the "beloved community" remains elusive. What progress has been made? What challenges remain? Is the project of integration and racial harmony dead (and, if so, what would an autopsy reveal)? What work remains in the quest for racial, gender, and economic justice and democracy? The course has two goals: to highlight critical questions and debates around black striving, and to develop good writing and critical thinking skills.
Prerequisites: fy only
Instructors: L. Wilson

AFCNA-200-01 - Africana Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to Africana Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive; Politics 200)
This reading- and writing-intensive course draws upon the intellectual traditions of African American, African, and African diasporic studies in order to explore the connections and disjunctures among people of African descent. While the course pays attention to national, regional, and historical contexts, it asks this question: what do African descended people have in common and when and how are their experiences and interests different?

(Spring) Sexuality and Hip Hop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204(07))
Hip Hop music has often been the subject of controversy when it comes to sexuality. Whether it be for misogynist lyrics, homophobic icons or sexually explicit video models, conversations about sexuality and Hip Hop are largely portrayed as having two sides: those who embrace Hip Hop and the "sexuality police." In this class we will explore how conversations about sexuality happen within the communities who are invested in the culture. We will examine how different facets of the culture -- fashion, dance, music, film as well as rap music -- display and talk about sexuality and sexual identity and how these representations impact U.S. popular culture.

(Fall) African American Culture and Society - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Reviews theory and policy research that targets durable (race, gender, and class) inequalities. How has recent policy (especially involving schools and prisons) shaped public life and private sector capacity in communities of color from 1976 to the present? What are the consequences of governing through crime and punishment? Is poor discipline a viable approach to strengthening the social fabric? Data and personal narrative will be used. Brings together Mount Holyoke students and women in the final stages of their sentences in Hampden County, who collaborate as peers in a semester-long exploration of these issues. The semester culminates with a reading and completion ceremony.
Prerequisites: admission by interview only, jr & sr only except by permission; email lbwilson@mtholyoke.edu for appointment

(Spring) Islam in America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 242)
This course examines the lived experiences of Muslims brought to North America against their will, modern African-American uses and adaptations of Islam, including the Nation of Islam, as well as the ideas of Muslims who have voluntarily immigrated or converted here in the US. The course examines issues of race, gender and the status of women, and includes discussions of American Muslim youth cultures, including music, film and novels. Students acquire a familiarity with the history of Islam in the US as well as the diversity of the many American Muslim cultures.

(Fall) Urban Policy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Politics 302)
Gentrification, unemployment, crime, failing schools, disinvestment, mass incarceration—what comes to mind when you think of the inner city? In response to a constrained fiscal environment, cities have increasingly adopted neoliberal policy approaches to address seemingly intractable urban problems. The seminar will study current research to assess the political and economic impact of this neoliberal policy regime on housing, education, and public safety. This is an inter-institutional class, linked with an advanced seminar on the same topic at Holyoke Community College. Both classes will meet together occasionally for films and guest speakers.
Prerequisites: Politics 250, 252, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Luminous Darkness: African American Social Thought After DuBois
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the causes of and proposed solutions to "the Negro problem" in post-Civil War American public policy. Focuses on the life, work, and legacies of DuBois. Drawing on domestic and diasporic fictional and nonfictional depictions of black life in the "DuBoisian century" the course considers different responses to his 1903 question, "How does it feel to be a problem?" Examining theories, arguments, movements and policies targeting blacks and their environment allows us to critique black modernity, assess the changing role of black intellectuals in society, evaluate "race theory," and consider dominant and marginal attempts to analyze and overcome the "color line" in America.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department and permission of instructor

(Fall) Black Gender: Womanhood and Manhood in the African-American Community
(Gender Studies 333f(C))
This course engages with issues in popular culture, scholarship, and art that negotiate the complex terrain of black gender. We question the concepts of manhood and womanhood and their intersection with racial constructs as categories of personhood through the critical gaze of African American studies and gender studies. Black gender is identified as the ways in which gender, for African Americans, is always mediated by race.

(Spring) Black Migrations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Politics 356)
This seminar is a comparative examination of the migration of African-descended people within and to the United States. It looks at in succession the original African diaspora through the Atlantic slave trade; the Great Migration of African Americans from the South; the immigration to the U.S. of African-descended people from the West Indies; and last, the movement of Africans from the continent to the United States since 1965 when immigration laws became more inclusive. We will evaluate the process of African Americanization for each new migratory group in all of its cultural and political ramifications. Course material includes articles, books, films, novels, and guest speakers.

(Spring) What All Is "About" About?
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Not all about' claims imply the same kind of 'about.' Do scientific inquiries answer to a different kind of 'about' question than the arts, literary criticism or political rhetoric? Paintings depict and writing describes, what does music do? Express? Do a religious icon, a realistic painting and an abstract painting involve the same kind of depicting, just different subject matters and styles, or does 'intent' also make a difference? What is that difference, and how do I describe it? Do the answers to my questions apply equally at different times in history and in other cultures? This seminar will involve lots of reading, writing, looking and listening, some guest lectures and group projects.

(Spring) Anthropology of Modern Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Since the mid-nineteenth century, Americans have viewed Japan as the Orient's most exotic and mysterious recess, alternately enticing and frightening in its difference. Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will strive for greater understanding of shared experiences as well as historical particularities. Issues covered may vary from one semester to another, but frequently focus on work, women, minorities, and popular culture. Films and anthropological works provide ethnographic examples of some key concepts.

(Fall) Shopping and Swapping: Cultures of Consumption and Exchange
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
We shop for our food, for our clothes, for our colleges. We purchase cars, manicures, and vacations. It seems that there is little that cannot be bought or sold. But we also give and receive gifts, exchange favors, "go dutch" in restaurants, and invite friends for potlucks. This course examines exchange systems cross-culturally, in order to understand their cultural significance and social consequences. It explores how our own commodity exchange system, which appears to be no more than an efficient means of distributing goods and services, in fact contains intriguing symbolic dimensions similar to the gift exchange systems of Native North America, Melanesia, and Africa.

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology and Human Rights: Between Devil's Advocate and Rights Advocacy
This course explores anthropological approaches to human rights—a key theme of transnational politics and international law. Anthropologists have contributed to discussions on human rights since the UN Declaration and the field has provided a vibrant platform to analyze ideologies, politics, and practices surrounding human rights. We will survey an array of anthropological studies that approach human rights from the perspective of cultural relativism, contextualization, advocacy, and practice. Students will gain a critical perspective on the seemingly universal rhetoric of human rights by learning how it produces diverse effects in places such as Africa, Latin America, and the Middle East.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Roth
Expected enrollment: 30

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Urban Natures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
How does the city figure into struggles over who we are and who we want to be? Pinnacle of civilization and cultural vibrancy, or zone of social decadence and future catastrophe? Thinking through enduring myths of idyllic pasts and imagined futures, this course explores figures of the urban as a matter of changing economic and ecological relations. Arguments about the production of nature under urbanization will be drawn from ethnographic research as well as urban history, political ecology, science studies, and other approaches. We examine, in sum, how societies have built cities and, reflexively, how cities have shaped societies.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Collecting the Past: Art and Artifacts of the Ancient Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Early European explorers, modern travelers, collectors, curators, and archaeologists have contributed to the development of ancient Latin American collections in museums across the globe. This course traces the history of these collecting practices and uses recent case studies to demonstrate how museums negotiate--successfully and unsuccessfully--the competing interests of scholars, donors, local communities, and international law. Students will learn how archaeologists study a variety of artifact types within museum collections and will have the opportunity to conduct independent research projects using pre-Columbian pottery collections from the Mount Holyoke Art Museum.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, and one course in archaeology, anthropology, history of Latin America, museum studies, or art history, or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Klarich
Expected enrollment: 25

ANTHR-216-04 - Anthropology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Anthropology of Play
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores methods of bounding time and space, of shaping gender and sexuality, of cultivating skill, and of constructing reality through play. As a way of being in the world, play is both a mode of symbolic action and an engagement with the object world. Enshrined as a human right, particularly a human right of children, play is integral to modern notions of individual freedom, yet it is also subject to various moral and political projects. Play liberates, distracts, creates, destroys, transgresses, and entrenches. Studies of virtual worlds, simulations, toys, sports, and war games contribute new understandings of imagination, labor, boredom, hierarchy, and other key cultural ideas.

(Fall) Research Seminar in Sociology and Anthropology

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Sociology 226)

This seminar explores practical issues in doing research in anthropology and sociology. Depending on student interest, activities could include reading field notes, narrative analysis of texts, survey design, coding and measurement of quantitative variables, and/or visual analysis. Students will have an opportunity to think about how to develop a class paper into an independent study, how to organize research for a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or Sociology
Notes: Graded on a credit/no-credit basis.

(Spring) Language in Culture and Society

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Every society is held together by systems of interpersonal and institutional communication. This course examines the nature of communication codes, including those based on language (speaking and writing) and those based on visual images (art, advertising, television). To understand communication in its social and historical dimensions, we study the psychological and cultural impact of media revolutions and then look at ways communication systems manipulate individual consciousness. Illustrative examples are drawn from Western and non-Western societies.

(Spring) Medical Anthropology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Biocultural aspects of disease and healing are examined through case studies of nonindustrialized societies, including the relationship between malaria and sickle cell anemia in West Africa and ritual cannibalism, AIDS, and a degenerative nervous-system disorder (kuru) in highland New Guinea. This course surveys the cultural construction of suffering and healing, the medicalization of human social problems, and inequities in the distribution of disease and therapy.

(Fall) Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Film Studies 320f-02)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 and 4 additional credits in department
Instructors: D. Battaglia
Expected enrollment: 20

ANTHR-316-01 - Anthropology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Space, Place, and Way-finding
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
What makes a home feel like home? What makes a neighborhood feel alive and vibrant? Architects and urban planners develop elaborate designs meant for specific kinds of human uses, and yet we find that people often use spaces for purposes quite different from those that planners intended. In this course, we will explore the ways in which people dwell in the abstract spaces of planners, turning them into inhabited places. We will also explore the ways that people navigate through and between these spaces that have been compartmentalized into politically and socially bounded units. A variety of theoretical perspectives will be applied in diverse cultural cases to better understand the ways in which peoples inhabit the world.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Roth
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Ethnographies of Law
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar focuses on the anthropological study of the legal field. The class will begin with a survey of some classical texts that underpin the legal thought in the modern era. We will then see how anthropologists contributed to the study of law by conceptualizing it as part of larger socio-political processes and as a field that includes social relations, processes, and practices. The students will learn how some key legal issues such as dispute management, decision making, and reconciliation are actualized in diverse cultural and social settings, to think critically and evaluate legal processes in a multicultural setting and in plural societies.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: E. Babul
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Gender, Food, and Agriculture in the Global Context
(Gender Studies 333J)
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: The Modern Atlantic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar explores the formation of the "modern" or "black" South Atlantic through an eclectic variety of historical and ethnographic texts. We will read early European travelogues of cannibalism and savagery in the New World, as well as accounts of Muslim slave revolts in Brazil, Cuban tobacco and sugar, the Haitian Revolution's obscured place in history, and a murder mystery. While themes of forced labor, commodity production, and imperial power shape ideas of an Atlantic World, the course also examines how history itself is made and orient us toward a concept of culture not as fixed in time or place but as dynamic and always contentious.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Angelini

(Spring) Memory, History, and Forgetting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
In this seminar we question the distinction between myth and history and consider the relationship of historical consciousness to memory, forgetting, and other types of temporal awareness. We then examine the relationships among literacy, art, nationalism, and the invention of tradition and test the limits of ethnohistory. Finally, we look at the ways in which relics, museums, and tourism have all helped make history—as fact, experience, or commodity—possible.

Architectural Studies

(Fall) Topics in Architecture: Introduction to Architectural Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introductory studio architecture course is a rigorous series of design investigations into architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (drawings, models) to interdisciplinary and significant design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space.
Prerequisites: One semester of Drawing I, design, or sculpture is recommended.
Instructors: I. Rohloff
Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-205-08 - Architectural Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Topics in Architecture: Sculpting Space: Introduction to Architectural Design - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This studio course will be a design investigation of a particular theme in or approach to architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (sketches, plans, elevations, models, computer diagramming, and various modes of digital representation) to interdisciplinary and socially pertinent design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form, and space. Our goal is to apply creative techniques in art and sculpture to the creation of meaningful space.

Prerequisites: One semester of design or drawing is recommended
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: T. Long
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Introduction to Architectural Design II: Principles of Environmental Design

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This hybrid studio addresses human comfort with lectures and problem work sessions integrated with design projects. We start with an in-depth study of the world's climate regions, the sun, and the earth's tilt and spin. Primary methods of heat transfer are investigated as students research two architectural solutions (vernacular and contemporary) within each climate. Using daylight, the sun's movement, and sun-path diagrams students will design, draw and build a functioning solar clock. Issues in day-lighting and thermal comfort will then drive an extended design problem. Students will be asked to solve numerical problems and present design solutions using both drawings and models.

Prerequisites: minimum 4 credits of architecture design studio; knowledge of algebra and trigonometry.

Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials.
Instructors: N. Darling
Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-305-01 - Architectural Studies - 2013-2014

(Spring) Advanced Topics in Architecture: Sustainability and Healthy Living in Urban Environments

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course explores ways in which urban landscapes can be shaped within an environmentalist agenda and how healthy living can be achieved in the context of rising population, climate change, and global economies. By developing methods of investigation pertinent to sustainability, students will formulate strategic planning and design proposals related to community revitalization, the public realm in cities, affordable housing, and environmental stewardship. While the course welcomes interdisciplinary perspectives, assignments will develop skills and knowledge compatible with architecture, urban design, and landscape architecture and regional planning.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in architectural studies, art history, or environmental studies
Instructors: I. Kaynar Rohloff
Expected enrollment: 15

*(Fall) Research Seminar in Art History and Architectural Studies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Art History 391)

This seminar explores practical issues in doing advanced research in art history and architectural studies. Depending on student projects, activities could include reading primary sources, critical assessment of texts and archival materials, use of library and digital resources, and visual analysis. Students have an opportunity to think about how to organize research into a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in the department

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2013-2014
(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art, revolution and nationhood; nineteenth-century realism; and abstraction and empathy. Lectures will be complemented by class discussion, short films, and assignments in the art museum.
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 45

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2013-2014
(Spring) Image and Environment: Byzantine to Baroque
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course provides a broad overview of Western art and architecture from the sixth through the seventeenth centuries. We will begin with the heritage of the Roman empire in Byzantine art, continue into the Western medieval tradition including Romanesque and Gothic, then conclude with the Renaissance and Baroque periods. We will consider a wide range of objects and media--including mosaics, manuscripts, paintings, sculptures, and prints--as well as building types ranging from churches to palaces and villas. Students will come away with an understanding of the dominant trends and major figures as well as the shifting ideals that shaped creative expression for more than a millennium.
Instructors: C. Andrews

(Fall) Arts of Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Asian Studies 107f(01))
This multicultural course introduces students to the visual arts of Asia from the earliest times to the present. In a writing- and speaking-intensive environment, students will develop skills in visual analysis and art historical interpretation. Illustrated class lectures, group discussions, museum visits, and a variety of writing exercises will allow students to explore architecture, sculpture, painting, and other artifacts in relation to the history and culture of such diverse countries as India, China, Cambodia, Korea, and Japan.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Early Modern Art - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar

This seminar explores the extraordinary variety of objects that commemorated love, marriage, fertility, and eroticism in fifteenth and sixteenth-century Europe. We will consider works ranging from the loftiest representations of Platonic love down to the frankly sexual, from paintings to prints to painted marriage chests, including objects that can be seen firsthand in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. Students will refine their skills of visual and verbal analysis, while also learning to interpret these works through the lens of social history, paying particular attention to the role of women.

(Fall) From Alexander to Cleopatra: The Hellenistic World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.

(Fall) Renaissance Art - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This survey outlines the history of painting, sculpture, architecture, and urbanism in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Italy, a time of major artistic and cultural transformation. To trace these developments, we will take a geographic approach, focusing on cities and societies in order to understand the diverse social networks that linked artists with their patrons and publics. We will also examine the expanding networks of cross-cultural contact that linked Italian cities like Florence, Rome, and Venice to places throughout western Europe and beyond.

ARTH-233-01 - Art History - 2013-2014
(Fall) Renaissance and Baroque Architecture in Italy - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course focuses on architecture in Italy—including churches, palaces, villas, and fortifications, as well as city planning—from 1400 to 1680. In this period, architects took their cues from the classical tradition even as they carved out their own territory, developing new techniques and perfecting old ones to realize their designs. We will trace shifting architectural practice through key figures from Brunelleschi to Bernini, and through the lens of larger cultural forces. We will also examine buildings in light of the painted and sculpted decorative programs that were often integral to their overall effect.

(Spring) The Global Renaissance: - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

The traditionalist view of the Renaissance treats Europe as if it were an isolated hotbed of cultural innovation. This course will reconsider the period as one of intensifying cross-pollination, when European artists were deeply affected by contact with the Near and Far East, Africa, and the Americas. Specific topics will include representations of distant lands and peoples; the collecting of exotic materials; cartography and expanding world horizons; Venice and the Ottoman world; and the reception of classical architecture in Latin America. We will consider many facets of Renaissance visual culture—from paintings and buildings to maps, prints, and illustrated books—that framed these global crosscurrents.

(Fall) Nineteenth-Century European Art: Neoclassicism to Impressionism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course traces major developments in European art during the periods traditionally designated by the terms neoclassicism, romanticism, realism, and impressionism. Focusing primarily on French art, but branching out to consider the art of England and Spain, it explores the key artistic themes of the century: the engagement with history, the rise of nationhood, the experience of the urban, the Marxist proposal, the grappling with modernity, the dealing in individual temperaments. Among the major figures to be studied are Constable, Courbet, David, Delacroix, Goya, Ingres, Manet, Monet, and Renoir.

(Fall) History of Photography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, Mexico and the countries in Western Europe. It charts the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, so-called "vernacular," and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are the early landscape photographers O'Sullivan and Watkins, the avant-garde photographers Stieglitz and Gentile, the Depression-era photographers Evans and Lange, and the so-called New Documentarians Arbus and Frank.

(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.

This course examines the great ruptures in European art that today we call modernist. It relates aspects of that art to the equally great transformations in European society: revolutionary ferment, the rise and consolidation of industrial capitalism, colonization and its discontents, and world war. Among the major figures to be studied are Duchamp, Matisse, Malevich, Picasso, Seurat, and van Gogh.

(Spring) Contemporary Art: Art Since 1945 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography in the United States and, less so, Western Europe since World War II. Initially, most of these paths traced a relationship with the "crisis of modernism," but increasingly, they have taken on a different vitality, drawing energy from a wide variety of postmodern and postcolonial subjects and debates: identity politics, transnationalism, diaspora. Can something that can be identified as an avant-garde practice exist in such a context? What kinds of questions are appropriate to ask about works that stridently attempt to suspend the very category of art?

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Jewish Religious Art and Material Culture: From Ancient Israel to Contemporary Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Despite the biblical prohibition against "graven images," there exists a rich history of Jewish religious art and aesthetics. This course will study ancient Israelite art and archeology, including the Second Temple in Jerusalem, the extraordinary mosaic floors and frescoes of early synagogues throughout the Mediterranean world, medieval illuminated Hebrew manuscripts and printed book culture, synagogues of later periods, including the wooden synagogues of Eastern Europe, and Judaic ritual objects of many types. Jewish art, architecture, and visual representation will be explored in the context of the ancient Near Eastern, Greco-Roman, Christian, and Islamic settings in which they evolved.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Ancient Painting and Mosaic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course treats the themes, techniques, and contexts of painting and mosaic in the ancient Mediterranean. From Bronze Age palaces to early Byzantine churches, surfaces were embellished with frescoes, pebbles, glass, and jewels. These might be rendered in complex geometric shapes or with mythological scenes. Portable vases displayed elegantly drawn figures. We will examine the unique effects of each medium and how they influenced and interacted with each other.

(Fall) Issues in Art History: The Art of the Book: 1,000 Years of Manuscript Illumination
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Manuscript illumination, the art of painting in books, was a predominant artistic practice from the invention of the codex to well beyond the invention of printing. We will examine manuscript production, use, and design from throughout this long history, including late antique copies of the Gospels; religious texts produced by monks and nuns; the royal patronage of the courts of Charlemagne, the Ottonians, and Louis IX (among others); illuminated epics, romances, poetry, and histories produced in urban centers by professional bookmakers; and manuscripts after the era of mechanical reproduction. Field trips to local collections will allow for the first-hand examination of manuscripts.

*(Fall) Issues in Art History: Storytelling in Ancient Art - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The aim of the course is to acquaint students with visual modes of storytelling in the predominantly oral cultures of ancient Greece and Rome. Myths and legends appear in a range of media (sculpture, mosaic, fresco, lamps, and gems) and contexts (domestic, sacred, political). Which stories were represented and what do we know about their reception among ancient viewers? Original objects in the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum will offer case studies.

*(Fall) Issues in Art History: Survey of African Art: The Creation of African Art - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

What is African art? Why are so many different kinds of cultural expressions from such a large and diverse continent categorized in the same way? In this course, we emphasize artistic creation from the perspective of artists by studying works from various African cultures. We analyze the creation of African art as a subject of inspiration and research. Throughout the semester, we discuss African diasporic arts and contemporary African art. Students examine both scholarly and popular interpretations of art objects to develop skills in critical analysis and visual literacy. The course incorporates visits to on-campus resources, such as the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Intended primarily for art history majors, this course introduces key research tools and scholarly methods in the field. Through intensive readings, discussions, presentations, and written work, students will hone their analytical and communication skills. We will learn to navigate libraries and digital resources, to read with a critical eye, and to write persuasive prose. We will become acquainted with interpretive approaches ranging from formalism to Marxism to post-colonialism. Students will also be exposed to a variety of professions that demonstrate how the art historical skills they acquire as undergraduates can translate into life after college—in the art world and beyond.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

African and African Diasporic artists recently have achieved unprecedented acclaim in the most august institutions and trendiest art fairs in contemporary art. This course examines the complex and global histories of both "overnight sensations" and artists still unknown in global art circuits. The course examines arts education in Africa, African nationalism, the Black Arts Movement, Pan-Africanism, anti-Apartheid struggles, and the postcolonial theoretical and curatorial interventions of the 1990s and 2000s. Writing assignments will relate to a temporary exhibition of contemporary art from Africa at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor

ARTH-301-01 - Art History - 2013-2014

(Spring) Topics in Art History: The Artist in the Renaissance

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Albrecht Dürer's engraving Melancolia I, in the collection of the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, will serve as the centerpiece of our study of artistic identity in the Renaissance. How did artists define themselves, and how can we understand their changing roles in the societies in which they worked? Topics include study of myths and legends about the artist and origins of art making; self-portraits and artworks that take on the subject of artistic creation; and writings by artists and historians, in works by Jan van Eyck, Pieter Bruegel, Cennino Cennini, Georgio Vasari, and Michelangelo, among others. Students will pursue research projects in the second half of the semester.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor

Instructors: C. Andrews

Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Great Cities: Reimagining Paris

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

By 1300 Paris was the largest city in Europe, the royal capital of France, home to a brilliant university, and a thriving commercial hub. This seminar investigates the city through its surviving buildings, paintings, graphic images, maps, and literature. Using digital tools we will reconstruct key lost monuments in a process that casts participants in the role of builder, that demands careful evaluation of fragmentary evidence and that encourages creative imagination informed by art and architectural history.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, medieval studies, computer science, or permission of instructor

Instructors: M. Davis

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: Love and Metamorphosis: Storytelling in Roman Art

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Parallels abound among the mythical stories depicted in ancient art and literature, but the nature of those correspondences remains elusive. The course compares artistic representations of popular love tales with texts and (records of) performance. The aim of the course is to acquaint students with visual modes of storytelling in the various media of sculpture, mosaic, fresco, and the minor arts. In which contexts did such stories appear, why, and what do we know about their reception among ancient viewers?

Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history

Instructors: B. Bergmann

Expected enrollment: 15

ARTH-310-01 - Art History - 2013-2014

(Spring) Seminar in Ancient Art: Villas and Palaces of the Roman World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

The seminar examines the estates and palatial buildings erected throughout the Roman world between the first century BCE and the fourth century CE. Recent archaeological discoveries and accounts of ancient writers offer rich evidence for design, interiors, furnishings, and gardens. The complexes allow insight into daily lives of individuals with diverse cultural identities both in Rome and farflung provinces.

Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or permission of instructor.

Instructors: B. Bergmann

Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculaneum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present. One highlight will be a visit the Pompeii exhibition at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.

Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or permission of instructor.

Instructors: B. Bergmann

(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Art: Chartres Cathedral - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar will explore Chartres Cathedral, its architectural history, its vast programs of sculpture, and its stained glass narratives. The church and its imagery, which took shape between ca. 1140 and 1250, offer a view back in time to medieval religious beliefs and practices, social dynamics, architectural technology, and fashion. We will also consider how differing views of the cathedral—as a popular communal creation or as the embodiment of an oppressive elite—reflect modern interpretive perspectives.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or medieval studies

Instructors: M. Davis

Expected enrollment: 15
(Spring) Seminar in Baroque Art: Art and Architecture of Rome - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Rome was—and remains—a most complex and magnetic city, one that has endured and become "eternal" through countless transformations to its urban and artistic fabric. The focus of this seminar is a particularly intense period of change in Rome—when artists, architects, and intellectuals flocked to the city, bringing traditions from elsewhere that mixed freely with the work of others, while responding to what was already present. More than a survey of famous works in Rome, this course aims to conjure some of the excitement of a city that considered itself the most fashionable and vibrant place in the world.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in art history or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Maier
Expected enrollment: 12

(Spring) Seminar in Twentieth-Century Art: Walker Evans and Henri Cartier-Bresson
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar explores the careers of two towering figures in the history of photography. Although they were contemporaries, Evans and Cartier-Bresson developed ideas about camerawork that couldn't have been more different. Among other topics, we will explore the tensions between art, documentary, and photojournalism; street photography; the vernacular; the "decisive moment," and more.
Prerequisites: One 200-level course in Art History; jr,sr,or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Lee
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in American Art: The Gilded Age - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines aspects of American art and culture from the Civil War to the turn of the twentieth century. Classes will be thematic, and art will be linked up with ideas, trends, events, and novels of the period. Among the themes to be treated are: naturalism, masculinity, nervousness, street culture, and reform. Key artists include Sargent, Eakins, Homer, Bellows, and Sloan.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor.
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions
(Film Studies 370f(01))
How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Visual Culture of South Asia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
The seminar explores the social life of visual images in South Asia. Made, viewed, disfigured, reproduced, and collected, images convey different ways in which they become involved in human values and cultural contests. Using case studies, the course will analyze artworks as a visual record of these involvements in different periods of South Asian history including the modern. Students will conduct intensive visual analysis of architecture, painting, sculpture, and film; debate scholarly essays on interdisciplinary topics; develop provocative research projects; and design class presentations.
Prerequisites: Prereq. jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or permission of instructor.
Instructors: A. Sinha
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: Photography in India - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Explores the way photography seized hold of the imagination in India. Nineteenth-century documentary photographs of Indian ruins memorialized the reach of the British Empire when used for dioramas, panoramas, and magic lantern shows on the streets of London. By the twentieth century, manipulated photographs and mechanically reproduced "photos" of Indian gods complicated photography's claim to truth. Students will debate scholarly views and develop research projects to examine photography's imaginative uses in India.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, with 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor

(Fall) Research Seminar in Art History and Architectural Studies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Architectural Studies 391)

This seminar explores practical issues in doing advanced research in art history and architectural studies. Depending on student projects, activities could include reading primary sources, critical assessment of texts and archival materials, use of library and digital resources, and visual analysis. Students have an opportunity to think about how to organize research into a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during study abroad.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in the department

Instructors: A. Lee

(Spring) Painting II: Observation and Abstraction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In class we will work from the figure, the landscape, and masterworks/appropriated imagery. Students will be asked to approach these subjects using relatively unfamiliar painterly methods, hopefully opening new avenues to explore within their work. Students will be asked to further elaborate upon discoveries made in class through independent work, while continuing to consider issues such as scale, surface, mark, space, and light. A particular emphasis will be placed on examining how students' paintings relate to other historical and contemporary artists who employ abstraction in their own work.
Prerequisites: Art (Studio) 236
Notes: 2 studios (2 hours and 30 minutes), and criticism sessions to be arranged. Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.

