HIST-381-03 - History - 2009-2010
(Fall) Recent American History: U.S. Gender History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Gender history focuses on the relationship between women and men, masculinity and femininity, and the evolution and transformation of that sprawling and multidimensional system of meanings we call "gender." This seminar will allow students interested in gender and women's history to do research on a topic of their choice. Readings will establish key themes and central methods in the study of gender. Reading topics include politics and activism, race and imperialism, popular culture and consumption, reproduction and sexuality, family and marriage. By mid semester, students will be working with primary and secondary sources with the goal of producing a substantial and original paper.

(Latin American Studies 387fs)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
Can you imagine a movie audience breaking into song and dance in the middle of a film screening? Has the Hollywood depiction of the Brazilian as either a “Bombshell” or a flirtatious male parrot changed over time? How does a Brazilian Western differ from a Spaghetti Western? What were the accomplishments and limitations of the "aesthetic of hunger"? The course examines Brazilian cinema and popular culture in light of theoretical issues of reception and production, Third Cinema, and the shaping of identities and politics. Two films per week. (English subtitles).

(Spring) War and Propaganda - *Not offered this year/term
This course analyzes propaganda techniques and war mobilization strategies. We present comparative, cross-cultural analyses of recent and historical examples of the influences of the state, state-society relations, the media, and information control and distortion in the mobilization for war. Case studies are selected to address the following questions: Why is propaganda necessary? What is the media's relationship to state propaganda efforts? How do citizen groups and protest movements contest state propaganda efforts? We conclude by examining key trends in the development of mass media forms and technologies and their implications for global politics.

(Fall) International Human Rights
This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.

(Spring) International Society - *Not offered this year/term
An intensive reading course in theories of international society: the idea that states and peoples are or should be linked to each other through a web of shared values and institutions. It focuses on the work of Hedley Bull, Immanuel Kant, and John Rawls. How did these three men understand international society? What are or should be the values and institutions that give rise to it and support it? What implications do their visions of international society have for war and peace, state sovereignty, religion, democracy, capitalism, distributive justice, human rights, and international law? What responses and criticisms have their arguments engendered?

(Fall) Sorelle di penna/Sisters in Writing: the Development of Italian Women's Writing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
In the nineteenth century, Italian women were finally able to conquer a place in the realm of letters and society. Their Renaissance sisters having been nearly forgotten, women writers in the new Italian kingdom had no models to follow. This course will explore the birth and development of women's writing in nineteenth and twentieth century Italy with emphasis on autobiography, autofiction, issues of gender, sexuality and identity. We will read and discuss works by Sibilla Aleramo, Jolanda, Matilde Serao, Benedetta, Amelia Rosselli, Natalia Ginzburg, Elsa Morante. Special attention will be paid to the early twentieth century, to futurist women, and to the condition of women in Fascist Italy.
Prerequisites: Italian 221 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Literatures: Topic: Sweet Cruelty: Anti-Humanism and Gay Writing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Spanish 330, French 321, Gender Studies 333)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in the Romance language of the student’s choice.

Much of twentieth-century gay writing in Latin America is characterized by an estheticist celebration of anti-humanism, which has often clashed with left-wing progressive politics in these countries. But how does a “gay style” come about? What is its genealogy? How does it identify itself, and what does such an identity mean politically and historically? In this seminar, we will study a number of writers from Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Perú, and Uruguay, and examine their roots in French and Italian anti-humanist authors from Baudelaire, Lautréamont, and Rimbaud to Genet and Pasolini. We will also read a few key texts in queer theory.

Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student’s choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive advanced credit.

(Spring) Introduction to the New Testament - *Not offered this year/term
This course investigates the social and historical context of first and early second-century Christianity, examines New Testament and select noncanonical documents, and introduces participants to the principal methods of New Testament studies. Students will read the 27 works that make up most modern collections of the New Testament, a number of early Christian documents that did not make the final cut, and several ancient non-Christian sources. Examples of recent New Testament scholarship will provide historical background for better understanding of Christian writings and will present different methods for approaching and interpreting ancient texts.

JWST-212-01 - Jewish Studies - 2009-2010
(Fall) Introduction to Judaism
(Religion 212)

Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

(Spring) Jewish Spiritual Autobiographies - *Not offered this year/term
(Religion 215s)

Along with such genres as letters, ethical wills, travel accounts, and other personal communications, spiritual autobiographies and diaries often reveal what people actually thought and felt about matters important to them. These sources provide insight into religion as lived experience. This course studies autobiographical accounts of Jewish religious figures from the medieval period to the contemporary. We include narratives by both women and men, philosophers, mystics, messianic pretenders, travelers, authors of Holocaust memoirs, and other contemporary Jews. Taken together, such accounts bring to life the diversity of spiritual quests in which Jews have engaged.

(Spring) Engendering Judaism: Women and Jewish Tradition - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive; Religion 222-01, Gender Studies 210-02)

This course examines the representations and roles of women in Jewish culture, from the literature of the Hebrew Bible to the contemporary period. What were the distinctive ways in which women's religious life expressed itself by way of prayer and ritual practice? Were there women mystics and visionaries? How did women exert their influence as mothers and wives? There will be significant focus on the dramatic developments taking place among contemporary Jewish women: innovative rituals and experimental liturgies; opportunities to become rabbis; new approaches to God, theology, and social issues; the Jewish lesbian movement; women's writing and documentary filmmaking.

(English 393, Gender Studies 333(11))
Preamble (for topics courses): A study of a particular problem of inquiry, topic, or theme, with a comparative focus.
This course will explore the rich literature written by religious and secular Jewish women, including memoirs, fiction, poetry, and criticism. While most of this writing comes from the modern and contemporary periods—the primary focus of this course—we will also study examples of early modern women's authorship. Our writers are drawn from diverse geographies, and articulate a wide range of creative responses to modernity, secularization, nationalism, political radicalization, violence, exile and migration, and literary experimentation.

(Fall) Views on Augustus
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Augustus came to power after a long period of civil unrest. He restored order and stability and established a peace that would endure for more than two centuries. As Rome's savior and its first emperor, his accomplishments were the subject of biography, history, and even poetry. He is a complex historical figure who eludes simple interpretation. Yet we will try in this course to understand Augustus' character and accomplishments through a variety of sources, including Suetonius, Horace, and Augustus himself.

(Spring) Paradigms of New World Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is devoted to the work of commanding figures of Latin American and Caribbean thought at various times and different places. Thinkers whose work may form its basis in various offerings include among others: Columbus, Bartolomé de Las Casas, José Martí, J. C. Mariátegui, C.L.R. James, etc. Their lives and work exemplify the diversities, varying regional settings, social contexts, and shifting historical coordinates of major epochs of transition. Their assessment of a myriad of key issues has made each a touchstone of continuing authority and influence extending beyond their particular locale, time, or region. Why this should be so is among the many questions we will address.

(Fall) Topics in Latin American Studies: U.S.-Latin American Relations

(History 287fs)
Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who have had an introduction to Latin America through Latin American Studies 180 or 181 or a course on Latin America in some other discipline (anthropology, history, literature, or politics, for example), this course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments. This course examines the modern history of U.S.-Latin American relations, questioning the nature and context of what many scholars and politicians have labeled "U.S. imperialism." We will discuss classic cases of U.S. intervention in Latin America and of Latin American cases of anti-Americanism. The course employs a cultural approach to other instances of U.S.-Latin American relations to challenge the idea that all relations fit neatly into the classic dichotomy. Students will conduct primary source research on U.S. periodicals and government documents to produce a final research paper.

(Spring) Topics in Latin American Studies: The Amazon: From Cannibals to Rainforest Crunch
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(History 287, Film Studies 270-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): Designed for students who have had an introduction to Latin America through Latin American Studies 180 or 181 or a course on Latin America in some other discipline (anthropology, history, literature, or politics, for example), this course studies significant problems relating to Latin America in greater depth from the perspectives of appropriate disciplines. Some topics may be cross-listed with other departments. From the time of the conquest, the Amazon has been imagined as an exotic and savage terrain: mysterious, dangerous, and cascading in untouched natural resources. This course examines the Amazon as a historical narrative in popular culture and political struggles. We will read explorers' narratives, examine representations of the Amazon and its people in film and literature, discuss labor and the rubber industry, and analyze the environmental movement and other recent social movements.

(Fall) Modern Mexico

(History 288)
An analysis of the modern Mexican nation-state organized around three major themes: the conflictive yet symbiotic relationship with the United States, from the war of the 1840s through NAFTA most recently; the succession of reformist and revolutionary upheavals in 1810-1821, 1856-1867, 1910-1917, the 1930s, and again today, seeking to resolve both problems of the colonial past and new conflicts traceable to the very reforms generated by earlier political and social struggles; and the meaning of Mexican nationality from different ethnic, gender, and class perspectives. Readings include autobiographical and literary works, historical studies, and films.

(Spring) Studies in Comparative Caribbean Culture: Contemporary Caribbean Writers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A sustained comparative study of the developing canon of three major contemporary writers--Alejo Carpentier (Cuba), V.S. Naipaul (Trinidad), and Maryse Conde (Guadeloupe)-- from the Caribbean, representing the region's Spanish-, English-, and French-speaking cultural zones. Examines the evolving content, contours and scope of each writer's work and unique perception of the New World, as well as its distinctively Antillean "structure of feeling," participation in modern debates about Caribbean culture, and distinctive contributions to the development of the novel in the contemporary Caribbean.

(Fall) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.

(Fall) Special Topics in Latin American Studies: The Era of the Cuban Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity for intensive study of a problem with careful attention to research methods and to presenting their work in oral and written form.
The course familiarizes students with the history of the Cuban Revolution and its global significance in terms of culture and politics. We examine the relationship between the Cuban Revolution and anti-colonial/anti-imperialism social movements, guerilla activism, Third Cinema, Black Power movements, and other armed conflicts in Latin America, Asia, and Africa. The course incorporates history with film and literature to provide an alternative view of Cold War politics that arose from the so-called Third World.

(History 388)
For many the "discovery" of America opened the modern era. Its closing may also have been foretold in Latin America's confounding of diverse theories of modernization and development in recent times. This seminar will introduce the student to a number of both classic and more recent works on Latin America (in English) that advance along postmodernist lines, ranging from cultural contact and conflict, language, meaning, and power in the sixteenth century, to the invention of national identities in the nineteenth century, to discourses of ethnicity, class, gender, and reason in the twentieth century.

(Spring) Agrarian America: Sugar, Cotton, Coffee, Wheat - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the structure and variety of societies generated in North, Central, and South America by four widely distributed export crops. Although not bound by rigid chronology, our focus will be primarily on the period 1750-1950. Principal concerns of the course are variations by time and place in each commodity's technologies, labor systems, farm sizes, and social structure; the political dynamics associated with each type of farming; and the problematic features of capitalism in agriculture, or, how and when do peasants become farmers and farming agribusiness? Readings in English on cases drawn from throughout the Americas.

MATH-100-01 - Mathematics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Precalculus
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is intended for students who, based on the results of their precalculus assessment and the agreement of the instructor, need to strengthen their quantitative and algebraic precalculus skills in order to be ready to progress to calculus. Features the study of functions, including trigonometric functions, the exponential function, and logarithms, and the phenomena they model.
Notes: Permission of instructor. Send score from math online self-assessment and background information to jsidman@mtholyoke.edu.
Instructors: J. Sidman
Expected enrollment: 25

MATH-101-01 - Mathematics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Calculus I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Students who have not studied calculus and who have the necessary precalculus background belong in Calculus I. Because some sections of Calculus I differ significantly from traditional high school calculus, it has been our experience that students who "start over," in order to ease the transition into college, initially may have more difficulty in Calculus I than beginners. However, students who take Calculus I expecting and welcoming new ideas have found it rich and rewarding. Please read the "Beginning the Study of Mathematics" section.
This course presents rates of change and their applications, integrals, the fundamental theorem, and modeling of phenomena in the natural and social sciences.

MATH-110-01 - Mathematics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Explorations in Algebra

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Using examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Mathematics and Music - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar (Music 114-02)
For centuries people have explored the connections between mathematics and music. Sounds are waves, and pleasant-sounding musical intervals are simple fractions. Keyboard instruments are tuned following both regular and slightly irregular mathematical rules. Bells in change ringing follow simple patterns. Some musical pieces can be played both backwards and forwards. On the other hand, aesthetics are paramount in music, yet also play a part in mathematics. This course will explore these ideas.

(Spring) Topics in Algebra: Lie Groups
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The topic for spring 2010 is Lie groups. The study of Lie groups (named for the Norwegian mathematician Sophus Lie) provides rich connections to many parts of mathematics and important applications to physics and chemistry. Topics include symmetry groups, linearization, one-parameter subgroups and the exponential map, Lie algebras and adjoint maps, and classical matrix groups.

(Spring) Topics in Geometry and Topology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topological spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit

(Fall) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Fourier and other Eigenfunction Expansions
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course is an introduction to one of the most powerful methods of applied mathematics, eigenfunction expansions. The most familiar example is the Fourier series, and it is also perhaps the most useful because of the existence of the Fast Fourier Transform algorithm (FFT). The course will aim to make this theory useful, and in particular to develop a good working knowledge of the FFT and its associated lore, called spectral methods. Other eigenfunction expansions will include the spherical harmonics for problems on the sphere. Since these expansions are infinite series, the theory inevitably raises questions of convergence and what is called more generally functional analysis.

Medieval Studies

MEDST-101-01 · Medieval Studies · 2009-2010
(Spring) Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries: European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic Encounters, 1200-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; History 101)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar's topics offer a foundation for inquiry into medieval culture. Using readings in literature, art, music, history, politics, philosophy, and sciences to interpret the Middle Ages, a student sharpens her awareness of language and imagery as means of communicating experience, and improves her skills of attentive reading and persuasive writing.
This seminar focuses on medieval boundaries: those separating Christians, Jews, and Muslims in Europe, as well as those between men and women from the thirteenth through sixteenth centuries. The course also examines new boundaries separating—and constructing—Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Engaging closely and critically with sources from Atlantic societies of these centuries, students will investigate and debate the making and remaking of "Western culture" in an era of state formation, imperial expansion, agrarian capitalism, and chattel slavery. Readings range from Christian-Jewish disputations to indigenous writings from the Americas.
Instructors: R. H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Special Topics in Medieval Studies: Medieval England - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(same as History 232f-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course is designed to address themes and historical periods in an interdisciplinary framework. Topics will bring together the study of art, literature, and history to heighten awareness of the complex interaction of cultural and political forces in medieval society. Issues will be explored through the methods of different disciplines in order to develop the student's analytical and critical skills.
The British Isles from the ancient Celts to the fourteenth century. Topics include Celtic culture, Roman Britain, early Christianity, Sutton Hoo and the invasions of the Anglo-Saxons, the Vikings, the birth of the English monarchy, the Norman conquest of England, Wales, and Ireland, Norman achievement in government and art, Cistercian monasteries, Richard the Lion-Hearted and the Crusades, the towns and their Jewish communities, King John, the Magna Carta and the development of Parliament, English Gothic, the beginning of Hundred Years' War, the Black Death, and the Peasants' Revolt of 1381.

(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Studies: The Matter of Britain: Arthur and the Grail
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; English 316f)
This course focuses on the various forms the story of the grail takes in legends of King Arthur from the twelfth to the twentieth centuries in the literature of England, France, and Europe. While centered in medieval English versions of the Arthurian myth, the course considers the political and cultural forces that helped shape the grail legend after the fall of Jerusalem in 1187, over the course of the later Middle Ages, and into the nineteenth century. Reading from Malory, Tennyson, and contemporary fiction as well as chronicles and romances. We will conclude with current interest in the Holy Grail in popular culture.

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Texts and Contexts: Reading the Medieval World, 1350-1530 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 316 and History 351)
This course explores cultural and social transformations (especially in England) on the eve of "modernity." Class discussions will ordinarily focus on selections from major English writers of the period (Chaucer, Gower, and Malory, for example), and on the relationship between their writings and other kinds of evidence about the world in which they wrote. In consultation with instructors and colleagues, students will also be expected individually to locate, analyze, and interpret a collection of primary sources such as court records, chronicles, and correspondence from a culture of their choosing in order to write a final essay on one dimension of the late medieval world.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, background in medieval history or literature, written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/medst/form.html) is required
Instructors: C. Collette, H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Old English
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 310)
A study of the language and literature of Anglo-Saxon England (ca. 450-1066 AD) in a series of graduated grammar lessons and readings of Old English poetry and prose. These will include selections from the Bible, the Venerable Bede, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, "The Wanderer," "The Dream of the Rood," "The Wife's Lament," and the Exeter Book riddles. We will also learn the 31-character Old English futhorc as it was preserved in "The Rune Poem" and used to inscribe verses on the Franks Casket and the Ruthwell Cross. Requirements: daily written and oral review of grammar, oral reading and translation in class, and a final translation project.
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement
Instructors: C. Davis

(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: The Curious Middle Ages - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 336)
Medieval curiosity, both a spiritual danger and a vehicle of knowledge, expresses a conflict that helps us mark change in the period's intellectual traditions. We'll consider curiosity's enabling of developments in historiography, cosmology, cartography, optics, and architecture to help us explore various literary genres. Through allegory, travel and religious narrative, romance, fabliau, and dream vision, we'll inquire into the intellectual functions that literature performs, asking how literary curiosity may have been both an approach toward and opponent of scientific truth. Middle English works will be read in Middle English; however, no prior knowledge of Middle English is necessary.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; same as English 316s)
This course will study J. R. R. Tolkien’s imaginative creation of Middle Earth within the context of his extensive knowledge of philology and mythology, as well as within the context of his participation in the Inklings, the literary group that also included C. S. Lewis and Charles Williams. It will discuss their theories of myth, literature, and fable, as well as their influence on twentieth-century understanding of medieval culture. Reading will include works of fiction and literary theory by all three authors, as well as secondary material.

Prerequisites: Medieval Studies 101 or English 311, or permission of instructor

Instructors: C. Collette

(Seminar in Medieval Studies: Medieval Monasticism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(same as History 351)
This survey of Western monasticism from its origins in the Egyptian desert to the mendicant orders of fourteenth-century Europe seeks to understand what motivates men and women to define perfection as abnegation of food, sex, wealth, success, and even laughter - all that we now consider valuable in life. Topics: fasting, virginity, voluntary poverty; monastic rules and reform movements (e.g., Celtic, Benedictine, Cistercian, Franciscan, etc.). Also various saints’ lives, mysticism, and women’s spirituality. Course includes a stay at the Abbey of Regina Laudis.
Instructors: C. Straw, F. McGinness

(Seminar in Medieval Studies: Gender, Language, and Power 1300-1700 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(same as History 351)
This course explores how some women expressed their understanding of the social, ideological, and political struggles in which they were engaged between the early fourteenth and late seventeenth centuries. It asks what roles they played in the construction of public discourse and the state, the reshaping of the family, the reconstruction of Christianity, and the change from medieval feudal estates to early modern agrarian capitalism. Readings will include works by Christine de Pisan, the Paston women, Anne Askew, Lady Mary Wroth, Elizabeth Carey, Lady Eleanor Davies, as well as records of Elizabethan coronation pageants, public ceremonies, household accounts, and diaries.

(Spring) Music and Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.

(Writing-intensive)
This course is a survey of selected musical traditions from different parts of the world, including Africa, Indonesia, Indian, the Caribbean, and the United States. The course adopts an ethnomusicological approach that explains music as a cultural phenomenon, and explores the social and aesthetic significance of musical traditions within their respective historical and cultural contexts. It examines how musical traditions change over time, and how such changes reflect and relate to social and political changes within a given society. Weekly reading and listening assignments provide the basis for class discussions. Students are expected to undertake a final project in music ethnography.
Instructors: O. Omojola
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Performance Practices in African Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines African performance conventions, styles and techniques as illustrated in selected musical traditions. The course addresses important questions about African performances including: How are performing groups organized? What are the internal dynamics of group performance? When and how is improvisation appropriate? Selected examples, including Yoruba "dundun" music, Dagomba drumming and Shona "mbira" music, are studied with a view to understanding African performance practices and presentational skills. The course combines lectures with practical sessions, and culminates in a group performance and write-up based on the performance.

(Fall) Topics in Music: Analytical Studies in World Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to increase familiarity with and facility in the use of primary materials for musicological/ethnomusicological and/or theoretical research, as well as in the critical evaluation of published scholarship. Engagement with a shared topic at the outset of the semester provides the context from which each student fashions an independent project. Oral presentations are integral to the course, with a major paper as the final requirement.
The main focus of this course is to facilitate a culturally sensitive analytical engagement of musical traditions from different parts of the world. The course surveys some of the theoretical and methodological issues that have shaped the field of ethnomusicology and influenced the study of musical traditions, and examines musical examples from different parts of the world, including Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Emphasis will be on understanding musical structures as defined in specific traditions, and the ways in which musical performances/compositions relate to and are shaped by factors emanating from the cultural environment in which they are situated.
Prerequisites: Music 282 and 232 or permission of instructor
Instructors: O. Omojola

Philosophy

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will read answers to questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.
Instructors: J. Johnson
Expected enrollment: 70

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We will consider influential philosophical texts and theories that attempt to answer questions such as these: Is it possible for creatures like us to have knowledge of an external world that exists outside of our own minds? Are we justified in believing that events in the future will be much like events in the past? Is the human mind an immaterial substance (like a soul), or is it a mere physical object (like the brain)? Do human beings have free will? Is a person's having free will compatible with all of her actions being predetermined by events occurring before her birth? What, if anything, makes an action morally right or morally wrong?

Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Personal Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Who or what am I, and what makes me what I am? How am I different from a very sensitive robot, or a very clever dog? Am I a single changing person throughout my life, or a temporal montage of unchanging ones? What will connect my past to my future? This is the cluster of philosophical worries that will occupy the center of this course. In the process of addressing them, we will work to develop methods for resolving problems that appear beyond solution.

Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 16

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.

Instructors: M. Brown
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to ancient Greek philosophy, focusing mainly but not exclusively on the works and ideas of three Athenian philosophers who worked and taught in the period between the Persian Wars and the rule of Alexander the Great, more than 2,300 years ago: Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the world? What is truth, and how can it be known? What kind of life should we live? We will work to understand each philosopher's responses to these questions, but we will also learn to develop our own answers. We will take care to place these figures and their works in proper historical and cultural context.

Instructors: G. Matthews
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.

Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course serves as an introduction to some of the main philosophical theories of ethics and ideas about human nature through a study of fundamental approaches including utilitarian, deontological, and virtue ethics. Among the issues covered will be the clarification of basic assumptions about morality, such as whether morality has any basis beyond differing teachings of various cultures (relativism), or whether all actions are fundamentally selfish (egoism). Attention will be given to the application of ethical theory and principles to contemporary issues.

Instructors: M. Brown
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Knowledge and Reality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?

Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Knowledge and Reality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What is knowledge? Does the world exist independently of our minds? What makes me a single, unified person who exists continuously over time? In this course, we will explore these and other central questions in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality) concerning predictions about the future, universal generalizations, the categories/concepts we employ in making such predictions and generalizations, and the nature of cause and effect. This course aims to be both historical and contemporary.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory “good”? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.
Prerequisites: No prerequisites
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
(Religion 226-01)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God’s existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the work of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.
Instructors: J. Grayson

PHIL-227-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Feminism and Knowledge - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 212)
Is knowledge gendered? Is science objective? What does it mean to make such claims, and how does one justify them? In this course, we will investigate how gender roles, gender identity, and ideas about gender influence the construction of knowledge. We will look at three competing views about these influences - in particular, empiricism, standpoint theory, and postmodernism - in the context of empirical research in the social sciences and biology. We will consider what it means to do research as a feminist and what kind of cognitive authority women hold in the creation of knowledge.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in gender studies or philosophy or permission of instructor

Instructors: C. Lee

Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-232-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Ethical Issues in Complex Organizations - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

There is much talk recently of the need for increased attention to "ethics" in organizational life. This course examines the basis for this concern and the underlying beliefs and structures that give rise to ethical issues, with the goal of helping students to clarify their own positions. Topics addressed will include profit, governance, consumption, distribution, and the social contract. Readings will draw on philosophy, religion, economics, history, literature, management theory, and current events. Phy.

Prerequisites: Prereq. soph, jr, sr; 4 credits

PHIL-235-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral and philosophical problems. Topics discussed include: What is the distinction between health and illness? How should limited health care resources be distributed? How are medical problems related to larger social problems (e.g., sex inequality)? What are the responsibilities of medical researchers toward their research subjects? What moral reasons do we have to be concerned about the growth of technology in medicine? Are the basic institutions of medicine and medical education just?

Instructors: S. Hawthorne

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Environmental Ethics: Nature/Culture/Values - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Is nature to be controlled through applying technological expertise? Or is Thoreau correct in his suggestion that we must immerse ourselves in nature to discover who we truly are? Might the value of nature extend beyond its utility for humans? Students have the opportunity to explore these questions, challenging widespread assumptions about nature, culture, and values.

Instructors: J. Inness

(Fall) Social and Political Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

An examination of a variety of topics in social and political philosophy, drawing from historical as well as contemporary sources. We will examine questions such as the following: What is the nature and scope of political authority? Do citizens have a duty to obey the laws of their state? What duties do we have to oppressed and marginalized groups? How do race, class, gender, and sexual orientation matter to political freedom and authority? How should we balance political liberties against the public good? Attention will also be given to the application of these questions to particular contemporary social and political issues.

PHIL-244-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010

(Spring) Philosophy and Literature - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course considers a range of philosophical topics about and in literature. Can literature give us knowledge about the world? How do we determine the meaning of a work of literature (if there is such a thing)? Can works of literature lead us morally astray? How is the identity of the reader relevant to reading literature? Is there a difference between philosophy and literature? We explore these questions through the discussion of some contemporary philosophical writing, as well as some well-known and provocative literary works.

PHIL-247-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010

(Spring) Philosophy of Law

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course is an inquiry into questions concerning the nature of "justice," "law," and the relationship between the two from the point of view of various schools of legal thought like natural law theory, positivism, utilitarianism, legal realism, critical race studies and feminist theory. We will examine questions like "Is there a duty to obey, or sometimes disobey, the law?" and "What do we mean by 'equality' or 'rights'" within the context of contemporary legal issues like affirmative action, abortion, and same-sex marriage. Readings drawn from Aristotle, Hobbes, Locke, Kant, Mill, Holmes, Llewellyn, Hart, Rawls, and others.

(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism - *Not offered this year/term

An introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race"? Does science construct "race"? What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Class readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.

Some say that philosophers pursue objective knowledge. Feminist philosophy is a body of scholarship that questions the extent to which traditional philosophy has pursued or can pursue knowledge in an objective way. This course is an introduction to issues in feminist philosophy, including its critique of traditional Western philosophy and its contributions to major areas of philosophy such as metaphysics, ethics, epistemology, social and political philosophy, and the philosophy of language.

(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Philosophy of Mind
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor

(Spring) Philosophy of Language - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Topics in the philosophy of language have become central to many philosophical debates since the early twentieth century. What gives words meaning? Must we understand a speaker's intentions in order to know what she says? What makes a statement true? How do pointing, nodding, and other contextual factors influence interpretation? We will explore these and related issues through readings from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Quine, Grice, Stalnaker, Perry, and others.

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Philosophy of the Arts - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The purpose of this course is to explore philosophical problems concerning the arts and aesthetic experience. Some questions to be explored include: What is the difference between beauty and moral goodness? Can taste be objective? What does it mean for a work of music to be "sad"? Are the intentions of artists relevant to appreciation? What is the purpose of art criticism? How do pictures represent objects? Readings will be drawn from both historical and contemporary philosophical writings.

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.

(Fall) Twentieth-Century Analytic Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to the history, themes, and methods of analytic philosophy, the dominant movement in twentieth-century English-speaking philosophy. Analytic philosophy uses logic and a careful analysis of language to solve philosophical problems. We will study most of the major figures of this movement, including Frege, Russell, Carnap, Quine, and Kripke. Topics addressed will include the logic of numerical identity, reference and existence, Quine's criticisms of logical positivism, and the meaning of necessity.

PHIL-321-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
According to the "Whorf Hypothesis" language constrains what we can think - our very concepts are shaped by our language. Much contemporary work in cognitive science argues the reverse - that concepts wired into our mind constrain what possible human languages there are, and that consequently all human languages share structure that reflects these constraints. On this view there are languages so alien that humans couldn't possibly learn them. This seminar will explore the relationship between language and thought, reading work by Wittgenstein, Whorf, Orwell, Putnam, Pinker, Fodor, Prinz, and others.

Recently there has been a considerable flowering of non-classical logics, most prominently modal logics concerning necessity and possibility for one to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. In addition, conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have become important. This course will look at this broad range of topics. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy and are intrinsically interesting in their own right.

(Fall) Non-Classical Logic  -  *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course looks at the recent flowering of non-classical logics. The most prominent are modal logics concerning necessity and possibility, which have come to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. Conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have also become important. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy but also are interesting in their own right.

(Fall) Topics in Ethics: Meta-Ethics  -  *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Meta-ethics is the study of the concepts and methods used in ethical discourse and debate. It is not the study, for example, of which actions are right or wrong, but rather of what the terms "right" and "wrong" mean. Possible questions to be discussed in this seminar include: Can moral judgments be true or false? Are moral judgments expressions of feelings? Are they objective or subjective? Are we rationally required to be moral? Are there moral facts? How are moral and aesthetic judgments different? This course presupposes a strong background in philosophy. Prior coursework in ethics and logic is recommended.

(Fall) Developments in Feminist Philosophy: Rethinking the World: Philosophy of Sex  -  *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What makes a body sexy? Is heterosexuality natural? What is "sex?" Feminist philosophy is in the midst of a revolutionary transformation. Rather than remaining content with the task of indicating the shortcomings of the philosophical canon, feminist philosophers are constructing their own distinctively feminist version of philosophy. In this course, we shall explore what contemporary feminist philosophers have written about the nature of sex and sexuality.

(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: Fact vs. Value
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
If I tell you "Goering was cruel," have I expressed a fact or a value judgment? What if I say, "Carbon monoxide pollutes"? Is it true that you can't derive an "ought" from an "is"? Drawing primarily on recent and contemporary philosophical literature, this seminar will explore the features and strength of the (supposed?) distinction between fact and value--considerations that underlie many current social, political, and scientific debates.

(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Postmodern Feminist Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 333(04))
This course examines the work of key feminist theorists of, or informed by, the French/Continental tradition. We focus on the issues of materialism, psychoanalysis, language, materiality, performativity, subjectivity, post-structuralism, and postmodern philosophy. We read works of the following: Helene Cixous, Luce Irigaray, Julia Kristeva, Rosi Braidotti, Judith Butler, and Elizabeth Grosz.
Prerequisites: jr or sr

PHIL-351-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Aristotle - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will look closely at Aristotle's moral and aesthetic thought through a careful examination of his Nicomachean Ethics and his Poetics. In these works Aristotle gives us his conception of a well-lived life, as well as his view about the relationship between emotions and reason. In addition to the primary texts, we'll read some contemporary commentary on Aristotle, and we'll look at the influence of Aristotle's ideas on contemporary philosophical debates about art and life. This course presupposes prior study of ancient Greek philosophy. Prior coursework in ethics or aesthetics is also recommended.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 201 and 4 additional credits in department, or per I
Instructors: J. Harold

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Fall) Philosophy of Art - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
This seminar will focus on the work of Arthur Danto, perhaps the preeminent contemporary philosopher of art and art critic for The Nation. We will explore his writings from his seminal essay, "The Artworld," to his recent book, The Abuse of Beauty, in an attempt to understand his views on art, its development, and its future.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department

(Spring) The Philosophy of Art: The Shock of the New - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Art Studio 280s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
Innovative works of art shock the world and are difficult for viewers to interpret in light of previous artistic practice. How, then, can viewers and critics understand new and challenging works of art? This is the topic that we will investigate in this course by looking at art, reading about art, making art, and writing about art.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 10

PHIL-375-01 - Philosophy - 2009-2010
(Spring) Philosophy of Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 390-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): An examination of different theoretical issues concerning the nature of film and film viewing. Topics vary yearly.
Recently, philosophers have argued that films resemble philosophy in their use of thought experiments. But the role of thought experiments in philosophy is itself contested. The seminar will investigate how thought experiments are used in science and philosophy in order to determine whether films and, more generally, art can legitimately claim that their presentation of thought experiments connects them to philosophy. Some previous acquaintance with philosophy highly recommended.

(Spring) Bon Odori (Japanese Spiritual Dance)

Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course focuses on a Japanese Buddhist folk dance performed outdoors and danced in a concentric circle around a raised platform. It is celebrated as a reminder of the gratefulness one should feel toward one's ancestors. From this dance of joy comes Bon Odori, a time in which ancestors and their sacrifices are remembered and appreciated. Through studying the dance, students will understand its intentions: remembering and appreciating who you are and where you come from. Because the dance is closely related to Buddhism, this course will provide an opportunity for the students both to exercise through dancing and to calm their minds.

PE-442-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Intercollegiate Squash
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Includes 14 dual matches played mostly at weekend invitational events. Also Seven Sisters Championship and the Howe Cup National Team Championship at Yale University. Season runs from mid-October to the first weekend in March.
Notes: Team selection by tryouts in mid-October; 5 meetings
Instructors: A. Fitzsimmons

PE-443-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Intercollegiate Indoor Track and Field Team
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Includes seven meets. Season begins second week of November and lasts until examinations. Begins formally second Monday in January, runs until second weekend in March.
Notes: Team selection by tryout; 5 meetings
Instructors: C. Lee

PE-443-02 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Intercollegiate Outdoor Track and Field Team
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Includes seven meets. Season begins second week of November and lasts until examinations. Begins formally second Monday in January, runs until second weekend in March.
Notes: Team selection by tryout; 5 meetings

PE-445-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Intercollegiate Lacrosse Team
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Includes 14-game schedule. Seven Sisters Tournament and NEWMAC Championship.
Notes: Team selection by tryouts; 5 meetings
Instructors: M. Esber

PE-446-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Intercollegiate Field Hockey Team
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Includes 18-game schedule. Seven Sisters Tournament and NEWMAC Championship.
Notes: Team selection by tryouts; 5 meetings
Instructors: A. Whitcomb

PE-451-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Advanced Riding
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Riding Fee $560
Develops the art of communication with the horse for improved harmony through effective use of legs, seat, and hands in dressage and when jumping. Riders taking this course should be capable of jumping a 3'3" to 3'6" course.
Notes: 2 meetings (50 minutes); fee course
Instructors: C. Law
Expected enrollment: 8

PE-455-01  -  Physical Education and Athletics  -  2009-2010
(Fall) Advanced Dressage and Jumping
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Riding Fee $560
This course ties the concepts of straightness, rhythm, obedience and suppleness to technique over fences. Focuses on riders' effectiveness and position in both disciplines. Riders should be comfortable riding a green or unknown horse over a course of 3'3" jumps and capable of riding a 1st level dressage test on an unknown horse. Two spots will be reserved for riders without their own horse.
Prerequisites: Permission of Instructor.  2 meetings, 50 minutes. Fee course.
Instructors: P. Pierce
Expected enrollment: 6

PHYED-261-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2009-2010
(Spring) Women in Sport
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 216)
This course is designed to introduce students to the history of women in sport, the status of women in sport since the passage of Title IX in 1972, and current issues impacting women in sport such as race, gender, and sexual orientation. Students will explore the influence of sport on the lives of women and how selected women sport leaders have influenced the growth and development of sport.
Notes: No P.E. credit. Academic credit only.
Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

PHYED-275-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2009-2010
(Spring) Introduction to Sport Pedagogy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed to introduce students to sport pedagogy with a focus on coaching youth sports. Topics include coaching philosophy, motor learning, sport physiology, sport biomechanics, sport psychology and risk management/liability. We will consider the benefits of playing sports, the development of age appropriate instruction and training programs, goal setting, effective feedback, and the importance of coaches as role models for children.
Notes: no PE units are awarded
Instructors: D. Allen
Expected enrollment: 20

Physics

PHYS-103-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.
Instructors: M. Peterson

PHYS-108-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Relativity using Spacetime Trigonometry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar
This course presents a new introduction to Einstein's Special and General Relativity. We develop the concept of Spacetime (the modern theory of space and time), with emphasis on the geometry and trigonometry of Spacetime Diagrams.
Prerequisites: fy only; high school geometry and trigonometry would be helpful
Instructors: R. Salgado
Expected enrollment: 14

PHYS-115-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Force, Motion, and Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Studies the mechanics of material objects. Topics include Newton's laws, projectile motion, circular motion, momentum, kinetic and potential energy, angular momentum, gravitation, and oscillations. This course is appropriate for students intending to major in a physical science.
Prerequisites: Math 101 (Calc I)
Instructors: T. Hawkins
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB | 03 LAB |

(Spring) Gender in Science - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Gender Studies 241)
This course examines explanations for the under-representation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.

(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 322)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Bio 200 or permission of instructor or Phys 115 and permission of the instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 lab (3 hours) with 12 per lab
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

PHYS-231-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Techniques of Experimental Physics
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides training in the techniques employed in the construction of scientific equipment.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, major
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) for 3 weeks
Instructors: L. McEachern
Expected enrollment: 4

PHYS-301-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Waves and Optics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, and special relativity.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 and either: 303 or concurrent enrollment in 303
Instructors: J. Hudgings
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Hudgings |
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-302-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Instructors: S. Sutton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-303-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series. The course includes a brief introduction to Mathematica and Matlab, in addition to a traditional emphasis on analytic solutions.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 or concurrent enrollment
Instructors: R. Salgado
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined)
Instructors: C. Sutton
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-315-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Newton's great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.
Prerequisites: Physics 303
Instructors: C. Sutton
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-324-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 324s)
This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green's functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.
Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
PHYS-325-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.
Prerequisites: Physics 301, 315, or 324
Instructors: C. Sutton
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-326-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solid; the specific heat of solids.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Instructors: C. Sutton
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Topics in Advanced Physics: Computational Physics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor. This course is intended for Physics majors who are interested in scientific modeling, computation, simulation, and visualization. We will draw on a variety of examples from introductory and intermediate physics. More advanced examples may be considered, depending on student interest. Some previous computer programming experience will be helpful, but not required as a prerequisite. We will work in the Python programming language, together with the VPython visualization module.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-329-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Topics in Advanced Physics: TBA - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor. Prerequisites will depend on the subject being discussed for this semester
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-336-01 - Physics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Quantum Mechanics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is an introduction to formal quantum theory: the wave function and its interpretation, observables and linear operators, matrix mechanics and the uncertainty principle; solutions of one-dimensional problems; solutions of three-dimensional problems and angular momentum; physics and perturbative methods.
Prerequisites: Physics 302, 324 or 325
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-395-01 - Physics - 2009-2010

Politics

POLIT-104-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) American Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers an overview of the American political system and the theories of those who celebrate it and criticize it. Focuses on the institutions of American politics, including the Constitution, the presidency, Congress, the courts, parties and elections, interest groups, and movements seeking political change. Also includes a theoretical focus: a critical examination of the notions of liberalism, pluralism, and democracy that inform the practice of American politics.
Instructors: C. Pyle
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-106-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Comparative Politics
(Writing-intensive)
Introduces the study of comparative politics, with particular focus on democratization, economic development, globalization, states, and civil society. Comparison of political institutions, parties, gender systems, and national and ethnic conflicts. Relevant case studies.
Instructors: C. Chen
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-107-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Foundations of Political Theory
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors’ perspectives on these questions.
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 16

POLIT-111-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Confessions, Novels, and Notebooks: The Self and Political Thought
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political society? Our seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by reading and discussing the biographies, memoirs, fiction, and theories of figures who have left their mark on the history of political thought.
Notes: 12 seats reserved for first-year students, 4 seats reserved for sophomores
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 16

POLIT-112-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Speaking and Arguing: The Rhetoric of Peace and War - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others' presentations.
Instructors: V. Ferraro

POLIT-211-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Ancient and Medieval Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Through the works of such thinkers as Aeschylus, Thucydides, Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Aquinas, Seneca, and Pizan, this course explores the broad themes of ancient and medieval political thought. We will pay particular attention to the ways these writers characterized the relationship between the individual and community; the roles knowledge, reason, emotion, and rhetoric play in political life; the link between gender and citizenship; and the various forms political community can take.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: E. Markovits

POLIT-212-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Modern Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The political writings of Hobbes, Locke, Mill, Rousseau, Burke, Hegel, and Marx in the context of a sustained critique of liberal individualism (natural rights and utilitarianism) and an examination of radical egalitarian, conservative, and revolutionary alternatives. Recurring issues include law and liberty, the fragility of the good life, "human nature" arguments in politics, contrasting understandings or justifications of "private" property, and the claims by Hobbes, Rousseau, Hegel, and Marx, after having dismissed all predecessors as mistaken or superficial or both, to have refounded and then completed the enterprise of political theory.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or fy with permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks

POLIT-213-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) African Political Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Offers a comparative study of selected political systems, emphasizing political conflict in southern Africa. Examines African participation in regional and universal international organizations.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr

POLIT-228-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) East Asian Politics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the dramatic rise of East Asia in the post-World War II period in comparative perspective. The focus will be on understanding the process and consequences of rapid development in Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and China. Assesses the strengths and weaknesses of the "East Asian model of development" and explores how different developmental experiences and policies affect state-society relations, social and political identities, and prospects for peace and cooperation throughout the region.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, with Politics 106
Instructors: C. Chen
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-233-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Invitation to Feminist Theory
(Gender Studies 221)
This course explores the overlapping dualities of the feminine and the masculine, the private and the public, the home and the world. We examine different forms of power over the body; the ways gender and sexual identities reinforce or challenge the established order; and the cultural determinants of "women's emancipation." We emphasize the politics of feminism, dealing with themes that include culture, democracy, and the particularly political role of theory and on theoretical attempts to grasp the complex ties and tensions between sex, gender, and power.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-235-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Constitutional Law: The Federal System
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the effect of U.S. constitutional law on the distribution of power. Topics include judicial review and congressional control of court jurisdiction; the rise of federal regulation of the economy; and the relative powers of the president, Congress, and the courts in national emergencies, foreign relations, and war. Case method.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Instructors: C. Pyle

POLIT-236-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Civil Liberties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents the federal Constitution and civil liberties. Topics include the authority of the courts to read new rights into the Constitution; equal protection of the laws (and affirmative action) for racial minorities, women, and others; and freedom of expression. Emphasis on the appropriateness of different methods of interpreting law.
Prerequisites: Politics 104
Instructors: C. Pyle

POLIT-237-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Western European Politics
This course surveys contemporary West European politics. We will examine the European model of political institutions and political economy that took shape after World War II and its evolution (deterioration?) over the past three decades. We will survey welfare state parties, policies, and politics, with a focus on the case studies of Britain, France, Germany, and Italy. In addition to studying changes in Western European politics in the last three decades, we will examine the methods political scientists use to explain similarities and differences among cases.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in department, Politics 106 recommended
Instructors: N. Toloudis

POLIT-237-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) European Politics - *Not offered this year/term
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores domestic, regional, and international political issues in contemporary Europe, including an introduction to political institutions, political participation, and public policy in several European states. Special attention to the European and democratic transformation in Central Europe.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department, Politics 106 recommended
Instructors: P. Gill

(Fall) International Political Economy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the interaction of politics and economics in the global economy. Topics include the development of the capitalist economy and its critics, the politics of trade and investment, and the phenomenon of global poverty.
Prerequisites: Politics 116
Instructors: V. Ferraro
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-246-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) American Political Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores limited government, popular sovereignty, representative institutions, checks and balances, republicanism, liberty, equality, democracy, pluralism, liberalism, and conservatism, and how these concepts have developed during three centuries of American politics and in contrast to European thought. The focus is not on the writings of the "great thinkers" but on the "habits of thought" of the American people and on ideas implicit in laws and institutions that affect the allocation of authority and power within the constitutional order.
Prerequisites: Politics 104, or History 170, 171, or 270, or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Pyle

POLIT-247-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) International Law
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course presents international norms and institutions for regulating conflict, including civil strife, promoting economic well-being, protecting human rights, exploring and using outer space, and controlling exploitation and pollution of the oceans. International agreements, problems of lawmaking, interpretation, and compliance; nationality and the status of foreigners and their investments; the principle of self-determination. Interests of postcolonial states as they impinge on the international legal order.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: W. Stewart

POLIT-250-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Black Urban Reform - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines how African Americans have shaped, and been shaped by, the modern American metropolis. Explores the impact of migration, residential segregation, changing economic conditions, and political incorporation on black urban life chances. Investigates the efforts of African Americans to deal with cities through organizations, movements, and traditions of black reform.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-252-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Topics in Urban Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course draws on both historical and contemporary sources to address critical issues and problems facing cities. Topics are organized around the following questions: How have cities come to take their shape and character over time? How are economic and social inequalities mapped onto the urban landscape? How are differences of race, class, and gender negotiated through urban institutions and community struggles? Assignments for the course will utilize empirical data to explore conflict and change in a local city through different historical periods.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, introductory course in American history or social sciences or permission of instructor
Notes: Team-taught with Holyoke Community College professor Mary Orisich, with student enrollment from both colleges.
Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-266-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Environmental Politics in America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course offers a critical investigation of the questions of power, politics, and principles surrounding environmental issues in the United States. Topics include a history of U.S. environmental policy and an analysis of the workings of our major environmental policy-making institutions: Congress, the executive branch, the courts, and private corporations. A variety of approaches to environmental activism are also examined, including mainstream environmentalism, grassroots activism, and deep ecology.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Amy
Expected enrollment: 25

POLIT-270-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) American Foreign Policy
(In International Relations 270, History 283)
In this examination of American foreign policy since 1898, topics include the emergence of the United States as a global power, its role in World War I and II, its conduct and interests in the cold war, and its possible objectives in a post-cold war world. Particular attention is paid to the relationship between domestic interests and foreign policy, the role of nuclear weapons in determining policy, and the special difficulties in implementing a democratic foreign policy. See &lt;a href="http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/intrel/afps98.htm"&gt;http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/intrel/afps98.htm&lt;/a&gt; for a more detailed description.