(Spring) Body and Space
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course focuses on the issues surrounding body and space through installation, performance, and public arts. Students explore the possibilities of body as an energetic instrument, while investigating the connotations of various spaces as visual vocabulary. The self becomes the reservoir for expression. The course examines the transformational qualities of the body as the conduit that links conceptual and physical properties of materials and ideas.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr only
Notes: 2 studios (2 hours and 30 minutes); Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

(Fall) Papermaking with Local Plants
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In addition to learning basic paper chemistry in this course, students collect usable sections of a variety of plants wherever they live throughout the summer and in the Pioneer Valley in the fall during the course. These plants are examined and recorded before and after drying, then cooked and processed to become paper pulp. Students conceive and construct their art projects inspired by the historical, biological, ecological, and personal aspects of plants as well as their physical qualities.
Prerequisites: Art Studio 116, 120, or equivalent and at least one 200-level studio art course.
Notes: Two studios (2 hours and 30 minutes) Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.

ARTST-269-01 - Art Studio - 2013-2014
(Spring) Japanese Papermaking
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course, students learn the traditional practice and history of Japanese hand papermaking, while exploring contemporary applications of the method. Thin, translucent, strong paper is great for drawing and printmaking, as well as sculptural construction and paper casting. This fluidity of medium naturally encourages students to become interdisciplinary in their art making. The apparent fragility, structural strength, and surprising longevity of the material provides a foundation for philosophical investigations into the nature of creativity.
Prerequisites: Art Studio 116, 120, or equivalent and at least one 200-level studio art course
Notes: 2 studios (2 hours and 30 minutes); Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials.
Instructors: R. Hachiyanagi

Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China’s social changes and the women’s movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

Mahatma Gandhi's method of nonviolent action (Satyagraha) won freedom for India from British rule and inspired movements worldwide. Poet Rabindranath Tagore won the Nobel prize and international acclaim through his writings, educational initiatives and advocacy for peace. Gandhi and Tagore's lives, their critiques of nationalism and violence, and their holistic philosophies are studied through their writings, autobiographies and other sources. Topics include Gandhi's impact on Martin Luther King, Tagore's international school, and a comparison of the two men's legacies for India and the world.

ASIAN-312-01 - Asian Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Learning Chinese through Newspapers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement
This course advances students' four communication skills (reading, writing, listening, and speaking) by studying materials selected from the news media. The teaching materials include news reports on political, social, economic, and cultural issues, mainly from mainland China, Taiwan, and the U.S. The course will lay a good foundation for those who wish to read Chinese newspapers. This course also addresses issues of formal expression, writing styles, and terminology used in the Chinese media. The course will be conducted mainly in Chinese.

Prerequisites: Asian Studies 311 or equivalent (contact Ms. Wang for placement)

(Spring) Advanced Chinese Reading: Literary Works and Social Issues

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement

The course will advance students' communication skills in Chinese language through the study of contemporary Chinese literary and nonliterary works. The focus of the course is on short stories by famous writers such as Yu Hua, Su Tong, and Wang Meng. The course also features other types of literary materials such as essays, drama scripts, poems, and television dramas. Materials on pressing social, political, and economic issues from scholarly Chinese journals, newspapers, and Web sites will also be used. The class will be conducted entirely in Chinese.

Prerequisites: Asian Studies 311 or equivalent

Instructors: L. Xu

(Fall) Learning Chinese through Films

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement; does not meet a distribution requirement

This course will improve students' four communication skills (reading, writing, listening, and speaking) by studying contemporary Chinese films, including several prize winners/nominees by internationally acclaimed directors such as Zhang Yimou, Li An, and Chen Kaige. The class will watch the films and then use the synopses and selected dialogues from the scripts as reading materials to facilitate both linguistic and cultural learning. Social and cultural issues reflected in the films will be discussed. The class will be conducted mainly in Chinese.

(Fall) Love, Gender-Crossing, and Women's Supremacy: A Reading of The Story of the Stone

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women's supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieu of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.

(Spring) Love, Desire, and Gender in Indian Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Gender Studies 333s-12)
Seminar on love, desire and gender, major themes in Indian literature. We will read classic poems, plays, and narratives in translation from Sanskrit, Tamil, Hindi, and other languages, in relation to aesthetic theory, visual arts (miniature paintings) and performance genres (Indian dance and the modern Bollywood cinema). Study of the conventions of courtly love, including aesthetic mood (rasa) and natural landscapes, and their transformation in Hindu bhakti and Sufi Muslim mystical texts, the Radha-Krishna myth, and film. Focus on representations of women and men, and on issues of power, voice, and agency.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, and 100 or 200 level course in literature in any language (inc. English)

ASTR-101-01 - Astronomy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Survey of the Universe with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Discover how the forces of nature shape our understanding of the cosmos. Explore the origin, structure, and evolution of the earth, moons and planets, comets and asteroids, the sun and other stars, star clusters, the Milky Way and other galaxies, clusters of galaxies, and the universe as a whole. In lab, learn the constellations and how to use the telescopes. Use them to observe celestial objects, including the moon, the sun, the planets, nebulae, and galaxies. Learn celestial coordinate and timekeeping systems. Find out how telescopes work.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 lab (3 hours). Designed for non-science majors. The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for AST 100. FY only, though others will be able to register during Add/Drop if spaces remain available.

ASTR-105-01 - Astronomy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Mars: Missions, Conditions, and Prospects for Habitation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Exploration of Mars is a goal of the current U.S. president and a dream of many citizens. We will examine what needs to be done before anyone sets foot on the Red Planet. We will consider the history and politics behind Martian exploration, our knowledge of geology and atmospheric conditions on Mars based on data from current missions, and plans for future exploration.

(Fall) Introduction to Astronomy: Survey of the Universe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
A comprehensive introduction to the study of modern astronomy that explores the celestial bodies that inhabit the universe--planets, stars, and galaxies--and examines the universe itself--its origin, structure, and ultimate destiny.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100 or 101 or the equivalent
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for ASTR-100 and 101. Students in this course (110) must attend a weekly 4th hour section.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 10

ASTR-110-01 - Astronomy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to Astronomy: Survey of the Universe with Coffee Table Astrophysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In addition to attending the Astronomy 100 lectures, students will take part in a 4th hour in which we will discuss current frontiers in modern astronomy and astrophysics. Although this 4th hour is somewhat tailored to the interests of the enrolled students, anticipated topics include Einstein's Theories of Relativity, Death of Massive Stars, Black Holes and Warped Spacetime, and the Expanding Universe. Using readings and discussion we will examine the nature of these mind-boggling discoveries and their treatment in the popular media.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100 or 101 or the equivalent

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This intermediate-level course covers fundamentals of spectroscopy, remote sensing, and planetary surfaces. Discussions will include interiors, atmospheres, compositions, origins, and evolution of terrestrial planets; satellites, asteroids, comets, and planetary rings.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100/101 and one semester of a physical science course
Instructors: C. Fassett
Expected enrollment: 35

ASTR-228-01 - Astronomy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Astrophysics I: Stars and Galaxies - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
A calculus-based introduction to the properties, structure, formation, and evolution of stars and galaxies. The laws of gravity, thermal physics, and atomic physics provide a basis for understanding observed properties of stars, interstellar gas, and dust. We apply these concepts to develop an understanding of stellar atmospheres, interiors, and evolution, the interstellar medium, and the Milky Way and other galaxies.
Prerequisites: Physics 115/110 and Math 202; Physics 216/190 and Math 203 strongly suggested

(Spring) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Exploration of several unresolved questions about the Red Planet, such as 1) Where was the water on Mars and where did it go? How well will future missions answer this question? 2) How has the Martian atmosphere evolved over time? 3) What rock types are present on the Martian surface based on meteorite studies vs. direct observation? 4) How can geomorphic features of Mars best be interpreted, and what do they tell us about the evolution of the planet? and 5) Was there life on Mars at any time? Is there life on Mars at present, and if so, where? An interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature as well as daily reports from current mission websites.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; Astronomy 223 recommended
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 16

Biochemistry

BIOCH-111-01 - Biochemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Life’s Matrix: Water, Water, Every Where... Nor Any Drop to Drink
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Water, the ideal solvent in which life-granting reactions occur, makes up 70 percent of the planet and our body. We will examine the remarkable chemical, physical properties of water that sustain life, and study its involvement in two critical biochemical processes—cellular respiration and photosynthesis. As the course title implies, we are running out of this precious resource, due to population expansion, unsustainable usage of water by industrialized societies, pollution of waterways, and the redistribution of water due to engineering, climate change, and commerce. We shall read from a variety of texts to inform our discussion of issues and solutions related to water resources.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Hsu
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOCH-295-01 - Biochemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in biochemistry can be conducted with any member of the biochemistry committee and, upon approval, also with other members of the biological sciences and chemistry departments.

BIOCH-311-01 - Biochemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 311f, Chemistry 311f)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), Chemistry 302
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Hsu | 02 LAB L Hsu |
Expected enrollment: 40

BIOCH-314-01 - Biochemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 314s, Chemistry 314s)
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302 (can be taken concurrently)

BIOCH-330-01 - Biochemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement
This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected.
Prerequisites: Biochemistry 311 or Biochemistry 314, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Hsu

BIOL-125-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) First Year Seminar: College Cognition: The Neuropsychology of Studying
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar
Which study habits allow students to get the most out of a college curriculum? How important is a good night's sleep before an exam? How (in)efficient is cramming? This course seeks to examine, from a molecular to a social-cognition level, the neurobiological and psychological underpinnings of successful study habits. Through lectures, discussions of readings from textbook sources and research articles, and experiential exercises, we will consider topics such as: mechanisms of memory consolidation and retention, the role of sleep and stimulants in learning and recall, the value of group work, and comparisons of strategies for effective study.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: G. Tanner
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Organismal Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will cover a range of topics, from the molecular to the organismal level, related to the biochemistry and physiology of vertebrates. In particular, we will study the chemical underpinnings and functional workings of mammalian body systems (such as, endocrine, reproductive, metabolic, immunologic, neurologic, etc.), while paying attention to the ways in which these systems interact with one another and how evolution has shaped these processes. These topics will be covered through a lens that highlights the scientific research that led to our current understanding of these systems.
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 48

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it affects our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.
Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for first-year students
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-01 or L-02, is also required.
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard | 02 LAB C Woodard |

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Diversity of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will survey the great diversity of life on earth from the archaebacteria that live in hot sulfur springs to giant sequoia trees to singing birds. Labs will explore biological diversity via collecting trips around campus as well as laboratory experiments and will introduce students to data collection, manipulation, and analysis.
Instructors: S. Barry

BIOL-145-02 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introductory Biology: Organismal Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course encompasses a broad range of concepts central to our understanding of how organisms function and evolve. We will investigate important biological processes, such as photosynthesis and metabolism, and systems, such as the cardiovascular and immune systems. We will also take a holistic view of biology and use our newly acquired knowledge to explore such diverse topics as: the evolution of infectious diseases, the consequences of development and design on the evolution of organisms, and how the physiology and behavior of animals might affect their responses to global climate change.
Prerequisites: fy
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-03 or L-04, is also required.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar
This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.

BIOL-145-03 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Animal Bodies, Animal Functions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
How are animal bodies built to deal with living on earth? In this course we will study the function of cells, organs, and organ systems that have evolved to help animals make their way through the physical and chemical environment. In lecture and in lab, we will consider the common needs of animals -- needs such as feeding, breathing, and reproducing -- and the diverse solutions they have devised. A range of life, from unicellular organisms to animals with backbones (including mammals), will be considered.
Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for first-year students
Notes: Registration in one of the two co-requisite labs, BIOL-145L-05 or L-06, is also required.
Instructors: S. Bacon

BIOL-145-04 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Can't Live with 'Em, Can't Live without 'Em: An Introduction to the Ecology and Evolutionary Biology of Symbiotic Interactions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From mutualism to parasitism, symbiosis is a universal feature of life. In this course we will study the mechanisms of symbiotic interactions and consider their significance for the ecology and evolution of organisms. We will explore some of the most spectacular and important examples of contemporary symbioses, from coral reefs to infectious diseases, and learn how symbiosis is responsible for major developments in the history of life, such as the origin of the eukaryotic cell and the evolution of sex. Along the way we will cover fundamental concepts in ecology, evolution, population genetics, and epidemiology.

BIOL-145-05 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Nature Harmoniously Confused - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Most organisms are notably unlike ourselves--a tapestry of bacteria, protozoans, algae, and, off by themselves, the plants, fungi, and other animals. We will survey the whole range of organisms, especially those in the ponds and forests of our campus. Labs will start in the field, offering many opportunities for wet or muddy work. The class is addressed to students intrigued by natural history; it might be useful for students interested in further study of the environment.
Prerequisite: fy

BIOL-145-06 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Comparative Vertebrate Physiology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will explore the structure and function of major physiological systems in vertebrate animals. Of particular interest will be identifying the solutions that different animals have evolved to deal with similar problems (e.g., how do fish gills and bird lungs function in gas exchange?).
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 23 LAB G Gillis | 24 LAB G Gillis | 25 LAB G Gillis |

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160L). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.

Prerequisites: fy

Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.

Instructors: R. Drewell

Expected enrollment: 48

Biology 200

(B) Introductory Biology II: How Organisms Develop

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchins), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.

Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 145, 146, or 160, or Neuroscience & Behavior 100

Instructors: R. Fink, A. Frary

Expected enrollment: 48

Biology 206

Local Flora

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course offers plant identification and natural history, emphasizing native and introduced trees and wildflowers. A semester-long project will assess the campus tree community: its composition, condition, and environmental benefits. On- and off-campus field trips.

Prerequisite: 4 credits in department

Instructors: A. Frary

Expected enrollment: 11

Biology 210

Genetics and Molecular Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

A comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance.

Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 200, Chemistry 101 must also be taken prior to or as a co-requisite to this course

Instructors: J. Knight, C. Woodard

Expected enrollment: 48

Biology 220

Cell Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

The aim of this course is to understand the fundamental unit of life—the cell—at the molecular level. We will consider the assembly and structure of cellular membranes, proteins, organelles, and the cytoskeleton, as well as their roles in cellular processes including the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, protein sorting, motility, signal transduction, and cell-cell communication. Emphasis will be placed upon the diversity of cellular form and function and the cell biological basis for disease. The laboratory portion of this course will illustrate and analyze these phenomena through selected biochemical, genetic, and microscopy-based approaches.

Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 200 or 210, plus Chemistry 201 (can be taken concurrently)

Instructors: The department

Expected enrollment: 48

Biology 223

Ecology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Instructors: R. Drewell

Expected enrollment: 48
This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145 or 160 plus at least one semester of Calculus or Statistics (which may have been taken in high school, but then instructor permission will be required for registration)

Notes: Biology 223 and/or Biology 226 must be taken for the Biology major.

BIOL-226-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The mechanisms of evolutionary change within populations and between species; patterns of change in space, time and form; and the origin of adaptations. These approaches make sense of the diversity of life. Then we turn to the evolution of developmental pathways, as a way of approaching the unity of life.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 or 223

BIOL-301-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Regenerative Medicine: Biology and Bioethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
What is regenerative medicine? What is the science that drives new medical therapies using stem cells? We will study the biology of adult, embryonic, and induced pluripotent stem cells, as well as the legal, ethical, and moral implications of using these cells in medical therapies. Each member of the class will participate in a staged debate on these issues for an introductory biology class. Pending funding, we may travel to Washington, D.C. to attend a meeting of the Commission on Bioethics.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor only, with Biological Sciences 220 or equivalent expected
Instructors: R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Molecular Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course examines the dynamics of evolutionary change at the molecular level, the effects of various molecular mechanisms on the structure and function of genes and genomes, and the methodology involved in dealing with molecular data from an evolutionary perspective. Lab work will be devoted to learning ways to analyze DNA sequence data and to create and evaluate trees that use molecular data.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 226
BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering. The fourth hour will follow a “journal club” format with student presentations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, and either 220 or 311
Instructors: J. Knight
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interaction in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formation. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220, or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-306-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive; History 361s(01))
This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin’s theory of evolution - his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226 or History 248
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove - and disprove - biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-311-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 311f; Chemistry 311f)
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Hsu | 02 LAB L Hsu |
Expected enrollment: 40

BIOL-314-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302, Biochemistry 311, or permission of instructor

Notes: Please sign up for this course as Biochemistry 314

Instructors: L. Hsu

Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department

Expected enrollment: 40

BIOL-315-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Behavioral Ecology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

In this course, students learn to view and understand animal behavior within an evolutionary context. The mechanistic side of behavior is investigated and students explore how behavioral traits originate and evolve over time. Students will integrate their knowledge of how organisms work with an appreciation of why they work the way they do. At the end of the course, students will understand basic concepts in behavioral biology and know many of the experiments that have facilitated our understanding of this field. They will be able to construct hypotheses and design experiments that address behavioral phenomena. The laboratory portion of this course is based on individual projects.

Prerequisites: 8 credits of biology at the 200 level with 223 or 226 strongly recommended

Instructors: R. Brodie

Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Brodie | 02 LAB R Brodie

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-316-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Scanning Electron Microscopy - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Geology 316f)

Includes theory and operation of the scanning electron microscope and preparation of biological and geological materials for observation. The versatile use of the microscope will be emphasized and will include low magnification, high resolution, and back scattered (reflected) electron modes of operation as well as operation at different pressures. Energy dispersive X-ray microanalysis will be introduced.

Prerequisites: 4 credits of biological sciences or geology course at the 200 level.

Instructors: M. Rice

Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Rice

Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-317-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Immunology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, cancer, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the use of clinical case studies to reinforce these ideas, although experimental models will also be discussed. In the final section of the course, students will research and deliver an oral presentation on an immunology topic of interest.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 plus either Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311

Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for Biology 319 but this course does not include a lab.

Instructors: The department

Expected enrollment: 24

(Writing-intensive)

In this course, we will focus on marine coastal and open ocean habitats as well as freshwater systems, including lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks, and wetlands. For oceans, we will explore such topics as currents, the interaction of climate and oceans, nutrient cycling and ecosystems. Our study of freshwater systems will focus on cycles, water chemistry and flora and fauna of local freshwater habitats.

BIOL-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Transmission Electron Microscopy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Basic principles of transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and potential uses in biological studies. Each student selects a project and learns the fundamentals of specimen preparation, operation of the TEM, and image acquisition. Preparation, assessment and interpretation of the resulting electron micrographs culminate in an individual portfolio. Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including Biological Sciences 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently.

(Fall) Conference Course: Art, Music, and the Brain
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of a visual object, such as shape, color, and depth, and ask how this processing may affect the way we draw and paint. We will ask whether musical dissonance and consonance are biologically or culturally determined and whether or not different parts of the brain process different aspects of music such as pitch, melody, harmony, rhythm, and the emotional content of a musical piece.
Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music
Notes: students studying art and music are encouraged to enroll
Instructors: S. Barry
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This seminar is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their ability to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Environmental Studies 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Ocean ecosystems are of tremendous ecological importance and provide many billions of dollars worth of services annually, yet our marine systems face serious threats due to overfishing, climate change, ocean acidification, pollution, and the spread of invasive species. Conservation and management strategies aim to protect our remaining marine resources and restore those that have been lost or damaged. In this course, we will study the scientific evidence documenting the most pressing threats to marine ecosystems and examine available strategies for mitigating these threats. We will also explore cultural, economic, and political issues relevant to marine conservation and management.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 and/or 226.

Instructors: J. Andras

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Conference Course: Extreme Life - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees C. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.

Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200

Instructors: G. Gillis

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-H - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Spring) Conference Course: Topics in Invasion Ecology - *Not offered this year/term

Credit/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

Invasive species have become a common focus for land managers and gardeners around the world, but is there anything fundamentally new, different, or threatening about these organisms? These new arrivals potentially increase local biodiversity and offer excellent examples of evolution and ecological interactions, but they also incite scientists to uncharacteristic value judgments. We will discuss the science and politics behind invasive species and explore the secrets of their success and the realities of their impacts. This course uses local examples, some field trips, and current literature to examine invasion ecology and other local issues in conservation biology.

BIOL-321-I - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
(Fall) Conference Course: The Biology of Stem Cells

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course will focus on the biological aspects of stem cells and how they differ from all other cells of the body, including cancer cells. We'll discuss the signals that lead to their development, differentiation, and ability to regenerate and mediate repair to damaged cells and tissues. Practical application of their use in a number of research studies and clinical settings will be discussed. The laboratory portion will introduce a wide range of techniques for working with stem cells while developing a stem cell research project of your own design.

(Spring) Conference Course: Statistical Topics in Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

The statistics sections of biology articles have become so technical and jargon-filled that many biologists feel intimidated into skipping them or blindly accepting the stated results. This course will connect statistics to biology and will help develop a gut instinct for experimental design and analysis with an emphasis on understanding rather than formulas. We will review methods and assumptions for the most common approaches with examples from current biological literature and discuss how we can apply these tools to increase our understanding of our own research and of the world around us.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Biological Sciences above Biological Sciences 200

Instructors: M. Hoopes

(Spring) Conference Course: Molecular Genetics Seminar - Epigenetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

With the completion of the sequencing of the human genome, where does science go now? Many scientists have chosen to investigate our genome at the level "above genetics", or Epigenetics. Epigenetic changes are not coded in the DNA sequence, yet they are heritable through cell division. Epigenetics is an exciting field of science that is beginning to explain the unexpected. Why are identical twins not perfect "clones" of each other? Why are even cloned animals not perfect "clones"? This seminar style junior/senior level course will allow students to present research articles, discuss the literature, write a grant application, and review their peers' grant applications in a mock study section.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, 220 or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Drewell
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Conference Course: Neurotechnology: Thinking on the cutting edge of science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

Recently, the development of novel technologies for probing neurobiological questions has proceeded at a dizzying pace. This course focuses on three broad fields in neurotechnology: optical methods for examining neural activity and structures, innovations in electrophysiology, and mind-machine interfaces. Specific topics may include: optogenetics, 2-photon microscopy, "brainbow" imaging, methods for single ion channel recording, and neuroprosthetics. Presentation, discussion, and critique of research articles will form the core of the course. As a culminating experience, students will write mock grant proposals for experimentation based on techniques discussed in class.

(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.

(Spring) Microbiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223
Instructors: J. Knight
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Knight | 02 LAB J Knight |
Expected enrollment: 28

BIOL-328-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Fall) Human Physiology_
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A consideration of the physiological processes involved in the control of human body functions. We will study the mechanisms for regulating individual organ systems and how these mechanisms respond to changing needs of the individual. Our examination of the physiological controls will include an analysis of the underlying cellular and molecular processes that drive the mechanisms and integrate the activities of the different systems.
Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Bacon | 02 LAB S Bacon |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology_
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 or Environmental Studies 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Fall) Macroevolution - *Not offered this year/term_
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, and the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology.
Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Spring) Neurobiology_
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception.
Prerequisite: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics
Notes: preference given to seniors
Instructors: G. Tanner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Tanner | 02 LAB G Tanner | 03 LAB G Tanner |
Expected enrollment: 20

BIOL-335-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Spring) Mammalian Anatomy_
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will examine the fundamental structural organization of the mammalian body. The lecture portion of the class will focus largely on humans, and students will gain practical insight into other mammalian systems in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Notes: course open to 12 juniors and 12 seniors
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-336-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014
_(Fall) Bacterial Cell Biology_
Bacteria are now appreciated to be highly ordered and dynamic cells. Recent studies have revealed that bacteria can organize their genetic material, assemble cytoskeletons, localize proteins, construct organelle-like compartments, differentiate, and communicate with one another to coordinate multicellular behaviors. This course will explore the exciting new field of bacterial cell biology via the primary scientific literature. Substantial student participation in the form of group work and discussions will be expected.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220

Instructors: A. Camp

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014

Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics

In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210

Instructors: C. Woodard

Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-395-01 - Biological Sciences - 2013-2014

Independent Study

This course provides an introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.

Prerequisites: Department placement exam required for entry

Instructors: G. Snyder

Expected enrollment: 50

CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014

General Chemistry I

This course provides an introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.

Prerequisites: Department placement exam required for entry

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Forensic Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will offer an introduction to the science in forensic investigations. We will explore several methods and instruments often used in CSI programs, such as mass spectrometry, infrared spectroscopy and DNA analysis, which are very valuable in evaluating crime scene evidence. We will explore the validity of scientific findings and the political implications of the use and availability of the data. Students will have a chance to be expert witnesses and be in the lab evaluating evidence. Analytical thinking and processing information in chemistry, biology, and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as oral and written communication skills. Short labs are planned.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: W. Barber-Armstrong
Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-160-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.

Prerequisites: Department placement exam required for entry

Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, and introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics. Laboratory emphasizes on analytical skills and illustrates basic concepts in chemical equilibria, thermodynamics, and kinetics.

Prerequisites: First years only. Department placement exam required for entry

CHEM-201-02 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics, and the chemistry of coordination compounds. Laboratory experiments will include classical analytical and kinetic techniques, preparation of inorganic compounds, and an introduction to ab initio electronic structure calculations.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 or 160 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor

Instructors: G. Snyder

Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department |

CHEM-202-01 - Organic Chemistry I
(Fall) Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry, nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions, the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers, and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis, practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography, molecular modeling, and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201 with grade of C or better, or permission of instructor
Instructors: K. McMenimen
Expected enrollment: 64

CHEM-208-01 - Introduction to Materials
(Spring) Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course provides an introduction to different types of materials, including metals, ceramics, polymers and composites, emphasizing structure and property relationships. The principles behind the design and implementation of materials as well as advances in materials in the areas of nano-, bio- and electronic technology will be presented. Class time is split among lecture, discussion and laboratory.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Physics 110 and Mathematics 101; during the first week of registration, only first years, sophomores and juniors will be eligible. Seniors can check for any available spaces thereafter.
Instructors: W. Chen
Expected enrollment: 16

CHEM-212-01 - Chemistry of Biomolecules - *Not offered this year/term
(Spring) Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
An examination of the major ideas of biochemistry from the point of view of the chemical sciences rather than the life sciences. Structures of important biomolecules. The role of energetics and reaction dynamics in biochemical processes. Major metabolic pathways are considered, including those of proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, and nucleic acids.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: This course is not intended for Biochemistry majors, who must complete Biochemistry 311f and 314s. First priority will be given to sophomores and juniors.
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-295-01 - Independent Study
(Fall) Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training.

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Notes: Lab sections 05, 06, and 07 require permission of instructor.
Instructors: K. McMenimen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Figueiredo | 02 LAB A Figueiredo | 03 LAB A Figueiredo | 04 LAB K McMenimen |

CHEM-304-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor and Chemistry 302 as prerequisite or co-requisite
Notes: second half of semester
Instructors: D. Hamilton, A. Figueiredo
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Figueiredo | 02 LAB A Figueiredo | 03 LAB D Hamilton |
Expected enrollment: 24

CHEM-306-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Methods of Measurement - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
We will discuss analytical techniques which are currently applied in chemical, environmental, and medical science. These techniques include: chromatography including GC and LC spectroscopy (UV-Vis, FT-IR, AA, fluorometry, and NMR), surface science and mass spectrometry. Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Chemical Thermodynamics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202, Physics 115, Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better
Instructors: W. Chen

CHEM-311-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 311f; Biological Sciences 311f)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts of the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principle of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), and Chemistry 302
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Hsu | 02 LAB L Hsu |
Expected enrollment: 40

CHEM-314-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biochemistry 314s; Biological Sciences 314s)
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |

CHEM-317-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Principles of Polymer Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the study of molecules of high molecular weights with emphasis on synthetic rather than naturally occurring polymers. Topics include polymerization, structures, molecular weight determination, molecular weight distribution, chain configurations, rubber elasticity, and thermodynamics and statistical mechanics of polymer solutions.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered once every three years
Instructors: W. Chen

CHEM-325-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Atomic and Molecular Structure
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is an introduction to experimental and theoretical approaches to the determination of the structure of atoms, molecules, and chemical bonds. Classroom work provides background in the theory of atomic and molecular structure and an introduction to quantum mechanics and spectroscopy.
Prerequisite: Mathematics 202, Chemistry 202 and Electromagnetism (Physics 216/190/201), all with grade of C or better; Mathematics 203 is recommended
Instructors: H. Jayathilake
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake | 02 LAB H Jayathilake |

CHEM-334-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Advanced Inorganic Chemistry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and either: Chemistry 325 in the past or taken concurrently with this course.
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-336-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Organic Synthesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is examined. A general strategy for the synthesis of complex molecules is also presented.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 20
CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Physical Organic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308
Notes: offered every other year
Instructors: S. Browne
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-339-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) The Organic Chemistry of Biological Pathways
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course explores the underlying organic chemistry of biological pathways and thereby seeks to build a framework for understanding biological transformations from the perspective of mechanistic organic chemistry. Beginning with common biological mechanisms, and drawing parallels with their sophomore organic chemistry counterparts, a broad overview will be constructed of the pathways by which the key classes of biological molecules—lipids, carbohydrates, amino acids, nucleotides—are manufactured, modified, and consumed. Several specific biosyntheses will also be dissected from a mechanistic perspective. These case studies will include antibiotics, an alkaloid, and heme.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302. Enrollment by permission of instructor.
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-343-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Chemistry of DNA - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This advanced-level seminar will focus on the molecular properties of DNA. Using as sources a graduate-level text and readings from the primary literature, the class will discuss a variety of current topics in the research community, including the binding of proteins and small molecules to DNA, the covalent modification of DNA by mutagenic agents, and the dynamic nature of DNA across timescales. Critical analysis of experimental design and conclusions from data will be encouraged. Students will be evaluated based on participation in discussions, oral presentations, and an original research proposal.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and one additional 300-level chemistry course
Expected enrollment: 12

CHEM-346-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Spring) Physical Chemistry of Biochemical Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides an overview of the fundamental principles of physical chemistry with an emphasis on their application to the study of biological molecules and processes. Topics will include quantum mechanics, statistical mechanics and thermodynamics. Discussion of applications will relate commonly used experimental techniques, such as spectroscopy and caloriometry, to the fundamental principles on which they are based. In addition, students will gain experience and confidence in the use of mathematical models to describe biochemical systems.
Prerequisites: Math 202 and Physics 115 and Chemistry 202 with a grade of C or better
Instructors: A. van Giessen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB H Jayathilake | 02 LAB H Jayathilake
Expected enrollment: 30

CHEM-395-01 - Chemistry - 2013-2014
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-8; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of department

(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.
Prerequisites: Chemistry majors only. Two semesters required, spring (as a junior) fall (as a senior)
Notes: Credit/No Credit grading only
Instructors: K. McMenimen

CLASS-106-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Socratic Questions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Socrates left behind no written works, but conversations with him made such a powerful impression on his contemporaries that he inspired several philosophical "schools" as well as a new genre ("the defense of Socrates"). By examining the contradictions among several ancient portraits of Socrates, and by placing Socrates within the historical context of fifth-century Athens, we will try to understand why the Athenians thought that they should put him to death. In doing so we will consider the limits of civil disobedience and freedom of speech, and the nature of the "good life."
Readings will include works of Plato, Xenophon, Aristophanes, and others (all readings in English).
Prerequisites: Open to first-years only
Notes: In English; appropriate for anyone interested in ancient Greek literature, philosophy, and society.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 16

CLASS-127-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Ancient Greece - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 127f)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical pastors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.
CLASS-128-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Ancient Rome
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century and the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Roman Empire and those who came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean. Topics include their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics, and the Roman family. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 40

CLASS-211-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Ancient Greek and Roman Myth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
'Taught in English'
We will accompany Odysseus on his return from Troy, retrieve the Golden Fleece with Jason, and race with Ovid through his witty— and often troubling— retelling of Greek myths from a Roman perspective. This course examines how Greek and Roman authors and artists from very different periods used myth to explore questions about life, art, and politics. Works include: Homer, Odyssey, Apollonius of Rhodes, Argonautica, Ovid, Metamorphoses and Heroides; Greek tragedy, and ancient images representing myths.
Prerequisites: most spaces will be reserved for first-years and sophomores
Notes: Optional screenings of films related to ancient myth.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 45

CLASS-212-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Greek Tragedy, American Drama, and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
'Taught in English'
This course examines the critical influence of the three most important Athenian dramatists, Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, on the works of modern dramatists and filmmakers, including Eugene O'Neill, Tennessee Williams, Arthur Miller, Roman Polanski, Woody Allen, Ridley Scott, Jules Dassin, Theodoros Angelopoulos, and others. Attention is given to the different concepts of tragedy underlying the genre, such as the tragedy of self-knowledge and illusion, the tragedy of desire, the tragedy of sin and redemption, and tragedy as protest against social injustice.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus 1 screening
Instructors: B. Arnold
Expected enrollment: 30

CLASS-225-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Athenian Democracy and Its Foes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(History 225)
Democracy first took root in Athens in the late sixth century BCE and flourished, with only brief interruptions, until the city came under the power of Macedon in the latter part of the fourth century BCE. This course will trace the development of Athenian democracy and examine such topics as citizenship; the role of women, the family, and non-citizens in Athens; the legal system; education; and public entertainment. It will also compare democratic Athens with Sparta, its antithesis in the classical period. Sources will include Herodotus, Thucydides, Aristophanes Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, and others.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 20

CLASS-230-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Spring) The City of Rome from Romulus to Constantine
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 290-02)
A detailed survey of the archaeology of the city of Rome from its origin in the early Iron Age to the beginning of the fourth century CE. The principal monuments and architectural development of the ancient city will be discussed against a broader cultural and historical background, with an emphasis on the powerful families and individuals responsible for the shaping of the urban landscape, and the specific social and political circumstances that gave the monuments meaning.

Instructors: M. Landon
CLASS-260-01 - Classics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Knowing God - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the following key texts from the ancient world that treat significantly the problem of knowing God and the mystery enveloping such knowledge: Sophocles’ Oedipus the King, Plato’s Phaedo, Cicero’s Concerning the Nature of the Gods, Job, Paul’s Epistle to the Romans, and others. Attention is also given to the different ways of thinking about the divine and human natures in these works, which are broadly reflective of Graeco-Roman and Judaeo-Christian value systems.
Instructors: B. Arnold

(Spring) Politics and Greek Tragedy
(Politics 329)
Students in this course will explore ancient Greek tragedy as a way of thinking through such central problems of political life as freedom, identity, responsibility, and justice. The course will place the ancient texts in their particular historical context, while also attending to the material as a springboard for confronting contemporary political questions. The course will also address the broader implications of turning to ancient material and to literature as sources for political theorizing.
Prerequisites: Prereq. 8 credits in Politics or Classics (or permission of the instructor)
Instructors: E. Markovits

College Courses

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Encountering the Sacred: The Bible and Reading
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Martin Buber famously wrote that we must read the Bible "as though it were something entirely unfamiliar, as though it had not been set before us ready-made." Whether you come to the Bible from within a faith tradition or not, this course will ask you to do just that. We'll take a text that for more than 2,000 years has stood at the heart of the Western tradition and ask how we can approach that text today, from the place where you stand. What does it mean to read a sacred text? How has it been read by people situated both within and at the margins of Western culture? What are the possibilities for your reading?

Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Scotto
Expected enrollment: 15

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Literature and Politics: The Power of Words
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Literature and politics: what are the connections? How do writers combine their literary and political goals? How does their work impact politics? What literary genres do they employ – utopianism, realism, magic realism, satire, modernism, or postmodernism? How do governments react to literary challenges? We will look closely at the texts themselves, examine the interaction between aesthetics and politics, but also focus on the social and political context. Why was the book written, and in what way did the book impact the politics and ideas of its time? Authors will include Shakespeare, Rousseau, Swift, Dickens, Orwell, Sartre, Andrei Platonov, Solzhenitsyn, Rushdie, and Chinua Achebe.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Introductory Seminar: Stressed Out - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
We’ve all been there. Each of us carries a deep physical understanding of what it’s like to be under stress. But what are the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of this experience? How and why do our bodies respond to stress in such a characteristic way? And what is the impact of this biological response on health and disease? Through reading and discussion, we’ll explore the biology of stress, the brain’s ability to link the outer and inner worlds, the organ systems whose activity is altered by the stress response, and emerging research on the impact of long-term stress on memory, immune function, cardiovascular health, and cancer risk.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Bacon

COLL-115-01 - College Courses - 2013-2014
(Spring) Justice and Imagination: Building Peace in Post-Conflict Societies
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Team-taught by faculty from the Departments of Economics, German Studies, History, International Relations, and Politics.
How can societies build lasting peace when they emerge from violent internal conflicts facing widespread trauma and loss of life, a disintegration of the social fabric, weakened state institutions, and broken economic structures? From Syria to Guatemala, countries around the world wrestle with this question. We explore the interaction and impact of key factors on the effectiveness of peace building in post-conflict environments: processes of transitional justice (e.g. amnesty, tribunals), forms of reconciliation and memory (e.g. rituals of healing, cultural forms of memorialization), and conditions for economic and social policies (e.g. institutional capacity, resource mobilization). Course culminates in conference with international experts.
Notes: The course starts on Jan 27 and ends on March 3 after the Feb 28-Mar 1 conference on the same topic. Students are required to attend the conference. The course counts towards International Relations and Politics requirements.

(Spring) Ready for the World: Preparing for Your Internship and Research Project - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
College 210 prepares students for a summer internship. Participants will learn how to productively search for an internship, how to craft a successful internship application, how to make ethical choices in diverse situations, how to create meaningful mentoring relationships, and how to negotiate the work environment.
Instructors: H. Hanson
Expected enrollment: 70

(Fall) Tying It All Together: Curriculum to Career
This course is designed for students who have recently completed summer internships and research projects to help them integrate their experience within the context of their liberal arts education and career goals. Students will apply problem-solving skills to various situations that occurred during their summer project; learn how to identify and articulate transferable skills gained during the project to potential employers and graduate schools; discuss how the experience has affirmed and/or modified their career goals; learn strategies to identify and network with individuals to advance their professional and academic development; and prepare a presentation on their internship or research project for the fall LEAP Symposium.

Notes: Class meeting dates: 9/11, 9/25, 10/2, 10/9, and 10/23. Students are also required to present at the LEAP Symposium on Friday, October 18, 2013.

Instructors: H. Hanson, E. Townsley

(Fall) Topics in Leadership: Women, Business, and Leadership Development
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
What does leadership mean and what does it look like? What does it mean to become a leader in a business context? And what does this mean for women? In this half-semester course, we will examine research literature and case examples from various business contexts including small businesses, nonprofits, and larger corporations. Topics will include: leadership capacities, models of leading and managing, effective mentoring and networking, women's career development, and negotiation and influence.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Notes: Half-semester course, October 21 - December 2. No letter-grading (credit/no-credit only). Cannot be repeated if taken in Fall 2012.

Complex Organizations

COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2013-2014
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+, -, *, /) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr

(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
(Psychology 212f)
This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations - especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a leader; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Butterfield
Expected enrollment: 24

COMOR-218-01 - Complex Organizations - 2013-2014
(Fall) Perspectives in Global Business
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
We will study the behavior of consumers, producers, and their interactions in markets. How do consumer, producer, and social welfare depend on market organization and regulatory institutions? How do competition and international trade affect consumers and firms? How do the decisions that businesses make affect employees, customers, suppliers, the community, and the environment? How do businesses make decisions about advertising and pricing? We will use case studies and microeconomic theory to explore these and other questions.

(Spring) Non-Profit Business Practice
This course introduces students to the issues and challenges of leading a non-profit organization. Covered topics include dealing with boards, workers and volunteers and external agencies. We will consider funding and revenue sources as well as cost management. Finally, the course will explore strategic planning and program evaluation. The course will feature an embedded practitioner with substantial leadership experience in higher education.
Notes: The course will be a case study based course and students will be required to do a substantial project on a non-profit of their choosing.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Computers are used every day for an enormous variety of tasks, from playing games and chatting with friends to transferring billions of dollars, delivering radiation treatments, and controlling the electrical grid. Computer programs are an essential ingredient in allowing for this great diversity of applications. In this course, you will learn to create your own programs, based on core programming concepts and analytical problem solving approaches. You will develop dynamic programs by first using Adobe Flash CS4 and AS3 (ActionScript 3), the technology behind many Web applications. The last portion of the course will teach you Java, a very popular modern programming language. We assume no prior study of computer science. Programming intensive.

First-year seminar
Designers are continually innovating ways of incorporating technology into today's world, from projections of butterflies on Grammy performance dresses to "smart" purses that sense when your wallet is missing. The recent emergence of low-cost, user-friendly components is making this new world of design accessible to a broad community. In this course, students will think critically about products already in the marketplace and will be given the tools to create their own designs. A sequence of hands-on workshops on electronics basics and microcontroller programming will provide the surprisingly minimal level of comfort and background in technology required to produce prototypes of these designs.

Building large software systems introduces new challenges to software development. Appropriate design decisions early in the development of large software can make a major difference in developing software that is correct and maintainable. In this course, students will learn techniques and tools to help them address these problems and develop larger software projects, improving their skills in designing, writing, debugging, and testing software. Topics include design patterns, UML, designing for maintainability, software architecture, and designing concurrent and fault tolerant systems.

Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 201 and Mathematics 232
How does Mapquest find the best route between two locations? How do computers help to decode the human genome? At the heart of these and other complex computer applications are nontrivial algorithms. While algorithms must be specialized to an application, there are some standard ways of approaching algorithmic problems that tend to be useful in many applications. Among other topics, we will explore graph algorithms, greedy algorithms, divide-and-conquer, dynamic programming, and network flow. We will learn to recognize when to apply each of these strategies as well as to evaluate the expected runtime costs of the algorithms we design.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232

COMSC-312-01 - Computer Science - 2013-2014
(Spring) Algorithms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Tired of writing programs that nobody ever uses? Then, this is the course for you. Software enables enterprises to carry out previously tedious or impossible tasks, but many organizations lack the resources to develop needed software. You will apply your programming skills to develop and deliver software to meet the requirements of a client from the community. You will learn critical communication skills required to work with a client, work as a team with classmates, and experience the software lifecycle from requirements elicitation through delivery. You will synthesize many topics learned in courses as well as new technologies required to complete the project. Programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 215

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2013-2014
(Spring) Computer Graphics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

This course provides an introduction to contemporary user interfaces, including the basics of human-computer interaction, the user interface design/evaluation process, and the architectures with which user interfaces are developed. In this course students will learn the principles of constructing user interfaces, based on issues of design and usability and based on the mathematics of 2D graphics. Students will implement and evaluate portions of typical user interfaces in a series of programming assignments. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211. Also recommended is Computer Science 221.

(Spring) Topics: Programming Language Design and Implementation - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Ever wonder why there are so many semicolons in Java programs, or what it would mean for a language to not be object-oriented? In this course, we will explore issues related to the design and implementation of programming languages. Along the way, we will discover answers to these questions and more. Topics will include syntax, semantics, runtime support for languages as well as an introduction to functional programming.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211

Critical Social Thought

CST-100-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: The Self and Political Thought

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Politics 100f)

What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works

CST-100-02 - Critical Social Thought - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Politics of Inequality: Social Movements in the U.S.

First-year seminar (Latin American Studies 105f(01))

The course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the twentieth century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice.
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.

(Spring) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Modern Political Thought

(Politics 212)
Through the writings of such thinkers as Machiavelli, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Marx, and Mill, we will examine central issues of modern Western political thought. Understanding modernity to entail a turn from political legitimacy based on the will of God to political legitimacy based on the conscious designs of human beings, we will focus on the significance of this turn for questions of sovereign power, the relationship between rulers and ruled, human nature, and the meaning of freedom.

(Fall) Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought: Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Philosophy 226, Religion 226)
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life.

(Fall) Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought: An Introduction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231)
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century with emphasis on their relevance for contemporary issues. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, W.E.B. Du Bois and Franz Kafka focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life. Case studies of contemporary issues with attention to the impact of 19th century thinkers on critical theory in the 20th and 21st centuries also round out the course.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: Students with one or more years of college-level German may opt for German 232, a tutorial in close reading and translation of the German texts related to the material in 231. Students with no previous study of German are encouraged to take German 101 or 103 to complement this course.

(Fall) Topics in Critical Social Thought: Histories of Performance I

(Theatre Arts 251H(01))

A survey of world performance history, including: the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.

(Fall) Critical Race Theory

(Africana Studies 208)

This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.

(Fall) Rethinking (Under)Development in Latin America

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

When and how did the notion of "development" emerge and spread? Why does nearly every country now aspire to it? What stigmas and hierarchies does the term "under-development" imply? Throughout Latin America, such language proves problematic not only as a material reality but also as a framework for understanding place, time, and selfhood. In this course, students rethink conventional wisdom about "underdevelopment" through the study of writers, filmmakers, and painters from Latin America working at different historical junctures of the twentieth century.

(Fall) Literary Criticism and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 280)
An introduction to literary and cultural theory with an emphasis on twentieth century and contemporary thought. We will focus on crucial questions that have focused, and continue to focus, critical debate. These questions may include representation, subjectivity, ideology, identity, difference, gender, sexuality, race, ethnicity, and nation. Throughout we will be particularly interested in the ways in which language and form mediate and construct social experience.

(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar for CST seniors in which they present their independent research, respond critically to one another's work, and lead discussion. In support of that research, this course will explore the history of critical method, from the Enlightenment through 20th-century critical theory and post-colonial studies. Every student will produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought. Students will present their work publicly and cultivate agility in speaking, arguing, and writing.

(Politics 391)
This course explores such contested political concepts as democracy, freedom, alienation, civil society, and the public sphere, as those concepts have been interpreted by diverse currents of political thought. We will focus on the concept of power, with special emphasis on the work of three maverick scholars -- Michel Foucault, Judith Butler, and James C. Scott -- who in different ways have shaken up both conventional and radical thinking on the subject.

CUSP-101-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2013-2014

(Fall) First-Year Connections

Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This six-week course will provide first-year students with information and strategies that will help them to effectively navigate their first year at Mount Holyoke. Sessions will cover such topics as maximizing your own liberal arts experience; asking constructive questions and creating positive faculty interactions; speaking up in class and improving confidence for presentations; the writing/revising process; connecting to experiential learning opportunities; and managing stress and conflict. Students will set goals for their time at Mount Holyoke, reflect on their current and past experiences, learn about campus resources, and gain skills and knowledge transferable to future semesters.

Prerequisites: fy, and concurrent enrollment in any first-year seminar

Notes: Half-semester course; meets between September 9 and October 18; required of those who enroll in any first-year seminar. Credit/No-Credit grading.

Instructors: B. Packard, G. Sumi

(Fall) Advanced Studies: Twentieth-Century American Dance: Sixties Vanguard to Nineties Hip-Hop - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey of twentieth-century American dance moves from the sixties—a decade of revolt and redefinition in American modern dance that provoked new ideas about dance, the dancer's body, and a radically changed dance aesthetic—to the radical postmodernism of the nineties, when the body continued to be the site for debates about the nature of gender, ethnicity, and sexuality. We will investigate how the political and social environment, particularly the civil rights/black power movement, anti-war/student movement, and the women's movement, with its proliferation of feminist performance works, informed the work of succeeding generations of dance artists.

ECON-202-01 - Economics - 2013-2014
(Spring) East Asian Economic Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find one or more of these courses useful complements to majors and minors other than economics. This course provides an overview of economic development in East Asia. The complex interplay of public policy, global competition, and domestic economic relationships in China, Japan, and Korea will serve as the core subject matter of the course, though patterns of economic development in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore will also be discussed. Special attention is given to conditions under which regional economies have successfully blended elements of import-substituting industrialization with export-oriented growth. The course will conclude with a discussion of the impact of the regional economic crisis, the current wave of reforms, and the potential for future growth and development.
Prerequisites: not open to first-year students as their first course in Economics
Instructors: S. Gabriel
Expected enrollment: 35

ECON-347-01 - Economics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Political Economy of G20
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar looks at both recent and potential future economic and political developments in the G-20, comprising nineteen of the world's most important economies plus the European Union. Together these countries represent roughly two-thirds of the world's population, eighty percent of international trade, and ninety percent of global GDP. This international body has taken on a new prominence that will shape the debates over the direction the global economy should take in the coming decades. We shall focus on these debates, on the comparative economic performance of the countries involved, and on the challenges that increasing financial instability, socioeconomic inequality, and ecological degradation present for global governance.
Prerequisites: Economics 211
Instructors: J. Christiansen
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) Advanced Topics in Economics: Game Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course will illustrate and analyze the strategies used in making interrelated decisions. We will develop game theoretical tools and apply them to examples from economics, business, politics, and even sports. Topics include the prisoner's dilemma, signaling, coordination, voting, and competition. We analyze games in static and dynamic environments with perfect and imperfect information.
Prerequisites: Economics 211 and 212
Instructors: S. Schmeiser

ECON-351-01 - Economics - 2013-2014
(Spring) History of Development Economic Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A topical coverage of development economics used in conventional textbooks does not do justice to the evolution of integrated thinking in the field. A topical organization also does not do justice to the topic linkages or to the important debates in the field. This course adopts a history of macro development economics thought approach with an emphasis on alternative approaches right up to the current debates. While the field started in the 1940s, the influence of classical economists including Marx on the pioneering development economists and the field will also be traced.
Prerequisites: Economics 211 and 212 or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Khan
Expected enrollment: 25

ECON-394-01 - Economics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Senior Seminar for Thesis Students
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course guides thesis students through the thesis process. We will discuss how to do economic research, how to do a research proposal, and how to write a literature review. Students will then complete a proposal and write their own review. Over the course of the semester, they will be matched with advisors in the department and will complete their theses in a section of Economics 395 with their advisor in the spring.
Prerequisites: sr, Economics 211 and 212
Notes: Thesis students are expected to enroll in this course to begin their thesis. However, we will continue to allow two semesters of 395 to constitute a thesis if appropriate.
Instructors: M. Robinson

(Fall) Behavior Problems during the Preschool Years
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement (Psychology 232)
What role does the preschool classroom play in supporting social and emotional readiness for elementary school, particularly for those children entering preschool with behavior challenges? Early difficulties in peer relationships and with emotional and behavioral self-regulation interfere with learning and can set the stage for additional problems later in development. This course will provide an overview of child development as a foundation for studying behavior problems that present during the preschool years. The course will also focus on characteristics of early childhood classrooms and experiences that promote more adaptive functioning in classroom settings.
Prerequisites: 100-level course in psychology
Notes: this course also counts in the Personality/Abnormal area
Instructors: E. Blackburn
Expected enrollment: 40

EDUST-265-01 - Educational Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Children's Literature for Educators
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(English 265)
This course introduces various genres of children's literature, including literature for adolescents; explores issues in interpretation and critique; and examines approaches to using literature in the preK-12 curriculum with an emphasis on making literature accessible to English language learners. Students will read a variety of texts across genres and discuss ways to integrate literature into content-area learning as they expand their knowledge and appreciation of children's literature. Literature will be examined from multiple perspectives including literary, sociopolitical, and historical.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor. Priority given to licensure students and students with 8 credits beyond the 100 level in the English department
Notes: Students must email the professor during advising week to ask permission to register for the course.

ENGL-101-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: U.S. Multiethnic Literatures: Refracting America

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.

This course examines African American, Asian American, Chicana/o-Latina/o, and Native American literature and cultural politics. Examining the historical intersection of race, gender, and sexuality, we will explore themes of cultural identity, segregation and community formation, citizenship, labor, class, and family. Authors may include Toni Morrison, Danzy Senna, Josefina López, Sherman Alexie, Junot Díaz, Jhumpa Lahiri, and Joy Kogawa.

Prerequisites: Only first-year students may preregister for this course. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class.

Instructors: I. Day

Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Sherlock Holmes

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.