POLIT-313-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) The Politics of Poverty
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an analysis of economic inequality in America and an exploration of the power relationships, interests, and ideological conflicts surrounding this problem. Topics include the distribution of income and wealth in the United States; the relationship of poverty to race, sex, and class divisions; conservative, liberal, and progressive perspectives on poverty and poverty policy.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including Politics 101 or 104, and permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Amy
Expected enrollment: 18

POLIT-323-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Empire, State, Occupation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
We usually think of empires, states, and occupations as discrete kinds of political and social order. In this tale the state is the site of self-rule, law, rationality, justice, and accountability; in contrast, occupation and empire are sites of outsider domination, lawlessness, and ruthless force. The state (and state-system) becomes the unique source of juridical and moral sovereignty, whereas neither empire nor occupation can legitimate nor stabilize itself. This course will ask whether "modern," "legitimate," self-ruled states can really be distinguished from imperial or occupying states by focusing on state structures and forms of power across colonial and post-colonial regimes in Algeria, Haiti, and Iraq, among other areas.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department; or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Rudy
Expected enrollment: 18

POLIT-332-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Seminar on Electoral Systems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the American electoral system, analyzes its strengths and weaknesses, and considers whether alternative systems used in other democracies are superior. Can American elections be made fairer, more representative, and more democratic? Can voting become a more meaningful and effective political act? Among the topics: theories of representation, campaign finance, winner-take-all vs. proportional voting systems, gerrymandering, and representation of women and racial minorities.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including Politics 104
Instructors: D. Amy
Expected enrollment: 18

POLIT-333-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Cultural Politics - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course looks at key intersections of culture and power. Drawing on novelists, essayists, and theorists, we probe the cultural aspects of nationalist revolts, the situation of diaspora populations, the making of postcolonial subjects, the class significance of aesthetic style and taste, the paradoxes of particularism and universalism, and the repressive and creative tensions between dominant and marginal groups.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks
POLIT-344-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Fall) Social Movements
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A; Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores the dynamics of social movement genesis, activism, and decline. We will begin by surveying theoretical perspectives and discussing the history of social movement activism. We will then conduct case studies from different parts of the world and covering different time periods; our subjects will include twenty-first century anti-globalizationists, twentieth-century American civil rights activists, nineteenth-century working class movements, and eighteenth-century political pornographers from France.
Prerequisites: 8 credits from the department or permission of instructor
Instructors: N. Toloudis
Expected enrollment: 18

POLIT-345-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Memories of Overdevelopment - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A; Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
On unsettling features of modern and late modern society. These include the preeminence of the city over the country, the pursuit of infinite economic growth, the restless transformation of the landscape, the anonymity of power, the unmooring of the individual, the triumph of a culture of commodity fetishism, and the erosion of public space. We assess critical theories of the modern age as well as practical efforts to change its course.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks

POLIT-346-01 - Politics - 2009-2010
(Spring) Seminar in Public Policy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A; Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The purpose of this course is to develop the ability to analyze, choose, and promote public policies - the practical political skills that are essential to effective citizenship. Students work in teams on an assigned policy problem, analyzing it and determining the best solution. A large amount of class participation - both oral and written - is expected of all students.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department and permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Amy
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) War & Peace in South Asia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)

A region of deeply contested territories, histories and ideologies, South Asia is marked by multiple forms of conflict and violence that traverse territorial frontiers, link domestic politics with foreign policy, and thus complicate the search for peace and security. We will explore the histories and causes of enduring conflicts, such as Kashmir and the wars in Afghanistan, insurgencies in Pakistan, India and Sri Lanka, and potential conflicts over scarce water and energy resources. We will conclude by examining the role of external powers, such as China and the U.S. in South Asia and assessing the prospects for peace in the region.

Prerequisites: jr, sr; 8 credits in department

Instructors: K. Khory
Expected enrollment: 18

(Spring) Politics & Rhetoric
(Writing-intensive)

People have long accused politicians of using rhetoric to pander to audiences and get what they want regardless of the truth. But politics, especially democratic politics, depends on the persuasive force of communication to persuade and motivate others. What is the relationship between speech and politics? Can we have political communication without rhetoric? How can citizens use speech to improve democracy? What are the political effects of different rhetorical styles? How can speech help communities deal with conflict? The course will focus on these questions, moving from classical writings on rhetoric to contemporary democratic political theory.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department or in critical social thought

Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 18

(Complex Organizations 367)
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral?
When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?
Prerequisites: Politics 104, 245, 246, or permission of instructor, 2 meetings (75 minutes)
Instructors: C. Pyle

(Fall) Introductory Seminars in Psychology: All in the Family
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
If psychology is the study of the mind and behavior, do psychologists only study individuals? When we look at families do we simply have a collection of individual human psyches that we must try to understand one by one or does something more complex happen when groups such as the family come together? Can we understand families as whole complex systems with narratives all their own? Through the study of the family, this course will introduce students to systems thinking, another theoretical perspective from which to understand the psychology of human behavior. Our texts will include case studies, films, and writings by major family theorists.

PSYCH-240-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Visual and Auditory Perception - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Why is it that some people, mostly men, cannot distinguish red socks from green ones? Why does the moon on the horizon appear larger than when it is overhead? How do Magic Eye pictures work? Why does the Mona Lisa's smile seem so elusive? This course addresses such questions by examining biological and psychological studies of the visual and auditory systems. Among the topics we will explore are object recognition; color vision; the perception of depth, size, and movement; the effects of experience on perception; sound localization; and the perception of pitch.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-241-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Cognitive Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Cognition encompasses a range of phenomena that define our mental lives. This course considers empirical investigations and theoretical accounts of cognitive issues, including learning and memory, creativity and problem solving, decision making, attention, consciousness, and language.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: C. Lee
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-300-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Seminar in History and Systems of Psychology: Psychology and the Military - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive)
Psychology's history as a discipline is inextricably linked to the military -- as an employer of psychologists, as the context and funding source for many of psychology's products, and as the stimuli for the development of key areas of the field. In addition, psychologists' role in warfare (as test administrators, clinicians, and interrogators), and the psychological consequences of war on soldiers (from the shell shock of the 1920s to the PTSD of today) represent some of psychology's most persistent controversies. Reading a range of primary and secondary sources from World War I to the present, we will analyze psychology's complex relations to the military from multiple perspectives.
Prerequisites: Jr, Sr, 8 credits in department and permission of instructor. Preference given to students with some background in sociology, politics, or history
Notes: Interested students need to fill out an application form available in the Psychology department office.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor
(Gender Studies 333s(03))
This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students must meet with instructor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-320-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Concepts of Abnormality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of how maladaptive patterns of thought and action are understood from a psychological viewpoint. Behaviors ranging from neurotic to psychotic are studied in terms of underlying character structure and origins in childhood experience. Competing psychoanalytic theories are brought to bear on these phenomena.
Prerequisites: jr, sr (permission required for exceptions), two prior psychology courses, Psychology 230 recommended
Instructors: R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Laboratory in Qualitative Research
(Writing-intensive)
This course offers a hands-on introduction to methods of psychological research that focus on the qualitative description and analysis of human experience. Students learn a variety of techniques of data collection (interviewing, intensive observation, archival research) and methods of analyzing textual sources -- from historical accounts to blogs, memoirs, observational narratives, and interview transcripts. Readings focus on specific... methodological practices as well as on the history and philosophy of science differentiating qualitative methods from other approaches to psychological research. Students work both collaboratively and individually on projects throughout the course.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor.

Notes: This course also counts in the Social area of psychology.

Instructors: G. Hornstein

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-325-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Laboratory in Psychological Assessment

Historical development, theoretical bases, and critical evaluation of tests used to describe adult cognitive and personality functioning. Supervised practicum in test administration, scoring, and interpretation.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201, either Psychology 230 or 320, jr. or sr. and permission of instructor

Notes: Submit an essay (max 500 words) by April 9 to Robert Shilkret (box in Reese). In the essay, list psychology courses and grades; current psych courses; GPA; and describe why you want to take this course, relevant past experiences, and future goals related to the work for the course.

Instructors: R. Shilkret

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology

This course is an introduction to research methods in abnormal and personality psychology. Students will work as a class to collect data using quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Students will be expected to collect survey- and questionnaire-based data as well as engage in some interviewing projects. We will consider the various stages of research including literature review, design, ethical considerations, data collection, and analysis (qualitative and quantitative), and consider the statistical inference or implications of our findings. The course focuses on the impact of stress and coping on the lives of individuals, identity, their relationships, and psychological adjustment.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; one course in the personality/abnormal area or permission of instructor

Instructors: A. Douglas

Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: First-Person Narratives of Madness

(Speaking-intensive)

Psychologists have typically conceptualized "mental illness" in terms of the symptoms and diagnoses proposed by psychiatrists in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). These categories, while perhaps useful for prescribing medication, do little to help us understand the subjective experiences that are considered "mad." In this seminar, we analyze accounts (historical and contemporary) written by people who have experienced extreme states, intense emotions, or unusual perceptions or beliefs, to understand how these "counter-narratives" offer new insights into psychological life.

Prerequisites: A 100-level course in psychology, jr, sr and permission of instructor; Students with a background in literature particularly welcome.

Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors

Notes: Students must submit an information sheet (form available in department office) by noon on Thursday of advising week to get permission to register for the course.

Instructors: G. Hornstein

Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-329-02 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Psychology of Trauma - *Not offered this year/term

What happens after a traumatic event? Why do some people develop psychological disorders and others do not? This course will explore the psychological theories and research on trauma and stress. Topics covered will include childhood abuse, domestic violence, combat violence, community violence, and interpersonal violence. The seminar will explore psychological dysfunction, disorders, as well as adaptation and coping following exposure to traumatic stress. In addition, the course will explore the concept of "cultural trauma."

Prerequisites: 100 level psychology course, jr or sr; Psychology 230 preferred or a course in abnormal psychology

Instructors: A. Douglas

Expected enrollment: 16

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Adolescent Development in Community Settings

This course is a study of research methods in developmental psychology, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques for studying young children, adolescents, and adults. It encourages the student to think about the basic issues of developmental psychology research: the conceptualization of problems, design of research, choice of methods to be used, and ethical questions that might arise. Students complete a major research project.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201; 230 or 233 and permission of instructor.

Notes: Students must pick up an information sheet from the dept. office and submit a statement by email to the professor during advising week.

Instructors: B. Packard
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.

Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours), 2 labs (3 hours each) at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook

(Fall) Seminar in Educational Psychology: Motivation - *Not offered this year/term
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
What influences our desire to learn, to participate in certain activities, or to become particular kinds of people? We will examine the topic of "motivation" using several perspectives, across age levels and in various settings. Drawing from a variety of resources, including autobiographies, research studies, and videos, we will target our own motivation through reflection and action and the motivation of others through active coaching and mentoring in a community-based setting.

Prerequisites: Psychology 233 and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours); requires a field component in a community-based site (at least a 2-hour block per week); A statement of interest must be submitted electronically during the week of advising. Please pick up an information sheet in the department office.

Instructors: B. Packard

(Spring) Seminar in Developmental Psychology - *Not offered this year/term
Prerequisites: jr, sr
The relationship with the infant's primary caretaker, usually the mother, develops in a complex way during the first year after birth. We will study what is now known about this relationship, how we know about its importance to the infant, and the variation in types of such relationships early in life. The importance of this first love for later development, in childhood, adolescence, and adult life will be considered. Methods of research will be emphasized and students will be expected to give class presentations.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 200, 230 and permission of instructor; written statement to Professor Shilkret during advising week required

Instructors: R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy
(Community-based learning course)
Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor. Students must meet with the professor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) plus 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2009-2010
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and one of the following: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333
Notes: Interested students must meet with the instructor before or during the advising week to obtain additional information about the course.
Instructors: W. Millard

(Spring) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior: Of Madness and Molecules: Seminar in Neuropsychopharmacology
Charpentier, a French scientist of the 1940s, unwittingly discovered a chemical that was to alter dramatically our understanding of madness. The chemical, chlorpromazine, has been widely used for the treatment of psychosis. Of interest is neuropsychopharmacology—the science and the technology. The principles of pharmacology are discussed and precede the examination of applications of the technology to psychopathology (for example, schizophrenia, depression, anxiety, and violent behavior).
Prerequisites: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333. Preenrolled seniors and psychology and neuroscience and behavior majors have priority
Instructors: W. Millard

(Fall) Examining the Ideas of Geometry and Measurement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Mathematics 201-01)
Participants will work with two- and three-dimensional shapes, develop mathematical vocabulary regarding features of shapes, and explore definitions and properties of geometric objects. Includes a study of angle, similarity, congruence, and the relationship between 3-D objects and their 2-D representations. The measurement component will provide opportunities to examine different attributes of size, develop facility in composing and decomposing shapes, and apply these skills to make sense of formulas for area and volume. As participants explore the conceptual issues of length, area, and volume and their complex interrelationships, they will also examine how children develop these ideas.
Prerequisites: Permission of Instructor

(Fall) Whiteness, Racism, and Inequality in Schools and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
What is race? Who decides? What does it mean to be white? How is the ideology of whiteness maintained? We will explore these and related questions as we examine the ways in which whiteness and racism are enacted in schools, have historically interfered with the educational attainment of children of color, and have led to the mis-education of white children. Readings and assignments will examine dynamics of dominance and how the construction of racial identities influences the lives of teachers and students in classrooms. We will also consider theories of multicultural education and antiracist pedagogies as strategies for addressing racial and other inequities in schools.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes) plus prepracticum
Instructors: S. Lawrence

(January) Observing and Assisting in Inclusive Classrooms
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students are expected to complete a supervised field experience full-time every day during the January Term in an inclusive classroom in a school setting. Placements can be located within or outside of the Five College area. In addition to the field experience component, students attend three course meetings (detailed below). Reading and writing assignments focus on a survey of learning disabilities, descriptions of special education programs, understanding Individuals with Disabilities Education Act policies and placement options, interpreting Individualized Education Program plans, and planning curriculum for inclusive classrooms.
Prerequisites: One of the following: Psychology 230, 233, 236, Education 205, Educational Studies 109, 215, 301 or permission of instructor. Three mandatory meetings (2 hours each): two in November and one in Feb. Prepracticum: five days a week for three weeks in January; permission to participate in prepracticum experience for credit is contingent upon attendance at the meetings in November. Consult Ms. Lawrence or Ms. Carlisle in October for exact dates of the November course meetings.
Notes: This course is required of all students pursuing teacher licensure. Graded on a credit/no credit basis.

(Spring) Practicum Seminar on Teaching and Learning: Early Childhood and Elementary Education
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This weekly seminar provides students with opportunities to examine curriculum development models, develop an integrated curriculum unit utilizing state and national content area standards, review researched based models of classroom management, and engage in dialogue with practicing teachers regarding numerous aspects of teaching and student learning. Additional topics covered include the arts in education, physical education, legal obligations of teachers, and home-school communication. As is the case in all pre-licensure programs, there is continued emphasis on addressing the needs of students with disabilities and English Language Learners.
Prerequisites: Limited to students accepted into the practicum year program

(Spring) Student Teaching in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 10; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Students participate in full-time student teaching in early childhood and elementary classrooms for 12 weeks. During this semester-long field-based placement, students hone classroom management skills, implement an extended integrated curriculum unit, deliver lessons in all content areas, and develop a wide range of assessment skills. The practicum culminates in two weeks of Lead Teaching, during which the student is responsible for managing all aspects of the classroom program. Students work with classroom teachers and college supervisors to address Professional Teaching Standards as required by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' Pre-service Performance Assessment Program.
Prerequisites: Prereq. sr, Education 300, 325 and 324j, and permission of instructor

(Spring) Connecting Arithmetic to Algebra (CAA)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(The courses offered by SummerMath for Teachers are approved by both the Psychology and Education and the Mathematics and Statistics departments.)
In Connecting Arithmetic to Algebra, participants consider generalizations that arise from the study of number and operations in grades 1 through 6. They examine cases of students engaged in articulating general claims, working to understand those claims, and learning how to prove them. The course focuses on how this approach to mathematical thinking supports a range of mathematics learners, including those who have difficulty and those who need additional challenge. Participants explore the behavior of the four basic operations, develop a repertoire of representations for each of them, articulate generalizations in common language and in algebraic notation, and work on developing proof.

(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 226fs)
This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in the texts of Schleiermacher and Coleridge and in the poetry of Novalis. Finally, we focus on the pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion, especially in the work of William James, Josiah Royce, and Cornel West.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

The power of sacred myths to shape cultural worldviews is extraordinary. This course examines, compares, and critiques this phenomenon in an attempt to understand how it informs the spiritual journey. From Siddhartha to The DaVinci Code, chronicles on religious personalities have commanded rapt attention throughout history. Using the structural analysis of Geertz, Tillich, Eliade, and Crites, texts such as Life of Pi, The Alchemist, The Matrix, and other prominent accounts will be placed against the great spiritual stories of major religious traditions in order to determine their status as contemporary sacred myths.

(Asian Studies 325)

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and inexcise tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Asian Religions: IV. Sacred Narratives in the Hindu Tradition. - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course provides the opportunity for intensive study in Asian religious traditions. One of the traditions listed here is considered each time the course is offered. The student may therefore receive credit more than once. I. The Islamic Tradition II. History of Chinese Thought III. Japanese Religious Traditions IV. Hinduism
Telling, enacting, and listening to stories are essential modes of religious activity in the Hindu tradition. We will study the major types of sacred narrative in Hinduism, including creation myths, epic tales, stories of the gods, women's stories, and the lives of exemplary figures such as the saint-devotees of Shiva and Krishna. The tales will be examined from the perspectives of narrative structure and meaning in relation to forms of expression (e.g., the icon of the dancing Shiva, the Ramayana epic theater), and contexts (e.g., women's rites and the festival of the great Goddess).

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.
This course will examine the historical and cultural creation of the Shaker society. The religious vision of an alternative society whose birth and development paralleled that of the new American nation; by contrast and by imitation, the separate Shaker route thus offers an intriguing critique of American society and its values, and an unusual laboratory for examining a religious community based on a dual godhead.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 330, Italian 361, French 321, Gender Studies 333)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in the Romance language of the student's choice.
Much of twentieth-century gay writing in Latin America is characterized by an esthetiс celebration of anti-humanism, which has often clashed with left-wing progressive politics in these countries. But how does a "gay style" come about? What is its genealogy? How does it identify itself, and what does such an identity mean politically and historically? In this seminar, we will study a number of writers from Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Peru, and Uruguay, and examine their roots in French and Italian anti-humanist authors from Baudelaire, Lautréamont, and Rimbaud to Genet and Pasolini. We will also read a few key texts in queer theory.
Prerequisites: for Spanish majors: two courses in Spanish at the 200-level above 212
Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student's choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish students must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive credit.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Chekhov’s Stories and Plays: Women on the Verge of the Twentieth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)
This course looks at the lives of Russian women through the eyes of Anton Chekhov, the great short story and play writer. Chekhov will introduce us to the issues women faced at the turn of the nineteenth century—such as identity, sexuality, power, and class—in settings that range from the country estate and the peasant hut to the urban center and seaside resort. Through close readings of stories and plays, we will trace Chekhov's literary techniques for crafting his female characters and their contexts. Readings include "Lady with a Lapdog," Three Sisters, "Anna on the Neck," and The Cherry Orchard. Film adaptations and stage productions of the texts will be incorporated.

(Taught in English; History 205)
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

(Taught in English)
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

This course examines pivotal archetypes of Russian civilization that reflect Russia's past, demarcate its present, and constric its future. We will focus on the canonic historical monuments of Russia, such as the Kremlin of Moscow and the downtown of St. Petersburg. Starting with the representation of these landmarks in the media, we will explore them in depth by reading conflicting historical narratives and cultural histories and eventually deconstruct their cultural message and value. By the end of the course, students will be familiar with the Eastern Orthodox Christianity rites and able to identify and discuss the most common artifacts of Russian civilization.

(Taught in English)
To explain the fundamental conflict in Tolstoy's art, Sir Isaiah Berlin advanced the now famous formula that Tolstoy was a fox (pluralist) struggling to be a hedgehog (monist). Indeed, throughout his life and in his art, Tolstoy sought to shape experience into a single and all-embracing philosophical principle, but he was never able to suppress his extravagant intuition that existence, being contradictory, fragmentary, and ultimately subject to forces beyond human control, defeated attempts at codification. We will read War and Peace in an attempt to understand how that irresolvable conflict fuels Tolstoy's intellectual pursuits and informs his theories on art.

Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without the study of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and, following the collapse of the USSR in 1991, the role played by Russia and Russia and the former Soviet republics in the far more complex and multipolar "New World Order." What should U.S. policy be toward the emerging new states of the Baltics, Central Asia, and Caucasus?
RES-242-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2009-2010
(Spring) Oil and Water Don't Mix: Geopolitics, Energy, and the Environment - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 242s)
Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: Red Star over Russia: The Totalitarian Regime of Lenin and Stalin, 1917-1953
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 260(03))
The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 marked the coming of totalitarianism to Russia. Led first by Lenin and then by Stalin, the country went through the most brutal civil war, purges, World War II, and the first stages of cold war. This period also saw immense social change and sweeping economic transformation. What were the causes of totalitarianism in Russia? How did the regime function? What were the major landmarks of Russian history in the period 1917-1953?

RES-312-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2009-2010
(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent
(Taught in English)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe. Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics, IR, RES, or history
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) The New Democracies - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 300f)
With the collapse of the USSR we were told that history was dead and liberal democracy triumphant. There was a "third wave" of democratic change. How accurate have these optimistic characterizations turned out to be? After an introduction to theories of liberal democracy and to the new discipline of "transitology" we will look at how states and leaders have applied such liberal-democratic ideas in Eastern Europe and the former USSR (with comparative examples from Africa and South America), and with what success.
Prerequisites: any two courses in any combination from politics, international relations, or economics

Expected enrollment: 15

RES-330-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2009-2010
(Spring) Nationalism - *Not offered this year/term
Preamble (for topics courses): Courses in this section satisfy the distribution requirement in social sciences.
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnictensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?
Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics, international relations, or Russian and Eurasian studies
Instructors: S. Jones
Expected enrollment: 15

RES-343-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2009-2010
(Fall) Terrorism: Russia as Its Cradle
(Taught in English; Politics 243s)
Russia was the first nation in the world to face political terrorism. In Russia, the era of terrorism lasted from the 1860s, when the People's Will group launched the hunt on the tsar Alexander II, until 1918, when the Socialist Revolutionary Party attempted to assassinate Lenin. A case study of terrorism in Russia will help us to answer a number of questions highly relevant today. What are the causes of terrorism? What are its goals and methods? What can governments do to cope with it? What is the impact of terrorism on society?

(Fall) Revolutions - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 350f)
Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia's early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Spring) Special Topics in Sociology: Measuring Social Inequality
In this course, we will discuss the various ways social scientists have sought to measure inequality in advanced industrial societies. These include studies of occupation, income, wealth, poverty, and residential location. This course will build on knowledge of methods in the social sciences by exploring the ways in which method and measurement are worked in practice to explain how inequality is structured. This is not a course in quantitative analysis, however some familiarity with statistics is expected.
Prerequisites: 12 credits of social science courses or permission of instructor
Instructors: M. McKeever
Expected enrollment: 20

SPAN-202-01 - Spanish - 2009-2010
(Spring) Spanish for Heritage Speakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Any “heritage” speaker regardless of her level of oral proficiency in Spanish may enroll. Course components build on students’ existing linguistic skills, encourage interactions with various texts and media (i.e., written essays, newspapers, films, and other media), and examine issues of importance to Spanish speakers of the Americas. Specific activities include formal and informal writing, class discussions, oral presentations such as interviews, dialogues, and role-plays; grammar review focusing on verb tenses and syllabification; vocabulary expansion and development; peer editing of written assignments; analysis of literary works from Spain and Latin America; and a semester project.
Prerequisites: fy, soph, jr, or sr with permission of instructor
Notes: This course is designed for students who have acquired oral fluency in Spanish through their home environments but have had little formal training in reading and writing.

(Fall) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Introduction to Gender Studies in the Spanish-Speaking World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 101)

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

This course, taught in Spanish, is an introduction to the interdisciplinary field of gender studies. It also focuses on the specific implications of this new, predominantly U.S.-based discipline for and in the Spanish speaking world. The intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in various contexts, past and present, will be central to our inquiry. Topics will include the politics of appearance, women's economic status, sexual violence, racism, legacies of colonialism, the challenges of transnational feminist and queer activism, and strategies for change. We will examine the development of feminist and queer theory and its practices in various local and transnational contexts, but especially in the Spanish-speaking world.

(Spring) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Black Spain
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This survey course studies the complex histories and identities of blacks in Spain from the early medieval period to the present. The aim of this course is to learn a new historical perspective that brings into focus the role of black Africans (or those of African descent) as significant actors in the construction of Spain. An interdisciplinary approach will take us from the first visual representation of blacks in Alfonso X's Cantigas in the thirteenth century, through the plays based on the Renaissance black scholar Juan Latino, to the contemporary musical contributions of Hijas del Sol and Buika.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
This course will center on how U.S. Latino/a literature bears witness to identity formation, self-representation, and celebration of Latino culture and its people. It will explore a series of critical issues that define "latinidad" in the U.S., including language (bilingualism, Spanglish, code-switching, and "dialect"), race/ethnicity/color, gender, migration, racism, and difference. The texts in the course are representative of a body of oral and written literature that is of great depth and breadth that articulates the experience of being Latino/a in the U.S. Although the course is taught in English, familiarity with Spanish is useful.

(Spring) Concepts and Practices of Power: An Introduction: Fighting Words: Imperial Discourses and Resistance in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.
In 1492, the Spanish conquest forever changed indigenous America and created a new world. European imperial discourses collided with resistance movements and the emerging voices of oppressed peoples, including indigenous peoples, women, and mestizos. This course traces the tensions between imperialist and resistance discourses during both the colonial period and today. We will analyze the literary "fighting words" that consolidated the Spanish empire and later opened the path to Latin American independence. Tracing the impact of these struggles on the Americas today, we will examine how subaltern communities currently fight to make their voices heard in a globalized world.

(Spring) Studies in Language and Society: An Introduction: Introduction to Hispanic Linguistics
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of specific form/meaning relations in the linguistic system of Spanish and the function of language in society. Topics may include, but are not limited to, languages in contact, bilingualism, teaching methodology, translation and interpretation, sociolinguistics, phonetics and phonology, morpho-syntax, semantics and pragmatics. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

The main objectives of this course are to consolidate the knowledge of the language, as well as to help both non-native and native speakers understand and explain how Spanish works as a linguistic system for communication. Topics covered in this course will range from a review of general goals and methods in Linguistics, to phonetics and phonology, morphology and syntax, semantics, and language variation within the Spanish speaking world. The coursework will highlight those grammatical aspects that are typically problematic for learners of Spanish as a second language.

This course will study the way Spain defines itself as a nation by exploring the political, religious, and cultural relations between different racial and ethnic groups, which have coexisted in Spain throughout history. We will focus on three historical moments: the thirteenth century (the "so-called" tolerance between Arabs, Christians, and Jews); the sixteenth century (the Inquisition and its effects on conversos and moriscos); and the twentieth century (the arrival of immigrants from Africa and their relevance in the formation of a new Spain). Our approach will be interdisciplinary, e.g., literature, history, media, music, and films.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Spanish 330, Italian 361, French 321, Gender Studies 333)
Much of twentieth-century gay writing in Latin America is characterized by an estheticist celebration of anti-humanism, which has often clashed with left-wing progressive politics in these countries. But how does a "gay style" come about? What is its genealogy? How does it identify itself, and what does such an identity mean politically and historically? In this seminar, we will study a number of writers from Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Peru, and Uruguay, and examine their roots in French and Italian anti-humanist authors from Baudelaire, Lautréamont, and Rimbaud to Genet and Pasolini. We will also read a few key texts in queer theory.
Prerequisites: Two courses in Spanish at the 200-level above 212.
Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student's choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive advanced credit.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
"Flowers from the Volcano," an iconic poem by Salvadoran-Nicaraguan writer Claribel Alegría, serves as a point of departure in this course as we examine indigenous myths, memory, and revolutionary movements and civil conflict in Central American texts from Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and U.S.-Central American Latinos. The writings of Alegría, Dalton, Belli, Rigby, Ramírez, Cardenal, Duncan, Asturias, and Payeras question history and express ethnic, cultural, and national identities. We will focus on movements such as the Sandinista Revolution; civil wars in El Salvador and Guatemala; migration; and indigenous, black, and feminist movements in the region.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Visual Cultures: Memory (of) War

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the repressive, right-wing military regime of Francisco Franco (1939-1975) have shaped contemporary thought and cultural production in Spain. Cinema in particular shows a persistent concern with war and memory. The films studied in this course raise a number of philosophical and political questions to this effect. How does the devastation of war register through the medium of film? How do censorship and propaganda condition memory, and how does the past return in a postdictatorship? What and why do people choose to remember or to forget? Films to be studied include both mainstream commercial features and experimental works, and range in genre.

(Spring) Advanced Studies in Concepts and Practices of Power: Community Narratives: (In)Visibility and Representation in Literature and Media

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This community-based learning course examines how storytelling can enable communities to gain social visibility through literary and media discourses. How are marginalized communities (such as Latin American immigrants in the U.S. and Spain, street kids in Brazil, and the Zapatistas in Mexico) represented in dominant public discourse? And how do these groups tell their own stories in order to gain social recognition and create alternative identity/ies? Using these guiding questions, students will collaborate with local community organizations working with Latino youth to empower them to gain greater visibility in U.S. society through media.

THEAT-122-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) Design I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to the art and work of the set and costume designer in the performing arts. Students will learn how a designer approaches a script, how their work impacts a production, and what means are used in the execution of this process. They will learn how to develop their own visual imaginations and how to create visual concepts through discussions, renderings, and models. No previous experience in theatre, performance, or the visual arts is required.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and lab; $30. lab fee. Additional purchase of design supplies and materials is the responsibility of the student.
Instructors: V. James
Expected enrollment: 16

THEAT-128-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) Sound Design I - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
What is sound design? This course attempts to answer that question, exploring how to look at a text and launch the creative process, and how to take the ideas based on that creative process and turn them into sounds to be used in a show. This is all done through a series of introductory lab projects and then a complete design for a short play, all while learning three new pieces of software. This is a highly interactive class, where student participation is key; students will be expected to take part in each project, as well as creating their own work.
Instructors: R. Kaplowitz
THEAT-150-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) What Is Performance?
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What's the difference between acting and being, and how does the idea of "performance" structure this difference? How do we "perform" our own identities, and how do we interpret the performances of others? This seminar offers a basic introduction to performance studies, an exciting new discipline through which everyday life, ritual behaviors, and artistic practices are studied. Perspectives from the arts, humanities, and social sciences will be explored using both textual and performative approaches. This is a speaking-, reading-, and writing-intensive class that includes innovative individual and group exercises.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Babb

THEAT-166-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) Introduction to the Music of Africa - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Music 166) This course concentrates on indigenous musical traditions from different parts of Africa. Cross-cultural features as well as regional varieties are examined. A major objective of the course is to facilitate an understanding of the cultural contexts within which African musical traditions derive their meaning and significance. Relying on live performances and recordings, the course examines the conceptual and behavioral aspects of music, the contexts and functions of performances, musical instruments and vocal styles, the training and status of musicians, and the stylistic features of the music. The course culminates in a performance of an African opera.

THEAT-205-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Spring) Acting II - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A continuation of techniques developed in Performance I with a greater commitment to the culture of collaboration. Concentration is on scene work with "classic" realist playwrights, Chekhov, Ibsen, and Williams. Scene study continues with contemporary masters Churchill, Mamet, and Parks. Actor training will involve the embodiment of physical behavior, the visceral use of language, and more intermediate composition work with Viewpoints to develop and refine character. Practical tools explored in class are intended to offer the student greater vocal, physical, and imaginative freedom and clarity, as well as formidable text analysis skills.
Prerequisites: Theatre Arts 105 or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (2 hours); lab; $10 lab fee.
Instructors: R. Babb
Expected enrollment: 14

THEAT-215-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Spring) Topics in Performance: Advanced Acting Workshop
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This is an advanced acting/scene study class for actors, dancers, visual artists and filmmakers who are interested in the medium of video and live performance. We'll address the challenges and possibilities the use of live media poses for theatre practitioners. We will address the questions: What happens when you introduce video into live performance? How does the actor interact with video on the stage? What are the potential relationships between text, the live body, and media? We will work with/from dramatic texts and there will be theoretical and dramaturgical reading assignments.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: $10 lab fee
Instructors: B. OHarra
Expected enrollment: 12

THEAT-215-02 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010

THEAT-234-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) Topics in Theatre Studies: American Drama, 1787 to 1994
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 234, American Studies 290-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): Various topics in theatre studies including particular theatrical periods and genres. Topics may include melodrama, postcolonial theatre, early twentieth-century avant-garde movement, feminist theatre, etc. These courses include historical and theoretical approaches and could involve interdisciplinary collaboration.
This course offers a broad survey of American drama in the context of performance traditions such as minstrelsy, melodrama, realism, the Broadway musical, and the avant-garde. We read works that challenge and expand concepts of national identity and their connection to discourses of race, class, ethnicity, and gender. How do the characters and landscapes of these plays reflect historical events and theatrical inventions? What do they tell us about what it means to be an "American," and how have our answers changed over time? Playwrights will include Tyler, Baker, Aiken, Brown, Boucicault, O'Neill, Stein, Hurston, Wilder, Williams, Miller, Shepard, Kennedy, Wilson, Kushner, and Parks.

THEAT-251-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Fall) Histories of Performance I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of world performance history, including the evolution of human language and consciousness; the rise of oral, ritual, and shamanic performance; religious and civic festivals; and imperial theatre practices that position the stage at the dangerous intersection of religious worship, public taste, royal patronage, and government censure. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force in various societies. We explore not only how performances were created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but also for whom, and why.
Instructors: E. Rundle
Expected enrollment: 25

THEAT-252-01 - Theatre Arts - 2009-2010
(Spring) Histories of Performance II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
A historical survey of dramatic texts and world performance traditions from the seventeenth to the twentieth centuries, with attention given to: the influence of print culture on early modern theatrical movements; the rise of nationalism and the creation of dramatic genres; and the effects of industry and technology on experimental modernist forms. Understanding performance as both artistic practice and social institution, this course emphasizes the role performance has played in changing audiences and as a cultural and political force. As such, we explore not only how performances are created—in terms of design, dramaturgy, architecture, and acting—but for whom, and why.

(Fall) Seminar: Shakespeare's "Problem Plays"
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 312-01)
This course explores plays in Shakespeare's canon that seem to defy conventional classifications. How do we make sense of "comedies" that end in violence or oppression? How does our system of classifying plays oversimplify Shakespeare's experiments with genre? We will take a new look at what makes Shakespeare's plays innovative, and develop an in-depth understanding of their dramatic forms. Readings include some of Shakespeare's most well-known plays, such as The Merchant of Venice, Measure for Measure, All's Well That Ends Well, as well as some of his least known, such as The Two Noble Kinsmen. We will also read one or two non-Shakespearean plays for context and comparison.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 211 or permission of instructor

Spring Seminar: Performance Criticism Workshop

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This seminar immerses students in the local theatre scene. Through conscious spectatorship, we learn to approach live performance from a critical perspective, rethinking how we see, understand, and respond as audience members. In addition, we read and discuss the work of selected theatre critics, considering the politics of theatre-going as a public discourse. Each student will write a number of short reviews over the semester, which will be workshoped with an eye for publication. As such, we will consider elements of style and tone, and practice the arts of editing, revising, and offering feedback to others.

The commercial theater of Shakespeare and his contemporaries evolved as a popular art as the emerging market for printed books began to create a popular literature. Theaters, acting companies, plays, and theatrical audiences helped shape each other, as the book trade shaped and was shaped by reading publics. Case studies in plays by such writers as Christopher Marlowe, Thomas Dekker, Ben Jonson, Thomas Middleton, Elizabeth Cary, and John Webster; sustained attention to acting companies, performance practices such as cross-dressing, gender roles, and sexuality. Substantial opportunity for independent work reflecting each student's interests.

African American and African Studies

AFRAM-100-01 - African American and African Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) First-Year Seminar: American Dreams, American Dilemmas: Race, Democracy, and Human Capability in the Twenty-first Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Dreams of full citizenship in North America for the descendants of enslaved African Americans have been overdetermined by dilemmas of racial inequality and racial conflict. After nearly 400 years in "the new world," the "beloved community" remains elusive. What progress has been made? What challenges remain? Is the project of integration and racial harmony dead (and, if so, what would an autopsy reveal)? What work remains in the quest for racial, gender, and economic justice and democracy? The course has two goals: to highlight critical questions and debates around black striving, and to develop good writing and critical thinking skills.
Prerequisites: fy only
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 18

AFRAM-101-01 - African American and African Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to African American and African Studies: Identity, Community, and Progress - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will introduce students to topics and methodologies within the vast field of African studies. This course will attempt to disrupt the history-based, U.S.-centric model by presenting alternate texts and approaches to the study of the global black experience. We must necessarily begin by questioning the idea, definition, and practice of blackness: what is it? How did a unified black identity emerge from disparate people, practices, and experiences? After investigating the formation of the African diaspora, we will consider texts from the Americas, Europe, and the continent, assessing each for its historical, aesthetic, political, and cultural value.

(Spring) Black Women Writers: Feminist Visions from the African Diaspora - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 204)
This course will explore the influence of feminist politics on the writing of women throughout the African Diaspora. By exploring the different cultural, political, and historical contexts in which these writers work, we will attempt to define the continuities and conflicts that exist within the vast field of black women's writing. Why, when, and how did a black feminist consciousness emerge? How did racial tensions within the predominantly white feminist movement lead to the development of a separate black "womanist"/Third World agenda? How does feminist literature of the African Diaspora challenge negative stereotypes and misrepresentations of black women's realities?

(Community-based learning course)
Reviews theory and policy research that targets durable (race, gender, and class) inequalities. How has recent policy (especially involving schools and prisons) shaped public life and private sector capacity in communities of color from 1976 to the present? What are the consequences of governing through crime and punishment? Is poor discipline a viable approach to strengthening the social fabric? Data and personal narrative will be used. Brings together Mount Holyoke students and women in the final stages of their sentences in Hampden County, who collaborate as peers in a semester-long exploration of these issues. The semester culminates with a reading and completion ceremony.
Prerequisites: interview with instructor, jr & sr only except by permission. Interviews 29 March-6 April 2010; email lbwilson@mtholyoke.edu for appointment

(Spring) Luminous Darkness: African American Social Thought - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Examines the causes of and proposed solutions to "the Negro problem" in post-Civil War American public policy. Focuses on the life, work, and legacies of DuBois. Drawing on domestic and diasporic fictional and nonfictional depictions of black life in the "DuBoisian century" the course considers different responses to his 1903 question, "How does it feel to be a problem?" Examining theories, arguments, movements and policies targeting blacks and their environment allows us to criticize black modernity, assess the changing role of black intellectuals in society, evaluate "race theory" and consider dominant and marginal attempts to analyze and overcome the "color line" in America.

(Fall) Gender, Terror, and Trauma in African American Culture - *Not offered this year/term
This course will explore representations of violence in African American culture, with special consideration given to literary depictions of rape and lynching. After examining the historical function of violence within the United States, students will perform a comparative analysis of texts authored by black women and men. We will also explore cultural, social, and political movements (abolition, civil rights, black power, black feminism, hip-hop) that have emerged in response to the violent policing of black bodies. How has violence been used to terrorize blacks? What role has violence played in the African American struggle for liberation and equality?

(Fall) Black Feminism: Theory and Praxis: Black Feminisms: Theory and Praxis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course explores foundational texts of major authors along with lesser-known contributors to the black feminist movement, from the nineteenth century to the present. It also examines the various ways in which black feminist theory has been expressed in and applied to the arts and political activism, analyzing black feminist cultural criticism as it applies to music, film, fine arts, performance, and literature. Conflicts and continuities between black and white feminists, and the role of profeminist men within the movement will be considered as well.

(Spring) Sex, Love, and Gender in Contemporary African American Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Film Studies 320-01)
This course will explore the representation in film of intimate relationships among African Americans. Confronting an ongoing history of racist, sexist, and homophobic images, films produced by and featuring blacks can offer alternate interpretations of love, romance, and sexuality. Coupled with literature and theoretical readings by feminists and black cultural critics, students will consider the function of—and challenges to—intimacy in interpersonal relationships among African Americans. Directors under consideration include Spike Lee, Kasi Lemmons, Marlon Riggs, and Sanaa Hamri.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Japanese Conceptions of Nature, Culture, and Technology
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Every culture draws the boundaries differently between culturally recognized categories, whether between life and death, nature and culture, male and female, native and foreign, or purity and pollution. This course explores Japanese cultural categories, focusing specifically on conceptions of nature, culture, and technology. Do Japanese see nature and culture in opposition, or consider one to be a part of the other? How do they see the relationship between humans and animals, and humans and robots? Examining the way such categories are organized and negotiated, we may get a sense of a Japanese cultural logic, or of an underlying politics that bends logic to serve its own needs.

(Fall) Anthropology of Modern Japan
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Since the mid-nineteenth century, Americans have viewed Japan as the Orient's most exotic and mysterious recess, alternately enticing and frightening in its difference. Intense economic relations and cultural exchange between Japan and the U.S. have not dispelled the image of Japanese society and culture as fundamentally different from our own. In this course, we will strive for greater understanding of shared experiences as well as historical particularities. Issues covered may vary from one semester to another, but frequently focus on work, women, minorities, and popular culture. Films and anthropological works provide ethnographic examples of some key concepts.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Early European explorers, modern travelers, collectors, curators, and archaeologists have contributed to the development of ancient Latin American collections in museums across the globe. This course traces the history of these collecting practices and uses recent case studies to demonstrate how museums negotiate—successfully and unsuccessfully—the competing interests of scholars, donors, local communities, and international law. Students will learn how archaeologists study a variety of artifact types within museum collections and will have the opportunity to conduct independent research projects using pre-Columbian pottery collections from the Mount Holyoke Art Museum.
Prerequisites: Not open to first-year students; one course required either in archaeology, anthropology, history of Latin America, museum studies, or art history.

(Gender Studies 250-01s)
This course will address the predicaments of women who must negotiate local contexts shaped by transnational markets, changing patterns of agriculture and agro-forestry, and struggles over indigenous land rights. How have arguments about democracy shaped the struggles women take up locally, nationally, and transnationally in opposition to corporate power, national policies, and supranational agencies such as the World Trade Organization?

(Fall) Special Topics in Anthropology: Research Seminar in Sociology and Anthropology
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Sociology 216f-02)
This seminar meets to discuss practical issues in doing research in anthropology and sociology. Depending on student interest, activities could include reading field notes, narrative analysis of texts, survey design, coding and measurement of quantitative variables, and/or visual analysis. Students might think about how to develop a class paper into an independent study, how to organize research for a thesis, or how to make sense of research and internship experience off-campus or during Study Abroad.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in Anthropology or Sociology

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Food and Bathing Culture in Japan
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

In Japan, the seemingly mundane, quotidian practices of eating and bathing reveal highly meaningful cultural dimensions. Eating and bathing practices constitute techniques of the body and of the self. Food nourishes, and bathing cleanses, the physiological body. Distinct eating and bathing practices reveal underlying cultural understandings of purity and pollution, health and sanitation, and the very way that the body is imagined and inhabited. Eating and bathing also provide opportunities for commensality, in which the boundaries of selves and larger social groupings are constituted and maintained. This two-credit course will explore these issues in Japan during the first half of June 2011.

(Fall) Manufacturing Knowledge
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The course explores the contemporary scholarship that addresses the role played by print literacy and information technology in the history of science, in the formation of identity, and in the development of the postmodern imagination. From the invention of movable print to the Internet and beyond, the production and reproduction of knowledge is mediated both by technology and by society that introduces this technology and is, in turn, changed by it. Identity, whether logical, technological or social, is a pivotal player in this process.

(Fall) Anthropology of Reproduction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course covers major issues in the anthropology of reproduction, including the relationship between production and reproduction, the gendered division of labor, the state and reproductive policy, embodied metaphors of procreation and parenthood, fertility control and abortion, crosscultural reproductive ethics, and the social implications of new reproductive technologies. We examine the social construction of reproduction in a variety of cultural contexts.

(Fall) Visual Anthropology in the Material World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Film Studies 320f-01)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic Magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home - workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.
Prerequisites: Anthropology 105 and 4 additional credits in department

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Gender, Food, and Agriculture in the Global Context
(Gender Studies 333-05f)
This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Risk
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
People in all societies face uncertainty. Yet we have taken fear of the unknown and calculations of risk to a new level. Dangers appear to confront us at every turn -- in the form of tainted food, global warming, epidemics, market collapses, and accidents at work and on roads. Terrorist attacks in New York and Tokyo, and crime in Sao Paulo, have led to the increased control of public spaces in these cities. Public spaces have been the source of both excitement and anxiety, but cultures of risk have emphasized their dangers. This course will explore some of the implications of cultures of risk.

(Spring) Special Topics in Anthropology: Landscapes of Indigeneity: Indigenous Peoples and Law in North America
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course explores some of the current legal issues facing indigenous peoples in the US and Canada from an anthropological perspective. An orienting question for this course is how contemporary "landscapes of indigeneity" came to be as a result of complex legal, political, economic and sociocultural processes. Topics include law, colonialism, and nation-building; law, science, and the emergence of indigenous legal identities; real and intellectual property; and contemporary indigenous legal issues in (post)colonial settler societies including repatriation, Indian gaming, and resource rights.

(Spring) Global Health and Humanitarianism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
This course examines global health disparities and the unequal distribution of disease, focusing on the health consequences of poverty, structural violence, and globalization. In addition, we will examine the foundations of global humanitarianism and the complexities, constraints, and prospects for working collaboratively across borders to resolve global health problems. Readings will address how global health is constructed and represented, and why humanitarian endeavors (charitable, philanthropic, NGO, religious, etc.) have emerged as the preferred manner of addressing global health problems in the contemporary era.

Architectural Studies

ARCH-101-01 - Architectural Studies - 2010-2011
(January) Architectural Design Studio: Shelter
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this intensive three-week architectural design studio, students will be required to think critically about the nature of shelter; the experience of transitory habitation; the notion of a building as clothing or umbrella. Through several assigned exercises, students will practice using the architectural modes of paraline drawing and model-making in order to develop a design for the bus stop shelter for the Mount Holyoke campus. Site considerations, basic building tectonics and materials will be addressed through readings and discussion and explored through the process of design.
Prerequisites: Experience in a studio art or architectural class recommended but not required.
Notes: Studio fee: $50 No class Monday, January 17th in observance of Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday, 3 hour class final day, Friday, January 21st, final design critique
Instructors: H. Fantini
Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-103-01 - Architectural Studies - 2010-2011
(January) Portfolio Documentation and Design
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed to teach students how to look at a large body of work; organize, edit, archive, and ultimately convey its content in a visually succinct, artful and graphically articulate way. Students take inventory of their art/architecture projects, learning how to discern convincing work.
Students are taught the basic principles of digital photography and the use of natural light. Students are introduced to the graphic design tools Photoshop C5 and Indesign C5. Student efforts culminate in a physical document as well as a working digital portfolio. This course is formulated to enable students to see the fruition of their work by making physical ideas which were born in thought.

Prerequisites: Experience in a studio art or architectural class recommended but not required.

Instructors: S. Brown

Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-205-01 - Architectural Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Architecture: Introduction to Architectural Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introductory studio architecture course is a rigorous series of design investigations into architecture and the built environment. Students will develop and apply traditional and contemporary architectural skills (drawings, models) to interdisciplinary and significant design problems. Creative and indexical study and analysis will be used to generate and foster a broad range of concepts and language to solve architectural issues involving site, construction, inhabitation, function, form and space.
Prerequisites: One semester of Drawing I, design or sculpture is recommended. Requires materials fee TBD.