From Victorian periodicals to blockbuster movies and steampunk, Sherlock Holmes has remained current. Nineteenth-century detective literature was popular entertainment at the same time that it took on the anxieties and hopes of its historical moment, including those around capital, otherness, authority, and theories of knowledge. We will focus on Arthur Conan Doyle and the nineteenth century, with tangents to influences and afterlives.

Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.

This course uses "crossings" to consider how ethnic and racial identities have been understood, represented, and theorized in America. One goal will be to use this lens to examine works of multiethnic literature that address immigration, adaptation, ethnic multiplicity, passing, and ethnic tension. Another goal will be to examine how these texts engage with others regarding multiethnic experience. Close attention will be paid to issues of language, style, and form. Readings will include texts by Abraham Cahan, Pauline Hopkins, Richard Rodriguez, Sui Sin Far, Nella Larsen, Philip Roth, and Anna Deveare Smith.

Prerequisites: fy (soph, jr, and sr may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class)

ENGL-103-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Academic Discourse and Multilingual Speakers

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): Course readings and writing assignments guide students through an examination of topics related to society and culture. In this course we seek to achieve clarity and precision of expression within a discussion of complex questions. Past semesters' topics include: the role of education in society; the relationship between religion, culture, and nature; and the use of maps in ordering the world. In addition to the academic content, the course focuses on the writing and revising process, academic research and argumentation, and the nature and purpose of academic discourse. This course is intended for students whose native language is not English and who would like to refine their writing and speaking skills. Although it is the first in a two-course sequence (103-104), multilingual students who have already taken English 104 may register.

(Spring) Introduction to Creative Writing - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
In this class we will use pictures of mythological characters and scenes as inspiration for a series of exercises which focus on the different components of creative prose: description, characterization, dialogue, point of view, scene, and dramatic action. We will also devote a week to reading and writing poetry based on mythic themes. The exercises will serve as a basis for a flight into your own myth-making, and the final result will be a complete short story that reflects both your engagement with myths of the past and the creation of a "mythic" world that is entirely your own.

(Fall) Introduction to Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
The finest journalists are professors to the people. They educate citizens so as to facilitate reasoned, fact-based dialogue on subjects as diverse as politics, poverty, war, science, and the arts. We will look at journalism's role in the culture with a particular view to some of the profession's failings and foibles. Students are expected to leave the comfortable confines of the classroom as they try their hand at covering an event, writing a profile, and reporting on an issue of local significance. Throughout the term we will employ the journalistic skills of interviewing, research, and thoughtful analysis to produce snapshots of the world inside and outside the College gates. Curiosity leads. Mastery follows.

ENGL-206-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Expository Prose: The History of the Essay
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Since the seventeenth century, prose stylists have written essays to examine, analyze, argue, and satirize. In this course we will follow the evolution of the essay, including the development of the sentence, prose rhythms, and grammatical patterns. We'll examine how the essay develops and changes, beginning with Francis Bacon and ending with contemporaries such as David Foster Wallace and Barry Lopez. Students will master the form by writing their own essays. This course includes extensive feedback on student writing and is intended to address the writing needs of students from all disciplines. Readings include essays by John Donne, Jonathan Swift, Samuel Johnson, Henry David Thoreau, Virginia Woolf, George Orwell, Martin Luther King, Adrienne Rich, Jamaica Kinead, and others.
Prerequisites: English 101 or so, jr, sr or permission of the instructor
Instructors: K. Osborn
Expected enrollment: 16

ENGL-206-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) Expository Prose: Making the Argument
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Societies evolve through the exchange of information and ideas. This course explores that exchange as it occurs in contemporary opinion (or op-ed) pieces. Though we begin with Aristotle, most readings will come from the debates of our time. Our aim is to include divergent opinions on a wide array of subjects. Students will team up for close readings, exploring issues of evidence, structure and style. Extensive independent research and considerable rewriting required. This course is intended for students in all disciplines who seek mastery as prose stylists confronting the contentious issues of the day.

ENGL-214-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Medieval Studies: Love and Reason in Medieval Romance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Writing-intensive)
Arthurian legend conjures enduring stereotypes of chivalry and romantic love, but how do we go about situating medieval romance in literary history?
Where does it come from, why was it written, who read it, and how did it change over time? In this course, students will learn about romance’s historical and social contexts, its form, tropes, and imagery. We will think about romance’s contemplation of justice, loyalty, subjectivity, love, and shame, especially as this body of literature grapples with the conflicts that arise between the mortal and divine. Course readings will include works by Marie de France, Chrétien de Troyes, Chaucer, Lydgate, and Spenser. We will read in Middle English where possible.
Prerequisites: English 200 and either English 210 or 213; or permission from instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
ENGL-215-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Early Chaucer
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
We will examine Chaucer's explorations of love, human will, and various conceptions of closure (in literary terms, the efficacy of complaint, the work of poetic endings, and the poet's accomplishments). These topics will be studied in light of Chaucer's ranging literary influences, especially his assimilation and renovation of classical poetry, French and Italian vernacular verse, romance, saints' lives, allegory, and beast fables. All readings are in Middle English, consisting of a selection of Chaucer's short poems and his major works prior to The Canterbury Tales.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement

ENGL-220-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to British Literary and Cultural Studies since 1660: The Victorian Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a broad study of selected figures in modern literary and intellectual history and helps prepare students for more advanced classes in British and/or postcolonial studies. We will use these figures to probe the dynamic relationship between imaginative practice and social change, which may involve global as well as national contexts. This course will introduce students to writing sustained pieces of critical analysis, challenging them to explore the theoretical relationship between literary form and historical transformation in the modern period.
This section examines the major ideas, shifts, expansions, and disruptions of the Victorian period. We will discuss prose, poetry, fiction, and art to understand how these forms engage with movements in voting rights, industry, living conditions, money, gender, definitions of class, and imperialist expansion. Writers may include Arnold, Carlyle, Martineau, Mill, Eliot, Dickens, Bronte, W. Collins, Browning, Rossetti, Hopkins, and many others, as well as painters and current readings in criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr and 4 credits in English
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: J. Pyke

ENGL-235-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Modern British Poetry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introduction to modern British poetry pays special attention to the emergence, consolidation, and dismantling of modernist poetry and poetics. It will link this literary history with, amongst other things, the loss of faith, the two world wars, and the relationship between monumental aesthetics, utopian poetics, and totalitarian politics. Writers will include Hardy, Yeats, Eliot, H.D., and Auden.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr; or English 200
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-238-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) Modern Irish Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course will introduce students to literature of modern Ireland beginning with Swift and ending with writers of the Irish literary revival and Irish modernists. The syllabus will also focus on Irish women writers and their literary interventions concerning colonial history, nationalism, and Unionism. We will pay particular attention to representations of ideas of Irishness through the categories of religion, race, gender, and culture. The course encourages students to think about how the genres, styles, and forms of Irish writing are determined by the experience of colonial trauma and the imperative to imagine national identity.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor
Notes: meets the English Department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 40

ENGL-239-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Contemporary British and Irish Poetry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the most important poetic figures, movements, and backgrounds in contemporary British and Irish poetry, with an especial interest in poetry as a contested domain in which, and through which, poets wrestle new social content into poetic form. Poets may include Philip Larkin, Geoffrey Hill, Seamus Heaney, Denise Riley, Paul Muldoon, Grace Nichols, and Carol Ann Duffy.

(Spring) Topics in American Literature: The American Essay
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Throughout America's history, the essay has been a vital literary genre. From personal, religious, and confessional essays to highly political, satirical, and sometimes preposterous ones, American authors have revealed their passions and hatreds both eloquently and roughly. We will read essays from the eighteenth century to the present, concentrating on masters of the form. Authors include Ralph Waldo Emerson, Mark Twain, Henry James, James Baldwin, Joan Didion, Gore Vidal, and E. B. White.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr and, with permission of instructor, second-semester fy

(Fall) African American Literature I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an introduction to the literary works of African Americans from the late-eighteenth century to the present, with an emphasis on poetry and fiction. Beginning with slave narratives and early poetry, we will consider issues of genre, literary traditions, and historical context while gaining experience in reading and analyzing literary texts. We will examine how authors consciously went about creating a literary tradition that mirrored, challenged and created a dialogue with the American canon.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Notes: meets English Department's 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-251-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) African American Literature II
This course will examine the major African American writers of the twentieth century, beginning with the poetry and prose of Paul Laurence Dunbar and ending with the fiction of Toni Morrison, John Waideman, and the poetry of Yusef Koumanyaka, Rita Dove, and others. We will discuss the strategies involved in the creation of a "black voice" and its relationship to Anglo-American literature. We will also consider the nature of literary influence along with the attempts, by some writers, to create a distinct "black aesthetic." Finally, we will discuss the difficulties black authors encounter in asserting the literary over the sociological among readers of all intellectual and social strata.

Prerequisites: English 250

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2013-2014

(Fall) Writing Historical Fiction

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive)
Does historical fiction offer readers something history books cannot? What obligation does the writer of historical fiction have to the verifiable facts of the past? Is history a place we can visit, or is it a living force, defining the present? Isn't there a sense in which all fiction is historical fiction? In this course we'll consider these and other questions as we read and write historical fiction. We'll go out with our shovels and teaspoons to dig in the past, unearthing the psychological atmosphere, the gossip, the voices, and the important lies that will show us the way to breathe new life into the cold, dead facts of history.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
When told that his wife's madness cannot be cured, Macbeth asks: "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?" Although the term "trauma" was not used to describe a psychological state until the nineteenth century, Macbeth's query suggests that premodern subjects both understood and experienced the sorts of psychic injury the term denotes. This course will explore how trauma was discerned, expressed and represented in premodern European culture. Readings will include contemporary theoretical explorations of trauma, as well as works by Shakespeare, Marlowe, Aphra Behn, and Daniel Defoe.

Prerequisites: English 200; English 210 or 211

ENGL-317-01 - English - 2013-2014

(Spring) Studies in Renaissance Literature: Early Modern Drama

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Theatre Arts 317)

"All the world's a stage." This course surveys the era of literary history that invented this powerful idea. The drama of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries is a drama obsessively self-conscious, bursting with disguises, confidence tricks, cross-dressers, rituals, masques, and plays-within-plays. Reading Shakespeare as well as his rivals and peers (Marlowe, Jonson, Webster, and others), we will consider how theater, and the idea of theater, illuminates such concepts as desire, evil, gender, and ideology. Plays will likely include Titus Andronicus, Doctor Faustus, The Alchemist, and The Duchess of Malfi.

(Fall) Studies in Nineteenth-Century British Literature: Victorian Sympathy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

In the Victorian novel Middlemarch, one character explains, "To have in general but little feeling seems to be the only security against feeling too much on any one occasion." This course will examine feeling and sympathy in nineteenth-century prose, novels, poetry, and art. These representations will frame a discussion of Victorian concerns, and will also be considered in the historical context of eighteenth- and early twentieth-century epistemology, aesthetics, and literary forms. Writers may include: Austen, Meredith, G. Eliot, Forster, Wollstonecraft, Mill, Ruskin, Carlyle, Tennyson, Browning, Rossetti, Hopkins.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Notes: meets English department seminar requirement; meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-321-01 - English - 2013-2014

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Explaining why we can't judge others' marriages, one Victorian narrator turns to science: "Even with a microscope directed on a water-drop we find ourselves making interpretations which turn out to be rather coarse." The microscope becomes a standard of seeing and simultaneously just one more mode of knowing. This course explores the ways science and the Victorian novel interact, in direct references but also in subtle shifts in theories of the senses, embodiment, self-creation, and what it means to "see." Nineteenth-century readings in neuroscience, physiology, aesthetics, and evolution with tangents to larger contexts. Novelists may include Eliot, Dickens, Bronte, Carroll, Verne, Trollope.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in English and some coursework in the Victorian period or the history of the novel; online course application required

(Fall) Gender and Class in the Victorian Novel

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Gender Studies 333S)

This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy.

Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
ENGL-326-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) Romantic Epistemologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this seminar, we will examine Romantic poetry's unique contemplation of the problems of perception, cognition, and epistemology. We will investigate how male and female writers explored various theories of knowledge through their play with the figures of the idiot or savage, drug culture, and new technologies surrounding the Gothic genre and the virtual imagination. Authors including Wordsworth, Robinson, Coleridge, DeQuincey, and Keats will be read alongside philosophers such as Edmund Burke, Immanuel Kant, scientists John Galt and J. G. Spurzheim, and accounts of pre-cinematic entertainment such as the magic lantern and the phantasmagoria.

(Spring) Beyond Geishas and Kung Fu Masters: Asian American Film and Visual Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Film Studies 320)
This course examines contemporary Asian American film and visual culture through the lens of cultural recovery, self-invention, and experimentation. Focusing primarily on film and photography, we will explore issues of race and visuality, Hollywood orientalism, memory and postmemory, and racial impersonation and parody. Students will engage with a variety of theoretical and critical approaches. Artists may include Nikki S. Lee, Margaret Cho, Tseng Kwong Chi, Jin-me Yoon, Justin Lin, Binh Dahn, Richard Fung, Mira Nair, Deepa Mehta, and Alice Wu.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor

(Spring) The Political Imagination in Contemporary South Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar examines the variety of literary and cultural expression in South Africa since the 1970s, focusing on the relations between art and political struggle. Among the topics to be discussed are the imagination of history in South African literature; the emergence of the Black Consciousness movement (and its legacies); responses to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Among the authors to be studied are Nadine Gordimer, J.M. Coetzee, Njabulo Ndebele, Zoe Wicomb, and Zakes Mda, along with a number of contemporary poets, playwrights, and filmmakers.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits at the 300 level in English, history, politics, or related fields
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: D. Weber

ENGL-341-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Spring) American Literature III
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course explores the range and variety of American literary expression from the 1920s through the early 1940s. Topics include the role of regionalism; the emergence of a "modernist" aesthetic; ethnicity and modernism; debates within African American literary culture. Authors include Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald, William Faulkner, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Henry Roth, and Pietro Di Donato.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English beyond 101 or permission instructor
Instructors: D. Weber
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Studies in American Literature: American Comedies of Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350f(02))
Surveys of American drama are often weighted with family and social drama; comedy gets short shrift. But from its inception, the American theatre has employed comedy to examine specifically "American" types, offering not only a stereotypical gallery of "other" Americans but also a form in which African American, Latino, and gay playwrights, for instance, could revise their own images onstage. In this course we will chart the path of American comedy from Royall Tyler's "first American play" The Contrast through works by such playwrights as Anna Cora Mowatt, Philip Barry, Christopher Durang, Luis Valdez, and Philip Kan Gotanda.
ENGL-347-01  - English  - 2013-2014
(Spring) Modern Urban British Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
As London and the British novel enter the new millennium, both are sites of competing histories, traditions, and agendas. This course will map the city’s progress from the center of an empire to a node in the global world’s economy, and chart the twentieth-century novel’s movement from realism to postmodernism and beyond. Beginning by contrasting the realist London of Conan Doyle’s Sherlock Holmes with Virginia Woolf’s modernist version in Mrs. Dalloway, we will go on to trace the development of the post-1945 British novel.
Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in department including English 200

(Fall) Emily Dickinson in Her Times
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333A)
This course will examine the writing of Emily Dickinson, both her poetry and her letters. We will consider the cultural, historical, political, religious, and familial environment in which she lived. Special attention will be paid to Dickinson's place as a woman artist in the nineteenth century. The class will meet at the Dickinson Museum (280 Main Street in Amherst and accessible by Five College bus). Enrollment is limited to ten students.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English or 8 credits in Gender Studies
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) in Amherst
Instructors: M. Ackmann

ENGL-369-01  - English  - 2013-2014
(Fall) American Fiction: Lost and Found
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine a number of great literary works that are read infrequently, or not at all these days, by authors whose other work is known and by those whose names are not familiar to us. We will study these texts with an eye to their quality and significance; the literary, political, and social contexts of their publications; and their relationships to other literature. Authors will include Herman Melville, Harold Frederic, Mark Twain, Henry Roth, Flannery O’Connor, Nelson Algren.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 241, or other course in nineteenth- or twentieth- century American Literature
Instructors: G. Pemberton

(Spring) Nature and Gender: Representations of Women and Nature in American Literature (Nineteenth-Twentieth Century)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333 and Environmental Studies 373)
This course will focus on portrayals of women in nineteenth through mid-twentieth century America, particularly in the context of nature and landscape. We will explore how women, often objectified in visual images of the period, appropriated established devices or developed new images and structures to represent womanhood in their own terms. Texts will include selected poetry, sketches, autobiographical essays or memoirs, short stories, novels, paintings, films, and photography.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor
ENGL-374-01 - English - 2013-2014
(Fall) Hitchcock and After
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 320)
This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Marnie, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.
Prerequisites: online application required

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces students to the field of environmental studies and to some of the scientific, historical, political, economic and cultural aspects of environmental concerns. Through interdisciplinary lenses, we explore the complexities of many issues and problems such as climate change, threats to biodiversity, and toxic environments. In addition to fostering an understanding of their origins, the course focuses on potential solutions.
Instructors: L. Savoy, T. Farnham
Expected enrollment: 60

(Spring) Renewable Energy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Physics 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land use needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.
Instructors: A. Arango

ENVST-200-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Most of the environmental challenges we face are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. This course introduces students to the scientific principles, concepts, and methodologies required to both understand the interrelationships of the natural world, as well as to identify and analyze environmental problems and think critically about alternative solutions for addressing them. Key concepts from ecology, biogeochemistry, and other scientific fields inform our study of climate change, water resources, soil sustainability, food production, and other topics. Fundamental and emerging issues are examined using regional case studies, hands-on problem solving, and field and laboratory experiments.

Prerequisites: One 100-level lab science; one course in statistics is recommended

Instructors: K. Ballantine

(Fall) Political Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

This course will explore the historical, political, economic, social, and cultural contexts in which human-environment interactions occur. We will cover critical topics and trends in the field of political ecology, from its early manifestations to more recent expansions. Using case studies from the global south and north, we will discuss factors that shape social and environmental change across scales from the personal to the global, and we will examine the role of gender, race, class, and power in struggles over resources. Students will become familiar with the academic debates in which political ecologists are engaged, and they will apply the concepts discussed in a case of their choice.

ENVST-222-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Evolution of North American Landscapes - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Earth's landscapes have changed dramatically over the planet's long history. In this course we tour North America and explore the origin and anatomy of its landscapes, including national parks and monuments. We also consider how geologic setting or physical environment has influenced human exploration and settlement of the continent. By "reading" the land we can recognize the complex layering of natural and cultural histories that creates what is experienced as "sense of place." Reading the land can also provide a clearer sense of how various peoples have used and shaped Earth's surface differently, and how these differences have contributed to a spectrum of environmental impacts.

Prerequisites: permission of instructor. High school earth science or 4 credits in geology recommended.

Instructors: L. Savoy

ENVST-240-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) The Value of Nature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Through this seminar, students develop an in-depth knowledge of and articulate vocabulary for the significant and diverse ways that humans value the natural world - utilitarian, scientific, aesthetic, naturalistic, symbolic, ethical, and spiritual. We use these different typologies of human environmental values as frameworks for readings and discussion, extending our examination to historical and cultural variations in values, competing perspectives of the natural world, and other value concepts, including intrinsic and transformative value. We examine the concept of biophilia and probe the role values play in the concern over losses of biological diversity and its implications.

Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100

(Spring) Environmental Issues
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

In this course, we will explore the different facets of numerous environmental policy issues and review the substantive aspects, legal themes, and regulatory structure of the major federal environmental laws. The laws covered in this course include the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, and others. The course objectives are for the student to learn the basic regulatory characteristics of the major laws and to become well-versed in the current environmental issues which we will focus upon throughout the semester, such as global climate change, ocean degradation, energy resources, and biodiversity loss.

Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100

ENVST-257-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Research Methods in History, Environmental Change, and Public Health
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

An introduction to interdisciplinary research methods in history, social science, and the digital humanities, using conceptions of nature, environmental change, and public health as themes for investigation. Topics include the collection, organization, and analysis of information from databases, printed materials, and research notes, as well as bibliographic management. Computer-assisted analysis of textual information and GIS will be introduced to study agricultural change, industrialization, urbanization, and their impacts on public health during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries in Europe and the United States.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Schwartz

ENVST-267-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 267)
An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.
Prerequisites: You must apply for admission to this course by completing the online application form

(Fall) Qualitative Research Methods in Environment and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The course is designed for upper level students interested in conducting independent or honors thesis qualitative research on environmental issues. We will discuss the logic of qualitative social research and examine a range of methods, considering the specific advantages (and limitations) of different techniques. Students will also discuss ethical issues, including the challenges of conducting research in cross-cultural settings, and they will prepare institutional review board proposals. This is a hands-on course in which each student will pick a research topic of interest (on an environment-society problem) and then share and discuss weekly assignments in class. Students from a variety of disciplines are welcome.
Prerequisites: 8 credits of 200-level social science or humanities and permission of instructor. To apply for admission to this course, you must complete the online application form

ENVST-316-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Restoration Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Community-based learning course)
A key test of our ecological knowledge is whether we can successfully apply it to create or restore ecosystems that have been damaged or destroyed. As we take on the role of restoration ecologists this semester, we will use principles and methods of ecology, conservation biology, hydrology, soil science, and related disciplines to learn about the theory, practice, and politics of ecosystem restoration. This course emphasizes fieldwork, interdisciplinary teamwork, and ecological planning to evaluate and design restoration projects in our surrounding communities and regional landscapes. On a few occasions, meetings may last until 5:05 pm so that we can go on fieldtrips that are farther from campus.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 200 and/or at least 4 credits of landscape architecture, ecology, biology, or geology.

(Fall) Perspectives on American Environmental History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
We explore the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration, colonization, and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy

ENVST-321-D - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Marine Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 321C)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics in areas of environmental interest, determined by faculty expertise and student needs. Study in small groups or by individual students working with faculty.
Ocean ecosystems are of tremendous ecological importance and provide many billions of dollars worth of services annually, yet our marine systems face serious threats due to overfishing, climate change, ocean acidification, pollution, and the spread of invasive species. Conservation and management strategies aim to protect our remaining marine resources and restore those that have been lost or damaged. In this course, we will study the scientific evidence documenting the most pressing threats to marine ecosystems and examine available strategies for mitigating these threats. We will also explore cultural, economic, and political issues relevant to marine conservation and management.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 and/or 226
Instructors: J. Andras
Expected enrollment: 12

ENVST-325-01 - Environmental Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Photography and Landscape: Earth As Visual Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Different stories or narratives—whether myth, literature, maps, or scientific theory—have been created about every region or environment on Earth as human attempts to describe and understand our connections with that place. How do braided strands of human history and natural history contribute to stories we tell of the land, and to stories we tell of ourselves in the land and of relational identity? In this reading and writing seminar we will reflect on how lifeways, homeplace, and identity of an individual or a community are linked with environment or the land. We will also create written and visual narratives of our own and explore creative environmental writing in reflection and action.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy

(Spring) Landscape and Narrative
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Although they cover ~0.6% of the earth's surface, wetlands perform more ecosystem services per hectare than any other ecosystem type. Alarmingly, over half of the earth's wetlands have been lost to agriculture and development. With these wetlands were also lost the valuable ecosystem functions wetlands perform. This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to examine the biogeochemical, ecological, societal, and regulatory aspects of wetland ecosystems. Group discussion of primary scientific literature, as well as independent experimental design and the writing of a research proposal are core components. Field trips will sometimes keep us until 5:05 pm, and will provide an opportunity to explore these fascinating ecosystems in person.
Prerequisites: At least 8 credits of 200 or 300-level laboratory science

(Spring) Environmentalism and "The Market:" Evolving Strategies for Conservation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course focuses on the relationship between global political economy and environmentalism. Drawing on a range of literature, we will reflect on changing perceptions of and strategies related to "the market" in environmental policy. We will consider the political, economic, social and ecological influences and impacts of changing ideas and associated environmental practices, with particular attention to programs such as payments for ecosystem services, ecotourism and green buying, corporate social responsibility, water privatization, carbon markets, and wildlife derivatives. Throughout the course, we will explore issues of equity, wealth and governance related to these new market-based approaches to environmental conservation.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 210 or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Corson

(Spring) Science and Power in Environmental Governance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course applies concepts from political ecology to study how governance, broadly defined, works in relation to the environment. Using case studies of international environmental issues, we will explore how people make decisions about the environment in a policy realm. We will discuss the role of various agents, such as governments, scientific bodies, and nongovernmental organizations, in the decision-making process. We will reflect on who has access to decisions; how scientific data is used; how environmental ideas become powerful; and how policies are legitimated. Armed with this information, we will consider how to advocate for global environmental sustainability and social equity.