Instructors: S. Brown

Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-225-01 - Architectural Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Architectural Design II: The Urban Context
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this course students expand on design knowledge and problem-solving skills. Spatial considerations are revisited as students are introduced to projects in the context of the urban environment. Projects increase in scale and scope, addressing issues of density, adjacency, and the effect that these constraints have on the individual. Representation and drafting skills develop further as students are given instruction on one and two point perspectives, axonometric drawings and sectional elevations. Issues of sustainable design, methods of construction and the use of materials will also be investigated.
Prerequisites: One semester of architectural design; drawing recommended

Notes: Students expected to purchase course supplies at campus store

Instructors: S. Brown

Expected enrollment: 12

ARCH-280-01 - Architectural Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Architectural Studies: Design, Technology and Environment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course looks at the intersections of modern-contemporary architectural discourse and history of technology. From the lens of the key paradigms of technological advancements, this course will examine the changes in the way in which technology is utilized and conceptualized in architectural production. The first part of this course examines the effects of technological change on architectural production in the modern and post-modern eras. The second part focuses on more recent changes, such as the ecological paradigm, and investigates how the material, construction and information technologies enabled the integration of environmental aspects to building design.

ARTH-100-01 - Art History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Image and Environment: Western Art: 1400-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to painting, sculpture, and architecture in Europe and America from the Renaissance to the present. Classes are organized around five focused topics: Renaissance Florence; the artist in the seventeenth century; art, revolution and nationhood; nineteenth-century realism; and abstraction and empathy. Lectures will be complemented by class discussion, short films, and assignments in the art museum.
Instructors: A. Monahan

(Spring) Image and Environment: Architecture: The Face of Human Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of architecture as a functional and expressive medium from the ancient world to the present. Accommodating domestic life, religious ritual, political, commercial, and leisure activities, architecture both shapes and reflects the natural environment, technology, social values and visions. While the history of Western architecture constitutes the primary focus, the course will include buildings from around the world.
Instructors: M. Davis
Expected enrollment: 50

ARTH-100-02 - Art History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Image and Environment: Introduction to Art History - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course introduces students to the pleasures of art history as a field of inquiry. In case studies beginning with the Renaissance and extending to the Modern era, from Europe and the Americas, we will explore art's complicated and shifting relation to history -- to its social, cultural, political, and intellectual worlds. Lectures and class discussion will be augmented by visits to the art museum.
Instructors: A. Lee

(Fall) Introductory Seminar in Art History: Visions of Hell and Paradise
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Medieval Studies 101f-02)
The Heavenly Court; Adam and Eve's Garden of Eden; The Apocalypse. Visions of sacred realms and the beginning and end of humankind captured the imagination of people in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance in Europe. The focus of this course will be the close examination of a range of artworks that portray sacred and apocalyptic imagery, including manuscript illumination, sculpture, panel painting, and fresco from the ninth to the sixteenth centuries by artists including Giotto, Michelangelo, Bosch, and Dürer. Readings of primary sources (such as St. John's Book of Revelations) and the consideration of social and political conditions will support our interpretations.

(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (FLMST-202-01)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention and imagination because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.

(Fall) Gods and Mortals: Myth in Ancient Art and Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement (Classics 211)
Many ancient images tell completely different versions of myth from those portrayed in Greek and Roman literary sources. By juxtaposing distinctive modes of communication in the ancient world, students will analyze the rhetorical uses of myth, both then and now. Students will also examine the range of possibilities for translating and interpreting text and image, which will alert them to the vitality of myth as a language of its own, transcending historical parameters.

(Fall) The Hellenistic World: From Alexander to Cleopatra - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Hellenistic art has often been regarded as a chaotic, decadent phase between the golden ages of classical Greece and imperial Rome. Yet the period in the Mediterranean from the death of Alexander the Great in 323 BCE to the Roman conquest of Egypt in 31 BCE saw the creation of some of the greatest masterpieces of ancient art, the development of formal art criticism, and the mass production of art for private enjoyment. The course addresses the new themes and purposes of art in a cosmopolitan culture that, in many respects, was not unlike our own.

(Spring) Empire: The Art and Archeology of the Roman Provinces
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
At its height, the Roman Empire spanned a vast area, from modern Scotland to Libya and Iraq. Within that territory lived peoples of multiple races, languages, and religions. This course explores the art and architecture created in this global culture from its beginning in 30 BCE to the dedication of the first Christian capital, Constantinople, in 330 CE. Subjects include propaganda, arena spectacles, the home, mystery religions, and the catacombs.

(Fall) Nineteenth-Century European Art: Neoclassicism to Impressionism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course traces major developments in European art during the periods traditionally designated by the terms neoclassicism, romanticism, realism, and impressionism. Focusing primarily on French art, but branching out to consider the art of England and Spain, it explores the key artistic themes of the century: the engagement with history, the rise of nationhood, the experience of the urban, the Marxist proposal, the grappling with modernity, the dealing in individual temperaments. Among the major figures to be studied are Constable, Courbet, David, Delacroix, Goya, Ingres, Manet, Monet, and Renoir.

(Fall) History of Photography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This survey course traces the rise and development of photography in the United States and, to a lesser extent, Mexico and the countries in Western Europe. It charts the wide range of work with the camera, including commercial, so-called "vernacular," and fine art projects, and considers pictures from photography's very beginnings in the mid-nineteenth century to today's practices. Among the major figures to be discussed are the early landscape photographers O'Sullivan and Watkins, the avant-garde photographers Steiglitz and Genthe, the Depression-era photographers Evans and Lange, and the so-called New Documentarians Arbus and Frank.

ARTH-243-01 - Art History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Building the Modern Environment: Architecture 1890-1990
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
An exploration of major movements and personalities in architecture from the late nineteenth century to the present. Emphasizing the United States against the background of European developments, the course considers the search by architects, including Frank Lloyd Wright, Le Corbusier, and Frank Gehry, for a language of form and space that captures the contemporary spirit as it elevates society to a higher plane of existence. Discussion focuses on issues of technology and utopia, the skyscraper, and the collision of tradition, modernity, and postmodernism in architecture since 1945.

(Fall) Modern Art: 1885-1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the great ruptures in European art that today we call modernist. It relates aspects of that art to the equally great transformations in European society: revolutionary ferment, the rise and consolidation of industrial capitalism, colonization and its discontents, and world war. Among the major figures to be studied are Duchamp, Mattise, Malevich, Picasso, Seurat, and van Gogh.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr

(Spring) Contemporary Art: Art Since 1945

This course traces the different paths of painting, sculpture, and photography in the United States and, less so, Western Europe since World War II. Initially, most of these paths traced a relationship with the "crisis of modernism," but increasingly, they have taken on a different vitality, drawing energy from a wide variety of postmodern and postcolonial subjects and debates: identity politics, transnationalism, diaspora. Can something that can be identified as an avant-garde practice exist in such a context? What kinds of questions are appropriate to ask about works that stridently attempt to suspend the very category of art?

(Fall) Issues in Art History: Renaissance North and South: Court, Monastery, City

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This thematic study of the Renaissance in Northern and Southern Europe (c.1400-c.1560) will investigate the role of the visual arts for three major groups of patrons: imperial, royal, and aristocratic courts; monasteries and other corporate religious bodies; and citizens and civic organizations. For each of these settings, we will explore the range of objects that suited the various needs of patrons, the function of images, and the status of the artist. Our study will include manuscript illumination, fresco, panel painting, reliquaries, joyaux, and sculpture by artists including Giotto, Ghiberti, Fra Angelico, Michelangelo, Rogier van der Weyden, Jan van Eyck, Bosch, Dürer, and Bruegel.

(Spring) Issues in Art History: Egyptian Art and Egyptomania - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Why do we need the past, and how do we engage with it? In ancient Egypt, the past had power, and patrons, sculptors, and builders drew from earlier generations for inspiration. In the modern West, ancient Egypt holds a unique fascination. Recurring waves of artists and architects have taken up Egyptian motifs for their own sensibilities. The course examines ancient monuments and visual motifs in their original context as well as their appropriation in subsequent centuries, including our own.

(Spring) Topics in Art History: Illuminated Manuscripts of the Later Middle Ages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The decorated book was one of the most important forms of art making in the Middle Ages. This course presents an integrative approach to the study of these objects, taking into consideration their structure, text, pictorial and decorative programs, and bindings. We will investigate the patronage, production, use, and afterlife of a range of illuminated manuscripts in the later Middle Ages, including the continuous traditions of monastic and courtly book production, as well as the new development of urban manuscript industries by lay artisans.

(Fall) Great Cities: Paris-Paradise: The Medieval City and Its Transformation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In 1323, Jean of Jandun wrote that Paris "seems to have received from the Most-High the role of the earthly paradise." Using medieval eyewitness accounts and descriptions, surviving monuments, and graphic records, this seminar will explore the transformation of Paris from a small twelfth-century town into Europe's most important metropolis by 1300. We will then consider the metamorphosis of medieval Paris into a modern capital in the nineteenth century paying particular attention to representations of the city by painters, writers, and, most recently, filmmakers.

(Fall) Seminar in Ancient Art: The Unearthed Cities of Vesuvius - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Life on the Bay of Naples came to an abrupt halt in 79, when Vesuvius erupted, preserving surrounding cities and villas with lava and ash. The rediscovery of Pompeii and Herculaneum since the eighteenth century had significant impact upon European art and literature. The seminar examines the surviving environment and artifacts created to Roman tastes in the late republic and early empire. It considers the history of archaeological and art historical methods and the romantic visions of art, theatre, and film up to the present. One highlight will be a visit the Pompeii exhibition at the National Gallery in Washington, DC.

Prerequisites: courses in art history, classics, or ancient history or per permission of instructor.

ARTH-320-01 - Art History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Medieval Art: Chartres Cathedral
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar will explore Chartres Cathedral, its architectural history, its vast programs of sculpture, and its stained glass narratives. The church and its imagery, which took shape between ca. 1140 and 1250, offer a view back in time to medieval religious beliefs and practices, social dynamics, architectural technology, and fashion. We will also consider how differing views of the cathedral—as a popular communal creation or as the embodiment of an oppressive elite—reflect modern interpretive perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history or medieval studies
Instructors: M. Davis

(Fall) Seminar in Asian Art: "Through 'Indian' Eyes: Photography in India"
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Explores the way photography seized hold of the imagination in India. Nineteenth-century documentary photographs of Indian ruins memorialized the reach of the British Empire when used for dioramas, panoramas, and magic lantern shows on the streets of London. By the twentieth century, manipulated photographs and mechanically reproduced “photos” of Indian gods complicated photography’s claim to truth. Students will debate scholarly views and develop research projects to examine photography’s imaginative uses in India.

(FLMST-370-01)

How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in art history, or film studies, or permission of instructor.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Stories and Storytelling in India
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
India is a treasure house of tales and the home of vibrant traditions of storytelling in classical Sanskrit as well as in modern languages. Indian tales have been transmitted around the world and have parallels in such collections as The Arabian Nights and Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. We will study, in English translation, the epics Ramayana and Mahabharata, animal fables, and women's stories and folktales in a variety of forms including puppet plays, song, and dramatic performance. We will examine who tells stories, why, and when, and we will compare Indian stories with tales from other parts of the world.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Representative Works of Modern Chinese Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)
The twentieth century started with the downfall of the Chinese monarchy, numerous humiliations at the hands of Western countries, and the establishment of the Republic of China in 1911. In the spirit of reform and renaissance, a group of young writers, educated in both China and the West, spearheaded a new direction in Chinese literature. This group of writers abandoned the classical Chinese language, was keenly interested in social development and betterment, attacked Confucian tradition, and adopted Western ideals. The class will read representative works of these writers and try to understand their sociopolitical impact, while appreciating the artistic qualities of these writings.

ASTR-223-01 - Astronomy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Planetary Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This intermediate-level course covers fundamentals of spectroscopy, remote sensing, and planetary surfaces. Discussions will include interiors, atmospheres, compositions, origins, and evolution of terrestrial planets; satellites, asteroids, comets, and planetary rings.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 100/101 and one semester of a physical science course
Instructors: D. Dyar
Expected enrollment: 14

ASTR-228-01 - Astronomy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Astrophysics I: Stars and Galaxies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A calculus-based introduction to the properties, structure, formation, and evolution of stars and galaxies. The laws of gravity, thermal physics, and atomic physics provide a basis for understanding observed properties of stars, interstellar gas, and dust. We apply these concepts to develop an understanding of stellar atmospheres, interiors, and evolution, the interstellar medium, and the Milky Way and other galaxies.
Prerequisites: Physics 115 and Math 202; Physics 216 and Math 203 strongly suggested

ASTR-330-01 - Astronomy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar: Topics in Astrophysics: Mars
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): In-class discussions will be used to formulate a set of problems, each designed to illuminate a significant aspect of the topic at hand. The problems will be difficult and broad in scope: their solutions, worked out individually and in class discussions, will constitute the real work of the course. Students will gain experience in both oral and written presentation. Topics vary from year to year.
Exploration of several unresolved questions about the Red Planet, such as 1) Where was the water on Mars and where did it go? How well will future missions answer this question? 2) How has the Martian atmosphere evolved over time? 3) What rock types are present on the Martian surface based on meteorite studies vs. direct observation? 4) How can geomorphic features of Mars best be interpreted, and what do they tell us about the evolution of the planet? and 5) Was there life on Mars at any time? Is there life on Mars at present, and if so, where? An interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature as well as daily reports from current mission Web sites.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended
Instructors: D. Dyar
Expected enrollment: 18

Preamble (for topics courses): In-class discussions will be used to formulate a set of problems, each designed to illuminate a significant aspect of the topic at hand. The problems will be difficult and broad in scope: their solutions, worked out individually and in class discussions, will constitute the real work of the course. Students will gain experience in both oral and written presentation. Topics vary from year to year.
This course will survey the past, present, and future of lunar exploration and science. We will focus on the evolution of the Moon as a paradigm for terrestrial planets, with specific units on interiors, heat flow, thermal evolution, magnetism, volcanism, impacts, crustal composition and mineralogy, regoliths, and spectroscopy of its surface. This is a discussion-based, interactive seminar with students and faculty reading current papers from the literature.
Prerequisites: any intermediate-level astronomy or geology course; AST 223 recommended

(Fall) Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 311f, Chemistry 311f)
This course is a rigorous introduction to the study of protein molecules and their role as catalysts in the cell. Topics include general principles of protein folding, protein structure-function correlation, enzyme kinetics and mechanism, carbohydrate and lipid biochemistry, and metabolic pathways (catabolic and anabolic) and their interaction and cross-regulation. Biological transformation of energy is considered in light of the principles of thermodynamics.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 (can be taken concurrently), Chemistry 302
Instructors: L. Hsu

(Spring) Nucleic Acids Biochemistry and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Biological Sciences 314s, Chemistry 314s)
This course is an in-depth examination of DNA and RNA structures and how these structures support their respective functions during replication, transcription, and translation of the genetic material. Emphasis is on the detailed mechanisms associated with each step of gene expression. Discussions incorporate many recent advances brought about by recombinant DNA technology.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, Chemistry 302 (can be taken concurrently), Biochemistry 311, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Hsu

BIOCH-330-01 - Biochemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course each year examines a number of important and exciting topics in biochemistry, molecular biology, and other related fields of biology. The intellectual and research development that formulated these fundamental concepts is traced through extensive readings of the primary literature. Discussions emphasize the critical evaluation of experimental techniques, data analysis, and interpretation. Substantial student participation in the form of oral presentation is expected.
Prerequisites: Biochemistry 311, 314, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Hsu

Biological Sciences

BIOL-102-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(January) Celebrated Science: Fluorescent Jellyfish, the Tips of Chromosomes, and in vitro Fertilization
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
What do the Nobel Prizes in Medicine and Chemistry have to do with your everyday life? What can we learn from these remarkable experiments and dedicated researchers? This course will focus on three of the most recent prizes awarded in biology and chemistry. We will "meet" the Nobel laureates through their writings and interviews, and cover the basic science of their discoveries. Non-science students are encouraged to learn about molecules, cells and embryos--no college coursework in biology or chemistry is required.
Notes: This course will meet six times: Jan 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13; 9:30-10:45 a.m. Attendance at all six sessions is required for credit. Offered on a credit/no credit basis only (no letter grading)
Instructors: R. Fink

BIOL-145-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introductory Biology: Nature Harmoniously Confused
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
First-year seminar
Most organisms are notably unlike ourselves--a tapestry of bacteria, protozoans, algae, and, off by themselves, the plants, fungi, and other animals. We will survey the whole range of organisms, especially those in the ponds and forests of our campus. Labs will start in the field, offering many opportunities for wet or muddy work. The class is addressed to students intrigued by natural history; it might be useful for students interested in further study of the environment.

(Spring) Introductory Biology: Foundations of Animal Behavior: Evolution, Physiology, and Ecology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course covers some fundamental biological concepts with the ultimate aim of understanding how and why animals behave the way they do. We study the principles of evolution by natural selection, how neurons work at the cellular level, how hormones influence development and behavior, and how individual animals fit into their larger populations and communities. We will bring these principles together to understand how behavior allows animals to find food, avoid predators, and attract mates. Field and laboratory exercises will include quantitative analysis, observation, and experimentation.

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Comparative Vertebrate Physiology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course will explore the structure and function of major physiological systems in vertebrate animals. Of particular interest will be identifying the solutions that different animals have evolved to deal with similar problems (e.g., how do fish gills and bird lungs function in gas exchange?).

(Fall) Introductory Biology: A Green World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

First-year seminar

This course examines the plant life in the woods and fields around us, the exotic plants in our greenhouses, and the plants we depend on for food. We will study plants living in surprising circumstances, settling into winter, escaping from gardens, reclaiming farmland, cooperating with fungi and insects, and fighting for their lives. We will find that plants challenge some conventional, animal-based assumptions about what matters to living things. In labs, students will seek to answer their questions about how plants grow in nature, by studying plant structure and function, ecology, and evolution.

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Complexity and Diversity of Life On Earth

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

Planet Earth is inhabited by a variety of organisms, ranging from simple viruses to complex organisms, humans, and plants. We will examine the vast diversity of life forms surrounding us and how these organisms have evolved. We will also examine the essential biological processes and systems that sustain life. Using all resources available, such as laboratory experiments, articles, books, and the World Wide Web, students will gain practical experience and understand how scientific results are collected, analyzed, and presented.

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Diversity of Life - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will survey the great diversity of life on earth from the archaebacteria that live in hot sulfur springs to giant sequoia trees to singing birds. Labs will explore biological diversity via collecting trips around campus as well as laboratory experiments and will introduce students to data collection, manipulation, and analysis.

Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor

(Fall) Introductory Biology: Organismal Biology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course encompasses a broad range of concepts central to our understanding of how organisms function and evolve. We will investigate important biological processes, such as photosynthesis and metabolism, and of systems, such as the cardiovascular and immune systems. We will also take a holistic view of biology and use our newly acquired knowledge to explore such diverse topics as: the evolution of infectious diseases, the consequences of development and design on the evolution of organisms, and how the physiology and behavior of animals might affect their responses to global climate change.

(Spring) Introductory Biology: Biology in the Age of the Human Genome Project - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

The Human Genome Project is leading to great advances in our understanding of the human body and in our ability to manipulate our own genetic information. We will focus on the science behind the Human Genome Project, and the ways in which it will change our lives. This course will also serve as a general introductory biology course for biology majors as well as nonmajors. We will read articles and books, and make use of the World Wide Web.

BIOL-146-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Postbaccalaureate Introductory Biology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is designed for students beginning the Postbaccalaureate Studies Program in preparation for pursuing graduate-level study in the health professions. Topics include basic principles of biodiversity and taxonomy, genetics, basic biochemical principles, cell structure and function, and organ systems. Laboratory exercises complement lecture material and are intended to help students develop strong skills in microscopy, familiarity with using a variety of lab equipment, experimental design and data collection and analysis, and scientific writing.

Prerequisites: Postbaccalaureate students only

Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Gardner |

Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-160-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Integrated Introduction to Biology and Chemistry

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This 8-credit course serves as a gateway to both the biology and chemistry core curricula. The course introduces and develops fundamental concepts in chemistry while also exploring the diverse range of strategies adopted by living systems to survive in different environments. This course prepares students for further study in chemistry (Chemistry 201) and/or biology (Biology 200). Students must register for both Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 as well as a single lab section (listed under Chemistry 160). Recommended for students interested in completing pre-health requirements or advanced study in biochemistry or neuroscience.

Prerequisites: First year students only

Notes: Students must co-enroll in Biology 160 and Chemistry 160 for a total of 8 credits; three 50 minute lectures, three 75 minute lectures, and one three-hour laboratory per week.

Instructors: R. Brodie, M. Nunez

Expected enrollment: 48

(Spring) Introductory Biology II: How Organisms Develop

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
An overview of cells to tissues to organisms. Cellular components, the role of the nucleus, cell reproduction, and meiosis will be examined as part of our study of gamete production, fertilization, embryology, and development in an invertebrate (sea urchin), a vertebrate (chick), a fern, and a flowering plant. The basic molecular biology of DNA, RNA, and protein synthesis will be presented and examined in the context of building a fly embryo and a flower.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 145, 146, or 160

BIOL-206-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Local Flora
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Offers plant identification and natural history, emphasizing trees, native and introduced, and wildflowers. On- and off-campus field trips.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), with field trips
Instructors: A. Frary
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-210-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Genetics and Molecular Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive study of the fundamental principles of classical and molecular genetics. Major topics include transmission genetics, gene linkage and mapping, molecular approaches to genetic analysis, genetic engineering, gene therapy, developmental genetics, quantitative inheritance.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200
Notes: Chemistry 101 must be taken prior to or as a corequisite to this course.

BIOL-220-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course undertakes an integrated study of the processes and structures that define life at the cellular level. We will consider the molecular and supramolecular organization of membranes, cytoskeleton, and organelles in the context of the physical and chemical principles governing their assembly, and their participation in phenomena such as the capture and transformation of energy, catalysis, transport, motility, signal transduction, and maintenance of cytoplasmic organization. The laboratory portion of this course illustrates and analyzes these phenomena through selected optical and biochemical approaches.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, Chemistry 201 (can be taken concurrently)
Instructors: D. Gardner
Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Gardner | 02 LAB D Gardner
Expected enrollment: 48

BIOL-223-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will cover the fundamental factors controlling the distribution and abundance of organisms, including interactions with the abiotic environment, fitness and natural selection, population growth and dynamics, species interactions, community dynamics, and diversity. We will address variation across space and time. The course will combine observational, experimental, and mathematical approaches to some of the applications of ecological theory, including conservation, disease dynamics, and biological control.

Prerequisites: An MHC Biology class or Environmental Studies 200 and a minimum of one semester of high school or college calculus or statistics

Notes: Biology 223 and/or Biology 226 must be taken for the Biology major.

BIOL-225-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(January) The Structure of Memory
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Neuroscientists and psychologists have made great strides in the understanding of human memory in the past few years. It is now possible to get a fairly good basic understanding of how different kinds of memory systems work. Through daily class meetings, assignments, games, and exercises, this course will provide information about the several different memory systems that reside in your brain. You may not end up with a better memory, but you will at least understand why you forget.

Notes: Monday - Thursday (90 minutes)

BIOL-226-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

The mechanisms of evolutionary change within populations and between species; patterns of change in space, time and form; and the origin of adaptations. These approaches make sense of the diversity of life; then we turn to the evolution of developmental pathways, as a way of approaching the unity of life.

(January) Science and Society
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking-intensive)

21st Century advancements in science and technology are redefining many segments of our global society. Topics to be examined in this course include: the influence of science and technology on foreign policy, science communication in the wider world, emerging challenges and opportunities in science and technology, the path to becoming a scientist, and the role of women in science. Fellowship opportunities in the sciences will also be discussed.

Prerequisites: jr, sr

Notes: Class meets TWTH 12:15-2:15 p.m., January 4-19th

(Spring) Animal Cloning, Stem Cells and Regenerative Medicine: Past, Present, and Future
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
This course will look at the current state of mammalian cloning and the debates about human stem cell research, reading from primary literature. We will study adult, embryonic, and induced pluripotent stem cells. We will discuss the legal, ethical, and moral implications of using these cells in medical therapies, and each member of the class will participate in a staged debate on these issues for an introductory biology class. Pending funding, we may travel to Washington, D.C.
Prerequisites: per instructor only; email rfink
Instructors: R. Fink
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-302-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Molecular Evolution - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course examines the dynamics of evolutionary change at the molecular level, the effects of various molecular mechanisms on the structure and function of genes and genomes, and the methodology involved in dealing with molecular data from an evolutionary perspective. Lab work will be devoted to learning ways to analyze DNA sequence data and to create and evaluate trees that use molecular data.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 226

Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-303-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Microbial Genetics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Studies at the molecular level of various aspects of genetics, as expressed in bacterial and viral systems. Topics include patterns and mechanisms of replication, recombination, repair, and mutation of DNA; regulation of gene activity; gene-protein relationships; and genetic engineering. The fourth hour will follow a "journal club" format with student presentations.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210, and Biol 220 or 311
Instructors: J. Knight
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-305-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Cellular and Molecular Aspects of Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the roles of cellular movement and cellular interaction in the development of multicellular organisms. Topics include cell recognition and adhesion during morphogenesis, the importance of extracellular matrices, and current theories of embryonic pattern formation. Self-designed laboratories include techniques such as microsurgery and time-lapse video microscopy using a wide variety of embryos and cell types.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 210, and 220, or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Fink
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Fink | 02 LAB R Fink |
Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-308-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Darwin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive; History 361s(01))
This course looks at the scientific content and intellectual context of Darwin's theory of evolution - his facts, metaphors, hypotheses, and philosophical assumptions. Readings from Darwin and his sources, and examination of the organisms he studied. A background in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century history or whole organism biology is recommended.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226 or 4 credits in history
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-310-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Invertebrate Zoology - *Not offered this year/term
This course looks at the evolutionary relations of the profoundly different groups of animals in light of their structure, development, and fossil history. Emphasizes exceptional organisms that prove - and disprove - biological rules. Themes include coloniality, asexual reproduction, metamorphosis, and making skeletons.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226

BIOL-318-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Aquatic Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this course, we will focus on marine coastal and open ocean habitats as well as freshwater systems, including lakes, ponds, rivers, creeks, and wetlands. For oceans, we will explore such topics as currents, the interaction of climate and oceans, nutrient cycling and ecosystems. Our study of freshwater systems will focus on cycles, water chemistry and flora and fauna of local freshwater habitats.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226

BIOL-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Immunology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement

This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as immune mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Special emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the addition of clinical case studies and independent projects to reinforce these ideas.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220

BIOL-319-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Spring) Immunology

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

This course will cover the cells, organs, and biochemical signals that constitute the immune system, as well as immune mechanisms for the identification and removal of foreign pathogens. Additional topics may include: autoimmunity, allergy, vaccination, transplantation, immune deficiency, and pathogen evasion strategies. Special emphasis will be placed on the human immune response, with the addition of clinical case studies and independent projects to reinforce these ideas.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 210 and 220

Instructors: S. Stranford

Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Stranford | 02 LAB S Stranford |

Expected enrollment: 30

BIOL-320-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Introduction to Transmission Electron Microscopy

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Basic principles of transmission electron microscopy (TEM) and potential uses in biological studies. Each student selects a project and learns the fundamentals of specimen preparation, operation of the TEM, and image acquisition. Preparation, assessment and interpretation of the resulting electron micrographs culminate in an individual portfolio. Students wishing to extend their experience in other courses, including Biological Sciences 295 and 395, may enroll in this course concurrently.

Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220

Instructors: S. Lancelle, M. Rice

BIOL-321-A - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Conference Course: Extreme Life

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.

This course will focus on biological systems that push the limits of structural and physiological possibility. For example, midges flap their wings at up to 1000 Hz; bar-headed geese migrate over Mount Everest; deep-sea fish withstand pressures near 300 atmospheres; certain frogs can allow their body temperatures to drop below 0 degrees C. Through readings and discussions we will explore the diverse mechanisms that underlie how organisms reach extreme levels of performance and survive in extreme environments.

Prerequisites: any two courses above Biol-200

Instructors: G. Gillis

Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-B - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011

(Fall) Conference Course: Sexual Selection and Sexual Conflict in Animals: Theory, Research, and Feminist Critique

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 333f-06)

Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Sexual selection theory explains how selection on traits that allow individuals to attract potential mates or defeat potential rivals can lead to the evolution of sexual dimorphism. Sexual conflict theory investigates how the conflicting interests of males and females in mating interactions can result in the co-evolution of traits for manipulation and resistance. Feminist critics point out how these theories reflect and in turn propagate stereotypes about human behavior. This course explores classic and current biological literature on sexual selection and sexual conflict alongside feminist critiques of the language use, the assumptions, and the interpretation of research in these fields.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, and permission of instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html
Instructors: D. Pope
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-C - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Conference Course: The Neurobiology of Art and Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Art and music are a part of all human cultures. Is there something about the human brain that drives us to paint and sing? We will examine how the brain simultaneously processes different aspects of a visual object, such as shape, color, and depth, and ask how this processing may affect the way we draw and paint. We will ask whether musical dissonance and consonance are biologically or culturally determined and whether or not different parts of the brain process different aspects of music such as pitch, melody, harmony, rhythm, and the emotional content of a musical piece.
Prerequisites: seniors with at least 8 credits at the 200 level in biology, neuroscience and behavior, studio art, art history, or music
Instructors: S. Barry
Expected enrollment: 10

BIOL-321-D - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Course: The Biology of Neurological Disorders
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
The course will present an overview of basic anatomical, biochemical, cellular, and physiological concepts behind the organization of the nervous system. After defining how neural cells perform complex motor, sensory, and cognitive processes, we will examine the impact of developmental abnormality, chemical imbalance or injury on behavior and cognition. Students will analyze primary literature and present current data on possible causes and mechanisms underlying major neurological and degenerative disorders affecting the human population. Trauma, cell death, alterations in neurotransmission, and regeneration and other potential cures will be some of the topics covered.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 and instructor permission
Instructors: P. Sacchetti
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-E - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Course: Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome Seminar - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
What is our current understanding of HIV-induced AIDS? What factors favor disease progression or resistance? Are there new therapies or vaccines in the pipeline? In this course, the primary literature will be used as a foundation for discussing the global picture on AIDS and current research. As a group we will discuss the science behind this immune deficiency causing virus, therapies, research priorities and new vaccine strategies. We will also touch on the social, economic and political situations that influence rates of HIV infection and disease progression. Students will be expected to work in small groups to present background material and original research.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 319 and permission of instructor
Notes: one biweekly meeting, 2 hours
Instructors: S. Stranford
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-F - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Course: Emerging Infectious Diseases - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
What is the current state of infectious disease in the world? What are the important factors that favor the emergence or re-emergence of specific infectious agents? In this course the primary literature will be used as a foundation for discussing global emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases. As a group we will discuss the science behind these diseases and their therapies as well as some of the social aspects relevant to the present-day spread of infectious disease. Students will be expected to work in collaborative groups to present background material and original research findings relevant to these pathogens and the diseases they cause.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 319
Instructors: S. Stranford
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-G - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Course: Marine Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
This seminar course is based entirely on published research related to issues in marine conservation biology. It will introduce students to the latest research by leading scientists in ocean science and is highly relevant to current pressing concerns about global environmental change. The focus on primary literature and student-led discussions will help students improve their abilities to read, analyze and discuss primary literature. Those progressing to graduate school in the next year or two will feel more confident in delving into the literature surrounding their research interests and in discussing published findings and current ideas with colleagues.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 226
Instructors: R. Brodie
Expected enrollment: 12

BIOL-321-H - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Course: Topics in Invasive Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Selected topics from areas emphasized in the department according to needs of particular students. Study in small groups or by individuals.
Invasive species have become a common focus for land managers and gardeners around the world, but is there anything fundamentally new, different, or threatening about these organisms? These new arrivals potentially increase local biodiversity and offer excellent examples of evolution and ecological interactions, but they also incite scientists to uncharacteristic value judgments. We will discuss the science and politics behind invasive species and explore the secrets of their success and the realities of their impacts. This course uses local examples, some field trips, and current literature to examine invasion ecology and other local issues in conservation biology.
Prerequisites: 8 credits above Biological Sciences 200 with Biological Sciences 223 or 226 or ES200
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-322-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
(Physics 222)
The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biology 200.
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-325-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Plant Diversity and Evolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the tremendous diversity of the plant kingdom, emphasizing the local flora. Evolutionary relationships are discussed on the basis of comparisons of reproductive biology, morphology, anatomy, cell structure, and molecular biology.
Prerequisites: two of Biological Sciences 200, 210, 223 or 226, or permission of instructor
Notes: offered alternate years
Instructors: A. Frary
Section Instructors: 01 LAB A Frary |
Expected enrollment: 14

BIOL-327-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Microbiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a general study of microorganisms and their activities, including form and structure; biochemical processes of growth, metabolism, and energy storage; distribution in nature and relationships to other organisms; cycles of matter; beneficial and detrimental effects on humans; and physical and chemical effects microorganisms make in their environment.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or 311 and either 210 or 223
Instructors: J. Knight
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Knight | 02 LAB J Knight |
Expected enrollment: 28

BIOL-328-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Regulatory and Integrative Human Physiology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will investigate the fundamental processes by which human body systems function, and how they can be modified to enable the individual to live in a changing environment. We will pay particular attention to how different body systems are integrated with one another, and to the cellular and molecular mechanisms which make this functional integration possible.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220 or Biochemistry 311
Instructors: S. Bacon
Section Instructors: 01 LAB S Bacon | 02 LAB S Bacon |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-329-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Stem Cell Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Since the birth of Dolly the sheep, stem cells have become a sustained focus of media attention. This course will cover the biology behind the development, differentiation, and self-renewal of stem cells. We will address the clinical use of embryonic and adult stem cells for research and therapeutic modalities and discuss the ethical and controversial aspects of such therapies. The laboratory component of this course will include a semester-long project that focuses on various cellular, molecular, and microscopic techniques required for stem cell research and data reporting.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 220
Instructors: L. Jarvinen
Section Instructors: 01 LAB L Jarvinen | 02 LAB L Jarvinen |
Expected enrollment: 16

BIOL-331-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Theory and Application of Conservation Biology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course focuses on advanced ecological theory applied to conservation. Class will combine lectures and discussions of primary scientific literature. Labs will include field trips to collect observational and experimental data and indoor exercises to explore the concepts of rarity, coexistence, and population viability with mathematical models. A community-based learning aspect is possible for the final project in this class.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 223 or 315; or Biological Sciences 226 with permission of instructor; or Environmental Studies 200 with permission of instructor
Instructors: M. Hoopes
Section Instructors: 01 LAB M Hoopes | 02 LAB M Hoopes |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-332-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Macroevolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course presents the science of biological form and its relation to adaptation, development, and the modes of evolutionary change. Emphases include primary theoretical literature, whole organisms, the emerging field of evolutionary developmental biology, and major transitions in vertebrate evolution.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 226
Instructors: S. Rachootin
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-333-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Neurobiology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
We will study the electrical and chemical signals underlying the generation of the nerve impulse and synaptic transmission. We will then explore neuronal circuits underlying learning and memory, movement, and sensory perception. Finally, we will discuss changes in signals and circuits as possible underlying causes of neurodegenerative disorders.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200, 220 and 4 credits in chemistry or physics; instructor permission required
Notes: preference given to seniors
Instructors: P. Sacchetti
Section Instructors: 01 LAB P Sacchetti | 02 LAB P Sacchetti |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-334-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Fall) Chemical Communication in Vertebrates - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
How is information about physiological states coded in chemical information passed between animals? How is this information passed between organs in the body? In this course we'll read and discuss the primary literature in biology to look in depth at the nature of chemical communication in vertebrates. We will study hormones, pheromones, and neurotransmitters, the neuroendocrine mechanisms which mediate their functions in the body, and the social and physical contexts in which these signalling mechanisms operate.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 220, 223 or 226
Instructors: S. Bacon
Expected enrollment: 15

BIOL-335-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Mammalian Anatomy - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course will examine the fundamental structural organization of the mammalian body. The lecture portion of the class will focus largely on humans, and students will gain practical insight into other mammalian systems in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: any two courses above Biological Sciences 200
Notes: course open to 12 juniors and 12 seniors
Instructors: G. Gillis
Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Gillis | 02 LAB G Gillis |
Expected enrollment: 24

BIOL-340-01 - Biological Sciences - 2010-2011
(Spring) Eukaryotic Molecular Genetics - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
In this course we will examine the role of molecular genetic analysis in the study of phenomena such as human disease (e.g., breast cancer), animal development, and gene regulation. We will also study genetic engineering of plants and animals. There will be group discussions of original research articles and review articles.
Prerequisites: Biological Sciences 200 and 210
Instructors: C. Woodard
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Woodard | 02 LAB C Woodard |
Expected enrollment: 24

(Spring) Biogeochemistry of Northern Ecosystems - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 344s)
Global climate models and recent evidence show that ecosystems in the northern latitudes are extremely sensitive to climate change. This interdisciplinary science course examines boreal, subarctic, and arctic ecosystems through the study of nutrient cycling, plant ecology, hydrology, soil processes, and biosphere-atmosphere interactions. Topics include fundamentals of biogeochemical elements such as carbon and nitrogen at scales from the microscopic to global, sensitivity, feedbacks to climate change, and disturbance processes such as fire and permafrost degradation.
Prerequisites: At least two semesters of biology, chemistry, or environmental science, and permission of the instructor
Instructors: B. Hooker
Expected enrollment: 15

Chemistry

CHEM-101-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Fall) General Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides introduction and development of fundamental concepts including stoichiometry, reactions in aqueous solutions, thermochemistry, atomic structure, chemical bonding, and acid-base reactions. The laboratory emphasizes basic skills, quantitative chemical measurements, and principles discussed in lectures.
Instructors: D. Plata
Section Instructors: 01 LAB The department | 02 LAB The department | 03 LAB The department | 04 LAB The department | 05 LAB The department

CHEM-110-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Forensic Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course will offer an introduction to the science in forensic investigations. We will explore several methods and instruments often used in CSI programs, such as mass spectrometry, infrared spectroscopy and DNA analysis, which are very valuable in evaluating crime scene evidence. We will explore the validity of scientific findings and the political implications of the use and availability of the data. Students will have a chance to be expert witnesses and be in the lab evaluating evidence. Analytical thinking and processing information in chemistry, biology, and other sciences will be emphasized, as well as oral and written communication skills. Short labs are planned.
Instructors: S. Browne
Expected enrollment: 15

CHEM-201-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Fall) General Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides background in basic principles of physical, analytical, and inorganic chemistry essential to the study of all chemical phenomena. Topics include elementary principles of molecular electronic structure, quantitative treatment of chemical equilibrium with applications to solubility, acid-base, and electron transfer reactions, and introduction to chemical kinetics and thermodynamics. Laboratory emphasizes on analytical skills and illustrates basic concepts in chemical equilibria, thermodynamics, and kinetics.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 101 and Mathematics 101, first year only, and permission of instructor (magomez@mtholyoke.edu)

Instructors: M. Gomez

CHEM-202-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Fall) Organic Chemistry I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Introduces organic chemistry, emphasizing the principles governing broad classes of reactions. Topics include stereochemistry, nucleophilic substitution and elimination reactions, the chemistry of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alcohols, and ethers, and an introduction to infrared and nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Laboratory work includes synthesis, practice in the techniques of distillation, crystallization, chromatography, molecular modeling, and identifying unknown organic compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.

CHEM-212-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Chemistry of Biomolecules - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
An examination of the major ideas of biochemistry from the point of view of the chemical sciences rather than the life sciences. Structures of important biomolecules. The role of energetics and reaction dynamics in biochemical processes. Major metabolic pathways are considered, including those of proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, and nucleic acids.
Prerequisites: Chemistry 202
Notes: This course is not intended for Biochemistry majors, who must complete Biochemistry 311f and 314s. First priority will be given to sophomores and juniors.
Instructors: M. Nunez
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-250-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to the History of Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Traces the growth of chemistry in several ways: as a body of knowledge and beliefs, as a practical means of intervention, and as a community of practitioners linked (or divided) by sociopolitical bonds and common interests, intellectual and otherwise. After an overview of chemical history and an introduction to various scholarly traditions in the field, the balance of the course will be devoted to case studies of narrower topics or episodes, such as the alchemical tradition and Robert Boyle, the eighteenth-century Chemical Revolution, nineteenth-century organic chemistry, Ionism, atomism and elementalism, chemistry and war, the quantum revolution, educational traditions, the role of women.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 25

CHEM-295-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent work in chemistry can be conducted with any member of the department.
Prerequisites: soph, permission of department required every semester
Notes: Note: Students conducting an independent laboratory research project for course credit in a department, program, or laboratory covered by the College's chemical hygiene plan must participate in a safety training session before beginning research. Course credit will not be granted to students who do not receive safety training

CHEM-302-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Organic Chemistry II
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A continuation of Chemistry 202 that addresses the chemistry of aromatic compounds, the carbonyl group, and a number of other functional groups. Examples drawn from compounds of biological interest. The laboratory includes organic synthesis and the identification of unknown compounds by chemical and spectroscopic means.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 202 with grade of C or better

CHEM-304-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Co-requisite or prerequisite of Chemistry 302
Notes: second half of semester
Instructors: D. Hamilton

CHEM-304-02 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Organic Chemistry Laboratory
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This half-semester course, starting after spring break, applies and builds upon the techniques and tools of synthetic organic chemistry acquired during previous laboratory classes. Experiments will be selected to provide exposure to contemporary synthetic methods, to offer examples of the application of sophisticated reagents, to afford practice in modern separation and purification approaches, and provide scope for hands-on acquisition of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectra.
Prerequisites: Co-requisite or prerequisite of Chemistry 302
Notes: second half of semester
Instructors: D. Hamilton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB D Hamilton | 02 LAB D Hamilton |

CHEM-306-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
(Spring) Methods of Measurement
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
We will discuss analytical techniques which are currently applied in chemical, environmental, and medical science. These techniques include: chromatography including GC and LC spectroscopy (UV-Vis, FT-IR, AA, fluorometry, and NMR), surface science and mass spectrometry. Students will increase their repertoire of laboratory skills while learning to integrate concepts from different subdisciplines of chemistry into a unified experimental approach to problem solving.

CHEM-308-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011
Chemical Thermodynamics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

A consideration of the contribution of thermodynamics to the understanding of the "driving forces" for physical chemical changes and the nature of the equilibrium state.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 201, Chemistry 202, Mathematics 101, Physics 103 and 204, or 115 with grade of C or better

Instructors: M. Gomez

Section Instructors: 01 LAB G Roman | 02 LAB G Roman |

Expected enrollment: 32

Protein Biochemistry and Cellular Metabolism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement

(Biochemistry 311f; Biological Sciences 311f)

Instructors: L. Hsu

Polymers and Biomaterials

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course provides an overview of polymer chemistry, including relevant topics in synthetic, structural and physical chemistry. Emphasis will be placed on application of these themes to the preparation and application of polymer modified biomaterials.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302

Instructors: W. Chen

Introduction to Nano Science and Technology - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course provides an introduction to the emerging field of nanoscience and nanotechnology. Discussion topics include nanoparticle synthesis, thin film fabrication, photolithography, and spectroscopic and microscopic characterization techniques of nanomaterials. Phenomena occurring at the nanometer length scale, such as plasmon enhancement, as well as applications of nanotechnology and its environmental impacts will also be explored. Short labs/demonstrations are planned.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302

Instructors: H. Jayathilake

Expected enrollment: 20

Advanced Inorganic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The implications of molecular symmetry as expressed in the language of group theory are explored in some depth. Group theory provides the context for a discussion of the structural and spectroscopic properties of inorganic compounds, particularly those of the transition metals.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and either: Chemistry 325 in the past or taken concurrently with this course.

Notes: offered every other year

Instructors: D. Cotter

Expected enrollment: 6

CHEM-336-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011

(Spring) Organic Synthesis

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course emphasizes recent developments in synthetic organic chemistry and deals with general synthetic methods and specific examples of natural product synthesis. It covers such topics as new methods of oxidation and reduction, stereospecific olefin formation, ring-forming reactions, and methods of carbon-carbon bond formation. The application of these reactions to the synthesis of naturally occurring compounds is also presented.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302

Notes: offered every other year

Instructors: D. Hamilton

Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-337-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011

(Spring) Physical Organic Chemistry - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

An introduction to the concepts and methods of physical organic chemistry. Examination of reaction mechanisms and the experimental results that support these mechanisms. Topics include structure and reactivity, reaction kinetics, mechanism determinations, and Woodward-Hoffman Rules.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302, 308

Notes: offered every other year

Instructors: S. Browne

Expected enrollment: 35

CHEM-339-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011

(Fall) The Organic Chemistry of Biological Pathways - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course explores the underlying organic chemistry of biological pathways and thereby seeks to build a framework for understanding biological transformations from the perspective of mechanistic organic chemistry. Beginning with common biological mechanisms, and drawing parallels with their sophomore organic chemistry counterparts, a broad overview will be constructed of the pathways by which the key classes of biological molecules—lipids, carbohydrates, amino acids, nucleotides—are manufactured, modified, and consumed. Several specific biosyntheses will also be dissected from a mechanistic perspective. These case studies will include antibiotics, an alkaloid, and heme.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302

Instructors: D. Hamilton

Expected enrollment: 20

CHEM-343-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011

(Spring) Chemistry of DNA - *Not offered this year/term

(Speaking-intensive)

This advanced-level seminar will focus on the molecular properties of DNA. Using as sources a graduate-level text and readings from the primary literature, the class will discuss a variety of current topics in the research community, including the binding of proteins and small molecules to DNA, the covalent modification of DNA by mutagenic agents, and the dynamic nature of DNA across timescales. Critical analysis of experimental design and conclusions from data will be encouraged. Students will be evaluated based on participation in discussions, oral presentations, and an original research proposal.

Prerequisites: Chemistry 302 and one additional 300-level chemistry course

Instructors: M. Nunez

Expected enrollment: 12

CHEM-345-01 - Chemistry - 2010-2011

(Fall) Physical Biochemistry - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course introduces the fields of biophysical chemistry and molecular biophysics, where biological systems are probed and described by physical techniques and models. Topics will include the physical properties of biological molecules (proteins, nucleic acids, carbohydrates, and lipid membranes); applications of spectroscopy to biological systems, both in vitro and in vivo; the mechanisms of light harvesting and energy conversion; and technological developments inspired by biological systems. Lecture sessions (two per week) will be complemented by a weekly discussion of papers from the contemporary literature.

(Fall) Comprehensive Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A seminar series consisting of meetings on alternate weeks to discuss articles from the current chemical literature. The readings will prepare students for attendance at lectures on the chosen topics in the remaining weeks. The lectures are given primarily by visiting speakers, but they may include department faculty. Students will serve as discussion leaders, and each student will write a paper on a presentation of her choice.
Prerequisites: sr

Classics

CLASS-106-01 - Classics - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: "Beware the Ides of March!" Life, Death, and Legacy of Julius Caesar
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Julius Caesar was politician, statesman, orator, author, general, tyrant, and god. His life spanned one of the most vibrant, transformative, and indeed tumultuous periods in all of Roman history, when Rome's republican form of government yielded to monarchy (among his most famous contemporaries were Pompey, Cicero, Mark Antony, and Cleopatra). This course will focus on Caesar's role in the political upheaval of his own day and, ultimately, his entry into the historical tradition, through an analysis of his own writings as well as ancient historiography, biography, artwork, numismatics, and even modern fiction and film.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 14

CLASS-127-01 - Classics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Ancient Greece
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 127f)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.
Instructors: R. Payne
Expected enrollment: 35

CLASS-211-01 - Classics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Gods and Mortals: Ancient Greek and Roman Myth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
We will accompany Odysseus on his return from Troy, retrieve the Golden Fleece with Jason, and race with Ovid through his witty--and often troubling--retelling of Greek myths from a Roman perspective. This course examines how Greek and Roman authors and artists from very different periods used myth to explore questions about life, art, and politics. Works include: Homer, Odyssey, Apollonius of Rhodes, Argonautica, Ovid, Metamorphoses and Heroides, Greek tragedy, and ancient images representing myths.
Notes: Optional screenings of films related to ancient myth.
Instructors: P. Debnar
Expected enrollment: 45

CLASS-260-01 - Classics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Knowing God
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the following key texts from the ancient world that treat significantly the problem of knowing God and the mystery enveloping such knowledge: Sophocles' Oedipus the King, Plato's Phaedo, Cicero's Concerning the Nature of the Gods, Job, Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and others. Attention is also given to the different ways of thinking about the divine and human natures in these works, which are broadly reflective of Graeco-Roman and Judaeo-Christian value systems.
Notes: may satisfy either Humanities I-A or I-B requirement
Instructors: B. Arnold

College Courses

COLL-101-01 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Mount Holyoke College and the Sciences - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
First-year seminar
A study of some of the intellectual developments of our times as seen in the work of Mount Holyoke's faculty. Readings and material will be drawn from the writing of current and former faculty.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: D. OShea
Expected enrollment: 16

COLL-101-02 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Stressed Out
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
We've all been there. Each of us carries a deep physical understanding of what its like to be under stress. But what are the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of this experience? How and why do our bodies respond to stress in such a characteristic way? And what is the impact of this biological response on health and disease? Through reading and discussion, we'll explore the biology of stress, the brain's ability to link the outer and inner worlds, the organ systems whose activity is altered by the stress response, and emerging research on the impact of long-term stress on memory, immune function, cardiovascular health, and cancer risk.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: S. Bacon
Expected enrollment: 16

(Fall) Western Civilization: An Introduction through Great Books - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Beginning with works emerging from Athens and Jerusalem and proceeding to the modern world, this year-long course will explore the prominent ideas of Western civilization. The course material will be centered on the Great Books from across disciplinary boundaries and will include authors such as Shakespeare, Plato, Dante, Einstein, Augustine, Darwin, Homer, Locke, Goethe, Eliot, and the writers of the Old and New Testaments. Students are expected to register for Interdepartmental 146 in the spring semester.
Prerequisite: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Hartley
Expected enrollment: 16

COLL-210-01 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Spring) Ready for the World: Preparing for Your Internship and Research Project

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is designed for students embarking on summer internships and research projects. It focuses on the connections students will make in the world beyond Mount Holyoke College. The course will examine the work of organizations, take account of the particular social situations in which students find themselves, analyze social dynamics in interpersonal and professional interactions, explore interviewing techniques for research and other modes of communication, and learn about organizational priorities and ethical guidelines. Students are expected to keep a journal of their readings and activities and participate fully in each session.

Notes: Class meets: 7-10p.m. March 21, March 28, April 4, April 11, and April 25. This class satisfies the methods requirements of all Nexus minors. Those thinking of doing an internship/research project in summer 2011 should register for this course.

Instructors: P. Gill

Expected enrollment: 70

COLL-211-01 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Fall) Tying It All Together: Curriculum to Career

Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course is designed for students who have recently completed summer internships and research projects to help them integrate their experience within the context of their liberal arts education and career goals. Students will apply problem-solving skills to various situations that occurred during their summer project; learn how to identify and articulate transferable skills gained during the project to potential employers and graduate schools; discuss how the experience has affirmed and/or modified their career goals; learn strategies to identify and network with individuals to advance their professional and academic development; and prepare a presentation on their internship or research project for the fall LEAP Symposium.

Notes: Class will meet: Sept 14 (7-9pm), Sept 21 (7-9pm), Sept 25 (9am-12pm), Sept 28 (7-9pm), Oct 5 (7-9pm), Oct 15 (LEAP symposium), & Oct 16 (9am-12pm)

Instructors: P. Gill

Expected enrollment: 40

COLL-250-01 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Fall) Sophomore Seminar: War: What Is It Good For?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

A multidisciplinary examination of the various ways humans have understood, represented, experienced, and justified war over time and across cultures. The course considers the representation of war through art, literature, and music. It analyzes possible causes of war, including innate human drives, gender differences, socialization, and economic and resource competition. In addition, it examines justifications for war from a range of ethical perspectives. Contributing faculty include: L. Glasser, S. Hashmi, K. Remmler, R. Schwartz, and J. Western.

Prerequisites: soph only

Notes: gateway course for thematic minor on War and Society (2009-2012)

Instructors: V. Ferraro, O. Frau

Expected enrollment: 40

COLL-250-03 - College Courses - 2010-2011

(Fall) Sophomore Seminar: Global Challenges to Migration - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

The movement of people across territorial borders and within states today is unprecedented in its scope and magnitude. Drawing from a range of disciplinary and comparative perspectives, this course will explore historical patterns of global migration and its contemporary forms. We will focus in particular on the topics of migration and security, the political economy of migration, and its cultural representation in literature, photography, and film. We will conclude by looking at the political and economic forces shaping immigration laws and policies in the U.S. and Western Europe.

Prerequisites: so. or permission of instructor

Notes: Gateway course for proposed thematic minor on Migration (2011-2013)

(Fall) Poverty in the United States
(Community-based learning course; Politics 204)

Why are so many people poor in the most affluent of all nations? Are there self-perpetuating "cultures of poverty?" Is poverty the result of economic conditions; failed government programs; discrimination; out-of-wedlock births; inadequate parenting; divorce; poor schools; poor health; poor housing; defects of intelligence or moral character? We will examine conflicting explanations of poverty and potential remedies from a variety of political perspectives, and analyze public assistance laws, Medicaid, and tax policies. Students will participate, in small groups, in an off-campus community-based learning project collaboratively designed with community partners, the instructor and the CBL program. Spanish language skills preferred.

Instructors: J. Fox, C. Pyle
Expected enrollment: 20

COMOR-205-01 - Complex Organizations - 2010-2011
(Spring) Financial Accounting
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The course, while using traditional accounting techniques and methodology, will focus on the needs of external users of financial information. The emphasis is on learning how to read, interpret, and analyze financial information as a tool to guide investment decisions. Concepts rather than procedures are stressed and class time will be largely devoted to problem solutions and case discussions. A basic knowledge of arithmetic (+, -, *, /) and a familiarity with a spreadsheet program is suggested. See http://www.mtholyoke.edu/courses/cljohnso.

Prerequisites: so, jr, sr

(Fall) Individuals and Organizations
(Psychology 212f)

This course focuses on individual and small-group behavior in the organizational setting. The basic objective is to increase knowledge and understanding of human behavior in organizations - especially each individual's own behavior. Three types of knowledge are stressed: (1) intellectual information regarding human behavior in an organizational context; (2) understanding of oneself as a person and as a manager; and (3) behavioral skills in dealing with people.

Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Butterfield
Expected enrollment: 24

COMOR-220-01 - Complex Organizations - 2010-2011
(Fall) Winners and Losers: Taxation, Social Justice, and Economic Choices - *Not offered this year/term
(Speaking-intensive; Politics 225)
The maze of laws that make up the U.S. tax system shape and define what our nation is and will be; they also create winners and losers. Who benefits from special relief provisions such as for housing, health care, education, retirement savings, charitable giving, and child care? What are the economic consequences? How are families taxed? Women? The poor? Capital gains? Should we have an estate tax, reform the income tax, or adopt a consumption tax? How can we save Social Security? All these issues and more are addressed, including a review of federal tax history from the Constitution to the present.

Prerequisites: History 171, or Politics 104, or Economics 103 or 104, or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Fox
Expected enrollment: 20

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Philosophy 232s)

Mount Holyoke College Course Information Archive 2000-2016
There is much talk recently of the need for increased attention to "ethics" in organizational life. This course examines the basis for this concern and the underlying beliefs and structures that give rise to ethical issues, with the goal of helping students to clarify their own positions. Topics addressed will include profit, governance, consumption, distribution, and the social contract. Readings will draw on philosophy, religion, economics, history, literature, management theory, and current events.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Computers are used every day for an enormous variety of tasks, from playing games and chatting with friends to transferring billions of dollars, delivering radiation treatments, and controlling the electrical grid. Computer programs are an essential ingredient in allowing for this great diversity of applications. In this course, you will learn to create programs, not just use programs that others have written. You will develop animations using Alice, a tool specifically designed for learning programming by creating animations, and graphical applications using Java, a very popular modern programming language. We assume no prior study of computer science. Programming intensive.

COMSC-106-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Scientific Computing
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
The matrix-based programming language Matlab will be used to introduce students to programming and fundamental computing methodologies such as top-down design and objects. Course work will involve vectors, matrices, numerical integration and differentiation, curve-fitting and graphics. The course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101

COMSC-201-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Advanced Object-Oriented Programming
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This course builds on the basic programming concepts learned in Computer Science 101. Emphasis is on developing the skills needed to write more sophisticated programs. This includes strategies to aid in assuring the correctness of programs through the use of assertions and unit testing as well as advanced Java features such as inheritance, polymorphism, and network programming. We will also introduce some widely used data structures such as vectors and linked lists. This course is programming-intensive.

COMSC-211-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Data Structures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Using Java. Solving problems with computers is accomplished by writing programs that operate on data to produce a desired result. The way data is organized and presented to the program can significantly affect its efficiency and simplicity and can sometimes determine whether or not a program can be written to solve the problem at all. This course presents ways of organizing data into "data structures" and analyzes how structuring the data can improve program performance. This course is programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 102 or 201
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-215-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Software Design
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Building large software systems introduces new challenges to software development. Appropriate design decisions early in the development of large software can make a major difference in developing software that is correct and maintainable. In this course, students will learn techniques and tools to help them address these problems and develop larger software projects, improving their skills in designing, writing, debugging, and testing software. Topics include design patterns, UML, designing for maintainability, software architecture, and designing concurrent and fault tolerant systems. Programming intensive.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 102 or 201
Instructors: B. Lerner

COMSC-311-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Theory of Computation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Are there any limits to what computers can do? Does the answer to this question depend on whether you use a PC or a Mac? Is C more powerful than PASCAL? This seminar explores these questions by investigating several models of computation, illustrating the power and limitations of each of these models, and relating them to computational problems and applications. Topics include finite state automata, pushdown automata, grammars, Turing machines, the Universal Turing Machine, and computability.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 101,102(aka 201) and Mathematics 232
Instructors: A. St John
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-312-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Algorithms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
How does Mapquest find the best route between two locations? How do computers help to decode the human genome? At the heart of these and other complex computer applications are nontrivial algorithms. While algorithms must be specialized to an application, there are some standard ways of approaching algorithmic problems that tend to be useful in many applications. Among other topics, we will explore graph algorithms, greedy algorithms, divide-and-conquer, dynamic programming, and network flow. We will learn to recognize when to apply each of these strategies as well as to evaluate the expected runtime costs of the algorithms we design.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 20

(Spring) Software Practicum
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Tired of writing programs that nobody ever uses? Then, this is the course for you. Software enables enterprises to carry out previously tedious or impossible tasks, but many organizations lack the resources to develop needed software. You will apply your programming skills to develop and deliver software to meet the requirements of a client from the community. You will learn critical communication skills required to work with a client, work as a team with classmates, and experience the software lifecycle from requirements elicitation through delivery. You will synthesize many topics learned in courses as well as new technologies required to complete the project. Programming intensive.
COMSC-322-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Operating Systems

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

An introduction to the issues involved in orchestrating the use of computer resources. Topics include operating system evolution, file-handling systems, memory management, virtual memory, resource scheduling, multiprogramming, deadlocks, concurrent processes, protection, and design principles. Course emphasis: understanding the effects of operating system design on computer system performance. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 221
Instructors: B. Lerner
Expected enrollment: 20

(Fall) Computer Architecture - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

The goal of this class is to provide the student with a working knowledge of how computers operate and the general principles that affect their performance. New developments in hardware render current technologies obsolete within one to three years. Rather than focusing on specific technology, we cover the fundamentals that allow your understanding of technology to grow with future developments. You will also gain a better appreciation of the cost/performance trade-offs encountered in designing a computer system.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and 221
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-331-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Computer Graphics - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

The creation of pictorial images using a computer. Topics include drawing of two- and three-dimensional scenes using OpenGL and other graphical environments; transformations of objects (translations, scalings, rotations, shearings) using homogeneous coordinates; creating perspective in three-dimensional drawing; algorithms for enhancing realism and visual effect; and the mathematical underpinnings of graphic design. Students will complete a number of graphics projects based on readings and class discussion. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 101, 211 (may be taken concurrently), and at least one of Mathematics 203, Mathematics 211, Mathematics 232, or permission of instructor
Instructors: Department
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-334-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Fall) Artificial Intelligence

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

An introduction to AI research issues in fields such as Natural Language Processing and Machine Learning. This course is programming intensive.

Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 and Mathematics 232
Instructors: L. Ballesteros
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-336-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Intelligent Information Retrieval - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

Introduces the basic concepts, methodologies, and research findings in information retrieval. Special topics include Web searching, cross-language retrieval, data mining, and data extraction. Completion of this course will provide the necessary foundation to work in today's business environment where competitive advantage is obtained by retrieving needed information.
COMSC-341-01 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics: Robotics and HCI
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is a seminar-based course, drawing on a combination of traditional lectures, student presentations and projects. We will cover core robotics and HCI (Human Computer Interaction) concepts, with additional topics directed by student interest.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John
Expected enrollment: 20

COMSC-341-02 - Computer Science - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics: Computational Geometry in Video Games - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Computational geometry in video games. Developing video games is an exciting and challenging domain, involving many areas of computer science, such as graphics, artificial intelligence and robotics. In this course, we focus on the geometric problems that arise in video game programming. Due to the expensive computations often demanded by current video game technology, efficient algorithms are required that not only satisfy speed requirements, but result in realistic user experiences. Topics will include standard problems from computational geometry, such as triangulation of 2D and 3D objects, point detection and visibility.
Prerequisites: Computer Science 211 Data Structures, Math 232 Discrete - Recommended: CS 312 Algorithms, Math 211 Linear Algebra
Instructors: A. St. John

Critical Social Thought

CST-100-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Fall) Experiments in Critical Social Thought
First-year seminar
This course will examine the relationship among the lives of thinkers who broke with their own worlds, the new visions of reality they created, and the historical context that provoked and in turn was provoked by their ideas. Readings will include short theoretical and fictional works, memoirs and biographies, historical narratives, and secondary critical commentaries.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: C. Pleshakov
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-133-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Fall) Gods and Monsters: Science and Scientists in the Modern World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar
Since the emergence of recognizable scientific communities in early modern Europe, Western culture has been increasingly marked by scientific activities and products. Science and technology have evoked a broad range of intellectual and emotional responses from scientists and the public alike: hope, expectation, fear, dread. We will examine the history of modern science from the seventeenth century to the present, paying special attention to literary and popular responses to this new and powerful social force. Texts will include works by historians and other scholars of science, writings of significant scientists from various periods, and a selection of novels, stories, and films.
Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 16

CST-248-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Science, Revolution, and Modernity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Introduces critical analysis of science and technology by tracing the historiography of the Scientific Revolution. The significance of this extended intellectual episode has been assessed in radically different ways throughout the intervening centuries. As such, it provides a fertile ground on which to pose and answer important questions about science and its role in society. What does it mean to regard science as 'revolutionary'? How are scientific developments shaped by, and how do they shape, the social, economic, and political worlds in which they are embedded? How is our contemporary understanding of science and technology influenced by the stories we tell about the past?
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Instructors: D. Cotter
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-249-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Enlightenment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 220)
An exploration of the founding texts of modern Western thought and literature, by Hobbes and Locke; Defoe, Swift, Pope, and Johnson; and Rousseau and Kant, among others. On one hand, the Enlightenment first articulated the principles that define modern social justice. On the other hand, it colonized the world, reconstructing politics, culture, and human consciousness on a planetary scale. This course will examine what the Enlightenment meant to the revolutions that created the modern world and what it means now to the radical intellectuals, social activists, and global resistance movements who are imagining a different future.
Instructors: S. Ahmed
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-250-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Fall) Classics in Nineteenth-Century Critical Social Thought
(Politics 239)
An introduction to some of the great critical voices of the nineteenth century. We will explore the ideas of such mutinous thinkers as Karl Marx, Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, focusing on the style as well as the substance of their works and the circumstances that provoked them to write and/or that their writings helped provoke. The course will highlight the tension between appearance and reality, the dialectic of domination and subordination, and the place of reason and irrationality in social life.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, first year with permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Cocks
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-251-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Twentieth-Century Theory and Its Discontent: Psychoanalytic Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Psychology 225)
An introduction to the contested terrain of psychoanalytic theory, which has so hugely influenced twentieth-century thinking. Reading widely across Freud's work and that of his colleagues, we will situate key ideas--repression, desire, masochism, neurosis, sublimation, etc.--within a range of interpretive frameworks. Our goal will be to analyze the varied implications of psychoanalytic theory for contemporary thinking about individuals and society.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. One prior course in either Psychology or CST
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-252-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Literature and Politics: Second Living: Imagined Worlds of Literature and Internet
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We will study the tradition of imagined worlds in Western culture, with its mystique of utopia, social engineering, escapism, and selectiveness. Readings will include Thomas More, George Orwell, J.R.R. Tolkien, and J.K. Rowling; Jorge Luis Borges' works will be our methodological guide to the worlds of the Internet that, for the purposes of this course, may include Second Life and Postsecret.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. CST 248, 249 or 250 recommended but NOT required
Instructors: C. Pleshakov

CST-253-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Critical Race Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(African American and African Studies 208)
This course examines the discursive relationship between race and law in contemporary U.S. society. Readings examine the ways in which racial bodies are constituted in the cultural and political economy of American society. The main objective is to explore the rules and social practices that govern the relationship of race to gender, nationality, sexuality, and class in U.S. courts and other cultural institutions. Thinkers covered include W.E.B. DuBois, Kimberle Crenshaw, Derrick Bell, and Richard Delgado, among others.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but not required, or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Wilson
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-254-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Spring) Postcolonial Theory: Postcolonialism/Poststructuralism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 254)
Postcolonial theory probes the centrality of colonialism and imperialism to modernity, and examines vital forms of anticolonial insurgency as models for critiques of domination and hegemony. This course will explore these imperatives from Marxist, poststructuralist, feminist, and psychoanalytic perspectives, paying particular attention to nationalism, the state, globalization, identity, and alternative political formations in the context of empire. Theorists read will include Lenin, Fanon, Spivak, Lloyd, Rose, and Chakrabarty.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr. Critical Social Thought 248, 249, or 250 recommended but not required, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 25

CST-255-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Fall) Human Agency and Historical Transformation: Pivotal Moments in the Development of Capitalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Economics 204, History 301)
This seminar examines evidence and theories on the origins, development, and dynamics of capitalism and the modern state. We shall focus on the transition to (agrarian) capitalism in early modern England, the industrialization of production in nineteenth-century Europe and the United States, and the political and economic crisis of the 1930s depression. As we ask how fundamental changes in human communities come about, we shall consider the relative contributions of individual agency and social determination to the creation of a world so many now regard as either natural or inevitable.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructors
Instructors: J. Christiansen
Expected enrollment: 18

CST-350-01 - Critical Social Thought - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Critical Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A seminar for CST seniors in which they present their independent research, respond critically to one another’s work, and lead discussion. In support of that research, this course will explore the history of critical method, from the Enlightenment through 20th-century critical theory and post-colonial studies. Every student will produce a substantial essay on a question in the broad field of social thought. Students will present their work publicly and cultivate agility in speaking, arguing, and writing.
Prerequisites: Critical Social Thought sr; other jr and sr with permission of instructor
Notes: seniors who intend to write a thesis must take 4 credits of Critical Social Thought 395 in the fall, in addition to this course
Instructors: S. Ahmed
Expected enrollment: 16

Curricular Support Courses

CUSP-100-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2010-2011
(Spring) Engaging the Pioneer Valley: Community-Based Learning (CBL) Theory and Practice
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
This course will equip students to enter communities effectively and responsibly as learners, researchers, volunteers, interns, and citizens. Successful community-based learning depends on familiarity with history, politics, policies, and practices in campus-community partnership. Students will study and interact with the region's organizations, issues, and people to refine their interests, hone their skills, identify and prepare to meet critical needs and opportunities via community-based learning. Panel sessions will complement readings, discussions, and assignments engaging issues and practice in campus-community partnership and nonprofit organizations.
Notes: Note: For students entering the College in Fall 2008 or later, there is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation. (Students who entered before Fall 2008 have a limit of one non-liberal arts course, and no limit on Curricular Support courses.)
Instructors: A. Bloomgarden
Expected enrollment: 40

CUSP-102-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2010-2011
(Fall) Community-Based Learning: Networks, Reflection, and Meaning
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
Students can dramatically deepen learning and impact in community-based study, volunteerism, internships, research, and paid work when they build campus and community networks, and reflect on challenges and successes. This course is designed to facilitate learning and impact for students in CBL courses, CBL fellowships and mentor positions, C.A.U.S.E. volunteer placements, off-campus work-study, and independent study. Monthly discussions will enable networking, problem solving, and information sharing, informed by key civic engagement readings. Students will connect with each other, tie together academic and personal learning, and gain greater understanding of themselves and communities.
Prerequisites: Permission of the instructor
Notes: Meets one time per month, on a Wednesday TBA, 8:35-10:50am.
Instructors: A. Bloomgarden
Expected enrollment: 25

CUSP-103-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2010-2011
(Spring) Integrating Learning, Service and Social Action
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
Community-Based Learning happens at the intersection of three activities: learning, service and social change. Integrating those experiences and purposes requires intentional, facilitated reflection, especially for students to build meaningful connections between CBL and sustained social action. This course is designed to facilitate such integration for students in CBL fellow and mentor positions, and for students in other community-based projects. Readings focus on campus-community dynamics, on student-led community-based social action, and on collaboration for social change. Learning activities include in-class reflection exercises and on-line dialogue using ELFA forums.
Prerequisites: permission of the instructor
Notes: Wednesdays, Monthly, 7-9pm, dates TBA

COSP-104-01 - Curricular Support Courses - 2010-2011
(Fall) Public Speaking, Leadership Presence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
What are the elements of an effective public speech? What rhetorical strategies do people use to support and/or influence one another? Using the same techniques that professional actors use to relax, focus their message, and connect with their audience, students will explore the art and craft of public speaking. Through an intensive semester of training, analyzing, writing, and speaking, students will learn and practice how to confidently communicate, express themselves authentically, and motivate others. A number of public speeches will be analyzed to enable students to evaluate critically the effects of culture on communication and communication on culture.
Notes: Note: For students entering the College in Fall 2008 or later, there is a 12-credit limit on curricular support and non-liberal arts courses that may be counted towards the 128 credits required for graduation. (Spring) Introductory Economics Topics Courses: Microfinance
First-year seminar

Microfinance is a first year seminar focused on the history and contemporary developments of microfinance institutions (MFIs) and microfinance operations within other institutional structures, including large-scale investment and commercial banks, insurance companies, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The course introduces students to concepts from finance, such as discounted cash flow analysis, capital budgeting, and risk analysis, and economics that may be applied to the analysis of microloans, microsavings, and microinsurance and the innovative ways of delivering these products to customers who have not been traditionally well-served by larger scale financial institutions.

Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor

Instructors: S. Gabriel

ECON-100-02 - Economics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introductory Economics Topics: Economics of Education
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)

Why is schooling important to democracy? This course examines the role and limits of formal education in expanding individuals' real freedoms and capabilities for democratic engagement in capitalist society. With an emphasis on the U.S., we analyze: myths and realities of educational opportunity; K-12 schooling and public policy (including funding); merit, money, and the potential of education to reduce economic inequality; the returns to education, economic growth, and technological change; the educational benefits, if any, of diversity; theories of achievement gaps; classic education and the liberal arts.

Prerequisites: fy or permission of instructor

Instructors: L. Wilson

(Fall) Introductory Economics Topics: Globalization and Work
First-year seminar

Today, we compete in a global labor market, technology changes ever more rapidly, and production chains span the globe - with different parts of a good or service produced in different areas of the world. Through readings and discussion, we will examine the reasons behind these powerful trends and their implications for people's well-being. We will explore how they affect the welfare of different groups in our society and in other countries, and how they have changed the nature of work and the skills needed for professional success. Classes include guests from academia and the private sector.

Spring East Asian Economic Development

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find one or more of these courses useful complements to majors and minors other than economics. This course provides an overview of economic development in East Asia. The complex interplay of public policy, global competition, and domestic economic relationships in China, Japan, and Korea will serve as the core subject matter of the course, though patterns of economic development in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore will also be discussed. Special attention is given to conditions under which regional economics have successfully blended elements of import-substituting industrialization with export-oriented growth. The course will conclude with a discussion of the impact of the regional economic crisis, the current wave of reforms, and the potential for future growth and development.

(Fall) Human Agency and Historical Transformation: Pivotal Moments in the Development of Capitalism
 Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
 (Critical Social Thought 255, History 301)

Preamble (for topics courses): This 200-level course investigates a particular topic in economics at some depth without presupposing prior knowledge of economics. Many students may find this course a useful complement to a major or minor other than economics.

This seminar examines evidence and theories on the origins, development, and dynamics of capitalism and the modern state. We shall focus on the transition to (agrarian) capitalism in early modern England, the industrialization of production in nineteenth-century Europe and the United States, and the political and economic crisis of the 1930s depression. As we ask how fundamental changes in human communities come about, we shall consider the relative contributions of individual agency and social determination to the creation of a world so many now regard as either natural or inevitable.

(Fall) Advanced Topics in Economics: The Political Economy of the G-20
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This seminar looks at both recent and potential future economic and political developments in the G-20, comprising 19 of the world's most important economies plus the European Union. Together these countries represent roughly two-thirds of the world's population, 80 percent of international trade, and 90 percent of global GDP. This international body has taken on a new prominence that will shape the debates over the direction the global economy should take in the coming decades. We shall focus on these debates, on the comparative economic performance of the countries involved, and on the increasing socioeconomic inequality and ecological degradation occurring on a global scale.
Prerequisites: Econ 211
Instructors: J. Christiansen
Expected enrollment: 20

ECON-349-01 - Economics - 2010-2011
Spring Advanced Topics in Economics: Public Policy and the Economics of Family
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar is offered in tandem with a conference to be held on March 4-5 at Mount Holyoke College. The course will focus on a sub-area of microeconomics—the economics of the family. The basic models of the economics of the family as well as how public policy shapes the decisions individuals make with regard to family formation and other related decisions will be the primary focus of the course. As part of the course, students will be reading papers associated with the planned presentations for the conference and attending the conference.
Prerequisites: Economics 211 and 220 or permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: M. Guldi

ECON-390-01 - Economics - 2010-2011
Spring Junior Research Seminar - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This seminar is designed to prepare students to do independent research in economics. It is meant especially, but not exclusively, for students who are considering writing a thesis in economics during their senior year. The course is a study of how to do research in economics. The topics include how to find a suitable research topic, how to find literature and data relating to the topic, how to read professional economic work, how to work with theoretical economic models, and how to devise and evaluate empirical tests of a hypothesis. Course graded on a credit/no credit basis.

Fall Introductory Seminar in Educational Studies: Researching Digital Media: Is the Internet Making Us Smart(er)? - *Not offered this year/term
First-year seminar
Do you update your Facebook status every 30 minutes? Have you visited the Land of Lincoln or the U.S. National Parks in Second Life? Do you raid with Alliance or Horde? This course focuses on ways digital media enhance learning in private and public spaces. We will read and comment on studies exploring social networking, gaming, video, and multi-user virtual environments, examine the influence of these media, and conduct a small-scale research project on the use of social media in college settings. Students will enhance their knowledge of digital citizenship, explore the attributes and limitations of participatory culture, and build a foundation for empirical study of social phenomena.

Is Mount Holyoke a school or a business? Is the institution one sees today what Mary Lyon had in mind in 1837? This course will look at the development of U.S. higher education from upstart colonial colleges into a multi-billion dollar industry. We will look closely at the tension between education mission and market forces, and how the interaction between academe and society has played out from the founding of the republic through women's rights, the world wars, and 60s counterculture. We will touch on a range of contemporary topics such as access and affirmative action, standardized testing, athletics, and e-learning. Mount Holyoke will serve as a recurring case study.

ENGL-101-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Into Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.

An introduction to some topics in African studies, reading and writing about such contemporary authors as Ama Ata Aidoo, Tsitsi Dangarembga, Bessie Head, Mariama Ba, Chimamanda Adichie. Studying both fiction and essays, the course focuses on recent political situations (Ghana, Congo, South Africa), on images of women, and on representations of Africa in news media and in cinema, both from Africa and the West.

Prerequisites: Only first-year students may preregister for this course. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class.
Instructors: J. Lemly
Expected enrollment: 16

(Spring) Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Lives on the Boundaries: Borderland Identities in American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Though sections of English 101 differ in specific content, all develop the skills of careful reading and effective writing essential to the liberal arts and sciences. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. By active participation in class discussion, students will develop their speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments. Students who do not take the course in the fall should consider enrolling in the spring. Like other first-year seminars, English 101 is intended primarily for students at the start of their college career.

Who decides which categories are available for defining one's sense of self? How do categories themselves complicate our ability to make sense of who we are and our place in the world? How do stark binaries such as "Black/White," "Man/Woman," or "American/Foreigner" prove problematic for those who find themselves somewhere in between, or indeed outside of, these imagined worlds? In this course we will consider how authors in the United States have used fiction writing and memoir to answer questions about mixed, marginalized, or unacknowledged identities; in doing so, we will explore how language itself paradoxically creates and challenges available labels.

Prerequisites: Only first-year students may preregister for this course. Sophomores, juniors, and seniors may inquire if there is space available during the first two weeks of class.

The Western fascination with the East is at least as old as Greek tragedy. From Troy and Persia then to India in the eighteenth century to the Middle East now, the worlds the West has conquered have, paradoxically, revealed to it the limits of its own political, philosophical, and literary practices. We will study both the Western writing that has defined itself against the East (Greek tragedy, eighteenth-century Orientalism, contemporary European philosophy) and the non-Western texts that have nonetheless deeply influenced it (The Thousand and One Nights, Hafiz, Arabic poetry, etc.).

Mary Wollstonecraft once wrote that the key for women to enlarge their minds was to err and "frequently go astray." This course will explore how many writers plot their stories and poems around all types of mistakes, errors, or missteps both intentional and accidental. We will discuss what kinds of knowledge about the self and the world the fall into error might offer, how we know when we've made mistakes, and what kind of change or redemption is possible in the wake of these discoveries. Readings may be drawn from Milton, Rousseau, Coleridge, Mary Shelley, Austen, Christina Rossetti, and as well as a few contemporary writers.

We will examine contemporary American writers who employ a variety of genres to create autobiography. Through close readings of auto-fiction, poetry, the lyric essay, memoir, and journals, we will interrogate how African American, Asian American, and queer aesthetics intersect and address this difficult question: What is an American story of the self? Writers include Wayne Koestenbaum, Gary Fisher, Toi Derricotte, June Jordan, Claudia Rankine, Andy Warhol, Justin Chin, D.A. Powell, and Meena Alexander. Students will write and revise several short creative and critical pieces, each piece becoming part of a cohesive final project.

Mentioned in songs, namesake of pretty bedsheets, MySpace pages, and pop-psychology best-sellers–Ophelia’s flowered, white-nightgowned presence is felt beyond the boundaries of Hamlet. She has not only permeated popular culture: Ophelia is present in many rereadings of female literary characters who meet a tragic and watery end. Yet technique of the role has not been explored nearly as much as other female roles in Shakespeare’s work. In addition to a close reading of Hamlet, our texts will include nineteenth- and twentieth-century novels, Pre-Raphaelite paintings, critical essays, film, and early travelogues of mermaid sightings.

(Fall) Introduction to Journalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Writing-intensive)
The finest journalists are professors to the people. They educate citizens so as to facilitate reasoned, fact-based dialogue on subjects as diverse as politics, poverty, war, science, and the arts. We will look at journalism’s role in the culture as well as some of its failings and foibles. Students will try their hand at writing about an event, a person and an issue using the reporter’s skills of interviewing, research, and thoughtful analysis to produce snapshots of the world inside and outside the College gates. Curiosity leads. Mastery follows.

ENGL-220-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Enlightenment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Critical Social Thought 249
An exploration of the founding texts of modern Western thought and literature, by Hobbes and Locke; Defoe, Swift, Pope, and Johnson; and Rousseau and Kant, among others. On one hand, the Enlightenment first articulated the principles that define modern social justice. On the other hand, it colonized the world, reconstructing politics, culture, and human consciousness on a planetary scale. This course will examine what the Enlightenment meant to the revolutions that created the modern world and what it means now to the radical intellectuals, social activists, and global resistance movements who are imagining a different future.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr

ENGL-221-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Comparative and Transnational Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
The humanities have traditionally been divided by national borders (American, British, French, etc.). But if history was ever confined to these borders, it is not now, as migrant labor, the persistence of colonialism, and global solidarity networks attest. National disciplines reinforce the invisibility of such processes. Studying literature and theory from the Global South (Latin America, Africa, the Middle East, South Asia) and Europe, we will search for a critical method adequate to the transnational world we inhabit. Authors may include Eduardo Galeano, Hardt & Negri, Naomi Klein, Edward Said, Gayatri Spivak, and Amitav Ghosh.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr
Notes: Gateway course to thematic minor in Comparative Literature and Transnational Studies (2010-2013)

ENGL-222-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Dante's Journey
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Italian 223
How does one think about the world, or--better still--the universe, through a work of art? Can poetry really act as compass in the journey of life, and bring into focus questions that truly matter to us? Readers across centuries and cultures have found in Dante's Divine Comedy such a work. This masterpiece not only explores the theater of human passions with extraordinary insight and depth, but also meditates on questions of personal and civic responsibility, faith and justice, as much as authorship and poetics. This course frames discussion of the poem within the literary, political and intellectual history of its time, as well as the stunning trajectory of its reception.
Notes: Taught in English
Instructors: F. Naitana

ENGL-233-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Queer Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course introduces students to the social and political contexts mediating nonnormative gender and sexual expression since the nineteenth century. In our examination of queer epistemological genealogies and methodologies, we will also consider the value of queer theory as a subjectless analysis as opposed to a queer of color critique that calls into question the sedimentation of a white, male, North American queer identity with global pretensions.
Prerequisites: soph, or permission of instructor
Instructors: I. Day

ENGL-235-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Modern British Poetry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This introduction to modern British poetry pays special attention to the emergence, consolidation, and dismantling of modernist poetry and poetics. It will link this literary history with, amongst other things, the loss of faith, the two world wars, and the relationship between monumental aesthetics, utopian poetics, and totalitarian politics. Writers will include Hardy, Yeats, Eliot, H.D., and Auden.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or English 200
Instructors: N. Alderman
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-237-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Scottish Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In The Quarry Wood, Martha's father teaches her, "Scotland is bounded on the South by England...and on the West by Eternity." This course explores that paradox, tracing the relationship of Scottish literature to European history and the making of Scottish identity, understanding language and form as political actions in the creation of Scotland's national, international, and mythologized identities. Selections survey Enlightenment thought, sentimentalized Scotland (the Kailyard school), grim "realism," modern novels, and contemporary fiction, and may include Hume, Smith, Scott, Burns, Barrie, Stevenson, MacDiarmid, Gibbon, E. Muir, W. Muir, Shepherd, Kelman, television, and film.

ENGL-240-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) American Literature I
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
A survey of American literature from the literature of exploration through the major authors of the mid-nineteenth century, with special attention to the formation of an American literary tradition, along with the political, social, and religious context that helped shape the imaginative response of American writers to their culture.
Prerequisites: soph, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement
Instructors: D. Weber
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-250-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) African American Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course offers an introduction to the literary works of African Americans from the late-eighteenth century to the present, with an emphasis on poetry and fiction. Beginning with slave narratives and early poetry, we will consider issues of genre, literary traditions, and historical context while gaining experience in reading and analyzing literary texts. We will examine how authors consciously went about creating a literary tradition that mirrored, challenged and created a dialogue with the American canon.
Prerequisites: soph, second-semester fy with permission of instructor
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-252-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Harlem Renaissance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
The course will study the literature, politics, and art of the Harlem Renaissance—roughly a period from 1915 to 1940. The New Negro Movement brought together writers, artists, philosophers, musicians, and everyday people from many parts of the United States and the Caribbean to New York City's Harlem. Their efforts to create a distinct African American art resulted in a flowering of art from several different perspectives. The era has most frequently been thought of as a 1920s-only phenomenon, and many have suggested that it was less a "renaissance" than a first flowering of a collective artistic spirit. We will energetically take on the debate.
Prerequisites: sr, jr, so
Instructors: G. Pemberton
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-253-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) African Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
An introduction to African literature in English since 1960. Fiction, drama, autobiogaphy, essays by such writers as Ama Ata Aidoo, Ayi Kwei Armah, Chinua Achebe, Buchi Emecheta, Ngugi was Thiong'o, Chimamanda Adichie, Chris Abani, Sinduwe Magona, and Zoe Wicomb. Particular attention to themes of exile and imprisonment, political struggle before and after independence, the convergence of oral cultures and European languages, and the emergence of postcolonial and feminist discourses in contemporary Africa.
Prerequisites: soph, or permission of instructor
ENGL-254-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Postcolonial Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Critical Social Thought 254
Postcolonial theory probes the centrality of colonialism and imperialism to modernity, and examines vital forms of anticolonial insurgency as models for critiques of domination and hegemony. This course will explore these imperatives from Marxist, feminist, and psychoanalytic perspectives, paying particular attention to nationalism, the state, globalization, and identity formation in the context of empire. Readings will include the work of Fanon, Said, Spivak, Chakrabarty, and Lloyd.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Martin
Expected enrollment: 25

ENGL-265-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Survey of Literature for Children and Young Adults
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This class provides a broad overview of literature for children and young adults. It will include historical and contemporary considerations, criticism, and representative works from major genres.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department beyond English 101
Notes: this course is a prerequisite for English 305, Writing Literature for Children.
Instructors: M. Lambert
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; Environmental Studies 267)
"Most people are on the world, not in it." --John Muir. An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy, J. Lemly
Expected enrollment: 20

ENGL-270-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Nineteenth-Century American Women Writers - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204)
In this cross-cultural examination of nineteenth-century American women writers, we will compare a number of works of fiction, prose, poetry, and autobiography. We will discuss how writers created sophisticated and insightful critiques of American culture and imagined or re-presented new American identities and histories. We will also consider tensions between "sentimental" idealism and political pragmatism, restrictive domesticity and dangerous autonomy, and passionless femininity and expressed sexuality. Authors may include Alcott, Child, Far, Fuller, Harper, Hopkins, Ruiz de Burton Wilson, and Winnemucca.
Prerequisites: soph, second-year fy with permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-274-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Asian American Literature - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course surveys Asian American literature (Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Filipino, Vietnamese, South Asian) since the late nineteenth century, including fiction, memoir, drama, and poetry. Throughout the course we will evaluate major developments and debates in the field, including feminist critiques of cultural nationalism; the gender politics of genre; and domestic, transnational, and queer critical frameworks. Readings of primary texts will be supplemented by historical and critical source materials. Authors may include Edith Eaton, Louis Chu, John Okada, Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, David Henry Hwang, Jessica Hagedorn, Chang-rae Lee, Jhumpa Lahiri, and Andrew Pham.
Prerequisites: soph, or permission of instructor
ENGL-280-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Literary Criticism and Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is designed to offer students a broad historical overview of literary theory as well as exposure to contemporary debates about "theory" and literary representation. The course is both an exercise in practical criticism and a survey of the Western critical tradition from Plato to Derrida. Beginning with the question of why Plato wished to ban poets from his ideal Republic, the course will go on to consider such topics as the Classic vs. Romantic theories of the imagination, the "invention" of psychology and the necessary difficulty of much modern literature, the relation of gender and ethnicity to literary expression, and the uncertainties of literary interpretation.
Prerequisites: soph, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Instructors: W. Quillian
Expected enrollment: 20

ENGL-285-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Transatlantic Romanticisms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will consider the literary conversations between nineteenth-century British and American writers after the American and French Revolutions. We will carefully compare how authors such as Wordsworth, Coleridge, Hemans, Emerson, Poe, Hawthorne, and Sigourney described the special Anglo-American relationship and how they contemplated such Romantic problems as democratic freedom, the romantic imagination, and new world discovery. Readings may include tracts on the Revolutions, reactions to slavery and abolition, early Caribbean literature, women's literary ventures, early nature and science writing, the gothic or "dark Romanticism," and examples of the nationalist, historical tale.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

ENGL-286-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Sexuality and Women's Writing
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 204)
An examination of how U.S. women writers in the twentieth and twenty-first century represent sexuality in prose. Topics to include: lesbian, queer, and homoerotic possibilities; literary strategies for encoding sexuality; thematic interdependencies between sexuality and race; historical contexts such as the "inversion" model of homosexuality and the Stonewall rebellion; and theoretical issues such as the "heterosexual matrix" and the "epistemology of the closet." Authors studied may include Allison, Bechdel, Brown, Cather, Gomez, Larsen, McCullers, Moraga, Nestle, Pratt, Stein, and Woolson; theorists may include Butler, Lorde, Rich, and Sedgwick.

ENGL-300-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Writing Historical Fiction
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Does historical fiction offer readers something history books cannot? What obligation does the writer of historical fiction have to the verifiable facts of the past? Is history a place we can visit, or is it a living force, defining the present? Isn't there a sense in which all fiction is historical fiction? In this course we'll consider these and other questions as we read and write historical fiction. We'll go out with our shovels and teaspoons to dig in the past, unearthing the psychological atmosphere, the gossip, the voices, and the important lies that will show us the way to breathe new life into the cold, dead facts of history.

ENGL-301-01 - English - 2010-2011

(Fall) Studies in Journalism: Digital and Multimedia Journalism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive)

The fast-changing landscape of new information technologies, from the Internet to iPods, is redefining the nature and practice of journalism today. We will explore the multimedia platforms available to journalists and learn how to tell stories across these platforms. We will examine the political, sociological, legal, and ethical issues raised by these media technologies and study the impact of the Web on the traditional watchdog role of the press. Students will be asked to write a blog and stories about an event and person. They will also be asked to create a podcast and/or a slide show to be posted online. Rough drafts, rewrites and individual meetings with the professor are required.

(Spring) Studies in Journalism: Health and Science Journalism

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)

Good medical and science journalism has never been more important in understanding our world and how to fix it. This course is an introduction to the skills needed to cover medical and science news and communicate science to the general public. It will focus on how to report and write daily news stories and longer features. We will also explore controversies in science and ethical issues raised by media coverage of science and medicine. Students will be asked to write a news story, a feature story and an opinion piece on an important issue in medicine or science. Rough drafts, rewrites, and individual meetings with the professor are required.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, equivalent writing course or permission of instructor

(Fall) Advanced Poetry Workshop: Exercises in Process and Capture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course asks students to create poems, focusing on poetic process, rather than poem as product. How to capture the unpredictable? How to put together language, and then to strip it apart? How to remain open and flexible to what comes? In foregrounding these questions, the poets Claudia Rankine, Charles Bernstein, and Eileen Myles understand making poetry as a living process discovered in the realm of conceptual possibility. We will share, discuss, and critique student poems, engaging with one another and with texts by contemporary poets, constructing poems through several experimental exercises that consider the body, obsessions, dream knowledge, visual art, and collaboration.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, including English 201 or English 204, or permission of instructor
Instructors: R. Wilson

ENGL-312-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Shakespeare, Adapted and Interpreted
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
"The history of Shakespeare's work is the history of the European imagination." By focusing on a small group of plays (The Tempest, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Hamlet, and Macbeth), the seminar will study the post-Shakespearean adventures of Shakespeare's work in the arts of music and painting as well as in the theater and in literature. Topics will include The Tempest as semi-opera, A Midsummer Night's Dream and Victorian fairy painting, Hamlet as an orchestral prince, and Macbeth as opera; but students will be expected to pursue and report upon independent projects to be chosen from a wide and fascinating field of material.

(Fall) Topics in Medieval Literature: Alliteration and the Medieval Poem
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Alliteration, Paul Fussell observes, is especially amenable to the poetry of the English language. In this course, we will ask how alliterative practices operate in medieval English verse, and what it means to encounter alliterative poetry as a mode of thought. To do so, we'll explore a variety of works through their religious, political, and philosophical contexts. By studying the partnership of poetic form and content, the rise and uses of medieval vernacularity, and the materiality of language, this course will explore what is entailed in an "alliterative tradition." Readings will include some Anglo-
Saxon poetry, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, and Piers Plowman.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, English 200 and English 210 or 213
Notes: meets English department pre-1700 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

(Fall) Studies in Renaissance Literature: Renaissance Theater and the Early Modern Book
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350)
The commercial theater of Shakespeare and his contemporaries evolved as a popular art as the emerging market for printed books began to create a popular literature. Theater, acting companies, and theatrical audiences helped shape one another, as the book trade shaped and was shaped by reading publics. Case studies in plays by such writers as Christopher Marlowe, William Shakespeare, Thomas Dekker, Ben Jonson, Thomas Middleton, Elizabeth Cary, and John Webster; sustained attention to acting companies, performance practices such as cross-dressing, as well as to gender roles and sexuality. Substantial opportunity for independent work reflecting each student's interests.

(Spring) Gender and Class in the Victorian Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy.
Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement

(Spring) Queer Kinship in Asian North American Literature and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Gender Studies 333)
This course examines alternative kinship formations in Asian North American cultural production. It will focus on the gender and sexual management of racial bodies since the nineteenth century, from the U.S. Page Law of 1875 that restricted Chinese women on the basis of their presumed sexual immorality to various forms of "racial castration" that mediate Asian masculinities. We will consider how alternative kinship arrangements and queer cultural projects expose and/or upset the narrative assumptions embedded in heteronormative scripts of national belonging.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor. Preference will be given to students who have taken English 274, Introduction to Asian American literature

(Spring) Globalization and Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This class will probe the global conflicts exploding around us to find the material forces hidden there. We will briefly study market cultures from time out of mind to recover how Greek and Renaissance literature reconciled "civilization" with the ancient powers that precede it and remain occulted within it. Topics will include neoliberalism and neoconservatism; terrorism, counter-terrorism, and torture; and, inevitably, the U.S. in the Middle East. Fiction by Coetzee, Ondaatje, Rushdie, Devi, and Subcomandante Marcos; documentary film on the Caribbean and Chiapas as well as the backrooms of U.S. foreign enterprise; theory by Klare, E. Ahmed, Khalidi, Mamdani, and Chomsky, among others.