(Fall) Senior Seminar in Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
This is the capstone course of the environmental studies major. The course explores linkages among the diversity of disciplines that contribute to the environmental studies major, illustrates how these disciplines that contribute to the environmental studies major are used in environmental decision making, enables students to inform one another's roles as environmentalists, and provides students with opportunities to develop individual and cooperative projects.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies major

FLMST-101-01 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) First Year Seminar: Hollywood Meets Germany: From Marlene Dietrich and Billy Wilder to Sandra Bullock and George Clooney
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 100)
We will explore the dynamic story shared by German and U.S. cinema. In the 1920s, Hollywood lured German directors; in the 1930s, Hitler ensured that German-speaking creative talent left for Hollywood film. Weimar Cinema brought to the movies expressionism; animation; monsters like Nosferatu; and the film noir; science-fiction films like Metropolis, which influenced Blade Runner; movies promoting liberalized views of gender and sexuality; and social satires like Blue Angel/echoed in Cabaret. Since the 1970s, German films have won Oscars, and currently George Clooney, Michael Douglas, Christoph Waltz, and John Woo are filming in Babelsberg-Berlin, the world's oldest surviving studio site.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) First Year Seminar: African Cinema - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; French 120f-01)
This seminar will explore the genesis, evolution, and different themes of African cinema. We will also discuss the current issues and challenges facing the production, distribution, and critique of films made by Africans in Africa and about Africa. Lectures will be coupled with screening of films.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Gadjigo
Expected enrollment: 16

FLMST-201-01 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course teaches the basic concepts, vocabulary, and critical skills involved in interpreting film. Through readings and lectures, students will become more informed and sophisticated observers of the cinema, key examples of which will be screened weekly. While the focus will be on the form and style of narrative film, documentary and avant-garde practices will be introduced. The class will also touch upon some of the major theoretical approaches in the field.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 202)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.
Notes: 2 meetings (one 75 minute and one 2-hour screening)

(Fall) Introduction to Spanish and Latin American Cinema - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 240-01)
This course offers a broad introduction to the history, politics, and aesthetics of Latin American and Spanish cinema in the context of, and in contrast with, cinemas from other regions, especially hegemonic Hollywood aesthetics. This course will also focus specifically on introducing students to the basic terminology and methodologies of film analysis, thus preparing them for the department's film seminar (Spanish 320) and other advanced courses in film studies.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
Notes: Taught in Spanish
Instructors: J. Crumbaugh
Expected enrollment: 16

FLMST-210-01 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Production Seminar in the Moving Image: Beginning Video Production: Eye to Ear
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
What is the relationship between image and sound in video? How does listening affect what we see and imagine? This class will provide a foundation in technical and conceptual skills for making short videos. We will study the aesthetics and mechanics of shooting digital video, recording and mixing sound, and editing with Final Cut Pro. Sonic expression will play a leading role in our exploration of video production and interpretation in narrative, documentary, and experimental works. Course work includes individual and group production projects, weekly screenings, readings, and several short writing assignments. Students will complete three short videos and a final project.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, application and permission of instructor. Application available through Film Studies website.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: E. Miller
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Special Topics in Film Studies: Twentieth-Century Korea through Fiction and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Asian Studies 264)
( Component course for Film Studies) How did the events of the twentieth century set the stage for Korea in the twenty-first century? How did the country become divided into North and South, and how have their paths diverged in the decades since? In this course, students will develop a nuanced perspective of the key political, social, and cultural developments in twentieth-century Korean history through close readings of short stories, novellas, and films, including North Korean productions and rare propaganda films produced during the colonial and Korean War eras.
Notes: All readings are in English, and all films include English subtitles. No knowledge of the Korean language is required.
Instructors: N. Floyd
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Music and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 284)
The Oxford English Dictionary lists as its primary definition for "adaptation": "the bringing of two things together so as to effect a change in the nature of the objects." Our course considers the complex relationship between a source and its retellings, including the way in which such retellings permanently alter the source material and how each incarnation of a given narrative offers us a window of insight into a particular historical moment.
Readings/films will include Macbeth, Frankenstein, The Silence of the Lambs, and No Country for Old Men.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or English 200
Instructors: A. Rodgers
Expected enrollment: 25

FLMST-220-02 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Film Studies: Music and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Music 220)
For all who stay to the end of the credits, purchase soundtracks, and argue over who should have won the Oscar for Best Score, along with anyone else interested in the undervalued importance of music to the general effect of a motion picture, this course will explore and discuss the myriad ways in which these two media interact. The course will focus on classic scores by Herrmann, Morricone, and Williams, as well as the uses of existing music in films of Bergman and Kubrick.
Prerequisites: See Music 220; permission of instructor required for registration in Film Studies 220.
Instructors: D. Sanford
Expected enrollment: 20

FLMST-220-02 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Religion and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Religion 213)
This course is an investigation of the intersections between film and religion. In it, we will examine how the cultural phenomenon of religion is represented in film and how religion, understood critically and theoretically, can be a useful means to interpret film. We will learn the basic issues inherent in the interpretation of this art form (e.g., How do the visual, aural, and narrative components of film work together to create meaning?), and we will critically investigate the concept of religion as a means to better understanding the significance of cultural practice (e.g., What is religion? What are the myriad ways it is made manifest in culture?).
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202; others are encouraged to apply to the instructor for permission
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening 1 hour and 50 minutes
Instructors: H. Atchley
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Advanced Russian Film and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Russian and Eurasian Studies 252)
Students will view films, read excerpts from Soviet and Russian prose about childhood and coming of age, and study the socio-cultural aspects of becoming an adult in Russia. Films will include: Ivan’s Childhood, The Scarecrow, The Thief, and The Return. Readings will include literary texts and film reviews. We will continue to work on oral and writing skills, and vocabulary. This course prepares students to express opinions, ideas, points of view, and critiques on films, social issues and cultural phenomena using more complex and rich language.
Prerequisites: Russian and Eurasian Studies 251 or the equivalent, or permission of the instructor
Notes: Taught in Russian. Component course for Film Studies.
Instructors: E. Dengub

(Fall) Special Topics in Film Studies: Transforming Visions: Homage to German Women Filmmakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231f-02)
Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (trag)comedy in film.

Notes: Taught in English. Students with previous knowledge of German are encouraged to enroll in German Studies 223 instead
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: The Remembrance of the Holocaust in Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 223)
(In German)This seminar explores the remembrance of the Holocaust as represented primarily, but not solely, in German and European films from the immediate postwar era to the present, including documentary and feature film, as well as in other forms of visual media, such as television, photographs, and art. Themes include the working through of the past, expressions of guilt, remorse and sorrow, and the relationship between art and politics as exemplified in attempts to understand the causes, motives, and consequences of the Holocaust. Films include Night and Fog, Shoah, Schindler's List, Gehörtig, The Night Porter, Life is Beautiful, The Nasty Girl, Wannsee Conference and others.

Prerequisites: See German Studies 223. Previous study of German
Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224).
Instructors: K. Remmler

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: The Moving Image in Contemporary Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 290)
This course will survey the rise of the motion picture as both subject and mode in art since 1960. The development of video art, from monitor and installation to projection and flat screen, opened up new channels for performance and sculpture. But the rising presence of 16mm film in galleries (Tacita Dean) as celluloid disappears from movie theaters amplifies a trend that also includes artists as feature filmmakers (Julian Schnabel and Cindy Sherman), Christian Marclay's use of cinema's past in The Clock (2010), and Matthew Barney's reliance on the Guggenheim as set and cinemateque.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Instructors: K. Eisenstein
Expected enrollment: 25

FLMST-230-01 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Documentary Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the principles, methods, and styles of nonfiction film. Beginning with the "actualités" of film history's first practitioners and ending with contemporary self-reflexive films, such as Errol Morris's The Thin Blue Line, the class studies films that strive to represent some aspect of the real world as opposed to the fictional worlds of narrative cinema.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Instructors: R. Blaetz

(Fall) History of World Cinema: The First 100 Years (1832-1932) - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this historical survey we will study three periods from the first half of the cinema's past (1832-1932): its invention, its silent days, and its transition to sound. From the optical effect of the phenakistoscope (1832) through the efforts of Édison and Lumière, from the evolution of the classical style of Hollywood to the montage theories of the Soviets, from the adoption of sound-on-film to the benshi strikes in Japan, this course will introduce students to the fascinating figures, institutional structures, art and technologies that built the world's cinema.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202 or Art History 202
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours)

(Spring) History of World Cinema: The Second 100 Years (1932-2032)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This historical survey will chart the cinema’s life from the arrival of sound. We will cover the triumph and collapse of the Hollywood studio system, the prewar French cinema, the postwar Italian Neo-Realists, New Waves, Independents, and contemporary world cinema, all with an eye toward shifting aesthetics and exhibition/distribution practices (especially in terms of the digital).
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202 or 203
Instructors: K. Eisenstein

(Fall) Film Genre: Film Genre and Gender - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204f-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.
This course examines the development of Hollywood film genres largely in the post-studio era, particularly the Western, the Melodrama, the Science Fiction and Horror film, and film noir. We will consider the evolution of these four genres in relation to changes in the film industry and in American society, especially in relation to gender.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours, 30 minutes)
Instructors: R. Blaetz

(Spring) National and Transnational Cinema: Trans*gender and Queer German Cinema: From Third Sex (1919) to Trans-Papa (2012)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian Cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform, Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim’s It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi’s Romeos, Mettke’s Transpapa.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus screening. If time conflict with the screening session, please contact the instructor for alternate arrangements.

(Spring) National and Transnational Cinema: Love and Family in Contemporary Iranian Cinema
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 239-01. Gender Studies 210-01.)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian Cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.
This course focuses on cinema from Iran after the revolution in 1979 which brought the current Islamic Republic into being. We look at how this cinema, especially from the last twenty years, approaches and questions family relationships and the love upon which they are generally understood to be based, drawing upon Shi’i and broader Islamic conceptions of appropriate social and gender roles. Students acquire familiarity with ideas of family in contemporary Iran as well as the major directors and actors in contemporary Iranian film.
Notes: No prior knowledge of Iran or the Middle East is necessary.
Instructors: V. Gardner

(Spring) Film Authorship: Cinephilia and the Auteur--Forests and Trees - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.
In his review of Bitter Victory (1958), Jean-Luc Godard declared: "the cinema is Nicholas Ray." In his study The American Cinema: Directors and Directions 1929-1968, Andrew Sarris placed Ray just beneath the "Pantheon Directors" in a lovely named but secondary grouping he called "The Far Side of Paradise." This course will dive into this fascinating period of film criticism and cinephilia (the 1950s and 1960s). By examining the French response (Andre Bazin and Cahiers) to the American cinema (mainly of the 1940s and 1950s), and by looking at the films of directors like Ray, Howard Hawks, and Fritz Lang, we will explore the French influence on American and British critics.

(Fall) Film Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory through Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 221B-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
We will be reading a number of key feminist texts that theorize the construction of sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. We will study these shifts through the analysis of a few moving pictures, or, to put it differently: all you always wanted to know about feminism, but didn't think to ask filmmakers such as Almodóvar, Hitchcock, Jarman, Pasolini, Varda, and others.

(Spring) Film Theory: Philosophy and Film Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 275s)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a consideration of one or more of the methods through which the medium of film is understood aesthetically and/or culturally.
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Philosophy or Film Studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (1.5 hours)

(Spring) Production Seminar: Documentary Workshop: Advanced Video Production
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Preamble (for topics courses): An advanced course in the theory and practice of film/video production as an art form. Topics for the seminar will vary from year to year.
In this class, we will take skills and insights gained in introductory production courses and develop them over the length of the semester through the creation of one short documentary project, 10 minutes long. We will explore the ethical questions and ambivalence inherent in this medium, seeking complex answers to difficult questions about representation and the often blurry lines between fiction and non-fiction. We will watch documentaries each week, films that introduce us to new ideas and information both in their content and in their form. This course has a Community-Based Learning Component.
Prerequisites: Beginning video production or its equivalent. Application and permission of instructor required. Application available through Film Studies Web site.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged.
Instructors: B. Mellis
Expected enrollment: 10

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Hitchcock and After
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 374)
This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Mamie, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.
Prerequisites: online application required
Notes: meets English Department seminar requirement; film screenings Mondays, 7:00-10:00 pm

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Beyond Geishas and Kung Fu Masters: Asian American Film and Visual Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; ENGL 334)
This course examines contemporary Asian American film and visual culture through the lens of cultural recovery, self-invention, and experimentation. Focusing primarily on film and photography, we will explore issues of race and visuality, Hollywood orientalism, memory and postmemory, and racial impersonation and parody. Students will engage with a variety of theoretical and critical approaches. Artists may include Nikki S. Lee, Margaret Cho, Tseng Kwong Chi, Jin-me Yoon, Justin Lin, Binh Dahn, Richard Fung, Mira Nair, Deepa Mehta, and Alice Wu.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: I. Day
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Anthropology 310f-01)
Component course for Film Studies. In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 and 4 additional credits in department
Notes: Component course for Film Studies
Instructors: D. Battaglia
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Montage: Millimeters or Miles - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Hollis Frampton claimed that it was "from [Eisenstein's] montage that we, all of us, measure our distances, in millimeters or in miles." Frampton's "all" extends beyond those directly involved with the cinema, echoing Eisenstein who stated that he was "interested in everything besides the cinema," and who once began an essay with this epigraph from Goethe: "In nature we never see anything isolated, but everything in connection with something else which is before it, beside it, under it, and over it." This seminar will focus on Eisenstein's films and writings, pursuing their reverberations in Hollywood (e.g., Lang, Sirk) and the avant-garde (e.g., Brakhage, Sonbert, Child).
Prerequisites: 8 credits in film studies including 201 or 202 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: K. Eisenstein
Expected enrollment: 14

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350s(01))
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Rundle

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Notable Novels in Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 311-01)
Focusing on late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French novels, we will explore the historical and cultural background of a decadent French aristocracy and witness the triumph of the bourgeoisie. As visual resources we will use paintings by Boucher, Fragonard, Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Manet, Degas, as well as cinematic interpretations of Laclos' Les Liaisons dangereuses, Diderot's La Religieuse, and literary works by George Sand, Stendhal, Balzac, Flaubert, Zola, and Maupassant. Literacy in technology is an integral part of this course, and students will learn to produce a digital narration in iMovie as a term project.
Prerequisites: permission of course instructor
Notes: Component course for Film Studies

FLMST-340-01 - Film Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Experimental Film: Women Experimental Filmmakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.

This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or 203

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)

Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Film Genre: Expired Horror? - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.

The horror film stands at the core of the body genres; however, in 2013 it may be hard for us to experience visceral impact from films made at a time that, in some ways, looked so different from our own. This course will survey the genre from 1896 to 1968, the year that the rating system was introduced in the United States. Yet our scope will be international, tackling not only Hollywood's Universal Horror, but the UK's Hammer Horror, Mexican Horror, Les yeux sans visage (1960), Italy's Mario Bava, and precursors to J-Horror.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and 1 screening (2 hours, 30 minutes)

Instructors: K. Eisenstein

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: Bollywood: A Cinema of Interruptions

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 360)

Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering storyline, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Latin American Studies 387s(02))

Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This course offers an interrogation of overt and embedded narratives of migrants and the migration process in popular and documentary film, paying specific attention to cinematic representations of non-citizen bodies confronting migration, deportation, labor, acculturation, and anti-immigrant hysteria. Film screenings and class discussions comprise the interpretative lens through which students will examine the aesthetic, cultural, economic, gendered, historical, political, racial, and sexual dimensions of cultural texts. The course is supplemented with readings about immigration policies and histories.

Prerequisites: jr, sr

Instructors: D. Hernandez

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315)
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

This course studies selected filmmakers from Weimar to the present who have filmed literary texts and evoked the wrath of the censors: Sternberg's Blue Angel, H. Mann's Professor Unrat with Dietrich as the New Woman; Dudow/Brecht's Proletarian film, Kuhle Wampe, censored for including an abortion; Szabó's 1981 film of Klaus Mann's 1936 novel Mephisto, banned to protect actor Gustav Gründgens from a questionable Third Reich past. Also, works by Kleist, Storm, Fontane, Hesse, Kafka, and Thomas Mann inspired filmmakers like Fassbinder, Huntgeburth, and Haneke, not only because they broke existing taboos but also by foregrounding current issues such as globalization, alienation, terrorism, and homophobia.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 370 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to the cinema of a single country or group of countries. Some examples of national cinemas that might be studied are: French cinema, Francophone cinema, Indian cinema, Eastern European cinema, or Latin American cinema.

The relationship between colonizer and colonized is two-fold: on the one hand a visible, immediate (military, economic, and political) domination, and on the other, a more subtle, less visible (ideological) domination. These will be explored through texts (literature and films) representing both the metropolitan and the native, from the colonizer's point of view. This course will discuss first how, through its writers and filmmakers, France projected itself onto the imagination of colonized Africans and second, how, in response, Africans appropriated the pen and the camera to convey their perception of their French experiences with the metropolitan Other.

(Fall) Topics in Film Authorship: Henry James on Film - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive; English 345f-(01))

Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.

This seminar will examine the various screen adaptations of assorted novels by Henry James. We will read the novels against the films, exploring how James’s texts translate—or do not translate—into film.

(Spring) Topics in Film Authorship: Natural’s Not in It: Pedro Almodóvar

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340s-01)

Preamble (for topics courses): Film Studies 380 offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific cinematic author. While most courses focus on a director or group of directors, courses may also focus on designers, technicians, performers, producers, or some combination of these personnel.

This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema’s favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?

Intermediate Courses in Culture and Literature: Introduction to the Civilization of France

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): In order to explain the complexity of present-day France, this course will explore its most conflictual historical moments—feudalism, absolute monarchy, political and social revolutions. Students will learn the social and historical context of French art and architecture.

Images et Patrimoine: In this multimedia course students learn to decode images and study the social and historical context of French art and architecture: Medieval tapestries, Romanesque and Gothic cathedrals, Renaissance houses, Classic and Rococo art, and nineteenth century schools of painting. Students give in-class presentations and write essays about notable French landmarks. The purpose of such inquiry is to revisit the past and see how it has affected contemporary French society. All course material is online.

Period Courses: Topic: (pre-1800) Sex, Lies and Parchment: The Roman de la rose

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.

After first defining "courtly love" via Chrétien's Lancelot and other texts, we shall read the two-part, thirteenth-century Roman de la rose, begun as a serious allegorical love-quest by one author, then, years later, "continued" in an opposite vein by another author using virtually all knowledge and controversy to define love, and life, against Church and state dogma. The Rose's learned yet irreverent, schizoid nature and manuscript images made it an international blockbuster admired and/or reworked by Dante, Chaucer and others. It sparked the first literary debate about women, pitting Christine de Pizan against the Parisian male intelligentsia, whose debate letters we shall examine.

Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor

Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French must read texts and write papers in French to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.

(Spring) Period Courses: Topic: The Detective Novel in France

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.

The French detective novel found its origins in Poe and in the disillusionment and malaise of the increasingly urban universe of the nineteenth century. It generally centered on a dark, mysterious Parisian atmosphere that spoke to a growing public awareness of the worlds of crime and of the police. Realist novelists, in particular Dostoevsky, enriched the genre's conventions, but the detective novel evolved beyond realism as it moved into the twentieth century, combining unsettling social critique with reassuringly flawless reasoning.

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

This course is devoted entirely to the works of writer-director Ousmane Sembène. We will explore the major highlights of his life; his involvement in leftist movements in Europe, his writing and cinema and especially the place of his work in the African cultural discourse. The study of Sembène's work will be divided into four main themes: 1) Experience exile and the search for a voice; 2) The historical work; 3) The political and social criticism; 4) Woman and society. Finally, we will examine the role of Sembène's work in the history of cultural discourse in Africa.

(Fall) Courses in Francophone Studies: Topic: Ousmane Sembene: The Work of a Militant Artist

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study nonmetropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.

The encounter between Europe and Africa in the colonial context of the 19th century took place through military, missionary, business and political contacts. But it is mainly in various "texts" that it is reflected first by the European colonizer himself, who had a monopoly until the eve of World War I. Then, from the end of World War I until the 1960s, the encounter echoed in fiction produced by so-called "francophone" African authors. How does Europe represent the encounter and what was the response of African writers? This is the central question we will attempt to answer. Throughout our discussions, we will examine the roles that "texts" have played in colonization and liberation.

(Fall) Advanced level seminar: Topic: Love for Sale: The Figure of the Prostitute in French Literature and Culture

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies.

Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.

This course will explore the figure of the prostitute, and the theme of prostitution, primarily in French novels of the nineteenth century. We will examine the ways in which the figure of the prostitute serves as a reflection of broader social and literary questions: female sexuality as represented by male authors, the link(s) between sex and money, the question of realism in narrative fiction, et al. In addition to literary texts, we will study secondary sources that place French prostitution in its historical and cultural context. Some films and an opera or two will be included as well.

Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.

The complex nature of France's contemporary social fabric can be explained through its tumultuous past. From Medieval times to the twentieth century, France endured English and German military occupations, religious civil wars, multiple revolutions, and the aftermath of decolonization. Through a selection of films we will focus on crucial periods in its history. Films include Joan of Arc, Queen Margot, Marie Antoinette, Danton, The Sorrow and the Pity, The Eye of Vichy, The Battle of Algiers, L'Héritage Magrébin, and Paris la Métisse. Students will demonstrate their mastery of form and content with a term project in iMovie. Technical support is provided by workshops in LRC. All course material is online.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Spanish 240f(01))
As women perform gender, so too do they perform culture. In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays as part of the course.

(Taught in English; Asian Studies 215, Theatre Arts 234)
Yue Opera, an all-female art that flourished in Shanghai in 1923, resulted from China's social changes and the women's movement. Combining traditional with modern forms and Chinese with Western cultures, Yue Opera today attracts loyal and enthusiastic audiences despite pop arts crazes. We will focus on how audiences, particularly women, are fascinated by gender renegotiations as well as by the all-female cast. The class will read and watch classics of this theater, including Dream of the Red Chamber, Story of the Western Chamber, Peony Pavilion, and Butterfly Lovers. Students will also learn the basics of traditional Chinese opera.

We will examine how different facets of the culture -- fashion, dance, music, film as well as rap music -- display and talk about sexuality and sexual explicitness. We will also be looking at how conversations about sexuality and Hip Hop are largely portrayed as having two sides: those who embrace Hip Hop and those who denounce it. In this class we will explore how conversations about sexuality happen within the communities who are invested in the culture.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Rebels and Radicals: Feminist Art and Literature in Latin America

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 240)

(IN SPANISH) In this course we will explore the links between gender and modern Latin American culture, through a study of nineteenth through twenty-first century feminist critical theories and self-representations. We will look at the construction of the female subject and her double, or "other," through travel writing, political writing, revolutionary testimonies, plays, and letters alongside the plastic arts. In addition to primary texts and media, we will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(English 239)

Eighteenth-century England witnessed the birth of the novel, a genre that in its formative years was both lauded for its originality and condemned as intellectually and morally dangerous, especially for young women. We will trace the numerous prose genres that influenced early novelists, including conduct manuals, epistolary writing, conversion narratives, travelogues, romance, and the gothic. In doing so, we will concomitantly examine the novel's immense formal experimentation alongside debates about developing notions of gender and class as well as the feeling, thinking individual. Authors may include Richardson, Fielding, Sterne, Walpole, Burney, and others.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Gender and Species

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Critical Social Thought 204)

Are animals persons? Subjects? Do they have gender? Important shifts in public opinion have taken place concerning the moral, legal, and affective status of animals, yet liberal Academia still marginalizes the "animal question." In this course, we will draw on feminism's engagement against speciesism to chart diverse forms of human/non-human companionship. The analytic categories of gender and species will be examined side by side for their usefulness in understanding a world in which we no longer approach the human as the great exception. We will consider theory, fiction, films, art work, and the internet in approaching post-human concepts of life, personhood, and subjectivity.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 270b(01), German Studies 231)

Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform, Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim's It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi's Romeos, Mettke's Transpapa. We will read gender and queer theory to disentangle the complexity of women's representations as they intersect with race, class, ethnicity, and sexuality. Students will produce creative projects as well as essays.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: Sexuality and Hip Hop

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; AFCNA 204)

Hip Hop music has often been the subject of controversy when it comes to sexuality. Whether it be for misogynist lyrics, homophobic icons or sexually explicit video models, conversations about sexuality and Hip Hop are largely portrayed as having two sides: those who embrace Hip Hop and the "sexuality police." In this class we will explore how conversations about sexuality happen within the communities who are invested in the culture. We will examine how different facets of the culture -- fashion, dance, music, film as well as rap music -- display and talk about sexuality and sexual identity and how these representations impact U.S. popular culture.

(History 275)
Introduction to major themes in U.S. history through the lens of women's history. Located both near the centers of power in American society and at its margins, the history of women as a social group is one of conflict and diversity. While women do not make up a coherent group, all share the unique experience of being "women" in class, racial, and religiously specific ways. Themes include Native American and Hispanic women during European contact and settlement; the impact of the American Revolution; benevolent women and the "fallen" women they hoped to help; enslaved women and the plantation mistress; women in the multicultural west; women's involvement in the Civil War and Reconstruction.

Memory has a wide range of meanings and applications in many different contexts. What, for example, is the difference between artificial intelligence and human memory? How are national identities constructed around the commemoration of great events? What is the importance of memory in relation to concepts like justice and progress? How do rituals and performances work to determine gender and other identities? How can we understand the differences in episodic, implicit, long term, short term or working memory? For individuals and societies, what are the implications of the absence of memory? In this course, we examine psychological, social, political, and cultural approaches to memory.

We will read a number of key feminist texts that theorize sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. The postcolonial critique of feminism is a fourth vector we will examine, as well as anti-racist and postcolonial intersections with queerness. The Americas have been characterized by the strictness of their laws in the criminalization of abortion. In some countries abortion is criminalized even when the woman's life is at risk. What role have women's movements played in advancing abortion rights? What has mattered most for a movement's success, its internal characteristics or external forces? Has the way the movement framed its demands mattered? How has the political influence of the Catholic and Evangelical churches influenced policies in this area? We will answer these questions by exploring examples from across the region through primary and secondary sources.

In the last 30 years, Latin America has seen the emergence of a large array of social movements that have shaped the political and economic processes in the region. From human rights to peasants' movements, from indigenous to unemployed movements, women have been increasingly involved in political activism. What has been the role of women in these movements? How have traditional women's roles been at the same time useful and an obstacle to their activism? How have women influenced the repertoires, frames, identities and strategies of these movements? We will answer these questions through the exploration of case studies in the region using academic readings, testimonies, and documentaries.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women's Autobiographical Narrative in French - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself. Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.
Prerequisites: 12 credits in French including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and course instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women Writers: Early Feminisms - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Spanish 330f-01)
This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erauso, and María de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.

(Sociology 305f-01)
This course focuses on the social production of gender relationships across a range of institutional, interactional, intellectual, and cultural contexts. The syllabus is structured around selections from major social, political, economic, and cultural theories of gender in addition to several exemplary empirical studies. Weekly topics include kinship and socialization, the contemporary moral orders of masculinity and femininity, family organization, legal systems and nation-states, war and rape, and the gendered organization and deployment of expert authority in a range of social settings.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Poetics: The Poetess, Prophet, and Revolutionary - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking-intensive; English 377s-01)

This seminar will explore innovations in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century women's verse. By investigating experiments with narrative, genre, stanza form, meter, and figurative language, we will contemplate what political, social, and ideological problems women writers attempted to present and perhaps solve through linguistic creativity. Larger questions include how to define "feminist poetics" and what potential such a project might afford poets and thinkers today. To this end, we will read selections of poetry in conversation with contemporary feminist theory as well as representations of women's incantation, prophecy, and singing by male poets and novelists of the day.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women and Gender in South Asia - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Speaking-intensive; History 301F-04)

This colloquium will explore the history of South Asia as seen from women's perspectives. We will read writings by women from the ancient period to the present. We will focus on the diversity of women's experiences in a range of social, cultural, and religious contexts. Themes include sexuality, religiosity, rights to education and employment, violence against women, modernity and citizenship -- in short, those issues central to women's movements in modern South Asia. In addition to the textual sources, the course will analyze Indian popular film and the representation of women in this modern visual genre.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Taught in English; Asian Studies 350s-01)

Seminar on love, desire, and gender, major themes in Indian literature. We will read classic poems, plays, and narratives in translation from Sanskrit, Tamil, Hindi, and other languages, in relation to aesthetic theory, visual arts (miniature paintings), and performance genres (Indian dance, and the modern Bollywood cinema). Study of the conventions of courtly love, including aesthetic mood (rasa) and natural landscapes, and their transformation in Hindu bhakti and Sufi Muslim mystical texts, the Radha-Krishna myth, and film. Focus on representations of women and men, and on issues of power, voice, and agency.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(English 372s-01)

This seminar will focus on depictions of war in the context of gender. When asked how we might prevent war, Virginia Woolf suggested that we must invent new language and methods rather than follow the path of the traditional "procession of educated men." What language emerges in works about the effects of war? Texts will include essays and films as well as selected works by writers such as Alcott, Whitman, Crane, Twain, Hemingway, Woolf, Silko, Morrison, and O'Brien.

Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German Studies 315, European Studies 315)
A gift of a voluminous scrapbook by an alumna (1909) studying German at MHC serves as the basis for this hands-on investigative course about global learning and daily life at MHC, in Germany, and Europe. Each student researches her individual area of interest to explore this crucial era when women in Europe pushed open all doors to higher education (1908); when women scientists, artists, and public leaders achieved prominence. Key question: how did women's education support women in defining and constructing their own paths to professional success, commitment to global public service, and desire for pleasure and personal happiness? Research outcome: bilingual media project.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201; required online application, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html
Notes: Taught in German. Students with interest in this topic and in global and European studies, but insufficient or no prior knowledge of German, should enroll in German Studies 330 (2 cr.) taught in English.

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Emily Dickinson in Her Times
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 359)
This course will examine the writing of Emily Dickinson, both her poetry and her letters. We will consider the cultural, historical, political, religious, and familial environment in which she lived. Special attention will be paid to Dickinson's place as a woman artist in the nineteenth century. The class will meet at the Dickinson Museum (280 Main Street in Amherst and accessible by Five College bus). Enrollment is limited to ten students.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in English or 8 credits in Gender Studies
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) in Amherst
Instructors: M. Ackmann

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women in American Theatre and Drama

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Theat 350.02)

This course offers a history of women in performance, from the colonial era to the present day. Americans inherited a European theatrical economy that was largely male dominated, though actresses played a central role on stage and in the public imagination. Today, while serious inequities remain, women are gaining access to the most privileged and powerful positions in a swiftly changing field. We are therefore equally interested in how women have participated in theatrical culture—whether as actors, producers, playwrights, directors, designers, managers, and audience members—and how they have been represented on commercial, experimental, and regional stages, and across genres and communities.

(Africana Studies 323)

This course engages with issues in popular culture, scholarship, and art that negotiate the complex terrain of black gender. We question the concepts of manhood and womanhood and their intersection with racial constructs as categories of personhood through the critical gaze of African American studies and gender studies. Black gender is identified as the ways in which gender, for African Americans, is always mediated by race.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Latin American Studies 387)

This course offers an interdisciplinary approach to the study of feminist ideologies among Latinas throughout the United States. Employing a range of sources from archival texts to artistic images and ethnographies, we will study the histories and representations of Latina feminist theories across academic and aesthetic approaches. Focusing on the multiplicity of lived experiences among Puertorriqueñas, Chicanas, Mexicanas, Centrosamericanas, Dominicanas, Suramericanas, and many other communities in the United States, we will interrogate how gender and sexuality have informed the development of Latina feminist movements and political histories.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 323)

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(History 301f.04)
Recent cultural histories of imperialism—European as well as U.S.—have illuminated the workings of race and gender at the heart of imperial encounters. This course will examine the United States' relationship to imperialism through the lens of such cultural histories. How has the encounter between Europe and America been remembered in the United States? How has the cultural construction of "America" and its "others" called into play racial and gender identities? How have the legacies of slavery been entwined with U.S. imperial ambitions at different times? And what can we learn from transnational approaches to "the intimacies of empire?"

(Anthropology 316s-02)

This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy. Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

From the middle ages to the present day, witches have evoked both fear and fascination. Their fellowships (real or fantastic) challenged the prevailing power structures of church and state patriarchies and upset the ordered precepts of the modern world. This seminar offers an overview of the history of witchcraft in Atlantic cultures, with special attention to the early modern British and American colonial eras. We will examine figures of the witch in European art; religious and legal texts that document the persecution of sorcerers; and dramatic, literary, and cinematic representations of witches that have helped to shape our understanding of gender, nature, theatricality, and power.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Thinking through the Body: Messy Feminisms, Queer Transfections, Cross-Species Connections - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

The brain sends an impulse, the body executes it? Science examines, matter is inert? Men look, women are displayed? People train, dogs and horses obey? The sperm is mobile, the egg lays waiting? Spirit (leaders) infuse(s), nature (the masses) receive(s)? "Thinking through the body," challenges these assumptions that some feminists see as coming from the stranglehold of masculinist Reason. Transfections are different ways of reaching into each other the esthetics, epistemologies, and politics of which we will explore. The sex wars, the AIDS crisis, the neo-baroque, translation theory, eating habits, and zoontologies are just some of the contexts explored primarily through film, literature, and theory.

GEOG-105-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) World Regional Geography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course surveys the major geographic regions of the world in terms of environmental features and resource distributions, economic mainstays, population characteristics, cultural processes, social relationships, and patterns of urbanization and industrial growth. In addition to these topical foci, we use various sub-fields of geography to animate different regions. This approach provides a sense of depth while we also pursue a breadth of knowledge about the world.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 40

GEOG-107-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Physical Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
A systematic introduction to the processes operating on the surface of the earth, their spatial variation and their contribution to the spatial patterning of life on earth. The course stresses interactions among the earth's energy balance, weather, ecological resources and human impacts on environmental systems.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for Geography 108, but this course does not include a lab.
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 50

GEOG-108-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Physical Environment with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A systematic introduction to the physical processes operating on the surface of the earth, their spatial variation and their contribution to the spatial patterning of life. The course stresses interactions among the earth's energy balance, weather, ecological resources and human impacts on environmental systems.
Notes: The lecture for this course meets at the same time as the lecture for Geography 107, but this course includes a weekly lab.

GEOG-202-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Cities in a Global Context - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cities are dynamic landscapes informed by myriad economic, political, social, environmental, and cultural processes. This course delves into the forces of urbanization and examines how cities have been investigated, built, experienced, and lived in throughout history and around the globe. By accepting a geographic perspective and drawing upon an array of theoretical ideas and empirical examples, this class grapples with the fascinating complexities of the urban context.

Instructors: S. Houston
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-205-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Mapping and Spatial Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides a comprehensive introduction to maps, including their design, compilation, and computer production. Introduces students to the principles of abstracting the Earth’s surface into spatial databases using GIS, remote sensing, and Global Positioning Satellites.
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 24

GEOG-206-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Political Geography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Systematically studies political phenomena and their geographic expression, at a variety of spatial scales - national, regional, and international. Major themes include nation-state formation, boundary, territory, and ethnic issues, regional blocs and spheres of influence, and conflicts over access to and use of resources.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 50

GEOG-208-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Global Movements: Migrations, Refugees and Diasporas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The voluntary and involuntary movement of people around the globe is the focus of this course on migrations, refugees, and diasporas. Questions of borders, nativism, transnationalism, the global economy, and legality thread through this course as we consider the many social, cultural, environmental, economic, and political factors shaping decisions to leave a home or homeland. Historical and contemporary case studies, compelling theoretical texts, and geographic perspectives on these topics collectively animate our discussions.
Instructors: S. Houston

GEOG-215-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) The Political Economy of the Middle East and North Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this course, the Middle East and North Africa are studied in terms of their physical, cultural, economic, and political geography. Emphasis is placed on the environmental conditions and ecological evolution, population and demographic characteristics, the resource base and major problems in the social, political, and economic transformation of the region.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-217-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) The African Environments - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The course provides an integrated analysis of biogeography, environmental change, and hydrology within each of the biomes found in the African continent: forest, savanna, desert, coast, wetland, mountain, and Mediterranean environments. It also discusses the impact and significance of human activity on African environments by exploring debates about land degradation, climate change, biodiversity and depletion, and conservation and development.
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-223-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Renewable Energy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Greater use of renewable energy is seen as a key component of any move to combat climate change, and is being aggressively promoted as such by the U.S. and other governments. Yet there is little economic analysis of renewable energy and a host of political hurdles. This course explores the economic and political dimensions of renewable energy and attempts to diagnose if decarbonization technology can be successful in terms of energy supply and security.

GEOG-304-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Regional Planning - Special Topics: Urban and Regional Planning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines in detail the fabric of urban and suburban settlement and commerce in the pre and post WW-II U.S. Field trips to the greater Springfield area are used to allow students to develop firsthand understanding of interactions between urban and suburban areas and to recognize the major changes to the human landscape driven by suburbanization and urban abandonment.
Prerequisites: Any 200-level geography course
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 12

GEOG-311-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Seminars - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 1 class in department and 1 200-level class in related social sciences
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOG-312-01 - Geography - 2013-2014

GEOG-313-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Third World Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Offers an interdisciplinary perspective on social, economic, and political features of contemporary development in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, regions referred to as the Third World or the South, and provides an introduction to theoretical origins and definitions of economic growth, development, and underdevelopment. It then addresses more specific aspects of development such as trends in population growth, migration, and urbanization; agrarian change; livelihood strategies and aspects of social welfare such as health, education, and shelter; poverty and the environment; and external economic relationships. The latter part of the course draws extensively on selected case studies.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in Geography and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200-level
Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-313-02 - Geography - 2013-2014

GEOG-319-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Africa: Problems and Prospects
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This course intends to offer an interdisciplinary perspective on selected contemporary development problems in Africa south of the Sahara. Central to the course will be an examination of the social, economic, and political consequences of colonialism, the physical resource base and ecological crisis, agrarian systems and rural development, gender relations and development, urbanization and industrialization, and the problems and prospects of regional cooperation and integration.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, soph only with permission of instructor; 4 credits in department and 4 credits at the 200 level in geography or related social science. Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOG-320-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Spring) Research with Geospatial Technologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Geographic Information Systems (GIS) and remote sensing are essential tools for geographic analysis in both the biophysical and social sciences. This course uses a semester-long project that includes field and laboratory instruction to allow students to develop hands-on skills with spatial data and analysis software. Students will be able to present potential employers with a portfolio containing examples of their ability to develop and execute a GIS/remote sensing application project.
Prerequisites: Geography 205
Instructors: T. Millette
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOG-395-01 - Geography - 2013-2014

GEOG-399-01 - Geography - 2013-2014
(Fall) Getting Ahead in Geology and Geography
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Geology 399)
This course provides support and mentoring for geology and geography majors as they pursue internships, summer jobs, independent research, and careers. Experiences will include: resume and communication workshops; self-reflection and sharing opportunities for students returning from internships, work experiences, and semesters abroad; guidance on preparing for, selecting, and applying to graduate school; information about careers in education and teacher licensure; and discussion of new research in geology and geography.
Prerequisites: Geography or Geology Major or Minor
Notes: Course meets just before the Earth Adventures at Lunch talks
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 20
Geology

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Physical Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From earthquakes to landscapes, deserts to glaciers, lignite to limestone, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Learn to interpret the geology of your surroundings when traveling to new places and understand how geologic setting influences how people live. Lectures focus on exploring and explaining geological features and processes using concept sketches. Labs focus on mineral and rock identification, map reading, and local field trips.
Notes: Preference given to first- and second-year students during the first week of registration. Juniors and Seniors should check ISIS after that for availability. Additional spaces may open during the first week of classes.

GEOL-101-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Environmental Geology with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment. The labs cover selected geologic topics including methods for recognizing and interpreting environmental hazards, and developing strategies to address environmental problems.
Prerequisites: Preference given to first- and second-year students during the first week of registration. Juniors and Seniors should check ISIS after that for availability.

GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) History of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Life forms have inhabited the surface of our planet for most of its history. Earth, as a result, has a unique geology that is unlike that of any other planet. In this course we will examine the interrelations between life processes and Earth’s crust and atmosphere and how they work together to create the geology of the planet. Using both the rock and fossil record, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips will emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

(Fall) Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Because more than seventy percent of our planet is covered by oceans, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. We will explore how the Earth’s oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to affect weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to resources.
Instructors: A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 75

GEOL-107-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Environmental Geology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, yet at the same time it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. This course examines earth processes, how these affect our lives, and how we can best live with and sustain our environment.

GEOL-115-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Emergence of Animals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The origin of animals was one of the most important events in the history of earth. In this course we will review the history of the planet, learn basic geology, and then examine the problem of the origin of animals by studying Mount Holyoke’s unequaled collection of Precambrian and Cambrian fossils. The emergence of animals has been called the Cambrian Explosion. We will examine what this means for our understanding of evolutionary theory.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: M. McMenamin
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOL-201-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Rocks and Minerals - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course you will learn to recognize the common rock-forming minerals and principal rock types, and to understand their origins, properties, associations, and geological significance. Observational skills and hand sample identification will be emphasized in lab and on field trips. Students must have a one-year high school earth science class or any 100- or 200-level geology course or Geography 107.
Instructors: S. Dunn
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Dunn |
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-203-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Surface Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The surface of the Earth is a history book of past environmental change. Every hill and valley, every erosional feature and every deposit is the result of processes acting at the Earth's surface. In this course we study these processes (e.g. glaciers, rivers, slopes, coastlines, windblown sand, frozen ground, cave formation, soil development) to better understand how they work and to understand the resulting landforms and deposits. With this understanding we can then observe different landforms and deposits and infer past processes (environments of deposition). Fieldwork and trips allow students to explore first-hand the processes that have created and modified the Earth’s surface.
Prerequisites: Geology 100 or 101
Instructors: A. Werner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Werner |
Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-210-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Plate Tectonics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Plate tectonic theory explains the origins of volcanoes and earthquakes, continental drift, and the locations of mountain belts and oceans. This course focuses on the geometry of plate tectonics. Topics include mid-ocean ridge systems, transform faults, subduction zones, relative plate motion, earthquake analysis, triple point junctions, and stereographic projection. Work includes individual research projects on active plate boundaries.
Notes: Comfort with geometry and trigonometry required.
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 20

GEOL-211-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Uranium
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
From the A-bomb to zircon, uranium has revolutionized humanity’s destructive potential and wisdom about time. Uranium is the planet’s heaviest naturally occurring element, and it transforms by both radioactive decay and nuclear fission. This course uses computer modeling to explore these two transformations and what we make of them, specifically: the age of the earth, high-precision dating of recent geologic and climate events, nuclear power, nuclear weapons, plutonium production, and the uniquely long-term challenge of nuclear waste disposal and storage.
Prerequisites: Any course in Chemistry, Geology, Math, or Statistics
Instructors: M. Markley
Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-224-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Paleontology-Stratigraphy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides an intensive study of fossils, fossil preservation, relationships between major groups of organisms, depositional environments, sediments, sedimentary rocks, and the processes of sedimentation. We will employ the principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation to interpret ancient environments and paleoclimate, reconstruct paleogeography, and probe the characteristics of sedimentary basins. Laboratory exercises and field trips will introduce a variety of analytical techniques used to study sedimentary rocks.

Prerequisites: one course in geology at the 100 or 200 level or permission of instructor

Instructors: M. McMenamin

Expected enrollment: 18

GEOL-227-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Groundwater

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major environmental concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we will cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students are required to prepare weekly problem sets/labs, a term paper, and an oral presentation.

Prerequisites: Any 100-level geology course

Instructors: A. Werner

Expected enrollment: 11

(Spring) Igneous and Metamorphic Petrology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course covers mineralogical and chemical compositions, classification, genesis, and mode of occurrence of igneous and metamorphic rocks, paying special attention to the relationships between rock-forming processes and global plate tectonics; labs involve the study of representative rock suites in hand specimen and thin section, introduction to analytical techniques, including mineral optics, and one or more field trips.

Prerequisites: Geology 201 or Permission of instructor

Instructors: S. Dunn

Expected enrollment: 15

GEOL-326-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Spring) Seminar: Global Change - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

The Earth's climate system is dynamic. Relatively small changes have been associated with profound environmental change; therefore, understanding historic and geologic climate change is paramount to predicting future change. This course reviews the evidence of past climatic change and the prospects of a warmer world.

Prerequisites: 1 200-level geology course or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Werner
Expected enrollment: 14

GEOL-333-01 - Geology - 2013-2014
(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology and structural analysis: field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock strength, deformation mechanisms, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Most labs are field trips that involve data collection. Weekly writing assignments focus on presenting original research and distinguishing between observations and interpretations. During the final weeks of the semester, oral presentations and a final paper emphasize fluency in the published literature of structural geology.
Prerequisites: Geology 201

(Fall) History of the Earth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the evolution and interaction of life, rocks, oceans, and air during the past 4 billion years of earth history. Some topics covered are: ice ages and greenhouse atmospheres, continental drift, extinctions and radiations of flora and fauna, the early evolution of earth, absolute and relative dating of rocks, and the geologic time scale. Labs teach geologic map interpretation and computer modeling of earth systems. Writing and speaking assignments focus on critical analysis of recently published research, proposal writing and the design and testing of earth science hypotheses.
Prerequisites: Any one of the following courses: Geology 100, 101, 201, 203, 224, Biology 223, 226 or Environmental Studies 200

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.
Consult the department for information about future seminars.
This seminar will cover selected topics on the geology of Death Valley region, California. We will meet for two hours per week up until spring break, then embark on a ten-day field trip to Death Valley National Park, March 13-22, 2014. A participation fee is required. Students will be responsible for researching particular topics and presenting a written and oral final post-trip report.
Prerequisites: two geology courses and permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and ten-day field trip (Thursday March 13-Saturday, March 22, 2014); enrollment limited; 4 cr

German Studies

GRMST-100-01 - German Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Hollywood Meets Germany: From Marlene Dietrich and Billy Wilder to Sandra Bullock and George Clooney
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 101f(01))
We will explore the dynamic story shared by German and U.S. cinema. In the 1920s, Hollywood lured German directors; in the 1930s, Hitler ensured that German-speaking creative talent left for Hollywood film. Weimar Cinema brought to the movies expressionism; animation; monsters like Nosferatu, and the film noir; science-fiction films like Metropolis, which influenced Blade Runner; movies promoting liberalized views of gender and sexuality; and social satires like Blue Angel echoed in Cabaret. Since the 1970s, German films have won Oscars, and currently George Clooney, Michael Douglas, Christoph Waltz, and John Woo are filming in Babelsberg-Berlin, the world's oldest surviving studio site.

(Fall) The Diversity of German Culture: Close-Ups and Long-Shots 1800 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course highlights diversity as characteristic of German culture and society in the present and the past, contrary to the popular image of German cultural homogeneity. Hitler's nationalistic völkisch myth propagated this historical fiction that had already begun with the 1871 political "unification from above." We investigate the many forms of diversity in the German-speaking area: political, social, economic, ethnic, gender identifications, sexual orientations, abilities. Close readings of films, printed texts, and a variety of other media help us discover the changing forms of Vielfalt. Introduction to transcultural writing and speaking, also in preparation for abroad experiences.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 3 semesters of college German, or permission of instructor

Notes: students in 221 are normally expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit course, Sprechen, Schreiben, Lesen I or II (German Studies 215f or 216s)

(Spring) Topics in German Studies in Transnational Contexts: Tickling Germany's Funny Bone: Laughter in German Film and Television

- *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

An article in the August 2012 LE MONDE indicates that Germans are indeed equipped with a Funny Bone. We will investigate that Bone to learn if everyone is truly both comic target and stand-up Comedian: Ossi, Wessi, East Fresian native and Turkish immigrant. Le Monde notes the German passion for political cabaret, "No other dictatorship in the world has ever paid actors to mock the regime." Both Film and TV support strong comedy traditions, from slapstick and parodies of Westerns to romantic relationships. Jewish German comedy has created its own film genre, within a trans/national cinema culture. Recent films poke fun at male/female gender roles and smile at (three legal) gender identities.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 4 semesters of college German; or extended exchange study in a German-speaking country; or per permission of instructor

Notes: 200-level students will meet in a separate group. I will contact you right after pre-registration. Our courses as of 221 practice culturally appropriate professional styles of oral and written presentations. We encourage and support students with work in multiple academic areas.

(Spring) Topics in German Studies in Transnational Contexts: Germans Outside Germany: German-Language Cultures in Europe

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political and social developments in German-speaking cultures by investigating a significant topic and its interconnections to larger transnational contexts. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic and other units.

This course offers an intro to the history and literature of Austria, Switzerland, and German-language cultures in Eastern Europe. We will examine the role of the Habsburg Empire, WWII, the Holocaust, neutrality, immigration, and communist dictatorship played in the formation of national, cultural, and personal cultural identity. Authors discussed include three Noble Prize Winners in Literature: Elias Canetti, Elfriede Jelinek and Herta Müller as well as internationally acclaimed writers such as: Frank Kafka, Robert Musil, Paul Celan, Ingeborg Bachmann, Ruth Klüger, Rose Ausländer, Catalin Dorian Florescu, Richard Wagner, Zsuzsanna Gahse, Ilija Trojanow. Taught in German.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 4 semesters of college German; or extended exchange study in a German-speaking country; or per permission of instructor

Notes: This course may also be taken at the 300 level.

(Fall) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Introduction to Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Critical Social Thought 250)
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.

An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century with emphasis on their relevance for contemporary issues. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, W.E.B. Du Bois and Franz Kafka focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life. Case studies of contemporary issues with attention to the impact of 19th century thinkers on critical theory in the 20th and 21st centuries also round out the course.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: Students with one or more years of college-level German may opt for German 232, a tutorial in close reading and translation of the German texts related to the material in 231. Students with no previous study of German are encouraged to take German 101 or 103 to complement this course.

(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Trans*gender and Queer German Cinema: From Third Sex (1919) to Trans-Papa (2012)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 270b(01) Gender Studies 204s (06))
Preamble (for topics courses): An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader’s responses to them.

Classic German cinema, 1919-1933, anticipated many present-day gender debates. In educational films, tragedies, travesties, and comedies, many of which were re-made later (Girls in Uniform; Victor Victoria), Weimar Cinema questioned binary definitions of gender, and represented gay and lesbian sexual orientations as standard forms of human sexuality. We will study the link from Weimar to the present through films like Rosa von Praunheim’s It Is Not the Homosexual Who Is Perverse, But the Society in Which He Lives and The Einstein of Sex, his biography of Magnus Hirschfeld, gay scientist and founder of the Institute of Sexual Science; and 2011-12 films by young women directors, Bernardi’s Romeos, Mettke’s Transpapa.

Notes: If time conflict with the screening session, please contact the instructor for alt arrangements. Maj/min in German Studies and students interested in German credit should contact the instructor for enrollment in 2cr. in ind. studies in speaking, reading/viewing, and writing in German, i.e. GRMST-295

(Fall) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Transforming Visions: Homage to German Women Filmmakers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 220f-03)

Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on the discussion and analysis of films by German women directors from Lotte Reiniger, pioneer of animation films, and Leni Riefenstahl, controversial director and mythmaker of the Third Reich, to such trailblazing women directors of the New German Cinema as Margarethe von Trotta, Jutta Brückner, and Helma Sanders-Brahms. Moreover, we will attempt to determine whether more recent women directors like Doris Dörrie or Caroline Link, including those of migration background like Yasemin Samdereli, developed special (trans)gendered and transnational gazes that led them to focus so frequently on variations of (tragi)comedy in film.

Notes: Taught in English. Students with previous knowledge of German are encouraged to enroll in German Studies 223 instead. 2 meetings (75 minutes) and 1 screening (2 hours)
Instructors: G. Wittig Davis

(Fall) Topics in German and European Culture in a Global Context: Taboo-Breakers: Censors and the Filming of Brecht, Kafka, Hesse, the Manns
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 370f(02))
This course studies selected filmmakers from Weimar to the present who have filmed literary texts and evoked the wrath of the censors: Sternberg's Blue Angel, H. Mann's Professor Unrat with Dietrich as the New Woman; Dudow/Brecht's Proletarian film, Kahle Wampe, censored for including an abortion; Szabó's 1971 film of Klaus Mann's 1936 novel Mephisto, banned to protect actor Gustav Gründgens from a questionable Third Reich past. Also, works by Kleist, Storm, Fontane, Hesse, Kafka, and Thomas Mann inspired filmmakers like Fassbinder, Huntgeburth, and Haneke, not only because they broke existing taboos but also by foregrounding current issues such as globalization, alienation, terrorism, and homophobia.
Prerequisites: open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Notes: Film studies students interested in studying the material in English should contact the instructor for permission to enroll in 395 independent studies.

(Spring) Senior Capstone Seminar: Topographies of Berlin: Case Studies in the Meaning of Space, Places, and Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry in theory and practice. 1) All students read texts exploring such questions as: What does German Studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? Why learn German vis a vis "global English"? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization"? 2) Students pursue independent research connecting German studies and another major academic field of interest, respond critically to each others' work, and lead discussions.
Post-unification Berlin provides a testing ground for seeing how space shapes identity. Historic sites within the built environment of contemporary Berlin, whether markers of historical upheaval and reconciliation, or of the transformation of the periphery into productive sites of commerce and cultural exchange, serve as a point of departure to explore the emergence of multidimensional identities in today’s Europe. We explore the history, design, function, construction, and, in some cases, destruction, of major historical sites in Berlin, such as the Berlin Wall, the Reichstag, the Museum Island, the Holocaust Memorial, and others through case studies, archival research, and visual media.

GRMST-331-01 - German Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies in a Global Context: Germans outside Germany: German-Language Cultures in Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore theoretically and practically the nature of our field of inquiry. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization"? Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest. This course offers an introduction to the history and literature of German-language cultures in Austria, Switzerland, and Eastern Europe. The focus is on the role that topographical locations and socio-historical circumstances of German-language writers outside Germany, but inside geopolitical constructs like: World War II, the Holocaust, neutrality, immigration, and communist dictatorships play for an understanding of national, cultural, and personal identity formation. Authors discussed include two Nobel Prize Winners in Literature, Elfriede Jelinek and Herta Müller, and Max Frisch, Urs Widmer, Ilse Aichinger, Franz Kafka, Doron Rabinovich, Ingeborg Bachmann, Peter Handke, Richard Wagner.
Prerequisites: No knowledge of German required
Instructors: A. Holden
Expected enrollment: 25

GRMST-332-01 - German Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in German and European Studies within a Global Context: Germans outside Germany: German-Language Cultures in Europe - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on developing argumentation and reading skills in German, and researching, revising and editing seminar papers written in German for German studies seminars taught in English.
Readings and discussion in German using materials related to those in GRMST 331.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German, normally equivalent to 3 semesters of college German; or permission of instructor.
Notes: To satisfy the Foreign Language Requirement (or Humanities I-A requirement), students must simultaneously complete GRMST 331 (4 cr.) taught in English and GRMST 332 (2 cr.) taught in German. To avoid unnecessary duplication and ensure cross-cultural discussion, writing and reading requirements of GRMST 331 will be changed, and adjusted to GRMST 332 writing and reading requirements in German.