(Fall) Emily Dickinson in Her Times

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Gender Studies 333-02)

This course will examine the writing of Emily Dickinson, both her poetry and her letters. We will consider the cultural, historical, political, religious, and familial environment in which she lived. Special attention will be paid to Dickinson's place as a woman artist in the nineteenth century. The class will meet at the Dickinson Museum (280 Main Street in Amherst and accessible by Five College bus). Enrollment is limited to ten students.

(Spring) Gender and War

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Gender Studies 333)

This seminar will focus on depictions of war in the context of gender. When asked how we might prevent war, Virginia Woolf suggested that we must invent new language and methods rather than follow the path of the traditional "procession of educated men." What language emerges in works about the effects of war? Texts will include essays and films as well as selected works by writers such as Alcott, Whitman, Crane, Twain, Hemingway, Woolf, Silko, Morrison, and O'Brien.

Prerequisites: jr or sr; 8 credits beyond the 100 level in English or Gender Studies, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Hitchcock and After

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Film Studies 320)

This course will examine the films of Alfred Hitchcock and the afterlife of Hitchcock in contemporary U.S. culture. We will interpret Hitchcock films in a variety of theoretical frames, including feminist and queer theories, and in historical contexts including the Cold War. We will also devote substantial attention to the legacy of Hitchcock in remakes, imitations, and parodies. Hitchcock films may include Spellbound, Strangers on a Train, Rear Window, Vertigo, North by Northwest, Psycho, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Marnie, and The Birds; additional works by Brooks, Craven, De Palma, and Sherman. Readings in film and cultural theory; screenings at least weekly.

(Spring) Black Texts, Black Experiments: Contemporary African American Poetics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

In this seminar, we will look to contemporary African American works that deploy the "experimental" under the signs of poetry, fiction, art, and journal. We will explore the cross-genre (e.g., poem/picture, theory/play, journal/novel) as we address issues of race, gender, and sexuality in a number of current works. Authors and artists include Claudia Rankine, Tisa Bryant, Dawn Lundy Martin, Renee Gladman, John Keene, Christopher Stackhouse, Samuel Delaney, Kara Walker, Laylah Ali, and Wanda Coleman. Students will be asked to dissect several experimental texts through close reading, analysis, and discussion, building upon their findings in a number of critical and creative writing projects.

ENGL-377-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Spring) Feminist Poetics: The Poetess, Prophet, and Revolutionary
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 333)
This seminar will explore innovations in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century women's verse. By investigating experiments with narrative, genre, stanza form, meter, and figurative language, we will contemplate what political, social, and ideological problems women writers attempted to present and perhaps solve through linguistic creativity. Larger questions include how to define "feminist poetics" and what potential such a project might afford writers and thinkers today. To this end, we will read selections of poetry in conversation with contemporary feminist theory as well as representations of women's incantation, prophecy, and singing by male poets and novelists of the day.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English and/or Gender Studies beyond the 100 level, or permission of instructor

(Spring) Asian American Literature in a Transnational Age - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
This seminar examines the distinct critical genealogies within Asian Canadian and Asian American literary and cultural studies over the last three decades, probing their evolving objectives and their intellectual futures. Throughout the course, we will examine the major shifts and intersections in these fields, focusing in particular on: androcentric cultural nationalism; feminist and queer interventions; historical materialist, psychoanalytic, postcolonial, and deconstructive theoretical approaches; and domestic and transnational critical formations.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department beyond English 101, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: I. Day

ENGL-383-01 - English - 2010-2011
(Fall) Just Joyce
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Seminar on Joyce's major texts excluding Finnegan's Wake. Beginning with Dubliners, the seminar will consider recent trends in critical theory as they pertain to Joyce's work. Half the semester will be spent on a careful reading of Ulysses. Students will be responsible for seminar reports as well as a midterm paper (7-10 pages) and a final paper (15-20 pages).
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement
Instructors: W. Quillian

(Fall) Re-imagining Los Angeles: Multiethnic Fictions of Tomorrowland - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
In Ridley Scott's 1982 science fiction film, Blade Runner, Los Angeles is a beleaguered metropolis overrun by immigrant "replicants," or menacing replicants, presenting a dystopic forecast of multiculturalism. By surveying major genres in relation to the racialized and gendered contexts of migration, labor, and urban redevelopment, this course focuses on alternative constructions of Los Angeles in African American, Asian American, and Chicana/o short stories, novels, and film. Works will include Southland, Tropic of Orange, Twilight Los Angeles 1992, Their Dogs Came with Them, Devil in a Blue Dress, We Should Never Meet, and Kindred.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor

Environmental Studies

ENVST-100-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course introduces students to the field of environmental studies and to some of the scientific, historical, political, economic and cultural aspects of environmental concerns. Through interdisciplinary lenses, we explore the complexities of many issues and problems such as climate change, threats to biodiversity, and toxic environments. In addition to fostering an understanding of their origins, the course focuses on potential solutions.
Instructors: C. Corson, L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 60

ENVST-104-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Physics 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: A. Arango
Expected enrollment: 18

ENVST-105-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Sustainable Agriculture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This introductory, interdisciplinary course examines agricultural ecosystems focusing on contributions of agricultural systems to global climate change, nutrient management practices, and environmental impacts of agricultural practices on adjacent ecosystems. Conventional, low-input, and organic agricultural practices are analyzed from the standpoint of environmental impacts. Field trips explore the application of agronomic practices in organic and low-input production systems, with an emphasis on local approaches to sustainable agriculture.
Instructors: B. Hooker

ENVST-200-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Environmental Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Most of our society's environmental problems are complex and interdisciplinary in nature. Environmental science is a course designed to teach integrative thinking, the "scientific method," and problem solving. Lectures will be drawn from a variety of scientific fields including ecology, hydrology, chemistry, geology, and biology with an emphasis on ecosystems and biogeochemical cycles. The course will use case studies of regional environmental problems, practical hands-on problem solving, and landscape analysis. Training in field and laboratory techniques is an integral part of the course. Priority given to environmental studies majors.
Prerequisites: One 100-level lab science; one course in statistics is recommended
Instructors: J. Bubier
Section Instructors: 01 LAB J Bubier | 02 LAB J Bubier |
Expected enrollment: 24

ENVST-204-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Human Dimensions of Environmental Change - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(geography 204)
Using case studies from Africa, Asia, North and South America, and Europe, this course examines the interactions between human institutions (such as political and economic structures, science and technology, class and gender systems, and cultures) and the environmental/earth systems that provide their contexts and have been impacted by them. The course will provide a forum to analyze the environmental consequences of a variety of land-use systems, resource use, and development projects and explore possible alternative strategies of human-environment relations that could create a balance between human needs and environmental constraints.

Instructors: G. Kebbede
Expected enrollment: 30

ENVST-210-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Political Ecology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will explore the historical, political, economic, social, and cultural contexts in which human-environment interactions occur. We will cover critical topics and trends in the field of political ecology, from its early manifestations to more recent expansions. Using case studies from the global south and north, we will discuss factors that shape social and environmental change across scales from the personal to the global, and we will examine the role of gender, race, class, and power in struggles over resources. Students will become familiar with the academic debates in which political ecologists are engaged, and they will apply the concepts discussed in a case of their choice.
Instructors: C. Corson
Expected enrollment: 30

ENVST-225-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Terrestrial and Aquatic Ecosystem Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course will focus on biogeochemistry and ecological processes in terrestrial and aquatic ecosystems. Beginning with an overview of the history of ecosystem science, the course will place ecosystem science in the context of current scientific inquiry. We will approach the study of ecosystems by examining plant ecology, soil processes, hydrology, and biosphere-atmosphere interactions. Students will delve into the primary scientific literature along with contemporary interpretations of ecosystem science to gain an interdisciplinary view of the field.
Prerequisites: 4 credits of biology, chemistry, or environmental science or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Hooker
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-240-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) The Value of Nature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Through this seminar, students develop an in-depth knowledge of and articulate vocabulary for the significant and diverse ways that humans value the natural world - utilitarian, scientific, aesthetic, naturalistic, symbolic, ethical, and spiritual. We use these different typologies of human environmental values as frameworks for readings and discussion, extending our examination to historical and cultural variations in values, competing perspectives of the natural world, and other value concepts, including intrinsic and transformative value. We examine the concept of biophilia and probe the role values play in the concern over losses of biological diversity and its implications.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100
Instructors: T. Farnham
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-241-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Environmental Issues
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
In this course, we will explore the different facets of numerous environmental policy issues and review the substantive aspects, legal themes, and regulatory structure of the major federal environmental laws. The laws covered in this course include the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, the Endangered Species Act, and others. The course objectives are for the student to learn the basic regulatory characteristics of the major laws and to become well-versed in the current environmental issues which we will focus upon throughout the semester, such as global climate change, ocean degradation, energy resources, and biodiversity loss.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 100
Instructors: T. Farnham
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-267-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Reading and Writing in the World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 267)
An introduction to reading and writing about nature, this seminar will attempt an exchange across distinct approaches to observing and describing the world around us. Do lenses of culture, discipline, and gender determine how we see and experience nature, environment, and place? Course work will include reading such authors as N. Scott Momaday, Henry David Thoreau, bell hooks, Leslie Marmon Silko, Mary Oliver, Terry Tempest Williams, Wendell Berry, and Annie Dillard; field trips; and writing assignments--weekly field notes and journals, analytical papers, and personal essays.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy, J. Lemly

(Spring) Perspectives on American Environmental History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
We explore the history of human-environment interactions in North America from precolonial times to the present from different cultural perspectives. How have such human activities as migration, colonization, and resource use depended on or modified the natural world? How have different cultural perceptions of and attitudes toward environment shifted through time and helped to reshape American landscapes? Case studies include ecological histories of Native America and Euro-America, slavery and land use, wilderness and conservation, and environmental racism and social justice. Our approach entails historical review of scientific studies, literature, visual records, and oral tradition.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) and optional fourth hour
Instructors: L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-321-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Sustainable Agriculture and Agroecosystems
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This interdisciplinary science course examines agricultural ecosystems through the study of nutrient cycling, soil processes, hydrology, and plant ecology. The course focuses on reading the primary scientific literature regarding issues of nutrient management, environmental impacts of agricultural practices on adjacent ecosystems, and contributions of agricultural systems to global climate change. Conventional, low-input, and organic agricultural practices are analyzed from the standpoint of environmental impacts. Field trips explore the application of agronomic practices in organic and low-input production systems, with an emphasis on local approaches to sustainable agriculture.
Prerequisites: 8 credits of biology, chemistry, or environmental science
Instructors: B. Hooker
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-321-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Conference Courses in Environmental Studies: Wetland Ecosystem Research
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Peatlands have sequestered vast stores of soil carbon since deglaciation, accounting for approximately one-third of the global pool of soil carbon. This seminar will focus on responses of northern wetlands to climate change. In particular, we will address three main topics: the environmental controls on interannual and seasonal variability in CO2 and CH4 gas exchanges, the responses of plant communities along hydrologic and nutrient gradients to climate variability, and the influence of atmospheric nitrogen deposition on carbon exchanges and vegetation. Group discussion of primary scientific literature, independent research, and investigation of research methods are core components.
Prerequisites: At least 8 credits of 200 or 300-level laboratory science, and permission of the instructor.
Instructors: J. Bubier
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Photography and Landscape: Earth As Visual Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Our understanding of the world around us is deeply influenced by the visual images created in response to human experience of nature. This course explores photography as a way of seeing and interpreting landscape and environment through time. Projects allow students to examine visual elements of landscape, develop photographic techniques, and create photo-narratives of their own. Using readings, observations, and photographs we consider how cultural and environmental issues and insights are communicated through photographic media. Basic understanding of photography and access to a camera are required.
Prerequisites: Art (Studio) 200 or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-333-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Landscape and Narrative - *(Not offered this year/term)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Different stories or narratives—whether myth, literature, maps, or scientific theory—have been created about every region or environment on Earth as human attempts to describe and understand our connections with that place. How do braided strands of human history and natural history contribute to stories we tell of the land, and to stories we tell of ourselves in the land and of relational identity? In this reading and writing seminar we will reflect on how lifeways, homplace, and identity of an individual or a community are linked with environment or the land. We will also create written and visual narratives of our own and explore creative environmental writing in reflection and action.
Prerequisites: jr., sr., permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Savoy
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Political Economy of International Conservation
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course uses concepts from political ecology to study the relationship between global political economy and environmentalism. Scholars from a variety of disciplines have charted the rise of a neoliberal economic paradigm in global political economy during the past 40 years. Drawing on a range of literature, we will reflect on changing perceptions of the market in international conservation policy during this time period. We will consider the political and ecological impacts of changing ideas, and associated conservation practices, including natural resource limits to growth, sustainable development, community conservation, market-based approaches, and corporate social responsibility.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 210
Instructors: C. Corson
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Science and Power in Environmental Governance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course applies concepts from political ecology to study how governance, broadly defined, works in relation to the environment. Using case studies of international environmental issues, we will explore how people make decisions about the environment in a policy realm. We will discuss the role of various agents, such as governments, scientific bodies, and nongovernmental organizations, in the decision-making process. We will reflect on who has access to decisions; how scientific data is used; how environmental ideas become powerful; and how policies are legitimated. Armed with this information, we will consider how to advocate for global environmental sustainability and social equity.
Prerequisites: Environmental Studies 210
Instructors: C. Corson
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-344-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Biogeochemistry of Northern Ecosystems - *(Not offered this year/term)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Global climate models and recent evidence show that ecosystems in the northern latitudes are extremely sensitive to climate change. This interdisciplinary science course examines boreal, subarctic, and arctic ecosystems through the study of nutrient cycling, plant ecology, hydrology, soil processes, and biosphere-atmosphere interactions. Topics include fundamentals of biogeochemical cycling of major elements such as carbon and nitrogen at scales from the microscopic to global, sensitivity and feedbacks to climate change, and disturbance processes such as fire and permafrost degradation.
Prerequisites: at least 8 credits of 200-level lab science and permission of the instructor. Global Biogeochemistry (Chem 232) recommended.
Instructors: J. Bubier
Expected enrollment: 15

ENVST-390-01 - Environmental Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Senior Seminar in Environmental Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course)
This is the capstone course of the environmental studies major. The course explores linkages among the diversity of disciplines that contribute to the environmental studies major, illustrates how these disciplines that contribute to the environmental studies major are used in environmental decision making, enables students to inform one another's roles as environmentalists, and provides students with opportunities to develop individual and cooperative projects.
Prerequisites: major

European Studies

EURST-315-01 - European Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in German Studies: Global Europe?: Immigration and Representations of Im/migrants in Film and Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; European Studies 316)
The course focuses on key issues facing contemporary Europe as it attempts to integrate large im/migrant populations: such legal issues as the development of asylum, immigration, citizenship, and anti-discrimination/hate laws and such cultural issues as the meanings of integration vs. assimilation; multicultural vs. pluralistic societies; the roles of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam in the construction of European societies and cultural identities; perceptions of (Post-)Colonialism and the interceptions of gender, race, class, and nationality; and the (dis)integrative role of language. Focus on the emergence of European Union rules vs. representative national policies in Germany, France, and Great Britain.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: majors/minors in the department should simultaneously enroll in both German Studies 232 (taken for 300-level credit) and GRMST-315 or EURST-316 to receive major/minor credit, and read, write about, and discuss selected materials from EURST-316 or GRMST-315 in German.
Instructors: G. Davis
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) European Studies Seminar: The Other Europe since Stalin
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; History 365)
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of original historical writing.
A charting of the paths taken by Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary from the post-totalitarian regimes of the '60s through the fall of the Berlin Wall and on to membership in the European Union. Topics include strategies of political control and opposition, the uses of consumer culture, breaks and continuities between Communist and liberal capitalist orders, and national particularities to the regional project of undoing dictatorship. Sources reach from the elite to the everyday, and extend to film and fiction. Methods are comparative and interdisciplinary. Students not majoring in history are welcome.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The class will read Walter Benjamin's indispensable essay, "The Work of Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction" over the course of the semester. We will concentrate on one section of the essay per week and supplement the reading with other short essays on pertinent subjects. Most importantly, we will be meeting in the Art Museum and will look closely at and discuss relevant artwork each week.
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 14

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Migration and Representations of Im/Migrants in Film and Text
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 100-01)
Germany today, 20 years post-unification, 21 years past the fall of the Berlin Wall: every 4th German--30 percent school-age children--of immigrant background; 5 percent Muslim residents; a mosque aside Cologne Cathedral; public schools teaching in Turkish and German; more Russian Jews emigrating to Germany than to Israel; ethnic German immigrants who do not know German; East Germans longing for the return of the Wall. Focus on close analysis of films, their sociohistorical, economic, and cultural contexts, e.g., Oscar-winning Lives of Others; EU Lux Prize-winning The Edge of Heaven; Fassbinder's Ali-Fear Eats the Soul vs. Noshir's 2002 remake/ sequel.

FLMST-201-01 - Film Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course teaches the basic concepts and critical skills involved in interpreting film. Through lecture, reading, discussion, and screening of films both in and outside of class, the student will become a more informed and sophisticated observer of the cinema. During the first half of the semester, the class will study form and style in narrative film as well as in nonnarrative practices such as avant-garde and documentary filmmaking. For the remainder of the course, the class will examine some of the major critical approaches in the field.
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (2 1/2 hours)
Instructors: R. Blaetz
Expected enrollment: 40

FLMST-202-01 - Film Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Talking Pictures: An Introduction to Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 202)
Some of the best feature-length films of the past century have commanded our attention because of their compelling artistry and the imaginative ways they tell stories visually and verbally. This course closely studies narrative films from around the world, from the silent era to the present, and in the process it introduces students to the basic elements of film form, style, and narration. Some of the films to be considered are: Broken Blossoms, Battleship Potemkin, Citizen Kane, Contempt, The Bicycle Thief, Ugetsu, Rear Window, Woman in the Dunes, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Days of Heaven, and Moulin Rouge.
Notes: 2 meetings, (1 75 minute and 1 2-hour screening)
Instructors: P. Staiti
Expected enrollment: 50

(Fall) Introduction to Spanish and Latin American Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 240-01)
This course offers a broad introduction to the history, politics, and aesthetics of Latin American and Spanish cinema in the context of, and in contrast with, cinemas from other regions, especially hegemonic Hollywood aesthetics. This course will also focus specifically on introducing students to the basic terminology and methodologies of film analysis, thus preparing them for the department's film seminar (Spanish 320) and other advanced courses in film studies.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor
In this course, we'll radically rethink what it means to use film to tell the truth, bear witness, or represent reality. We'll explore work that challenges conventions while still locating itself (if uneasily) under the umbrella of documentary. Through screenings, readings and our own video projects, we will investigate various critical interventions into the form. We will look at the diary film, performative documentary, reworked archival imagery, the essay film, ambient video, multimedia, hybrid forms, queued texts, and more. As an introduction to video production, the course will provide a foundation in the principles, techniques, and equipment involved in making short videos.

Prerequisites: Introduction to Film Studies. Application and permission of instructor. Application available through FS website.

Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged

Instructors: B. Mellis

(Fall) Special Topics in Film Studies: Music and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Music 220)
For all who stay to the end of the credits, purchase soundtracks, and argue over who should have won the Oscar for Best Score, along with anyone else interested in the undervalued importance of music to the general effect of a motion picture, this course will explore and discuss the myriad ways in which these two media interact. The course will focus on classic scores by Herrmann, Morricone, and Williams, as well as the uses of existing music in films of Bergman and Kubrick.

Prerequisites: See Music 220; Prereq. 100 or 103 or 105 or permission of instructor

Instructors: D. Sanford

(Spring) Special Topics in Film Studies: Specters, Monsters, and the Mind: Gothic and Grotesque in Anglo-German Film and Fiction from Frankenstein to Twilight and True Blood
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; German Studies 231)
Love and death, romance and assault; when the bourgeois novel began equating marriage contracts with romantic love, a "darker" narrative evolved: Romantic Schauderliteratur, horror fiction. We discuss social and psychological rationales as well as aesthetic representations of such phenomena as the "Gothic," "grotesque," "the fantastic," and "science fiction," as well as cross-cultural influences. Texts/films: Shelley's Frankenstein, Stoker's Dracula, Murnau's/Herzog's Nosferatu, Merhige's "shadow", Kafka's/Nemec's Metamorphosis; Süsskind's/Tykwer's Perfume; Dürrenmatt's/Mambety's Visit/Hyenas.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or permission of instructor
Notes: taught in English, no knowledge of German required

Instructors: G. Davis
Expected enrollment: 30

(Fall) Documentary Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course examines the principles, methods, and styles of nonfiction film. Beginning with the "actualités" of film history's first practitioners and ending with contemporary self-reflexive films, such as Errol Morris's The Thin Blue Line, the class studies films that strive to represent some aspect of the real world as opposed to the fictional worlds of narrative cinema.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202
Instructors: K. Eisenstein

(Spring) History of World Cinema: The First 100 Years (1832-1932)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
In this historical survey we will study three periods from the first half of the cinema's past (1832-1932); its invention, its silent days, and its transition to sound. From the optical effect of the phenakistoscope (1832) through the efforts of Edison and Lumière, from the classical style of Hollywood to the montage theories of Sergei Eisenstein, from the adoption of sound-on-film to the benshi strikes in Japan, this course will introduce students to the fascinating figures, structures, and technologies that built the world's cinema.

(Fall) Film Genre: Film Genre and Gender - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.
This course examines the development of Hollywood film genres largely in the post-studio era, particularly the musical, the melodrama, the horror film, and the science fiction film. We will consider the evolution of these four genres in relation to changes in the film industry and in American society, especially in relation to gender.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Film Genre: The Musical Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers a critical, historical, and theoretical approach to a specific film genre. Some examples of genres that might be studied are: the science fiction, horror, melodrama, musical, Western, detective, or gangster film.

This course explores the American musical film from its first appearance in the early 1930s in the films of Busby Berkeley to its recent revival in films such as Baz Luhrmann's Moulin Rouge. The course also examines musical films from other national cinemas that either comment self-reflexively on the genre and its American context and/or expand common definitions of the genre.

Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or 202 or by permission of instructor

(Fall) National and Transnational Cinema - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

This course is an introduction to silent cinema in the U.S. and the contexts of its reception. We will consider issues of gender, age, race, and ethnicity in the making of the cinematic audience. Contemporary forms of live entertainment, such as vaudeville, minstrelsy, burlesque, pugilism, and ethnic theatre, will be discussed in order to illuminate the broader cultural origins of American film.

(Spring) National/Transnational Cinemas: The Amazon: From Cannibals to Rainforest Crunch - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

From the time of the conquest, the Amazon has been imagined as an exotic and savage terrain: mysterious, dangerous, and cascading in untouched natural resources. This course examines the Amazon as a historical narrative in popular culture and political struggles. We will read explorers' narratives, examine representations of the Amazon and its people in film and literature, discuss labor and the rubber industry, and analyze the environmental movement and other recent social movements.

(Spring) Film Authorship: Cinephilia and the Auteur--Forests and Trees

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

In his review of Bitter Victory (1958), Jean-Luc Godard declared: "the cinema is Nicholas Ray." In his study The American Cinema: Directors and Directions 1929-1968, Andrew Sarris placed Ray just beneath the "Pantheon Directors" in a lovely named but secondary grouping he called "The Far Side of Paradise." This course will dive into this fascinating period of film criticism and cinephilia (the 1950s and 1960s). By examining the French response (Andre Bazin and Cahiers) to the American cinema (mainly of the 1940s and 1950s), and by looking at the films of directors like Ray, Howard Hawks, and Fritz Lang, we will explore the French influence on American and British critics.

(Fall) Film Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory through Film

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

We will be reading a number of key feminist texts that theorize the construction of sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offspring of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. We will study these shifts through the analysis of a few moving pictures, or, to put it differently: all you always wanted to know about feminism, but didn't think to ask filmmakers such as Almodovar, Hitchcock, Jarman, Pasolini, Varda, and others.

(Spring) Film Theory: Philosophy and Film Theory

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings.

(Spring) Production Seminar: Documentary Workshop: Advanced Video Production

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): An advanced course in the theory and practice of film/video production as an art form. Topics for the seminar will vary from year to year.
In this class, we will take skills and insights gained in introductory production courses and develop them over the length of the semester through the creation of one short documentary project, 10-20 minutes long. We will explore the ethical questions and ambivalences inherent in this medium, seeking complex answers to difficult questions about representation and the often blurry lines between fiction and nonfiction. We will watch documentaries each week, films that introduce us to new ideas and information both in their content and in their form. Come with your idea; we will hit the ground running with proposal writing the first week.
Prerequisites: Beginning video production or its equivalent. Application and permission of instructor required. Application available through FS Web site.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours); a lab fee may be charged.

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Visual Anthropology and the Material World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Community-based learning course; Anthropology 310f)
In this course we go behind the scenes and behind the screens of anthropological films, museum exhibitions, "small media" events such as television, and publications such as National Geographic magazine, to explore the social contexts of image production, distribution, and interpretation. Focusing on visual activism and ethics, we consider how popular portrayals of our own society and of others' both shape and are shaped by hierarchies of value in the material world. Finally, we leave the walls of the classroom to produce home movies of places which others call home--workplaces, temporary shelters, artistic environments, and so forth.

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: African Americans in Hollywood Film

(English 357)
This course examines the construction of black male and female images beginning at the start of the twentieth century, continuing to today. Taking D. W. Griffith's The Birth of a Nation as a starting place, we will study how narratives stereotyped black identity, creating a series of cherished and enduring types. We will also contrast the depiction of blacks with those of Asians, Europeans, and white Americans.
Prerequisites: Jr, sr
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) plus screening prior to class (TBA)

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Notable Novels in Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 311-01)
Focusing on late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French novels, we will explore the historical and cultural background of a decadent French aristocracy and witness the triumph of the bourgeoisie. As visual resources we will use paintings by Boucher, Fragonard, Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Manet, Degas, as well as cinematic interpretations of Laclos' Les Liaisons dangereuses, Diderot's La Religieuse, and literary works by George Sand, Stendhal, Balzac, Flaubert, Zola, and Maupassant. Literacy in technology is an integral part of this course, and students will learn to produce a digital narration in iMovie as a term project.

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Theatre on Film/Film on Theatre
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts 350b(01))
For over a century, the relationship between stage and screen has been mutually defining. From the early influence of melodrama on cinematic form to contemporary experimental performance practices, theatre and film have sustained a rich, ongoing dialogue. With this in mind, we will study films that engage with theatricality as well as stage work that embraces cinematic sensibilities. Course materials include a broad selection of films in various genres as well as theoretical readings and a selection of plays. A special section of the course will be devoted to Shakespeare on film. Required weekly screenings will be complemented by attendance at live theatre performances.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201 or permission of instructor.
Instructors: E. Rundle

(Fall) Seminar in Film Studies: Playing the Past: History on Stage and Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Theatre Arts350f (01))
Theatre and film have a vast potential to portray, assert, question, and alienate ideas of history. Through close analyses of play texts, films and, when possible, live theatre performances, we'll examine the overt and implied views of history in dramatizations of historical events. The course will feature the work of artists ranging from Friedrich Schiller, Shakespeare, and Brecht to Martin Scorsese, Caryl Churchill, and Anna Deavere Smith, among others.
Prerequisites: See Theatre Arts 350f (01)

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; African American and African Studies 340-01)
This course will explore the representation in film of intimate relationships among African Americans. Confronting an ongoing history of racist, sexist, and homophobic images, films produced by and featuring blacks can offer alternate interpretations of love, romance, and sexuality. Coupled with literature and theoretical readings by feminists and black cultural critics, students will consider the function of—and challenges to—intimacy in interpersonal relationships among African Americans. Directors under consideration include Spike Lee, Kasi Lemmons, Marlon Riggs, and Sanaa Hamri.
Prerequisites: African American & African Studies 101 plus 8 credits in African American and African Studies
Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) plus screening prior to class (TBA)
Instructors: Z. Elliott
Expected enrollment: 15

(Spring) Seminar in Film Studies: Women Experimental Filmmakers
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(GNDST-333-10)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Akerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.
Prerequisites: Film Studies 201, 202, or 203
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours), 1 screening (2 hours)

(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This topics course provides advanced instruction in an aspect of film history, theory, or criticism. Students are expected to bring substantial background in the study of film to this course; enrollment may be limited.
This course examines that strain of the American Avant-Garde that finds its raw material in the domestic and quotidian world of everyday life, which it shapes through various, often highly complex editing practices. The theoretical work for the course is centered on the notion of duration; some of the filmmakers to be considered include: Stan Brakhage, Marie Menken, Marjorie Keller, and Peggy Ahwesh.

(Fall) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(French 331f [02])
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion, a reaction to "cinéma de Papa," won an aesthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry.
Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor.
Notes: Taught in French

(Spring) Topics in National/Transnational Cinemas: States of Terror: From Kaspar Hauser to 9/11 in Film and Text
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Art History 360)
How are we to respond to Indian popular film, which is notorious for its distracting song and dance numbers, meandering story line, and visually overblown spectacles? This seminar will develop historical and theoretical approaches to Indian films as what scholar Lalitha Gopalan calls a "constellation of interruptions." Students will examine feature films in class, write critical papers on scholarly essays, and pursue independent research projects on various aspects of Indian film.

Case studies in terrorism, starting with the case of the mysterious 1828 foundling Kaspar Hauser, rumored even during his lifetime to have been the prince of Baden. Surviving the terror of solitary imprisonment for 12 years, was he the victim of political terrorism at the time? The course investigates parallels and differences between Kaspar's case and the terrorism of the leftist Red Army Faction (RAF) that shook Germany as of the 1970s, as well as their relation to the trauma of 9/11 and present-day international conflict. Multidisciplinary text selection on topos. Films range from New German Cinema (Herzog, von Trotta) to Ulrike Meinhof (2006) and Der Baader-Meinhof Komplex (2008).

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340)
The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) and the repressive, right-wing military regime of Francisco Franco (1939-1975) have shaped contemporary thought and cultural production in Spain. Cinema in particular shows a persistent concern with war and memory. The films studied in this course raise a number of philosophical and political questions to this effect. How does the devastation of war register through the medium of film? How do censorship and propaganda condition memory, and how does the past return in a postdictatorship? What and why do people choose to remember or to forget? Films to be studied include both mainstream commercial features and experimental works, and range in genre.

(French 331s)
From the very beginning, innovation, experimentation, and artistic ambitions have shaped the evolution of French cinema. For more than a century, filmmaking in France has been defined by these innovations: Georges Méliès and the invention of special effects, Buñuel's antics, Jean Renoir's involved narratives, the creative explosion of the New Wave, or today's adventurous directors. This class will focus on those movies and those directors that have transformed and expanded the art of cinema, and will include works by Cocteau, Varda, Pontecorvo, Godard, Clément, Truffaut, Carax, and many others. In French.
Prerequisites: Two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 334(s)(01))
This course examines alternative kinship formations in Asian North American cultural production. It will focus on the gender and sexual management of racial bodies since the nineteenth century--from the U.S. Page Law of 1875 that restricted Chinese women on the basis of their presumed sexual immorality to various forms of "racial castration" that mediate Asian masculinities. We will consider how alternative kinship arrangements and queer cultural projects expose and/or upset the narrative assumptions embedded in heteronormative scripts of nationalism.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(French 341)

Born in 1923 in Senegal, the writer/filmmaker Ousmane Sembène is one of the rare witnesses of the three key periods of contemporary African history: the colonial period; the period of struggle for political and economic independence; and the period of effort to eliminate neocolonialism through the rehabilitation of African cultures. This course is entirely devoted to the works of Ousmane Sembène and will explore the key moments of his life, his activism in European leftist organizations, his discovery of writing, and most of all the dominant features of his film work.

(Fall) Topics in Film Authorship: Natural's Not in It: Pedro Almodóvar

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 340f-01)

This course studies the films of Pedro Almodóvar, European cinema's favorite bad boy turned acclaimed auteur. On the one hand, students learn to situate films within the context of contemporary Spanish history (the transition to democracy, the advent of globalization, etc.) in order to consider the local contours of postmodern aesthetics. On the other hand, the films provide a springboard to reflect on larger theoretical and ethical debates. For instance, what can a weeping transvestite teach us about desire? What happens when plastic surgery and organ transplants become metaphors? Under what circumstances, if any, can spectators find child prostitution cute?

In the 1990s GLBT liberation entered the public sphere as a major political force. Simultaneously, American academia produced and exported a new academic discipline: queer studies. As a consequence, the North American liberational model displaced cultural and theoretical models of sexuality of other countries. We will consider some of the key U.S. texts that have consecrated queer studies as a discipline and juxtapose them with theories and cinematic texts from Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, and Mexico in order to recuperate cultural models under erasure in the wake of the U.S. model’s identity-focused and consumer-driven triumphalism.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; Romance Languages 120f)

"All is fair in love and war." Is this true? Are there rules for the game of power and seduction? If so, how are they determined, and what happens if they are broken? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power, will we witness a change for women? Will the veil of oppression be lifted on this side of the Mediterranean? Students will address such questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, Molière, Beaumarchais, and Goldoni, and watch Mozart’s opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova’s Memoirs. Students will use works of major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods in their presentations.

(Fall) Period Courses: Notable Novels in Film (pre-1800)
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The usual periodization of French literature and culture is by century. Some period courses focus on the characteristics of specific centuries. Others focus on artistic or intellectual movements: gothic, Renaissance, romantic. All period courses, whatever their conceptual framework, integrate texts and historical contexts.

Focusing on late eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French novels, we will explore the historical and cultural background of a decadent French aristocracy and witness the triumph of the bourgeoisie. As visual resources we will use paintings by Boucher, Fragonard, Ingres, Delacroix, Courbet, Manet, Degas, as well as cinematic interpretations of Laclos' Les Liaisons dangereuses, Diderot's La Religieuse, and literary works by George Sand, Stendhal, Balzac, Flaubert, Zola, and Maupassant. Literacy in technology is an integral part of this course, and students will learn to produce a digital narration in iMovie as a term project.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: N. Vaget

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Spanish 360, Italian 361)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students are expected to read works and write papers in French.
This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, or 230, or permission of department chair and course instructor

(Fall) Courses on Social and Political Issues and Critical Approaches: Topic: The French New Wave: Its Origins and Its Influence
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 370f-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses examine a definable phenomenon—an idea, a movement, an event, a mentality, a cultural structure or system, an historical problem, a critical mode—relevant to the civilization of France or of French-speaking countries. Readings from a variety of disciplines shed light on the particular aspect of thought or culture being studied.
The New Wave was a series of films made in the 1960s by a group of pioneers, who had seen almost every film ever made and particularly admired American and Russian cinema. This creative explosion, a reaction to "cinéma de Papa," won an aesthetic and political victory against an increasingly affluent, self-satisfied society, and brought about a revolution in the film industry.

(Spring) Courses in Francophone Studies: Lost in Transit: Migrants, Exiles and Refugees in Contemporary Francophone Literature and Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses study non-metropolitan French-speaking cultures and literary works written in French outside Europe. Areas of focus are one or more of the following regions: Africa, the Caribbean, or Canada.
In this course, we will explore the interrelated themes of displacement and unsettlement in their contemporary manifestations in post-colonial African societies, and see how francophone cinema and literature grapple with experiences that cut across cultures, ethnicities, nationalities and other boundaries. Although the metropolitan experience remains the dominant model, we will also read and view works that foreground movements within the peripheries due to conflicts, economic hardships and political persecution. Authors will include Waberi, Mambéty, Diop, Aberrahmane Cissoka, Kane and others.
Prerequisites: two of the following courses: French 215, 219, 225, 230
Instructors: E. Diop
Expected enrollment: 16

FREN-370-01 - French - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Level Seminar: Topic: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women's Autobiographical Narrative in French
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): The seminar is intended to challenge students at the highest level. A regular rotation of topics ensures a variety of perspectives across genre and period, encompassing linguistic, literary, theoretical, and cultural issues of French and Francophone studies. Development of critical skills is stressed through classroom discussion and critique of writing projects, drawing on individual student interests and experiences as they relate to the topic of the course.
This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself.
Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.
Prerequisites: 12 credits including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and course instructor
Instructors: C. Rivers
Expected enrollment: 16

Gender Studies

GNDST-101-01 - Gender Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Gender Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines the social and historical construction of gender from cross-cultural and interdisciplinary perspectives. The intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in various contexts, past and present, will be central to our inquiry. Topics will include the politics of appearance, women's economic status, sexual violence, racism, legacies of colonialism, the challenges of transnational feminist activism, and strategies for change. We will examine the development of feminist theory and its practices in various local and transnational contexts.

(Spring) Introduction to Gender Studies: Introduction to Gender Studies in the Spanish-Speaking World: Identities and Intersections
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 230)
This course, taught in Spanish, is an introduction to the interdisciplinary field of gender studies. It also focuses on the specific implications of this new, predominantly U.S.-based discipline for and in the Spanish speaking world. The intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in various contexts, past and present, will be central to our inquiry. Topics will include the politics of appearance, women's economic status, sexual violence, racism, legacies of colonialism, the challenges of transnational feminist and queer activism, and strategies for change. We will examine the development of feminist and queer theory and its practices in various local and transnational contexts, but especially in the Spanish-speaking world.
Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission by instructor
Notes: taught in Spanish

(Spring) Introduction to Gender Studies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is designed to introduce students to social, cultural, historical, and political perspectives on gender and its construction. Through discussion and writing, we will explore the intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in multiple settings and contexts. Taking an interdisciplinary approach to a variety of questions, we will consider the distinctions between sex and gender, women's economic status, the making of masculinity, sexual violence, queer movements, racism, and the challenges of feminist activism across nations, and possibilities for change. We will also examine the development of feminist theory, including its promises and challenges.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Gender and Power in the History of Mount Holyoke College - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; History 101f)
Mary Lyon, founder in 1837 of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, held out to her students the possibility that they might transform the world—a tall order for young women who were excluded from proper citizenship and political power. To Lyon, duty, discipline, and community would make it possible. What transformations ensued? And what can we learn from them about the complexities of gender and power? This course will introduce students to the craft of historical research through the richness of the College Archives. Special attention will be paid to the College's missionary past, its role in labor research and activism, and the place of racism and antiracism in its history.

(Spring) Methods and Practices in Feminist Scholarship
How do scholars produce knowledge? What can we learn from differences and similarities in the research process of a novelist, a biologist, an historian, a sociologist, and a film critic? Who decides what counts as knowledge? We will examine a range of methods from the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, including visual analysis, archival exploration, interviewing, and ethnography, as we consider the specific advantages (and potential limitations) of diverse disciplinary approaches for feminist inquiry. We will take up numerous practical questions as well as larger methodological and ethical debates. This course provides a foundation for advanced work in the major.

(Fall) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: What Is Memory?

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 250f-01, Theatre 204f-01)

Memory has a wide range of meanings and applications in many different contexts. What, for example, is the difference between artificial intelligence and human memory? How are national identities constructed around the commemoration of great events? What is the importance of memory in relation to concepts like justice and progress? How do rituals and performances work to determine gender and other identities? In this course, we examine the social, political, cultural, neurological, and technological functions of memory through readings and exercises that require students to think across disciplines. Special attention will be given to interpretations and adaptations of Sophocles’ Antigone.

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of Culture: The Gender of War in Twentieth-Century German Culture - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; German 223)

As an extreme, but common experience, war creates, shapes, and contests normative constructions of masculinity, femininity, and gender relations in general. This seminar explores the concept of war, its causes, and its representation in memoirs, fiction, art, and photography within German-speaking realms with an emphasis on World War II and its aftermath. What impact does war have on gender relations within a matrix of other categories of identity, such as race, class, and sexuality? Materials include texts by Bachmann, Brecht, Celan, and other German writers and films such as Triumph of the Will and Das Boot.

Prerequisites: Previous study of German

Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224)

(Spring) Women and Gender in the Study of History: African Women: Food and Power

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(History 296s-02)

This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories, and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional fourth hour discussions.

(Spring) Women in History: Native American Women's History

(History 296s-03)

This course explores Native American women's experiences across tribal nations from a historical perspective. We will look at Native American women's contributions to tribal communities and American history more broadly and re-examine representations of Native American women in myth, literature and popular culture. We will also look at traditional concepts of women's person-hood and roles in Native American societies, as well as the ways in which they changed over time. The colloquium will emphasize the individual stories of women’s persistence and the challenges and successes of living under the conditions of American colonialism.

(Spring) Women and Gender in Philosophy and Religion: Women and Buddhism

(Religion 241)

This course explores women and Buddhism during different historical periods and in different cultures. Through a variety of sources, this course will illuminate Buddhist concepts of gender and sexuality, views of women's spiritual capacities, the diversity of women's images, roles, experiences, concerns, and contributions in Buddhist societies, and scholarly approaches to women in Buddhism. Special attention will be given to how gender is constructed in each cultural and religious context encountered, with particular emphasis on Buddhist women in Southeast Asia. We will look into the reasons why texts on religion have not always included the voices of women, and we will investigate ways to uncover them through research techniques and alternative hermeneutical strategies.

(Speaking-intensive; Psychology 211s)
Are there psychological differences between women and men that persist despite greater equality? Which differences are these? What are their sources, and what implications do they have for how we live now? How do "femininity" and "masculinity" fit into our understanding of human psychology? This course will explore these and other questions about gender, identity, and social structure. Readings will include a range of primary and secondary sources— theoretical works, scientific articles, Web sites, archival records, and documents.

(Fall) Feminist Theory: Feminist and Queer Theory through Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Film Studies 290f-01)
We will be reading a number of key feminist texts that theorize the construction of sexual difference, and challenge the oppression of women. We will then address queer theory, an offshoot and expansion of feminist theory, and study how it is both embedded in, and redefines, the feminist paradigms. This redefinition occurs roughly at the same time (1980s/90s) when race emerges as one of feminism's prominent blind spots. We will study these shifts through the analysis of a few moving pictures, or, to put it differently: all you always wanted to know about feminism, but didn't think to ask filmmakers such as Almodóvar, Hitchcock, Jarman, Pasolini, Varda, and others.

(Politics 233s)
This course explores the overlapping dualities of the feminine and the masculine, the private and the public, the home and the world. We examine different forms of power over the body; the ways gender and sexual identities reinforce or challenge the established order; and the cultural determinants of "women's emancipation." We emphasize the politics of feminism, dealing with themes that include culture, democracy, and the particularly political role of theory and on theoretical attempts to grasp the complex ties and tensions between sex, gender, and power.

(Fall) Feminist Theory: Invitation to Feminist Theory
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is designed to introduce students to the most important political questions in the field of feminist theory. We will begin the course by attending to the distinction between sex and gender and its relevance to feminism yesterday and today, exploring ways that the intersex movement, queer theory, and other gender politics complicate feminist concerns. In addition, we will explore the development of different schools of feminist thought, including arguments that feminism means equal rights for women, as well as claims that rights-based accounts of feminist freedom are limiting.

(Physics 211s-01)
This course examines explanations for the under-representation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.

(Anthropology 216s)
This course will address the predicaments of women who must negotiate local contexts shaped by transnational markets, changing patterns of agriculture and agro-forestry, and struggles over indigenous land rights. How have arguments about democracy shaped the struggles women take up locally, nationally, and transnationally in opposition to corporate power, national policies, and supranational agencies such as the World Trade Organization?

(Spring) Feminism and Capitalism
(Writing-intensive; Politics 271s)
This course will explore the relationship between feminism and capitalism in a contemporary context, particularly the way they reinforce and contradict one another. Examining this question through Marxist, liberal, post-structuralist, and post-colonial feminist theory, as well as the recent history of feminist and anti-capitalist movements, we will consider the economic and political underpinnings of feminist thinking and practice. Do certain feminisms carry implicit anti-capitalist commitments? To what extent are particular feminisms, especially liberal feminism, reliant upon capitalist structures and processes? What stakes might feminists have in preserving or uprooting capitalism?

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Beyond Logocentrism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 350s-01)
Logocentric thinking is characterized by the desire for a center or original guarantee of all meaning, and has dominated the Western world since Greek antiquity. It attempts to repress difference in favor of identity and presence. Feminists have extended the concept to talk about phallogocentrism as the logical underpinning of patriarchy, and seek to go beyond it. Thinking beyond logocentrism is also crucial for the new discipline of critical animal studies. In this course, we will study attempts at breaking with the (phal)logocentric model of subjectivity, many of which have emerged in the "mestizo/a" continent.

This seminar will focus on depictions of war in the context of gender. When asked how we might prevent war, Virginia Woolf suggested that we must invent new language and methods rather than follow the path of the traditional "procession of educated men." What language emerges in works about the effects of war? Texts will include essays and films as well as selected works by writers such as Alcott, Whitman, Crane, Twain, Hemingway, Woolf, Silko, Morrison, and O'Brien.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Asian Studies 340f-01)
A seminar on the eighteenth-century Chinese masterpiece The Story of the Stone and selected literary criticism in response to this work. Discussions will focus on love, gender-crossing, and women's supremacy and the paradoxical treatments of these themes in the novel. We will explore multiple aspects of these themes, including the sociopolitical, philosophical, and literary milieus of eighteenth-century China. We will also examine this novel in its relation to Chinese literary tradition in general and the generic conventions of premodern Chinese vernacular fiction in particular.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Gender and Class in the Victorian Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(English 323s-01)
This course will investigate how representations of gender and class serve as a structuring principle in the development of the genre of the Victorian novel in Britain. We will devote significant attention to the construction of Victorian femininity and masculinity in relation to class identity, marriage as a sexual contract, and the gendering of labor. The texts chosen for this course also reveal how gender and class are constructed in relation to other axes of identity in the period, such as race, sexuality, and national character. Novelists will include Dickens, Eliot, Gaskell, C. Bronte, and Hardy.
Supplementary readings in literary criticism and theory.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department including English 220, 230, or permission of instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Gender, Food and Agriculture in the Global Context
(Anthropology 316f-01)

This course explores the gendered domains of food and agriculture as they unfold within household and community economies in the global south and in G-8 countries. We will examine the place of women in systems of food production, processing, marketing, and consumption. We will address locally regulated markets, cuisines, and peasant farming systems as they interface with international neo-liberal systems of market and trade. We will also pay close attention to emergent women's agricultural cooperatives and unions as they shape new transnational coalitions that offer sustainable (and flourishing) solutions to problems associated with post-industrial agriculture.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Poetics: The Poetess, Prophet, and Revolutionary
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive; English 577s-01)

This seminar will explore innovations in eighteenth- and nineteenth-century women's verse. By investigating experiments with narrative, genre, stanza form, meter, and figurative language, we will contemplate what political, social, and ideological problems women writers attempted to present and perhaps solve through linguistic creativity. Larger questions include how to define "feminist poetics" and what potential such a project might afford poets and thinkers today. To this end, we will read selections of poetry in conversations with contemporary feminist theory as well as representations of women's incantation, prophecy, and singing by male poets and novelists of the day.

Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in English and/or gender studies beyond the 100 level, or permission of instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

Notes: meets English department 1700-1900 requirement; meets English department seminar requirement

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Sexual Selection and Sexual Conflict in Animals: Theory, Research, and Feminist Critique
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Biology 321B)

Sexual selection theory explains how selection on traits that allow individuals to attract potential mates or defeat potential rivals can lead to the evolution of sexual dimorphism. Sexual conflict theory investigates how the conflicting interests of males and females in mating interactions can result in the co-evolution of traits for manipulation and resistance. Feminist critics point out how these theories reflect and in turn propagate stereotypes about human behavior. This course explores classic and current biological literature on sexual selection and sexual conflict alongside feminist critiques of the language use, the assumptions, and the interpretation of research in these fields.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: "Every Secret Thing": Contemporary Women's Autobiographical Narrative in French
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
This course will examine contemporary autobiographical narratives written by women, with a particular focus on authors whose works include multiple autobiographical texts of various genres: fictional, nonfictional, and semifictional. We will analyze the ways in which these authors present their life stories, especially its traumatic or secret episodes, and the ways in which their works discuss the process of that presentation and of memory itself. Themes that are common to these autobiographical texts include: relationships with family, education, sexuality, class, and love. In addition to literary texts, we will analyze in detail several autobiographical films made by women.
Prerequisites: 12 credits in French including two courses at the advanced level, or permission of department chair and course instructor; online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html
Notes: Taught in French

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women and Gender in the Middle East
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive; History 301f-05)
This course is designed to provide students with a nuanced historical understanding of issues related to women and gender in the region defined as the area from Morocco to Iran. After an introduction to the main themes and approaches in the study of women and gender, we will examine the development of discourses on gender and the lived experiences of women from the rise of Islam, through the Ottoman Empire, and up to the twentieth century. Topics: the politics of marriage, divorce, and reproduction; women's political and economic participation; Islamist movements; the new field of masculinity studies; and the highly contested topics of homosexuality and transsexuality in the Middle East.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor; 8 credits in history or equivalent preparation; written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application.html) is required

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Love, Desire, and Gender in Indian Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Asian Studies 350s-01)
Seminar on love, desire, and gender, major themes in Indian literature. We will read classic poems, plays, and narratives in translation from Sanskrit, Tamil, Hindi, and other languages, in relation to aesthetic theory, visual arts (miniature paintings), and performance genres (Indian dance, and the modern Bollywood cinema). Study of the conventions of courtly love, including aesthetic mood (rasa) and natural landscapes, and their transformation in Hindu bhakti and Sufi Muslim mystical texts, the Radha Krishna myth, and film. Focus on representations of women and men, and on issues of power, voice, and agency.
Prerequisites: so, jr, sr, and 100 or 200 level course in literature in any language (inc. English); online application required, see http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Women Writers: Early Feminisms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Spanish 330f-01)
This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erauso, and Maria de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women in Dark Times
(Writing-intensive; Politics 326s)
This seminar focuses on the contributions of four women thinkers from two different generations: Emma Goldman, Rosa Luxemburg, Hannah Arendt, and Simone Weil. We will examine their important commonalities, including Jewish backgrounds, immigrant experiences, powerful political commitments, and leftists' sympathies. We will also consider their theoretical and political engagements in concert and analyze the role of gender in their writing. How might their experience as female political activists shape their lives and work, especially before the emergence of contemporary feminist struggles?

(Fall) Advanced Seminar: Feminist Theologies

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

(Religion 323f)

Mary Daly, Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, Phyllis Trible, and Judith Plaskow, among others, have argued that traditional Jewish and Christian theological systems have overlooked the needs, concerns, histories, and contributions of women. Their challenges range from the historical modification of a presumably unbiased religious system to the outright rejection of a so-called patriarchal establishment. Whatever their approach, feminist theologies offer diverse and incisive tools for understanding how a theological system operates, how transitory cultural assumptions become embedded in ongoing doctrines, and how apparently minor adjustments can have significant ripple effects.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: The Art of Fact: Writing the Lives of Women

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Writing-intensive)

This course will examine narrative non-fiction biographies written by women biographers in order to determine the specific ways in which women tell the stories of other women's lives. We will investigate stylistic and theoretical approaches to writing biographies in which gender is a central focus. We will ask if "feminist biography" constitutes a literary genre. We will experience the challenges (and thrills) of conducting archival and primary research. The course will culminate in students writing chapter-length biographies.

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Women Experimental Filmmakers

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Film Studies 340s(01))

This seminar examines experimental cinema made by women from the early 1950s, during the earliest years of the movement known as the American Avant-Garde, through the 1990s. While the class will read feminist film theory and see the work of such well-known filmmakers as Yvonne Rainer, Sally Potter, and Chantal Ackerman, we will also examine the less familiar but highly influential films of women working in the home movie or diary mode, with particular emphasis on the work of Marie Menken.

Prerequisites: jr or sr; 8 credits in gender studies, application required, see: http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/gender/300level.html

(Spring) Advanced Seminar: Female Portraits

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Art History 310)

The seminar investigates likenesses of women from ancient Greece and Rome. Facial features, body language, hair and clothing will be studied with reference to contemporary social customs, theories of character and beauty, medical treatises, beliefs in deity and in the afterlife. Special attention will go to original objects in the Mount Holyoke Art Museum, including marble portraits and coins depicting classical queens and empresses.

(Fall) Senior Seminar
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This year-long capstone course brings seniors together to think through relationships among empirical research, theory, activism, and practice in gender studies. Majors with diverse interests, perspectives, and expertise (and other seniors with substantial background in the field) will have the opportunity to reflect on the significance of their gender studies education in relation to their current work (including work in 333s, 390, 395), their academic studies as a whole, and their plans for the future. Course readings and discussion will be shaped by students in collaboration with the instructor. This course continues in the spring semester as Gender Studies 392.

Prerequisites: Seniors only, GNDST 101, GNDST 221, GNDST 250, GNDST 333, 20 credits in gender studies and/or related courses, written application for permission required.

GEOG-100-01 - Geography - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar on Alternative Energy Technologies
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar
Alternative energy technologies run the gamut from sophisticated silicon-based photovoltaics, to the fermentation of sugars for ethanol, to the combustion of biomass and more. The large array of alternative energy opportunities combined with a litany of hyperbolic prognostications of each new breakthrough has created a great deal of confusion on the state of alternative energy. This class uses an interdisciplinary approach to survey the major alternative energy technologies and explores the science, economics, and politics pertinent to each paradigm.

(Spring) Human Dimensions of Environmental Change - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement (Environmental Studies 204)
Using case studies from Africa, Asia, North and South America, and Europe, this course examines the interactions between human institutions (such as political and economic structures, science and technology, class and gender systems, and cultures) and the environmental/earth systems that provide their contexts and have been impacted by them. The course will provide a forum to analyze the environmental consequences of a variety of land-use systems, resource use, and development projects and explore possible alternative strategies of human-environment relations that could create a balance between human needs and environmental constraints.
Instructors: G. Kebede
Expected enrollment: 30

GEOG-205-01 - Geography - 2010-2011
(Fall) Mapping and Spatial Analysis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Provides a comprehensive introduction to maps, including their design, compilation, and computer production. Introduces students to the principles of abstracting the Earth's surface into spatial databases using GIS, remote sensing, and Global Positioning Satellites.

(Spring) North America in Context: A Region in Transition
This course explores the changing physical and human landscapes of contemporary North America by examining the region as an important nexus of global and local phenomenon and processes. We use three conceptual lenses to explore how global and local processes intersect in the region. These lenses are 1) physical geography (environment, natural resources, climate change); 2) human geography (culture, race, class, gender); and 3) political & economic geography (globalization, governance, financialization). This course seeks to familiarize us with the changing physical & human landscapes of the region via its multi-scaled interconnections with our planet and its inhabitants.
Instructors: J. Funke
Expected enrollment: 40

*(Fall) Atmosphere and Weather - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
In this course we will learn weather forecasting skills. This will involve examining weather observations, satellite and radar images, surface and upper-air weather charts, and predictions made by computer models. We will have an opportunity to learn atmospheric dynamics and gain an understanding of the Earth's radiation budget. Topics will include severe storms, hurricanes, and winter weather.
Prerequisites: high school earth science or any 100-level natural science course
Instructors: The department

GEOG-304-01 - Geography - 2010-2011
(Spring) Regional Planning - Special Topics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the shift from planning as an urban issue to the recognition that planning decisions often have broader regional impacts. The first part of the semester will survey urban planning efforts from the early 1900s through the 1960s. The second half of the semester will focus on the "new" comprehensive planning efforts, using growth management of urbanization to protect rural areas, agricultural lands and sensitive environments. Emphasis will be placed on current "Smart Growth" approaches to development.
Prerequisites: Any 200-level geography course
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours)
Instructors: T. Millette

(Fall) Seminars: Political Economy of Climate Change
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
The South/North divide at the December 2009 climate change negotiations in Copenhagen were complex, and centered around issues of national sovereignty and the right to development. There is now a firm consensus that climate change could not only undermine the most basic challenges of international relations and economic development, but that it threatens to induce even further suffering among the world's poorest people (rise of climate refugees etc) and will likely exacerbate existing international problems and disputes while giving rise to entirely new dilemmas. This course explores the history of international politics and economic development, and examines the systems of power supporting the structures and institutions that shape international policy on climate change.

(Spring) Seminars: Diverse Economic Geography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): These seminars present selected topics in geography that reflect contemporary problems, current geographical ideas, philosophical and methodological trends in geography, and/or the history and development of geographical thought.
This course begins by looking at global economic and environmental crises. We consider alternative economic activity that might help us address these crises. We broaden our conception of economy to include earth assets, household production, and collective enterprises, as well as new models of economic development. The course adopts a hopeful and experimental attitude toward economic activity, focusing upon a diverse range of experiences and possibilities. Students track alternative economic ideas and projects in the United States and across the world. We explore economic communities that are based on recognizing our interdependence with the earth and each other.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 4 credits in department and 4 credits in related social sciences at 200 level

(Fall) Third World Development - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Offers an interdisciplinary perspective on social, economic, and political features of contemporary development in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, regions referred to as the Third World or the South, and provides an introduction to theoretical origins and definitions of economic growth, development, and underdevelopment. It then addresses more specific aspects of development such as trends in population growth, migration, and urbanization; agrarian change; livelihood strategies and aspects of social welfare such as health, education, and shelter; poverty and the environment; and external economic relationships. The latter part of the course draws extensively on selected case studies.

Geology

GEOL-100-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Physical Geology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
From earthquakes to landscapes, deserts to glaciers, landslides to limestone, this course introduces the surficial and internal processes of the earth. Learn to interpret the geology of your surroundings when traveling to new places and understand how geologic setting influences how people live. Lectures focus on exploring and explaining geological features and processes using concept sketches. Labs focus on mineral and rock identification, map reading, and local field trips.

GEOL-101-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Environmental Geology with Lab
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The only planet known to sustain life, Earth provides all the resources that sustain us, but at the same time it can be an unpredictable and sometimes dangerous home. In the long view of geologic time, Earth's environments constantly change. Floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and other natural processes challenge our ingenuity, while we also contend with self-induced problems such as pollution, desertification, and even global climate change. The better we understand our planet, the better able we are to survive on it. In lab, we cover methods for recognizing and interpreting environmental hazards and developing strategies to address environmental problems.

GEOL-102-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Fall) History of Life
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Life forms have inhabited the surface of our planet for most of its history. Earth, as a result, has a unique geology that is unlike that of any other planet. In this course we will examine the interrelations between life processes and Earth's crust and atmosphere and how they work together to create the geology of the planet. Using both the rock and fossil record, we will study the origin and evolution of life, the history of continents and oceans, and the diversification of complex life forms. Laboratory and field trips will emphasize identification and analysis of sediments, rocks, and fossils.

GEOL-103-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Oceanography
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
Because more than seventy percent of our planet is covered by oceans, the study of marine systems is crucial to our understanding of the Earth. In this course, we will examine chemical, physical, geological, and biological processes in the oceans at a variety of scales in time and space. We will explore how the Earth's oceans formed, how they provided the foundations for life, and how they continue to affect weather and climate, stabilize global chemical cycles, interact with the terrestrial environment, and give us access to resources.

GEOL-115-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Understanding Climate Change
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The climate of planet Earth is changing and many believe that humans are the cause. But the Earth’s climate has changed in the past (without human influence), so how can we be sure that present and projected future warming is not simply part of a natural cycle? To understand future climate change we will look at the record of past climate change and evaluate the impacts of a warmer world.

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: Emergence of Animals
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
The origin of animals was one of the most important events in the history of earth. In this course we will review the history of the planet, learn basic geology, and then examine the problem of the origin of animals by studying Mount Holyoke’s unequalled collection of Precambrian and Cambrian fossils. The origin of animals has been called the Cambrian Explosion. We will examine what this means for our understanding of evolutionary theory.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Diamonds
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Are diamonds a girl’s best friend? This course explores the geology of diamond deposits, the cultural and economic complexity of diamonds and diamond mining, the physical properties of diamond, and industrial uses of artificially produced diamonds. Students will be expected to lead and participate in class discussions, complete assignments in groups, and make oral arguments about difficult and complicated topics.

GEOL-203-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Surface Processes
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The surface of the Earth is a history book of past environmental change. Every hill and valley, every erosional feature, every deposit is the result of processes acting at the Earth’s surface. In this course we study these processes (e.g., glaciers, rivers, slopes, coastlines, windblown sand, frozen ground, cave formation, soil development) to better understand how they work and to understand the resulting landforms and deposits. With this understanding we can then observe different landforms and deposits and infer past process (environments of deposition). Fieldwork and trips allow students to explore firsthand the processes that have created and modified the Earth’s surface.

(Fall) Plate Tectonics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Plate tectonic theory explains the origins of volcanoes and earthquakes, continental drift, and the locations of mountain belts and oceans. This course focuses on the geometry of plate tectonics. Topics include mid-ocean ridge systems, transform faults, subduction zones, relative plate motion, earthquake analysis, triple point junctions, and stereographic projection. Work includes individual research projects on active plate boundaries.
Notes: Comfort with geometry and trigonometry suggested.

GEOL-224-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Paleontology-Stratigraphy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course provides an intensive study of fossils, fossil preservation, depositional environments, sediments, sedimentary rocks, and the processes of sedimentation. We will employ the principles of stratigraphic analysis and correlation to interpret ancient environments and paleoclimate, reconstruct paleogeography, and probe the characteristics of sedimentary basins. Laboratory exercises and field trips will introduce a variety of analytical techniques used to study sedimentary rocks.

(Spring) Groundwater
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
The demand for and the contamination of groundwater resources are major environmental concerns. To better understand the dynamics of the groundwater system, we will cover topics including the hydrologic cycle, surface and subsurface hydrology, groundwater resource evaluation, and groundwater geotechnical problems. Students prepare weekly problem sets, a term paper, and an oral presentation. Many of the homework problems involve computer applications.

(Fall) Structural Geology and Orogenesis - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course covers the basic techniques of field geology and structural analysis. Lectures concentrate on field techniques, stress, strain, faulting, folding, rock strength, deformation mechanisms, and multidisciplinary approaches to mountain building (orogenesis). Most labs are field trips that involve data collection. Weekly writing assignments focus on presenting original research and distinguishing between observations and interpretations. During the final weeks of the semester, oral presentations emphasize fluency in the published literature of structural geology.

(Spring) History of the Earth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course explores the evolution and interaction of life, rocks, oceans, and air during the past 4 billion years of earth history. Some topics covered are: ice ages and greenhouse atmospheres, continental drift, extinctions and radiations of flora and fauna, the early evolution of earth, absolute and relative dating of rocks, and the geologic time scale. Labs teach geologic map interpretation and simple computer modeling of earth systems. Oral presentations and writing assignments focus on proposal writing, the design and testing of earth science hypotheses, and critical analysis of recently published research on earth history.

GEOL-341-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminars: Bedrock Geology Maps - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.

A bedrock geologic map shows the distribution of different kinds of rocks at the surface of the earth. "A geologic map is a subtle combination of observed facts and interpretations," says Lucien Platt. "Map making is a fine art. To appreciate fully and to understand a geologic map takes thoughtful and careful analysis." Through such analysis, this course focuses on: (1) using maps to infer regional geological histories, (2) drawing cross sections, and (3) visualization in three dimensions. This course meets for the first six weeks of the semester, and it is recommended for students who plan to pursue graduate degrees in the geosciences.

Prerequisites: At least two 200- or 300-level geology courses

Instructors: M. Markley

GEOL-342-01 - Geology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Death Valley Field Course - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

Preamble (for topics courses): Seminars offer directed study and discussion of one or more selected topics in geology. Topics vary from year to year.

Consult the department for information about future seminars.

This seminar will cover selected topics on the geology of Death Valley region, California. We will meet for two hours per week up until spring break, then embark on a ten-day fieldtrip to Death Valley National Park, March 12-21. A participation fee is required. Students will be responsible for researching particular topics and presenting a final report.

Prerequisites: two geology courses and permission of instructor

Notes: 1 meeting (2 hours) and ten-day fieldtrip (Thursday, March 12 to Saturday, March 21); enrollment limited.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 101-02)

Germany today, 20 years post-unification, 21 years past the fall of the Berlin Wall: every 4th German--30 percent school-age children--of immigrant background; 5 percent Muslim residents; a mosque aside Cologne Cathedral; public schools teaching in Turkish and German; more Russian Jews emigrating to Germany than to Israel; ethnic German immigrants who do not know German; East Germans longing for the return of the Wall. Focus on close analysis of films, their sociohistorical, economic, and cultural contexts, e.g., Oscar-winning Lives of Others, EU Lux Prize-winning The Edge of Heaven; Fassbinder's Ali-Fear Eats the Soul vs. Noshir's 2002 remake/ sequel.

Notes: No knowledge of German necessary; Students with previous study of German are encouraged to take German 232 with this course. To receive credit for GRMST 100 (taught in English) toward a minimum major or minor in German Studies, students also have to complete GRMST 232-01 (taught in German).

(Spring) First-Year Seminar: The Politics of Memory in Postwar German and Japanese Cultures - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English)

Cultural exchanges between German and Japanese peoples have taken place for over 400 years. What has triggered and sustained exchanges of cultural, social, artistic, and military traditions? How have these historical exchanges affected the remembrance of World War II, the Holocaust, the Rape of Nanjing, and Hiroshima/Nagasaki in postwar narratives of both national cultures? We focus on the process of remembering war and atrocity in memoirs, fiction, and films in order to explore the politics of memory within transnational perspectives of gender, race, and class.

(Spring) Creation and Production of a German Play - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Students write and stage an original one-act play in German. Students develop proficiency in the language through reading several short stories by authors such as Friedrich Dürrenmatt, Bertolt Brecht, and Doris Dörrie, as well as theoretical writings on the theater; students will then rewrite one of the short stories as a play. Students write a substantial essay describing how they applied the specific theories of the theater to their original adaptation. The play will be performed at the annual German Theatre Festival and Competition hosted each spring by Mount Holyoke College.
Prerequisites: Open to students who have completed an intermediate-level German course, or per permission of department chair.

(Fall) Topics in German Studies: Lustmord: Crimes of Passion in German Culture since the Late Eighteenth Century

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies)

Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political, and social developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic, and other units.

"Some day people will say that I gave birth to the 20th century," Jack the Ripper claimed in 1888, intimating a close link between the rise of modernity and "sexual crime." "Lustmord." Depictions of "crimes of passion" reached zeniths in Weimar cinema and art, and again in recent film and literature, e.g., Pandora's Box; M, the chilling depiction of a serial murderer; and, lately, The Promise and The Perfume. Our discussions focus on cultural constructions of sexuality and gender, on victims and perpetrators. How have depictions of "Lustmord" exposed power structures and violence among genders and problematized relationships with the Other, the Body, the Strange?

Prerequisites: Previous study of German

(Spring) Topics in German Studies: The Remembrance of the Holocaust in Film
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course examines the cultural, political, and social, developments from 1800 to the present by investigating a significant topic. The selection of materials is exemplary rather than comprehensive and is based on thematic, historical, generic, and other units. This seminar explores the remembrance of the Holocaust as represented primarily, but not solely, in German and European films from the immediate postwar era to the present, including documentary and feature film, as well as in other forms of visual media, such as television, photographs, and art. Themes include the working through of the past, expressions of guilt, remorse and sorrow, and the relationship between art and politics as exemplified in attempts to understand the causes, motives, and consequences of the Holocaust. Films include Night and Fog, Shoah, Schindler's List, Gehörntig, The Night Porter, Life is Beautiful, The Nasty Girl, Wannsee Conference and others.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: Students enrolled in 223 are expected to enroll in the complementary two-credit tutorial (German Studies 224).
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 30

GRMST-231-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in German Studies in Translation: Specters, Monsters, and the Mind: Gothic and Grotesque in Anglo-German Film and Fiction from Frankenstein to Twilight and True Blood
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; Film Studies 220-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): These courses are taught in English and satisfy a Humanities I-a distribution requirement but not the language requirement. For credit toward the minimum major/minor in German Studies students must enroll in German 232 (2 credits) as well (and read, write about, and discuss selected materials from 231 in German) An introduction to critical reading, writing, and arguing skills, emphasizing the practice of oral and written strategies for discussing and analyzing printed and film texts and the reader's responses to them.
Love and death, romance and assault; when the bourgeois novel began equating marriage contracts with romantic love, a "darker" narrative evolved: Romantic Schauerliteratur, horror fiction. We discuss social and psychological rationales as well as aesthetic representations of such phenomena as the "Gothic" and "Grotesque," "the fantastic," and "science fiction," as well as cross-cultural influences. Texts/films: Shelley's Frankenstein; Stoker's Dracula, Murnau's/Herzog's Nosferatu, Merhige's "shadow"; Kafka's/Nemec's Metamorphosis; Süskind's/Tyker's Perfume; Dürrenmatt's/Mambety's Visit/Hynais.
Prerequisites: Majors/minors in the department should simultaneously enroll in both German studies 231 and 232 to receive major/minor credit.
Notes: taught in English, no knowledge of German required
Instructors: G. Davis
Expected enrollment: 30

GRMST-232-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) German Tutorial: New Face/s of Germany: "Multikulti"-Chaos?
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): Focus on developing discussion and reading skills in German, and revising and editing papers written in German for German studies courses taught in English. Films, readings, and discussion in German using materials related to those in German Studies 100. This course focuses specifically on the public debate of diverse visions and representations of what constitutes "German culture." For many residents of Germany, with or without migrant background, "multikulturell" has become a "Reizwort" laden with negative connotations and almost unrelated to its cognate "multicultural." Still, a consensus proposes "integration" as the key to a successful future of European societies. But how does this concept relate to other explosive terms of the dialogue: e.g., "Leitkultur"; "parallel societies"/"ethnic neighborhoods"; "cultural traditions"/"human rights"?
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: To receive credit for GRMST 100 (taught in English) toward a minimum major or minor in German Studies, students also have to complete GRMST 232-01 (taught in German).
Instructors: G. Davis
Expected enrollment: 16

GRMST-301-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Studies in German Language and Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Familiarizes students with oral and written discourses in all modalities, especially reading, writing, and speaking. Students focus on in-depth analyses of writing and speaking patterns in current newspaper and magazine articles. Thematic foci include the role of Germany's past in contemporary German society, Germany's responsibilities and political agenda within the European Union, and Germany's political and economic ties to Asia. Material based on most recent articles and news reports. Frequent text-oriented exercises emphasize students' individual progress in light of different language and learner profiles and therefore different student needs.
Prerequisites: Open to students who have completed at least 8 credits beyond German Studies 201 or permission of department
Instructors: M. Lauer
Expected enrollment: 30

GRMST-315-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in German Studies: Images of Asia in German Cultures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This seminar explores the portrayal of Asian cultures in German-speaking literature, film, and media from the late nineteenth century to the present. Drawing from historical ties between Germany and, for example, Japan, the seminar examines the evidence of Orientalism, transnational exchange, and cultural affinities that reflect ongoing relationships between cultural production and experience in German and Asian cultures. Includes work by Doris Dörrie, Wim Wenders, Werner Herzog, Mori Ogai, Yoko Tawada, Franz Kafka, Bertolt Brecht and Hermann Hesse.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Instructors: K. Remmler
Expected enrollment: 30

GRMST-315-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in German Studies: Global Europe?: Immigration and Representations of Im/migrants in Film and Text - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Taught in English; European Studies 316)
The course focuses on key issues facing contemporary Europe as it attempts to integrate large im/migrant populations: such legal issues as the development of asylum, immigration, citizenship, and anti-discrimination/hate laws and such cultural issues as the meanings of integration vs. assimilation; multicultural vs. pluralistic societies; the roles of Christianity, Judaism, and Islam in the construction of European societies and cultural identities; perceptions of (Post-)Colonialism and the interconnections of gender, race, class, and nationality; and the (dis)integrative role of language. Focus on the emergence of European Union rules vs. representative national policies in Germany, France, and Great Britain.
Prerequisites: Previous study of German
Notes: majors/minors in the department should simultaneously enroll in both German Studies 232 (taken for 300-level credit) and GRMST-315 or EURST-316 to receive major/minor credit, and read, write about, and discuss selected materials from EURST-316 or GRMST-315 in German.
Instructors: G. Davis

GRMST-325-01 - German Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Senior Seminar: States of Terror: From Kaspar Hauser to 9/11 in Film and Text
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 370-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to explore the nature of our field of inquiry in theory and practice. We explore such questions as: What does German studies mean? What is interdisciplinary work? What role does literature play in culture studies? What is the relationship between language and the construction of culture? What meanings have been attributed to the terms "culture" and "civilization"? Texts from a variety of disciplines. Students write term papers on topics related to their major field(s) of interest.
Case studies in terror/ism, starting with the case of the mysterious 1828 foundling Kaspar Hauser, rumored even during his lifetime to have been the prince of Baden. Surviving the terror of solitary imprisonment for 12 years, was he the victim of political terrorism at the time? The course investigates parallels and differences between Kaspar’s case and the terrorism of the leftist Red Army Faction (RAF) that shook Germany as of the 1970s, as well as their relation to the trauma of 9/11 and present-day international conflict. Multidisciplinary text selection on topos. Films range from New German Cinema (Herzog, von Trotta) to Ulrike Meinhof (2006) and Der Baader-Meinhof Komplex (2008).
Prerequisites: sr or by permission of department
Instructors: G. Davis

History

HIST-101-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Foundation: Crossing Medieval Boundaries: European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic Encounters, 1200-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Medieval Studies 101f-01)
This seminar focuses on medieval boundaries: those separating Christians, Jews, and Muslims in Europe, as well as those between men and women from the thirteenth through sixteenth centuries. The course also examines new boundaries separating-and constructing-Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Engaging closely and critically with sources from Atlantic societies of these centuries, students will investigate and debate the making and remaking of "Western culture" in an era of state formation, imperial expansion, agrarian capitalism, and chattel slavery. Readings range from Christian-Jewish disputations to indigenous writings from the Americas.
Instructors: H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 18

HIST-101-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Spring) Foundation: History, Culture, Nature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
This course examines changing ideas of nature expressed in historical sources and art and literature in historical perspective. Materials for study and discussion include excerpts from philosophers--Francis Bacon, Jean-Jacque Rousseau--landscape paintings, and two novels: Mary Shelley's Frankenstein and Thomas Hardy's Tess of the d'Urbervilles.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: R. Schwartz
Expected enrollment: 15

HIST-101-02 - History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Foundation: On Fraud, Forgery, Bunk, and Bad History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar
This course examines why we are susceptible to bad history, how history is used and abused, how forgeries and imaginative recreations of the past like The Da Vinci Code become accepted as truthful even after they have been debunked, why forgery is so pervasive, and how to discern between "the good, the bad, and the ugly" in the writing of history. The course examines a variety of media (historical works, novels, newspapers, videos, artworks, movies, etc.).
Instructors: F. McGinness
Expected enrollment: 15

HIST-101-03 - History - 2010-2011
(Fall) Foundation: Talking about a Revolution: Intellectuals in Modern China
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
A study of the visions, plans, and frustrations of intellectuals taking part in the revolutionary changes of twentieth-century China. Beginning with the radical youth of the May Fourth Movement, the course will also include Confucian reactions to modernism, moderate constitutionalist solutions, and the anarchist and Communist movements. Topics for discussion will include the ideology and cultural biases of the historian/observer, the role of intellectuals in society, and the impact of European ideas--Marxism, Ibsenism, Darwinism, among others--on traditional Chinese culture.
Instructors: J. Lipman
Expected enrollment: 19

(Spring) Middle East History from the Rise of Islam to the Ottomans - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Survey of principal economic, social, cultural, and political features of the Middle East and North Africa from the late sixth through seventeenth centuries. Topics include: the rise of the new monotheistic faith of Islam; the formation and evolution of classical and medieval Muslim institutions; local diversities within the unifying systems of Muslim beliefs, law, and administration; Muslim reactions to the Crusades and the Mongol invasions; the emergence of Islamic imperial systems; and material and intellectual exchanges and interactions between Muslim and non-Muslim communities and polities.
Instructors: N. Sbaiti
Expected enrollment: 45

HIST-111-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Spring) The Making of the Modern Middle East
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Survey of the factors shaping principal political, economic, and social life in the Middle East and North Africa from the eighteenth through the twentieth centuries. Examines multiplicity of societies, customs, and traditions; British, French, and U.S. imperialism; the creation of modern states; development of nationalist, socialist, and Islamist wars and the geopolitics of oil. Throughout, special attention will be devoted to the changes affecting the lives of individuals and social groups like women, workers, and peasants.
Instructors: N. Sbaiti
Expected enrollment: 50

HIST-115-01  - History  - 2010-2011
(Spring) The Medieval World
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The course will provide an introduction to the history of the Middle East and Europe from the decline of the Roman empire through the aftermath of the Black Death. The period is best known for dividing the Mediterranean into Christian and Islamic worlds, but Europe and the Middle East were united by geography, intellectual traditions, economic trends, and, above all, the shared challenges of maintaining monotheisms in a world reluctant to conform with the standards of sacred texts. In addition to the diffusion of Christianity, Rabbinic Judaism, and Islam, we will explore parallels and divergences in the political, economic, social, and cultural histories of Europe and the Middle East.
Instructors: R. Payne
Expected enrollment: 35

HIST-124-01  - History  - 2010-2011
(Spring) History of Modern South Asia, 1700 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore the history of South Asia between the eighteenth century and the present. Using a combined chronological and thematic approach and against a historical canvas that engages such diverse issues as gender, political economy, conquest, resistance, state formation, economic exploitation, national liberation, and identity politics, the aim of this course is to interrogate the impact of British colonialism and South Asian nationalisms on the state, society, and people of the subcontinent. Using primary and secondary sources, we will address both the most significant historical moments of modern South Asian history and the historiographical debates that surround them.
Instructors: K. S. Datla
Expected enrollment: 25

HIST-127-01  - History  - 2010-2011
(Fall) Ancient Greece
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Classics 127f)
This course will trace the emergence and expansion of Greek civilization in the Mediterranean. From the philosophical parlors of Athens to the martial gymnasia of Sparta, the Greek city-states developed diverse political systems, social structures, and cultures. Alexander the Great then exported this legacy across the Near East. Among the themes of the course will be Greek thought, social relations, encounters with Near Eastern peoples, especially Persians and Jews, and the incorporation of the Greek world into the Roman empire. Sources will include works of classical Greek literature, as well as the more mundane insights of inscriptions, papyri, and archaeology.
Instructors: R. Payne
Expected enrollment: 35

HIST-137-01  - History  - 2010-2011
(Fall) Modern East Asia, 1600-2000
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
A comparative history of China, Japan, and Korea from the early seventeenth century to the present, with strong focus on regional interaction. After an introduction to early modern histories and cultures, we will examine the struggles of these countries to preserve or regain their independence and establish their national identities in a rapidly changing, often violent modern world order. While each of these countries has its own distinctive identity, their overlapping histories (and dilemmas) give the region a coherent shape. We will also look at how individuals respond to and are shaped by larger historical movements.
Instructors: J. Lipman
Expected enrollment: 60

HIST-141-01  - History  - 2010-2011
(Fall) Violence and Social Change in Modern Africa
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines processes of change that have shaped modern Africa. It seeks to provide both the information and the conceptual tools necessary for an informed interpretation of African affairs presented (and not presented) by popular media. Using fiction, historical narratives, and a wide range of interdisciplinary sources, the class examines nineteenth-century interactions of Africans and Europeans and the nature of colonial conquest, economic and social change during the colonial period, and the emergence of postcolonial African societies. Through reciprocal visits, we will also share what we are learning about Africa with the 9th grade at the Renaissance School in Springfield.
Instructors: H. Hanson

HIST-150-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Spring) Europe and the Atlantic World, 1300-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This lecture course examines several dimensions of European society and culture during the transition from principalities and fiefs to Early Modern states, from feudalism to capitalism, from serfdom to both free and slave labor. Equally important will be the comparison of Europe (broadly conceived) with other Atlantic societies of these centuries and an examination of consequences for Europeans, Africans, and Americans (north and south) of the engagements among them. Using both voices from the period and recent scholarship about Early Modern and Atlantic societies, the course will look critically at the making and remaking of "Western" culture between the Middle Ages and the modern era.

HIST-161-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Fall) British Empire and Commonwealth
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the expansion, consolidation, and eventual disintegration of the modern British Empire in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. We will examine this history with an eye to understanding the causes of empire, and its effects. Themes include formal and informal imperialism, the emergence of anti-colonial nationalism, the roles of gender and culture, and the legacies of British colonialism. We will discuss British attitudes and policies toward empire, and toward particular colonies, what role empire played in the growth of the British economy, in short, how colonial ideologies and practices were shaped and in turn affected vast regions of the globe.

(Fall) Indigenous People: Global and Comparative Perspectives
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the diverse geographic, economic, legal, political, social and historical consequences of European expansion, colonialism, and nation-building for indigenous peoples globally. It examines these themes through theoretical frameworks, while also investigating the historical, political and social dynamics of colonialism. Looking at case studies from around the world, we will concentrate on the ways in which colonialism has affected indigenous peoples comparatively and the varied ways in which they have responded to and contested colonial encroachment on their political and cultural rights as indigenous nations existing within nation-states.

HIST-214-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Fall) History of Global Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Why are some nations so much richer and more powerful than others? This course demonstrates that global inequality is not natural; it has a history. Exploring patterns of exchange that developed among regions of the world over the past 600 years, we will ask about the role of power in the establishment of practices of production and exchange. We will explore how cross-regional productive systems benefited some participants at the expense of others. Having traced the consequences of unequal exchange over several centuries, we will ask how global trade and production would have to change for all participants to benefit equally. The course includes a community-based learning component.

HIST-219-01 - History - 2010-2011
(Spring) The Byzantine Empire
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Based in Constantinople—ancient Byzantium and present-day Istanbul—the Eastern Roman or Byzantine Empire, survived the collapse of the Western Roman Empire by over a millennium. This long-lived state on the crossroads of Europe and Asia was Roman in law, civil administration, and military tradition, but predominately Greek in education and language, and Christian in religion. The course explores the changing face of medieval Byzantium as it turned itself into one of the greatest civilizations the world has known. We trace the empire's survival through the dramatic centuries of the Islamic conquests, Iconoclasm, and the Crusades, until its final fall to the Ottoman Turks.

(Spring) Religion and Politics in Modern India
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
The history of India has been singled out for its complex intermingling of religion and politics. This course will explore the constitution of religious identities in two of India's largest religious communities: Hindu and Muslim. Focusing primarily on the colonial period, we will discuss religious reform movements, communal violence, mass politics, and the partition of the subcontinent into the independent states of India and Pakistan. Throughout we will be interested in the ways that the colonial experience affected the religious thought and practice of Indians. Finally, we will explore the meanings of this history for the postcolonial workings of democracy and secularism in modern India.

(January) Congo: The Failure of Modernity
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course uses painting, fiction, film, music, personal narrative and scholarship to explore the modern history of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. We will seek to replace the simplistic perception of the Congolese as merely victims of horrific crimes against humanity by considering the complex, multiple points of view from which people in Congo understand their history. Assigned readings will include Tshibumba Kanda Matulu's portrayal of Congolese history in 100 paintings, Barbara Kingsolver's novel The Poisonwood Bible, excerpts from Marie Beatrice Umutseti's narrative of the Congo war, and a small number of scholarly essays.
Prerequisites: All students must have read Barbara Kingsolver's novel The Poisonwood Bible before the class begins

(Fall) Native American History: Pre-contact to 1830
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course surveys Native American history beginning with the period preceding American Indian contact with non-Indians and ending with the Removal era. The course emphasizes the diversity and complexity of early indigenous societies. Concentrating on the persistence and autonomy of Native American communities, it highlights the many ways Native peoples shaped American history, as well as how they responded to, and contested European exploration, expansion, and colonialism. We will devote special attention Native American sources that have been largely neglected to illuminate Native interpretations of this history and its continued impact on tribal nations.

(Spring) Native American History: 1830 to the Present
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores how Native Americans navigated the dramatic changes of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries to become the vibrant communities that they are today. It traces the challenges and struggles Native peoples have faced from the Removal era in the 1830s to the present. We will look at the connections between the development of federal Indian policy and Native American resistance to U.S. objectives, as well as critical changes in Native American sovereignty over the course of this period. As part of this study, the course emphasizes the persistence and integrity of Native American communities past and present.

(Fall) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: From Habsburg to Hitler: Bohemian Politics, 1848-1945
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores the complex, often comic, and ultimately tragic history of Bohemia, a territory located today in the Czech Republic, but previously a part of the Habsburg Monarchy, then of Czechoslovakia, and then of Hitler's Third Reich. Students will complement historical studies with autobiographical material and contemporary fiction, beginning with the Revolution of 1848, progressing through the achievements and dreadful trends of Emperor Francis Joseph’s 68-year reign, and concluding with the world wars. Emphasis on the interplay among Czechs, Germans, Jews, and other pivotal players: the House of Habsburg and its supporters, and the political elites of neighboring countries.

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: World War I and the Making of the Twentieth Century - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
World War I (1914-1918) was argued as the transformative event of the twentieth century. It destroyed four empires, enabled the Russian Revolution, altered the political geography of Central Europe, and strengthened independence movements in European possessions overseas. This course explores this history by examining the origins, geographical extent, and consequences of the war from 1880s to 1939 in Europe and in global perspective.

(Spring) European Dynasties and Empires in the Age of the Sun King
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This lecture/discussion course examines family, gender, wealth, territorial control, and empire in the age of the Sun King, Louis XIV of France, when political power concentrated in the web of influential families throughout Europe and the New World connected by blood, land, wealth and influence.
This course studies the strategies, maneuvers, and consequences of Europe's major dynasties (Habsburgs, Stuarts, Bourbons, Romanovs and others) in their quest for hegemony and empire in early modern Europe and the wider world.

(Spring) The Inheritance of Iran: The Iranian World from Antiquity to the Middle Ages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course examines the equally profound continuities and discontinuities in the history of Iran from the Achaemenids to the Mongols. We will trace the rise of the ancient Iranian empires and their promotion of Zoroastrianism before turning to the Arab, Turkish, and Mongol conquests and the Islamization of Iranian society. In addition to exploring patterns of religious, cultural and social change in Iranian history, we will discuss the extent to which the inheritance of antiquity in Iran, Central Asia, and beyond constituted a discrete unity—an Iranian world—within the medieval Middle East.
Sources will include classics of Persian and Arabic literature, not least the Book of Kings.

(Spring) Race and Gender in North American History: African American Women and U.S. History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 206)
Preamble (for topics courses): This course will examine the intersections between race and gender in the history of North America. Topics to change from year to year. Some topics will focus exclusively on the history of the United States; others will treat North American history more broadly.
How is our understanding of U.S. history transformed when we place African American women at the center of the story? This course will examine the exclusion of African American women from dominant historical narratives and the challenge to those narratives presented by African American women's history through an investigation of selected topics in the field.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Latin American Studies 287f)

Latin America's inequalities have led to the exclusion of millions of voices from official historical documents. These voices emerge in testimonial literature, a literary genre where scholars create a written account of the "testimonios" of marginalized individuals. The factors that influence the production of testimonial literature will be explored through memory, authorship, and first world/third world relations, using I, Rigoberta Menchu: An Indian Woman in Guatemala, and the debates that arose after she won the Nobel Peace Prize. The class focuses on issues of subjectivity, identity, and discourse analysis as tools for using testimonial literature as a historical source.

(Spring) Women in History: African Women: Food and Power
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 206s-01)
This course uses archival records, fiction, life histories and outstanding recent scholarship to investigate African women's actions in a century that encompassed women's loss of agency and authority but the endurance of their responsibility for the production of food. We investigate the erosion of women's economic power and the loss of women's work of governing at conquest, in the early colonial period, and as a consequence of Africa's integration into the world economy as its least powerful player. We examine women's efforts to sustain productive activities in the face of opposition and the gendered tensions these efforts provoke. Optional 4th hour discussions.

(Spring) Women in History: Native American Women's History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 206s-04)
This course explores Native American women's experiences across tribal nations from a historical perspective. We will look at Native American women's contributions to tribal communities and American history more broadly and re-examine representations of Native American women in myth, literature and popular culture. We will also look at traditional concepts of women's personhood and roles in Native American societies, as well as the ways in which they changed over time. The colloquium will emphasize the individual stories of women's persistence and the challenges and successes of living under the conditions of American colonialism.

(Fall) Colloquium: Reading the New York Times: Journalism, Power, History
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(American Studies 301)
This course will examine the political and cultural power of the New York Times in the American past and present. Students will analyze the Times today through careful, daily readings. They will also study its evolution as an institution, as well as its coverage of and involvement in several of the critical historical events of this century. By focusing on the Times as the most influential "agenda setter" in American journalism, we will also address the larger issues of objectivity, bias, and influence in the mass media.

(Spring) Colloquium: Gift and Graft: The Long History of Political Corruption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
This colloquium focuses on the extreme failure of accountability commonly called political corruption. How do economic conditions shape political realities, and how do political conditions shape economies? Focusing primarily on Africa but with some readings from other parts of the world, we will consider forms of political authority premised on reciprocity, the bureaucratization of power, and ask how the modernizing projects that were supposed to lead to efficient, representative governance and dynamic economic growth have instead yielded forms of rule that consume their populations. Evaluation will be based on participation, and papers reflecting on each week's readings.

(Fall) Colloquium: Martyrdom as Social Protest: Honor and Resistance from Antiquity to Early Modern Europe
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Not all victims of tyranny and persecution become martyrs, nor are all martyrs victims of tyranny. What social and political conditions foster the choice of martyrdom? What cultural values drive this form of self-immolation? What's worth dying for? In antiquity, the word "martyr" meant an active "witness." Today it can mean a passive "victim." Our approach uses cross-cultural comparisons and psychoanalytic theory to help understand how martyrdom shaped the history and culture of Europe from Antiquity to Early Modern Europe. Subjects: The varieties of suicides, child sacrifice, political and religious martyrs, gladiators, crusaders, assassins, bishops, women martyrs, soldiers, and virgins.

(Speaking-intensive; Gender Studies 333f-04)
This colloquium will explore the history of South Asia as seen from women's perspectives. We will read writings by women from the ancient period to the present. We will focus on the diversity of women's experiences in a range of social, cultural, and religious contexts. Themes include sexuality, religiosity, rights to education and employment, violence against women, modernity and citizenship—in short, those issues central to women's movements in modern South Asia. In addition to the textual sources, the course will analyze Indian popular film and the representation of women in this modern visual genre.

(Spring) Germans, Slavs, and Jews, 1900-1950 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
This course explores relations among Germans, Slavs, and Jews in Central and Eastern Europe before, during, and after the First and Second World Wars. Emphasis lies on tracing continuities and ruptures in nationalist and racist ideologies and policies, from late imperial Germany and Austria through the interwar republics and then on to the Third Reich and the post-Nazi regimes. Topics covered include the Holocaust, Nazi treatment of Poles, and the expulsion of millions of ethnic Germans from Poland and Czechoslovakia after 1945, but also mutual accommodation, assimilation, liberal group rights, and the ambiguities of who was German or Slavic or Jewish in the first place.

(Spring) Late Antiquity: The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
In his masterpiece, The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Edward Gibbon catalogued the end of the classical era, "during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous." We shall reexamine the various factors and forces Gibbon blamed for decline in light of modern research: barbarian invasions, the rise of Christianity, economic decay, and social dislocation, as well as investigating new discoveries and modern interpretations of the "transformations of Late Antiquity."

(Spring) Asian History: The Meiji Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
A research seminar on the late-nineteenth-century transformation of Japan from a feudal state ruled by hereditary warriors into a modern nation-state ruled by a cabinet, a legislature, and a professionalized bureaucracy under the symbolic sovereignty of a sacred monarch. A turning point in East Asia's modern history, this revolution shaped the following century throughout the region and remains a subject of intense scholarly and popular interest. We will begin with secondary readings--social and political history, biography, and cultural history--then each student will identify a research question and discover her own sources to answer it in a 20-page final essay.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor, written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application.html) required

(Asian Studies 331)
Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.
A research seminar on Japan's imperial venture from its inception in the 1870s to its rapid expansion and calamitous defeat in the 1940s. The enormous size of the Japanese empire at its height demands that we study a wide variety of local situations, indigenous peoples, and specific adaptations of and to Japan's imperial style and organization. After initial secondary readings, each student will identify a research question then discover her own sources to answer it in a 20-page final essay.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor, 8 credits in history, written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/history/300-level_application.html) is required

Exemplary recent scholarship on the history of Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda, Rwanda, and Burundi from 1500 to the present will form the foundation of this research seminar. We will especially seek to take apart the pre-colonial, colonial, post-colonial periodization that characterizes African history by seeking to discover enduring patterns of social, economic and political logic that cross those divisions. Some previous coursework in African studies is required. Evaluation will be based on participation, short written reflections on each reading, and a substantial research paper based on original sources.

(Fall) The Middle Ages: Monasticism and the Making of the Middle Ages

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

During late antiquity, individuals separated themselves from families, cities, and relations of power to practice asceticism in monasteries. They thus contributed to the transformation of the very societies they had abandoned. The seminar will debate the ways in which monastic practices, institutions, and literatures were involved in the social, cultural, and economic changes that distinguished "medieval" from "ancient" societies. The rich documentation for monasticism—saints' lives, letters, papyri, ostraca, and charters—will enable us to investigate the shifting roles of holy women and men, anchorites, holy fools, and coenobites in early medieval societies, from Egypt to Ireland.

(Speaking- and writing-intensive; Medieval Studies 300, English 316)

Preamble (for topics courses): Research Seminar: A 300-level class requiring students to engage in primary and secondary source research in the history of particular times and places, resulting in a substantial piece of historical writing.

This course explores cultural and social transformations (especially in England) on the eve of "modernity." Class discussions will ordinarily focus on selections from major English writers of the period (Chaucer, Gower, and Malory, for example), and on the relationship between their writings and other kinds of evidence about the world in which they wrote. In consultation with instructors and colleagues, students will also be expected individually to locate, analyze, and interpret a collection of primary sources such as court records, chronicles and correspondence from a culture of their choosing in order to write a final essay on one dimension of the late medieval world.

Gender history focuses on the relationship between women and men, masculinity and femininity, and the evolution and transformation of that sprawling and multidimensional system of meanings we call "gender." This seminar will allow students interested in gender and women's history to do research on a topic of their choice. Readings will establish key themes and central methods in the study of gender. Reading topics include politics and activism, race and imperialism, popular culture and consumption, reproduction and sexuality, family and marriage. By mid semester, students will be working with primary and secondary sources with the goal of producing a substantial and original paper.

(Spring) Native Americans in the Twentieth Century
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Writing-intensive)

This course will explore the experiences and stories of Native Americans in the twentieth century that have been largely overlooked in American history. The course has two aims. We will examine popular assumptions and constructions about Native Americans and modernity that have rendered them invisible in the twentieth century and have been utilized to deny their political rights. And, we will explore the ways in which Native American nations, communities, and individuals created alternative pathways of modernity while retaining their distinct indigenous identities. Students will write an original research paper drawing from primary and secondary sources.

(Spring) War and Propaganda - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course analyzes propaganda techniques and war mobilization strategies. We present comparative, cross-cultural analyses of recent and historical examples of the influences of the state, state-society relations, the media, and information control and distortion in the mobilization for war. Case studies are selected to address the following questions: Why is propaganda necessary? What is the media's relationship to state propaganda efforts? How do citizen groups and protest movements contest state propaganda efforts? We conclude by examining key trends in the development of mass media forms and technologies and their implications for global politics.

(Fall) International Human Rights - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course provides an introduction to the basic concepts of, and issues in, international human rights. Prior to World War II, there was very little focus on the question of human rights within the international system and within the discipline of international relations. Since that time we have seen a significant expansion of human rights theory, practice, and institutions. This course outlines the historical ideational and institutional developments of human rights. It exposes students to a range of theoretical propositions and empirical findings to understand the role (and limits) of human rights in the international system today.

An intensive reading course in theories of international society: the idea that states and peoples are or should be linked to each other through a web of shared values and institutions. It focuses on the work of Hedley Bull, Immanuel Kant, and John Rawls. How did these three men understand international society? What are or should be the values and institutions that give rise to it and support it? What implications do their visions of international society have for war and peace, state sovereignty, religion, democracy, capitalism, distributive justice, human rights, and international law? What responses and criticisms have their arguments engendered?

ITAL-223-01 - Italian - 2010-2011
(Fall) Dante's Journey
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; English 222)
How does one think about the world, or—better still—the universe, through a work of art? Can poetry really act as compass in the journey of life, and bring into focus questions that truly matter to us? Readers across centuries and cultures have found in Dante's Divine Comedy such a work. This masterpiece not only explores the theater of human passions with extraordinary insight and depth, but also meditates on questions of personal and civic responsibility, faith and justice, as much as authorship and poetics. This course frames discussion of the poem within the literary, political and intellectual history of its time, as well as the stunning trajectory of its reception.

(Spring) True Blood: Fantasmi, Mostri E Vampiri Della Letteratura Italiana
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
What is fantastic literature? Is there an Italian tradition of fantastic writing? Do Italian authors share the fascination with the supernatural (ghosts, mysterious creatures, the world of the dead) of their Northern counterparts? This course will explore the fantastic theme from the earliest narratives in the late nineteenth century—based on the examples of the masters of the genre such as E.A. Poe and E.T.A. Hoffmann—to contemporary times. Students will analyze the works by, among others, Tarchetti, Boito, Pirandello, Buzzati, Landolfi, and Calvino. Special attention will be paid to modern and contemporary women writers of the fantastic, Ortese, Capriolo, Duranti, and more.
ITAL-361-01 - Italian - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Literatures: History of Romance Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Romance Languages 375, Spanish 360, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in the Romance language of the student's choice.
Much of twentieth-century gay writing in Latin America is characterized by an estheticist celebration of anti-humanism, which has often clashed with left-wing progressive politics in these countries. But how does a "gay style" come about? What is its genealogy? How does it identify itself, and what does such an identity mean politically and historically? In this seminar, we will study a number of writers from Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Peru, and Uruguay, and examine their roots in French and Italian anti-humanist authors from Baudelaire, Lautréamont, and Rimbaud to Genet and Pasolini. We will also read a few key texts in queer theory.
Notes: Papers will be written in English or the Romance language of the student's choice. Students wishing to obtain 300-level credit in French, Italian, or Spanish must read texts and write papers in the Romance language for which they wish to receive advanced credit.

(Fall) Introduction to Judaism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Religion 212)
Judaism is a 3,500-year-old tradition that has developed over time as Jewish communities all over the world creatively interacted with the different cultural and historical milieus in which they lived. This course explores the ways in which Judaism has sought to transform ordinary life into sacred life. What are the ways in which Judaism conceives of God, and what is the meaning of life? What roles do study, prayer, ethics, sex, marriage, family, rituals of the life cycle, and community play in Judaism? These and other questions will be taken up through study of diverse types of religious literature and historical evidence.

LATIN-225-01 - Latin - 2010-2011
(Spring) The Dido/Aeneus Story
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
Second-year level study of Latin with readings in prose and poetry focused around the Roman foundation myth of Dido and Aeneas, which can be read on many different levels: as a myth of the origins of Rome; as an historical allegory of the Punic wars and the later war against Cleopatra, Queen of the East; as a psychological analysis of romantic love; as moral and political philosophy; and as a classical tragedy with interesting allusions to several of the best Greek tragedies. Selections are from Vergil, Ovid, Livy and Pompeius Trogus. Offers further review of grammar and syntax.
Prerequisites: Latin 201 or permission of instructor
Instructors: B. Arnold

LATIN-302-01 - Latin - 2010-2011
(Spring) Cicero and the Enemies of the Roman Republic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
The career of the Roman orator and statesman Marcus Tullius Cicero spanned the last generation of the Roman Republic, a period of political instability and civil war. As the leading orator of his day, Cicero often used his rhetorical skills to thwart those who he believed were bent on the destruction of the Roman Republic. In this course, we will examine the role of public oratory in the political process in this period with a close reading of Cicero's speeches and letters concerning one of his political enemies (Catiline, Cloelius, or Mark Antony).
Prerequisites: Latin 222 or permission of the instructor
Instructors: G. Sumi
Expected enrollment: 18

LATIN-307-01 - Latin - 2010-2011
(Fall) The Slender Muse
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
A study of the highly romantic poetry that launched a revolution in Latin literature, including such works as Catullus's epyllion on Peleus and Thetis and Vergil's Eclogae and Georgica, with attention to the new understanding of poetry shown in these poems and to their commentary on the social turmoil of the last phase of the Republic.

Latin American Studies

LATAM-170-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Readings in Caribbean Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
Features comparison of selected readings in the literature of the Spanish-, French-, and English-speaking Caribbean. Introduces the literary personality of the area, the transformation of the material of Caribbean social life into formally crafted and effective literary statement, and characteristic thematic and broader cultural preoccupations. Asks primary questions, such as "How does a novel—or poem—work?" and addresses similar issues related to forms of critical thinking and literary analysis. Readings and discussion in English.
Instructors: R. Marquez

LATAM-175-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Historical Emergence of the Caribbean - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
The historical development of the Caribbean from the Conquest to the mid-twentieth century. Patterns of conquest, colonization, and settlement by European nations; the rise of plantation-dominated society; the process of insular and interregional differentiation; the emergence of American imperial designs; and the rise of anticolonial, nationalist movements. Comparative reviews of the experience of Haiti, Jamaica, and Puerto Rico highlight broader regional trends and the ways the Caribbean's major language zones have responded to the challenge of their shared history.

LATAM-180-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Latin American Cultures
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(See History 180)
Examines the confrontation, assimilation, and transformation of Amerindian, African, and European cultures in Latin America from the sixteenth century to the present. Focuses on the processes in which distinctive self-images emerged in the region and how these images have been challenged and changed over time. Uses films, literature, and folk traditions to complement scholarly analysis of the emergence of a New World mentality.
Instructors: L. Gudmundson

LATAM-278-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) The Fiction of History: Historical Truth and Imaginative Invention in the Latin American Novel
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
Examination of the scope, reach, and limits of the Latin American variant of the historical novel as a narrative form. The variety of ways in which it fictionally strives to re-create “certain crisis in the personal destinies of a number of human beings [which] coincide and interweave with the determining context of an historical crisis,” the historical vision each writer brings to the work, will be given particular attention.
Instructors: R. Márquez

LATAM-288-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Modern Mexico - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(See History 288)
An analysis of the modern Mexican nation-state organized around three major themes: the conflictive yet symbiotic relationship with the United States, from the war of the 1840s through NAFTA most recently; the succession of reformist and revolutionary upheavals in 1810-1821, 1856-1867, 1910-1917, the 1930s, and again today, seeking to resolve both problems of the colonial past and new conflicts traceable to the very reforms generated by earlier political and social struggles; and the meaning of Mexican nationality from different ethnic, gender, and class perspectives. Readings include autobiographical and literary works, historical studies, and films.
Instructors: L. Gudmundson

LATAM-289-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Slavery in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(See History 289)
A course, organized topically rather than geographically or nationally, that offers a comparative analysis of African American slavery as a dominant social system in Brazil, the Caribbean, and the U.S. South. Topics include: why slavery?; sugar and slavery; historical demography; culture and the law; kinship and family; long-run economic development; patterns of race relations; master class and racist ideologies; resistance to slavery; and abolition and its aftermath. Readings include historical and anthropological studies, as well as a major documentary collection on slavery in Brazil.

(Spring) Studies in Comparative Caribbean Culture: Contemporary Caribbean Writers - *Not offered this year/term
A sustained comparative study of the developing canon of three major contemporary writers—Alejo Carpentier (Cuba), V.S. Naipaul (Trinidad), and Maryse Conde (Guadeloupe)—from the Caribbean, representing the region's Spanish-, English-, and French-speaking cultural zones. Examines the evolving content, contours and scope of each writer's work and unique perception of the New World, as well as its distinctively Antillean "structure of feeling," participation in modern debates about Caribbean culture, and distinctive contributions to the development of the novel in the contemporary Caribbean.

LATAM-386-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Fall) Central America: Reform, Reaction, Revolution
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

This seminar explores the diverse experiences of Central American nations in the twentieth century. From a common basis in an export-oriented agriculture, social and political alternatives ranging from social democracy to recurrent military rule, neofascist regimes, and revolutionary socialism have emerged in the isthmus. The course uses materials ranging from autobiography and literature to historical and anthropological studies to understand how this came to be. In addition to national cases, we consider the unique experiences of the area's indigenous and Atlantic-coast peoples within and outside the nation-state framework.

(Spring) Postmodernism and Latin America - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

For many the "discovery" of America opened the modern era. Its closing may also have been foretold in Latin America's confounding of diverse theories of modernization and development in recent times. This seminar will introduce the student to a number of both classic and more recent works on Latin America (in English) that advance along postmodernist lines, ranging from cultural contact and conflict, language, meaning, and power in the sixteenth century, to the invention of national identities in the nineteenth century, to discourses of ethnicity, class, gender, and reason in the twentieth century.

LATAM-389-01 - Latin American Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Agrarian America: Sugar, Cotton, Coffee, Wheat
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Explores societies generated in the Americas by several widely distributed export crops. Multinational and cross-cultural comparisons holding constant the crop itself allows a focus on the possible variations by time and place in each commodity's technologies, labor systems, farm sizes, and social structure; their political and social dynamics; the problematic features of capitalism in agriculture, or if, how, and when do peasants become farmers and farming agribusiness? Particular focus on family and household relations under so-called "peasant to farmer" agricultural transitions and environmental implications of single-crop and export agriculture.

MATH-100-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Precalculus
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is intended for students who, based on the results of their precalculus assessment and the agreement of the instructor, need to strengthen their quantitative and algebraic precalculus skills in order to be ready to progress to calculus. Features the study of functions, including trigonometric functions, the exponential function, and logarithms, and the phenomena they model.
Notes: Permission of instructor. Send score from math online self-assessment and background information to hpollats@mtholyoke.edu.
Instructors: R. Torrey

MATH-110-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Explorations in Algebra
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
High school algebra is essentially the study of the laws that govern the system of numbers we use for ordinary arithmetic. This course focuses on certain of these laws and studies the systems, called "groups," governed by them. Groups have beautiful properties and describe many phenomena: crystallography, graphic art, matrix algebra, counting, nuclear physics, codes, and more. The course studies the group laws and their consequences, as well as many examples of systems satisfying these laws.

(Fall) Explorations in Number Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Studies basic mathematical structures using as models symmetries of plane figures, the ordinary integers, and other number systems. Using examples to uncover patterns that help reveal and explain relationships. Solving simple equations in these new settings quickly brings students into contact with some intriguing problems being studied by contemporary mathematicians.

MATH-120-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Explorations in Geometry
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
The system of geometry devised by the ancient Greeks was immutable until the nineteenth century, when it was put in a broader framework better able to accommodate the varied interests of physical science and mathematics. In this course, we study geometry as it developed historically, from the time of Pythagoras to the recent past.

(Fall) Making Meaning for Operations/Reasoning Algebraically about Operations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Education 256)
This course will draw on two modules of the Developing Mathematical Ideas (DMI) series. DMI is a curriculum designed to help think through the major ideas of K-8 mathematics and examine how children develop those ideas. The first four sessions will parallel the first four sessions of Making
Meaning for Operations. The remaining nine sessions will be based on the Reasoning Algebraically about Operations module. This module focuses on how children's study of operations leads into articulation of generalizations in the number system and justification of such generalizations. Participants will explore and understand how such work in the early grades relates to algebra studied in later grades.

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Discrete Math: Connectivity and Cryptography

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

First-year seminar

What do social networking, scheduling classes, and the secure transmission of private data have in common? All of these activities involve discrete mathematics. We will study graphs composed of nodes joined by edges, which are mathematical structures that describe how objects are connected to one another. We will also study modular arithmetic and its application to public-key cryptography, which is widely used to protect the privacy of electronic communications.

Instructors: J. Sidman

(Fall) Introductory Seminar: Concepts of Calculus - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement

First-year seminar

The main ideas of elementary calculus: number, continuity, function, change, calculation. This course for first year students will cover some of the same ground as first semester calculus, with a more conceptual emphasis than is traditional. Students who wish to continue with second and third semester calculus will either have to do extra independent work or should elect Math 101.

Instructors: H. Pollatsek

MATH-319-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Algebra: P-adic Numbers, P-adic Analysis, and Zeta Functions
In this class we will study the p-adic numbers where p stands for a prime. So that means that we will study the 2-adics, the 3-adics, the 5-adics, and etc. These numbers were introduced by Kurt Hensel (1861-1941) and shown to arise from the rational numbers just as the real numbers arise if one changes the way distance is measured between two rational numbers. P-adic numbers are now an essential part of modern number theory and they allow one to take a problem stated for the rational numbers and, in some sense, factor the problem into infinitely many problems, one for each prime. We will study p-adic functions, p-adic calculus, and some of the famous results in number theory that use this theory.

MATH-329-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Geometry and Topology - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to point-set topology (also referred to as general topology). Point-set topology is one branch of the much broader area, topology. It is concerned with the study of properties of abstract topological spaces and structures related to such spaces. The material covered in this course will provide the common foundation for courses in algebraic topology, geometric topology, and differential topology. The core topics to be studied include: basic set theory, various interesting topologies, continuous functions, connectedness and compactness, separation axioms, countability axioms, nets and filters.
Prerequisite: Mathematics 203, one of Mathematics 211 or 251, or permission of the instructor
Notes: this course may be repeated for credit

MATH-333-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Differential Equations
MATH-334-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Mathematical Models
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
This is an introduction to differential equations for students in the mathematical or other sciences. Topics include first-order equations, second-order linear equations, qualitative study of dynamical systems, and first- and second-order linear partial differential equations.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 202
Instructors: M. Noonan

MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Mathematical Models
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include specific examples of mathematical models that have been formulated to deal with problems arising in various applications, together with an outline of the development of particular mathematical tools and techniques used in these models.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211
Instructors: M. Noonan
Expected enrollment: 30

MATH-339-01 - Mathematics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Applied Mathematics: Mathematical Finance
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-A: Math, Stat, CompSci requirement
Topics include interest rates, forwards and futures, options, payoff diagrams, geometric Brownian motion, binomial trees, risk-neutral valuation, stochastic calculus, Ito’s lemma, Black-Scholes, volatility smiles, exotic options, the Greeks, Monte Carlo methods, and statistical data analysis.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 203 and 211 or permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Durfee

Medieval Studies

MEDST-101-01 - Medieval Studies - 2010-2011
Fall  Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Crossing Medieval Boundaries: European, Mediterranean, and Atlantic Encounters, 1200-1700
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking- and writing-intensive; History 101f)
This seminar focuses on medieval boundaries: those separating Christians, Jews, and Muslims in Europe, as well as those between men and women from the thirteenth through sixteenth centuries. The course also examines new boundaries separating—and constructing—Europeans, Americans, and Africans in the transition from "medieval" to "modern." Engaging closely and critically with sources from Atlantic societies of these centuries, students will investigate and debate the making and remaking of "Western culture" in an era of state formation, imperial expansion, agrarian capitalism, and chattel slavery. Readings range from Christian-Jewish disputations to indigenous writings from the Americas.
Instructors: H. Garrett-Goodyear
Expected enrollment: 18

MEDST-101-01 - Medieval Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Medieval Culture and Society: Seminar in Reading, Writing, and Reasoning: Visions of Hell and Paradise
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Art History 110s-01)
The Heavenly Court; Adam and Eve's Garden of Eden; The Apocalypse. Visions of sacred realms and the beginning and end of humankind captured the imagination of people in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance in Europe. The focus of this course will be the close examination of a range of artworks that portray sacred and apocalyptic imagery, including manuscript illumination, sculpture, panel painting, and fresco from the ninth to the sixteenth centuries by artists including Giotto, Michelangelo, Bosch, and Dürer. Readings of primary sources (such as St. John's Book of Revelations) and the consideration of social and political conditions will support our interpretations.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: C. Andrews
Expected enrollment: 15

MEDST-300-01 - Medieval Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: Texts and Contexts: Reading the Medieval World, 1350-1530 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive; English 316 and History 351)
This course explores cultural and social transformations (especially in England) on the eve of "modernity." Class discussions will ordinarily focus on selections from major English writers of the period (Chaucer, Gower, and Malory, for example), and on the relationship between their writings and other kinds of evidence about the world in which they wrote. Students will also be expected individually to locate, analyze, and interpret a collection of primary sources such as court records, chronicles, and correspondence from a culture of their choosing in order to write a final essay on one dimension of the late medieval world.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, background in medieval history or literature, written application prior to academic advising period (http://www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/medst/form.html) is required
Instructors: C. Collette, H. Garrett-Goodyear
MEDST-300-02 - Medieval Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Medieval Studies: The Curious Middle Ages - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive; English 336)
Medieval curiosity, both a spiritual danger and a vehicle of knowledge, expresses a conflict that helps us mark change in the period’s intellectual traditions. We’ll consider curiosity’s enabling of developments in historiography, cosmology, cartography, optics, and architecture to help us explore various literary genres. Through allegory, travel and religious narrative, romance, fabliau, and dream vision, we'll inquire into the intellectual functions that literature performs, asking how literary curiosity may have been both an approach toward and opponent of scientific truth. Middle English works will be read in Middle English; however, no prior knowledge of Middle English is necessary.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, or permission of instructor
Notes: meets English department seminar requirement

Music

MUSIC-100-01 - Music - 2010-2011
(Fall) Basic Musicianship
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Explores the ways in which sound is organized into musical structures. Topics include the physical properties of sound; the basic vocabulary of Western music (scales, key signatures, intervals, triads, rhythm, meter); and an introduction to musical form and analysis. Includes extensive practice in music reading, sight singing, ear training, and critical listening.
Instructors: C. Lai
Section Instructors: 01 LAB R Markarian, M Lach | 02 LAB M Lach, R Markarian
Expected enrollment: 28

MUSIC-102-01 - Music - 2010-2011
(Spring) Music and Technology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
It is now possible to record, manipulate, notate, and compose music with a variety of powerful and flexible tools using the personal computer. This course will focus on hands-on experience with various sorts of music software, including recording and editing, mixing, synthesis and midi interfaces, notation, and various instructional programs. In the process of experimenting with these tools and operating on their favorite musical styles, students will learn a good bit of notation, ear training, and rudimentary principles of arrangement and composition. Basic computer literacy (such as comfort with basic editing commands and the concept of keyboard shortcuts) is required.
Instructors: R. Eisenstein
Expected enrollment: 15

MUSIC-103-01 - Music - 2010-2011
(Fall) History of Jazz - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
This course will follow the origins and evolution of jazz from the late nineteenth century to the present, with emphases on prominent stylistic trends and significant individuals. Along with some analysis of the musical language jazz employs, the music will be examined in its relation to the social contexts that helped produce and shape it. The ability to read music is not a requirement for this course.
Instructors: D. Sanford
Expected enrollment: 40

MUSIC-107-01 - Music - 2010-2011
(January) Jazz Ensemble Concert Design
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
A course based on the creation and development of a Jazz Ensembles of Mount Holyoke concert performance with added theatrical elements. A radio show (circa 1940) will be scripted with attention to historical detail. Production-related responsibilities (stage design, costume design, lighting design, sound design, stage management and staffing) will also be discussed and planned.
Prerequisites: Prior enrollment in Jazz Ensembles and/or permission of the instructor
Notes: Meets M-F, January 3-14, 10a.m.-12p.m. and 2-4p.m.
Instructors: M. Gionfriddo

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Transgressive Music
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar
The seminar will introduce and discuss various musical works and genres that fall under rock critic Ann Powers' definitions of "Violator Art," exploring them within the context of their wanton and disturbing appeal, as well as their often scandalous social impact. Topics will include the Second Viennese School, free jazz, protest music, punk rock, hip-hop, works such as J. S. Bach's "Cantata No. 179," Strauss's "Salome," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du printemps," Billie Holiday's "Strange Fruit," George Crumb's "Black Angels," and artists such as Frank Zappa, Donna Summer, Prince, and Nirvana. (Students should be prepared for mature themes and some coarse language.)

(Spring) World Music - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course is a survey of selected musical traditions from different parts of the world, including Africa, Indonesia, Indian, the Caribbean, and the United States. The course adopts an ethnomusicological approach that explains music as a cultural phenomenon, and explores the social and aesthetic significance of musical traditions within their respective historical and cultural contexts. It examines how musical traditions change over time, and how such changes reflect and relate to social and political changes within a given society. Weekly reading and listening assignments provide the basis for class discussions. Students are expected to undertake a final project in music ethnography.

MUSIC-371-01  -  Music  -  2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Music: Music in Manuscript
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Writing-intensive)
Preamble (for topics courses): This seminar is designed to increase familiarity with and facility in the use of primary materials for musicological/ethnomusicological and/or theoretical research, as well as in the critical evaluation of published scholarship. Engagement with a shared topic at the outset of the semester provides the context from which each student fashions an independent project. Oral presentations are integral to the course, with a major paper as the final requirement.
This seminar will study selected autograph manuscripts (and in some cases sketches) of composers dating from the fifteenth to twentieth centuries. The works studied in class will represent a variety of composers, genres, periods, styles, and contexts: composers such as Josquin, Haydn, Beethoven, Brahms, Debussy, Gershwin, and Ran, and genres such as song, string quartet, symphony, piano music, tone poem, and choral music. The autograph scores will be examined for what they can tell us about compositional procedure, stylistic and notational conventions, and performance practices. Each student will select an independent project on which to focus increasingly during the course of the semester.

Philosophy
PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course will explore topics that philosophers have grappled with for thousands of years, and that still undergird (or sometimes threaten to undermine) our understanding of the world, our knowledge, ourselves, and each other. In historical and modern texts of the Western intellectual tradition, we will discuss questions such as: What exists? What knowledge can we claim? What are people like? What is, or should be, our role in the world? In considering these answers, we will learn to do philosophy ourselves, developing our own careful reflections on these issues.
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 70

PHIL-101-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Philosophy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
We will consider influential philosophical texts and theories that attempt to answer questions such as these: Is it possible for creatures like us to have knowledge of an external world that exists outside of our own minds? Are we justified in believing that events in the future will be much like events in the past? Is the human mind an immaterial substance (like a soul), or is it a mere physical object (like the brain)? Do human beings have free will? Is a person's having free will compatible with all of her actions being predetermined by events occurring before her birth? What, if anything, makes an action morally right or morally wrong?
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: Discovering Philosophy through Children's Literature
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
Remember reading Morris the Moose or The Giving Tree? You probably didn't think they were about the fallibility of human knowledge and the right way to comport yourself with the natural world, two important philosophical issues. In this seminar, we will explore the world of philosophy by means of children's books like these. In addition, we will investigate how professional philosophers address these issues in order to see how their analyses supplements those developed from the children's books.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 14

PHIL-102-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) First-Year Seminar on Topics in Philosophy: Personal Identity
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
Who or what am I, and what makes me what I am? How am I different from a very sensitive robot, or a very clever dog? Am I a single changing person throughout my life, or a series of unchanging ones? What will connect my past to my future? This cluster of philosophical worries will occupy the center of this course. In the process of addressing them, we will work to develop methods for resolving problems that appear beyond solution.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 15

PHIL-103-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Comparative Introduction to Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
In this course, questions concerning views of the self, humans in relation to one another, and humans in relation to the non-human world will be explored by bringing together conventional philosophy texts with culturally diverse philosophical writings. Through these questions and the materials which address them, issues of ethnicity, race, class, and gender will impact our discussion of various perspectives on fundamental problems.
Instructors: M. Brown
Expected enrollment: 40

PHIL-201-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Greek Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to ancient Greek philosophy, focusing mainly but not exclusively on the works and ideas of three Athenian philosophers who worked and taught in the period between the Persian Wars and the rule of Alexander the Great, more than 2,300 years ago: Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Topics to be discussed include: What is the nature of the world? What is truth, and how can it be known? What kind of life should we live? We will work to understand each philosopher's responses to these questions, but we will also learn to develop our own answers. We will take care to place these figures and their works in their historical and cultural context.
Instructors: K. Thomason
PHIL-202-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Philosophical Foundations of Western Thought: The Modern Period
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Investigates the development of Western philosophy in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries through the writings of Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Hume, and Kant. Focus on the apparent conflict between modern natural science and traditional religion as sources of knowledge and belief. Topics include the nature and extent of human knowledge, the nature of the mind, the existence of God, and the possibility of human freedom.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-205-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course serves as an introduction to some of the main philosophical theories of ethics and ideas about human nature through a study of fundamental approaches including utilitarian, deontological, and virtue ethics. Among the issues covered will be the clarification of basic assumptions about morality, such as whether morality has any basis beyond differing teachings of various cultures (relativism), or whether all actions are fundamentally selfish (egoism). Attention will be given to the application of ethical theory and principles to contemporary issues.
Instructors: K. Thomason

PHIL-208-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Knowledge and Reality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course is an introduction to the central topics in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality). It will look at questions such as: How is knowledge possible? What is knowledge? Do we know anything? Is time real? What makes you the same person now and in ten years? Could things be otherwise than they are?
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

(Spring) Knowledge and Reality - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
What is knowledge? Does the world exist independently of our minds? What makes me a single, unified person who exists continuously over time? In this course, we will explore these and other central questions in epistemology (theory of knowledge) and metaphysics (theory of reality) concerning predictions about the future, universal generalizations, the categories/concepts we employ in making such predictions and generalizations, and the nature of cause and effect. This course aims to be both historical and contemporary.
Instructors: S. Mitchell

PHIL-210-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Logical Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course cultivates sound reasoning. Students will learn to see the structure of claims and arguments and to use those structures in developing strong arguments and exposing shoddy ones. We will learn to evaluate arguments on the strength of the reasoning rather than on the force of their associations and buzzwords.
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-220-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Scientific theories come and go—what was once believed true is often later thought false. What then is the status of current scientific theories? What makes a theory “good”? How do we know whether accepting a theory is based on scientific reasoning—rather than scientific or nonscientific rationales? In what ways does science in practice depart from scientific ideals? This course will explore answers to these questions proposed by scientists and philosophers of science. We will study some historical views, but will focus on scholars writing in the 1960s through the present.
Instructors: S. Hawthorne
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-225-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Symbolic Logic
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course develops a symbolic system that can be used as the basis for inference in all fields. It will provide syntax and semantics for the language of this system and investigate its adequacy. It provides the basis for all further work in logic or in the philosophical foundations of mathematics. Much of the course has a mathematical flavor, but no knowledge of mathematics is necessary.

Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 75

PHIL-226-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course begins its survey of the discipline of the philosophy of religion with the work of Augustine. We then proceed to an examination of the classical theistic arguments for knowledge of God's existence (those of Anselm, Aquinas, and Maimonides) that dominated Scholastic thought and consider the criticisms of these approaches by Enlightenment philosophers such as Kant. We trace the rise of experience as the central category of pietism and romanticism in Schleiermacher's Speeches. Finally, we focus on the idealistic and pragmatic tradition in American philosophy of religion.

PHIL-227-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Feminism and Knowledge - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Is knowledge gendered? Is science objective? What does it mean to make such claims, and how does one justify them? In this course, we will investigate how gender roles, gender identity, and ideas about gender influence the construction of knowledge. We will look at three competing views about these influences—empiricism, standpoint theory, and postmodernism—in the context of empirical research in the social sciences and biology. We will consider what it means to do research as a feminist and what kind of cognitive authority women hold in the creation of knowledge.

Prerequisites: 4 credits in gender studies or philosophy or permission of instructor
Instructors: C. Lee

PHIL-232-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Medical Ethics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Modern medicine has raised new and difficult moral and philosophical problems. Topics discussed include: What is the distinction between health and illness? How should limited health care resources be distributed? How are medical problems related to larger social problems (e.g., gender inequality)? What are the responsibilities of medical researchers toward their research subjects? What moral reasons do we have to be concerned about the growth of technology in medicine? Are the basic institutions of medicine and medical education just?

Instructors: S. Hawthorne

PHIL-240-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Environmental Ethics: Nature/Culture/Values
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course)
A fundamental problem we face as humans is how we should relate to the natural world. Why not turn Yosemite into a parking lot? Should we control nature by applying scientific and technological expertise? Or should we strive for noninterference and preservation of the wild? How do we balance the pressing needs of people for food, energy, and other resources with the needs of other species or whole ecosystems? Students will explore these questions and issues in the classroom and in community-based learning or other experiential projects that put ideas into action.
Instructors: S. Hawthorne

PHIL-241-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Issues in Contemporary Moral Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Do we need to develop virtues to lead a good life? Is morality founded on freedom or happiness? What does it involve for an individual to be just? What is the relationship between morality and power? This course explores questions and texts relevant to contemporary ethical philosophy. We will read a mix of contemporary and historical texts examining some of these questions in detail.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Harold

PHIL-242-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Social and Political Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
An examination of a variety of topics in social and political philosophy, drawing from historical as well as contemporary sources. We will examine questions such as the following: What is the nature and scope of political authority? Do citizens have a duty to obey the laws of their state? What duties do we have to oppressed and marginalized groups? How do race, class, gender, and sexual orientation matter to political freedom and authority? How should we balance political liberties against the public good? Attention will also be given to the application of these questions to particular contemporary social and political issues.

(Spring) Philosophical Issues in Race and Racism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
An introduction to discussions of "race" within philosophy and related discussions in science, the law, and the arts. Topics to be discussed include: Is "race" real, subjective, or produced by society? How is race relevant to our identities? How does the popular media represent "race"? Does science construct "race"? What is the connection between "race," gender, and class? Readings from philosophy and a variety of interdisciplinary texts, including film and literature.

(Spring) Women and Philosophy - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210)
Women have to a great extent been denied a place in the canon of western philosophy. But voices of historical women philosophers are being recovered, and increasingly women contribute to current literature and teaching. In the first half of the course, we'll read selections from historical literature—the ancient Greeks through the American pragmatists. In the second half, we'll examine recent feminist literature, tracing themes that have been important over the centuries. We'll also ask questions about the role of women in philosophy, such as: Is their contribution distinctive? Is reason gendered? When is philosophy feminist?
Instructors: S. Hawthorne

PHIL-255-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Existentialism - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Is life absurd? Do human beings really want to be free? Or do we prefer to sacrifice our freedom for comfort and amusement? Is God dead? Is it possible to live without religious belief? These are among the central questions about human life raised by existential thinkers. We will discuss these issues, and many others, through careful reading of philosophic and literary texts by such important existentialists as Søren Kierkegaard, Friedrich Nietzsche, Martin Heidegger, Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus, Simone de Beauvoir, and Franz Fanon.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-264-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Philosophy of Mind - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
This course explores long-standing questions about the nature of consciousness; the relationship between mind and body; the relationship between mind and language; and the role that science has (if any) in negotiating these questions. The course will emphasize the philosophical understanding and implications of current work in neuroscience.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: L. Bowie
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-271-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Philosophy of Language
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
In the twentieth century, problems in the philosophy of language have become central to nearly all philosophical concerns. This course addresses key questions: What is truth? What is it for a sentence to have a meaning? Does language determine the way we think? Readings are drawn from Frege, Russell, Wittgenstein, Whorf, Quine, Chomsky, Frye, and others.
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: S. Mitchell
Expected enrollment: 30

PHIL-273-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Philosophy of the Arts
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
The purpose of this course is to explore philosophical problems concerning the arts and aesthetic experience. Some questions to be explored include: What is the difference between beauty and moral goodness? Can taste be objective? What does it mean for a work of music to be "sad"? Are the intentions of artists relevant to appreciation? What is the purpose of art criticism? How do pictures represent objects? Readings will be drawn from both historical and contemporary philosophical writings.

(Fall) Philosophy and Film Theory - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies)
An exploration of philosophical issues encountered in the study of film. Why do we need a theory of film? What is a film anyway? Do films have "authors"? How do films engage our emotions? Can films be socially critical? What can we learn from films? These are examples of the topics to be discussed in this course as we investigate the nature of film and its relation to philosophy. There will be weekly required film screenings
Prerequisites: 4 credits in department or in film studies, or permission of instructor
Notes: 2 meetings (75 minutes), 1 screening (3 hours)
Instructors: T. Wartenberg

PHIL-280-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Philosophy for Children
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
When you act bravely, can you be scared? How do you know that you are not dreaming now? If everyone told you you weren't a person, would you believe them? These questions are raised by children's books, such as Frog and Toad Together and The Bear That Wasn't. In this course, you will learn how to conduct discussions of philosophical questions like these among elementary school children using picture books. The first half of the course will concentrate on developing the necessary skills; the second on teaching philosophy to the children. Along the way, we'll delve into a range of philosophical issues, as we prepare to teach an introductory philosophy course for second graders.

PHIL-321-01  - Philosophy  - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Philosophy of Language  - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
According to the "Whorf Hypothesis" language constrains what we can think - our very concepts are shaped by our language. Much contemporary work in cognitive science argues the reverse - that concepts wired into our mind constrain what possible human languages there are, and that consequently all human languages share structure that reflects these constraints. On this view there are languages so alien that humans couldn't possibly learn them. This seminar will explore the relationship between language and thought, reading work by Wittgenstein, Whorf, Orwell, Putnam, Pinker, Fodor, Prinz, and others.

(Fall) Advanced Logic  - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Mathematics 327s)
This course presents a careful development of predicate calculus, formal elementary number theory, and elementary recursion theory, culminating in a proof of Gödel's incompleteness results. It includes some discussion of the philosophical significance of these results for the foundations of mathematics.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 225, 4 credits in department or in mathematics and permission of instructor

(Mathematics 327s)
Recently there has been a considerable flowering of non-classical logics, most prominently modal logics concerning necessity and possibility for one to dominate work in metaphysics and epistemology. In addition, conditional logics, intuitionist logics, and relevance logics have become important. This course will look at this broad range of topics. These logics are particularly useful in graduate-level classes in philosophy and are intrinsically interesting in their own right.

PHIL-334-01  - Philosophy  - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Ethics: Meta-Ethics  - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Meta-ethics is the study of the concepts and methods used in ethical discourse and debate. It is not the study, for example, of which actions are right or wrong, but rather of what the terms "right" and "wrong" mean. Possible questions to be discussed in this seminar include: Can moral judgments be true or false? Are moral judgments expressions of feelings? Are they objective or subjective? Are we rationally required to be moral? Are there moral facts? How are moral and aesthetic judgments different? This course presupposes a strong background in philosophy. Prior coursework in ethics and logic is recommended.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or permission of instructor
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 20

PHIL-334-01  - Philosophy  - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Ethics: Forgiveness and Revenge
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Forgiveness is generally taken to be a positive moral attitude: it is something we should be willing to grant and something we should seek. Revenge, by contrast, is taken to be a negative attitude and one which we should rid ourselves of as best we can. This course will raise questions about these assumptions. Is it always good to forgive, and is it always bad to seek revenge? In asking this question, we will examine philosophical accounts of both forgiveness and revenge with an eye to particular cases. Specific cases will include the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) in post-apartheid South Africa, the massacre of Nanking, and the sex abuse scandal in the Catholic church. Is forgiveness even possible in these instances? And if we can forgive, should we?

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 205 or permission of instructor

Instructors: K. Thomason

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Topics in Philosophy: Cognitive Science
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

David Chalmers has dubbed the problem of consciousness "The Hard Problem." How can a lump of physical matter (for example your brain) have an experience? How can it be like something, feel like something, to be in one physical state rather than another? There has been a tremendous surge of divergent thinking on these questions in the intersections between neuroscience and philosophy - stories about how matter can be conscious, and stories of why our minds are too limited ever to answer such questions. Readings and discussion from Dennett, Churchland, Chalmers, Crick, Gazzaniga, Lloyd, and others.

Prerequisites: One course in philosophy and either a second course in philosophy or a course in neuroscience; or permission of the instructor.

Instructors: L. Bowie

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Philosophy of Medicine
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Modern medical practice uses science and technology in ways barely conceivable a generation ago. But puzzles about medical science and practice remain. What's the right way to apply statistical knowledge to a patient? Or, to put the question another way, when does "clinical judgment" become stereotyping? When is a patient's distress a "real" disease--for example, why is diabetes uncontroversially real, but multiple chemical sensitivity is not? In a complex condition like depression, how do we gauge whether the cause(s) is/are genes, brain chemistry, history, or acute stress? This course explores these and other questions, drawing on literature in philosophy of science and medical ethics.

Prerequisites: jr, sr

Instructors: S. Hawthorne

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-350-02 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Topics in Philosophy: Causation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Recently a new theory of causation - which might broadly be called the theory of Bayesian networks - has received a lot of attention. This topic concerns the justification of scientific hypotheses, and represents patterns of causation mathematically. So this course is really an introduction to one approach to the logic of inferences in the sciences (both social sciences and natural sciences). We'll look at some of the problems with causation first. Then we'll cover introductory probability theory and graphs, and then look at how the theory addresses the puzzles. Students will need to be somewhat comfortable with mathematics, and interested in philosophy.

PHIL-351-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Kant
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

Immanuel Kant's Critique of Pure Reason is one of the few works in the Western philosophic tradition that fundamentally transformed our understanding of the place of human beings in the world. This seminar involves a careful, critical reading of the text in order to assess the nature and significance of the epistemological and metaphysical views it expounds.

Prerequisites: 8 credits in department including Philosophy 202 or equivalent

Instructors: T. Wartenberg

Expected enrollment: 19

PHIL-351-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Systematic Study of One Philosopher: Aristotle - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement

This course will look closely at Aristotle's moral and aesthetic thought through a careful examination of his Nicomachean Ethics and his Poetics. In these works Aristotle gives us his conception of a well-lived life, as well as his view about the relationship between emotions and reason. In addition to the primary texts, we'll read some contemporary commentary on Aristotle, and we'll look at the influence of Aristotle's ideas on contemporary philosophical debates about art and life. This course presupposes prior study of ancient Greek philosophy. Prior coursework in ethics or aesthetics is also recommended.
Prerequisites: Philosophy 201 and 4 additional credits in department
Instructors: J. Harold
Expected enrollment: 20

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Fall) Philosophy of Art: Arthur Danto - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
This seminar will focus on the work of Arthur Danto, perhaps the preeminent contemporary philosopher of art and art critic for The Nation. We will explore his writings from his seminal essay, "The Artworld," to his recent book, The Abuse of Beauty, in an attempt to understand his views on art, its development, and its future.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 20

PHIL-373-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) The Philosophy of Art: The Shock of the New - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Art Studio 280s-01)
Preamble (for topics courses): This class examines philosophical issues concerning the interpretation, creation, and experience of art. Topics vary from year to year.
Innovative works of art shock the world and are difficult for viewers to interpret in light of previous artistic practice. How, then, can viewers and critics understand new and challenging works of art? This is the topic that we will investigate in this course by looking at art, reading about art, making art, and writing about art.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department
Notes: students enrolled in this course will be responsible for some of the cost of materials in addition to the standard studio fee of $60.
Instructors: T. Wartenberg, R. Hachiyanagi
Expected enrollment: 10

PHIL-375-01 - Philosophy - 2010-2011
(Spring) Philosophy of Film - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Film Studies 390-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): An examination of different theoretical issues concerning the nature of film and film viewing. Topics vary yearly.
Recently, philosophers have argued that films resemble philosophy in their use of thought experiments. But the role of thought experiments in philosophy is itself contested. The seminar will investigate how thought experiments are used in science and philosophy in order to determine whether films and, more generally, art can legitimately claim that their presentation of thought experiments connects them to philosophy. Some previous acquaintance with philosophy highly recommended.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in department or in film studies or permission of instructor
Notes: There will be film screenings in addition to the regular class meeting times
Instructors: T. Wartenberg
Expected enrollment: 19

(Spring) Square Dancing
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Many countries around the world have National Square Dancing Associations. In the U.S., Congress unanimously passed a Joint Resolution designating Square Dance as the national folk dance in 1982. Currently, 32 states also have chosen Square Dancing as their State Dance. Dance provides a great mind-body workout; researchers have found that exercise increases the level of brain chemicals that encourage nerve cells to grow. Dancing that requires the memorization of dance steps and sequences boosts brainpower by improving memory skills. Participants in the class will learn the basic skills of Square Dancing and will be introduced to local Square Dancing clubs.

(Spring) Bon Odori (Japanese Spiritual Dance)
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course focuses on a Japanese Buddhist folk dance performed outdoors and danced in a concentric circle around a raised platform. It is celebrated as a reminder of the gratefulness one should feel toward one's ancestors. From this dance of joy comes Bon Odori, a time in which ancestors and their sacrifices are remembered and appreciated. Through studying the dance, students will understand its intentions: remembering and appreciating who you are and where you come from. Because the dance is closely related to Buddhism, this course will provide an opportunity for the students both to exercise through dancing and to calm their minds.

(Spring) Ultimate Frisbee
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This is a non-contact sport played by two seven-player teams. The object of the game is to score goals. The Frisbee may only be moved by passing; the thrower is not allowed to take any steps. When a pass is incomplete, intercepted, etc., a turnover occurs, resulting in a change of possession of the disc. A goal is scored when a player successfully passes the disc to a teammate in the end zone which that team is attacking.
Notes: Beginning skill level. Offered first half of fall semester, 2nd half spring semester. No repeats.

PE-455-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Advanced Dressage and Jumping
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Preamble (for topics courses): Riding Fee $560
This course ties the concepts of straightness, rhythm, obedience and suppleness to technique over fences. Focuses on riders' effectiveness and position in both disciplines. Riders should be comfortable riding a green or unknown horse over a course of 3'3" jumps and capable of riding a 1st level dressage test on an unknown horse. Two spots will be reserved for riders without their own horse.
Prerequisites: Permission of Instructor. 1 meeting, 90 minutes. Fee course.
Instructors: J. Collins
Expected enrollment: 6

PE-458-01 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Riding Team
Credits/PE Units: 1; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Team members are required to enroll in one of these levels of riding: 051, 052, 151, 251, 351, 451fs. Team members practice on Fridays. Five shows are in the fall, five shows are in the spring. The College is a member of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association.
Prerequisites: Permission of instructor
Notes: Selection by tryouts in fall and spring.
Instructors: C. Law

PE-462-03 - Physical Education and Athletics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Semi-Private Dressage Instruction
Most courses are available for students to participate in physical education courses. These courses are designed to develop physical fitness and coordination. Students will be exposed to a variety of activities, including swimming, aerobics, and strength training.

Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit)

PHYED-261-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2010-2011
(Spring) Women in Sport - Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Gender Studies 216
This course is designed to introduce students to the history of women in sport, the status of women in sport since the passage of Title IX in 1972, and current issues impacting women in sport such as race, gender, and sexual orientation. Students will explore the influence of sport on the lives of women and how selected women sport leaders have influenced the growth and development of sport.
Notes: No P.E. credit. Academic credit only.
Instructors: L. Priest
Expected enrollment: 20

PHYED-275-01 - Physical Education and Athletics (Academic Credit) - 2010-2011
(Spring) Introduction to Sport Pedagogy
Credits/PE Units: 2; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
This course is designed to introduce students to sport pedagogy with a focus on coaching youth sports. Topics include coaching philosophy, motor learning, sport physiology, sport biomechanics, sport psychology, and risk management/liability. We will consider the benefits of playing sports, the development of age appropriate instruction and training programs, goal setting, effective feedback, and the importance of coaches as role models for children.
Notes: no PE units are awarded
Instructors: D. Allen
Expected enrollment: 20

Physics

PHYS-103-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Foundations of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics unified by the physical notions of force, energy, and equilibrium. Mathematics is used at the level of geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis. Topics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, include geometrical optics, time, oscillation, statics, elasticity, conservation of energy, and fluids.