History

(Fall) Foundation: The Civil Rights Movement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Africana Studies 100)
We will examine the crusade for desegregation both within and beyond the South. Some attention will be given to the movement's Reconstruction precedents, but we will concentrate on the post-1954 period. Readings will cover how segregation was instituted; different phases of the movement; leaders, organization, and followers; the role of women and children; and post-movement history.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Morgan
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Foundation: How Wars End - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
What social processes and institutions are necessary to bring an end to war? Do the efforts of citizens make a difference? What is the role of beliefs regarding identity? What about access to resources? What is the role of visible forms of restorative or retributive justice? This first year seminar focuses primarily on small, regional conflicts in Africa to explore the social processes and institutions which facilitate the resolution of conflict. We will begin in the late 19th century, but concentrate on more recent events. Course assignments are designed to develop skills in academic writing, historical research, and collaborative learning.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: H. Hanson
Expected enrollment: 15

HIST-101-02 - History - 2013-2014
(Fall) Foundation: On Fraud, Forgery, Bunk, and Bad History
This course examines why we are susceptible to bad history, how history is used and abused, how forgeries and imaginative recreations of the past like The Da Vinci Code become accepted as truthful even after they have been debunked, why forgery is so pervasive, and how to discern between "the good, the bad, and the ugly" in the writing of history. The course examines a variety of media (historical works, novels, newspapers, videos, artworks, movies, etc.).

HIST-101-03 - History - 2013-2014

(Fall) Foundation: Women, Politics, and Activism in U.S. History

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 117)

How have women both used and rejected the power of the United States government to pursue their visions of a just world? This seminar examines the history of women's activism and political leadership in the United States and other places under U.S. rule. African American freedwomen, white woman suffragists, Italian immigrant anarchist-feminists, Puerto Rican labor activists, builders of an international women's movement, Civil Rights leaders, advocates of gay marriage, and housewives who organized for change on the right as well as on the left are among the women whose movements and political initiatives we will study.

HIST-115-01 - History - 2013-2014

(Spring) The Medieval World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course explores the cultural, intellectual, religious, and material contours of the period commonly described as "medieval", extending roughly from the reorganization of the Roman state in the fifth century to the fourteenth century CE. While historians often emphasize the divisions and dislocations wrought by religious, linguistic, and cultural difference, there also were important continuities and similarities between the societies around, and on either side of, the Mediterranean Sea. These complex relationships will serve as the basis of our discussions and readings, focusing on both primary documents in translation as well as important historiographic perspectives on the period.

(Fall) Ancient Greece - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Classics 127)

This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.

HIST-128-01 - History - 2013-2014

(Fall) Ancient Rome

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Classics 128)
A survey of the political, social, and cultural history of Rome from the Republic to the Empire, down to the early fourth century with the rise of Constantine. We shall strive to recreate the entire experience of the peoples of the Rome and those that came in contact with it as it rose to become the dominant power in the Mediterranean: their history, war, trade and technology, religion, republican government and imperial administration, slavery, economics and the Roman family. Special emphasis will be given to the growth of Rome and its empire. Sources include Polybius, Sallust, Livy, Suetonius, Tacitus, Seneca, Plutarch, and others.

HIST-137-01 - History - 2013-2014
(Fall) Modern East Asia, 1600-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
A comparative history of China, Japan, and Korea from the early seventeenth century to the present, with strong focus on regional interaction. After an introduction to early modern histories and cultures, we will examine the struggles of these countries to preserve or regain their independence and establish their national identities in a rapidly changing, often violent modern world order. While each of these countries has its own distinctive identity, their overlapping histories (and dilemmas) give the region a coherent shape. We will also look at how individuals respond to and are shaped by larger historical movements.

HIST-155-01 - History - 2013-2014
(Spring) History of Modern Britain, 1688 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Britain has long been considered an exemplary modern nation, credited, for example, with the world's first industrial economy, modern institutions of representative politics, a vibrant public sphere, a powerful war and welfare state, and one of the largest empires in world history. Using a combination of primary and secondary source readings, classroom lectures and discussions, and various written assessments, this course will ask how modern imperial Britain was made and how this history relates to the broader currents of world history.

HIST-161-01 - History - 2013-2014
(Fall) British Empire and Commonwealth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the expansion, consolidation, and eventual disintegration of the modern British Empire in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. We will examine this history with an eye to understanding the causes of empire, and its effects. Themes include formal and informal imperialism, the emergence of anti-colonial nationalism, the roles of gender and culture, and the legacies of British colonialism. We will discuss British attitudes and policies toward empire, and toward particular colonies, what role empire played in the growth of the British economy, in short, how colonial ideologies and practices were shaped and in turn affected vast regions of the globe.

(Spring) The Writing of History: Strategies, Dark Secrets, and Dangers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is about writing history, commonly called historiography. It examines some of the most successful works of historical writing from the ancient world to the present day. It investigates strategies historians use in interpreting the past, secrets of their trade, and the awful price not a few have paid for challenging orthodox versions of the past. Students will also analyze works of contemporary authors and apply their own hand to the historian's craft.

(Fall) African Cities: Development Dreams and Nightmares in the Twentieth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
African cities demonstrate the failure of models of development with the aim and ideal of industrialization. This course examines the empty promises of modernity through the lens of African urban history using fiction, film, and city archives. Beginning with Timbuctu and Cairo, the course explores the emergence and decline of trade entrepots, the rise of colonial cities, and the dilemmas of postcolonial economies and politics. Dar es Salaam, Nairobi, Kampala, Kinshasa, Harare, Johannesburg, Lagos, Accra, and Dakar are among the cities studied. Designed for those seeking only an introduction to development as well as those with further ambitions, it assumes no previous knowledge of Africa.
Instructors: H. Hanson

(Fall) History of Global Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Why are some nations so much richer and more powerful than others? This course demonstrates that global inequality is not natural; it has a history. Exploring patterns of exchange that developed among regions of the world over the past 600 years, we will ask about the role of power in the establishment of practices of production and exchange. We will explore how cross-regional productive systems benefited some participants at the expense of others. Having traced the consequences of unequal exchange over several centuries, we will ask how global trade and production would have to change for all participants to benefit equally. The course includes a community-based learning component.

HIST-221-01 - History - 2013-2014
(Fall) The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(European Studies 221)
This course focuses on the Italian peninsula and urban life in Florence, Naples, Rome, Milan, and Venice from the fourteenth through the early seventeenth centuries; it follows the little people (popolo minuto), artisans, and elites in their challenges to government, law, church, and society. It looks broadly at the economic, political, social, and cultural factors that gave rise to disturbing questions about traditional conceptions of temporal and cosmic order, about men and women's relationships to one another and the world about them, about wealth, guilt, the shortcomings of human nature, and the potential of the human spirit.

HIST-231-01 - History - 2013-2014
(Fall) Tokugawa Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course narrates Japan's transformation from a chaotic set of warring states (mid-sixteenth century) into a highly urbanized, literate, cultured but nonetheless feudal state—the Tokugawa enfeoffed over 200 feudal lords (daimyō). From this un-modern foundation, nineteenth-century samurai and their allies created a "Japan" capable of leaping into the modern world after 1868. Reading secondary and primary sources, students will deepen their understanding of what scholars call "early modern Japan," looking at socioeconomic processes and their interaction with politics. We will consider gender, literacy, local and central power, agricultural and artisanal production, and foreign relations.

(Fall) Special Topics in Medieval History: Medieval and Early Modern England
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An exploration, through close reading of primary sources and historiography, of English history from the late Roman period to the eve of the English Revolution, focusing upon the mutually formative relationship between England and its neighbors, both within and outside the British Isles, the development and formative role within English society of Christianity, both as an institution and as a body of beliefs and behaviors, and the shifting institutions, actors, and practices that made up English political life.
Instructors: S. Gilsdorf
Expected enrollment: 35

(Spring) Special Topics in Medieval History: Sex, Love, and Marriage in Medieval and Early Modern Europe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course explores the relationships of passion, obligation, and love that bound men and women over the course of nearly two millennia, from Rome in the first century B.C.E. to sixteenth-century France. In particular, we focus on the formal ways in which those relationships were organized under the rubric of "marriage", on the social roles created by that institution, on the relationship (or lack thereof) between marriage, love, and sexual passion, and the role of homosocial and homosexual desire within that history.

(Fall) Special Topics in Medieval History: Nomads, Merchants, and Monks: Medieval Central Asia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

Central Asia stood at the center of global processes of cultural, economic, and political change in Antiquity and the Middle Ages. Its nomads repeatedly conquered the states of the Middle East, Europe, and China, its merchants crisscrossed Asia bearing objects and ideas, and its cities were major centers of artistic, intellectual, and religious innovation. This course will study the Middle Ages from a Central Asian perspective, with a focus on the nomadic states of the Huns, Turks, and Mongols, trade, exchange, and travel across Eurasia, and the diffusion of Buddhism, Manichaean, Christianity, and Islam.

(Spring) The Atlantic World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

Early Americans inhabited an interconnected world through which people, beliefs, and objects circulated. This course explores the "Atlantic World" as both a place and a concept: an ocean surrounded by diverse communities and empires, and an imagined space of shared or competing affiliations. Moving from the fifteenth to the nineteenth century, it examines ecological, cultural, political, economic, intellectual, and religious exchanges among Native Americans, Europeans, and Africans. It will introduce both conceptual dimensions of this Atlantic paradigm and case studies that investigate its human subtleties, with the goal of examining early American history through a transnational lens.

(Fall) Native American History through 1865
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course surveys Native American history from ancient times through the U.S. Civil War, tracing the ways that tribal communities have shaped North America. Beginning with the diverse indigenous societies that inhabited the Americas millennia before Columbus's arrival, it discusses the cultural complexity of Native peoples, nations, and worldviews rooted in particular ecosystems and homelands. It moves through the early modern era of European scientific exploration and "discovery" of a New World, and the pivotal violences of the "Indian Wars" of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and early nineteenth centuries.

(Critical Social Thought 248)

Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as "revolutionary"? How are scientific developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?
The Holy Office of the Inquisition of the Roman Catholic Church proved an effective instrument for controlling religious and political orthodoxy from the Middle Ages through the early modern era. Its range of activity spanned investigations into doctrinal purity, groups of dissenters, Jews and Muslims who converted to the Christian faith, scientific discoveries, witchcraft, cunning folk, the black arts, and popular dissent. This course examines this institution and the social, political, mental, and imaginary world it monitored to safeguard "faith and morals" in this life and access to salvation in the next.

"Our age is pre-eminently the age of great cities," wrote Robert Vaughan in 1843. Many Europeans questioned whether the greatness of cities was such a good thing, but most agreed that the history of nineteenth-century Europe could not be written without reference to them. We will examine that history from the perspective of Europe's largest cities between the mid-eighteenth and twentieth centuries. Taking greatness in its broadest sense, our readings will treat both the feats of urban transformation and the murkier histories of streets, sewers, sex, and slums. We will learn of the unruliness of cities and of their being ruled through government, social reformers, planners, and engineers.

Is the United States an "empire"? Today, U.S. political, military, and economic involvement in many parts of the world, such as the Middle East, makes this an urgent and important question. This course addresses the issue of American imperial power by examining the history of U.S. colonization of the Philippines, during the first half of the twentieth century, and by comparing it with that of two other imperial powers—Spain and Japan. Themes to be discussed include imperialism, colonialism, religion, ethnicity, gender, orientalism, nationalism, postcolonialism, neocolonialism, crony capitalism, globalization, and militarism. Requirements include two exams and a final paper.

Instructors: R. Chu

Expected enrollment: 20

This course explores the complex, often comic, and ultimately tragic history of Bohemia, a territory located today in the Czech Republic, but previously a part of the Habsburg Monarchy, then of Czechoslovakia, and then of Hitler's Third Reich. Students will complement historical studies with autobiographical material and contemporary fiction, beginning with the Revolution of 1848, progressing through the achievements and worrisome trends of Emperor Francis Joseph's 68-year reign, and concluding with the world wars. Emphasis on the interplay among Czechs, Germans, Jews, and other pivotal players: the House of Habsburg and its supporters, and the political elites of neighboring countries.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 244)
The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 marked the coming of totalitarianism to Russia. Led first by Lenin and then by Stalin, the country went through the most brutal civil war, purges, World War II, and the first stages of cold war. This period also saw immense social change and sweeping economic transformation. What were the causes of totalitarianism in Russia? How did the regime function? What were the major landmarks of Russian history in the period 1917-1953?

(Spring) The Inheritance of Iran: The Iranian World from Antiquity to the Middle Ages - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines the equally profound continuities and discontinuities in the history of Iran from the Achaemenids to the Mongols. We will trace the rise of the ancient Iranian empires and their promotion of Zoroastrianism before turning to the Arab, Turkish, and Mongol conquests and the Islamization of Iranian society. In addition to exploring patterns of religious, cultural and social change in Iranian history, we will discuss the extent to which the inheritance of antiquity in Iran, Central Asia, and beyond constituted a discrete unity—an Iranian world—within the medieval Middle East.
Sources will include classics of Persian and Arabic literature, not least the Book of Kings.

(Spring) Blacks in the North, Revolution to Reconstruction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Slavery existed throughout the U.S. at the time of the American Revolution; afterwards, gradual emancipation plans freed the children of the formerly enslaved in the northern states. Runaways from the South increased their numbers. These nineteenth-century African Americans built the first edifices of freedom, chiefly through the institutions of family and religion, and furnished both leaders and foot soldiers for the abolitionist movement. They acted in the hope that their efforts would end slavery and bring full citizenship for black people. We will examine their unique contributions to the history of freedom, and the many obstacles they faced as they mobilized for emancipation.

We live in an age of energy crises, in which the future of energy is questioned in countless headlines and Twitter feeds. Often our energy agony accompanies other assumptions about energy's past, in particular the idea that social change invariably follows the discovery of new energy technologies. From food to fuel cells, this colloquium charts a more complicated and interesting history, a history in which people have continually shaped and made meaningful the energies that fuel the modern world. It will be of particular interest to students in history and environmental studies and to those interested in the social study of science and technology.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course examines the Middle East within the context of the First World War. This relatively understudied yet historically pivotal moment cemented new imaginings of both nation and state, with consequences for population movements, changing political compasses, personal identities, and new social, cultural, economic, and religious formulations. Topics include democratic and social movements; the impact of war, famine, and genocide; the nuances of anti-colonialism; the rise of Arab nationalism, Zionism, and other nationalisms; Islamic movements; and the seeds of labor, communist, and women's movements. We will read relevant historiography and also closely investigate relevant primary sources.

(Fall) International Human Rights

This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.

This course provides a historical, theoretical, and empirical foundation to comprehend and question complex dynamics of political change and democratization in the Middle East. In Spring 2011, the region entered an irreversible process of political change and democratization despite strong authoritarian backlash. We will explore: What are the underlying socio-economic causes that led to the eruption of the revolution? What are the Islamic movements and what is their role in political change in the region? What explains the electoral success of Islamic-leaning parties in almost all free and fair elections in this region? Why was the Arab Spring largely contained in authoritarian republics?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why do we moralize about war? When is war justified, if ever? What restraints should soldiers accept? This course examines these issues within the context of Western and Islamic thought. Study of the origins and evolution of both traditions is combined with consideration of important topics of current concern, such as intervention, weapons of mass destruction, and women and war.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics including 116 or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Hashmi
Expected enrollment: 20

IR-334-01 - International Relations - 2013-2014
(Spring) Globalization and the Muslim World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course challenges students to explore and understand the Muslim world in a new era characterized by globalization, and to examine its various effects on the Islamic world. Though politics of the Muslim world has been largely studied with exclusive reference to states, the course encourages students to look beyond this statist paradigm to salient non-state actors. It provides a conceptual and theoretical framework helpful in examining various cases and issues pertaining to the process of globalization and the Muslim world, such as: transnational Islamic movements and networks, Muslims in global business or living as minorities, Islamic legal and moral doctrines, gender and human rights.
Prerequisites: Politics 116
Instructors: H. Kosebalaban
Expected enrollment: 18

IR-337-01 - International Relations - 2013-2014
(Spring) International Human Rights Advocacy in Theory and Practice
This course examines how and why international human rights norms, laws, and institutions have emerged and how they are influencing global politics. We will examine closely the practices and influences of human rights advocacy organizations and the major international human rights political and judicial institutions. Students will be introduced to legal and political theories, advocacy strategies, and media technologies as well as a broad range of analytical approaches to evaluating advocacy campaigns. This class is linked (we share several class sessions and a final project) with Spanish 340: The Other in the Media: New Media and Otherness in the Americas.

Prerequisites: International Relations 237
Instructors: J. Western

(Fall) A Different Language Is a Different Vision of Life: Contemporary Italy through Cinema - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
Film director Federico Fellini said that a "different language is a different vision of life." How has the Italian "vision of life" changed from Mussolini's dictatorship to Berlusconi's government? From the birth of the Republic in 1946 to the debate ignited by Roberto Saviano's bestseller Gomorrah, this course traces transformations in modern Italian society. Through historical and literary readings, films, and the media, this course explores the difficult path towards modernity Italy has traveled in the last five decades. We will explore contemporary popular culture and films that reflect these transformations and analyze family, religion, gender, sexuality, and class conflict.

ITAL-316-01 - Italian - 2013-2014
(Spring) Apocalyptic Thinking: Italy on the Verge of Disaster
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Italy is a land of active volcanoes, seismic zones, and miles of vulnerable coastline. Its geographical position at the crossroad of the Mediterranean has exposed it to military and microbial invasions. This class investigates the literary, sociological, and historical representations of the natural and social disasters that have affected Italy since 1350. We examine how novels, poems, essays, short videos, and movies grapple with disaster. Particular attention will be given to the representation of disaster as apocalypse, expression of adverse fate (disàstrum from Latin "bad star"), and historical catastrophes such as wars.
Prerequisites: Italian 209 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Moretti
Expected enrollment: 20

ITAL-361-01 - Italian - 2013-2014
(Fall) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: Don Juan, Valmont, Casanova: Iconic Latin Lovers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Romance Languages 375, French 321)

Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.

If all is fair in love and war, are there rules for the game of power and seduction? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power in Spain, France, and Italy, will we witness a change for women? Students will explore such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, José Zorrilla, Molière, Beaumarchais, Goldoni; Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova's Memoirs. Students will be encouraged to explore works by major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods, and view relevant contemporary films such as The King is Dancing, and Goya's Ghosts. The final term project is a digital narration in the target language of the student.

Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level

Notes: Note: Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit. This is a multimedia course where students achieve digital literacy. Technical support is provided in Audacity, Photoshop, iMovie, and iDVD, through scheduled workshops in LRC.

(Spring) Introduction to the Hebrew Bible
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 203-01)
This course provides a critical introduction to the writings contained in the Hebrew Bible (also known as the Old Testament). It investigates the social and historical context of the ancient Israelites, examines a range of ancient Near Eastern literature, and introduces the principal methods of biblical studies. Participants will read much of the Hebrew Bible as well as select non-Israelite sources. Examples of recent biblical scholarship will provide additional information for better understanding these writings and will present different methods for approaching and interpreting ancient texts.

JWST-212-01 - Jewish Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Judaism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

Instructors: L. Fine
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Engendering Judaism: Women and Jewish Tradition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Religion 222-01, Gender Studies 210-01)
This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies; opportunities to become rabbis; new approaches to God, theology, and social issues; the Jewish lesbian movement; women's writing and documentary filmmaking.
Instructors: L. Fine
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Contemporary Jewish Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 232-01)
This course will explore issues of contemporary ethics from the point of view of Jewish religious thought and tradition. Topics will include medical and genetic ethics, death and dying, family and sexual ethics, ethics of war, poverty, and the environment. The course will explore these issues in the context of theoretical approaches to questions of religion and ethics.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in religion or Jewish studies, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Fine

JWST-235-01 - Jewish Studies - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introduction to Jewish Mysticism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 235f)
Mysticism refers to a type of religious life in which individuals seek intimate and personal, direct and intense experience of the Divine. There exists a rich and fascinating Jewish mystical tradition with hundreds of books of diverse kinds. This course examines the Kabbalah of thirteenth-century Spain, focusing upon the seminal work of this period, the Zohar; the synthesis of mysticism and messianism that occurred in the city of Safed (in the Land of Israel) in the sixteenth century; and the popular pietistic movement of Eastern Europe from the eighteenth century forward, Hasidism; and various expressions of mystical spirituality in our own time.

(Spring) Encounters Between Judaism and Other Religious Traditions: Christianity, Islam, and Buddhism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 249)
This course will explore selected examples of the encounter between Judaism and other world religious traditions. Living alongside other religious traditions over millennia, how have Jewish religious thought and practice creatively appropriated, adapted, as well as resisted aspects of "foreign" religions. Examples we will consider include encounters with medieval Islam in the realms of Arabic poetry and Sufi mysticism, Christianity in connection with religious ritual, mystical notions of the divine feminine, and in our own time, the influence of Buddhism on American Judaism.

(Fall) What Didn’t Make It in the Bible
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 256)
Hundreds of ancient religious texts did not make it into the Hebrew Scripture (aka the Old Testament). This course examines some of these excluded writings. In particular, we will focus on works found among the Apocrypha, the Pseudepigrapha, and the Dead Sea Scrolls. We will read an ancient Harlequin romance, tour heaven and hell, hear of the adventures of fallen angels who sired giants (and taught humans about cosmetics), and learn how the world will end. In critically examining such texts, we will better appreciate the diversity of Judaism, better understand the historical context of early Christianity, and explore the politics behind what did and did not make it into the bible.

(Spring) Cicero and the Enemies of the Roman Republic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
The career of the Roman orator and statesman Marcus Tullius Cicero spanned the last generation of the Roman Republic, a period of political instability and civil war. As the leading orator of his day, Cicero often used his rhetorical skills to thwart those who he believed were bent on the destruction of the Roman Republic. In this course, we will examine the role of public oratory in the political process in this period with a close reading of Cicero's speeches and letters concerning one of his political enemies (Catiline, Clodius, or Mark Antony).

Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) The Slender Muse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the highly romantic poetry that launched a revolution in Latin literature, including such works as Catullus's epyllion on Peleus and Thetis and Vergil's Eclogues and Georgics, with attention to the new understanding of poetry shown in these poems and to their commentary on the social turmoil of the last phase of the Republic.
Prerequisites: Latin 222 or above

(Fall) Ovid: Metamorphoses - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A study of Ovid's ambitious epic celebrating change and transformative forces, with attention to the challenges it poses to traditional Roman values and to conventional Roman notions of the work appropriate to a poet. In particular, consideration will be given to the way Ovid's poem subversively responds to Vergil's work.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: B. Arnold

Latin-313-01 - Latin - 2013-2014
(Fall) Myth, Memory, and History: Writing the Past in the Roman Republic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Livy and Sallust, the best known historians of the Roman Republic, viewed history writing as a moral enterprise, presenting events from the past as exemplary tales to inform and enlighten the lives of their readers. Their narratives thus are highly rhetorical, combining myth, memory, and history to reconstruct the past. Close reading of selections from Livy's Ab Urbe Condita and/or Sallust's monographs--the Bellum Catilinae and Bellum Jugurthinum--will lead to discussions about how Romans viewed their past and how they wrote about it.
Prerequisites: one 200- or 300-level Latin course
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 18

Latin-319-01 - Latin - 2013-2014
(Spring) Power, Politics, and Scandal: Roman Imperial Biography and Historiography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Tacitus and Suetonius are the two principal authorities for understanding the impact of the Roman emperor's position and authority on the transformation of the political culture of the early empire from republic to monarchy. This course will focus on the content of Roman imperial historiography and biography—politics and the abuse of power, dynastic succession, scandal and court intrigue—as well as its form—source material, narrative structure and prose style—by reading closely selections from Tacitus' Annals of Imperial Rome and/or Histories and Suetonius' Lives of the Twelve Caesars.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Politics of Inequality: Social Movements in the U.S.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

First-year seminar (Critical Social Thought 100f(02))

The course explores comparative racial and ethnic politics in the U.S. during the twentieth century. We will analyze the creation and maintenance of structural inequalities through laws and policies targeted at persons of color in the areas of healthcare, transportation, immigration, labor, racial segregation, and education. Through readings, lectures and films, we will discuss critical histories of community struggle against social inequality, registering the central impact that race, class, gender, sexuality, and citizenship have had on efforts toward social justice.

(Fall) Topics in Latin American Studies: Introduction to Latina/o Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.

This course offers an introduction to the study of Latina/o communities in the United States. We will explore major concepts and debates in this growing field through the study of texts across disciplines including history, sociology, performance theory, personal narrative and ethnography. This interdisciplinary approach will provide us with rich frameworks to interrogate how Latinas/os negotiate complex identities across communities and specific geographic and political contexts.

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Introduction to Latina/o Studies: Structural Inequalities
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.

The course provides an overview of current and past social conditions of Latinas and Latinos within the U.S. We will address laws, policies and institutions that shape the complexity of Latinas/os' social location and serve as critical sites of resistance. The course addresses legal constructions of race and citizenship, nomenclature, border politics, public health, education, and labor. We will consider the critical intersections of class, gender and sexuality as well as inequality in relation to other persons of color. Students will develop a firm sense of the importance and breadth of the Latina/o political agenda and acquire skills to think across social issues.

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: Latina Theatre and Performance - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 234s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments.
This course offers transnational approaches to the theory and political practice of performance in the Americas with a focus on work by Latinas in the United States and women in Latin America. We will interrogate the ways in which race, sexuality, class, gender, indigenous and diasporic identities inform the methodological and aesthetic mandates of an array of artists from across disciplines. Employing multiple modes of performance from theater, dance, performance art, ritual, visual art, and folkloric music, we will explore how these practices have functioned and continue to allow for politically subversive or resistant transformation.

(Spring) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 386f)
This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.

LATAM-387-01 - Latin American Studies - 2013-2014
(Fall) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: Latina/o Immigration
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333U, Sociology 316f(04))
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
The course provides an historical and topical overview of Latina/o migration to the United States. We will examine the economic, political, and social antecedents to Latin American migration, and the historical impact of the migration process in the U.S. Considering migration from Mexico, Central America, and the Caribbean, we will discuss the social construction of race, the gendered nature of migration, migrant labor struggles, Latin American-U.S. Latino relations, immigration policy, and border life and enforcement. Notions of citizenship, race, class, gender, and sexuality will be central to our understanding of the complexity at work in the migration process.

(Film Studies 370)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.

This seminar offers an interrogation of the ways in which Latinas and Latinos are represented in the cinema. We will explore early portrayals of Latinas and Latinos in film history and then explore contemporary cinema with a focus on race, class, gender and sexuality in these representations. Employing multiple aesthetic and disciplinary approaches, we will analyze commercial films alongside independent films with particular attention to the market-driven and political mandates of these projects. We will focus on films by both Latina/o filmmakers and non-Latina/o filmmakers, interrogating the multifarious points of entry of these artists.

(Spring) Agrarian America: Sugar, Cotton, Coffee, and Wheat
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 389)

Explores societies generated in the Americas by several widely distributed export crops. Multinational and cross-cultural comparisons holding constant the crop itself allows a focus on the possible variations by time and place in each commodity's technologies, labor systems, farm sizes, and social structure; their political and social dynamics; the problematic features of capitalism in agriculture, or if, how, and when do peasants become farmers and farming agribusinesses? Particular focus on family and household relations under so-called "peasant to farmer" agricultural transitions and environmental implications of single-crop and export agriculture.

(Fall) Explorations in Algebra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
We will cover the arithmetic of whole numbers and of prime numbers, in particular, examining some of the earliest questions in mathematics from a modern perspective, finding whole number solutions to equations with several variables, deciding whether or not such solutions exist and if so, determining whether the solution set is finite or infinite. Topics include the theory of “finite arithmetic,” converting questions about the infinite set of whole numbers to those involving just a small set of primes, using computers to examine problems numerically.
Prerequisites: a good grasp of arithmetic
Instructors: M. Peterson

MATH-114-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Using examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.

(Spring) Explorations in Geometry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The system of geometry devised by the ancient Greeks was immutable until the nineteenth century, when it was put in a broader framework better able to accommodate the varied interests of physical science and mathematics. In this course, we begin by a careful and close observation of what we can see and physically construct, reasoning informally about those observations. We will then explore a selection of geometry from the time of Euclid to the recent past, including curved surfaces and the hyperbolic plane.

(Spring) Chaos: What Is It and What are Its Implications for Everyday Life? - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
Are tornadoes and hurricanes random events or can they be predicted mathematically? Do epidemics spread in predictable patterns? Chaos theory was born at the intersection of randomness and predictability. In this course we will pursue an understanding of this theory and its implications for everyday life by reading novels and plays, academic and news articles, as well as by watching films, investigating fractals, and doing mathematics. How is it that this theory appeared so suddenly in the 1970s in such disparate fields as art, meteorology, biology and medicine, mathematics, and physics, and what is its continuing impact on the culture and philosophy of today’s world?

MATH-201-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Examining Features of Shape and Measuring Space in One, Two, and Three Dimensions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Education 202)
We will work with 2-D and 3-D shapes, develop mathematical vocabulary regarding features of shapes, and explore definitions and properties of geometric objects. The seminar includes a study of angle, similarity, congruence, and the relationship between 3-D objects and their 2-D representations. The measurement component will provide opportunities to examine different attributes of size, develop facility in composing and decomposing shapes, and apply these skills to make sense of formulas for area and volume. As we explore the conceptual issues of length, area, and volume and their complex interrelationships, we will also examine how children develop these ideas.

MATH-202-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Calculus II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Most students who have taken calculus in high school begin with Calculus II. In particular, if you have studied the derivative and its applications and have been introduced to the definite integral, you will be prepared for Calculus II. Please read the "Beginning the Study of Mathematics" section.
Topics include techniques of integration, applications of integration, differential equations, sequences, series, and Taylor series.
Instructors: J. Sidman

(Fall) Laboratory in Mathematical Experimentation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Offers mathematics as a laboratory science. After a short introduction to the computer, uses hand and computer computation to explore mathematical ideas. Directs laboratory projects toward discovery of properties and patterns in mathematical structures. The choice of projects varies from year to year and is drawn from algebra, analysis, discrete mathematics, geometry, and statistics.

MATH-301-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Real Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include the real number system, convergence of sequences and series, power series, uniform convergence, compactness and connectedness, continuity, abstract treatment of differential and integral calculus, metric spaces, and point-set topology.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and two chosen from Mathematics 211, 232 and 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Robinson

MATH-302-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Complex Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include differentiation and integration of functions of a complex variable, the Cauchy integral formula, residues, conformal mapping, and applications to physical science and number theory.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 301 or Intro to Math Methods (Physics 303/200/205), or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges
Instructors: G. Davidoff

MATH-311-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Abstract Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include algebraic structures: groups, rings (including some elementary number theory), fields, and vector spaces.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211, and one chosen from Mathematics 232 or 251, or permission of instructor
Instructors: H. Pollatsek

MATH-319-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Algebra: Algebraic geometry and computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Advances in computing since the 1980's have made computation with polynomials tractable in many situations that arise in applications. We will study Buchberger's algorithm, which is the foundational tool of computational algebra. We will also learn about the interplay between systems of polynomial equations and the geometry of their solution sets. Additional topics may include applications to integer programming, computer-aided design, robotics, and statistics.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 211; Mathematics 232 or 311 recommended
Instructors: J. Sidman

(Fall) Topics in Geometry and Topology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topological spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251 and 301, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit
Instructors: The department

MATH-333-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Differential Equations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to differential equations for students in the mathematical or other sciences. Topics include first-order equations, second-order linear equations, qualitative study of dynamical systems, and first- and second-order linear partial differential equations.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202 and 211, or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Peterson

MATH-334-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Mathematical Models - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include specific examples of mathematical models that have been formulated to deal with problems arising in various applications, together with an outline of the development of particular mathematical tools and techniques used in these models.
MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2013-2014
(Fall) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Network Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The analysis of network data is widespread across scientific disciplines. In order to better model and analyze the network graphs used to represent relational data including biological, social, technological, and infrastructure networks, mathematicians, statisticians, computer scientists, physicists, sociologists, and biologists require both theoretical results and sophisticated applied methods. In this course we will discuss graph theory, graph algorithms and their complexity and implementation, and the applications of network science to real-world data. Topics include the topology of graphs, fundamental graph algorithms, graph representations, and current problems in the field of network science, graph theory, and the statistical analysis of network data.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 232 and one of the following: Mathematics 211 or Computer Science 101, or instructor permission
Notes: No statistical background required
Instructors: W. Viles
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Eternal Rome: The Renaissance City in Mind, Myth, and Imagination
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 322)
This course investigates the many-layered levels of the city of Rome’s complex history from its origins to the twenty-first century, focusing on the period beginning in 1420 when the rebuilding of the devastated medieval city begins and gradually gives rise to Rome of the Renaissance and the Baroque. Special attention will be given to the social and political history of Rome, its catastrophes and triumphs, paupers, princes and popes, myths, legacies, and deep secrets.
Prerequisites: 2 courses (8 credits) in history, preferably one dealing with ancient or Renaissance Rome
Notes: meets history department pre-1750 requirement; this is a history department Research Seminar: a 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

(Spring) Music and Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.
Instructors: M. Gionfriddo

MUSIC-103-01 - Music - 2013-2014
(Fall) History of Jazz - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will follow the origins and evolution of jazz from the late nineteenth century to the present, with emphases on prominent stylistic trends and significant individuals. Along with some analysis of the musical language jazz employs, the music will be examined in its relation to the social contexts that helped produce and shape it. The ability to read music is not a requirement for this course.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Performance as Art and Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
This course will require students to integrate the body (fine motor skills, kinesthetic memory, and core musculature), the senses (hearing, sight, and touch), the emotions (for interpretive performance), and the intellect (physiology and psychology). All students will learn either violin or viola and will also learn about performance, and causes and cures for stage fright.

MUSIC-110-02 - Music - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Keyboard Instruments as Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
Students will explore issues common to all keyboard instruments, such as keyboard geography, tuning and temperament; investigate the instruments' constructions and playing mechanisms; and examine the interrelationship of technological advances in instrument construction and the nature of the music composed for each instrument. Throughout the course, students will listen to music composed for each specific instrument, as well as music written for other media realized on various keyboard instruments. After the introduction of a basic vocabulary for describing music, students will examine how the differences in performing medium affect their understanding of a piece of music. No prior musical knowledge required.

MUSIC-110-03 - Music - 2013-2014
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Awakened Ear: Adventures in Listening
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
The way in which we are educated today often woefully inadequately prepares us for life in an aural world. Yet, technological advances have created a world saturated with deliberately-created sound. Our ears are constantly awash -- in music, many other kinds of sounds, and even sounds to muffle other sounds. This course explores the materials of music. Through readings, hands on interaction with instruments, discussions and recordings, students will explore concepts of pitch, time, space, structure and timbre, thereby enriching their perception of the world of sound. The culminating project is a composition using any sound-generating medium.

Prerequisites: fy. No prior musical experience or training needed.
Instructors: T. Ng

MUSIC-115-01 - Music - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Composition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Introduces musical composition through the writing of original pieces, emphasizing twentieth-century techniques. Includes demonstrations of various musical instruments, readings of student compositions in class, and consideration of the "creative process."
Prerequisites: Music 100 or permission of instructor
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) The Hyperbolic World of Opera in 25 Episodes -- An Introduction to Western Classical Opera from the Renaissance to the Present Day - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course begins with the birth of opera at the end of the Renaissance Period, and ends with some of the most successful operas in the past decade. Our investigation includes operas in English, French, German, Italian and Russian. Alongside an introduction to the materials of opera, from vocal fachs, forms, and styles, to vocal virtuosity, the course situates opera as a cultural phenomenon by considering the unique set of historical, intellectual, social, political and economic conditions of each work of art. The course includes some opera projections; each one is preceded by an introduction of the period in which it was first performed and is followed by class discussion.
Instructors: T. Ng
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Adventures in Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Designed for students with or without prior musical experience, "Adventures in Music" explores the materials of music. Through reading, hands on interaction with instruments and their players, discussions and recordings, students will explore concepts of pitch, time, space, structure and timbre, thereby enriching their perception of the world of sound. The best way to access the indescribable in music is often to make music. With this in mind the class will embark in mini composition projects culminating in a final project that utilizes the knowledge acquired over the duration of the course.

MUSIC-222-01 - Orchestration - *Not offered this year/term
(Fall) Orchestration - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Orchestration introduces students to the technique of scoring for a variety of instrumental combinations. The course begins with the study of individual instruments which are commonly found in the symphony orchestra today: This includes understanding the technical peculiarities of each instrument, including its range, transpositions, acoustical properties and timbral qualities. We then investigate how some composers have utilized these resources in their music in combination, isolation, and juxtaposition. To achieve familiarity with these sonic resources, the course utilizes a mixture of lecture, demonstration, aural training, all of which culminate in orchestration exercises.
Prerequisites: Music 100

(Spring) African Folk Opera in Theory and Practice
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Theatre 215-02)
In this course, African folk opera will provide the framework for exploring salient features of African music. The course will begin by examining a wide range of performance elements, including ensemble practice, the role of dance, and musical storytelling. The second part will feature practical sessions culminating in a public performance of an African folk opera. Students will work with visiting African master drummers and choreographer. The practical sessions will afford students an opportunity to reflect on the theoretical issues examined earlier on in the semester, and gain practical knowledge of the African operatic tradition.

(Spring) Conducting I

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Conducting I introduces musicians to the fundamentals of conducting including common beat patterns, tempo, score study for conducting and rehearsal skills. In addition, students explore how these fundamentals have to be adapted to fit their own physiology and by extension how they individually express music in movement. Issues pertinent to conducting, such as styles of leadership, musical leadership, conducting in the different contexts, performance practice etc. The conducting class forms the ensemble for the class. Detailed study of each student's gesture is assisted by the review of taped conducting footage, reflective journals, rehearsal plans and ultimately a mini class performance.

Prerequisites: Music 231, ensemble experience

Instructors: T. Ng

Expected enrollment: 8

(Spring) Psychology of Music - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Every culture in the world has some form of music, but why did music evolve, and what function does it serve? In this course, we will explore the cognitive and neural processes that underlie music perception and production to ask the following questions: Does music have universal features that cross cultures? How does music convey emotion? What do infants know about music? Is music specifically human? And finally, what are the parallels between music and language? Through these questions, we hope to discover something about the origin of music and what makes it such an integral part of our daily lives.

(Fall) Topics in Music: American Composers' Search for Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to increase familiarity with and facility in the use of primary materials for musicological/ethnomusicological and/or theoretical research, as well as in the critical evaluation of published scholarship. Engagement with a shared topic at the outset of the semester provides the context from which each student fashions an independent project. Oral presentations are integral to the course, with a major paper as the final requirement.
This course examines the efforts by late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century composers to create a distinctly "American" art music of symphonic, chamber, piano, and vocal repertory. The class investigates the styles, compositional methods and public reception of works by MacDowell, Beach, Farwell, Ives, Harris, Gershwin, and Copland, among others, within the cultural and political contexts of their eras. Subtopics include the European domination of America's early concert music, the assimilation of vernacular and popular musical materials, and the growing prominence of women composers. Each student will select an independent project to be developed throughout the semester.

Neuroscience and Behavior

NEURO-100-01 - Neuroscience and Behavior - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to Neuroscience and Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This comprehensive survey course explores the brain and the biological basis of behavior. We will examine the anatomy of the nervous system and the unique properties of the cells that make up the brain. We will discuss the mechanisms by which individual brains cells communicate with each other, and how small networks of cells underlie more complex processes such as perception, learning, and behavior. In labs, students will perform experiments that expand upon and reinforce these ideas through hands-on exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission from Gary Gillis
Instructors: K. Colodner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB K Colodner | 02 LAB K Colodner
Expected enrollment: 24

(Fall) Conference Course: Neurotechnology: Thinking on the cutting edge of science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Biological Science 321(N))
Recently, the development of novel technologies for probing neurobiological questions has proceeded at a dizzying pace. This course focuses on three broad fields in neurotechnology: optical methods for examining neural activity and structures, innovations in electrophysiology, and mind-machine interfaces. Specific topics may include: optogenetics, 2-photon microscopy, "brainbow" imaging, methods for single ion channel recording, and neuroprosthetics. Presentation, discussion, and critique of research articles will form the core of the course. As a culminating experience, students will write mock grant proposals for experimentation based on techniques discussed in class.

NEURO-330-01 - Neuroscience and Behavior - 2013-2014
(Spring) Biology of Neurological Diseases
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Biology of Neurological Diseases will explore the molecular and cellular basis of neurological diseases. We will investigate the biological mechanisms underlying neurodegenerative diseases, such as Alzheimer's disease. We will focus on animal models used to investigate pathogenic mechanisms and the biology underlying therapeutic strategies. This class will rely heavily on primary research articles and in-class discussions.
Prerequisites: Biology 220 and Psychology/Neuro 250
Instructors: K. Colodner

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will discuss questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.

Instructors: D. Hagen

Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

(Fall) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: God, Morality, and Freedom

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)

This course will introduce students to philosophy and its methods by looking at what philosophers, past and present, have said about three important and interrelated topics: God, morality, and freedom. We will ask questions such as: Does God exist? Is it rational to believe in God? What should I do if I want to do the right thing? When is it ok to criticize other cultural practices? How much do I owe to others? Do we have free will? Can we ever be held responsible for anything? Our goal is to emerge from this course better thinkers, better writers, and better equipped to tackle difficult questions like these with rigor and care.

Prerequisites: fy

Instructors: E. Vavova

Expected enrollment: 16

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

(Spring) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: Discovering Philosophy through Children’s Literature

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

Remember reading Morris the Moose or The Giving Tree? You probably didn't think they were about the fallibility of human knowledge and the right way to comport yourself with the natural world, two important philosophical issues. In this seminar, we will explore the world of philosophy by means of children's books like these. In addition, we will investigate how professional philosophers address these issues in order to see how their analyses supplement those developed from children's books.

Prerequisites: fy

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

(Fall) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.

Instructors: The department

Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to ancient Greek philosophy, focusing mainly but not exclusively on the works and ideas of three Athenian philosophers who worked and taught in the period between the Persian Wars and the rule of Alexander the Great, more than 2,300 years ago: Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the self? What is truth, and how can it be known? What kind of life should we live? We will work to understand each philosopher's responses to these questions, but we will also learn to develop our own answers. We will take care to place these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.

Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.
Instructors: D. Hagen
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will focus on classic and contemporary work on central topics in ethics. The goal will be to see whether there is anything to be said in a principled way about what to do and how to live. The core of the course will be an examination of the central traditions in moral philosophy in the West, typified by Aristotle, Kant, and Mill. We will also examine vexing contemporary moral issues with an eye to whether moral theories can give us practical guidance. Finally, we will step back and ask whether any of the moral theorizing we have been engaging in is really capable of uncovering objective moral truths.
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Knowledge and Reality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?
Instructors: C. Rathkopf
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-209-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Theories of Probability and Causation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this course we will look at theories of causation, probability, and their interaction. We will look first at Hume on causation, and then move on to some very basic probability theory. We will briefly explore the standard statistical approaches and go on to Bayesian reasoning and confirmation theory. Finally, we'll examine recent developments in the Bayesian Net theory of causation. As a whole, the class is an investigation of recent mathematical and philosophical theories about how science works, what justifies the hypotheses we ought to believe, and how observations could justify hypotheses about unobserved entities and regions.
Prerequisites: One course in either Philosophy or Mathematics or permission of instructor.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.
Instructors: C. Rathkopf
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory "good"? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? In what ways does science in practice depart from scientific ideals? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.

Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Instructors: C. Rathkopf
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 226-01, Critical Social Thought 250f-01)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in Schleiermacher's Speeches. Finally, we focus on the idealistic and pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion.
Instructors: J. Grayson
Expected enrollment: 35

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Social and Political Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will cover three topics (liberty, equality, and the reconciliation of liberty and equality) along three dimensions of justice (interpersonal, civic, and distributive) and through the lens of three theories of justice (utilitarianism, libertarianism, and egalitarian liberalism).
Instructors: E. Vavova
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Philosophy and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines philosophical themes in literature and philosophical questions about literature. Can literature yield knowledge about the world? What is the meaning of a work of literature, and how can we know it? Are the author's intentions relevant to how a work is to be interpreted? Can works of literature be immoral? How is the identity of the reader relevant to the understanding of a literary work? What is the difference between philosophy and literature - can a work of literature also be a work of philosophy?
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Women and Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210(01)-01)
This course will focus on three topics to which feminist thinking has made important philosophical contributions: pornography, objectification, and consent. We will draw on a variety of philosophical resources, ranging from liberal and feminist political theory, to speech act theory. We'll be looking at work by Simone deBeauvoir, Ronald Dworkin, Sally Haslanger, Rae Langton, Catherine MacKinnon, Martha Nussbaum, and others. The goal will be to see how careful philosophical thought can help us with pressing issues of gender.
Instructors: E. Vavova

(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Nineteenth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the ways the nature, possibility, and extent of human freedom were conceptualized by German philosophers in the nineteenth century. Readings are drawn from the work of Hegel, Feuerbach, Marx, and Nietzsche. Specific topics include Hegel's metaphysics of spirit, Feuerbach's critique of religious and philosophical mystification, Marx's analysis of alienation, and Nietzsche's ideal of the "Over-Man."
Instructors: The department

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-260-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice. Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral and philosophical problems. Topics discussed include: What is the distinction between health and illness? How should limited health care resources be distributed? How are medical problems related to larger social problems (e.g., gender inequality)? What are the responsibilities of medical researchers toward their research subjects? What moral reasons do we have to be concerned about the growth of technology in medicine? Are the basic institutions of medicine and medical education just?
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-260-02 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Environmental Ethics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice.
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Should we control nature by applying scientific and technological expertise? Or should we strive for noninterference and preservation of the wild? How do we balance the pressing needs of people for food, energy, and other resources with the needs of other species or whole ecosystems?
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 50

PHIL-260-03 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Philosophy of Law - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice.
This course is an inquiry into questions concerning the nature of "justice," "law," and the relationship between the two from the point of view of various schools of legal thought like natural law theory, positivism, utilitarianism, legal realism, critical race studies and feminist theory. We will examine questions like "Is there a duty to obey, or sometimes disobey, the law?" and "What do we mean by 'equality' or 'rights,'" within the context of contemporary legal issues like affirmative action, abortion, and same-sex marriage. Readings drawn from Aristotle, Hobbes, Locke, Kant, Mill, Holmes, Llewellyn, Hart, Rawls, and others.

PHIL-260-04 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Applied Philosophy: Controversies in Public Health - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Biology 265)
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses ask questions about the ethical and/or conceptual problems pertaining to a practice, such as law, medicine, or caring for the natural environment. Such courses are suitable for philosophy majors as well as for students who are new to philosophy but who are interested in the relevant practice.
This course takes an interdisciplinary approach to the discussion of public health issues. The class will be co-led by a philosopher and a biologist, with additional guest experts offering a variety of disciplinary and professional perspectives on some of the most complex and vexing current public health issues. Topics may include: the hazards and benefits of vaccination programs; effective responses to and prevention of natural disasters; obesity, food policy, nutrition, and health; the controversy over hygiene and the rise of allergic and chronic diseases; or the impact of public policy and ethics on reproductive rights. Selected topics will be scrutinized through both a biological and a philosophical lens, with the intersections and divergence of those perspectives highlighted.

Prerequisites: most seats will be reserved for sophomores
Notes: Some attendance at college speaking events will be required.
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Philosophy of Mind
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Rathkopf
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Whorf, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Philosophy of the Arts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The purpose of this course is to explore philosophical problems concerning the arts and aesthetic experience. Some questions to be explored include: What is the difference between beauty and moral goodness? Can taste be objective? What does it mean for a work of music to be "sad"? Are the intentions of artists relevant to appreciation? What is the purpose of art criticism? How do pictures represent objects? Readings will be drawn from both historical and contemporary philosophical writings.
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-275-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Philosophy and Film Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 290s(02))
An exploration of philosophical and theoretical issues encountered in the study of film such as: Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? There will be weekly required film screenings.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in Philosophy or Film Studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (1.5 hours)
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 27

PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, L. Pasquerella
Expected enrollment: 16

PHIL-310-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Twentieth-Century Analytic Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to the history, themes, and methods of analytic philosophy, the dominant movement in twentieth-century English-speaking philosophy. Analytic philosophy uses logic and a careful analysis of language to solve philosophical problems. We will study most of the major figures of this movement, including Frege, Russell, Carnap, Quine, and Kripke. Topics addressed will include the logic of numerical identity, reference and existence, Quine's criticisms of logical positivism, and the meaning of necessity.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 20

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
How do words come to mean things? Frege introduced two aspects of meaning: reference, that is, whatever expressions pick out in the world, and sense, a publicly accessible means by which expressions pick out their references, which must be grasped by all speakers. This course is an extended examination of the concept of sense, the uses to which it has been put, and the criticisms that have been lodged against it. We'll look at Frege's work, the complaints made by Quine and Kripke, Davidson's theory of meaning, and Dummett's defense of sense.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-327-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Fall) Advanced Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Mathematics 327f)
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of Gödel's incompleteness results. It includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in philosophy or mathematics, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-328-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Non-Classical Logic - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course looks at the recent flowering of non-classical logics. The most prominent are modal logics concerning necessity and possibility, which have come to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. Conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have also become important.
These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy but also are interesting in their own right.
Prerequisites: One course in Logic, Mathematics, Computer Science or Philosophy 209
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-334-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014
(Spring) Topics in Ethics: Moral Epistemology - *Not offered this year/term
This course will focus on a handful of epistemic challenges to morality. We will consider questions such as: How is moral knowledge possible? Can we gain moral knowledge from testimony? What are the implications of the prevalence of moral disagreement? Do our evolutionary origins pose a challenge to our moral beliefs?

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor

Instructors: E. Vavova

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

_Epistemology: Disagreement_

This course will explore the nature of epistemic challenges to morality. We will consider questions such as: How is moral knowledge possible? Can we gain moral knowledge from testimony? What are the implications of the prevalence of moral disagreement? Do our evolutionary origins pose a challenge to our moral beliefs?

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor

Instructors: E. Vavova

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-02 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

_Epistemology: Consciousness_

We are fallible creatures, prone to making all sorts of mistakes. How should we accommodate evidence of our own epistemic imperfection? Should such evidence lead us to doubt ourselves and our beliefs? Or are we rationally permitted to dismiss it? One way in which we might acquire evidence of our own error is through disagreement. The discovery that someone you respect disagrees with you can make you lose confidence in, and sometimes altogether abandon, your belief in the disputed proposition--but should it? Does disagreement provide evidence of error? Is it epistemically significant, or simply unpleasant?

Prerequisites: One course in philosophy and either a second course in philosophy or a course in neuroscience; or permission of the instructor

Instructors: E. Vavova

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-03 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

_Epistemology: Scientific Epistemology - *Not offered this year/term_

There is widespread agreement that scientific methods are particularly successful ways of gaining knowledge. What makes these methods successful? In this course we will examine a series of epistemological topics in the philosophy of science, each of which provides part of the answer. These topics include Hume's problem of induction, contemporary confirmation theory, the interpretation of probabilities in science, the use of abductive reasoning, and the proper role of the theoretical virtues (parsimony, elegance, unificatory power, etc.).

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Philosophy including at least one logic course, or permission of the instructor

Instructors: C. Rathkopf

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-351-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

_Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Kant_

_Immanuel Kant's Critique of Pure Reason_ is one of the few works in the Western philosophic tradition that fundamentally transformed our understanding of the place of human beings in the world. This seminar involves a careful, critical reading of the text in order to assess the nature and significance of the epistemological and metaphysical views it expounds. There will be frequent, short papers.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 202 or equivalent

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2013-2014

_ArtStudio 280(01) - Philosophy of Art: Illustration - *Not offered this year/term_

This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year. Illustrations are all around us, in picture books, scientific texts, fine art editions of books, magazines, and in the pockets of airline seats. Yet there is little philosophical discussion about what constitutes an illustration. In this seminar, we will approach the topic of illustration through both theory and practice. There will be readings, viewings, and studio sessions. Participants will be expected to take part in this approach, producing both theoretical and studio work. Our approach will be eclectic, hoping to educate our eyes, minds, and bodies about this important use of images.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: Students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of course materials, in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, B. Moser

PE-115-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Introductory Cabaret Style Belly Dance
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The Middle East is a region full of diverse and beautiful styles of dance. Among these is bellydance, or Raqs Sharqi, derived from a wide variety of folkloric influences, and known primarily for hip and torso isolations and fast-paced shimmies. This class focuses predominately on American Cabaret and Egyptian Style methods of movement. Students will become familiar with famous classic Middle Eastern songs, modern pop music, and basic Arabic rhythms. The class will begin with the fundamental movements of bellydance taught through muscular breakdowns and attention to proper style-specific form. Students will also learn to play basic patterns on finger cymbals.

PE-117-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2013-2014
(Spring) Bon Odori (Japanese Spiritual Dance)
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course focuses on a Japanese Buddhist folk dance performed outdoors and danced in a concentric circle around a raised platform. It is celebrated as a reminder of the gratefulness one should feel toward one’s ancestors. From this dance of joy comes Bon Odori, a time in which ancestors and their sacrifices are remembered and appreciated. Through studying the dance, students will understand its intentions: remembering and appreciating who you are and where you come from. Because the dance is closely related to Buddhism, this course will provide an opportunity for the students both to exercise through dancing and to calm their minds.