PHYS-104-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Renewable Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar (Environmental Studies 104)
We will examine the feasibility of converting the entire energy infrastructure of the US from one that is dependent on fossil fuels to one that utilizes mostly renewable sources of energy. We will examine the potential scale of energy production and the associated costs, natural resource requirements and land usage needs for both renewables, such as solar, wind and biofuel, and non-renewables, such as coal, natural gas, petroleum and nuclear. By applying extensive use of basic algebra and an elementary understanding of the physical processes underpinning each energy technology, we will arrive at a number of urgent conclusions about the challenges facing our energy infrastructure.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: A. Arango
Expected enrollment: 18

PHYS-105-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Science in the Media
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
First-year seminar
Popular coverage of science ranges in depth and accuracy, and many scientists do not see the importance of communicating their work, or their excitement, to the general public. Scientific breakthroughs contribute to everyone's quality of life, but the process is poorly understood by many, leading to misunderstandings and misgivings that can affect public policy. This course will look at newsworthy results from current scientific research, exploring topics to better understand the science, ideas such as scientific consensus and repeatability, and examining the tension that may exist between the scientists and the public. Topics will be pulled largely from the physical sciences.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 8

PHYS-115-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Force, Motion, and Energy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
Studies the mechanics of material objects. Topics include Newton's laws, projectile motion, circular motion, momentum, kinetic and potential energy, angular momentum, gravitation, and oscillations. This course is appropriate for students intending to major in a physical science.
Prerequisites: Mathematics 101
Instructors: S. Sutton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB | 02 LAB |
Expected enrollment: 28

PHYS-115-01 - Physics - 2010-2011

PHYS-204-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Phenomena of Physics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course studies a variety of topics in physics, drawn from the MCAT syllabus, including thermodynamics, acoustics, wave optics, electricity, magnetism, and nuclear phenomena. As in Physics 103f, the applicable mathematics is geometry, proportion, and dimensional analysis.
Prerequisites: Physics 103 or 115
Instructors: M. Peterson
Section Instructors: 01 LAB E Altiere | 02 LAB E Altiere |

(Spring) Gender in Science - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

(Gender Studies 241)

This course examines explanations for the underrepresentation of women in science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) with an eye to identifying how to increase the participation of women in science. The course will address questions about gender differences in cognition and ability, the role of stereotyping, as well as the "leaky pipeline" issue, that is, the rate and timing of the departure of women from scientific fields. Course readings will explore the psychology of gender, as it relates to STEM. In addition, we will read research from physical scientists, reports from professional organizations such as the American Physical Society, and reports from congressional committees.

PHYS-222-01 - Physics - 2010-2011

(Spring) Comparative Biomechanics

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement (Biological Sciences 322)

The main objective of this course is to explore organismal structure and function via an examination of the basic physical principles that guide how living things are constructed and how organisms interact with their environment. We will use the combined approaches of the biologist and engineer to study the impact of size on biological systems, address the implications of solid and fluid mechanics for animal design, survey different modes of animal locomotion, and learn how biologists working in diverse areas (e.g., ecology, development, evolution, and physiology) gain insight through biomechanical analyses.

Prerequisites: Physics 115 and permission of the instructor

PHYS-301-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Waves and Optics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
A comprehensive treatment of wave phenomena, particularly light, leading to an introductory study of quantum mechanics. Topics include wave propagation, polarization, interference and interferometry, diffraction, and special relativity.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 and either: 303 or concurrent enrollment in 303
Instructors: C. Sutton
Section Instructors: 01 LAB C Sutton |
Expected enrollment: 12

PHYS-302-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Spring) Quantum Mechanical Phenomena
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-C: Natural and physical sciences without lab requirement
This course provides an introduction to quantum mechanics. The Uncertainty Principle, Schroedinger's Equation, and the hydrogen atom are studied in depth, with emphasis on angular momentum, electron spin, and the Pauli Exclusion Principle.
Prerequisites: Physics 301
Instructors: J. Hudgings
Expected enrollment: 16

PHYS-303-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Introduction to Mathematical Methods for Scientists
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Topics include infinite series, complex numbers, partial differentiation, multiple integration, selected topics in linear algebra and vector analysis, ordinary differential equations, and Fourier series. The course includes a brief introduction to Mathematica and Matlab, in addition to a traditional emphasis on analytic solutions.
Prerequisites: Physics 216 or concurrent enrollment
Instructors: J. Hudgings
Expected enrollment: 25

PHYS-308-01 - Physics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Electronics
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Science and Math II-B: Natural and physical sciences with lab requirement
This course is a study of electrical circuits and components with emphasis on the underlying physical principles; solid-state active devices with applications to simple systems such as linear amplifiers; feedback-controlled instrumentation; and analog and digital computing devices.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Notes: 2 meetings (3 hours: hands-on lecture and lab combined)
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 12
(Spring) Analytical Mechanics

Newton's great innovation was the description of the world by differential equations, the beginning of physics as we know it. This course studies Newtonian mechanics for a point particle in 1, 2, and 3 dimensions, systems of particles, rigid bodies, and the Lagrangian and Hamiltonian formulations.

Prerequisites: Physics 303
Instructors: M. Peterson
Expected enrollment: 25

(Spring) Methods of Applied Mathematics - *Not offered this year/term

This course is an introduction to theories and techniques important to applied mathematics. Topics include special functions, calculus of variations, theory of functions of a complex variable, solution of partial differential equations, integral transform methods, and Green's functions. While the focus of the course is on analytical techniques, we will develop numerical approaches to problem solving.

Prerequisites: Physics 216, 303
Notes: Physics 324 or 336 will normally be offered in alternating years
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Electromagnetic Theory - *Not offered this year/term

This course presents the development of mathematical descriptions of electric and magnetic fields; study of interactions of fields with matter in static and dynamic situations; mathematical description of waves; and development of Maxwell's equations with a few applications to the reflection and refraction of light and microwave cavities.

Prerequisites: Physics 301, 315, or 324
Instructors: C. Sutton
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Statistical Mechanics and Thermodynamics

This course presents thermodynamic and statistical descriptions of many-particle systems. Topics include classical and quantum ideal gases with applications to paramagnetism; black-body radiation; Bose-Einstein condensation; and the Einstein and Debye solid; the specific heat of solids.

Prerequisites: Physics 301
Notes: 2010-11 - will be team taught with Chem 308. this course WILL have 4th hour but no lab requirement
Instructors: K. Aidala
Expected enrollment: 12

(Fall) Topics in Advanced Physics - *Not offered this year/term

Preamble (for topics courses): Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor.
Prerequisites: Physics 216
Instructors: The department
Expected enrollment: 25

(Fall) Topics in Advanced Physics: TBA - *Not offered this year/term

Preamble (for topics courses): Topics chosen according to the interests of the students and the instructor.

Politics

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Family Ties
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
In this course, students will engage a number of classic works of literature and moral philosophy, as well as contemporary works, in order to reflect on the ways the family shapes private and public life and is, in return, shaped by them. We will cover such questions as: how does the family create and then influence the individual? What does it mean to be part of a family? What do individuals owe their families and are those obligations fair? How do we form families? Can the family insulate individuals from politics and society—indeed, in good ways and bad? Is political order like familial order? Are the state and society a threat or support for the family? How have these understandings changed over time?
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-100-01 - Politics - 2010-2011
(Spring) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Black Metropolis
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar
Black Metropolis referred to the more than half a million black people jammed into a South Side ghetto in Chicago at mid-twentieth century that featured an entrenched black political machine, a prosperous black middle class, and a thriving black cultural scene in the midst of massive poverty and systemic inequality. This course will follow the political, economic, and cultural developments of what scholars considered to be the typical urban community in postwar United States. We will examine such topics as Martin Luther King’s failed desegregation campaign; Harold Washington, first black mayor; William Julius Wilson’s urban underclass thesis; and the rise of Barack Obama.
Prerequisites: fy
Instructors: P. Smith
Expected enrollment: 15

POLIT-100-02 - Politics - 2010-2011
(Fall) First-Year Seminars in Politics: Politics and Truth - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship of truth to our political life? Does democracy require truth? Or can democracy pervert truth? Can truth thrive in any type of government? Are these issues more or less relevant for contemporary politics? This course is an introduction to political theory through an examination of these questions. During the semester, students will examine a variety of political theory classics, analyzing the authors’ perspectives on these questions.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The art and mechanics of persuading a polity to support either war or peace through oral argument. How speeches frame issues, mobilize public opinion, and persuade individuals to support or resist decisions to go to war. Students will be expected to deliver speeches, lead discussions, and critique their own and others’ presentations.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Writing-intensive)
What is the relationship between personal experience and political thought? How do political thinkers grasp and convey the connections between self and political order? Our first-year seminar will probe the links between heart and mind in political philosophy by exploring the lives and writings of illustrative figures who together span the history of political thought. Texts will include memoirs and fiction as well as abstract theoretical works.

(Fall) Poverty in the United States
(Community-based learning course; Complex Organizations 204)

Why are so many people poor in the most affluent of all nations? Are there self-perpetuating "cultures of poverty"? Is poverty the result of economic conditions; failed government programs; discrimination; out-of-wedlock births; inadequate parenting; divorce; poor schools; poor health; poor housing; defects of intelligence or moral character? We will examine conflicting explanations of poverty and potential remedies from a variety of political perspectives, and analyze public assistance laws, Medicaid, and tax policies. Students will participate, in small groups, in an off-campus community-based learning project collaboratively designed with community partners, the instructor and the CBL program. Spanish language skills preferred.

(Spring) Feminism and Capitalism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive; Gender Studies 270s)
This course will explore the relationship between feminism and capitalism in a contemporary context, particularly the way they reinforce and contradict one another. Examining this question through Marxist, liberal, post-structuralist, and post-colonial feminist theory, as well as the recent history of feminist and anti-capitalist movements, we will consider the economic and political underpinnings of feminist thinking and practice. Do certain feminisms carry implicit anti-capitalist commitments? To what extent are particular feminisms, especially liberal feminism, reliant upon capitalist structures and processes? What stakes might feminists have in preserving or uprooting capitalism?

(Spring) Who Counts? Understanding Inequality and Social Policy Through Methodological Literacy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
It is one thing to deplore inequality; it is another to do something about it. But how should we define poverty, or evaluate programs for increasing educational equality? Are alleged generalizations about different races, sexes, social classes, or ethnicities supported by reliable data, or is there more variability within these groups than between them? How do we know which statistics to trust? How do the ways in which we ask these questions affect the answers we’re likely to find? In this course, we will seek to understand the methods employed by scholars of politics from a critical perspective, looking not only at what they let us see, but also at what they obscure.

(Spring) Nationalism
(Taught in English; Russian and Eurasian Studies 330s)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multi-ethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Spring) Public Policy in Latin America: Drugs, Inequality and Free Trade
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In this class we will explore the three topics that have done the most to shape Latin American politics in recent decades, namely Drugs, Inequality, and Free Trade. The class will explore the theoretical underpinnings and development of policy, as well as the specific responses and changes over time. While we will consider the region as a whole, we will emphasize Mexico, Colombia, Brazil, Chile and Peru. Finally, we will reflect on the role that the United States has played in shaping the above policies, and consider potential future directions for the region.
Prerequisites: At least one class on Latin America or Comparative Politics
Instructors: L. Jimenez

(Spring) War & Peace in South Asia - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
A region of deeply contested territories, histories and ideologies, South Asia is marked by multiple forms of conflict and violence that traverse territorial frontiers, link domestic politics with foreign policy, and thus complicate the search for peace and security. We will explore the histories and causes of enduring conflicts, such as Kashmir and the wars in Afghanistan, insurgencies in Pakistan, India and Sri Lanka, and potential conflicts over scarce water and energy resources. We will conclude by examining the role of external powers, such as China and the U.S. in South Asia and assessing the prospects for peace in the region.

(Spring) Politics & Rhetoric
(Writing-intensive)
People have long accused politicians of using rhetoric to pander to audiences and get what they want regardless of the truth. But politics, especially democratic politics, depends on communication to persuade and motivate others. What is the relationship between speech and politics? Can we have political communication without rhetoric? How can citizens use speech to improve democracy? What are the political effects of different rhetorical styles? How can speech help communities deal with conflict? The course will focus on these questions, moving from classical writings on rhetoric to contemporary democratic political theory.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in politics or critical social thought
Instructors: E. Markovits
Expected enrollment: 18

(Fall) International Migration - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking- and writing-intensive)
This course examines migration and transnational processes from a comparative perspective. It focuses on the relationship between globalization and international migration, with special attention to transnational networks and diaspora politics. We will explore major theories, forms, and patterns of migration in global politics; the involvement of diaspora organizations in the politics of host and home states; and the implications of migration and refugee flows for state sovereignty, national identity, and citizenship. We will conclude by analyzing the key debates and framing of immigration policies and models of citizenship in Europe and the United States.
Prerequisites: jr. sr. 8 credits in department
Instructors: K. Khory

POLIT-367-01 - Politics - 2010-2011
(Fall) Decision Making
On decision making, and the pathologies of decision making, in American politics. When, and to what extent, can we say that a particular policy decision is the result of rational choice, institutional processes, pluralistic pressures, or other forces? When are individual or collective decisions likely to be marred by "groupthink," selective attention, or self-deception? To what extent, if at all, may collective decisions be considered rational or moral? When are challenges to authority, or to dominant opinion, likely to make a difference?

(Neuroscience and Behavior 250f)
This course is an introduction to and survey of the biological bases of behavior, including physiological, biochemical, and neurophysiological determinants of sensation, motor control, sleep, eating and drinking, learning and memory, language, and mental disorders.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology and 4 credits in biological sciences
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 50

PSYCH-251-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Animal Behavior
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Examines the development, causal mechanisms, evolutionary history, and function of the behavior of animals. Topics include sensory capacities, predator evasion, reproduction, parental care, social behavior, and learning.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: K. Hollis
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-252-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Bon Appetit! Food, Appetite, and Culture - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Food is energy, an occasion for intimacy, and often a cause of aggression and pathology. The provenance of food preferences in humans and other species is considered from the perspectives of anthropology, biology, neuroscience, and psychology. Specific topics include the sensory properties of food, attitudes toward food, the psychology of ingestion, and the neuroscience of feeding.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent study programs are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-295-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Independent Study
Credits/PE Units: 1-4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
Independent research projects are arranged with individual faculty members in the department.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor
Instructors: The department

PSYCH-300-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in History and Systems of Psychology: Psychology and the Military - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Psychology’s history as a discipline is inextricably linked to the military -- as an employer of psychologists, as the context and funding source for many of psychology’s products, and as the stimulus for the development of key areas of the field. In addition, psychologists’ role in warfare (as test administrators, clinicians, and interrogators), and the psychological consequences of war on soldiers (from the shell shock of the 1920s to the PTSD of today) represent some of psychology’s most persistent controversies. Reading a range of primary and secondary sources from World War I to the present, we will analyze psychology’s complex relations to the military from multiple perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, 8 credits in department and permission of instructor. Preference given to students with some background in sociology, politics, or history
Notes: Interested students need to fill out an application form available in the Psychology department office.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-310-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Laboratory: Research Methods in Social Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to laboratory and field methods in social psychology: methodology, data analysis, ethical problems, statistical inference, and research design. All students are expected to design and conduct a research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor
Instructors: F. Deutsch
PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Social Psychology: Psychology and the Media
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
This seminar will examine how psychology is represented across a wide range of media, including newspapers, magazines, books, films, Web sites, and advertisements. We will analyze the continuing competition between "pop psychology/self-help" and professional representations of the field, in light of ongoing struggles for authority over mental life. Students will give frequent oral presentations and write a major research paper on a topic of their choosing.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 200, 201, plus 8 additional credits in the department. Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-319-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Social Psychology: Gender and Domestic Labor
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Gender Studies 333s(04))
This course examines social psychology and sociological theories and research addressing why women do more housework and child care than men. It pays special attention to the situation of dual-earner families and considers class and ethnic differences on the nature of this inequality and the barriers to full equality at home.
Prerequisites: permission of instructor. Students must meet with instructor during advising week to get permission to enter the course.
Instructors: F. Deutsch
Expected enrollment: 20

PSYCH-320-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Concepts of Abnormality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of how maladaptive patterns of thought and action are understood from a psychological viewpoint. Behaviors ranging from neurotic to psychotic are studied in terms of underlying character structure and origins in childhood experience. Competing psychoanalytic theories are brought to bear on these phenomena.
Prerequisites: jr, sr (permission required for exceptions), two prior psychology courses, Psychology 230 recommended
Instructors: R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Laboratory in Qualitative Research - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Writing-intensive)
This course offers a hands-on introduction to methods of psychological research that focus on the qualitative description and analysis of human experience. Students learn a variety of techniques of data collection (interviewing, intensive observation, archival research) and methods of analyzing textual sources -- from historical accounts to blogs, memoirs, observational narratives, and interview transcripts. Readings focus on specific methodological practices as well as on the history and philosophy of science differentiating qualitative methods from other approaches to psychological research. Students work both collaboratively and individually on projects throughout the course.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and permission of instructor.
Notes: This course also counts in the Social area of psychology.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 40

PSYCH-323-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011

PSYCH-325-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Laboratory in Psychological Assessment
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Historical development, theoretical bases, and critical evaluation of tests used to describe adult cognitive and personality functioning. Supervised practicum in test administration, scoring, and interpretation.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201, either Psychology 230 or 320, jr. or sr. and permission of instructor
Notes: Submit an essay (max 500 words) by April 8 to Robert Shilkret (box in Reese). In the essay, list psychology courses and grades; current psych courses; GPA; and describe why you want to take this course, relevant past experiences, and future goals related to the work for the course.
Instructors: R. Vernon-Jones
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-326-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Laboratory in Personality and Abnormal Psychology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is an introduction to research methods in abnormal and personality psychology. Students will work as a class to collect data using quantitative and qualitative methodologies. Students will be expected to collect survey- and questionnaire-based data as well as engage in some interviewing projects. We will consider the various stages of research including literature review, design, ethical considerations, data collection, and analysis (qualitative and quantitative), and consider the statistical inference or implications of our findings. The course focuses on the impact of stress and coping on the lives of individuals, identity, their relationships, and psychological adjustment.
Prerequisites: Jr. or sr.; Psych 200, 201; one course in the personality/abnormal area preferred, and permission of instructor
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-329-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: Psychology of Trauma
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
What happens after a traumatic event? Why do some people develop psychological disorders and others do not? This course will explore the psychological theories and research on trauma and stress. Topics covered will include childhood abuse, domestic violence, combat violence, community violence, and interpersonal violence. The seminar will explore psychological dysfunction, disorders, as well as adaptation and coping following exposure to traumatic stress. In addition, the course will explore the concept of "cultural trauma."
Prerequisites: 100 level psychology course, jr. or sr.; Psychology 230 preferred or a course in abnormal psychology
Instructors: A. Douglas
Expected enrollment: 16

PSYCH-329-02 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Personality and Abnormal Psychology: First-Person Narratives of Madness - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Speaking-intensive)
Psychologists have typically conceptualized "mental illness" in terms of the symptoms and diagnoses proposed by psychiatrists in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). These categories, while perhaps useful for prescribing medication, do little to help us understand the subjective experiences that are considered "mad." In this seminar, we analyze accounts (historical and contemporary) written by people who have experienced extreme states, intense emotions, or unusual perceptions or beliefs, to understand how these "counter-narratives" offer new insights into psychological life.
Prerequisites: A 100 level course in psychology, jr. or sr; Psychology 230 preferred or a course in abnormal psychology
Preference given to senior psychology and neuroscience majors
Notes: Students must submit an information sheet (form available in department office) by noon on Thursday of advising week to get permission to register for the course.
Instructors: G. Hornstein
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Factors Affecting the "Math Path" of Young Women
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of research methods in educational settings, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques and using as a context adolescent girls' educational experiences in mathematics. Students will be working directly with the SummerMath database, which spans more than 25 years. Students will develop skills in formulating research questions, designing research, and finding appropriate methods (both qualitative and quantitative) by which to analyze the data. Each student will complete a major research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201 and permission of instructor
Notes: Students should submit a statement of interest by email to the professor during advising week. This course can be counted in area C (Developmental and Educational Psychology) OR D (Perception and Cognition) of the curriculum.
Instructors: C. Morrow
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Psychological Perspectives on Adoption
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Adoption has become a common way to create families in the United States and many other countries. The experience of adoptees, birth parents, and adoptive families raise many questions about family relationships, identities, and community membership. In this course we will look how adoption has been studied, with a particular focus on the experiences of adoptees and their adoptive parents. Students will develop research questions, consider different methods and related ethical issues, and analyze survey and interview data.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200; 201; and 230 or 236.
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-330-02 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Lab in Developmental Psychology: Adolescent Development in Community Settings - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a study of research methods in developmental psychology, focusing on observational, survey, and interview techniques for studying young children, adolescents, and adults. It encourages the student to think about the basic issues of developmental psychology research: the conceptualization of problems, design of research, choice of methods to be used, and ethical questions that might arise. Students complete a major research project.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor.
Notes: Students must pick up an information sheet from the dept. office and submit a statement by email to the professor during advising week.
Instructors: B. Packard
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-331-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Lab in Early Social and Personality Development
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
In the role of a participant-observer, each student studies intensively the social and personality development of the children in one classroom at the Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook. Students learn how to articulate developmental changes and individual differences by analyzing detailed observations. Topics include social cognition, peer relationships, social skills, concepts of friendship, emotional development, identity formation, self-esteem, and the social and cultural context of development.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and 230 or permission of instructor.
Notes: 2 labs (3 hours each) required at Gorse Children's Center at Stonybrook
Instructors: P. Ramsey
Expected enrollment: 18

PSYCH-337-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Educational Psychology: Motivation - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
What influences our desire to learn, to participate in certain activities, or to become particular kinds of people? We will examine the topic of "motivation" using several perspectives, across age levels and in various settings. Drawing from a variety of resources, including autobiographies, research studies, and videos, we will target our own motivation through reflection and action and the motivation of others through active coaching and mentoring in a community-based setting.
Prerequisites: Psychology 233 and permission of instructor.
Notes: 1 meeting (3 hours) plus a field component in a community-based site (at least a 2-hour block per week). A statement of interest must be submitted electronically during the week of advising; please pick up an information sheet in the department office.
Instructors: B. Packard
PSYCH-339-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: Adult Development and Aging
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course will focus on the developmental changes that occur after adolescence. Specifically we will discuss emotional, cognitive and psychosocial changes across the adult lifespan, including middle age and older adulthood. Critical study of the theories and methods in the field will be addressed, and we will evaluate what it means to age successfully or unsuccessfully from various psychological perspectives.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, and Psychology 230
Instructors: E. Graham
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-339-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Developmental Psychology: First Love: Attachment Theory and Research
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The relationship with the infant’s primary caretaker, usually the mother, develops in a complex way during the first year after birth. We will study what is now known about this relationship, how we know about its importance to the infant, and the variation in types of such relationships early in life. The importance of this first love for later development, in childhood, adolescence, and adult life will be considered. Methods of research will be emphasized and students will be expected to give class presentations.
Prerequisites: jr, sr, Psychology 200, 230 or another developmental psychology course and permission of instructor
Notes: During advising week students should submit an essay to Prof. Shilkret listing their psychology courses and stating why they wish to be included in the seminar.
Instructors: R. Shilkret
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Laboratory in Perception and Cognition: Cognition and Literacy
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course)
Adult illiteracy in the U.S. presents an ever-growing challenge. To understand this problem, we will learn various theories of reading. However, since many models of reading are based on data gathered from children, we will also examine how the cognitive abilities of adults are different from those of children. A large component of this class concerns learning the lab techniques associated with assessing reading abilities. In addition, since this is a community-based learning course, each student will become a tutor for an adult enrolled in an area literacy program.
Prerequisites: a 100-level course in psychology, 201, 200 and permission of instructor.
Notes: 3 hours per week as a literacy tutor in Springfield is required.
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-340-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Lab in Perception and Cognition
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
In this lab we will explore issues related to reading fluency in children. We will investigate a number of research areas: how do young readers develop fluency, how do readers' eye movement change as a function of their fluency and reading instruction, how do reading remediation programs promote reading for fluency and understanding? We will examine these questions by reading literature based on how children acquire these skills, and then analyze data that have been collected from 2nd grade readers who will be exposed to three different reading remediation programs. You will learn a number of software programs that are designed to assess reading behavior, and analyze and present those data in class.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-349-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar in Perception and Cognition - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Speaking-intensive)
In this seminar we will explore issues related to reading comprehension. We will investigate a number of research areas: how do readers use context to add to their vocabulary knowledge, what types of information do readers use to draw inferences from a text, how do readers build a mental model of what they are reading? We will examine these questions by reading literature based on how children acquire these skills, and how adult skilled readers accomplish these tasks. In addition, we will examine how people with reading disabilities are impacted. Finally, we will explore remediation programs that are developed to deal with reading problems.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200 and 201
Instructors: K. Binder
Expected enrollment: 15

PSYCH-350-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Laboratory in Behavioral Neuroscience - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This laboratory provides intensive study and discussion of specific topics in behavioral neuroscience, including psychopharmacology, neuroanatomy, electronics, and surgery. Examination of methods and experimentation in the laboratory.
Prerequisites: Psychology 200, 201, and one of the following: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333
Notes: Interested students must meet with the instructor before or during the advising week to obtain additional information about the course.
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 12

PSYCH-359-01 - Psychology - 2010-2011
(Spring) Seminar: Biological Bases of Behavior: Of Madness and Molecules: Seminar in Neuropsychopharmacology
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
Charpentier, a French scientist of the 1940s, unwittingly discovered a chemical that was to alter dramatically our understanding of madness. The chemical, chlorpromazine, has been widely used for the treatment of psychotics. Of interest is neuropsychopharmacology—the science and the technology. The principles of pharmacology are discussed and precede the examination of applications of the technology to psychopathology (for example, schizophrenia, depression, anxiety, and violent behavior).
Prerequisites: Psychology 250 or Biological Sciences 333 and permission of instructor. Preference given to junior and senior psychology and neuroscience and behavior majors
Instructors: W. Millard
Expected enrollment: 15

(Fall) Racism and Inequality in Schools and Society
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
(Community-based learning course; Writing-intensive)
What is race? Who decides? Are we a "postracial" society? This course focuses on historical, social, psychological, and legal underpinnings of the social construction of race and examines how perspectives on race have influenced the lives of students and teachers in schools. Class sessions compare the old vs. "new" racism, contrast the workings of white privilege with calls for white responsibility, explore perspectives on the "achievement" and "opportunity" gaps, and examine how antiracist pedagogies can address inequities in education at the curricular, interpersonal, and institutional levels. Essays, response papers, field experiences, and a digital media project are required.
Prerequisites: sophomore, junior, senior or permission of instructor
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: S. Lawrence
Expected enrollment: 40

(Spring) Differences in Learning
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
The course will survey the etiology, diagnosis, and remediation of a variety of learning differences and special needs. Conditions such as dyslexia, attention deficit disorder, and autism will be examined. It will provide an introduction to interpreting test results, systematic behavioral observations, evaluating clinical information, diagnostic hypothesizing, and planning individualized educational programs. The principles of inclusion and their implications for children will be explored. Requires a field component.

Prerequisites: A 100 level course in psychology, 230 or 236, and 233
Notes: Prepracticum required
Instructors: G. Bass
Expected enrollment: 40

EDUC-256-01 - Psychology and Education - 2010-2011
(Fall) Making Meaning for Operations/Reasoning Algebraically about Operations
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.

This course will draw on two modules of the Developing Mathematical Ideas (DMI) series. DMI is a curriculum designed to help think through the major ideas of K-8 mathematics and examine how children develop those ideas. The first five sessions will parallel the first four sessions of Making Meaning for Operations. The remaining eight sessions will be based on the Reasoning Algebraically about Operations module. This module focuses on how children's study of operations leads into articulation of generalizations in the number system and justification of such generalizations. Participants will explore and understand how such work in the early grades relates to algebra studied in later grades.

(Spring) The Process of Teaching and Learning: Developing Literacy in Early Childhood and Elementary Schools
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Does not meet a distribution requirement.
(Speaking-intensive)

Through a balanced and integrated approach students will learn to develop literacy in early childhood/elementary schools. Class members will learn about emergent literacy, diagnosing language needs, integrating phonics skills in a literature-based program, the teaching of process writing, children's fiction and nonfiction literature, and the use of portfolios for assessment. Course required for spring semester practicum students. Course evaluation is based on written and oral work done individually and in groups. Requires a prepracticum.

(Fall) Early Christianity in Iraq and Iran
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement

In the first millennium, Christianity thrived throughout the Middle East. Because Roman Catholic and Protestant churches later declared many of these Christians to be heretics, their stories have often been excluded from the history of Christianity. This course challenges the assumption of Christianity as a "Western" religion and asks how our understanding of global Christianity changes when we include the history and perspective of Eastern Christians. We will read such sources as the tale of a transvestite nun, a letter allegedly written by Jesus, ancient Christian hymns, the story of a demon-possessed monastery, and the first Christian writings on Islam.

(Spring) Women and Buddhism
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Gender Studies 210)
This course explores women and Buddhism during different historical periods and in different cultures. Through a variety of sources, this course will illuminate Buddhist concepts of gender and sexuality, views of women’s spiritual capacities, the diversity of women’s images, roles, experiences, concerns, and contributions in Buddhist societies, and scholarly approaches to women in Buddhism. Special attention will be given to how gender is constructed in each cultural and religious context encountered, with particular emphasis on Buddhist women in Southeast Asia. We will look into the reasons why texts on religion have not always included the voices of women, and we will investigate ways to uncover them through research techniques and alternative hermeneutical strategies.

Preamble (for topics courses): This course offers advanced students an opportunity to investigate with some sophistication a problem that requires careful attention to research methods, to critical literature, and to writing. Seminar topics include people, periods, or problems that have a particular bearing on religion in America.

A distinctive mark of Western thought in the nineteenth century was its fascination with "the origin of things." The origin of the species and the origin of the universe are two prime examples. These two concerns, in particular, had a decisive impact on how religion and science came to be understood and expressed in the twentieth century. As a consequence of the ensuing public debate, this question of "origins" presented a direct challenge to the received theory of creation, the meaning of miracles, as well as the nature of biblical inspiration.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive; Taught in English; French 120f-02)
Preamble (for topics courses): Seminar in Reading Writing and Reasoning taught in English
"All is fair in love and war." Is this true? Are there rules for the game of power and seduction? If so, how are they determined, and what happens if they are broken? As we move through the golden ages of absolute power, will we witness a change for women? Will the veil of oppression be lifted on this side of the Mediterranean? Students will address these questions as they read plays by Tirso de Molina, Molière, Beaumarchais, and Goldoni, and watch Mozart's opera Don Giovanni, and film versions of Dangerous Liaisons and Casanova's Memoirs. Students will use works of major Spanish, French, and Italian artists of the Baroque and Rococo periods in their presentations.

(Spring) Seminar in Romance Languages and Cultures: History of Romance Languages
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English; Spanish 360, Italian 361, French 321)
Preamble (for topics courses): This interdisciplinary seminar will focus on a comparative study of Romance languages or literatures. Topics will vary from semester to semester. Seminar discussions will be conducted in English, but students wishing to obtain language credit are expected to read works in at least one original language. Papers will be written in either English or the Romance language of the student's choice.
This course examines the structural evolution of Romance languages from Vulgar Latin to contemporary forms. A chronological account will be organized around themes of persistence (inheritance from Latin) and innovation (structural change). We will begin by exploring different theories about linguistic change. Then, using concrete examples, we will analyze the main stages of development of Romance languages by focusing on different features at all linguistic levels and relating them to historical and sociological factors.
Prerequisites: for language majors: two courses in culture and literature at the 200-level

Explores the past and present of the diverse peoples and cultures inhabiting the territory once dominated by the Russian Empire and the Soviet Union. How has this region been imagined and mapped? How useful are conventional definitions of the boundary between "Europe" and "Asia"? What is meant by "Eastern Europe," "Central Europe," and "Eurasia"? Topics to be considered will include the struggle for a usable past and the emergence of national identity; techniques of imperial rule and colonial domination; formation and dissemination of knowledge about Eurasia; cultural traditions of the region. Designed to help students navigate the world of post-Soviet and post-socialist Eurasia.

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: To the Last Station: Tolstoy after Anna Karenina - *Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

First-year seminar (Writing-intensive; Taught in English)

Preamble (for topics courses): The first-year seminar sharpens skills in careful reading, and effective writing. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. Class discussion will encourage students to develop speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments.

2010 marks the centenary of the death of Leo Tolstoy (1828-1910). We will read fiction, essays, and letters that Tolstoy wrote after his masterworks War and Peace and Anna Karenina. Readings include: The Death of Ivan Iljich, The Power of Darkness, Kreutzer Sonata, Why Do Men Stupefy Themselves?, The Devil, Hadji Murat, and I Cannot Be Silent. We will concurrently read Jay Parini's novel, The Last Station, a portrait of the final years of Tolstoy's life, as well as memoirs by Tolstoy's family and friends. These diverse texts offer contradictory evidence about what happened in Tolstoy's final years.

Preamble (for topics courses): The first-year seminar sharpens skills in careful reading, and effective writing. Students will write frequently and have an opportunity to revise their work. Class discussion will encourage students to develop speaking skills and learn to ask critical questions, formulate answers, and frame persuasive arguments.

Leo Tolstoy's Anna Karenina is an action-packed drama about love and passion, personal freedom and societal expectations, and the costs of living. We will read the text slowly, with attention to the ambiguities that defeat a clear or simple interpretation of the novel's message. We will screen films of Anna Karenina and assess interpretations of the novel.

(Fall) The Romanovs: Triumph and Tragedy
(Taught in English; History 205f-01)
We will study defining periods in Russian and world history with an emphasis on the powerful Russian monarchs who shaped them: in particular, Peter the Great, Catherine the Great, Alexander II, and Nicholas II. Russia's tsarist system raises important questions about the nature of the monarchy. The Russian case shows how monarchies can change and develop, and why, ultimately, many of them failed. Why did the Romanovs fail when their relatives, the House of Windsor, did not? Could Russia have survived as a constitutional monarchy? What is the role of a royal dynasty in defining nationhood?

(Fall) Great Books: The Literature of Nineteenth-Century Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
(Taught in English)
In no other culture has literature occupied the central role it enjoyed in nineteenth-century Russia. Political, social, and historical constraints propelled Russian writers into the roles of witness, prophet, and sage. Yet, far from being limited to the vast, dark "Big Question" novels of legend, Russian literature offers much humor, lyricism, and fantasy. We will focus on the Russian novel as a reaction to western European forms of narrative and consider the recurring pattern of the strong heroine and the weak hero. Authors will include: Pushkin, Lermontov, Gogol, Turgenev, Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, and Chekhov.

(Spring) Russia
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 212s)
This course examines pivotal archetypes of Russian civilization that reflect Russia's past, demarcate its present, and constrict its future. We will focus on the canonic historical monuments of Russia, such as the Kremlin of Moscow and the downtown of St. Petersburg. Starting with the representation of these landmarks in the media, we will explore them in depth by reading conflicting historical narratives and cultural histories and eventually deconstruct their cultural message and value. By the end of the course, students will be familiar with the Eastern Orthodox Christianity rites and able to identify and discuss the most common artifacts of Russian civilization.

RES-213-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2010-2011
(Spring) Tolstoy's War and Peace - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement
Throughout his life and in his art, Tolstoy sought to shape experience into a single and all-embracing philosophical principle, but he was never able to suppress his extravagant intuition that existence, being contradictory, fragmentary, and ultimately subject to forces beyond human control, defeated attempts at codification. We will read War and Peace in an attempt to understand how that irresolvable conflict fuels Tolstoy's intellectual pursuits and informs his theories on art.

(Spring) Dostoevsky and the Problem of Evil: The Brothers Karamazov - Not offered this year/term

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-A requirement

(Taught in English)

Perhaps no other novelist has delved as deeply into the psychological and metaphysical dimensions of evil as the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky. This course will be devoted to a close reading of Dostoevsky's landmark novel of murderous passion and parricide, The Brothers Karamazov. Why should crime and transgression be a privileged avenue of access into the human interior? How is psychology tied to the metaphysical aspect of human existence? What are the sources of evil--and redemption?

(Spring) Russian Politics: From Communism to Capitalism

(Taught in English; Politics 209)

Russia was transformed by communist revolution into a global superpower that challenged the dominant ideologies of liberalism and nationalism. It became a powerful alternative to capitalism. In 1991, this imperial state collapsed and underwent an economic, political, and cultural revolution. What explains the Soviet Union's success for 70 years and its demise in 1991? What sort of country is Russia as it enters the twenty-first century? Is it a democracy?

(Taught in English; Politics 264f)

Since its creation at the beginning of the twentieth century, the Soviet Union dominated the minds of Western foreign policymakers. None of the West's policies in the Middle East, the Third World, Europe, or China after World War II can be understood without an understanding of Soviet foreign policy. We will examine the development of Soviet foreign policy since 1917 and the role played by Russia and the former Soviet republics in the more complex "New World Order" we live in today. How have the expansion of the European Union, the tragedy of 9/11, and the war against terrorism influenced Russia's relations with the West?

(Taught in English; Politics 242s)

Following the collapse of the USSR and the Gulf War, Central Asia and the Caucasus became new centers of geopolitical rivalry. The new states are a source of energy (oil and gas) for Western powers and a vital transit corridor between Eastern Europe and China. While a new "Great Game" is being fought between Western, Far Eastern, and Middle Eastern powers for control over energy pipelines, the region is threatened by environmental catastrophe and water shortages. Is the new oil industry a source of prosperity or an instrument for exploitation, corruption, and instability? How important are the new states to the West's strategic energy interests?

(Spring) Topics in the Recent History of Europe: Red Star over Russia: The Totalitarian Regime of Lenin and Stalin, 1917-1953 - *Not offered this year/term
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Humanities I-B requirement
(Taught in English; History 260(03))
The Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 marked the coming of totalitarianism to Russia. Led first by Lenin and then by Stalin, the country went through the most brutal civil war, purges, World War II, and the first stages of cold war. This period also saw immense social change and sweeping economic transformation. What were the causes of totalitarianism in Russia? How did the regime function? What were the major landmarks of Russian history in the period 1917-1953?

(Spring) Silk Roads: Ancient and Modern Highways across the Eurasian Continent - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 312)
The silk roads were ancient transportation and trade links that wound their way across the Eurasian continent, or by sea through the South China Sea and Indian Ocean, to Europe. They carried silk, glass, jade, and moved religions and literatures across continents. Today, the new silk roads carry oil, gas, drugs, capitalism, and immigrants seeking better lives. We will investigate the parallels between the ancient and modern silk roads and the contemporary strategic, cultural, and economic significance of these new highways, which link China, Central Asia, the Middle East, South Asia, and Europe.

(Taught in English; Politics 300f)
With the collapse of the USSR we were told that history was dead and liberal democracy triumphant. There was a "third wave" of democratic change. How accurate have these optimistic characterizations turned out to be? After an introduction to theories of liberal democracy and to the new discipline of "transitology" we will look at how states and leaders have applied such liberal-democratic ideas in Eastern Europe and the former USSR (with comparative examples from Africa and South America), and with what success.

(Spring) Nationalism
(Taught in English; Politics 308)
Nationalism is one of the greatest challenges to multiethnic states. They have had to create new strategies to deal with the demands of ethnic minorities. Taking the four states of Spain, Canada, Russia, and the former Yugoslavia as examples, we will focus on nationalist movements within these states and the central governments' responses. What has been the effect of the Communist legacy? Are there alternatives to federalism as a way of managing national claims? What socioeconomic policies have governments used to control ethnic tensions? What role can international organizations play in finding solutions to ethnic conflict?

(Fall) Terrorism: Russia as Its Cradle - *Not offered this year/term
(Taught in English; Politics 243)
Russia was the first nation in the world to face political terrorism. In Russia, the era of terrorism lasted from the 1860s, when the People's Will group launched the hunt on the tsar Alexander II, until 1918, when the Socialist Revolutionary Party attempted to assassinate Lenin. A case study of terrorism in Russia will help us to answer a number of questions highly relevant today. What are the causes of terrorism? What are its goals and methods? What can governments do to cope with it? What is the impact of terrorism on society?

RES-350-01 - Russian and Eurasian Studies - 2010-2011
Revolutions have a rich and bloody history on the European continent. In the twentieth century, there were frequent revolutionary upheavals, particularly in Russia and Eastern Europe. We will study two revolutionary periods: Russia in 1917 and the USSR in 1991. These revolutionary events present great contrasts, yet at the same time clarify the nature of revolutions and why they occur. Do they bring the expected fundamental and accelerated change people hope for? Our focus will be on the contrasts and parallels between Russia’s early twentieth-century socialist revolution and late twentieth-century capitalist revolution. What was (and is) their impact on European history and thought?

(Fall) First-Year Seminar: Social Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
First-year seminar (Speaking-intensive)
The study of social inequality constitutes one of sociology’s major areas of inquiry. In this seminar, we will focus on class, racial, and gender inequality. We will explore the origins and social consequences of these forms of inequality. Our examples will be drawn primarily from the United States, but the course will also touch on issues of inequality throughout the globe.

(Fall) Issues in Sociology: Sociology of Popular Culture
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
There is little question that popular culture occupies a central role in the contemporary social world. For some scholars, popular culture serves a social function akin to traditional religion, acting as a form of social solidarity by promoting collective ideas, experiences, and identities. A more critical approach views popular culture as a form of ideological domination, promoting the interests of certain social groups at the expense of others. This course will examine these theories and others by exploring both the social factors that help influence the production, consumption, and experience of popular culture as well as the ways in which popular culture itself helps shape society today.

SOCI-223-01 - Sociology - 2010-2011
(Fall) Development of Social Thought
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course examines the origins and development of sociological theory in the nineteenth century. Focusing on the three most important representatives of the classical tradition in sociology - Karl Marx, Max Weber, and Emile Durkheim - we consider in detail the ideas of each, compare their perspectives on emerging industrial society, and assess their contemporary significance.

(Fall) Sociology of Gender

(Gender Studies 333F-01)
This course focuses on the social production of gender relationships across a range of institutional, interactional, intellectual, and cultural contexts. The syllabus is structured around selections from major social, political, economic, and cultural theories of gender in addition to several exemplary empirical studies. Weekly topics include kinship and socialization, the contemporary moral orders of masculinity and femininity, family organization, legal systems and nation-states, war and rape, and the gendered organization and deployment of expert authority in a range of social settings.

(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Sociology of Education

Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.
The goal of the sociology of education is to research on how various social institutions affect individual's educational processes and social development. In this course, we will survey the main areas of this research literature. This work encompasses quite varied areas of study, from primary education worldwide to studies of higher education in the United States, using methods that range from studying the individual to examining the structure of relations among social and educational institutions.

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course explores class in the black community from a sociological perspective. It focuses on how race fosters commonalities and how class fuels differences among blacks. We will examine the nature of these commonalities and differences within several contexts, such as neighborhoods, politics, work, and culture.
Prerequisites: 8 credits in sociology

(Fall) Special Topics in Sociology: Unlawful Convictions in Death Penalty Cases
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): This course focuses on significant problems in the field of sociology with group meetings and reports.
The Death Penalty in America: Unjustly Convicted Death Row Inmates. This course will examine in detail the cases of all 130 death row inmates exonerated in the post-Furman era (1976-2009). It will focus on how the 130 men ended up on death row, as well as the process by which they gained their freedom. In addition, the course will spotlight the many proposals, videotaped police interrogations, eyewitness identifications, forensic science procedures, etc., designed to correct sources of mistakes; and assess their likelihood of successfully preventing both unjust and wrongful convictions in capital cases.

(Fall) Social Inequality
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Social Sciences III-A: Anthro, econ, geog, etc. requirement
This course is a critical survey of theoretical and empirical research on social inequality, stratification, and mobility. The central focus is class, race, and gender inequalities as they have changed during the post-World War II period in the United States (although we will look briefly at stratification regimes in other cultures and time periods). The concepts and methods of social stratification have wide application in sociology, economics, public policy, and administration contexts. As the course progresses, we will explore some of these applications as we wrestle with several policy issues currently confronting U.S. society.

(Fall) Studies in Identities and Intersections: Constructing (Our) America

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Gender Studies 101)

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

Who are we? This is the question that Latin American writers, artists, philosophers and politicians have attempted to answer through fiction, nonfiction, visual arts, and film. Through representative cultural texts from figures such as D. F. Sarmiento, José Martí, Gabriela Mistral, Marta Rojas, and Hugo Chávez, we will explore discourses of identity, different sociopolitical positions, and the representation of race and gender in the construction of "latinoamericidad."

Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor

(Spring) Identities and Intersections: An Introduction: Introduction to Gender Studies in the Spanish-Speaking World

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 203 (01))

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to issues of identity (gender, sexual, ethnic, cultural, class, national, religious) in the Spanish-speaking world and their intersections with other dimensions of cultural agency and power differentials. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

This course, taught in Spanish, is an introduction to the interdisciplinary field of gender studies. It also focuses on the specific implications of this new, predominantly U.S.-based discipline for and in the Spanish speaking world. The intersections among gender, race, class, and sexuality in various contexts, past and present, will be central to our inquiry. Topics will include the politics of appearance, women's economic status, sexual violence, racism, legacies of colonialism, the challenges of transnational feminist and queer activism, and strategies for change. We will examine the development of feminist and queer theory and its practices in various local and transnational contexts, but especially in the Spanish-speaking world.

(Fall) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: Spanish and Latin American Cinema

Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement (Speaking- and writing-intensive; Film Studies 203 (01))
Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester. This semester's course offers a broad introduction to the history, politics and aesthetics of Latin American and Spanish cinema. The course also introduces students to the basic terminology and methodologies of film studies.

(Spring) Visual Cultures: An Introduction: The Other (in the) Media: New Media and Otherness in the Americas
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): A broad introduction to the study of visual representation in Latin American, Spanish, and U.S. Latina/o cultures. Students will examine the articulation of a variety of topics in media such as film, television, fine arts, Internet, and/or video. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

New technologies (Internet, wireless devices, digital storytelling) are changing the media landscape as well as social, political, and economic relationships. The "other" media is reshaping the notion of otherness itself, as new forms of representation (self-produced, instantly available, some times unfiltered) continue to emerge and consolidate worldwide. This class examines how traditionally marginalized groups, including the Zapatistas in Mexico, at-risk youth in Brazil, and Latino communities in the U.S., utilize new media to gain visibility and tell their stories in their own voice.

Prerequisites: Spanish 212 or permission of instructor

Instructors: R. Miñana

Expected enrollment: 16

SPAN-250-01 - Spanish - 2010-2011
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

Preamble (for topics courses): A historical approach to the analysis of political discourses and economic relations in Latin America, Spain and Latina/o cultures in the United States. Topics may include, but are not limited to, imperialism, (post/neo)colonialism, (trans)nationalism, migration, globalization, and neoliberalism. The specific course contents and examples examined will vary each semester.

Memory has a wide range of meanings and applications in many different contexts. What, for example, is the difference between artificial intelligence and human memory? How are national identities constructed around the commemoration of great events? What is the importance of memory in relation to concepts like justice and progress? How do rituals and performances work to determine gender and other identities? In this course, we examine the social, political, cultural, neurological, and technological functions of memory through readings and exercises that require students to think across disciplines. Special attention will be given to interpretations and adaptations of Sophocles' Antigone.

Prerequisites: Spanish 212

Notes: gateway course for thematic minor on memory (2010-2013)

(Fall) Advanced Studies in Identities and Intersections: Women Writers: Early Feminisms
Credits/PE Units: 4; Requirements met: Meets multicultural requirement; meets Language requirement or Humanities I-A requirement

This course examines a variety of literary expressions of Early Modern Spanish women (Teresa de Avila, Catalina de Erasuso, and María de Zayas among others). Attention will be paid to the formal means by which women writers emulated, appropriated, or subverted male-authored models. A significant part of the class will deal with the ways in which contemporary feminist theories can be used to complement, interpret, and flesh out ideas expressed by Early Modern women. Students will collaborate with the organization of an international conference on women to be held at MHC in September. Students will work on projects based on conference presentations and interview the participants.
